(14) Sc. the animal that is blemished and that which has been extracted from the womb.

(15) For only an animal with a blemish exposed to the full view is declared to be unfit for sacrifice. Likewise an animal extracted from the side of its dam would be regarded as an object of curiosity, and so its peculiarity would soon be known to all. Trefah, on the other hand, is not always a perceptible taint, for it may be that only an internal organ has become affected.

(16) That it is not fit to be offered as a sacrifice.

(17) I.e., from Lev. I, 3; v. supra p. 23.

(18) Ezek. XLV, 15; v. supra p. 20.

(19) Lev. XXVII, 32, with reference to the Cattle Tithe, but the rule that is here derived is applied to all sacrifices; cf. Bek. 57a.

(20) A trefah animal, inasmuch as it cannot continue to live for more than twelve months (cf. Hul. 42a), is not deemed to possess vitality, and therefore cannot be said to pass of its own volition under the rod. Cf. however Rashi on Hul 136b where the suggestion is made that a trefah animal, e.g., one whose hind-legs were cut off above the knee-joint (v. l.c. 76a). on account of its defect cannot physically pass under the rod.

(21) E.g., an animal that was born trefah. According to Rabbinic interpretation the verse in Ezek. contains an allusion to 'orlah and to diverse kinds in the vineyard, and these were at no time ever allowed for any purpose.

(22) Lit., 'uncircumcised'. The fruit of newly-planted trees is during the first three years forbidden for all purposes. Cf. Lev. XIX, 23.

(23) V. Deut. XXII, 9.

(24) For the verse merely implies that a trefah animal, since it cannot pass under the rod, is not subject to the law of Cattle Tithe; but an animal consecrated as the tithe always remains consecrated even though it subsequently becomes trefah.

(25) Heb. ibut, a mourner while his dead relative is awaiting burial. Such a priest is forbidden to minister in the Temple, cf. Zeb. 16a.

(26) Heb. ouh kucy; one who having suffered uncleanness has taken the ritual bath during the day but must now await sunset before he is deemed fully clean. He may not enter the Temple or minister therein.

(27) V. Zeb. 17b.

(28) One who, having suffered the uncleanness of leprosy or of an issue, has performed all the rites of purification but is not deemed fully clean until he has brought an offering as an atonement. V. Zeb. 19b.

(29) Every priest was obliged to wash his hands and feet from the Temple laver daily before taking part in the service. Cf. Ex. XXX, 19, 20.

- (30) Whose brothers had died by reason of their circumcision.
- (31) For it is written, To stand to minister (Deut. XVIII, 5.).
- (32) The priest must stand on the floor and nothing should interpose between his feet and the floor of the Temple. V. Zeb. 24a.
- (33) For the handful is not quite full since there is lacking flour to the extent of the volume of the stone or other substance that came up with it.
- (34) Instead of extending his fingers over the palm of his hand, v. infra 11a.
- (35) By being spared the cost of these ingredients.
- (36) Lit., 'a sin-offering (to be brought on account) of (eating forbidden) fat'. This is the usual example of a transgression involving a sin-offering.
- (37) V. Num. XV, where are prescribed the quantities of flour and oil for the meal-offering and wine for the drink-offering which must accompany the burnt-offering and the peace-offering.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 6b

so that the sinner should have no advantage; why then are they not required? In order that his offering be not sumptuous. Now I might have thought that, since R. Simeon laid down the principle 'So that his offering be not sumptuous', it should be valid even where an unfit person took out the handful, we are therefore informed [that even according to R. Simeon it is invalid]. If so, there¹ too the Mishnah should have stated: 'Whether it is an ordinary sin-offering or any other offering, if a non-priest or a priest that was in mourning received the blood . . . [it is invalid]', and we would have explained that it was necessary [to be so stated] according to R. Simeon's view. But it is clear that the expression 'all' stated in that [Mishnah], since it is not followed by the term 'except', includes every offering;² then in our [Mishnah] too, had it stated 'all', inasmuch as it is not followed by the term 'except', it would have included every offering!³ — It was indeed necessary [to be so stated]; for I might have thought that since we had established that the first Mishnah was not in accordance with the view of R. Simeon,⁴ the second Mishnah also was not in accordance with the view of R. Simeon, we are therefore informed [that even according to R. Simeon it is invalid].

Rab said, If a non-priest took the handful [from the meal-offering], he should put it back again [and it is valid]. But have we not learnt, IT IS INVALID? — 'IT IS INVALID' means, it is invalid so long as he had not put it back again. If so, is not this identical with Ben Bathyra's view? — In the case where the handful is still here the Rabbis do not differ with Ben Bathyra at all;⁵ they differ only where the handful is no longer here, the Rabbis maintaining that one may not bring other flour from one's house to make up [the tenth],⁶ while Ben Bathyra maintains that one may bring other flour from one's house to make up [the tenth].⁷ But then, how can Ben Bathyra say, HE MUST PUT THE HANDFUL BACK AND TAKE IT OUT AGAIN WITH THE RIGHT HAND?⁸ He surely should have said, He should bring other flour from his house to make up [the tenth] and then take out the handful with the right hand! — Rather we must say that Rab said so according to Ben Bathyra.⁹ But is not this obvious? — [No, for] one might have thought that Ben Bathyra declared it valid only [in the case where the handful was taken out] with the left hand, but not where it was taken out by any of the persons that are unfit;¹⁰ he [Rab] therefore teaches us [that according to Ben Bathyra it is valid in all the cases]. But why [would the offering be valid where the handful was taken out] with the left hand? It is, is it not, because we find it¹¹ allowed in the service of the Day of Atonement? Then in the case of a non-priest too, we find that he was allowed to perform a service, namely, the slaughtering! — The slaughtering is not regarded as a service.¹² But is it not? Has not R. Zera said in the name of Rab: If a non-priest slaughtered the Red Cow it is invalid; and Rab had explained the reason for it, namely, because the expressions ‘Eleazar’ and ‘statute’ are used in connection with it?¹³ — The case of the Red Cow is different, for it is in the category of things consecrated to the Temple treasury.¹⁴ But is it not all the more so here? For if in regard to things consecrated to the Temple treasury the priest is essential, how much more so in regard to things consecrated to the altar!¹⁵ — R. Shisha the son of R. Idi said, It might be compared with the inspection of leprosy plagues, which is certainly not a Temple service, and yet requires a priest.¹⁶ Why do we not prove [that a non-priest may perform a service] from the case of the high place?¹⁷ Should you say, however, that we cannot prove it from the case of the high place,¹⁸ but surely it has been taught: Whence do we know that [sacrificial portions] which had been taken out [of the Sanctuary], if brought up upon the altar must not come down again?¹⁹ From the fact that at the high place what had been taken out was still valid to be offered!²⁰ — The Tanna [there] really relies upon the verse, This is the law of the burnt-offering.²¹

Now we know this²² only because Rab informed us of it, but otherwise we should have said that [where the handful was taken out] by one of those that are unfit, Ben Bathyra declares it to be invalid; but surely it has been taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said, Ben Bathyra declares it valid even [where the handful was taken out] by one of those that are unfit! Moreover it has been taught: It is written, And he shall take his handful from there,²³ that is, from the place where the feet of the non-priest may stand.²⁴ Ben Bathyra says, Whence do we know that if he took the handful with the left hand, he should put it back again and then take it out with the right hand? Because the verse says, ‘And he shall take his handful from there’, that is, from the place from which he has already taken a handful.²⁵ Now since the verse does not specify [the causes why the handful should have been returned], then it is all the same whether [it was originally taken] with the left hand or [taken] by any one of those that were unfit? — Rather it is this that Rab teaches us, that if he had taken out the handful and had even hallowed it [by putting it into the vessel of ministry, it may nevertheless be put back again].²⁶ Rab thus rejects the view of the following Tannaim; for it was taught: R. Jose b. Yasian²⁷ and R. Judah the baker said, This²⁸ is so only where he had taken out the handful and had not yet hallowed it, but where he had also hallowed it it is invalid.

Others report [that this is what Rab teaches us], that only if he had taken out the handful it is [valid], but if he had also hallowed it, it is not [valid] — Rab thus agrees with the view of those Tannaim and rejects the view of the first Tanna.²⁹

R. Nahman demurred: What is the view of those Tannaim? If they hold that the taking of the handful by persons unfit is regarded as a service, [then it should be invalid] even though it had not been put into a vessel?³⁰ And if they hold that the taking of the handful by persons unfit is not regarded as a service, then what does it matter even if it had been put into a vessel?³¹ — Later, however, R. Nahman said, It is indeed regarded as a service, but the service is not complete until [the handful] has been put into a vessel.³²

- (1) In Zeb., at the opening of Chap. II, 15b, the Mishnah states: 'All offerings are invalid if a non-priest . . . received the blood'. That Mishnah, following the example of our Mishnah, should surely have specified the case of the sin-offering, thereby indicating that it was also in accordance with R. Simeon's view.
- (2) Even the sin-offering and with this R. Simeon does in no wise disagree.
- (3) Even the sinner's meal-offering. And so the original question stands: Why does not our Mishnah state 'All meal-offerings . . . '?
- (4) V. supra p. 4.
- (5) All hold that the handful should be put back and taken out again by the proper person.
- (6) The vessel, which held a tenth part of an ephah, in which, according to the view of the Rabbis, the meal-offering was consecrated. If after the consecration in this vessel the flour of the meal-offering had been diminished it at once becomes invalid.
- (7) For he is of the opinion that it is the taking of the handful that renders the meal-offering consecrated and not merely the putting of the flour into the vessel.
- (8) Since it is assumed that the handful is no longer here, how can Ben Bathyra say, 'He must put it back'?
- (9) I.e., Rab interpreted Ben Bathyra's ruling to apply not only to the case where the handful was taken out with the left hand but also to all the preceding cases enumerated in the Mishnah where the handful was taken out by a person unfit.
- (10) Lit., 'the other (cases of) unfit persons'.
- (11) Sc. the left hand. On the Day of Atonement the High Priest used both hands in the course of the day's service; cf. M. Yoma 47a.
- (12) For in no instance do we find that it was essential that the priest shall perform the slaughtering; v. Tosaf. supra 5a, s.v. vyhj a, 1.
- (13) Cf. Num. XIX, 2, 3. Thus showing that the slaughtering must be performed by Eleazar i.e., by a priest and by none else, for the expression 'statute' indicates that that requirement is indispensable. Hence it is obvious that the slaughtering is considered a service of importance.
- (14) The reason why the slaughtering of the Red Cow must not be performed by a non-priest is not that the slaughtering is a service, for there are no 'services' in regard to things consecrated to the Temple treasury; but it is an express decree of the Torah that it shall be performed by a priest.
- (15) Nevertheless it is established that animals consecrated to the altar may be slaughtered by a non-priest. Hence we find that a service performed by a non-priest is allowed just in the same way as a service performed with the left hand; and the same equality should be upheld in the case of the handful taken from the meal-offering.
- (16) Cf. Lev. XIII. And so it is with the slaughtering of the Red Cow: it is not a Temple service, nevertheless it requires a priest.
- (17) For whenever the high places (i.e., private altars) were allowed-which was before the Tabernacle had been set up in the wilderness-non-priests were allowed to perform the services there (v. Zeb. 118a), so that Rab's statement is superfluous.
- (18) Since at that time Aaron and his sons had not yet been consecrated for service; so that one cannot infer from the conditions prevailing at the high places that a non-priest may perform a service.
- (19) V. Zeb. 84a.
- (20) For there were no restrictions as to place in connection with a sacrifice offered at a high place. It is seen however, that a rule of law is actually inferred from the case of the high place.
- (21) Lev. VI, 2. vkugv , ru , tz i.e., there is one law for all offerings that are brought up upon the altar, for even though they have been rendered unfit, once they have been brought up upon the altar they must not come down again. The Heb, vkug, rendered 'burnt-offering', is from the root vkg, meaning 'to come up'. The Tanna of the Baraita certainly did not intend to draw the authority for the law stated from the case of the high place; he merely used it as a support for that law.

(22) That, according to Ben Bathyra, where an unfit person took the handful from the meal-offering, he should put it back again and the offering remains valid.

(23) Ibid. II, 2.

(24) I.e., the rite of taking the handful from the meal-offering may be performed anywhere in the Temple court, even in the space of eleven cubits, on the east side of the court, where laymen were allowed to stand (cf. Yoma 16b).

(25) But which was put back again, as it was not in accordance with the law.

(26) And it is valid according to Ben Bathyra.

(27) In cur. edd. 'R. Jose b. Jose b. Yasian'. The repetition 'Jose b.' is no doubt due to a scribal error; it is not found in MS.M. nor in Rashi.

(28) That according to Ben Bathyra the handful may be put back again and another taken out.

(29) Who disagrees with R. Jose and R. Judah and who presumably holds that Ben Bathyra declares it valid even though it had already been put into a vessel of ministry.

(30) For it has already been rendered invalid by the service performed by the unfit person, and this can in no wise be remedied.

(31) Since what was performed by persons unfit is not regarded as a service, then even if it was put into a vessel of ministry by such persons it would still be of no consequence; it should therefore be put back again, and once again taken out by the proper person.

(32) So that the act of an unfit person will render invalid only if he performed a complete service; in this case by putting the handful which he had taken out into a vessel of ministry.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 7a

But¹ surely when he puts the handful back again into its place it thus becomes holy, consequently it should be invalid!² — R. Johanan said, This proves that vessels of ministry hallow only [what has been put into them] intentionally.³ It follows, however, that they do hallow [what has been put into them] intentionally.⁴ But did not Resh Lakish enquire of R. Johanan, 'Can unfit persons hallow what they [intentionally] put into vessels of ministry so that it should be permitted to offer it [upon the altar] in the first instance?' and he replied. 'They cannot hallow it'? — [He meant,] They cannot hallow it so that it should be permitted to be offered up, but they can hallow it so that [through their act] it is rendered invalid.⁵

R. Amram said,⁶ We must suppose here that he put it back into a heaped up bowl.⁷ Then how could he have taken out the handful originally [from this vessel]?⁸ — Rather [say] he put it back into a brimful bowl. But surely when he took out the handful he left a hollow, so that when he puts it back again he puts it into the vessel, does he not? — He put it back on to the sides of the vessel and he then shook it so that it fell back of its own into the vessel; and it is the same as though it were put back by a monkey.⁹

R. Jeremiah said to R. Zera, Why not suggest that he put it back into a vessel which was upon the ground?¹⁰ We can then infer from this¹¹ that one may take out the handful from a vessel which is upon the ground!¹² — He replied, You are now touching upon a question that was raised by our [colleagues]. For Abimi was studying the Tractate Menahoth under R. Hisda. (But did Abimi even study under R. Hisda? Did not R. Hisda say, 'Many were the blows that I received from Abimi upon the following subject: If [the Court] intend to announce [the sale of the property] daily, it must be done during thirty days; if only on Mondays and Thursdays, it must be done during sixty days?¹³ Abimi had forgotten this Tractate and so he went to R. Hisda that he might be reminded of it. Why did he not send for him, that he [R. Hisda] should come to him?¹⁴ — He thought that in this way¹⁵ he would make better progress.) R. Nahman once met him [Abimi] and asked him, ‘How does one take out the handful?’ He replied. ‘Out of this vessel’.¹⁶ Said the other, ‘And may one take the handful out of a vessel that is upon the ground?’ He replied, ‘A priest has to lift it up’. ‘And how does one hallow the handful taken from the meal-offering?’ [asked R. Nahman]. He replied, ‘One should put it into this vessel’. ‘But may one hallow it by putting it into a vessel that is upon the ground?’ He replied. ‘A priest has to lift it up’. Said R. Nahman, ‘Then you require three priests’.¹⁷ He replied, ‘[I don't mind] if thirteen are required as with the Daily Sacrifice’.¹⁸ He raised the following objection: [We have learnt:] This is the general rule: if one took out the handful or put it into the vessel or brought it nigh or burnt it, [intending] to eat a thing that it is usual to eat [outside its proper place] etc.¹⁹ Now there is no mention here of lifting up [the vessel]! — The Tanna merely teaches the order of the various services.²⁰

The question was put to R. Shesheth: May one take the handful from a vessel that is upon the ground? He answered, Go and see what is done within [the Temple]:²¹ Four priests entered in, two having in their hands the two rows [of Shewbread] and two the two dishes [of frankincense]; and four priests went in before them, two to take away the two rows and two to take away the two dishes.

(1) The words ‘if so even though he had not hallowed it’, inserted here in cur. edd., are obviously superfluous and are omitted by MS.M., and Sh. Mek.

(2) For when the non-priest puts back the handful he thereby completes the service, for it surely does not matter into which particular vessel of ministry he returns the handful, whether into another vessel or into the same vessel from which it was taken.

(3) In order to become hallowed. In this case, however, the unfit person puts the handful back again into the vessel out of which it was taken without intending it to become holy thereby.

(4) Even though it had been put in by a non-priest or by any other person that was unfit.

(5) Since it was intentionally put into a vessel of ministry by an unfit person for the purpose of hallowing it, the service has been completed by an unfit person, and so it is invalid and there can be no remedy. But is it quite different in the case where the handful was put back into the vessel but not for the purpose of hallowing it thereby.

(6) This is the reason why the handful is not hallowed when put back into the vessel from which it was taken.

(7) For only that which is in the vessel of ministry is hallowed by the vessel and not that which is above it.

(8) Since he must take the handful from that which is in the vessel.

(9) I.e., it was put back into the vessel not directly by the act of man; it is therefore not hallowed. Cf. infra 100b.

(10) And that is the reason why it does not become hallowed.

(11) Since this suggestion is not made.

(12) And that likewise one may put the handful into a vessel of ministry that is upon the ground. (Z. Kod.).

(13) When the Court have valued the property of orphans and are proposing to sell it in order to meet the father's debts, they must announce the sale either daily for a period of thirty days, or on Mondays and Thursdays (these being the days when the Courts sat) for a period of sixty days. V. ‘Ar. 22a.

(14) Since R. Hisda was the pupil.

(15) By Abimi putting himself out so as to go to R. Hisda to study. Cf. Meg. 6b.

(16) At that moment there happened to be a vessel lying before them on the ground.

(17) One to hold the vessel containing the meal-offering, a second to hold the vessel into which the handful is to be put, and a third to take the handful out of the one and put it into the other. This number of priests was necessary as, it must be remembered, only the right hand was to be used in any service, and therefore one priest could not hold the two vessels, one in each hand. It was, however, possible for the one priest to hold both vessels, one after the other, so that only two priests would be necessary. V. Sh. Mek.

(18) V. Yoma 25a.

(19) Infra 12a.

(20) Which can all be performed by the same priest; the Tanna, however, did not intend to give the number of priests employed in each service. The words 'but not the order of the priests', found in cur. edd., are obviously a gloss, and are omitted in MS.M. and also in Sh. Mek.

(21) V. Infra 99b.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 7b

Now there is no mention here of lifting up [the table].¹ But was not the answer given in the former case that the Tanna merely stated the order of the services? Then in this case too [we can say that] he only states the order of the services!² — Surely there is no comparison; there the Tanna does not state the number of priests, but here he does state the number of the priests. Now if [your contention were] right,³ he certainly should have mentioned [the priest] who lifts up [the table]! This proves that one may take the handful from a vessel that is upon the ground. This indeed proves it.

Raba said, I am certain that one may take the handful from a vessel that is upon the ground, for we find that this was so at the taking away of the dishes [of frankincense].⁴ Also that one may hallow the meal-offering by putting [the meal] into a vessel that is upon the ground, for we find that this was so at the setting down the dishes.⁴ Raba however was in doubt, What is the law with regard to the hallowing of the handful? Are we to derive it from the meal-offering itself,⁵ or from the [receiving of the] blood?⁶ Later Raba decided that we must derive it from the [receiving of the] blood. But could Raba have said so? Surely it has been stated: If the handful was divided [and put] into two vessels, R. Nahman says, It is not hallowed; and Raba says, It is hallowed. Now if [the above decision] were right, then this too he should derive from the blood,⁷ should he not? — Raba retracted from that opinion.⁸

Whence do we know that if the blood was divided [in separate vessels] it is not hallowed? — From the following which R. Tahlifa b. Saul learnt: If one mixed⁹ less than the quantity required for sprinkling in one vessel and again less than the quantity required for sprinkling in another vessel, the mixing is not valid.¹⁰ And the question was raised, How is it with regard to the blood?¹¹ Is that¹² a traditional law, and from a traditional law one may not draw any inferences; or is it so there¹² because it is written, And he shall dip it in the water,¹³ then here also it is written, And he shall dip [his finger] in the blood?¹⁴ And it was stated: R. Zerika said in the name of R. Eleazar, Even in the case of the blood it is not hallowed.¹⁵

Raba said, There has been taught [a Baraita] also to this effect: It is written, And he shall dip,¹⁶ but not wipe up;¹⁷ in the blood,¹⁶ that is, there must be at the very beginning sufficient blood [in the one vessel] for dipping; [and shall sprinkle] of the blood,¹⁶ that is, of the blood spoken of in the context. And the expressions ‘and he shall dip’ and ‘in the blood’ are both necessary. For had the Divine Law only stated, ‘And he shall dip’. I might have said that [it was valid] even though [the priest] had not received at the very beginning sufficient blood [in the one vessel] for dipping; it therefore stated, ‘In the blood’. And had the Divine Law only stated, ‘In the blood’, I might have said that he may even wipe up [the blood]; it therefore stated, ‘And he shall dip’. ‘[Of the blood], that is, of the blood spoken of in the context’. What does this exclude? — Raba said, It excludes the blood that is still clinging to the finger.¹⁸ This supports R. Eleazar who said, The blood that is still clinging¹⁹ to the finger is not valid [for sprinkling].

Rabin son of R. Adda said to Raba, Your pupils report that R. ‘Amram raised [an objection from the following]: It was taught: If, while sprinkling, some blood dripped from his hand [on to a garment], if this happened²⁰ before he had made the sprinkling it must be washed,²¹ but if after he had made the sprinkling it need not be washed. Presumably the meaning is: before he had finished the sprinkling, and after he had finished the sprinkling.²² — No, the meaning is: if it happened before the blood had left his hand in an act of sprinkling it must be washed, but if after the blood had left his hand²³ it need not be washed.

Abaye raised an objection: [We have learnt:] When he had finished sprinkling²⁴ he wiped his hand on the cow's body. [Now] only when he had finished then did he [wipe his hand], but before he had finished he did not!²⁵ — He replied. When he had finished he wiped his hand, before he had finished he wiped his finger only.²⁶ It is well [to say] ‘When he had finished he wiped his hand on the cow's body’, for it is written, And the cow shall be burnt in his sight;²⁷ but [to say] ‘Before he had finished he wiped his finger’ [is difficult], for on what would he wipe it?²⁸ — Abaye answered, On the edge of the basin, as it is written, Bowls of gold.²⁹

But could R. Eleazar have said that?³⁰ Behold it has been stated: The meal-offering of the High Priest³¹ R. Johanan says, is not hallowed [if brought] a half at a time. R. Eleazar says. Since it is offered a half at a time it is hallowed [if brought] a half at a time.

(1) So as to avoid taking away the frankincense from a table that is standing upon the ground. Obviously then this does not matter at all. And it is to be observed that the services touching the frankincense and the Shewbread correspond with the services relating to the handful and the meal-offering in the following respects: the frankincense was taken away each week from the table, the handful was taken from of the meal-offering; frankincense was put upon the table each week, the meal for the meal-offering was put into a vessel of ministry. And just as the burning of the frankincense rendered the Shewbread permitted to be eaten, so the burning of the handful rendered the rest of the meal-offering permitted to be eaten, for each is described in the Torah as ‘a memorial’, cf. Lev. II, 2, and XXIV, 7.

(2) I.e., the main services; whereas lifting up is a service of little significance.

(3) That whatsoever is put into a vessel of ministry that is upon the ground is not thereby hallowed.

(4) v. p. 38, n. 5.

(5) And just as the other services in connection with the meal-offering may be performed in a vessel that is upon the ground, so the handful would be hallowed if put into a vessel that is on the ground.

(6) It has already been stated that the four main services in the procedure of a meal-offering, viz., taking out the handful, hallowing it by putting it into a vessel, bringing it nigh to the altar and burning it, correspond respectively to the four main services of animal sacrifices, viz., slaughtering, receiving the blood, bringing it nigh to the altar and sprinkling it. Now just as the blood of an animal-offering may not be received in a vessel that is on the ground (v. Lev. I, 5: And Aaron's sons, the priests, shall present the blood, and Sifra thereon), so the handful of the meal-offering may not be hallowed by putting it into a vessel that is upon the ground.

(7) And the blood of an animal-offering may not be received in two separate vessels (v. infra).

(8) And he subsequently accepted R. Nahman's view, namely that if the handful was divided and put into two vessels it is not hallowed.

(9) Lit., 'sanctified'. The reference is to the mixing of the ashes of the Red Cow with water; cf. Num. XIX, 17.

(10) Even though subsequently the two quantities when combined in one vessel amounted to the required quantity. For the required quantity v. Parah XII, 5: 'Sufficient for the tips of the hyssop stalks to be dipped therein and water sufficient to be sprinkled.'

(11) Sc. the blood of offerings which had to be sprinkled seven times within, i.e., upon the golden altar and towards the veil. The question is: May the priest receive the blood, say sufficient for four sprinklings in one vessel and sufficient for three in another vessel?

(12) Sc. the ruling in connection with the mixing of the ashes of the Red Cow.

(13) Num. XIX, 18. The use of the definite article, 'in the water', indicates that all the water must be in one vessel.

(14) Lev. IV, 6. Here too the definite article is used, 'in the blood'.

(15) If the blood was received half in one vessel and half in another.

(16) Lev. ibid.

(17) The priest must dip his finger in the blood and not scrape up the blood from the sides of the bowl with his finger.

(18) The priest must dip his finger in the bowl of blood for each sprinkling and not sprinkle twice with one dipping. He must sprinkle each time of the blood that is mentioned in the context, that is of the blood in the bowl and not of the blood that is on his finger.

(19) Lit., 'the remnant'.

(20) Sc., the splashing of the blood on to the garment.

(21) Cf. Lev. VI, 20.

(22) I.e., if some blood had splashed on the garment at any time during the course of the seven sprinklings. e.g., after the second sprinkling but before the priest had dipped his finger into the bowl a third time, it must be washed, for the blood that fell upon the garment might well have been used for a further sprinkling; hence it is evident that blood still clinging to the finger is valid for sprinkling, contra R. Eleazar and Raba. On the other hand, if the blood fell on to the garment after the seven sprinklings had been performed, it does not require to be washed, for the blood could not have been used for sprinkling.

(23) I.e., after an act of sprinkling some blood that was still clinging to his finger fell upon the garment.

(24) Sc. the blood of the Red Cow seven times towards the Holy of Holies. V. Parah III, 9.

(25) For presumably the blood still clinging to his finger is valid for sprinkling, and therefore he need not wipe it away; contra R. Eleazar and Raba.

(26) I.e., between each sprinkling.

(27) Num. XIX, 5. After sprinkling the blood towards the Holy of Holies the priest would come down from the Temple mount, wipe his hand on the cow's body, and then the cow would be burnt in his presence.

(28) It surely cannot be suggested that after each of the seven sprinklings the priest must come down from the Temple mount and wipe his finger on the cow's body. Indeed if he did so the sprinkling that followed might be invalid, for some hairs of the cow's body might adhere to his finger. In cur. edd. there is an obvious gloss added in the text, but it has been struck out by all commentators. It is not found in MS.M.

(29) Ezra I, 10. The sprinkling bowls are here designated hrupf, which word is derived from the root rpf 'to wipe'; i.e., bowls on whose rim the priests used to wipe away the blood from their fingers.

(30) That if the blood was received half in one vessel and half in another, it is not hallowed thereby.

(31) V. Lev. VI, 13, 14. This meal-offering prepared on a griddle (hence oh, hcj from , cj n). consisting of a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, was offered by the High Priest daily; half of it in the morning and half in the evening.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 8a

Now if he held that view, he would surely derive [the ruling in the case of the High Priest's meal-offering] from the blood!¹ And should you say that R. Eleazar does not derive one case from another, but R. Eleazar has actually ruled: If the taking of the handful from the meal-offering was performed in the Temple,² it is valid, since we find that the taking away of the dishes [of frankincense was regularly performed there]³ — He derives [the rules of] one meal-offering from another meal-offering,⁴ but he does not derive [the rules of] a meal-offering from the blood.

But does he derive one meal-offering from another meal-offering? Surely it has been taught: If a loaf was broken before it⁵ had been removed, the Shewbread is invalid, and [the priest] may not burn on account of it the dishes of frankincense; if a loaf was broken after it⁵ had been removed, the Shewbread is invalid, but he may burn on account of it the dishes of frankincense. Whereupon R. Eleazar had said, [The expression 'after it had been removed'] does not mean that it⁵ had actually been removed, but rather that the time for removing it had come about,⁶ and although it had not yet been removed it is regarded as already removed. But why is this so?⁷ Surely it ought to be regarded as a meal-offering which was found to be lacking before the handful had been taken therefrom!⁸ — That is really no difficulty, for in a meal-offering the handful is not separate,⁹ whereas here [in the Shewbread] the handful¹⁰ is separate. But this is a difficulty: surely this case ought to be on a par with the remainder of a meal-offering which was found to be lacking after the handful had been taken therefrom but before it had been burnt, in which case the handful may not be burnt! — There is, is there not, a difference of opinion about this?¹¹ R. Eleazar is of the same opinion as him who says that where the remainder of the meal-offering was found to be lacking after the handful had been taken therefrom but before it had been burnt, the handful may indeed be burnt.

The text [above] stated: 'The meal-offering of the High Priest, R. Johanan says, is not hallowed [if brought] a half at a time. R. Eleazar says, Since it is offered a half at a time it is hallowed [if brought] a half at a time'. R. Aha said, What is R. Johanan's reason? Because the verse reads, For a meal-offering . . . half of it in the morning;¹² that is to say, he must bring a meal-offering¹³ and then he shall divide it in halves.

An objection was raised: [We have learnt:] The meal-offering of the High Priest may not be brought in [two separate] halves, but he must bring a whole tenth and then divide it. And it has been taught: Had Scripture stated, 'For a meal-offering a half', I should then have said that he must bring a half tenth from his house in the morning and offer it, and a half tenth from his house in the evening and offer it; but Scripture states, 'Half of it in the morning', that is, he must offer half of the whole tenth!¹⁴ — This is only a recommendation.¹⁵ Thereupon R. Gebiha of Bekathil said to R. Ashi, But is not the term 'statute'¹⁶ used in connection with it? — He replied: That merely indicates that he must bring the whole [tenth] from his house.¹⁷

But did R. Johanan actually say that?¹⁸ Behold it has been stated: If a man set aside [in a vessel of ministry] a half tenth [of flour for his meal-offering]¹⁹ intending to add to it [to make up the tenth], Rab says, It is not hallowed; R. Johanan says, It is hallowed. Now if he held that view,¹⁸ he would surely derive [the ruling in this case] from that of the High Priest's meal-offering.²⁰ Should you say, however, that R. Johanan does not derive one case from another, but R. Johanan has actually ruled: If a peace-offering was slaughtered in the Temple it is valid, for it is written, And he shall slaughter it at the door of the tent of meeting,²¹ and surely the accessory cannot be more important than the principal!²² — It is different where he intended to add to it.²³ For it has been taught: It is written Full;²⁴ and full means nothing else but the whole amount. And R. Jose said, When is this so?²⁵ Only when there is no intention to make up [the full amount], but when there is an intention to make up [the full amount], then each part²⁶ [as it is put into the vessel of ministry] is hallowed.

Whose view does Rab²⁷ accept with regard to the High Priest's meal-offering? If you say R. Eleazar's, then he should surely derive [the ruling in the case of an ordinary meal-offering] from the High Priest's meal-offering.²⁸ And should you say that Rab does not derive one case from another, but Rab has actually said, A meal-offering is hallowed [even though it was put into the vessel of ministry] without oil, since we find it so in the case of the Shewbread,²⁹ without frankincense, since we find it so in the case of the drink-offerings;³⁰ without oil and without frankincense, since we find this in the case of the sinner's meal-offering?³¹ — We must therefore say that Rab accepts R. Johanan's view.³²

The text [above] stated: 'Rab said, A meal-offering is hallowed [even though it was put into the vessel of ministry] without oil, since we find it so in the case of the Shewbread; without frankincense, since we find it so in the case of the drink-offerings; without oil and without frankincense, since we find it so in the case of the sinner's meal-offering'. Moreover the oil and the frankincense are hallowed [in the vessel of ministry] alone, one without the other: the oil [without the flour and the frankincense], since we find it so in the case of the log of oil of the leper;³³ and the frankincense [without the flour and oil], since we find it so in the case of the dishes of frankincense. But R. Hanina said,

(1) And he would declare the meal-offering of the High Priest invalid if it was brought a half tenth at a time, just as it is invalid, according to R. Eleazar, if the blood of an animal offering was received in two vessels.

(2) The taking of the handful from the meal-offering was usually performed in the Temple court and not in the Temple proper.

(3) And the taking away of the dishes of frankincense was considered equal to the taking of the handful from the meal-offering (v. supra p. 38, n. 5).

(4) I.e., from the Shewbread which is regarded as a meal-offering.

(5) Sc. the two rows of loaves and the dishes of frankincense.

(6) I.e., at the seventh hour of the day (that is an hour after mid-day) on the Sabbath; v. Pes. 58a.

(7) That the frankincense may be burnt when a loaf was broken after the time for the removal of the Shewbread from the table had arrived.

(8) In which case the handful may not be burnt upon the altar; and here the Shewbread has not in fact been removed from the table. Since, however, the ruling is that the frankincense may be offered, it is evident that R. Eleazar does not derive one meal-offering from the other.

(9) I.e., the handful is not separate from the rest of the meal-offering, and until it has actually been taken out one cannot consider it as a handful.

(10) Sc. the dishes of frankincense. These stand apart from the bread, so that when the time for their removal has arrived one can well consider them as already having been removed.

(11) V. infra 9a.

(12) Lev. VI, 13.

(13) I.e., a whole meal-offering which must consist of a tenth part of an ephah of flour.

(14) Hence an objection against R. Eleazar.

(15) Lit., 'for a precept'. I.e., it should be performed in this manner; nevertheless it is hallowed even though brought a half tenth at a time.

(16) Ibid. VI, 15. The term 'statute' implies that there must be no infringement or variation of the prescribed rites.

(17) But as for hallowing in a vessel of ministry this may be done a half tenth at a time.

(18) That the High Priest's meal-offering is not hallowed if brought half at a time.

(19) The minimum quantity of flour for a meal-offering is one tenth part of an ephah.

(20) And as the High Priest's meal-offering is not hallowed, according to R. Johanan, if brought a half at a time, so it should be also with every meal-offering.

(21) Lev. III, 2.

(22) If the slaughtering may take place in the Temple court, how much more so in the Temple itself! Thus R. Johanan derives the slaughtering in the Temple from the slaughtering in the Temple court.

(23) In that case each part as it is put into the vessel of ministry is hallowed.

(24) Num. VII, 13: Both of them full of fine flour.

(25) That anything less than the whole amount is not hallowed.

(26) Lit., 'the first, the first'.

(27) Who in the case of an ordinary meal-offering ruled that if only part of it was put into a vessel of ministry it was not hallowed.

(28) And just as the High Priest's meal-offering is hallowed in part (so according to R. Eleazar) so it should be with an ordinary meal-offering too. Nevertheless in the latter case Rab expressly said that it was not hallowed in part.

(29) Which is deemed to be a meal-offering and yet no oil went with it.

(30) Which accompanied most sacrifices, consisting of quantities of flour and oil for a meal-offering and wine for a libation, but no frankincense went with it. V. Ibid. XV, 1ff.

(31) V. Lev. V, 11, We thus see that Rab derives one case from the other by analogy.

(32) That the High Priest's meal-offering may not be hallowed a half at a time, just as Rab himself expressly ruled in connection with an ordinary meal-offering.

(33) Which was not accompanied by flour and frankincense; V. Lev. XIV, 10ff.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 8b

The one is not hallowed without the other.¹ Then according to R. Hanina why was the tenth measure anointed?² — To measure the sinner's meal-offering.³ And why was the log measure anointed? — To measure the log of oil of the leper.

Samuel, too, is of the same opinion as Rab.⁴ For we have learnt:⁵ The vessels for liquids hallow liquids, and the measuring vessels for dry stuffs hallow dry stuffs; the vessels for liquids cannot hallow dry stuffs neither can the measuring vessels for dry stuffs hallow liquids. And Samuel had said, This applies only to the measuring vessels [for liquids], but the sprinkling bowls hallow also dry stuffs, for it is written, Both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meal-offering.⁶ R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina, But this meal-offering is moist!⁷ — He replied. It refers particularly to the dry parts of the flour.⁸ Alternatively,⁹ I may say, In comparison with blood a meal-offering [though mingled with oil] is regarded as dry stuff.

The text [above] stated: ‘R. Eleazar said, If the taking of the handful from the meal-offering was performed in the Temple it is valid, since we find that the taking away of the dishes [of frankincense was regularly performed there]’.¹⁰ R. Jeremiah raised an objection: It is written, And he shall take his handful from there,¹¹ that is, from the place where the feet of the non-priest may stand.¹² Ben Bathyra says, Whence do we know that if he took the handful with the left hand he should put it back again and then take it with his right hand? Because the verse says, ‘And he shall take his handful from there’, that is, from the place from which he has already taken a handful! — Some say that he [R. Jeremiah] raised the objection and he himself answered it [as stated below]. Others report that R. Jacob said to R. Jeremiah b. Tahlifa, I will explain it to you: That [verse] merely serves to teach us that [the rite of taking the handful] may be performed in any part of the Temple court; and you should not argue that since the burnt-offering is most holy and the meal-offering is most holy, therefore as the burnt-offering must be [slaughtered] on the north side [of the Temple court]¹³ so the meal-offering must be [attended to] on the north side. But surely the case of the burnt-offering is different, since it is wholly burnt!¹⁴ — Then [one could argue in the same way] from the sin-offering.¹⁵ But surely the case of the sin-offering is different, since it atones for those [who committed an act inadvertently which, had they committed it wilfully, would have made them] liable to kareth!¹⁶ — Then [one could argue in the same way] from the guilt-offering.¹⁵ Again the case of the guilt-offering is different, since it effects atonement by blood!¹⁷ Nor [could one argue in the same way] from all these [sacrifices taken together].¹⁸ since all these [are different from the meal-offering since they] effect atonement by blood! — That [verse] is indeed necessary, for I might have thought that since it is written, And it shall be presented unto the priest, and he shall bring it unto the altar,¹⁹ and [then it says] ‘and he shall take out the handful’,²⁰ therefore just as the meal-offering was brought unto the south-west corner of the altar²¹ so the handful was to be taken out at the south-west corner of the altar; we are therefore taught²² [that it may be performed in any part of the Temple court].

The text [above] stated: ‘R. Johanan said, If a peace-offering was slaughtered in the Temple it is valid, for it is written, And he shall slaughter it at the door of the tent of meeting,²³ and surely the accessory cannot be more important than the principal!’ An objection was raised: R. Judah b. Bathyra said, Whence do we know that, if the Temple court was surrounded by gentiles,²⁴ the priests may enter the Temple and eat there the most holy meat and the remainder of the meal-offerings? Because the verse says,

(1) I.e., all the ingredients of the meal-offering must be put in together into the vessel of ministry.

(2) To render it consecrated as a vessel of ministry. The tenth measure was a vessel of ministry holding the tenth part of an ephah which was used for measuring the flour of a meal-offering. But as the flour by itself, without oil and without frankincense, is not hallowed when put into this measuring vessel, then it was obviously unnecessary to have anointed this vessel as a sacred vessel. The same argument applies to the log, a vessel of ministry used for measuring oil only.

(3) Which consisted of flour only, without oil and frankincense; v. Lev. V, 11.

(4) That the vessel of ministry hallows the flour alone without the other ingredients.

(5) Zeb. 88a.

(6) Num. VII, 13. It is evident that the sprinkling bowl (mentioned previously in this verse) hallowed the flour that was put into it.

(7) For it is mingled with oil. Hence there is no proof from this verse that the sprinkling bowl can hallow dry goods.

(8) Although the flour was mingled with oil, it is inconceivable that every particle of the flour was moistened; nevertheless all the flour was hallowed in this bowl, obviously because the sprinkling bowl can hallow dry goods.

(9) In cur. edd. there is found here a passage of several lines enclosed within brackets. It is not found in any MS., and has been struck out by all commentators as a gloss.

(10) V. p. 42, nn. 7 and 8.

(11) Lev. II, 2.

(12) V. supra p. 34, n. 7. It is, however, evident from this that the rite of taking the handful must be performed in the Temple court only, and not in the Temple, contra R. Eleazar. The teaching of Ben Bathyra which follows is merely the continuation of the Baraitha quoted but it does not affect the argument at all.

(13) Ibid I, 11.

(14) How then could one apply the same to the meal-offering?

(15) Which is also a most holy offering and must be slaughtered in the north.

(16) V. Glos.

(17) Cf. Lev. XVII, 11. The meal-offering, however, does not effect atonement by blood.

(18) By arriving at the points they all have in common, viz., they are all most holy, and all must be slaughtered on the north side of the Temple court. Similarly it would be said of the meal-offering, that the rite of taking the handful must be performed at the north side of the Temple court only!

(19) Ibid II, 8.

(20) This is the purport of verse (9) which follows: And the priest shall take off from the meal-offering the memorial thereof.

(21) V. infra 19b.

(22) By the verse And he shall take the handful from there (ibid 2).

(23) Lev. III, 2. V. supra 45, n. 2.

(24) And so it became dangerous to remain in the Temple court or to eat there consecrated meat.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 9a

In the most holy place shalt thou eat thereof.¹ Now why is the verse necessary to teach this? One could say, it is sufficient that it is written, In the court of the tent of meeting they shall eat it,² and the accessory surely cannot be more important than the principal!³ — With regard to acts of service, since a man would perform services in the presence of his master, we apply the principle 'Surely the accessory cannot be more important than the principal'. But with regard to eating, since a man would not eat in the presence of his master, [it is permitted]⁴ only because the verse expressly says so, but had not the verse said so we would not have applied the principle 'Surely the accessory cannot be more important than the principal'.

It was stated: If the meal-offering was mingled⁵ outside the walls of the Temple court, R.

Johanan says, It is invalid; Resh Lakish says, It is valid. 'Resh Lakish says, it is valid', for it is written, And he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense thereon, and then, And he shall bring it to Aaron's sons the priests; and he shall take thereout his handful;⁶ hence from the taking of the handful begins the duty of the priesthood. This therefore teaches us that the pouring [of the oil upon the meal-offering] and the mingling [of the oil with the flour] are valid [even if done] by non-priests. Now since [the mingling] does not require the services of the priesthood, it likewise need not be performed within [the Temple court]. 'R. Johanan says, it is invalid', for since it must be prepared in a vessel [of ministry],⁷ even though it does not require the services of the priesthood, it must nevertheless be performed within [the Temple court]. There is a Baraita in support of R. Johanan's view; for it has been taught: If a non-priest mingled it it is valid; if it was mingled outside the walls of the Temple court it is invalid.

It was stated: If the meal-offering had diminished before the handful was taken from it, R. Johanan says, He may bring [flour] from his house to fill up the measure; Resh Lakish says, He may not bring [flour] from his house to fill up the measure. R. Johanan says, He may bring [flour] from his house to fill up the measure, for it is the taking of the handful that determines it [for a meal-offering].⁸ 'Resh Lakish says, He may not bring [flour] from his house to fill up the measure', for it is the hallowing of the vessel that determines it [for a meal-offering].⁹ R. Johanan then raised this objection against Resh Lakish: We have learnt: If the [oil in the] log was found to be lacking before it was poured out,¹⁰ he may fill up the measure.¹¹ This is indeed a refutation.

It was stated: If the remainder of the meal-offering was found to be lacking between the taking of the handful and the burning thereof, R. Johanan says, He may burn the handful on account of it; Resh Lakish says, He may not burn the handful on account of it. According to R. Eliezer's view there can be no difference of opinion;¹² they differ only according to R. Joshua's view. For we have learnt:¹³ If the remainder of the meal-offering became unclean or was burnt or lost, according to the rule of R. Eliezer¹⁴ it is lawful [to burn the handful], but according to the rule of R. Joshua¹⁵ It is unlawful. Now he who says it is unlawful [to burn the handful], clearly agrees with R. Joshua; but he who says it is lawful, [distinguishes the cases thus]: only in that case did R. Joshua say [that it was unlawful], since nothing [of the meat] remained available, but here where some [of the meal-offering] remained available, even R. Joshua admits [that it is lawful to burn the handful]. For it has been so taught: R. Joshua says, If of any animal-offering mentioned in the Torah there remained an olive's bulk of flesh or an olive's bulk of fat, one may sprinkle the blood; if there remained a half-olive's bulk of flesh and a half-olive's bulk of fat, one may not sprinkle the blood.¹⁶ In the case of a burnt-offering, however, even if there remained a half-olive's bulk of flesh and a half-olive's bulk of fat, one may sprinkle the blood, since it is wholly burnt.¹⁷ And in the case of a meal-offering, even though all of it remains, one may not sprinkle the blood.

(1) Num. XVIII, 10.

(2) Lev. VI, 9.

(3) And if the most holy meat may be eaten in the Temple court, how much more so on the argument of R. Johanan in the Temple proper! Surely then no verse is necessary to permit this.

(4) To eat in the Temple proper.

(5) With the oil.

(6) Ibid. II, 1, 2.

- (7) Or, according to the reading of MS.M and Sh. Mek., 'since it is hallowed (by being put) in a vessel of ministry'.
- (8) And so long as the handful has not been taken one may add to the flour of the meal-offering.
- (9) And once it has been determined for a meal-offering, if it had diminished there is no remedy for it, and it is invalid.
- (10) I.e., before the priest had poured the oil into the palm of his own left hand for the purification of the leper. cf. Lev. XIV, 15.
- (11) V. Neg. XIV, 10. We thus see that the defective measure may be filled up even though it had already been hallowed in a vessel of ministry, contra Resh Lakish.
- (12) For if where the remainder was lost entirely the handful may still be burnt, how much more so where only a part of the remainder was lacking!
- (13) V. infra 26a, Pes. 77b.
- (14) Who held (Pes. 77a) that the blood of the sacrifice may be sprinkled even though the meat is not available (either because it was rendered unclean or was burnt or lost); likewise with the meal-offering, he would hold that the handful may be burnt upon the altar even though the remainder is no longer available, and needless to say where only a portion of the remainder was wanting.
- (15) Who held that where the meat of the sacrifice was not available it is not lawful to sprinkle the blood.
- (16) For in order to sprinkle the blood there must remain a whole olive's bulk either of what may be eaten by man (i.e., the flesh) or of what may be consumed by the altar; (i.e., the fat).
- (17) And both the flesh and the fat are burnt upon the altar; hence a half-olive's bulk of the one may be joined with a half-olive's bulk of the other.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 9b

How does the meal-offering come in here?¹ Said R. Papa, It refers to the meal-offering offered with drink-offerings.² For I might have said that, since it accompanies the animal-offering, it is deemed to be part of the animal-offering;³ we are therefore taught [that it is not so]. And he who says it is unlawful [to burn the handful, what can he say to this]?⁴ — Here [in the case of the meal-offering] it is different, for the verse says, And the priest shall offer up from the meal-offering the memorial thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar;⁵ and the expression 'the meal-offering' implies that the meal-offering must be there in its entirety.⁶ And [what does] the other⁷ [say to this]? — He would say that the expression 'from the meal-offering' implies only that the meal-offering was once whole.⁸ R. Johanan raised this objection against Resh Lakish. It was taught:⁹ If a loaf was broken before it¹⁰ had been removed, the Shewbread is invalid, and [the priest] may not burn on account of it¹¹ the dishes of frankincense; if a loaf was broken after it¹⁰ had been removed, the Shewbread is invalid, but he may nevertheless burn on account of it the dishes of frankincense.¹² Whereupon R. Eleazar had said, [The expression 'after it had been removed'] does not mean that it had actually been removed, but rather that the time for its removal had arrived, even though it had not yet been removed!¹³ — He replied, The author of that Baraitha is R. Eliezer.¹⁴ He [R. Johanan] then said to him, I quote you an undisputed¹⁵ Mishnah,¹⁶ and you merely say that the author is R. Eliezer! If it is R. Eliezer, why does [the Baraitha] speak of only part [of the Shewbread] being broken, even if it were entirely burnt or lost he would also permit [the burning of the frankincense], would he not? — The other remained silent. And why did he remain silent? Surely he could have replied that it is different with the offering of the community,¹⁷ for just as uncleanness is permitted for the community¹⁸ so the diminution [of an offering] is also permitted for it! R. Adda b. Abaha said, This¹⁹ proves that diminution is on a par with a physical blemish, and no [animal with a] physical blemish is permitted [even] for the community.

R. Papa was sitting reciting the above teaching²⁰ when R. Joseph b. Shemaiah said to him, Is it not the case that the dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish refers also to the 'Omer meal-offering which is a communal offering?²¹

R. Malkio said, One [Baraita] teaches: The expression 'of the fine flour thereof'²² implies that if it had diminished, however little, it is invalid; and 'of the oil thereof'.²² implies that if it had diminished, however little, it is invalid. And another [Baraita] teaches: The expression 'of the meal-offering'²³ excludes the case where the meal-offering or the handful had diminished, or where nothing at all of the frankincense was burnt.²⁴ Now why are two verses necessary to exclude any diminution? Surely it must be that one refers to the case where the meal-offering had diminished before the handful was taken,²⁵ and the other to the case where the remainder had diminished between the taking of the handful and the burning thereof.²⁶ This then is a refutation of both views of R. Johanan, is it not? — No, one verse refers to the case where the meal-offering had diminished before the taking of the handful, in which case if he brings more [flour] from his house and makes up the measure it is [valid], otherwise it is not [valid]. The other refers to the case where the remainder had diminished between the taking of the handful and the burning thereof, in which case the remainder is forbidden to be eaten although he may burn the handful on account of it. For the question was raised: According to him who says that where the remainder had diminished between the taking of the handful and the burning thereof he may burn the handful on account of it, what is the position with regard to the eating of the remainder? — Ze'iri said, It is written, And that which is left [of the meal-offering], but not that which is left of the remainder. R. Jannai said, It is written, of the meal-offering,²⁷ that is, the meal-offering which was once whole.²⁸

IF [THE PRIEST] TOOK THE HANDFUL WITH HIS LEFT HAND [IT IS INVALID]. Whence do we know this? — R. Zera said, The verse states, And he presented the meal-offering, and filled his hand therefrom.²⁹ Now I do not know which hand was meant, but when another verse states, And the priest shall take of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand,³⁰ [I know that] only here ['hand' means] the left hand, but elsewhere wherever 'hand' is stated it means the right. But is not this expression required for its own purpose?³¹ — 'The left hand' is mentioned once again.³² But should I not apply here the principle: 'a limitation followed by a limitation extends the scope of the law'?³³ — 'The left hand' is mentioned yet once again,³⁴ so that we may say that only here ['hand' means] the left hand, whereas elsewhere ['hand'] cannot mean the left hand. perhaps I should say quite the contrary: just as here ['hand' means] the left hand so elsewhere ['hand' means] the left hand! — 'The left hand' is in fact stated four times: twice in the case of the poor man and twice in the case of the rich man.³⁵

R. Jeremiah said to R. Zera. For what purpose is it written, Upon the thumb of his right hand and upon the great toe of his right foot?³⁶ —

(1) How can one speak of the sprinkling of blood in connection with a meal-offering?

- (2) Which accompanied most animal-offerings; cf. Num. XV, 4-10.
- (3) And the blood of the offering may be sprinkled, even though all the flesh and the fat had gone, since the whole of the meal-offering that belongs to the animal-offering remains.
- (4) Surely Resh Lakish admits this distinction in R. Joshua made by R. Johanan, for R. Joshua himself expressly differentiates so in the Baraitha quoted.
- (5) Lev. II, 9.
- (6) At the time of the burning of the handful; otherwise it may not be burnt.
- (7) R. Johanan.
- (8) I.e., at the time of the taking of the handful.
- (9) V. supra p. 43.
- (10) Sc. the dishes of frankincense.
- (11) I.e., on behalf of the Shewbread that remained.
- (12) Hence it is evident that if the remainder of the meal-offering had diminished between the taking and the burning of the handful — which corresponds to the diminution of the Shewbread between the taking away and the burning of the frankincense — one may nevertheless burn the handful; contra Resh Lakish.
- (13) This is mentioned only incidentally as the continuation of the cited passage.
- (14) According to whom the diminution, and even the entire destruction, of the remainder of the meal-offering does not prevent the burning of the handful upon the altar; v. supra.
- (15) Lit. 'whole'.
- (16) [This is really a Baraitha but is nevertheless, as is frequently the case, designated Mishnah, v. Higger , u, hrcv rmut I, p. 37ff].
- (17) The Shewbread and the burning of the frankincense was a regular weekly service on behalf of the community. Cf. Lev. XXIV, 4-9.
- (18) If the whole community of Israel or the greater part thereof became unclean it is then permitted to offer the communal sacrifices, e.g., the Daily sacrifice, in uncleanness. V. Pes. 77a.
- (19) The fact that Resh Lakish remained silent and did not put forward the suggested answer.
- (20) That Resh Lakish remained silent and did not distinguish between communal and private offerings.
- (21) MS.M., Rashi and Sh. Mek. omit the word "Omer", and the sense of R. Joseph's remark is that the dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish related also to the Shewbread which is a communal meal-offering.
- (22) Lev. II, 2. The amount of the flour of a meal-offering is fixed at a minimum of one tenth part of an ephah, and of oil at one log.
- (23) Ibid. 3.
- (24) But where some of the frankincense had been burnt upon the altar and then it was found to be wanting, the meal-offering is valid.
- (25) In which case the meal-offering is invalid, for the deficiency cannot be made up by bringing more flour, contra R. Johanan.
- (26) In which case the handful may not be burnt, again contra R. Johanan.
- (27) Lev. II. 3.
- (28) I.e., if at the time of the taking of the handful the remainder was intact, it is immaterial if later it was found to have diminished, and it may be eaten; R. Jannai accordingly is in conflict with Ze'iri. Rashi, however, gives another interpretation according to which R. Jannai is in agreement with Ze'iri: the meal-offering was once whole, i.e., at the time of the burning of the handful.
- (29) Ibid. IX, 17.
- (30) Ibid. XIV, 15, in reference to the purificatory rites of a leper.
- (31) That only the left hand shall be employed and not the right, and one therefore cannot draw any conclusion or inference from this expression.

(32) Ibid. 16.

(33) Since 'the left hand' is stated twice, and inasmuch as each by itself serves as a limitation to exclude the right hand, the result is that the successive limitations actually amplify the law and include the right hand, that it, too, may be used in the purificatory rites of the leper.

(34) Ibid. 26. This third expression precludes the suggestion stated that the first two are to be regarded as limitation following limitation resulting in amplification, for if that were so this third expression would be superfluous.

(35) Lev. XIV, 14, 16, 26 and 27; the first two referring to the rites of a rich man that is being cleansed of his leprosy, and the latter two to those of a poor man. The result is therefore thus: the first expression 'the left hand' is required for its own purpose, the second to indicate that only here 'hand' means the left hand but not elsewhere, the third to preclude the suggestion that the first two are to be regarded as limitation following limitation, and the fourth to preclude the inference, suggested last, that wherever 'hand' is stated the left hand is meant.

(36) Ibid 17 and 28, with reference to the application of oil upon these parts, the former verse dealing with the case of the rich man and the latter with the poor man. In both cases, however, the passage is superfluous for in each verse appears the direction that the oil shall be applied on the place where the blood of the guilt-offering had been applied, and the latter, as expressly stated both in the case of the rich man and of the poor man (v. ibid. 14 and 25 respectively), was applied upon the thumb of the right hand and the great toe of the right leg. It must be observed that the thumb and the great toe are expressed in the Heb. by the same word İVC; thus the expression İVC kg, stated twice in this verse, is redundant.

One serves to permit [the application of the oil] upon the sides;¹ and the other to forbid it on the sides of the side.² And for what purpose are stated, Upon the blood of the guilt-offering, and, Upon the place of the blood of the guilt-offering?³ — They are both necessary; for had the Divine Law only stated, upon the blood of the guilt-offering, I should have said that only if [the blood] was still there it is [valid], but if it had been wiped off it is not [valid]; the Divine Law therefore stated, 'Upon the place of the blood of the guilt-offering'. And had the Divine Law only stated, 'Upon the place etc.', I should have said that it [the blood] must first be wiped off, but if it was still there it would be regarded as an interposition;⁴ the Divine Law therefore stated, 'Upon the blood of the guilt-offering'.

Raba said, Since there have been stated [with regard to the application of the oil] the expressions 'Upon the blood of the guilt-offering' and 'Upon the place of the blood of the guilt-offering', and moreover since with regard to the application of the blood the term 'right' is used, for what purpose then does the verse state, concerning the application of the oil upon the leper. 'Upon the thumb of his right hand and upon the great toe of his right leg', both in the case of the rich man and of the poor man?⁵ — Raba therefore said,⁶ The term 'hand' [is required for purposes of analogy] with 'hand' in respect of the taking out of the handful,⁷ the term 'leg' with 'leg' in respect of halizah,⁸ the term 'ear' with 'ear' in respect of 'boring of the ear'.⁹ Wherefore is 'the left' stated?¹⁰ — R. Shisha the son of R. Idi answered, In order to rule out the use of the priest's right hand in the case of the leper; lest you argue as follows: if in the case where the left hand is not allowed the right hand nevertheless is, in the case where the left hand is allowed surely the right hand is allowed too.¹¹ And wherefore is 'the left' stated again?¹² — For the reason taught at the school of R. Ishmael: Any Biblical passage that was stated once, and then repeated, was repeated only for the sake of some new point contained therein.¹³

Rabbah b. Bar Hannah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish, Wherever the words ‘priest’ and ‘finger’ are stated [in connection with a service of the Temple] they signify the right [hand] only. Now it was assumed that both these terms ‘priest’ and ‘finger’ were necessary [to signify this], as in the verse, And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger,¹⁴ and [there the finger of the right hand is meant for] it is inferred from the case of the leper where it is written, And the priest shall dip his right finger.¹⁵ But there is the case of the taking of the handful, with regard to which only the word ‘priest’ is written, and yet we have learnt: IF [THE PRIEST] TOOK THE HANDFUL WITH HIS LEFT HAND IT IS INVALID! — Raba answered, It is either the word ‘priest’ or the word ‘finger’ [that is meant].¹⁶ Thereupon Abaye said to him, Take the case of the bringing of the limbs [of the sacrifice] to the [altar] ascent, with regard to which the word ‘priest’ is written, as it is said, And the priest shall present the whole and burn it upon the altar,¹⁷ and a Master said, This refers to the bringing of the limbs to the [altar] ascent,¹⁸ and yet we have learnt:¹⁹ The right [hind-]leg was carried in the left hand with the part covered with the skin outermost!²⁰ — The rule [that the word] ‘priest’ or ‘finger’ [implies the right hand] we apply only to such services as would invalidate the atonement [by their omission].²¹ Then take the case of receiving [of the blood in a vessel]; it is surely a service that would invalidate the atonement [by its omission], and yet we have learnt:²² If [the priest] received the blood in his left hand, It is invalid; but R. Simeon declares it valid!²³ — You raised this [difficulty] according to R. Simeon's view, did you not? But R. Simeon requires both terms.²⁴ Does then R. Simeon require both terms? Surely it has been taught: R. Simeon says. Wherever the term ‘hand’ is stated it signifies the right hand only, likewise the term ‘finger’ signifies the right finger only! — The term ‘finger’ does not require with it the term ‘priest’,²⁵ but the term ‘priest’ requires with it the term ‘finger’.²⁵ Why then is the term ‘priest’ stated at all?²⁶ [That he shall be clad] in the priestly robes.

(1) Sc. of the thumb and of the great toe; for the Hebrew particle kg may mean ‘close to’ as well as ‘upon’.

(2) I.e., the inner side of the thumb (facing the palm), and the lower side of the great toe (facing the ground).

(3) Ibid. 17 and 28. Surely one of them is superfluous (Rashi). According to Tosaf, the question is, Why the variation in the expressions; why in the second verse is ‘the place of’ added?

(4) For the oil must touch the body of the leper on the parts specified directly without any other substance interposing.

(5) The question is concerning the superfluous word ‘right’ stated with regard to the hand and the leg; for even if Scripture had omitted the word in each case we should still have known that the right hand and right leg were intended, either because the application of the blood was upon these limbs and the oil was to be applied upon the blood, or because of the original opinion expressed by R. Zera that ‘hand’ generally means the right hand. V. Tosaf. s.v. rnt.

(6) Raba on account of this last question abandons the conclusions of R. Zera that were derived from the expression ‘the left hand’ being stated four times, whereby the rule was established that ‘hand’ generally means the right hand and therefore the taking of the handful must be performed with the right hand, but proceeds to interpret anew all the expressions employed in this passage dealing with the purificatory rites of the leper.

(7) The word ‘hand’ is stated here in connection with the rites of a rich man (Lev. XIV, 17) and also in connection with the taking of the handful from the meal-offering (ibid IX, 17): as in the former case the right hand is meant for it is expressly stated so, so in the latter case, too, the right hand is meant.

(8) The word 'leg' is stated here in connection with the rites of the rich man (ibid. XIV, 17) and also in connection with the ceremony of halizah (the drawing off of the shoe, v. Deut. XXV, 5-10): as here the right leg is meant, so there too the right leg is meant.

(9) The word 'ear' is stated here in connection with the rites of the rich man (Lev. ibid.) and also in connection with the boring of the ear of an Israelite slave who desired to continue in servitude (v. Ex. XXI, 5, 6): as here the right ear is meant, so there too the right ear is meant.

(10) In Lev. XIV, 16, in connection with the rites of the rich man: And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand. In the preceding verse (15) 'the left hand' is admittedly required for its own purpose, that the priest shall pour the oil into his left hand.

(11) Scripture therefore repeated 'the left hand' to indicate that the service shall be performed with the left hand only.

(12) Lev. XIV, 27, in connection with the rites of the poor man. This question applies to all the expressions used in connection with the rites of the poor leper.

(13) The new point being that the offerings for purification vary according to the means of the leper.

(14) Ibid. IV, 25.

(15) Ibid. XIV, 16. And as in this verse where both the expressions 'priest' and 'finger' are stated the right must be used, so wherever these two expressions are found they imply the use of the right hand.

(16) I.e., the occurrence of either of these terms in connection with any service signifies that that service shall be performed with the right hand or with the right finger.

(17) Lev. I, 13.

(18) Cf. Zeb. 4a and elsewhere.

(19) Tamid 31b.

(20) Hence although the term 'priest' is used in connection with the service of 'bringing nigh', it nevertheless may be performed with the left hand!

(21) Whereas the service of 'bringing nigh' is not indispensable, for even if it were omitted, e.g., If the sacrifice was slaughtered close to the altar ascent so that there was no need for bringing the limbs to the altar, the atonement would not be impaired.

(22) Zeb. 15b. In cur. edd. before 'we have learnt' are inserted the following lines: 'and with regard to which the term "priest" is stated, as it is written, And Aaron's sons, the priests, shall present the blood (Lev. I, 5), which refers to the receiving of the blood'. These lines are not found in any of the MSS. and apparently they were not in the text that was before Rashi. They are also omitted by Sh. Mek.

(23) Notwithstanding the expression 'priest' used in connection with the service, v. prec. n.

(24) Both the expressions 'priest' and 'finger' are necessary in order to signify the right hand.

(25) In order to signify the right finger.

(26) In a case where the term 'finger' is used the addition of the term 'priest' is of no significance whatsoever. This question and the answer which follows are omitted in all MSS.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 10b

Consider the case of the sprinkling [of the blood], with regard to which only the term 'priest' is used, yet we have learnt: If [the priest] sprinkled the blood with his left hand it is invalid; and R. Simeon does not differ! — Abaye answered, He does indeed differ in the Baraitha, for it was taught: If he received the blood in his left hand it is invalid, but R. Simeon declares it valid. If he sprinkled the blood with his left hand it is invalid, but R. Simeon declares it valid.

But then Raba's statement that the term 'hand' [is required for the purposes of analogy] with 'hand' in respect of the taking out of the handful,¹ is quite unnecessary, for it would have been inferred from the expression 'priest'!² — One [teaching] is required for the taking out of the handful and the other for the hallowing of the handful.³ But according to R. Simeon who holds [according to one view] that the hallowing of the handful is not essential,⁴ and even according to the other view that the hallowing of the handful is indeed essential but that it is valid if performed with the left hand, is not Raba's analogy by means of the common word 'hand' necessary? It cannot serve to indicate that the actual taking out of the handful [shall be performed with the right hand],⁵ as this is already established by the teaching of R. Judah the son of R. Hiyya. For R. Judah the son of R. Hiyya said, What is the reason for R. Simeon's view?⁶ Because the verse says, It is most holy as the sin-offering and as the guilt-offering;⁷ that is to say, if [the priest] comes to perform the service with his hand⁸ he must do so with his right hand as the sin-offering,⁹ and if he comes to perform it in a vessel he must do so with his left hand as the guilt-offering!¹⁰ — It is only necessary with regard to the handful of the sinner's meal-offering; for I might have said that, since R. Simeon has expressed the view that his [the sinner's] offering shall not be sumptuous,¹¹ then even if the handful were taken out with the left hand it should be valid, we are therefore taught [by Raba's analogy that it must nevertheless be performed with the right hand].

IF ON TAKING THE HANDFUL THERE CAME INTO HIS HAND A SMALL STONE OR A GRAIN OF SALT

- (1) Namely that it shall be performed with the right hand; v. supra p. 56.
 - (2) The term 'priest' is used in connection with the taking 'of the handful, and this alone, according to the view of the Rabbis as stated by Raba, indicates that the service must be performed with the right hand.
 - (3) Raba's analogy is required to teach that the hallowing of the handful, i.e., putting it into a vessel of ministry, must also be performed with the right hand.
 - (4) But that the handful taken out by the Priest may be carried directly to the altar and burnt thereon. V. infra 26a.
 - (5) Since R. Simeon does not accept the view that the term 'priest' by itself signifies the use of the right hand. V. supra p. 58.
 - (6) That the offering is valid even though the handful was not hallowed in a vessel of ministry.
 - (7) Lev. VI, 10, with reference to the meal-offering.
 - (8) I.e., he does not put the handful into a vessel of ministry, but places it on the altar directly from his hand.
 - (9) The sprinkling of the sin-offering — which corresponds to the burning of the handful of the meal-offering — must be performed with the right hand, since in connection therewith both the expressions 'priest' and 'finger' are employed.
 - (10) Sc. the guilt-offering of the leper with regard to which the left hand is expressly required. It is evident, however, from this teaching of R. Judah that any service that is performed with the hand, as the taking of the handful from the meal-offering, must be performed with the right hand; hence Raba's analogy is unnecessary.
 - (11) And therefore it must be offered without oil and frankincense; v. supra 6b.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 11a

OR A DROP OF FRANKINCENSE IT IS INVALID. Why are all these mentioned? — They are all necessary; for had [the Mishnah] only stated a small stone, [I should have said that it is invalid] because it is something that cannot be offered [upon the altar], but as for salt, since it is offered.¹ I would say that it does not render [the handful] invalid. And had the Mishnah stated salt only, [I should have said that it was invalid] because it is not prescribed to be brought with the meal-offering in the beginning, but as for frankincense, since it is prescribed to be brought with the meal-offering in the beginning, I would say that it does not render [the handful] invalid. We are therefore taught them all.

FOR THEY HAVE RULED: IF THE HANDFUL WAS TOO MUCH OR TOO LITTLE IT IS INVALID. Why is the reason given because it is too much or too little? Surely [it is invalid] because of the interposition?² — R. Jeremiah answered. It might have been at one side.³ Abaye asked Raba, How is the handful taken? — He replied, As people usually take a handful.⁴ He then raised the following objection against him: It was taught:⁵ This one⁶ is [for measuring] the span,⁷ this one⁸ [for taking] the handful,⁹ this one¹⁰ [for measuring] the cubit,¹¹ this one¹² is the finger,¹³ and this one¹⁴ the thumb!¹⁵ — It is used only in order to smooth the edge.¹⁶ How then was it done? — R. Zutra b. Tobiah said in the name of Rab, He bends his three fingers until he reaches the palm of his hand and then takes the handful. [A Baraita] has been taught to this effect: It is written, And he shall take out a full handful.¹⁷ Now one might suppose that it should be overflowing, another verse therefore says, In his handful.¹⁸ But from the verse, In his handful, one might suppose that it may be taken with the finger tips, it is therefore written, A full handful. How is it then to be? He should bend his three fingers over on to the palm of his hand and thus take the handful. In the case of a meal-offering prepared on a griddle or in a pan.¹⁹ he must level it with his thumb on top and with his little finger below. And this was the most difficult service in the Temple. This, and none other? Was there not the nipping?²⁰ and the taking of 'both hands full'?²¹ — Render: And this was one of the most difficult services in the Temple.

R. Papa said, I have no doubt at all that the expression 'a full handful' means in the manner in which people usually take a handful.²² But, asked R. Papa, what if he took out the handful with his fingertips,²³ or with the side [of his hand],²⁴ or [if he took it] from below upwards?²⁵ These questions remain undecided.

R. Papa said, I have no doubt at all that the expression 'his hands full'²⁶ means in the manner in which people usually fill the hands.²⁷ But, asked R. Papa, what if he filled his hands with his finger tips, or with the sides,²⁸ or if he filled each hand separately and brought them together? — These questions remain undecided.

R. Papa raised the question: What if he stuck the handful to the side of the vessel?²⁹ Must it be put inside the vessel, which is the case here; or must it be put down inside the vessel, which is not the case here? — This remains undecided.

Mar b. R. Ashi raised the following question: What if he turned the vessel upside down and put down the handful on the bottom of the vessel?³⁰ Must it be put inside the vessel, which is the case here; or must it be put down in a normal manner,³¹ which is not the case here? — This remains undecided.

MISHNAH. HOW SHOULD HE DO IT? HE SHOULD STRETCH OUT HIS FINGERS ON

TO THE PALM OF HIS HAND. IF HE PUT IN TOO MUCH OF ITS OIL OR TOO LITTLE OF ITS OIL.³² OR TOO LITTLE OF ITS FRANKINCENSE,³³ THE OFFERING IS INVALID.

GEMARA. What is meant by TOO MUCH OF ITS OIL? R. Eleazar said, If, for example, one set apart for it two logs of oil.³⁴ And why did he not suggest that ordinary [unconsecrated] oil or oil from another [meal-offering] was added to it? Should you, however, retort that [the addition of] ordinary [unconsecrated] oil or oil from another [meal-offering] would not render the offering invalid, then there is the objection (raised by R. Zutra b. Tobiah):³⁵ How can the ruling, that the sinner's meal-offering Another interpretation is: he filled his hands with incense taken from the side of the vessel and not from the middle. is rendered invalid by the addition of oil,³⁶ ever be applied? If [you say that oil was especially set aside] for it — but it does not require any;³⁷ and if [you say that] ordinary [unconsecrated] oil or oil from another [meal-offering] was added to it — but you have now said that this would not render the offering invalid? And R. Eleazar [what does he say to this]?³⁸ — It is a case of 'it goes without saying'; thus, it goes without saying that the offering is rendered invalid by the addition of ordinary [unconsecrated] oil or oil of another [meal-offering]; but in the case where a man set aside for it two logs of oil, since each [log separately] is suitable for the purpose. I would say that it is not invalid; he therefore teaches us [that it is invalid]. But whence does R. Eleazar know this? — Raba said, Our Mishnah presented a difficulty to him. Why does it use the expression. IF HE PUT IN TOO MUCH OF ITS OIL? It should have stated, 'If he put in too much oil for it'. But it teaches us³⁹ that [it is invalid] even though he set aside for it two logs of oil.

IF HE PUT IN TOO LITTLE OF ITS FRANKINCENSE. Our Rabbis taught: If the frankincense had diminished until there remained one grain only, the offering is invalid; if there remained two grains, it is valid. So R. Judah. R. Simeon says. If there remained one grain, it is valid; if less than that it is invalid.

- (1) For after the handful was placed upon the altar salt was sprinkled over it.
 - (2) When there is a stone or some other substance included in the handful it interposes or separates between the flour and the fingers, and this renders it invalid. And even where the stone happens to lie in the middle of the flour and does not touch the fingers it is also invalid for it interposes between the flour and divides it into two!
 - (3) The stone might have been at the end of the handful i.e., near the thumb or the little finger, so that there is no question of interposition, but it is invalid only because the handful is too little, since there is lacking flour to the extent of the volume of the stone.
 - (4) Using all the fingers of the hand, even the little finger.
 - (5) V. Keth. 5b.
 - (6) The little finger.
 - (7) I.e., the distance from the tip of the little finger to the tip of the thumb of a spread hand. The span was the measure of the breastplate of the High Priest; v. Ex. XXVIII, 16.
 - (8) The finger next to the little one.
 - (9) This finger was the limit on the one end of the handful, the thumb limiting it at the other end; so that the little finger was not used in taking the handful, contra Raba.
 - (10) The middle finger.

- (11) I.e., the distance from the tip of the middle finger to the point of the elbow.
- (12) The fourth from the little finger.
- (13) Which is used in the priestly service, as when the priest dips his finger in the blood for the sprinkling.
- (14) The fifth from the little finger.
- (15) Which was the subject of special rites in the purification ceremony of the leper.
- (16) The little finger was to be employed only to smooth level the side of the handful so that none of the flour should appear to be bursting out; this levelling was also performed at the other end by the thumb. It is clear, however, that the actual handful was made up by bending the middle three fingers over the palm. In cur. edd. there appears here in the text an explanatory gloss which is not found in any MS., it is struck out by Sh. Mek.
- (17) Lev. II, 2.
- (18) Ibid. VI, 8: the meaning of this expression being that the flour shall be entirely within the handful, so that none should burst out at the ends or between the fingers.
- (19) These meal-offerings were first baked into cakes, the cakes broken into pieces, and then the priest took out a handful. They were not, however, broken fine, and therefore when the handful was taken, particles of the cakes would be protruding on all sides; the thumb and little finger were then brought into operation so as to smooth the sides-an awkward and difficult manipulation.
- (20) Nipping off the head of a bird-offering. (v. Lev. I, 15) was an act which required considerable skill; cf. Zeb. 64b.
- (21) V. ibid. XVI, 12, where it is stated that the High Priest on the Day of Atonement took both hands full of incense and offered it in the Holy of Holies. The circumstances in which he took these were such as to render the taking a very difficult task. V. Yoma 49b.
- (22) I.e., by inserting the side of the hand, held at an angle, into the flour and scooping up a handful.
- (23) With the palm of his hand facing downwards he inserted his finger-tips and scooped up the flour little by little into the palm of his hand.
- (24) By laying his hand, palm upwards, upon the surface of the flour and moving it to and fro he gradually scooped up a handful. Another interpretation is: he took the handful from the flour at the side of the vessel and not from the middle.
- (25) He cupped his hand and pressed it, palm upwards, into the flour and thus took out a handful.
- (26) Ibid. XVI, 12. V. supra n. 3.
- (27) I.e., by cupping the hands, inserting them into the heap, drawing them towards each other, and taking out two hands full.
- (28) By laying the hands flat, palms upwards, on the incense and heaping up the incense on them via the space between the thumb and the first finger.
- (29) When putting back the handful to be hallowed in a vessel of ministry, the priest did not put it down in the bottom of the vessel but stuck it on the side of the vessel.
- (30) The vessel was overturned and the handful was put down on the now concave base of the vessel.
- (31) Lit, 'in its ordered manner'.
- (32) The amount of oil prescribed is one log (v. Glos.) for each tenth part of an ephah of flour.
- (33) The prescribed amount of frankincense is one handful; v. infra 106b.
- (34) And the oil was then mixed with the flour, so that to all appearances there are here two meal-offerings.
- (35) The bracketed words are deleted by Sh. Mek.
- (36) The sinner's meal-offering was to be without oil (v. Lev. V, 11); if any oil was put into it it is invalid, v. infra 59b.
- (37) And therefore what was set aside for it does not become consecrated.
- (38) Why then did he not suggest an addition of ordinary unconsecrated oil?

(39) The expression 'TOO MUCH OF ITS OIL' implies that a large quantity had been set aside for this meal-offering at the very beginning.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 11b

But have we not been taught [in another Baraitha]:¹ If the handful of frankincense had diminished, no matter how little, it is invalid?² — Render: If the [last] grain of frankincense had diminished, no matter how little, it is invalid. Alternatively I may say. One³ [Baraitha] refers to the frankincense that was offered together with the meal-offering,⁴ and the other to a separate offering of frankincense.⁵

R. Isaac b. Joseph said in the name of R. Johanan. In this matter there are three different views: R. Meir⁶ holds that there must be a handful [of frankincense] at the outset⁷ and also a handful in the end; R. Judah holds, a handful at the outset and two grains in the end; R. Simeon holds, a handful at the outset and one grain in the end. All these three [Rabbis] derived their opinions from the same verse, vis., And all the frankincense which is upon the meal-offering.⁸ R. Meir is of the opinion that [the offering is invalid] unless there is present now all the frankincense that was prescribed to be offered with the meal-offering at the outset. R. Judah maintains that the expression 'all'⁹ implies even one grain, and the particle 'eth'¹⁰ adds to it another grain. R. Simeon, however, does not interpret the particle 'eth'.¹¹

R. Isaac b. Joseph also said in the name of R. Johanan. They¹² differ only with regard to the frankincense that is offered together with the meal-offering, but with regard to frankincense that is offered by itself, all agree that there must be a handful at the outset and a handful in the end. Therefore the words 'which is upon the meal-offering' are expressly stated to indicate that this is so¹³ only [with regard to the frankincense] that is offered with the meal-offering, but not with regard to that offered by itself. R. Isaac b. Joseph further said in the name of R. Johanan, They¹² differ only with regard to the frankincense that is offered together with the meal-offering, but as for the frankincense offered in the dishes,¹⁴ all agree that there must be two handfuls at the outset and two handfuls in the end.¹⁵ Surely this is obvious!¹⁶ — You might have thought that since [the frankincense in the two dishes] is brought together with the Shewbread it is in the same category as that which is offered with a meal-offering; we are therefore taught [that it is not so].

This, however, is a matter of dispute between R. Ammi and R. Isaac Nappaha. One says, They¹⁷ differ only with regard to the frankincense that is offered together with the meal-offering, but with regard to the frankincense offered by itself, all agree that there must be a handful at the outset and a handful in the end. The other says, Just as they differ in the former case so they differ in the latter case too.

IF HE PUT IN TOO LITTLE OF ITS FRANKINCENSE THE OFFERING IS INVALID. It follows, however, that if he put in too much, it is valid; but we have been taught. If he put in too much it is invalid? — Rami b. Hama answered, That was a case where he set apart two handfuls.¹⁸

Rami b. Hama also said, If a man set apart two handfuls [of frankincense], and one of them was lost before the taking of the handful [of flour, the offering is valid, for] they had not yet been appointed [for this meal-offering]; if [one was lost] after the taking of the handful, [the offering is invalid, for] they had already been appointed [for this meal-offering].¹⁹

Rami b. Hama also said, If he set apart four handfuls [of frankincense] for the two dishes, and two of them were lost before the taking away of the dishes,²⁰ [it is valid, for] they had not yet been appointed [for the Shewbread]; if [two were lost] after the taking away of the dishes, [it is invalid, for] they had already been appointed [for the Shewbread]. Wherefore was this case necessary? It is the same as the other! — You might have thought that, since in this case the handful is separate,²¹ as soon as the time for its removal has arrived it is regarded as already removed,²² we are therefore taught otherwise.

MISHNAH. IF HE TOOK THE HANDFUL²³ FROM THE MEAL-OFFERING [INTENDING] TO EAT THE REMAINDER OUTSIDE [THE TEMPLE COURT] OR AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE REMAINDER OUTSIDE, OR TO BURN²⁴ THE HANDFUL OUTSIDE OR AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE HANDFUL OUTSIDE, OR TO BURN ITS FRANKINCENSE OUTSIDE, THE OFFERING IS INVALID, BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH²⁵ IS NOT INCURRED.²⁶ [IF HE INTENDED] TO EAT THE REMAINDER ON THE MORROW²⁷ OR AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE REMAINDER ON THE MORROW, OR TO BURN THE HANDFUL ON THE MORROW OR AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE HANDFUL ON THE MORROW, OR TO BURN ITS FRANKINCENSE ON THE MORROW,

(1) The words 'R. Simeon says' are deleted by all commentators on the strength of Rashi's remark: 'I believe that R. Simeon is the author of the statement'.

(2) There is here a contradiction between the views of R. Simeon, for the view expressed in the second Baraita is also that of R. Simeon.

(3) The first quoted Baraita which contains the dispute between R. Judah and R. Simeon.

(4) In which case the offering is valid as long as there remained one grain of frankincense.

(5) In which case there must be nothing less than a handful at all times.

(6) The anonymous author of our Mishnah.

(7) I.e., at the time of the taking of the handful of flour there must be in the vessel a handful of frankincense. This is admitted by all authorities; v. infra 106b.

(8) Lev. VI. 8, Heb. kf , tu.

(9) The expression kf 'all' is interpreted here, by R. Judah and R. Simeon, in the same sense as the Rabbinic tuva kf 'anything', 'aughtsoever'.

(10) , t. Hence there must be left at least two grains.

(11) As having any particular significance apart from its grammatical use.

(12) R. Meir, R. Judah and R. Simeon.

(13) That a diminution of the frankincense does not invalidate the offering according to R. Judah and R. Simeon.

(14) V. infra 106b.

(15) I.e., there must be a handful of frankincense in each dish from the time that they are set upon the table up to the time they are removed to be burnt.

(16) Since there is here no Biblical term or expression, like kf, to indicate that a diminution of the prescribed quantity is allowed.

(17) R. Meir, R. Judah and R. Simeon.

(18) Which is an excessive amount and therefore invalid; anything more than one handful but less than two would be valid. According to another interpretation, it is valid where two handfuls were set apart, for each handful can serve separately for the purpose.

(19) And the amount of frankincense was excessive. Or it is invalid, according to the aforementioned view of R. Meir, because there is a diminution of the frankincense appointed for the offering.

(20) I.e., of frankincense which had remained on the table the past week and which were removed on the Sabbath and burnt upon the altar.

(21) For it is contained in dishes and stands apart from the rest of the offering.

(22) So that as soon as the time for the removal of the dishes of frankincense of the past week has come about (which is immediately after the offering of the Sabbath additional sacrifice), the frankincense that has been set apart may be regarded as already appointed for their purpose; and therefore it is invalid if thereafter a part of it was lost.

(23) The rule here stated applies equally well to each of the four main services of the meal-offering-taking out the handful, putting it into a vessel, bringing it nigh to the altar, and burning it.

(24) The wrongful intention must be in respect of those parts of the offering that are usually eaten, but the term 'eat' includes also what is 'eaten' by the altar, i.e., burnt thereon, in this case the handful and the frankincense. This is derived from the fact that in Lev. VII, 18 there is a duplicated expression for eating, kft^h kft^v, thus referring to two kinds of eating.

(25) V. Glos.

(26) If a priest actually, ate the remainder or actually burnt the handful or the frankincense outside the Temple court.

(27) Which is 'outside the proper time', for a meal-offering must be eaten the same day and evening until midnight.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 12a

THE OFFERING IS PIGGUL,¹ AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IF ONE TOOK THE HANDFUL OR PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL OR BROUGHT IT NIGH OR BURNT IT, [INTENDING] TO EAT A THING THAT IS USUAL TO EAT OR TO BURN A THING THAT IS USUAL TO BURN, OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE, THE OFFERING IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED; BUT IF [HE INTENDED THE LIKE] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME, THE OFFERING IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED; PROVIDED THAT THE MATTIR² WAS OFFERED ACCORDING TO ITS PRESCRIBED RITE.³ HOW IS THE MATTIR OFFERED ACCORDING TO ITS PRESCRIBED RITE? IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL IN SILENCE, BUT PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT [INTENDING AT EACH SERVICE TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME; OR IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL [INTENDING TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME, BUT PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT IN SILENCE; OR IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL AND PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT [INTENDING AT EACH SERVICE TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME — SUCH IS A CASE WHERE THE MATTIR IS OFFERED ACCORDING TO ITS PRESCRIBED RITE.⁴ HOW IS THE MATTIR OFFERED NOT ACCORDING TO ITS PRESCRIBED RITE? IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL [INTENDING TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE, AND PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT [INTENDING AT EACH SERVICE TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME; OR IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL [INTENDING TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME, AND HE PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT [INTENDING AT EACH SERVICE TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE; OR IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL AND PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT [INTENDING AT THESE SERVICES TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE⁵ — (SUCH IS A CASE WHERE THE MATTIR IS OFFERED NOT ACCORDING TO ITS RITE).⁶ OR IF IT WAS A SINNER'S MEAL-OFFERING⁷ OR A MEAL-OFFERING OF JEALOUSY.⁷ AND HE TOOK THE HANDFUL THEREFROM UNDER ANY NAME OTHER THAN ITS OWN, AND PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT [INTENDING AT EACH SERVICE TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME; OR IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL [INTENDING TO EAT THE REMAINDER] OUTSIDE ITS PROPER TIME, AND PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT UNDER ANY NAME OTHER THAN ITS OWN; OR IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL AND PUT IT INTO THE VESSEL AND BROUGHT IT NIGH AND BURNT IT UNDER ANY NAME OTHER THAN ITS OWN — SUCH IS A CASE WHERE THE MATTIR IS OFFERED NOT ACCORDING TO ITS PRESCRIBED RITE.

[IF HE INTENDED]⁸ TO EAT AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE REMAINDER OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE AND ANOTHER OLIVE'S BULK THEREOF ON THE MORROW, OR TO EAT AN OLIVE'S BULK THEREOF ON THE MORROW AND ANOTHER OLIVE'S BULK THEREOF OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE, OR TO EAT A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK THEREOF OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE AND A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK ON THE MORROW,⁹ OR TO EAT A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK THEREOF ON THE MORROW AND AN HALF-OLIVE'S BULK OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE,⁹ THE OFFERING IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED. R. JUDAH SAID, THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IF THE INTENTION ABOUT THE TIME PRECEDED THE INTENTION ABOUT THE PLACE, THE OFFERING IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED; BUT IF THE INTENTION ABOUT THE PLACE PRECEDED THE INTENTION ABOUT THE TIME, THE OFFERING IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED.¹⁰ BUT THE SAGES SAY, IN BOTH CASES THE OFFERING IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED.

GEMARA. The question was raised: According to him who holds that if the remainder of the meal-offering had diminished in the time between the taking of the handful and the burning thereof he may nevertheless burn the handful on account of it; and we had established that that remainder may not be eaten¹¹ — [the question arises], can the burning of the handful have any effect [upon this remainder] that it should become piggul,¹² and that it should no more be subject to the law of Sacrilege or not?¹³ — R. Huna said, Even according to R. Akiba who said that the sprinkling [of the blood] has an effect upon [the consecrated meat] that was taken out [of its prescribed bounds],¹⁴ that is so only with regard to what was taken out, since it is entirely here but has become invalid only through some extrinsic cause,¹⁵ but upon that which has diminished, which is an intrinsic defect, the burning surely can have no effect.¹⁶ Thereupon Raba said, On the contrary,¹⁷ even according to R. Eliezer who said that the sprinkling of the blood has no effect upon what was taken out, that is so only with regard to what was taken out, since it is no longer inside [the Sanctuary], but upon that which has diminished, since it is still inside [the Sanctuary], the burning surely can have an effect.

Raba said, How do [arrive at the above? Because we have learnt: IF HE TOOK THE HANDFUL FROM THE MEAL-OFFERING [INTENDING] TO EAT THE REMAINDER OUTSIDE [THE TEMPLE COURT]. OR AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE REMAINDER OUTSIDE; and R. Hiyya when learning this Mishnah quoted, 'IF HE TOOK THE HANDFUL FROM THE MEAL-OFFERING', etc., but he did not include in it OR AN OLIVE'S BULK. Now why did he not include OR AN OLIVE'S BULK? Surely [because he assumed the Mishnah to be dealing with] the case where the remainder had diminished until there was only an olive's bulk left;¹⁸ and since with regard to the services of putting the handful into a vessel, of bringing it nigh, and of burning it, [R. Hiyya] could not have stated

(1) Heb. kudhp, lit., 'an abomination'. This term piggul which also involves the penalty of kareth (v. Glos.) applies only to a wrongful intention concerning the time of the eating of the offering, in contradistinction from the wrongful intention concerning the place which merely renders the sacrifice kuxp 'invalid', but which does not involve the penalty of kareth.

(2) Heb. rh, n; lit., 'that which renders permissible'. This refers to the handful of flour and the frankincense of a meal-offering which, on being burnt, render the remainder permissible to be eaten. It also refers to the blood of an animal-offering which, on being sprinkled upon the altar, renders the meat thereof permissible to be eaten.

(3) I.e., there was no other imperfection or fault in the course of the services of the offering save the wrongful intention of 'out of time'. If, however, there was some other fault during the course of the services, either before or after the wrongful intention of 'out of time', the offering is not piggul but merely invalid, and the penalty of kareth is not incurred by them that eat thereof. The Mishnah now proceeds to exemplify the two rules stated.

(4) For the only defect in this offering was the 'out of time' intention, even though it was expressed during the other services too.

(5) During one of these services, however, the intention was expressed of eating the remainder outside its proper time; thus in this offering there were two defects: the 'out of time' intention and the 'out of place' intention.

(6) This sentence is struck out by Sh. Mek., and it is not found in MS.M. and other MSS.

(7) These meal-offerings can also be rendered invalid by a wrongful intention concerning the nature of the offering. i.e., by treating the offering as if it were something else. V. supra 2a.

(8) During one service two wrongful intentions as exemplified in the Mishnah; and it is immaterial which intention was expressed first. This is in contradistinction from the foregoing cases of the Mishnah where two wrongful intentions were expressed during two services.

(9) In this case the two half-olive's bulks are reckoned together so as to invalidate the offering.

(10) This rule of R. Judah applies to two wrongful intentions expressed during two services as well as during one service.

(11) V. supra 9a and b.

(12) I.e., if while burning the handful the priest expressed the intention of eating this remainder (which in fact may not be eaten since it was found to be lacking) outside its proper time. This case may be put in the same category as where a wrongful intention was expressed concerning 'a thing that it is not usual to eat', which according to our Mishnah is not included in the law of piggul. On the other hand, since the burning of the handful is carried out according to law, it is in no wise different from the burning in any other meal-offering, and it can render the offering piggul.

(13) The general rule is that after the burning of the handful the remainder of the meal-offering is not subject to the law of Sacrilege since it is now permitted to the priests (Me'il I, 1); and therefore if a layman were to derive any enjoyment whatsoever from the remainder, he would not be liable to bring a guilt-offering for Sacrilege. In this case, however, since even after the burning of the handful, the priests are not permitted to eat the remainder, it might rightly be said that the law of Sacrilege still applies.

(14) It is also established law that after the sprinkling of the blood of the animal-offering the consecrated meat is no more subject to the law of Sacrilege, since it may now be eaten by the priests. This rule, according to R. Akiba, applies even to what was taken out of its bounds and which consequently may not be eaten; v. Me'il. 7a.

(15) By being taken out of its prescribed bounds; nothing however of the meat was lacking.

(16) It is therefore still subject to the law of Sacrilege.

(17) Raba is of the opinion that consecrated matter that was taken out of the Temple is a more serious matter than if it had diminished.

(18) This of course can be the case with the other services but not with the service of the taking of the handful, for if at the time of taking the handful the meal-offering had diminished it is invalid, and can in no wise be affected by any wrongful intention.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 12b

'or an olive's bulk',¹ he therefore did not state 'or an olive's bulk' even with regard to the service of taking out the handful. Nevertheless, he states in the later clause, THE OFFERING IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED; hence, it is evident, that the burning [of the handful] has an effect [upon the diminished remainder]! Said to him Abaye. It is not so,² but the author is R. Eleazar; for we have learnt: If a man offered outside [the Temple court] an olive's bulk of the handful,³ or of the frankincense,³ or of the incense-offering,⁴ or of the meal-offering of the priests,⁵ or of the meal-offering of the anointed [High] Priest, or of the meal-offering offered with the drink-offerings, he is liable;⁶ but R. Eleazar declares him exempt unless he offered the whole thereof. Since therefore the expression 'or an olive's bulk' cannot be stated in connection with the [burning of the] handful, this same expression 'or an olive's bulk' is not stated in connection with the remainder.⁷ But if it is R. Eleazar, why is it stated⁸ '[Intending] to burn the handful'? It should state, '[Intending] to burn the handful and the frankincense'! For we have learnt:⁹ If a man offered either the handful or the frankincense outside [the Temple court], he is liable; but R. Eleazar declares him exempt unless he offered both! — It refers to the handful of the sinner's meal-offering.¹⁰ And did the Tanna trouble to teach us the case concerning the handful of the sinner's meal-offering? — He did. And likewise when R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Eleazar that it referred only to the handful of the sinner's meal-offering, and it was in accordance with R. Eleazar's view.

Later Raba said, What I said before was wrong. For it has been taught: The expression It is¹¹ implies that if one of the loaves was broken all are invalid. It follows however, that if one was taken out of the Sanctuary¹² those that are inside are valid. Now whom have you heard say that the sprinkling [of the blood] has an effect upon what was taken out?¹³ [Obviously] it is R. Akiba, and yet it states that if one of the loaves was broken they are not [valid].¹⁴ Thereupon Abaye said to him, Does [the Baraita] expressly state 'But if one was taken out [the others are valid]'?

Perhaps the correct inference is: If one became unclean the others are valid, and that is because the [High Priest's] plate¹⁵ renders it acceptable, whereas if one was taken out the others would not [be valid],¹⁶ for the teaching is in accordance with R. Eleazar's view who maintains that the sprinkling of the blood has no effect upon what was taken out. And by right the Tanna [of the Baraita] should have also stated the case where one [of the loaves] was taken out, but he only stated the case where one was broken to teach us that, even though it is still inside [the Sanctuary], the 'burning' has no effect upon it. According to R. Akiba, however, who said that the sprinkling of the blood has an effect upon what was taken out, the 'burning' likewise will have an effect upon that which had diminished.¹⁷

MISHNAH. [IF HE INTENDED] TO EAT A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK AND TO BURN A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK,¹⁸ THE OFFERING IS VALID, FOR EATING AND BURNING CANNOT BE RECKONED TOGETHER.

GEMARA. Now the reason [why they cannot be reckoned together] is that [there was an intention] to eat and to burn, but it follows that where [there was the intention] to eat [what it is usual to eat] and also to eat what it is not usual to eat, they can be reckoned together;¹⁹ but it has been stated earlier [in the Mishnah]: '[Intending] to eat a thing that it is usual to eat or to burn a thing that it is usual to burn'. Hence [a wrongful intention to eat] is of consequence only in respect of a thing that it is usual to eat, but not in respect of a thing that it is not usual to eat!²⁰ — Said R. Jeremiah: The author [of our Mishnah] is R. Eliezer, who maintains that a wrongful intention to consume upon the altar what is usually eaten by man, or to eat what is usually consumed upon the altar is of consequence.²¹ For we have learnt: If he took out the handful from the meal-offering [intending] to eat a thing that it is not usual to eat or to burn a thing that it is not usual to burn, the offering is valid; but R. Eliezer declares it to be invalid. Abaye said, You may even say that [this Mishnah] is in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, but you must not infer from it that where [there was the intention] to eat [a half-olive's bulk of what it is usual to eat] and to eat [the same of] what it is not usual to eat [they can be reckoned together], but rather infer this, that where the intention was to eat [a half-olive's bulk] and also to eat [the same of] a thing that it is usual to eat [they can be reckoned together].²² What does it teach us?²³ We have expressly learnt this case in the earlier [Mishnah]: If he intended to eat an olive's bulk [of the remainder] outside its proper place and another olive's bulk thereof on the morrow, or to eat an olive's bulk thereof on the morrow and another olive's bulk thereof outside its proper place, or to eat a half-olive's bulk thereof outside its proper place and another half-olive's bulk thereof on the morrow, or to eat a half-olive's bulk thereof on the morrow and another half-olive's bulk thereof outside its proper place, the offering is invalid, but the penalty of kareth is not incurred.

(1) For once it is assumed as a fact that after the taking out of the handful the remainder had diminished until there was only an olive's bulk left, then it is absurd to state 'if he put the handful into a vessel (or brought it nigh, or burnt it) intending to eat the remainder or an olive's bulk of the remainder outside its proper time . . .' for the two, the remainder and the olive's bulk, are identical. This being so, R. Hiyya for the sake of consistency omitted the expression 'or an olive's bulk' even in the case of the taking of the handful where this expression is indeed meaningful. The condition of the text both in the Gemara and in Rashi is very doubtful and at present most unsatisfactory. The translation is based on the interpretation of R. Meir and his son Rashbam, given in cur. edd. at the end of Chapter I, infra 13a.

- (2) The reason why R. Hiyya omits 'or an olive's bulk' was not as suggested above by Raba, but because R. Hiyya stated the teaching in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar, v. Zeb. 109b.
- (3) Of an ordinary meal-offering.
- (4) Which was offered daily in the Temple, morning and evening.
- (5) Every meal-offering of the priest was to be wholly burnt. So too was the meal-offering of the High Priest which he was to bring daily, known as kusd ivf h, hcj. Likewise, the meal-offerings that were offered with the drink-offerings that accompanied most sacrifices (v. Num XV, 4ff) were wholly burnt.
- (6) To the penalty of kareth; v. Lev. XVII, 8, 9.
- (7) Hence, according to R. Eleazar, to burn only an olive's bulk of the handful is no 'burning', and an intention to do so outside its proper time expressed during another service (say, during the taking out of the handful) would not render the offering piggul. Accordingly one must omit the expression 'or an olive's bulk' from the first clause, which deals with a wrongful intention in connection with the burning of the handful, and for the sake of consistency the expression was omitted by R. Hiyya throughout.
- (8) In the Mishnah as taught by R. Hiyya.
- (9) Zeb. 110a.
- (10) I.e., the Mishnah taught by R. Hiyya on the authority of R. Eleazar refers specifically to the sinner's meal-offering in which there was no frankincense at all, so that the 'burning' consists only of the burning of the handful.
- (11) Lev. XXIV, 9: For it is most holy unto him; with reference to the Shewbread.
- (12) In all MSS. the following is added here in the text: 'or if one was rendered unclean'. So also Sh. Mek.
- (13) For here it is said that the burning of the frankincense of the Shewbread-offering — which corresponds to the sprinkling of the blood of an animal-offering — has an effect upon what was taken out, insofar as the number of the loaves is considered complete, the result being that those loaves which remained inside are now permitted to be eaten.
- (14) Hence, although the burning can have an effect upon what was taken out, it is admitted, even according to R. Akiba, that it can have no effect upon that which had diminished, and if one loaf was broken all are invalid, Raba thus agrees with R. Huna, and retracts his former view,
- (15) Heb. . hm: the High Priest's plate of pure gold worn on the forehead which had the power of propitiation (v. Ex. XXVIII, 36ff); i.e., it secured the Divine acceptance of the sacrifice even though the flesh or the blood or any other part thereof had become unclean.
- (16) For the burning of the frankincense must be on behalf of the whole Shewbread, i.e., twelve loaves, and here there is not this number.
- (17) Thus contrary to R. Huna's view.
- (18) Each either outside the proper time or outside the proper place.
- (19) E.g., if while taking the handful he intended to eat a half-olive's bulk of the remainder outside the Sanctuary and also to eat outside a half-olive's bulk of the handful (which is to be burnt and not eaten), these two intentions would be reckoned as one in respect of an olive's bulk and the offering would be invalid.
- (20) Such an intention even in respect of a whole olive's bulk is of no consequence whatsoever; so that there can then be no question at all of reckoning this intention together with another in order to render the offering invalid.
- (21) The handful is a thing that it is usual to burn upon the altar, and the remainder is a thing that it is usual to eat. Hence, according to R. Eliezer (v. infra 17a), a wrongful intention made in respect of a thing that it is not usual to eat or to burn renders the offering invalid and a fortiori if made partly in respect of a thing that it is usual to eat and partly in respect of a thing that it is not usual to eat.
- (22) The one to be eaten outside its proper place and the other on the morrow. Our Mishnah, by inference, teaches that these intentions combine and the offering is invalid.

(23) From this point until the end of the chapter the text is very doubtful and in many parts obviously corrupt; as is indeed evident from the many bracketed lines and words. In fact the entire passage seems to have been taken over bodily from Zeb. 31b, and altered in parts so as to suit the context in our tractate; hence the confusion. V. Tosaf. s.v. tkt. The translation given is based entirely upon Rashi and upon the text that was apparently before him. V. also D.S. on this passage.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 13a

What further does our Mishnah teach us? If it suggests the inference that where there was the intention to eat [a half-olive's bulk of what it is usual to eat] and also to eat [a half-olive's bulk] of what it is not usual to eat they can be reckoned together — but you already know from the first clause;¹ and if [it teaches] that where there was the intention to eat and burn [a half-olive's bulk they cannot be reckoned together] — but you surely know this by inference from the preceding Mishnah: for if the intentions to eat [what it is usual to eat] and to eat what it is not usual to eat, cannot be reckoned together, is it then necessary to state that the intentions to eat and to burn [cannot be reckoned together]?² — Yes, it is necessary to state that the intentions to eat and to burn [cannot be reckoned together]; for you might have thought that only in that case³ [the intentions cannot be reckoned together], for there is an intention there with regard to what is not proper.⁴ but here,⁵ since each intention relates to what is proper in each case, I might say that they should be reckoned together; — we are therefore taught [that they cannot be reckoned together].

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. IF HE TOOK OUT THE HANDFUL [INTENDING] TO EAT THE REMAINDER OR TO BURN THE HANDFUL ON THE MORROW, IN THIS CASE R. JOSE AGREES THAT THE OFFERING IS PIGGUL⁶ AND THAT THE PENALTY OF KARETH⁶ IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF.⁷ [IF HE INTENDED] TO BURN THE FRANKINCENSE THEREOF ON THE MORROW, R. JOSE SAYS, IT IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF; BUT THE SAGES SAY, IT IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF. THEY SAID TO HIM, HOW DOES THIS DIFFER FROM AN ANIMAL-OFFERING?⁸ HE SAID TO THEM, WITH THE ANIMAL-OFFERING THE BLOOD, THE FLESH AND THE SACRIFICIAL PORTIONS ARE ALL ONE;⁹ BUT THE FRANKINCENSE IS NOT OF THE MEAL-OFFERING.

GEMARA. Why does the Mishnah state, IN THIS CASE R. JOSE AGREES? — Because the Tanna wished to state the next clause: [IF HE INTENDED] TO BURN THE FRANKINCENSE THEREOF ON THE MORROW, R. JOSE SAYS, IT IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF. Now you might have thought that the reason for R. Jose's opinion [in the last clause] was that a wrongful intention in respect of half the mattir does not render piggul¹⁰ and that consequently [R. Jose] differs even in the first clause.

(1) I.e., from the preceding Mishnah that these two intentions cannot combine; v. supra 12a.

(2) For if two 'eatings' cannot combine, surely 'eating' and 'burning' cannot!

(3) Where the intention was to eat outside the Sanctuary a half-olive's bulk of the remainder and a half-olive's bulk of the handful.

(4) I.e., to eat a thing that it is not usual to eat, sc. the handful.

(5) In our Mishnah where the intention is to eat of the remainder outside and to burn of the handful outside, each action being the proper practice.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) Should one eat it.

(8) For if one slaughtered an animal-offering intending to burn the sacrificial portions on the morrow the offering is certainly piggul. The same surely should be the case with the meal-offering, for the frankincense corresponds to the sacrificial portions of the animal-offering.

(9) Explained in the Gemara.

(10) The mattir (Heb. מַטִּיר, מ lit., 'that which renders permissible') of the meal-offering is the handful and the frankincense, for only after the burning of those two upon the altar is the remainder of the meal-offering rendered permitted to be eaten. It is now suggested that the reason for R. Jose's view in the second clause of our Mishnah is that a wrongful intention expressed during a service in respect of the frankincense, which is only half the mattir, is of no consequence. According to this principle, R. Jose should also hold in the first clause of our Mishnah that the offering is not piggul, since the wrongful intention was only in respect of the burning of the handful which is also only half the mattir.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 13b

We are therefore taught [that there he agrees].¹

[IF HE INTENDED] TO BURN THE FRANKINCENSE THEREOF ON THE MORROW, R. JOSE SAYS, IT IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED. Resh Lakish said, R. Jose laid down the principle that a 'mattir cannot render piggul the other mattir.'² So, too, you may say of the two dishes of frankincense of the Shewbread, that one mattir cannot render piggul the other mattir.³ What is the point of 'So, too, you may say'?⁴ — You might have supposed that R. Jose's reason in the case of the frankincense [in our Mishnah] was that it was not of the same substance as the meal-offering,⁵ but in the case of the two dishes of frankincense, since they each contain the same substance, you might have thought that one could render the other piggul; we are, therefore taught [that it is not so]. But how can you say that R. Jose's reason in the case of the frankincense is not 'that it is not of the same substance as the meal-offering'? Surely it is expressly so stated in the last clause: THEY SAID TO HIM, HOW DOES THIS DIFFER FROM AN ANIMAL-OFFERING? HE SAID TO THEM, WITH THE ANIMAL-OFFERING THE BLOOD, THE FLESH AND THE SACRIFICIAL PORTIONS ARE ALL ONE; BUT THE FRANKINCENSE IS NOT OF THE MEAL-OFFERING!⁶ — The expression 'IS NOT OF THE MEAL-OFFERING' means, it is not dependent upon the [handful of the] meal-offering: for it is not right to say, as the handful is indispensable to the remainder-for so long as the handful has not been burnt the remainder may not be eaten-so it is indispensable to the frankincense; but in fact if he wishes he may burn this first and if he wishes he may burn that first.⁷ And what do the Rabbis [say to this]? — [They hold that] we apply the principle, 'a mattir cannot render piggul another mattir', only to such a case as where [the mattirs] are not ordained to be in one vessel,⁸ but where they are ordained to be in one vessel⁹ they are regarded as one [mattir].

R. Jannai said, If a non-priest gathered up the frankincense,¹⁰ it is invalid. Why? — R. Jeremiah said, This touches upon the law of 'bringing nigh'.¹¹ He is of the opinion that 'bringing nigh' without even moving the feet is quite a proper act,¹² and [it is established that] if a non-priest brought it nigh, it is invalid.

R. Mari said, We have also learnt the same:¹³ This is the general rule: If one took the handful or put it into the vessel or brought it nigh or burnt it [etc.]. Now it is clear that the taking of the handful corresponds to the slaughtering [of the animal-offering],¹⁴ the bringing nigh [of the handful] to the bringing nigh [of the blood], the burning [of the handful] to the sprinkling [of the blood], but as to the putting [of the handful] into a vessel what [service] is he performing! Should you say that it corresponds to the receiving [of the blood], but surely there is no comparison between them, for there [the blood] comes in of itself [into the vessel], whereas here [the handful] is taken and put into the vessel. We must therefore say that, since it¹⁵ can in no wise be omitted, it is an important service, and perforce is regarded as corresponding to the receiving [of the blood]; here, too, since it¹⁶ can in no wise be omitted, it is an important service, and perforce is regarded as the 'bringing nigh'! — It is not so, for in fact it¹⁵ corresponds to the receiving of the blood; and as for your objection 'There it comes in of itself, whereas here it is taken and put into the vessel', I reply that, seeing that in both cases the subject is hallowed in a vessel, there can be no difference, surely, whether it comes into the vessel of itself or it is taken and put into the vessel!¹⁷

MISHNAH. IF HE SLAUGHTERED THE TWO LAMBS¹⁸ [INTENDING] TO EAT ONE OF THE [TWO] LOAVES ON THE MORROW, OR IF HE BURNT THE TWO DISHES [OF THE FRANKINCENSE INTENDING] TO EAT ONE OF THE [TWO] ROWS OF THE SHEWBREAD¹⁹ ON THE MORROW, R. JOSE SAYS, THAT LOAF OR THAT ROW ABOUT WHICH HE EXPRESSED THE INTENTION IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT OF THEM, WHILE THE OTHER IS INVALID BUT THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED. BUT THE SAGES SAY, BOTH ARE PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT OF THEM.

GEMARA. R. Huna said, R. Jose maintains that if one expressed an intention which makes piggul in connection with the right thigh, the left thigh is not thereby rendered piggul.²⁰ What is the reason? You may say it is based upon a logical argument, or you may say it is based upon a verse. 'You may say it is based upon a logical argument', for surely the wrongful intention is not stronger than actual uncleanness! And if one limb became unclean is the whole unclean?²¹ 'Or you may say it is based upon a verse', for it is written, And the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity,²² that is, of it²³ but not of any other part.

R. Nahman raised an objection against R. Huna from the following: 'There is never the penalty of kareth incurred unless he expressed an intention which makes piggul with regard to an olive's bulk from both'.²⁴ Thus an olive's bulk from both, but not from one.²⁵ Now who is the author of this Baraita? Should you say it is the Rabbis — but according to them even though [the intention was] in respect of one loaf only [both are piggul].²⁶ Obviously then it is R. Jose. Now if you say that they are regarded as one body [there],²⁷ then it is evident why they can be combined [here].²⁸

- (1) For R. Jose's reason is not as suggested above, but as given by Resh Lakish infra; v. next note.
- (2) R. Jose holds that in every offering in which there are two mattirs, a wrongful intention expressed during the service of one mattir with regard to the other mattir is of no consequence; thus an intention expressed during the burning of the handful (the first mattir) to burn the frankincense (the second mattir) on the morrow, would not render the offering piggul.
- (3) The two dishes of frankincense are the mattirs of the Shewbread, for only after the burning of both dishes are the twelve loaves of the Shewbread permitted to be eaten by the priests. Now if a wrongful Intention was expressed during the burning of the one dish in respect of the other dish (e.g., to burn the other dish on the morrow), it is of no consequence.
- (4) It is surely an obvious application of R. Jose's principle!
- (5) The mattirs of the meal-offering, the handful and the frankincense, are of different substances, and it might therefore be said that only in such a case does R. Jose hold that a mattir cannot render piggul the other mattir, but not where the mattirs are alike as in the case of the Shewbread.
- (6) And the meaning presumably is this: the blood and the sacrificial portions of an animal-offering all come from the one animal; the frankincense, on the other hand, is a different substance and does not come from the meal-offering.
- (7) This then is the position of R. Jose: a mattir does not render piggul another mattir; yet, says R. Jose, there is a distinction between an animal-offering and a meal-offering. In the case of an animal-offering the blood and the sacrificial portions are one, so that they are not regarded as separate mattirs; and therefore if a wrongful intention was expressed during the sprinkling of the blood with regard to the burning of the sacrificial portions, this would render the offering piggul. On the other hand, in the case of the meal-offering, the handful and the frankincense are two separate mattirs, for they ate of different substances, and are independent of each other, for either may be offered before the other; therefore the principle of a mattir not rendering piggul another mattir will apply.
- (8) E.g.. the two lambs offered at the Feast of Weeks; cf. Lev. XXIII, 19. These lambs are also mattirs, for by their slaughtering the 'two loaves' (ibid. 17) are rendered permissible unto the priests. This example is inserted in the text in brackets, but is wanting in MS.M., and has been struck out by Sh. Mek.
- (9) The handful and the frankincense of a meal-offering were both originally in the same vessel.
- (10) After the burning of the handful the frankincense was picked from the flour and then burnt upon the altar. V. Sotah 14b.
- (11) For when the non-priest hands over the frankincense to the officiating priest he has certainly reduced the distance of 'bringing nigh', which being an essential service must be performed by the priest only, whereas here it was partly performed by the non-priest.
- (12) Lit., 'its name is bringing nigh'. Therefore even if the non-priest did not move his feet at all, but merely handed over the frankincense which he had gathered up to the priest, this action is sufficient to fulfil the requirements of the 'bringing nigh'; and therefore if performed by a non-priest it is invalid.
- (13) V. supra 12a. R. Mari desires to prove from this Mishnah that the gathering up of the frankincense is a vital service.
- (14) For as the slaughtering separates the blood (i.e. the altar's portion) from the flesh (i.e., the priests' portion), so the taking of the handful separates the handful (i.e., the altar's portion) from the remainder (i.e., the priests' portion).
- (15) Sc. the putting of the handful into the vessel.
- (16) I.e., the gathering up of the frankincense.
- (17) Thus between these two services there is at least a point in common, but the gathering up of the frankincense is in no wise comparable with either of these services, and therefore is not regarded as a vital service.
- (18) Offered as peace-offerings on the Feast of Weeks, accompanied by two loaves as firstfruits; v. Lev. XXIII, 17,19. Throughout the whole of this chapter the expression 'lamb' refers to this special peace-offering.

(19) V. ibid. XXIV, 5ff.

(20) I.e., if a person while slaughtering the sacrifice expressed the intention of eating the right thigh outside the time prescribed for it, that thigh only is piggul and whosoever eats of it incurs the penalty of kareth, but the rest of the flesh of the animal is not piggul. R. Huna arrived at this by taking R. Jose's view expressed in our Mishnah to an extreme length; viz., just as each loaf is a separate body or entity and the wrongful intention with regard to one loaf will not affect the other, so is each limb a separate body and the wrongful intention with regard to one limb will not affect the other.

(21) Certainly not! Of course the limb spoken of here had been detached from the animal.

(22) Lev. VII, 18.

(23) Which was the subject of a wrongful intention.

(24) I.e., if the wrongful intention was in respect of both loaves, even though only to the extent of a half-olive's bulk of each loaf, they are both piggul and the penalty of kareth is incurred by them that eat thereof.

(25) I.e., if the wrongful intention was in respect of an olive's bulk of one loaf only, the other loaf would not be piggul.

(26) V. our Mishnah.

(27) I.e., that two limbs (as the right and left thigh) are not regarded as separate entities but as one 'body' derived from the one animal; so that if a wrongful intention was expressed with regard to one limb both would be piggul, contra R. Huna.

(28) For the two loaves are, by reason of the form of the intention expressed (not 'a half-olive's bulk from each loaf', but 'an olive's bulk from the two loaves'), also regarded as one entity. In our Mishnah, however, the two loaves are admittedly regarded as two separate entities, for they were in no wise combined in one, not even by the intention expressed.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 14a

But if you say that they are regarded as two bodies [there], why are they combined [here]?¹ The author of that [Baraitha] is Rabbi. For it was taught: If he slaughtered the lamb intending to eat a half-olive's bulk of the one loaf [on the morrow], and likewise [he slaughtered] the other lamb intending to eat a half-olive's bulk of the other loaf [on the morrow], Rabbi says, I maintain that this offering is valid. Now this is so only because he referred to two halves,² but had he referred to an olive's bulk of both [loaves] they would be combined.³

Whose ruling does Rabbi follow? If you say that of the Rabbis, but [according to them] even though the intention was in respect of one loaf only [both would be piggul]; and if you say that of R. Jose, then our original question confronts us again.⁴ It must be that he follows the ruling of the Rabbis, but read not [in the above mentioned Baraitha] 'unless he expressed an intention which makes piggul with regard to an olive's bulk from both',⁵ but rather 'unless he expressed an intention which makes piggul with regard to an olive's bulk in both',⁶ even though the intention was only [in respect of an olive's bulk] of one [loaf]. He thus rejects the view of R. Meir who said, A wrongful intention expressed during the service of half the mattir renders the offering piggul; and he teaches us [that it is not so].

If so, why is this introduced by the expression 'It must be'?⁷ If, of course, you would have said that the author of that Baraitha meant from both [loaves] and in both [lambs],⁸ adopting thus the view of R. Jose and rejecting the views of R. Meir⁹ and the Rabbis,¹⁰ the expression 'It must be' would be quite in order. But if you merely say that he adopted the view of the Rabbis, rejecting only the view of R. Meir, why then the expression 'It must be'? Moreover R. Ashi had raised an objection [against R. Huna from the following]: Come and hear: Rabbi says in the name of R. Jose, If¹¹ [whilst performing a service outside]¹² he expressed an intention which makes piggul in respect of another service which is performed outside, the offering is piggul, if in respect of another service which is performed inside, it is not piggul. Thus, if whilst standing outside he said, 'Behold I am slaughtering with the intention of sprinkling the blood thereof on the morrow', it is not piggul, for this is an intention expressed whilst serving outside in respect of a service performed inside. If whilst standing inside he said, 'Behold I am sprinkling the blood with the intention of burning the sacrificial portions on the morrow', or, 'of pouring out the residue of the blood on the morrow', it is not piggul for this is an intention expressed whilst serving inside in respect of a service performed outside. If whilst standing outside he said, 'Behold I am slaughtering with the intention of pouring out the residue of the blood on the morrow', or 'of burning the sacrificial portions on the morrow', it is piggul; for this is an intention expressed whilst serving outside in respect of a service performed outside. Now [in the latter case] where the intention was of pouring out the residue of the blood, what is it that becomes piggul?¹³ Should you say that it is the blood that becomes piggul,¹⁴ but does the blood become piggul? Behold we have learnt:¹⁵ For the following things the penalty of piggul is not incurred: viz., the handful, the frankincense, the incense-offering, the meal-offering of the priests, the meal-offering offered with the drink-offerings, the meal-offering of the anointed [High] Priest, and the blood!¹⁶ Obviously then it is the flesh that becomes piggul. Now if in that case where no intention was expressed with regard to the flesh at all R. Jose holds that it nevertheless becomes piggul, how much more so in this case where he actually expressed an intention with regard to the [flesh of the] offering!¹⁷ Moreover Rabina had raised an objection [against R. Huna] from the following: Come and hear: if he took out the handful intending to eat the remainder or to burn the handful on the morrow, in this case R. Jose agrees that the offering is piggul and that the penalty of kareth is incurred on account thereof. Now where the intention was to burn the handful, what is it that becomes piggul? Should you say that it is the handful that becomes piggul, but does the handful become piggul? Behold we have learnt: For the following things the penalty of piggul is not incurred: viz., the handful, etc. Obviously then it is the remainder that becomes piggul. Now if in that case where no intention was expressed with regard to the remainder at all

(1) For if the two limbs which are derived from the one body are regarded as two entities so that the wrongful intention in respect of one will not affect the other, then the two loaves are a fortiori regarded as two entities and can by no means be combined in one merely by the form of intention expressed. Why then is it held that where the intention was in respect of an olive's bulk of the two loaves both are piggul?

(2) Lit., 'half', 'half'. I.e., the wrongful intention was expressed each time in respect of a half-olive's bulk only of the loaf, and therefore the two intentions cannot be combined to make the offering piggul.

(3) Thus identical with the view stated in the Baraitha quoted by R. Nahman.

(4) V. supra, beginning of 14a: 'But if you say... ', v. p. 83, n.9.

(5) I.e., from the two loaves. Heb. ivh, ac the fem. form referring to the loaves.

(6) I.e., in the course of the slaughtering of the two lambs. Heb. ivhbac the masc. form referring to the lambs. The wrongful intention which makes piggul must be expressed during the service of both lambs, which together form the mattir, i.e., that which renders the loaves permissible, and not during the slaughtering of one of the lambs which is only half the mattir. This clearly conflicts with R. Meir's view.

(7) Heb. okugk, a dialectic term usually employed when a view is suggested rejecting all others.

(8) So that there must be an intention which makes piggul expressed during the slaughtering of both lambs and in respect of both loaves. This would be in accordance with R. Jose's view as stated in our Mishnah.

(9) Who maintains that a wrongful intention expressed during the slaughtering of one of the lambs, which is but half the mattir, renders piggul. This view is rejected by the statement in the Baraitha 'in both'.

(10) Who maintain that the wrongful intention expressed in respect of one loaf renders the other piggul too. This view is rejected by the expression 'from both'.

(11) This refers to the bullocks and the he-goats that were to be wholly burnt (Lev. IV, 1-12; 13-21; XVI, 3 and 5; Num. XV, 24). The procedure in these offerings (v. Zeb. V, 2) was as follows: the animals were slaughtered outside in the courtyard; the blood was sprinkled inside the Temple, i.e., on the veil and on the golden altar; the sacrificial portions, i.e., the entire beast, were burnt outside upon the outer altar; and the residue of the blood was poured out at the western base of the outer altar which stood in the Temple courtyard.

(12) In this passage the term 'outside' signifies outside the Temple building, i.e., in the Temple courtyard, and the term 'inside' within the Temple building.

(13) I.e., what portion of this offering must one eat in order to incur the penalty of kareth for eating piggul?

(14) So that if one were to eat the blood of this sacrifice in error one would be liable to bring two sin-offerings for the two counts of kareth, (a) for eating blood, and (b) for eating piggul.

(15) Zeb. 42b.

(16) I.e., if the offering was rendered piggul and one ate of the parts enumerated, the penalty of kareth is not incurred, for the law of piggul does not apply to that part of the offering which is the mattir, i.e., which renders other parts permissible. V. Zeb. 42b, 43a.

(17) Thus the piggul-intention expressed in connection with the right thigh will certainly render the left thigh also piggul-contra R. Huna. This sentence is found in the text in cur. edd., but it is wanting in MS.M. Sh. Mek. strikes it out as a gloss.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 14b

It nevertheless becomes piggul how much more so in this case where he actually expressed an intention with regard to the [flesh of the] offering! — Rather said R. Johanan, This is the reason for R. Jose's opinion:¹ Scripture regards [the two loaves] as one body and Scripture also regards them as two bodies. As one body—since one cannot be offered without the other; and as two bodies—since the Divine Law ordains that each [loaf] shall be prepared separately. Therefore if they were reckoned as one,² they are thereby united, since Scripture regards them as one body; if they were separated,³ they remain thus separated, since Scripture regards them also as two bodies.

R. Johanan raised the following questions: What is the position if one expressed an intention which makes piggul in respect of the loaves of the thank-offering?⁴ or in respect of the baked meal-offering?⁵ — Thereupon R. Tahlifa the Palestinian recited to him the following teaching: You must say the same⁶ of the loaves of the Thank-offering, and you must say the same of the baked meal-offering.

Our Rabbis taught: If during the slaughtering he intended to eat a half-olive's bulk [of the flesh after its prescribed time], and during the sprinkling [of the blood] he also intended to eat a half-olive's bulk [after its prescribed time], the offering is piggul, for the slaughtering and the sprinkling can be reckoned together as one.⁷ Some explained that this applied only to the slaughtering and the sprinkling since they are both mattirin,⁸ but not to the receiving and the bringing nigh; whilst others explained that this applied even to these services which are not consecutive,⁹ and all the more to those services which are consecutive.¹⁰

This surely cannot be, for Levi has taught: The four services, viz., slaughtering, receiving, bringing nigh, and sprinkling cannot be reckoned together so as to render piggul! — Raba answered, There is no contradiction: the one¹¹ represents the view of Rabbi, the other the view of the Rabbis. For it was taught: If he slaughtered the lamb intending to eat a half-olive's bulk of the one loaf [on the morrow], and likewise [he slaughtered] the other lamb intending to eat a half-olive's bulk of the other loaf [on the morrow], Rabbi says, I maintain that this offering is valid. Said Abaye to him, perhaps Rabbi held that view only in the case of a [wrongful intention expressed during] half the mattir¹² in respect of half [the minimum quantity for] eating,¹³ but he might not uphold that view in the case of [a wrongful intention expressed during] the whole mattir in respect of half [the minimum quantity for] eating?¹⁴ Raba son of R. Hanan then said to Abaye, But if [as you say,] Rabbi holds that in the case of [a wrongful intention expressed during] the whole mattir in respect of half [the minimum quantity for] eating, [the offering is piggul], then he should declare the offering piggul even in the case of [a wrongful intention expressed during] half the mattir in respect of half [the minimum quantity for] eating, as a precautionary measure against the case of [a wrongful intention expressed during] the whole mattir in respect of half [the minimum quantity for] eating; for R. Jose adopts such a precautionary measure, and the Rabbis also adopt such a precautionary measure. 'R. Jose adopts such a precautionary measure', as we have learnt: [If he intended] to burn the frankincense thereof on the morrow, R. Jose says, it is invalid,¹⁵ but the penalty of kareth is not incurred on account thereof; but the Rabbis say, it is piggul and the penalty of kareth is incurred on account thereof. 'And the Rabbis also adopt such a precautionary measure', as we have learnt: If he expressed an intention which makes piggul during the [burning of the] handful and not during the [burning of the] frankincense, or during the [burning of the] frankincense and not during the [burning of the] handful, R. Meir says, It is piggul and the penalty of kareth is incurred; but the Rabbis say, The penalty of kareth is not incurred unless the intention which makes piggul was expressed during the service of the whole of the mattir.¹⁶ — He replied, There is no comparison between the cases. I grant you that there R. Jose declares invalid the case [where the wrongful intention was in respect] of the handful of frankincense as a precautionary measure against the case [where the wrongful intention was in respect] of the handful of the meal-offering;¹⁷ and also that the Rabbis declare invalid the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of the handful as a precautionary measure against the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of the handful of the sinner's meal-offering;¹⁸ and that they declare invalid the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of the frankincense as a precautionary measure against the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of the frankincense of the dishes.¹⁸ And in the case of the lambs too,¹⁹ they declare invalid the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the slaughtering] of one lamb as a precautionary measure against the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the slaughtering] of the other lamb too;¹⁹ and they declare invalid the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of one dish of frankincense as a precautionary measure against the case [where the wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of the other dish too.²⁰ In our case, however, is there ever a case of [a wrongful intention expressed during the service of] half a mattir in respect of half [the minimum quantity for] eating [that renders piggul], so that we should take here precautionary measures?²¹ Indeed it stands to reason that this²² is the explanation of the view of the Rabbis, for in the next clause [of that Mishnah]¹⁹ it states: The Rabbis, however, agree with R. Meir that if it was a sinner's meal-offering or a meal-offering of jealousy, and he expressed an intention which makes piggul during the burning of the handful, the offering is piggul and the penalty of kareth is incurred on account thereof, since the handful [alone] is the [entire] mattir. Now why was it necessary for this [last expression] to be stated? It is quite obvious, for is there then [in these cases] any other mattir? We must therefore say that it teaches us this: namely, the reason [why the Rabbis declare the offering invalid in the case where a wrongful intention was expressed during the burning] of the handful [of the 'ordinary meal-offering] is that there is the handful of the sinner's meal-offering which is similar to it [and which is a real case of piggul].

MISHNAH. IF ONE OF THE [TWO] LOAVES²³ OR ONE OF THE [TWO] ROWS [OF THE SHEWBREAD] BECAME UNCLEAN, R. JUDAH SAYS, BOTH MUST BE TAKEN OUT TO THE PLACE OF BURNING, FOR THE OFFERING OF THE CONGREGATION MAY NOT BE DIVIDED.²⁴ BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE UNCLEAN [IS TREATED] AS UNCLEAN, BUT THE CLEAN MAY BE EATEN.

GEMARA. R. Eleazar said, They differ only [in the case where one loaf became unclean] before the sprinkling of the blood,²⁵ but [where it became unclean] after the sprinkling, all agree that the unclean one is treated as unclean and the clean one may be eaten. And [in the case where one became unclean] before the sprinkling, on what principle do they differ? — R. Papa said, They differ as to whether the [High Priest's] plate renders [the offering] acceptable [where] the eatable portions [had become unclean].²⁶ [

(1) R. Huna's view is untenable, for it is accepted by all that a wrongful intention in respect of one limb certainly affects the other; nevertheless the case of the two loaves dealt with by R. Jose in our Mishnah is a special one, as R. Johanan proceeds to show.

(2) In the case where there was expressed an intention to eat one olive's bulk of the two loaves. This intention certainly reckoned the two loaves as one 'body' or entity, and therefore both are piggul, as stated in the Baraitha quoted supra p. 83 by R. Nahman.

(3) In the case where the expressed intention referred to one loaf only. The other loaf is not affected by this intention, as stated in the Mishnah.

(4) The thank-offering consisted of an animal-sacrifice and an offering of forty cakes, ten cakes of each of the four different kinds prescribed, v. Lev. VII, 12, 13. Now if during one of the services in connection with the animal-offering a wrongful intention was expressed with regard to the eating of the cakes of one kind, the question is: would R. Jose in this case also differ with the Rabbis and maintain that the other kinds of cakes are in no wise affected, or would he agree with them, seeing that all the kinds are rendered permissible by the offering of one sacrifice?

(5) The baked meal-offering consisted of either ten unleavened cakes or ten unleavened wafers (v. ibid II, 4), whilst according to R. Simeon it may consist of five cakes and five wafers; v. infra 63a. The question arises here according to R. Simeon's view: If a wrongful intention was expressed in respect of the cakes only or in respect of the wafers only, would R. Jose agree with the Rabbis that the other kind is also affected, seeing that only one handful was taken from this meal-offering on behalf of both kinds, or not?

(6) R. Jose in this case too differs with the Rabbis.

(7) It is regarded as though during one service an intention was expressed in respect of one whole olive's bulk.

(8) These services are alike in that each renders some part of the offering permissible: the slaughtering renders the blood permissible for sprinkling, and the sprinkling renders the flesh permissible to be eaten.

(9) Lit., 'which are far apart from each other'.

(10) The order of the services is: slaughtering, receiving, bringing nigh, and sprinkling. Now if the first and the last services are reckoned together as one, how much more can those services which are consecutive be reckoned together!

(11) The Baraitha taught by Levi that services cannot be reckoned together.

(12) I.e., during the slaughtering of one of the two lambs which is only half of the mattir, for it is only the slaughtering of the two lambs which renders the two loaves permissible to be eaten.

(13) Sc. a half-olive's bulk.

(14) Indeed Rabbi would also agree that if an intention which makes piggul was expressed during the slaughtering of an ordinary offering (which is a whole mattir, v. supra n. 2) in respect of a half-olive's bulk of the flesh, and a similar intention was expressed during the sprinkling of the blood (which is also a whole mattir, ibid.), these intentions would be reckoned together to make the offering piggul.

(15) Strictly the offering should be valid for there is no piggul here; R. Jose, however, declares it invalid only as a precautionary measure, since this case is similar to a real case of piggul, namely, where the intention was to burn the handful of the meal-offering on the morrow.

(16) The offering, however, is invalid, as a precautionary measure against a real case of piggul where the burning of the handful of the meal-offering alone constitutes the whole mattir (as in the case of the sinner's meal-offering), or where the burning of the frankincense alone constitutes the whole mattir (as in the case of the frankincense of the Shewbread); v. infra 16a.

(17) Which is undoubtedly a real case of piggul; v. p. 89. n. 1.

(18) Which is a real case of piggul; v. supra p. 89, n. 2.

(19) infra 16a, Mishnah.

(20) Which is admittedly a real case of piggul.

(21) There is no such case, hence there is no ground for a precautionary measure.

(22) I.e., that in every case where the offering is declared to be invalid it is only as a precautionary measure against a case of absolute piggul which is similar to it.

(23) The two loaves offered with the two lambs on the Feast of Weeks; cf. Lev. XXIII, 19, 20.

(24) And if a part of the offering was rendered unfit for eating, as here on account of uncleanness, the whole may not be eaten.

(25) Or, in the case of the Shewbread-offering, before the burning of the dishes of the frankincense which corresponds to the sprinkling of the blood in an animal-offering.

(26) The High Priest's plate worn on the forehead had a propitiatory effect (v. Ex. XXVIII, 36-38), and if a part of the sacrifice became unclean the offering was nevertheless acceptable, and the sprinkling of the blood was deemed to be a valid sprinkling. The Rabbis and R. Judah differ as to what portions of the sacrifice are comprehended within the propitiating effect of the plate, whether it includes even those portions usually eaten by the priests (Heb. ukhft), or only those portions offered upon the altar (Heb. ihkug), as the blood and the fat, and the frankincense.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 15a

The Rabbis are of the opinion that the plate renders [the offering] acceptable [even though] the eatable portions [had become unclean];¹ but R. Judah is of the opinion that the plate does not render [the offering] acceptable [where] the eatable portions [had become unclean].² Thereupon R. Huna the son of R. Nathan said to R. Papa, Behold the plate certainly renders [the offering] acceptable [where] the sacrificial portions [had become unclean], and yet they differ! For it has been taught: If one of the dishes of frankincense became unclean, R. Judah says, Both are offered in conditions of uncleanness, for an offering of the congregation may not be divided.³ But the Rabbis say, The unclean is offered in conditions of uncleanness and the clean in cleanness. Moreover R. Ashi had raised an objection thus: Come and hear: R. Judah says, Even though one tribe only was unclean and all the other tribes were clean, [all the Passover-offerings] shall be offered in conditions of uncleanness, for the offering of the congregation may not be divided.⁴ Now in this case, how does the principle of the plate rendering the offering acceptable apply?⁵ Furthermore Rabina had raised an objection thus: Come and hear: IF ONE OF THE [TWO] ROWS [OF THE SHEWBREAD] BECAME UNCLEAN, R. JUDAH SAYS, BOTH MUST BE TAKEN OUT TO THE PLACE OF BURNING, FOR THE OFFERING OF THE CONGREGATION MAY NOT BE DIVIDED. BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE UNCLEAN [IS TREATED] AS UNCLEAN, BUT THE CLEAN ONE MAY BE EATEN. Now if that were so,⁶ then it should have stated: 'for the plate does not render [the offering] acceptable [where] the eatable portions [had become unclean]'. — R. Johanan therefore said, It is an accepted teaching in the mouth of R. Judah that the offering of the congregation may not be divided.⁷

MISHNAH. THE THANK-OFFERING⁸ CAN RENDER THE BREAD PIGGUL BUT THE BREAD CANNOT RENDER THE THANK-OFFERING PIGGUL. THUS, IF HE SLAUGHTERED THE THANK-OFFERING INTENDING TO EAT A PART THEREOF ON THE MORROW, BOTH IT AND THE BREAD ARE PIGGUL; IF HE INTENDED TO EAT OF THE BREAD ON THE MORROW, THE BREAD IS PIGGUL BUT THE THANK-OFFERING IS NOT PIGGUL.

THE LAMBS⁹ CAN RENDER THE BREAD PIGGUL BUT THE BREAD CANNOT RENDER THE LAMBS PIGGUL. THUS, IF HE SLAUGHTERED THE LAMBS INTENDING TO EAT A PART THEREOF ON THE MORROW, BOTH THEY AND THE BREAD ARE PIGGUL IF HE INTENDED TO EAT OF THE BREAD ON THE MORROW, THE BREAD IS PIGGUL BUT THE LAMBS ARE NOT.

GEMARA. Why is it?¹⁰ Should you say it is because of R. Kahana's teaching, who said, Whence do we know that the cakes of the thank-offering are called 'the thank-offering'? From the verse, He shall offer for the sacrifice of the thank-offering unleavened cakes.¹¹ Then the reverse should also be true.¹² This, however, is no difficulty, for the bread is referred to as 'the thank-offering', whereas the thank-offering is nowhere referred to as 'the bread'. But when [the Mishnah] states: THE LAMBS CAN RENDER THE BREAD PIGGUL BUT THE BREAD CANNOT RENDER THE LAMBS PIGGUL, the question will be asked, Where do we find the bread ever referred to as 'the lambs'? — It must be that this is the reason [for our Mishnah]: the bread is appurtenant to the thank-offering¹³ but the thank-offering is not appurtenant to the bread; the bread is appurtenant to the lambs but the lambs are not appurtenant to the bread. Now both cases had to be stated [in our Mishnah]. For had it stated only the case of the thank-offering, I would have thought that only in that case is it held that an intention which makes piggul expressed in respect of the bread does not render the thank-offering piggul since they¹⁴ are not dependent upon each other for the rite of waving,¹⁵ but in the case of the lambs, since they¹⁴ are dependent upon each other with regard to the rite of waving,¹⁵ I would say that an intention which makes piggul expressed in respect of the bread would render the lambs piggul too.¹⁶ Therefore [both cases] had to be stated.

R. Eleazar put this question to Rab: What is the law if he slaughtered the thank-offering intending to eat an olive's bulk of it and of its bread on the morrow?¹⁷ Of course, as to whether the thank-offering becomes piggul thereby, I have no doubt at all [that it does not], for if where the intention was in respect of a whole olive's bulk of the bread the thank-offering does not become piggul, can there be any question where [the intention was in respect of an olive's bulk made up] of it and of the loaves? My question is as to whether the bread becomes piggul or not. Is the thank-offering to be reckoned with [the bread] so as to render the bread piggul or not? — He answered, In this case too, the bread is piggul but the thank-offering is not piggul. But why is this so? Surely one can apply here an a fortiori argument thus, if what helps to make the other piggul does not itself become piggul,¹⁸ then surely what cannot even help to make the other piggul¹⁹ does not itself become piggul! And do we apply an a fortiori argument of such a kind? Behold, it has been taught: It once happened that a man

(1) Of course, there is no question at all that the unclean portions are forbidden to be eaten; for there is an express prohibition against it (Lev. VII, 19). They hold, however, that where one loaf became unclean the offering is acceptable, and the sprinkling is a valid sprinkling; consequently the other loaf is permitted to be eaten.

(2) And as the sprinkling is not valid, even the clean loaf may not be eaten. R. Papa apparently ignores the reason stated by R. Judah in our Mishnah, FOR THE OFFERING OF THE CONGREGATION MAY NOT BE DIVIDED, and submits quite a new argument for R. Judah's view.

(3) It is established law (Pes. 80a) that an offering of the congregation may be offered in conditions of uncleanness. And as the unclean dish of frankincense is offered in conditions of uncleanness, the other dish may be made unclean and offered together with the first. It is thus manifest that the reason for R. Judah's view is as stated here and also in our Mishnah, namely that the offering of the congregation may not be divided, and it has nothing whatever to do with the effectiveness of the plate, for we see that he put forward this reason in our Mishnah where it was suggested that R. Judah held that the plate does not render the offering acceptable where the eatable portions had become unclean, and he also gives this reason in the Baraita quoted where he admits that the plate renders the offering acceptable where the sacrificial portions had become unclean.

(4) Where all the members of one tribe of Israel became unclean on the fourteenth day of Nisan, the day for the offering of the Passover-lamb, they are permitted, according to R. Judah, to offer the Passover-lamb in conditions of uncleanness; and since the offering of the congregation may not be divided, all the Passover-lambs are to be offered in conditions of uncleanness.

(5) There can be no question here of the plate rendering the offering acceptable for the plate exercises a propitiatory effect only where part of the offering became unclean but not where the person officiating became unclean. Again it is clear from this that the reason stated, 'For the offering of the congregation may not be divided', has nothing whatever to do with the propitiating effect or otherwise of the plate.

(6) That the reason for R. Judah's view is that the plate does not render the offering acceptable where the eatable portions had become unclean.

- (7) In truth it has no relation to the propitiatory effect of the plate.
- (8) The thank-offering consisted of an animal-offering and a bread-offering of forty cakes, ten cakes of each of the four different kinds specified; v. Lev. VII, 12, 13. The entire thank-offering had to be consumed on the same day of offering until midnight.
- (9) Of the special peace-offering offered on the Feast of Weeks and accompanied by a bread-offering of two loaves as firstfruits, v. Lev. XXIII, 17-19. This peace-offering and the loaves had to be eaten on the same day of offering.
- (10) That a wrongful intention which makes piggul expressed during the service of the thank-offering renders the bread piggul too.
- (11) Ibid. VII, 12.
- (12) I.e., a wrongful intention expressed in respect of the bread should also render the thank-offering piggul. Yet this is not the case.
- (13) The slaughtering of the thank-offering renders the bread consecrated; so too does the slaughtering of the lambs at the Feast of Weeks.
- (14) Sc. the animal-offering and the bread-offering.
- (15) In the thank-offering the breast was waved before the Lord (Lev. VII, 30) but not in conjunction with the bread-offering; on the Feast of Weeks, however, the lambs were waved together with the loaves (ibid. XXIII, 20).
- (16) And, on the other hand, had the Mishnah only stated the case of the lambs, I should have thought that only there it is held that an intention which makes piggul expressed in respect of the lambs renders the bread piggul too, since they are dependent upon each other for the rite of waving; but since this is not the case with the thank-offering and its bread I would say that an intention which makes piggul expressed in respect of the thank-offering does not render the bread piggul.
- (17) I.e., the olive's bulk that he proposes to eat on the morrow is made up of a half-olive's bulk of the flesh of the offering and a half-olive's bulk of the bread.
- (18) The half-olive's bulk of the thank-offering helps by combining with the half-olive's bulk of the bread to render the other, sc. the bread piggul, although the thank-offering does not itself become piggul thereby.
- (19) Lit., 'which came to render piggul but did not actually make piggul'. The half-olive's bulk of the bread does not combine with the half-olive's bulk of the thank-offering to render the other (sc. the thank-offering) piggul.

sowed [with his own seeds] his neighbour's vineyard which was in the budding stage;¹ the case came before the Rabbis and they pronounced the seeds forbidden and the vines permissible. But why? Surely one could apply there [this kind of] a fortiori argument thus, If what makes the other forbidden² does not itself become forbidden, what may have made the other forbidden but did not do so³ surely does not itself become forbidden!⁴ — There can be no comparison. There [with regard to diverse kinds] the Torah has forbidden⁵ hemp and arum,⁶ but other seeds are forbidden only Rabbinically; therefore he who transgressed the law was penalized by the Rabbis, and he who did not transgress the law was not penalized by the Rabbis.⁷ In our case, however, one must certainly apply the a fortiori argument.⁸

Others refer the above argument to the case of the lambs thus: R. Eleazar put this question to Rab: What is the law if he slaughtered the lambs intending to eat an olive's bulk of them and of the bread [on the morrow]? Of course, as to whether the lambs become piggul thereby, I have no doubt at all [that they do not] for if where the intention was in respect of a whole olive's bulk of the bread the lambs do not become piggul, can there be any question where [the intention was in respect of an olive's bulk made up] of them and of the bread? My question is as to whether the bread becomes piggul or not. Are the lambs to be reckoned with [the bread] so as to render the bread piggul or not?—He answered, In this case too, the bread is piggul but the lambs are not. But why is this so? Surely one can apply here an a fortiori argument thus, If what helps to make the other piggul does not itself become piggul, then surely what cannot even help to make the other piggul does not itself become piggul! And do we apply an a fortiori argument of such a kind? Behold, it has been taught: It once happened that a man sowed [with his own seeds] his neighbour's vineyard which was in the budding stage, etc. But why? Surely one could apply there [this kind of] a fortiori argument thus, If what makes the other forbidden does not itself become forbidden, what might have made the other forbidden, but did not do so, does not itself become forbidden! — There can be no comparison. There [with regard to diverse kinds] the Torah has forbidden hemp and arum, but other seeds are forbidden only Rabbinically; therefore he who transgressed the law was penalized by the Rabbis, and he who did not transgress the law was not penalized by the Rabbis. In our case, however, one must certainly apply the a fortiori argument.

Now those who refer it⁹ to the case of the thank-offering refer it all the more to the case of the lambs; but those who refer it to the case of the lambs maintain that it applies only to the case of the lambs since they¹⁰ are dependent upon each other with regard to the rite of waving, but not to the case of the thank-offering since they are not dependent upon each other with regard to the rite of waving.

R. Abba the Younger stated the question thus, R. Eleazar enquired of Rab: What is the law if he slaughtered the lamb intending to eat an olive's bulk of the other on the morrow? Does 'the other' mean the [other] lamb, in which case there is no piggul at all;¹¹ or does it mean the bread, in which case [the bread becomes] piggul? — He answered, You have learnt it: If he slaughtered one of the lambs intending to eat a part of it on the morrow, that [lamb] is piggul and the other [lamb] is valid; if he intended to eat of the other [lamb] on the morrow, both are valid.¹² Hence it is clear that 'the other' means the other lamb. Perhaps [however in that Mishnah] he expressly said 'the other lamb'.

MISHNAH. THE ANIMAL-OFFERING CAN RENDER THE DRINK-OFFERINGS PIGGUL¹³ AFTER THEY HAVE BEEN HALLOWED IN THE VESSEL. SO R. MEIR. BUT THE DRINK-OFFERINGS CANNOT RENDER THE ANIMAL-OFFERING PIGGUL. THUS, IF HE SLAUGHTERED AN ANIMAL-OFFERING INTENDING TO EAT THEREOF ON THE MORROW, BOTH IT AND THE DRINK-OFFERINGS ARE PIGGUL; IF HE INTENDED TO OFFER THE DRINK-OFFERINGS ON THE MORROW, THE DRINK-OFFERINGS ARE PIGGUL BUT THE ANIMAL-OFFERING IS NOT.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: For the drink-offerings of an animal-sacrifice the penalty of piggul is incurred, since the blood of the animal-offering renders them permissible to be offered [upon the altar].¹⁴ So R. Meir. They said to R. Meir, Is it not the fact that a man may bring his animal-offering to-day and the drink-offerings thereof in ten days' time?¹⁵ He replied, I also only spoke of the case where they were brought together with the animal-offering. But¹⁶ surely they may be transferred to another animal-offering!¹⁷ — Raba said, R. Meir is of the opinion that with the slaughtering they became appropriated [to this offering] like the cakes of the thank-offering.¹⁸

Our Rabbis taught: For the leper's log of oil¹⁹ the penalty of piggul is incurred, since the blood of the guilt-offering renders it permissible to be applied to the thumb and the great toe.²⁰ So R. Meir. They said to R. Meir, Is it not the fact that a man may bring his guilt-offering to-day and the log of oil in ten days' time? He replied, I also only spoke of the case where it was brought together with the guilt-offering. But surely it may be transferred to another [leper's] guilt-offering! — Raba said, R. Meir is of the opinion that with the slaughtering it became appropriated [to this guilt-offering] like the cakes of the thank-offering.

- (1) The sowing of seeds in a vineyard is expressly prohibited, cf. Deut. XXII, 9.
- (2) Sc. the vines, on account of which the seeds are declared forbidden.
- (3) Sc. the seeds, on account of which the vines would have been forbidden were it not for the reason stated infra in the Gemara.
- (4) Nevertheless the seeds are forbidden and such an a fortiori argument is not applied.
- (5) Of course in addition to the five kinds of grain (R. Nissim, Hul. X). V. however Sh. Mek. note 2.
- (6) Of all seeds only these kinds are forbidden to be sown in a vineyard, for they ripen only after three years, and their seed does not perish in the ground but they leave roots behind them; moreover they grow in clusters like grapes. In the cur. edd. there is here quoted the Mishnah Kil. I, 5; but it is omitted in all MSS.
- (7) So that in the above case where a man sowed seed in his neighbour's vineyard the prohibition involved was only a Rabbinic one, and the Rabbis penalized only him who transgressed their enactment but not the owner of the vineyard. Thus there is no place for the a fortiori argument, for even the seeds are not forbidden strictly but only as a penalty.
- (8) Concerning piggul, v. supra p. 95 at end.
- (9) Sc. Rab's answer to the question, namely that the offering combines with the bread to render the latter piggul.
- (10) Sc. the bread and the offering. V. supra P. 95, n. 2.
- (11) For, since the slaughtering of both lambs is the mattir, i.e., that which renders the loaves permissible, a wrongful intention expressed during the slaughtering of one lamb, which is only part of the mattir, in respect of the other part of the mattir, i.e., the other lamb, does not make piggul.
- (12) Infra 16a.
- (13) And whosoever partakes of the drink-offerings incurs the penalty of kareth on the ground of piggul. The drink-offerings consisted of prescribed quantities of flour and oil for the meal-offering and of wine for the libation; they accompanied most sacrifices (cf. Num. XV, 4-10).
- (14) And it is established law: Whatsoever is rendered permissible (ihrh, n uk aha rcs), whether for man or for the altar, by a certain rite is subject to the law of piggul. V. Zeb. 43a; Yoma 60a.
- (15) Hence it is evident that the drink-offerings are not part of the offering and are not affected by any intention concerning them expressed during the slaughtering of the offering.
- (16) In cur. edd. 'They said to him'. This is not found in the MSS. and is deleted by Sh. Mek.
- (17) Consequently they cannot be rendered piggul through any intention expressed during the slaughtering of the animal-offering, since they are not specifically bound to that offering.
- (18) And they may not be transferred to be used for another offering.
- (19) Cf. Lev. XIV, 10ff. If therefore while slaughtering the leper's guilt-offering he intended to deal with the oil on the morrow, the latter becomes piggul, and whosoever partakes of it incurs the penalty of kareth.
- (20) I.e., the oil may be applied only after the rites in connection with the blood of the guilt-offering have been performed. It is thus ihrh, n uk aha rcs; v. supra p. 98, n. 4.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 16a

MISHNAH. IF HE EXPRESSED AN INTENTION WHICH MAKES PIGGUL [IN RESPECT OF THE REMAINDER] DURING THE [BURNING OF THE] HANDFUL AND NOT DURING THE [BURNING OF THE] FRANKINCENSE, OR DURING THE [BURNING OF THE] FRANKINCENSE AND NOT DURING THE [BURNING OF THE] INCENSE, R. MEIR SAYS, IT IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF; BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED UNLESS HE EXPRESSED THE INTENTION WHICH MAKES PIGGUL DURING THE SERVICE OF THE WHOLE OF THE MATTIR.¹ THE SAGES, HOWEVER, AGREE WITH R. MEIR THAT, IF IT WAS A SINNERS MEAL-OFFERING² OR A MEAL-OFFERING OF JEALOUSY,² AND HE EXPRESSED AN INTENTION WHICH MAKES PIGGUL DURING THE [BURNING OF THE] HANDFUL, IT IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF, SINCE THE HANDFUL IS THE ENTIRE MATTIR. IF HE SLAUGHTERED ONE OF THE LAMBS³ INTENDING TO EAT THE TWO LOAVES ON THE MORROW, OR IF HE BURNT ONE OF THE DISHES OF FRANKINCENSE⁴ INTENDING TO EAT THE TWO ROWS [OF THE SHEWBREAD] ON THE MORROW, R. MEIR SAYS, IT IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF; BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED UNLESS HE EXPRESSED THE INTENTION WHICH MAKES PIGGUL DURING THE SERVICE OF THE WHOLE OF THE MATTIR. IF HE SLAUGHTERED ONE OF THE LAMBS INTENDING TO EAT A PART OF IT ON THE MORROW, THAT [LAMB] IS PIGGUL BUT THE OTHER [LAMB] IS VALID; IF HE INTENDED TO EAT OF THE OTHER [LAMB] ON THE MORROW, BOTH ARE VALID.

GEMARA. Rab said, The dispute⁵ is only where he offered⁶ the handful in silence and then the frankincense with the expressed intention, but where he offered the handful with the expressed intention and then the frankincense in silence, all agree that it is piggul, for everything that a man does [in silence] he does in accordance with his first resolve.⁷ But Samuel said, There is still a dispute in that case too.⁸

Raba was once sitting and reciting this statement [of Rab], when R. Aha b. R. Huna raised against Raba the following objection: This⁹ applies only to the service of taking the handful, or of putting it in the vessel or of bringing it nigh;¹⁰ but if he had already reached the service of burning, and he offered the handful in silence and then the frankincense with the expressed intention, or if he offered the handful with the expressed intention and then the frankincense in silence, R. Meir says, It is piggul and the penalty of kareth is incurred on account thereof. The Sages say, The penalty of kareth is not incurred unless he expressed an intention which makes piggul during the service of the whole of the mattir. Now here is stated the clause: 'Or if he offered the handful with the expressed intention and then the frankincense in silence', and yet they differ!¹¹ — Render: [Or if he offered the handful with the expressed intention] having already offered the frankincense in silence. But there are two objections to this: in the first place, it is identical with the first clause;¹² and secondly, it has been taught [in another Baraitha]: 'And then'¹³ — R. Hanina explained that here there were two minds.¹⁴

Come and hear: This¹⁵ applies only to offerings whose blood must be sprinkled upon the outer altar;¹⁶ but in the case of offerings whose blood must be sprinkled upon the inner altar, as for example the forty-three sprinklings on the Day of Atonement,¹⁷ or the eleven sprinklings of the bullock of the anointed High Priest,¹⁸ or the eleven sprinklings of the bullock offered for the error of the community,¹⁸ if [the priest] expressed an intention which makes piggul either during the first [sprinklings] or the second or the third,¹⁹ R. Meir says, It is piggul and the penalty of kareth is incurred on account thereof. But the Sages say, The penalty of kareth is not incurred unless he expressed the intention which makes piggul during the service of the whole mattir.²⁰ Now here it states: 'If he expressed an intention which makes piggul either during the first [sprinklings] or the second or the third', and yet they differ!²¹ Should you, however, reply that there too there were two minds,²² I grant you that this is satisfactory according to him who holds that the expression 'with a bullock'²³ means also 'with the blood of the bullock';²⁴ but what can be said according to him who holds that the expression 'with a bullock' excludes the blood of the bullock?²⁵ — Raba said, We must suppose here that he²⁶ expressed an intention which makes piggul during the first sprinklings, was silent during the second, and again expressed an intention which makes piggul during the third; in which case we say, If you accept the principle that whatsoever a man does [in silence] he does according to his first resolve, why then did he express again an intention which makes piggul during the third [sprinklings]? R. Ashi demurred, saying, Does [the Baraitha] actually state 'he was silent'? — Rather, said R. Ashi, We must suppose here that he expressed an intention which makes piggul during the first [sprinklings] and also during the second;²⁷ in which case we say, If you accept the principle that whatsoever a man does [in silence] he does according to his first resolve, why then did he again express an intention which makes piggul during the second [sprinklings]?²⁷

(1) V. supra p. 89, n. 2.

(2) Which is offered without frankincense; cf. Lev. V, 11 and Num. V, 15.

(3) Which is but half the mattir; for two lambs were offered as peace-offerings on the Feast of Weeks, along with a bread-offering of two loaves; v. Lev. XXIII, 17ff.

(4) Also half the mattir; for two dishes of frankincense were offered with the Shewbread. V. ibid. XXIV, 7.

(5) Between R. Meir and the Sages in our Mishnah.

(6) Lit., 'put it in' sc. the vessel, in readiness for the burning upon the altar. It must be remembered that the handful of flour was first burnt upon the altar and then the frankincense.

(7) And as his first resolve expressed during the offering of the handful was an intention of piggul—namely, of eating the remainder on the morrow — it is to be assumed that such was also his intention—though unexpressed during the offering of the frankincense.

(8) MS.M. adds: And so also said R. Johanan, There is still a dispute in that case too.

(9) The ruling that a wrongful intention expressed whilst dealing with the handful alone renders piggul.

(10) For each of these services is performed once only and that in connection with the handful, hence at each of these services the intention is in respect of the whole mattir; whereas the burning is performed twice, viz., the burning of the handful of flour and of the frankincense.

(11) Thus contrary to Rab's view.

(12) Where the first service was performed in silence, for it is immaterial whether that first service was the burning of the handful or of the frankincense.

(13) Although in the Baraitha cited by R. Aha the expression 'and' may be explained as meaning 'having already', this cannot be so in the other Baraitha which expressly states 'and then'.

(14) I.e., two Priests had performed the rites of the meal-offering, one burnt the handful of flour with an intention of piggul and the other burnt the frankincense in silence. In such a case the principle, 'Whatever a man does in silence he does in accordance with his first resolve', cannot apply; for this can only be said of one person but not of two.

(15) The law that a wrongful intention expressed during one single sprinkling of the blood renders the offering piggul.

(16) For since with these offerings one single sprinkling would effect atonement (v. Zeb. 36b) that sprinkling is accounted as the whole mattir and can therefore render piggul.

(17) Made up as follows: eight sprinklings (one above and seven below) between the staves of the ark, of the blood of the bullock, and likewise eight of the blood of the he-goat; these same sprinklings repeated in the Sanctuary upon the veil; four sprinklings of the blood of the bullock and of the he-goat when mixed together, i.e., one upon each of the four corners of the golden altar, and seven upon the cleansed surface (i.e. the top) of the golden altar. V. Yoma Ch. V.

(18) These are: the seven sprinklings of the blood towards the veil, and the four sprinklings, one upon each of the four corners of the altar. Cf. Lev. IV, 6,7 and 17, 18.

(19) The first, second and third sprinklings refer to the sprinklings of the blood in the Holy of Holies between the staves of the ark, towards the veil, and upon the altar respectively.

(20) I.e., during all the three sprinklings.

(21) The Sages holding that where the intention which makes piggul was expressed during the first sprinklings only, the others being performed in silence, the offering is not piggul. Apparently the principle, Whatsoever a man does in silence he does according to his first resolve, is not adopted; contra Rab.

(22) I.e., the sprinklings were performed by two High Priests, the High Priest who performed the first sprinklings having died immediately thereafter or The Master stated: 'R. Meir says, It is piggul and the penalty having become unclean; in which case the sprinklings in silence by the second High Priest can have no reference to or bearing upon the resolve of the former High Priest.

(23) Lev. XVI, 3.

(24) If the High Priest, after having slaughtered the bullock, could not continue to serve, his successor continued the service, and was not required to begin all the services anew and slaughter another bullock for himself; for the verse, Herewith shall Aaron (sc. the High Priest) come into the holy place; with a bullock (ibid.) does not imply that the High Priest shall begin his service with a living bullock, but he may even take the blood of the bullock which was slaughtered by his predecessor. V. Yoma 49b.

(25) According to him the service can never be performed by two High Priests, for the successor must begin anew.

(26) The High Priest.

(27) 'And also during the third' — so in cur. edd. but wanting in all MSS. and struck out by Sh. Mek. The case is clearly one where the High Priest was silent during the third sprinklings; so that only a part and not the whole of the mattir was performed with an intention which makes piggul.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 16b

But does not the Baraita state: Either. . .or?¹ — This is a difficulty. of kareth is incurred on account thereof'. Consider: the penalty of kareth is incurred only after all the mattirin² have been offered, for a Master has stated:³ The expression 'accepted'⁴ suggests, as the acceptance of a valid offering so is the acceptance⁵ of an invalid offering; that is to say, as the acceptance of a valid offering is effected only after all the mattirin have been offered, so the acceptance of an invalid offering is effected only after all the mattirin have been offered. Now in this case since he expressed a wrongful intention [when sprinkling] within,⁶ he has thereby rendered it invalid, consequently when he later sprinkles in the Sanctuary it is as though he were sprinkling water!⁷ — Rabbah said, It can happen where four bullocks and four he-goats were used.⁸ Raba said, You may even hold that there was only one bullock and one he-goat, but [the sprinklings] are acceptable in regard to the law of piggul.⁹

‘Forty-three [sprinklings]’. But we have been taught: Forty-seven! — This is no difficulty; one [Baraitha] accepts the view that for the sprinklings upon the horns of the altar they mix together [the blood of the bullock and the blood of the he-goat], whereas the other accepts the view that they do not mix them.¹⁰ But we have been taught: Forty-eight?—This is no difficulty; one [Baraitha] accepts the view that the [pouring out of the] residue [of the blood] is an indispensable service,¹¹ whereas the other accepts the view that the [pouring out of the] residue is not indispensable.

The question was raised: What is the law if he expressed an intention which makes piggul at the bringing nigh [of the handful to the altar]?¹² R. Johanan said that the bringing nigh is like unto the taking of the handful;¹³ but Resh Lakish said that the bringing nigh is like unto the burning.¹⁴ Now Resh Lakish's view is clear, for there is also the bringing nigh of the frankincense; but what is the reason for R. Johanan's view? — Raba said, R. Johanan is of the opinion that any service which is not an absolute mattir¹⁵ is regarded as a service complete in itself with regard to piggul.¹⁶ Whereupon Abaye said to him, Behold the slaughtering of one of the lambs [on the Feast of Weeks] is a service which is not an absolute mattir,¹⁷ and yet they differ! For we have learnt: IF HE SLAUGHTERED ONE OF THE LAMBS INTENDING TO EAT THE TWO LOAVES ON THE MORROW, OR IF HE BURNT ONE OF THE DISHES OF FRANKINCENSE INTENDING TO EAT THE TWO ROWS [OF THE SHEWBREAD] ON THE MORROW, R. MEIR SAYS, IT IS PIGGUL AND THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS INCURRED ON ACCOUNT THEREOF; BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE PENALTY OF KARETH IS NOT INCURRED UNLESS HE EXPRESSED THE INTENTION WHICH MAKES PIGGUL DURING THE SERVICE OF THE WHOLE OF THE MATTIR! — He replied, Do you imagine that the loaves are hallowed already in the oven? It is the slaughtering of the lambs that hallows them; and whatsoever serves to hallow is on the same footing as whatsoever serves to render permissible.¹⁸

R. Shimi b. Ashi raised an objection. It was taught: Others say, If he had in mind first the circumcised persons and then the uncircumcised, it is valid; if he had in mind first the uncircumcised persons and then the circumcised, it is invalid.¹⁹ And it was established that they differ concerning half the mattir!²⁰ — He replied, Do you think that the blood [of an animal-offering] is already hallowed in the throat? It is the knife [of slaughtering] that hallows it; and whatsoever serves to hallow is on the same footing as that which serves to render permissible.

Come and hear: This²¹ applies only to the services of taking the handful, or putting it in the vessel or bringing it nigh; [but if he had already reached the service of burning etc.] Now ‘bringing nigh’ surely means bringing nigh for the purposes of burning, does it not?²² — No, it means bringing nigh in order to put it in the vessel.²³ But if so, why is it stated [in this order] ‘putting it in the vessel or bringing it nigh’? It ought surely to have stated ‘bringing it nigh or putting it in the vessel'! — This is no difficulty, for you may render it thus.²⁴ But [it will be asked], why does it state 'but if he had already reached the service of burning'? It ought to have stated 'but if he had already reached the service of bringing nigh'!²⁵ — This, too, is no difficulty, for since the bringing nigh is for the purposes of burning he refers to it as the burning. But [it will be asked], why does it state 'and he offered'? It ought to have stated, 'and he brought it nigh'!²⁶ — This is indeed a difficulty.

If he burnt the size of a sesame seed of the handful intending to eat the size of a sesame seed of the remainder [on the morrow, and he repeated this again and again] until the handful was entirely [burnt up],²⁷ — in this case R. Hisda, R. Hamnuna and R. Shesheth differ. One holds that it is piggul, the other that it is invalid, and the third that it is valid. Now shall we say that he who holds that it is piggul is in agreement with R. Meir,²⁸ he who holds that it is invalid is in agreement with the Rabbis,²⁸ and he who holds that it is valid is in agreement with Rabbi?²⁹ — But is this so? perhaps R. Meir is of that opinion only there where he expressed [the intention which makes piggul] during a complete service,³⁰ but not here where he did not express [such an intention] during a complete service. Moreover, perhaps the Rabbis are of their opinion only there where he did not express an intention [which makes piggul] during the service of the whole mattir, but here where he actually expressed an intention [which makes piggul] during the service of the whole mattir [they would agree that] it is piggul. And again, perhaps Rabbi is of his opinion only there where he did not make up [the minimum quantity] later in the same service,³¹ but here where he made up the quantity in the same service [he would agree that] it is invalid! — We must therefore say that he who holds that it is piggul holds thus according to all views; he who holds that it is invalid holds thus according to all views, and he who holds that it is valid holds thus according to all views. 'He who holds that it is piggul holds thus according to all views', for he maintains that that³² is a way of eating as well as a way of burning.³³ 'He who holds that it is invalid holds thus according to all views', for he maintains that that³² is a way of eating but not a way of burning, and it was as though [the handful of] the meal-offering had not been burnt at all.³⁴ 'And he who holds that it is valid holds thus according to all views', for he maintains that that³² is a way of burning but not a way of eating.³⁵

(1) This implies that the intention which makes piggul was expressed only during one of the three sprinklings mentioned.

(2) ihrh, n pl. of rh, n, 'that which renders the offering permissible'; v. Glos. The penalty of kareth for eating piggul is not incurred unless the whole mattir was offered according to its prescribed rite except for the expressed intention which made it piggul. Thus where the mattir consists of a number of sprinklings, and at the first sprinklings there was expressed an intention which makes piggul, then it is essential, if the penalty of kareth is to apply, that the subsequent sprinklings be performed according to the prescribed rite.

(3) Zeb. 28b, 42b.

(4) Lev. XIX, 7 and XXII, 27; the former referring to an offering which has been made piggul and the latter to a valid offering.

(5) Regarding the liability for piggul.

(6) Sc. in the Holy of Holies between the staves of the ark, this being the first of the sprinkling services.

(7) The penalty of kareth cannot therefore be incurred; how then can R. Meir say that kareth is incurred in those circumstances? It must be observed that at first sight this same question could also be raised in the case where a piggul intention was expressed during the slaughtering or during the receiving of the blood, for since the offering is rendered invalid by that intention the subsequent sprinkling is no service, consequently the penalty of kareth cannot be incurred. Rashi, however, suggests this distinction: in this case the slaughtering or the receiving was performed entirely in sanctity, for the intention of piggul related to some subsequent service, whereas in the case of our text the sprinkling was not performed entirely in sanctity, for the intention of piggul related to the other sprinklings of this same service. V. also Rashi in Zeb. 42b, s.v. hf; and Tosaf. here s.v. hf.

(8) Where after the High Priest had sprinkled the blood of the bullock and of the he-goat in the Holy of Holies between the staves of the ark, the residue of the blood had spilt, so that it was necessary to slaughter another bullock and he-goat to obtain their blood for sprinkling in the Sanctuary. Again after the second sprinklings the residue of the blood had spilt and so another bullock and he-goat were once more slaughtered in order to perform the sprinklings upon the four corners of the altar. Once again owing to this same mishap, a fourth bullock and he-goat were slaughtered in order to perform the final sprinklings seven times upon the cleansed portion of the altar. In these circumstances the offering would be valid (v. Yoma 61a), for each of the sprinklings is considered as a separate service. Now if an intention which makes piggul had been expressed at the first sprinklings the offering would be piggul, for here the subsequent three sprinklings were admittedly in themselves valid and were not affected by the wrongful intention of the first sprinklings. In the normal case, however, where only one bullock and one he-goat had been used in the service, R. Meir would agree that, where an intention which makes piggul was expressed at the first sprinklings, the penalty of kareth cannot be incurred.

(9) Since the subsequent sprinklings had been performed without any further intention they are considered as vital services offered according to rule, and not as 'sprinklings of water'. The offering therefore is piggul.

(10) But the blood of the bullock and of the he-goat must each separately be sprinkled upon the four corners of the altar; hence an addition of four to the total number of sprinklings. V. Yoma 57b.

(11) The pouring out of the residue of the blood to the base of the altar, being an important service, is added to the number of the sprinklings, making thus a total of forty-eight. V. Yoma 60b.

(12) The service of bringing nigh to the altar applies both to the handful of flour and to the frankincense, so that it can be said that the bringing nigh of one is but half the mattir, and the dispute between the Sages and R. Meir would hold good here too.

(13) Which is a complete service, a whole mattir, for the handful was only taken from the flour but not from the frankincense.

(14) Of which there are two services: the burning of the handful and of the frankincense. And therefore the dispute between the Sages and R. Meir applies also to the service of bringing nigh.

(15) I.e., it can be dispensed with; the bringing nigh can in certain cases be dispensed with for the handful can be passed on from priest to priest till it reaches the altar (Rashi). Aliter: it does not render aught permissible; in this respect the service of bringing nigh is different from other services, for the receiving the blood of the animal-offering renders the sprinkling possible, and the sprinkling renders the flesh permissible (v. Sh. Mek. n. 4).

(16) And the ruling of the Sages that piggul does not apply to half a mattir does not apply here, since this service is not a mattir in the strict sense of the word.

(17) For it does not render aught permissible. V. supra n. 3.

(18) So that the slaughtering is on a par with an absolute mattir, and therefore the Sages hold that it is piggul only when the whole of this mattir (i.e., the slaughtering of both lambs) was affected by the wrongful intention.

(19) V. Pes. 62b. The Baraita refers to the case of a person who, whilst slaughtering the Passover-lamb on behalf of a number of people, circumcised and uncircumcised, cut one organ of the animal's throat on behalf of one class of people and then the second organ on behalf of the other class too. The view here stated is introduced by the expression 'Others say', which usually represents the view of R. Meir; the Sages, however, differ.

(20) I.e., whether a wrongful intention expressed during the service of half the mattir can invalidate the offering or not; and here the cutting of the first organ is, as it were, but half the mattir. Now the mattir here spoken of, namely the slaughtering, is not an absolute mattir since it does not render aught permissible, and yet the Sages differ with R. Meir and hold that the wrongful intention in regard to half the mattir is of no consequence; contra Raba's interpretation of R. Johanan.

(21) That a wrongful intention expressed whilst dealing with the handful alone renders piggul. V. supra p. 101.

(22) And the Sages agree that a wrongful intention expressed during the bringing nigh renders piggul; contra Resh Lakish.

(23) Which is a complete service, for only the handful was put into a vessel and not the frankincense.

(24) And reverse the order of the Baraitha.

(25) For the service of bringing nigh is prior to the burning, and the Sages and R. Meir differ herein, too, according to Resh Lakish.

(26) For even if it is accepted, as suggested, that the term 'burning' includes the bringing nigh, when describing the service the Tanna of the Baraitha should have mentioned the first act thereof, namely the bringing nigh, and not the act of offering (lit., 'the putting' upon the altar, i.e., the burning).

(27) And so he did too with the frankincense.

(28) That an intention which makes piggul expressed during the service of a portion of the mattir — in this case during the burning of the size of a sesame seed of the handful and of the frankincense — renders the offering piggul. The Sages, however, in such a case declare the offering invalid.

(29) V. supra 14a where Rabbi holds the view that the two parts of the mattir cannot be reckoned together to affect the offering, where each intention was made in respect of less than the minimum quantity that constitutes eating, namely an olive's bulk.

(30) Viz., during the burning of the handful which, though but half of the mattir, for there is also the burning of the frankincense, is nevertheless a complete service. In this case only does R. Meir maintain that the offering is piggul.

(31) For in the case dealt with by Rabbi the piggul intention was expressed during the slaughtering of one lamb about a half-olive's bulk of one loaf and a similar piggul intention was expressed during the slaughtering of the other lamb about the same quantity of the other loaf.

(32) The taking of quantities the size of a sesame seed at a time.

(33) So that this case is no-different from the usual cases of piggul where during the burning of an olive's bulk of the handful there was an intention expressed to eat an olive's bulk of the remainder on the morrow.

(34) And therefore it is invalid.

(35) The burning in this manner is regarded as a normal burning of the handful, whereas the intention concerning the eating of the remainder is no intention in law so as to invalidate the offering.

Talmud - Mas. Menachoth 17a

The keen intellects of Pumbeditha¹ said, An intention which makes piggul expressed during one service of burning concerning another service of burning renders the offering piggul.² And this is so even according to the Rabbis who ruled that an intention which makes piggul expressed during the service of half the mattir does not render piggul, for that is their ruling only in the case where he expressed an intention [which makes piggul] about the remainder [of the meal-offering], the frankincense, however, remaining unaffected; but in this case where he expressed an intention [which makes piggul] about the frankincense, it is as though he had expressed the intention during the service of the whole mattir. Raba said, We have also learnt to the same effect: This is the general rule: If one took the handful or put it into the vessel or brought it nigh, or burnt it, intending to eat a thing that it is usual to eat or to burn a thing that it is usual to burn, outside its

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER,¹ AND THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID, EXCEPT A DEAF — MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR, LEST THEY INVALIDATE THEIR SLAUGHTERING; AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED WHILE OTHERS WERE STANDING OVER THEM, THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID. STANDING OVER THEM, THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID.

GEMARA. The expression ALL MAY SLAUGHTER [implies a right] in the first instance, yet the expression AND THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID [implies merely a sanction] after the act!² — R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: Is it correct that the expression ‘ALL MAY . . .’ [implies a right] in the first instance? If so, [consider the Mishnah]: ‘All may change.³ whether man or woman’; is that also a right in the first instance? Is it not written: He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good?⁴ — No,⁵ for there the Mishnah goes on to explain: ‘Not that a person is allowed to change, but only that, if he has changed, the change is effective and he receives forty stripes’.

Then, [consider this Mishnah]: ‘All may vow another's valuation and their valuation may be vowed by others, and they may vow another's worth and their worth may be vowed by others’;⁶ is that also a right in the first instance? Is it not written: And if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee?⁷ And it is further written: Better it is that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.⁸ And it has been taught: Better than both⁹ is he who does not vow at all; this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Judah says. Better than both¹⁰ is he who vows and pays. Now, even R. Judah refers only to the case of one who says. ‘Behold, let this be a sacrifice’,

(1) Sc. an animal or a bird according to the Jewish ritual.

(2) The expressions are apparently contradictory, for whereas in the former a direct permission is granted, in the latter it is only after the act that the slaughtering is considered valid. This contradiction is not attempted to be answered until p. 3 infra; meanwhile R. Aha questions the soundness of the implications.

(3) Sc. a consecrated beast for a common beast. Cf. Tem. 2a.

(4) Lev. XXVII, 10.

(5) The expression used, generally implying a right in the first instance, is in this particular case expressly limited.

(6) V. ‘Arak. 2a. The reference is to Lev. XXVII, which deals with the law of one who vows to offer to the sanctuary the value of any human being, which may include himself. The difference between ‘valuation’ and ‘worth’ is that the former term is applied to vows in the formula of which the word lrg — ‘valuation’ — is used. The amount in cases of valuation is fixed by the Torah.

(7) Deut. XXIII, 23. This verse implies that it is sinful, or at least not praiseworthy, to vow, as the quotation from Eccl. V, 4, as explained by the Baraita, clearly shows.

(8) Eccl. ibid.

(9) Sc. one who vows and pays and one who vows and does not pay.

(10) Sc. one who vows and does not pay and who does not vow at all.

but not to the case of one who says. 'Behold, I take it upon me [to bring a sacrifice]'.¹

Does then the expression 'ALL MAY . . . ' never imply a right in the first instance? What then of the statements: 'All must observe the law of Sukkah',² and, 'All must observe the law of Zizith'?³ Do these not imply a duty in the first instance? — [No;] I do not say so of the expression 'All must'.⁴

Then take this case: 'All lay the hand [upon the head of the sacrifice], whether man or woman'. Does this not mean a duty in the first instance? Surely it is written: And he shall lay his hand . . . and it shall be accepted for him.⁵ — The truth of the matter is: 'ALL MAY . . . ' sometimes implies a right in the first instance and sometimes implies a sanction after the act. This being so, in the case of our Mishnah, why should you say that it is a right in the first instance and consequently raise a difficulty? Say, rather, it is a sanction after the act and there will be no difficulty. — He⁶ replied: My difficulty is the expression. AND THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID. Since it states, AND THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID, which is obviously a sanction after the act, ALL MAY SLAUGHTER must be a right in the first instance, for otherwise why is it necessary to state the sanction after the act twice?

Rabbah b. Ulla said: This is the interpretation of the Mishnah. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER: even an unclean person [may slaughter] a common beast.⁷ An unclean person [may slaughter] a common beast! Surely this is obvious!⁸ — What is meant is this: [An unclean person may slaughter] a common beast in connection with which the cleanness proper to hallowed things has been observed; and the Tanna is of the opinion that common things kept in the cleanness proper to hallowed things are regarded as hallowed. How does he [the unclean person] proceed [in slaughtering]? — He fetches a long knife and slaughters therewith so as to avoid touching the flesh [of the beast]. But in the case of consecrated beasts he should not slaughter lest he touch the flesh.⁹ Nevertheless, if he did slaughter and declared: 'I am certain that I did not touch the flesh', his slaughtering is valid. EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR: whose slaughtering even in the case of common beasts, and even after the act is invalid, lest¹⁰ they pause, press or thrust.¹¹

[Now on this interpretation, when the Mishnah continues:] AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED, to which [persons] does this statement refer? If we were to say it refers to a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, [in that case], having just now dealt with these, [the Tanna] should have said: 'And if they slaughtered'! And if it refers to an unclean person slaughtering a common beast,¹² surely you have said that he may slaughter even in the first instance! Or again, if it refers to an unclean person slaughtering a consecrated beast,¹² surely you have said that in his case it is sufficient if he said: 'I am certain [that i did not touch the flesh]'! — [It refers to the latter case] when he is not present to be questioned.¹³

But is the law concerning an unclean person slaughtering a consecrated beast derived from [our Mishnah] here? Is it not derived from [that other Mishnah] there¹⁴ which reads: If any of those who are unfit [for service in the Temple] slaughtered [a consecrated beast], the slaughtering is valid, for slaughtering is valid even if performed by them that are not priests or by women or by slaves or by unclean persons, and even if the beast was intended for a sacrifice of the highest grade;¹⁵ provided that the unclean person does not touch the flesh? — Here [our Mishnah] is the source of the law; [the other Mishnah] there mentions the unclean person slaughtering consecrated animals only because it mentions all others who are unfit. If you wish, however, I can say. There is the source of the law, seeing that it is in the tractate which deals with consecrated things; [our Mishnah] here mentions the unclean person slaughtering consecrated beasts only because it mentions the unclean person slaughtering common beasts.

This unclean person of whom we speak, how did he become unclean? If we were to say that he became unclean by touching a corpse, [there is this difficulty]. The Divine law says: One slain with a sword,¹⁶

(1) In the former case one who so vows is not liable to replace the animal if it is stolen or lost or has died, therefore if he has set aside the animal there is little fear that he will not fulfil his obligation; in the latter case the one who vows must supply an animal and is liable to replace it in all events, and there is therefore the danger of his not fulfilling his obligation. All vows of 'valuation' and of 'worth' come under this latter head; consequently the Mishnah quoted cannot possibly imply a right in the first instance.

(2) To dwell in booths during the feast of Tabernacles; v. Lev. XXIII, 42.

(3) The wearing of Fringes in accordance with Num. XV, 38ff.

(4) In these cases the Torah imposes a specific duty which can only mean in the first instance.

(5) Lev. I, 4.

(6) I.e., R. Ashi.

(7) Hullin, v. Glos.

(8) An Israelite was not required to observe the rules of levitical cleanness in connection with his ordinary food.

(9) This would make the beast unclean and unfit for a sacrifice.

(10) By doing any of the acts mentioned the slaughtering is invalid.

(11) V. p. 37, where the five rules to be observed with regard to slaughtering are enumerated and explained.

(12) And the Mishnah teaches that if others were standing over him his slaughtering is valid.

(13) As to whether he touched the flesh or not. The Mishnah therefore teaches that if others were standing over him while he slaughtered and saw that he did not touch the flesh his slaughtering is valid.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 3a

[signifying that] the sword has the same degree of uncleanness as the slain person.¹ The slaughterer therefore, being a primary source of uncleanness, would defile the knife, and the knife in turn would defile the flesh!² — It must be that he became unclean through contact with a [dead] reptile.³ If you wish, however, I can even say that he became unclean by touching a corpse, but he prepared⁴ a reed haulm⁵ and slaughtered therewith; for it has been taught: One may slaughter with any instrument, with a flint, with glass or with a reed haulm.⁶

Abaye said: This is the interpretation of the Mishnah. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER: even a

Cuthean.⁷ This applies only where an Israelite is standing over him; but if [an Israelite] is merely going in and out he may not slaughter. If, however, he did slaughter, one cuts off an olive's bulk⁸ of the flesh and gives it to him; if he ate it, others may also eat of his slaughtering; if he did not eat it, others may not eat of his slaughtering.⁹ EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR: whose slaughtering, even after the act, is invalid, lest they pause, press or thrust.¹⁰

[Now on this interpretation, when the Mishnah continues:] AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED, to which persons does this statement refer? If we were to say it refers to a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, [in that case], having just now dealt with these [the Tanna] should have said: 'And if they slaughtered'! And if it refers to a Cuthean, surely you have said that if an Israelite is standing over him he may slaughter in the first instance!¹¹ — This is a difficulty.

Said Raba, [But is it correct to state that], if an Israelite is going in and out [the Cuthean] has not the right [to slaughter] in the first instance? Have we not learnt: If one left a heathen in one's wine shop and an Israelite was going in and out [of the shop], the wine is permitted?¹² — Does it teach there 'one may leave'? It says: 'if one left', which is only a sanction after the act. You can, however, derive it from this [Mishnah]: There is no need for the supervisor to sit and watch the whole time; even if he keeps going in and out, [the wine] is permitted!¹³

Rather, said Raba, this is the interpretation of the Mishnah. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER: even a Cuthean. This applies only where an Israelite is going in and out [at the time]; but if [an Israelite] came and found that [the Cuthean] had slaughtered, one must cut off an olive's bulk of the flesh and give it to him; if he ate it, others may also eat of his slaughtering; if he did not eat it, others may not eat of his slaughtering. EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR: whose slaughtering, even after the act, is invalid, lest he pause, press or thrust.

[Now on this interpretation, when the Mishnah continues:] AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED, to which persons does this statement refer? If we were to say it refers to a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, [in that case], having just now dealt with these, [the Tanna] should have said: 'And if they slaughtered'! And if it refers then to a Cuthean, surely you have said that though an Israelite is [merely] going in and out he may slaughter in the first instance!¹⁴ — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi said: This is the interpretation of the Mishnah. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER: even an Israelite apostate.¹⁵ In what respect is he an apostate? — In that he eats carrion¹⁶ in order to satisfy his appetite.¹⁷ [This holds good], provided the requirement of Raba is fulfilled; for Raba said: In the case of an Israelite apostate who eats carrion in order that he may satisfy his appetite,

(1) The general principle is that unclean matter defiles anything which comes in contact with it, and that the thing so defiled becomes unclean in a lesser degree than that which defiled it. The interpretation of this verse, however establishes the exception that where a metal comes into contact with a corpse or with one who had touched a corpse the metal assumes the same degree of uncleanness as the corpse or the person who had touched the corpse, as the case may be.

(2) The knife would itself assume the same degree of uncleanness as the unclean person, and would thus be a primary source of uncleanness; the flesh touching the knife would then become unclean in the first degree.

- (3) In this case the reptile is the primary source of uncleanness (vtnuyv ct); the slaughterer by touching the reptile becomes unclean in the first degree (vtnuyk iuatr) and cannot convey his uncleanness to the knife; for the rule is that anything which is unclean in the first degree can only defile foodstuffs or liquids but not other objects.
- (4) Lit., 'examined', 'tested'.
- (5) This neither contracts nor conveys uncleanness.
- (6) V. infra 15b.
- (7) The Cutheans, often called Samaritans, were one of the peoples that were settled in Samaria by the Assyrian king after the exile of the ten tribes. They adopted certain Jewish practices particularly those based on the written word of the Torah. V.II Kings XVII, 24ff.
- (8) The legal minimum to constitute 'eating'.
- (9) The argument is this: A Cuthean observes certain laws (including Shechitah) for himself but does not mind if he is the cause of others transgressing the laws, because he does not accept the prohibition: Thou shalt not put a stumbling block before the blind, Lev. XIX, 14, in its figurative sense but only in its literal meaning.
- (10) V. supra p. 3, n. 6.
- (11) Whereas the Mishnah declares the slaughtering valid only after the act.
- (12) Cf. A.Z. 69a. There is no fear that the heathen handled the wine with an idolatrous intent or at all, and the wine is therefore permitted for use. It would follow therefore that in the case of Shechitah the Cuthean is to be trusted to slaughter in the first instance if there is an Israelite going in and out, in contradiction to Abaye's interpretation of our Mishnah.
- (13) Cf. A.Z. 61a. This Mishnah clearly teaches that going in and out is sufficient supervision even in the first instance, which contradicts Abaye. V. previous note.
- (14) Whereas our Mishnah on the latest interpretation demands for the valid slaughtering that an Israelite be standing over him the whole time, and even then it is valid only after the act.
- (15) Mumar 'an apostate'; hence generally, a non-conforming, non-observant Jew.

one prepares the knife and gives it to him, and then we may eat of his slaughtering. But if the knife was not prepared and given to him he may not slaughter.¹ If, however, he did slaughter, the knife should be examined now; if it is found to be satisfactory, we may eat of his slaughtering; otherwise we may not eat of his slaughtering. EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR: whose slaughtering, even after the act, is invalid, lest they pause, press or thrust.

[Now on this interpretation, when the Mishnah continues:] AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED, to which persons does this statement refer? If we were to say it refers to a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, [in that case], having just now dealt with these, [the Tanna] should have said: 'And IF THEY slaughtered'! And if it refers to an Israelite apostate, surely you have said that if a knife was prepared and given to him, he has the right to slaughter in the first instance! And if [on the other hand] a knife was not prepared for him, well then, if the knife is here it can be examined now, and if it is not here, what is the advantage if others were standing over him at the time? Perhaps he slaughtered with a notched knife!² This is a difficulty. Rabina said: This is the interpretation of the Mishnah. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER: [that is to say], all who are qualified may slaughter, even though it is not known whether they are experienced or not: provided that we are satisfied that they are able to recite the rules of Shechitah.³ But if we do not know whether they are able to recite the rules of Shechitah, they may not slaughter; if, however, they did slaughter, they are to be examined now. If they are able to recite the rules of Shechitah, one may eat of their slaughtering; otherwise one may not eat of their slaughtering. EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE. AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR: whose slaughtering, even after the act,⁴ is invalid, lest they pause, press or thrust.

Now on this interpretation, when the Mishnah continues] AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED. To which persons does this statement refer? If we were to say it refers to a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, [in that case], having just now dealt with these, [the Tanna] should have said: 'And if they slaughtered'! And if it refers to those who are not qualified,⁵ surely you have said that it is sufficient if they are examined [after the slaughtering]! — [It must be] that they are not present to be examined.

Some there are who say: Rabina said: This is the interpretation of the Mishnah. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER: [that is to say], all who are experienced may slaughter, even though it is not known whether they are qualified or not. This applies only where they have slaughtered two or three times in our presence and were not overcome by faintness. But if they have not slaughtered two or three times in our presence, they may not slaughter, lest they are overcome by faintness. If, however, one of these did slaughter and said: 'I am certain I was not overcome by faintness', his slaughtering is valid. EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR: whose slaughtering, even after the act, is invalid, lest they pause, press or thrust.

[Now on this interpretation, when the Mishnah continues:] AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED, to which persons does this statement refer? If we were to say it refers to a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, [in that case], having just now dealt with these [the Tanna] should have said: 'And if they slaughtered'! And if it refers to those who are not experienced, surely you have said that in such cases it is sufficient if they said: 'I am certain I was not overcome by faintness'! [It must be] that they are not present to be questioned.⁶

Rabina and Rabbah b. Ulla do not interpret [the Mishnah] in the ways suggested by Abaye or by Raba or by R. Ashi, because the latter find a difficulty in interpreting the expression: AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED.

All do not agree with Rabbah b. Ulla's interpretation, because, according to the one version which suggested that [our Mishnah] here is the source of the rule,⁷ on the contrary, [they say] that other [Mishnah] is the source of the rule, since it is in the tractate which deals with consecrated things; and according to the other version which suggested that the other [Mishnah] is the source of the rule but that [our Mishnah] here refers to the case of an unclean person slaughtering consecrated beasts merely incidentally because it deals with the case of an unclean person slaughtering a common beast,⁸ [they say], the case of an unclean man slaughtering a common beast was unnecessary [to be taught] because [the correct view is that] common things kept in the cleanness proper to hallowed things are not considered hallowed.

All do not agree with Rabina's interpretation, because, according to the one version which ruled that only those qualified may slaughter, but not those unqualified, [they hold the principle that] the majority of those who slaughter are qualified;⁹ and according to the other version which ruled that only those who are known to be experienced may slaughter but not those who are not so known, [they say] the danger of being overcome by faintness [in slaughtering] is too remote to be apprehended.

Raba does not agree with Abaye's interpretation because of the objection which he raised.¹⁰

Abaye does not agree with Raba's interpretation because, in that other case¹¹ the heathen is not handling [the wine],¹² while in our case the Cuthean is handling [the beast].¹³

R. Ashi does not agree with either of these interpretations because he holds the view that the Cutheans were lion-proselytes.¹⁴

Abaye does not agree with R. Ashi's interpretation because he does not accept Raba's statement.¹⁵

The question, however, remains: Why does not Raba interpret the Mishnah in accordance with his own statement?¹⁵ — Raba's interpretation merely follows up the argument of Abaye¹⁶ but he himself does not accept it.

Our Rabbis taught: The slaughtering by a Cuthean is valid. This applies only where an Israelite was standing over him [at the time]; but if he [the Israelite] came and found that the Cuthean had already slaughtered, he cuts off an olive's bulk of the flesh and gives it to him; if he ate it, then we may eat of his slaughtering; if he did not, then we may not eat of his slaughtering. And so, too, if [the Israelite] found in the possession of a Cuthean

(1) It is assumed that a non-observant Jew (as defined) would slaughter according to ritual if a knife was prepared and given to him, but he himself would not take the trouble to prepare it.

(2) Which would invalidate the Shechitah, v. infra 15b.

(3) vyhja; the ritual method of slaughtering an animal.

(4) And even if they know the rules of Shechitah.

(5) The words 'not qualified', ihj nun iht throughout this page refer to those of whom it is not known whether they are able to recite the rules of Shechitah or not. If they are absolutely unqualified their slaughtering is invalid even after the act (Tosaf.).

(6) Whether they were overcome by faintness in slaughtering or not.

(7) That an unclean person may slaughter a consecrated beast.

(8) That is a common beast prepared under conditions proper to hallowed things.

(9) It is therefore unnecessary to examine the slaughterer. Lit., 'the majority of those who are found (engaged) at slaughtering'. V. Rashi on this statement, infra 22a.

(10) V. supra 3a.

(11) The statement quoted from A.Z. 61a. V. supra 3a.

(12) Therefore going in and out is considered sufficient supervision.

(13) Therefore going in and out is not sufficient.

(14) Who were driven to conversion through fear of lions, v. II Kings XVII 24-29, and were therefore considered non-Jews.

(15) Which was the basis of R. Ashi's interpretation. V. supra 3a.

(16) Who did not agree with Raba's ruling in regard to a non-observant Israelite, and consequently had to interpret the Mishnah as dealing with a Cuthean.

baskets of [slaughtered] birds, he cuts off the head of one of the birds and gives to him; if he ate it, then we may eat of his slaughtering; if he did not, then we may not eat of his slaughtering. Now Abaye emphasizes the first part of this statement, whereas Raba emphasizes the second part of the statement.¹ Abaye emphasizes the first part of the statement, [viz.] the reason [why the slaughtering of a Cuthean is valid is] that 'an Israelite was standing over him at the time', which implies that if the Israelite was merely going in and out it is not sufficient. Raba, on the other hand, emphasizes the second part of this statement, viz, the reason [why the prescribed test is necessary is] because 'he came and found that [the Cuthean] had slaughtered', which implies that if the Israelite was going in and out at the time it is in order.²

Now according to Abaye, is not the second clause difficult to explain?³ Abaye will tell you. A person going in and out can also be described as one who came and found that he had slaughtered. And according to Raba, is not the first clause difficult to explain?⁴ — Raba will say. A person going in and out is regarded as one who is standing over him.

'And so, too, if [the Israelite] found in the possession of a Cuthean baskets of slaughtered birds, he cuts off the head of one of the birds etc.'. Is this a sufficient test? Perhaps it was only this one bird that he slaughtered properly? — R. Manasseh said, (Mnemonic: putting a knife on rams.)⁵ This is a case where [the Israelite] put the basket under the lap of his garments [and took out a bird at random]. But perhaps the Cuthean had made a sign on the bird [by which he recognized it]? — R. Merharsheya said: It is a case where [the Israelite] has crushed the bird.⁶ But may it not be that the Cutheans maintain that birds do not require Shechitah according to the law of the Torah?⁷ — If you use this argument [you might ask:] Are the rules against pausing, pressing, thrusting, deflecting and tearing,⁸ specifically written [in the Torah]? What you must therefore admit, is that, since they have adopted these rules, they certainly observe them;⁹ so in our case, too, since they have adopted [Shechitah for birds], they certainly observe it.

Now, as to the observance or non-observance [by the Cutheans] of adopted unwritten customs, there are differences of opinion among Tannaim;¹⁰ for it has been taught: The unleavened bread of a Cuthean may be eaten [on Passover] and an Israelite fulfils his obligation by eating of it on the [first night of] Passover.¹¹ R. Eliezer says. It may not be eaten, because they are not versed in the details of the precepts like an Israelite. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says. Whatever precept the Cutheans have adopted, they are very strict in the observance thereof, more so than Israelites.

The Master said: 'The unleavened bread of a Cuthean may be eaten, and an Israelite fulfils his obligation by eating of it on the [first night of] Passover'. Is not this obvious?¹² — [No.] You might say that they are not versed in the regulation of careful supervision;¹³ he, therefore, teaches you [that an Israelite fulfils his obligation by eating of it.] ‘R. Eliezer says. It may not be eaten, because they are not versed in the details of the precepts like an Israelite’; for he is of the opinion that they are not versed in [the regulation of] supervision.¹⁴ ‘R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Whatever law the Cutheans have adopted, they are very strict in the observance thereof, more so than Israelites’. Is not this view the same as that of the first Tanna?¹⁵ — There is this difference between them, namely: A law which is written in the Torah but it is not known whether the Cutheans have adopted it. The first Tanna is of the opinion that, since it is a written law, even though we do not know whether they have adopted it, [we can rely upon them]. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds the view that only if they have adopted it can they be relied upon, but not otherwise. If this is so, why does R. Simeon b. Gamaliel say: ‘Whatever precept the Cutheans have adopted’? He should say: ‘If they have adopted it’.¹⁶ This, rather, is the real difference between them, namely: An unwritten law which has been adopted by them.¹⁷ The first Tanna is of the opinion that, since it is an unwritten law, even though they have adopted it, they do not [observe it]; R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds the view that, since they have adopted it, they observe it.

The [above] text [stated]:¹⁸ ‘Raba said: In the case of an Israelite apostate who eats carrion in order to satisfy his appetite, one prepares the knife and gives it to him, and then we may eat of his slaughtering’. What is the reason for this? — Because, since there is the possibility of permissible and forbidden [food]¹⁹ he would not leave what is permitted and eat what is forbidden. If so, [should we not argue in like manner] even where a knife is not prepared for him? — No, for he would not go to any trouble.²⁰

Said the Rabbis to Raba. These is [a Baraitha] taught that supports your view, viz: The leavened bread²¹ of transgressors²² is, immediately after the Passover,

(1) I.e., Abaye who supra 3a does not permit a Cuthean to slaughter in the first instance where the Israelite was merely going in and out, and Raba who does permit it, both find support for their respective views in the Baraitha cited.

(2) Without the need of a further test.

(3) For the second clause implies that if the Israelite were going in and out at the time, the slaughtering would be valid without the necessity of administering the olive's bulk of flesh.

(4) For the first clause implies that if the Israelite were not standing by, but merely going in and out, the slaughtering would not be valid unless the Cuthean ate of the flesh.

(5) A mnemonic of the three laws taught by R. Manasseh in this Tractate. ‘Putting’ refers to the law dealt with here: ‘where the Israelite put the basket . . . ‘Knife’ v. infra 31a. ‘Rams’ v. infra 51a.

(6) Thus obliterating any distinguishing sign that may have been on it.

(7) For the verse: Then thou shalt slaughter of thy herd and of thy flock . . . as I have commanded thee, Deut. XII 21, does not specifically mention birds.

(8) For the meaning of these five technical terms vide infra 9a and the notes.

(9) And we may rely upon them.

(10) Plural of Tanna.

(11) During the festival of Passover an Israelite must abstain from eating anything which is leavened, whereas on the first night of the festival there is an obligation to eat Mazzah, or unleavened bread, which has been carefully supervised and specially prepared for the festival, v. Pes. 400.

- (12) Since it is permitted to be eaten, surely he thereby fulfils his obligation!
- (13) And therefore one does not fulfil one's obligation by eating this Mazzah, even though it is unleavened.
- (14) I.e., to guard the dough against becoming leavened. Var. lec., they are not well versed in (what constitutes) leaven. V. Rashi.
- (15) For both Rabbis are of the opinion that it may be eaten.
- (16) The expression 'Whatever law' includes even unwritten laws; for if it refers to written laws only, then R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, controverting the decision of the first Tanna, who specifically deals with a written law, namely. Mazzah, should have said: 'If they have adopted it they are reliable'.
- (17) E.g. the law relating to Shechitah.
- (18) Supra p. 7.
- (19) For it is at his disposal to slaughter according to ritual.
- (20) To prepare the knife.
- (21) Heb. . נֶיֶם Hamez, leavened bread, or any other matter containing leavened substance.
- (22) Those who do not destroy all leavened bread before the passover, according to prescribed law (Exod. XII, 15), because of the loss it entails.

permitted [to be eaten], because they exchange it [for non-Jewish bread].¹ Now, it was thought, that the author of this Baraitha was R. Judah, who holds that leavened bread which has remained over Passover is forbidden by Biblical law,² and yet the Baraitha says: It is permitted because they exchange it; thus one can prove the principle that a person would not leave what is permitted and eat what is forbidden. Is this really so? Perhaps the author [of the Baraitha] is R. Simeon, who holds that leavened bread which has remained over Passover is forbidden only by Rabbinic law,² and therefore it is only in connection with Rabbinic laws that a lenient view is taken, but not in connection with Biblical laws?³ — Be it so, that the author is R. Simeon; but does [the Baraitha] say: Because I assume that they exchange it? It says: Because they exchange it,¹ .e, they certainly exchange it. It follows, therefore, that if in connection with Rabbinic laws [we say] a person would not leave what is permitted and eat what is forbidden, how much more so in connection with Biblical laws!⁴

Can we say that the following [Baraitha] supports Raba's view? [For it was taught:] 'All may slaughter, even a Cuthean, even an uncircumcised Israelite, even an Israelite apostate'. Now, what is meant by an uncircumcised Israelite? Shall I say it is one whose brothers have died as a result of circumcision? Surely such a one is a good Israelite!⁵ Clearly, then, it can only mean one who is opposed to the law of circumcision; and the Tanna is of the opinion that one who is opposed to one law is not regarded as one opposed to the whole Torah. Let us now read the last statement: 'Even an Israelite apostate'. What is meant by an Israelite apostate? If it means one who is opposed to one particular law, then it is identical with [our interpretation of] an uncircumcised Israelite'.⁶ It can only mean one who is opposed to this particular practice [Shechitah, and yet he is permitted to slaughter,] thus supporting Raba's view! — It is not so. Indeed, it might be said that one who is opposed to this particular practice [Shechitah] may not [slaughter], because since he constantly disregards it⁷ he deems it legitimate;⁸ but [by 'Israelite apostate is meant] one who is an apostate in respect of idolatry, and the view expressed is in accordance with the view of R. 'Anan, who said in the name of Samuel: In the case of an Israelite who is an apostate in respect of idolatry, we may eat of his slaughtering.

The text [above stated]: ‘R. ‘Anan said in the name of Samuel, ‘In the case of an Israelite apostate in respect of idolatry, we may eat of his slaughtering’; for so we find it written concerning Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, that he partook of the feast of Ahab,⁹ as it is written: And Ahab slaughtered sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that were with him, and persuaded him to go up with him to Ramoth-gilead.¹⁰

But is it not possible that Ahab slaughtered but Jehoshaphat did not eat? — It reads: And he persuaded him. Perhaps he persuaded him with words? — Persuasion [in Scripture] never means with words. Is this so? Is it not written: If thy brother persuade thee?¹¹ — This verse also means, by eating and drinking. But is it not written: And thou didst persuade Me to destroy him without cause?¹² With reference to the Most High it is different.¹³

But is it not possible that he drank [wine] and did not eat [meat]? — But why distinguish and say that drinking [the wine is permitted]? Because you hold the view that one who is an apostate in respect of idolatry is not regarded as opposed to the whole Torah. The same then holds good with regard to eating [meat], for one that is an apostate in respect of idolatry is not regarded as opposed to the whole Torah? — How can you compare the two! With regard to drinking, the only ground for its prohibition is the law concerning the ordinary wine of gentiles,¹⁴ and at that period¹⁵ the ordinary wine of gentiles was not prohibited; but with regard to eating, I maintain that one that is an apostate in respect of idolatry is regarded as opposed to the whole Torah. — If you wish I can answer: It is not the custom of kings to drink without eating; and if you wish I can answer: It reads: And he slaughtered . . . and persuaded him,¹⁶ which suggests: How did he persuade him? By giving him to eat of what he had slaughtered.

But perhaps it was Obadiah¹⁷ who slaughtered the animals! — It reads: In abundance;¹⁶ Obadiah could not have managed it all by himself.

Perhaps the seven thousand [righteous men] slaughtered, for it is written: Yet will I leave seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal!¹⁸ — These were in hiding because of Jezebel. But perhaps the servants of Ahab were righteous! — You cannot assume such a thing, for it is written: If a ruler hearkeneth to falsehood, all his servants are wicked.¹⁹ But perhaps the servants of Jehoshaphat too were not righteous; therefore, that which was slaughtered by Ahab's men was eaten by Jehoshaphat's men, but that which was slaughtered by Obadiah was eaten by Jehoshaphat! — You cannot assume such a thing, for ‘if a ruler hearkeneth to falsehood all his servants are wicked’, it follows that if a ruler hearkeneth to the truth all his servants are righteous. But perhaps that which was slaughtered by Ahab's servants was eaten by Ahab and his men, but that which was slaughtered by Jehoshaphat's servants was eaten by Jehoshaphat and his men! —

(1) And the leavened bread of non-Jews which remained over Passover is permitted to be eaten immediately after Passover, v. Pes. 28a. However, the transgressor himself, who made the exchange, may not eat it; for otherwise, the law forbidding any benefit to be derived from the Hamez of a Jew which has remained over Passover can be circumvented by exchanging it for the Hamez of non-Jews.

- (2) V. Pes. 28aff for the dispute between R. Judah and R. Simeon.
- (3) E.g, the law of nebelah, Deut. XIV, 21.
- (4) For a prohibition specifically enacted in the Torah would be more strictly observed by the Cutheans than a Rabbinic law. The result is that Raba's view is supported by the Baraita quoted whether the author of it is R. Judah or R. Simeon.
- (5) One whose two brothers have died because of circumcision is not to be circumcised because of the danger to his life; he is, however, considered a good Jew.
- (6) Which was interpreted to mean one who is opposed to the law of circumcision.
- (7) Lit., 'to trample it', hence to treat with contempt.
- (8) Therefore one cannot apply to him the principle: 'He would not leave what is permitted and eat what is forbidden', for to him an animal which has not been slaughtered according to ritual is still permitted.
- (9) Ahab was an apostate in respect of idolatry and yet Jehoshaphat ate of his slaughtering.
- (10) II Chron. XVIII, 2.
- (11) Deut. XIII, 7.
- (12) Job II, 3.
- (13) In which case persuasion by eating and drinking is inapplicable.
- (14) The ordinary wine of gentiles, about which it is not known whether it has been used for idolatrous purposes or not, was prohibited by the disciples of Shammai and Hillel in the first century C.E.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 5a

Jehoshaphat would not have kept himself aloof.¹ How do you know this? Shall I say because it is written: I am as thou art, my people as thy people?² If so, can [the following words]. 'My horses as thy horses', bear such a meaning?³ You must therefore say that the meaning of the last phrase is: Whatever [burden] shall be on thy horses shall be on my horses;⁴ then the first phrase too might mean: Whatever [burden] shall be upon thyself and upon thy men shall be upon myself and upon my men! — Rather it⁵ is derived from this verse: Now the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat king of Judah sat each on his throne, arrayed in their robes, in a threshing floor, at the entrance of the gate of Samaria.⁶ Now, what is meant by 'threshing-floor'? Shall I say it is to be taken literally? But surely the entrance of the gate of Samaria was not a threshing-floor! It can only mean [that they sat together] as in the 'threshing floor' [the court room],⁷ for we learnt: The Sanhedrin sat in the form of a semi-circular threshing-floor so that they might see one another.⁸

Can we say that the following supports his [R. 'Anan's] view? It is written: And the ravens brought him⁹ bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening,¹⁰ and Rab Judah explained this in the name of Rab that [the ravens brought the flesh] from Ahab's slaughterers!¹¹ — Being a Divine command it is different.¹² What is meant by 'the ravens' [Orebim]? — Rabina said: It means actually ravens. R. Ada b. Manyomi, however, suggested to him: May it not mean two men whose names were Oreb, as we find it written: And they slew Oreb at the rock of Oreb, and Zeeb?¹³ — He replied. Could it have happened that both were named Oreb? But perhaps they were so named after the town in which they lived? Just as it is written: And the Arameans had gone out in bands and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid.¹⁴ Now the difficulty was pointed out; [first] the verse refers to this girl as a maid [na'arah]¹⁵ and then as little [ketannah],¹⁶ and R. Pedath explained this to mean a little girl from the town of Na'aran!¹⁷ — If so, the verse should read Orebiim.¹⁸

Can we say that the following supports his [R. 'Anan's] view? [For it was taught:] All may slaughter, even a Cuthean, even an uncircumcised Israelite, even an Israelite apostate.¹⁹ Now, what is meant by an uncircumcised Israelite? Shall I say, it is one whose brothers have died as a result of circumcision? Surely such a one is a good Israelite! Clearly, then, it can only mean one who is opposed to the law of circumcision. Let us now read the last statement: 'Even an Israelite apostate'. What is meant by an Israelite apostate? Shall I say it means one who is opposed to one particular law, then is not this the same as [the case of] an uncircumcised Israelite? Hence it can only mean one who is an apostate in respect of idolatry [and yet he may slaughter] , thus supporting R. 'Anan's view! — No. I 'might still maintain that an apostate in respect of idolatry may not [slaughter], for it has been said,²⁰ Grave is idolatry in that he who denies it is as if he accepts the whole Torah;²¹ and by 'Israelite apostate' is meant one who is opposed to this particular practice [of shechitah]; [and yet such a one may slaughter] in accordance with Raba's view.²²

An objection was raised: [It is written]. Of you,²³ but not all of you,²⁴ thus excluding an apostate. Of you, that is, among you [Israelites] does this distinction apply but not among other nations.²⁵ 'Of the cattle' includes persons who are [devoid of merit] like animals; hence [the Rabbis] have declared: One should accept sacrifices from the transgressors in Israel, so that they may be inclined to repent, but not from an Israelite apostate, or from one who offers a wine libation [to idols], or from one who profanes the Sabbath publicly. Now this [Baraitha] is self-contradictory. It says. 'Of you, but not all of you, thus excluding an apostate'; and then it says: 'One may accept sacrifices from the transgressors in Israel'! — This is no difficulty. The former statement refers to one who is opposed to the whole Torah,²⁶ while the latter statement refers to one who is opposed to one particular law. Consider now the last statement of the Baraitha: 'But not from an Israelite apostate, or from one who offers a wine libation [to idols], or from one who profanes the Sabbath publicly'. What is meant by apostate in this statement? If it means one who is opposed to the whole Torah, then it is identical with the first statement;²⁷ and if it means one who is opposed to one particular law, then it is inconsistent with the middle statement. Of necessity this must be the meaning of the last statement: But not from an Israelite apostate for offering a wine libation [to idols] or for profaning the Sabbath publicly. This proves that one who is an apostate in respect of idolatry is regarded as opposed to the whole Torah; consequently R. 'Anan's opinion is refuted. This is a conclusive refutation.

But is this rule²⁸ derived from the above? Surely it is derived from the following statement, which was taught:²⁹

(1) By having his own men slaughter for him; for this would give rise to mistrust in the mind of Ahab. Nevertheless Jehoshaphat would not have eaten of Ahab's slaughtering had he been in doubt as to Ahab's observance of the law of Shechitah.

- (2) I Kings XXII, 4. This verse suggests that the followers of the one king were as reliable in religious matters as the followers of the other king.
- (3) It is surely impossible for these words to have any religious significance.
- (4) Meaning: We shall bear the burden equally in the battle.
- (5) That Jehoshaphat regarded Ahab as reliable in religious matters even though the latter served idols.
- (6) I Kings XXII, 20.
- (7) I.e., just as among the Sanhedrin there was trust and friendship between one another so also between Jehoshaphat and Ahab.
- (8) V. Sanh. 36b (Sonc. ed.) p. 230, n. 10.
- (9) I.e., Elijah.
- (10) I Kings XVII, 6.
- (11) Thus proving that the meat slaughtered by Ahab's men, though idolaters, was permitted.
- (12) It may have been forbidden food, but God permitted it on that occasion. There is therefore no support from this verse for R. 'Anan's view.
- (13) Judg. VII, 25, hence we find a person named Oreb,

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 5b

Of the common people¹ excludes an apostate.² R. Simon b. Jose said in the name of R. Simeon: The verse: And doeth through error any of the things which the Lord his God hath commanded not to be done, and is guilty,³ implies that only he who repents when he becomes conscious of his sin brings a sacrifice⁴ for his error, but he who does not repent on becoming conscious of his sin does not bring a sacrifice for his error. And it was asked: What practical difference is there between them?⁵ And R. Hamnuna replied: The difference between them lies in the case of one who, being an apostate in respect of the eating of forbidden fat, brings a sacrifice for having eaten blood [in error]⁶ — [The rule is derived from both passages], but one⁷ speaks of the sin-offering, while the other of the burnt offering;⁸ and both are required. For if it were taught only in respect of a sin-offering, it would have been argued that the reason why he [the apostate] is precluded is because a sin-offering is brought for an atonement,⁹ but a burnt-offering, being in the nature of a gift [to the Lord], we might say should be accepted from him. And on the other hand, if it were taught only in respect of a burnt-offering, it would have been argued that the reason why he is precluded is because there is no obligation on his part to offer it, but a sin-offering, being obligatory, we might say should be accepted from him. [Therefore both statements] are required.

But is it a general rule that whenever Scripture uses ‘cattle’¹⁰ it implies contempt? But is it not written: Man and cattle. Thou preservest, O Lord,¹¹ and Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: This verse refers to those who are wise in understanding and conduct themselves humbly like cattle? — There is this difference; in the latter verse it reads: ‘Man and cattle’, but in our text it says, cattle by itself. But is it a general rule that whenever Scripture uses ‘Man and cattle’ it implies merit? But is it not written: And I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man and with the seed of cattle?¹² — In this latter case Scripture clearly distinguishes between the two, referring to the seed of man separately and to the seed of cattle separately.

(Mnemonic: Niklaf[P]).¹³ R. Hanan reported in the name of R. Jacob b. Idi, who reported in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, who reported in the name of Bar Kappara, as follows: R. Gamaliel and his Court took a vote concerning the slaughtering by a Cuthean, and declared it invalid. Thereupon R. Zera suggested to R. Jacob b. Idi: May it not be that my Master heard this ruling only in the case where no Israelite was standing over him? — He retorted: This student is as one who has never studied the law!¹⁴ Where no Israelite was standing over him is it necessary to rule [that it is invalid]. Now, the question arises: Did R. Zera accept [the retort]¹⁵ or not? — Come and hear: R. Nahman b. Isaac reported in the name of R. Assi as follows: I saw R. Johanan eating the flesh of an animal slaughtered by a Cuthean. Even R. Assi ate of the flesh of an animal slaughtered by a Cuthean. Now R. Zera was astonished at this. Could it be that they¹⁶ had not heard of this ruling [of the Court of R. Gamaliel], but had they heard of it they would have abided by it; or did they know of it but did not accept it? In the end R. Zera came to the conclusion: It is reasonable to suppose that they knew of it but did not accept it; for if you were to say that they had not heard of it, but had they known of it they would have accepted it, it is difficult [to understand] how it should come about that such righteous men should eat something forbidden. If the Holy One, Blessed be He, would not permit the beast of the righteous to sin in error.¹⁷ how much less the righteous themselves!

(1) Lev. IV, 27. The context of this verse is: And if anyone of the common people sinned through error . . . 28. Then he shall bring for his offering a goat.

(2) From whom no sin-offering may be accepted.

(3) Lev. IV, 22.

(4) I.e., a sin-offering.

(5) I.e., between the first Tanna and R. Simeon. According to either view, one who is rebellious or opposed to the laws of the Torah is precluded from offering a sacrifice.

(6) According to the first Tanna his sacrifice is not accepted because he is an apostate, whereas according to R. Simeon's view it is, for he is not an apostate in respect of that particular law for which he is bringing his sacrifice. It is clear, however, that the rule precluding an apostate from offering sacrifices is derived from the verse quoted in this Baraita and not from the verse quoted above ‘Of you’.

(7) I.e., the second Baraita which derived the rule from the phrase ‘of the common people’.

(8) A sin-offering was an obligatory sacrifice to be brought whenever certain sins were committed; a burnt-offering was brought voluntarily as a gift to the Lord.

(9) And an apostate is not worthy of atonement since he would sin again and again.

(10) The Gemara now deals with the statement quoted above: 'Of the cattle' includes such persons who are devoid of merit like animals.

(11) Ps. XXXVI, 7.

(12) Jer. XXXI, 27. V. Sot. 22a. The seed of man is explained as referring to the righteous, and the seed of cattle as referring to the ignorant common people.

(13) Lit., 'peeled'. A mnemonic of the characteristic letters of the respective Rabbis in whose names the statement is reported. N = Hanan, K = Jakob, L = Levi, FP = Kappara.

(14) Aliter: This student thinks that men do not study the law.

(15) Of R. Jacob b. Idi (that it is forbidden to eat of the Cuthean's slaughtering even if an Israelite stands over him) and abide by it.

(16) R. Johanan and R. Assi.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 6a

Now, if you say that R. Zera did not accept [the retort of R. Jacob b. Idi], then he could have answered his query thus: In the one case there was an Israelite standing over [the Cuthean]¹ but in the other case there was not.² You must therefore say that R. Zera accepted [the retort]. It stands proved.

For what reason did the Rabbis proscribe them? — Because of the following incident. R. Simeon b. Eleazar was sent by R. Meir to fetch some wine from among the Cutheans. He was met by a certain old man who said to him. Put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite.³ Whereupon R. Simeon b. Eleazar returned and reported the matter to R. Meir who thereupon proscribed them. Why? — R. Nahman b. Isaac explained: Because they⁴ found a figure of a dove on the top of Mount Gerizim and they worshipped it;⁵ R. Meir therefore, consistent with his principle that the minority must be taken into consideration,⁶ proscribed all Cutheans⁷ because of this minority, and R. Gamaliel and his Court also held this principle.

What is the plain meaning of the above quoted text? — It refers to a pupil sitting before his master. For R. Hiyya taught: When thou sittest to eat with a ruler, consider well him that is before thee. And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to an appetite.⁸ If the pupil knows that the master is capable of answering the question, then he may ask it; otherwise . . . Consider well him that is before thee. And put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite, and leave him.⁹

R. Isaac b. Joseph was sent by R. Abbahu to fetch some wine from among the Cutheans. He was met by a certain old man who said to him: 'There are none here that observe the Torah'. R. Isaac went and reported the matter to R. Abbahu who reported it to R. Ammi and R. Assi; the latter forthwith¹⁰ declared the Cutheans to be absolute heathens. In what respect [were they declared absolute heathens]? If in respect of their slaughtering [that it is invalid] and in respect of their wine [that it is] idolatrous, had not the Rabbis proscribed them [in these matters] from that [former incident]?¹¹ — The Rabbis had previously proscribed them but their decree was not accepted; R. Ammi and R. Assi came now and proscribed them and their decree was accepted.¹²

What was meant by declaring them absolute heathens? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: It meant that they have no longer the power to renounce or to transfer ownership.¹³ For it has been taught:¹⁴ An Israelite apostate who publicly¹⁵ observes the Sabbath may renounce and transfer his ownership, but if he does not observe the Sabbath publicly he may not renounce and transfer his ownership, because the Rabbis said: An Israelite may transfer or renounce his ownership, whereas with a heathen this can only be done by renting [his property].¹⁶ In what way [is ownership renounced]? One [Israelite] can say to another [Israelite]. ‘My ownership is acquired by you’, or, ‘My ownership is renounced in your favour’, and the latter has thereby acquired [the property] without the necessity of a formal acquisition.¹⁷

R. Zera and R. Assi happened to come to the inn of Yai. They were served with roasted eggs beaten up in wine. R. Zera did not eat it; R. Assi did. R. Zera asked R. Assi, ‘Master, are you not concerned about the admixture of demai’?¹⁸ He replied: ‘I did not think of it’. Can it be, thought R. Zera, that the Rabbis have prohibited demai in a mixed state and that it should come about that R. Assi should eat prohibited food? Surely, if the Holy One, Blessed be He, would not permit the beast of the righteous to sin in error, how much less the righteous themselves! R. Zera thereupon went out, looked into the matter and found [the law].¹⁹ For it was taught:²⁰ If one buys wine in order to pour it into muries²¹ or into alontith,²² or beans to make into grist, or lentils to make into groats, he must [tithe them], if they are demai;²³ it is needless to say so if they were certainly untithed. The mixtures themselves,²⁴ however, may be eaten [without tithing], because they are in a mixed state.

But did the Rabbis, then, not prohibit demai in a mixed state? Has it not been taught: If a man gives to his neighbour's wife²⁵ dough to be baked, or a dish to be cooked, [and also provides her with leaven and spices,] he need have no fear that the leaven and the spices used are Seventh Year produce or are untithed,²⁶ if, however, he said to her, ‘Make it with your own [ingredients]’, he must suspect that the leaven and spices used are Seventh Year produce or untithed?²⁷ — This last case is different for this reason: since he said to her, ‘Make it with your own [ingredients]’, it is as though he actually mixed it himself.²⁸ Rafram said: It is different with leaven and spices, since they are used primarily for seasoning, and seasoning never loses its distinctiveness.²⁹

But do we not suspect an exchange?³⁰ Have we not learnt:³¹ If a man gives to his mother-in-law [dough to be baked], he must tithe what he gives to her and what he takes from her,³² because she is suspected of changing it if it is spoilt? — In this case the reason [for her changing it] is added, viz., R. Judah says. Because she desires the welfare of her daughter and feels shamed for her son-in-law.³³ [

- (11) R. Meir had prohibited their wine and R. Gamaliel and his Court their slaughtering.
- (12) It is not to be inferred that R. Ammi and R. Assi were greater than the earlier Rabbis. Rashi explains that in the days of these earlier Rabbis there was much intercourse with the Cutheans and it would have been a hardship for the people to have accepted their decree, while in the days of R. Ammi and R. Assi it was possible to enforce the restrictions.
- (13) It was a Rabbinic institution for each of the residents of a block of tenements to which was attached a common courtyard to contribute before the Sabbath a portion of food towards a common dish, the food being then deposited in one of the tenements. By this act all the tenements were regarded as one common dwelling, and it was thus permitted to carry objects on the Sabbath from one tenement to another and across the courtyard. This is known as urhmj hcurhg. If a resident forgot to contribute his portion, he had the remedy of renouncing on the Sabbath the ownership of his tenement in favour of the other residents. Such a course was only open to a Jew.

- (32) For not only must he abstain from eating demai himself but he must avoid causing others to eat it.
- (33) Normally a person is not suspected of exchanging, for, in the absence of any justifying circumstances, that would constitute stealing. A mother-in-law might well be tempted to make the exchange for the reason given by R. Judah.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 6b

In all other cases, then, do we not suspect [an exchange]? Have we not learnt: If a man gives to his landlady [dough to be baked], he must tithe what he gives to her and what he takes from her, because she is suspected of changing it?¹ — In this case, too, she justifies herself by saying. Let the young student rather eat the fresh and I will eat the stale.²

But [otherwise], do we not suspect an exchange? Surely it has been taught: The wife of a haber³ may assist the wife of an 'am ha-arez³ in grinding corn only when she⁴ is in a state of uncleanness,⁵ but not when she is in a clean state.⁶ R. Simeon b. Eleazar says. Even when she is in a state of uncleanness she may not assist in grinding, because the other would offer her some corn to eat. Now, if it is said that the wife of an 'am ha-arez is ready to steal [from her husband],⁷ surely she is to be suspected of making an exchange! — In this case, too, she justifies herself by saying. The ox has a right to eat of what he threshes.

R. Joshua b. Zeruz, the son of R. Meir's father-in-law, testified before Rabbi that R. Meir ate a leaf of a vegetable in Bethshean⁸ [without tithing it]; on this testimony, therefore, Rabbi permitted the entire territory of Bethshean.⁹ Thereupon his brothers and other members of his father's family combined to protest, saying: The place which was regarded as subject to tithes by your parents and ancestors will you regard as free? Rabbi, thereupon, expounded to them the following verse: And he [Hezekiah] broke in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made; for unto those days the children of Israel did offer to it; and it was called Nehushtan.¹⁰ Now, is it at all likely that Asa did not destroy it? Or that Jehoshaphat did not destroy it? Surely Asa and Jehoshaphat destroyed every form of idolatry in the world!

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 7a

It must therefore be that his ancestors left something undone whereby he [Hezekiah] might distinguish himself; so in my case, my ancestors left room for me to distinguish myself.

From this is to be learnt that whenever a scholar reports a decision [however strange it may sound], he should not be made to move [mezihin] from his tradition. Others say. He should not be rejected [maznihin]. And others say: He should not be regarded as arrogant [mazhihin]. Those who say. He should not be made to move from his tradition, base it on the verse. And the breastplate be not moved [yizzah] from the ephod.¹ Those who say: He should not be rejected, base it on the verse: For the Lord will not reject [yiznah] for ever.² And those who say. He should not be regarded as arrogant, base it on the following:³ For we learnt: When the arrogant increased, disputes increased in Israel.⁴

To this, Judah, son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi, demurred: Is there anyone who holds the view that Bethshean was not part of Palestine? Is it not written: And Manasseh did not drive out the inhabitants of Bethshean and its towns, nor of Taanach and its towns?⁵ — [When he raised his objection] there must have escaped his attention the statement of R. Simeon b. Eliakim who reported R. Eleazar b. Pedath in the name of R. Eleazar b. Shammu'a [as follows]: Many cities which were conquered by the Israelites who came up from Egypt⁶ were not re-conquered by those who came up from Babylon,⁷ for he held the view that the consecration of the Holy land on the first occasion [by Joshua] consecrated it for the time being but not for the future. They therefore did not annex these cities in order that the poor might have sustenance therefrom in the Seventh Year.⁸

R. Jeremiah said to R. Zera: But R. Meir ate a mere leaf [of a vegetable]⁹ — He replied: He ate it from a bundle, and we have learnt: Vegetables which are usually tied in bundles [become due for tithing] on being tied up.¹⁰

But perhaps R. Meir forgot [to tithe it]? — [This cannot be.] Surely, if the Holy One, Blessed be He, would not permit the beast of the righteous to sin in error, how much less the righteous themselves! But perhaps he set aside from other produce the tithe due for this [Vegetable]! — One would not suspect a haber of setting aside the dues for the produce that is before us out of produce that is not before us.¹¹ But perhaps he had in mind to set aside the tithe from one end of the bundle, whilst he ate from the other end! — He replied: See how great a man testified concerning this!¹²

What was the incident about the beast of the righteous? — Once, R. Phinehas b. Jair was on his way to redeem captives, and came to the river Ginnai. 'O Ginnai', said he, 'divide thy waters for me, that I may pass through thee'. It replied. 'Thou art about to do the will of thy Maker; I, too, am doing the will of my Maker.¹³ Thou mayest or mayest not accomplish thy purpose;¹⁴ I am sure of accomplishing mine'. He said: 'If thou wilt not divide thyself, I will decree that no waters ever pass through thee'. It, thereupon, divided itself for him. There was also present a certain man who was carrying wheat for the Passover, and so R. Phinehas once again addressed the river: 'Divide thyself for this man, too, for he is engaged in a religious duty'. It, thereupon, divided itself for him too. There was also an Arab who had joined them [on the journey], and so R. Phinehas once again addressed the river, 'Divide thyself for this one, too, that he may not say. "Is this the treatment of a fellow traveller?"' It, thereupon, divided itself for him too.

R. Joseph exclaimed: How great is this man! Greater than Moses and the sixty myriads of Israel! For the latter [the sea divided itself] but once, whilst for the former thrice! May it not be, however, for the former also only once?¹⁵ — Rather say. As great as Moses and the sixty myriads of Israel!

R. Phinehas happened to come to a certain inn. They placed barley before his ass, but it would not eat.

- (7) At the second settlement in Palestine under Ezra. The Holy land had to be consecrated a second time by the returning exiles, and therefore those towns which were not included in the re-consecration were not part of Palestine. Bethshean was one of the cities not included.
- (8) The law of the Seventh Year did not apply to land outside Palestine; therefore, certain towns near the boundary of Palestine were purposely not included in the re-consecration of the land so that these might be cultivated even in the seventh year.
- (9) This point destroys the basis of the preceding argument, for the eating of a snack, such as one leaf of a vegetable, is permitted even in Palestine without first tithing it. There is, therefore, no proof that Bethshean was regarded as being outside Palestine.
- (10) And once the duty of tithing has arisen one may not eat even a snack. V. Ma'as. I, 5.
- (11) Lit., 'from that which is not brought near'. For there is a danger that the produce which is not before us, and upon which he relies, may have been destroyed at the time that he purports to set it aside as tithe, and he would therefore be eating untithed produce.
- (12) R. Joshua b. Zeruz stated categorically that R. Meir did not tithe the vegetable, and a Rabbi of such eminence could certainly be relied upon in his testimony.
- (13) By divine command all rivers flow to the sea. V. Eccl. I, 7.
- (14) He may not succeed in redeeming the captives.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 7b

It was sifted, but the ass would not eat it. It was carefully picked; still the ass would not eat it. 'Perhaps', suggested R. Phinehas, 'it is not tithed'? It was at once tithed, and the ass ate it. He, thereupon, exclaimed, 'This poor creature is about to do the will of the Creator, and you would feed it with untithed produce'!

But was it at all necessary [to be tithed]? Have we not learnt: He who buys [corn from an 'am ha-ares] for sowing or for feeding animals, or flour for [preparing] hides, or oil for the lamp or for oiling vessels, need not tithe it because of demai?¹ — Surely there has been reported on this [Mishnah] the dictum of R. Johanan that this is so only if one bought the corn specifically for animals; but if one bought it originally for human consumption and later decided to give it to animals, it must be tithed!² And so it has been taught in a Baraitha, viz., He who buys fruit in the market for eating and decides later to use it for animals, may not give it either to his own animal or to his neighbour's animal without first tithing it.

When Rabbi heard of the arrival of R. Phinehas, he went out to meet him. 'Will you please dine with me?' asked Rabbi. 'Certainly', he answered. Rabbi's face at once brightened with joy;³ whereupon R. Phinehas said: 'You imagine that I am forbidden by vow from deriving any benefit from an Israelite. Oh, no. The people of Israel are holy. Yet there are some who desire [to benefit others] but have not the means; whilst others have the means but have not the desire,⁴ and it is written: Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainties; for as one that hath reckoned within himself, so is he: Eat and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.⁵ But you have the desire and also the means. At present, however, I am in a hurry for I am engaged on a religious duty; but on my return. I will come and visit you'. When he arrived, he happened to enter by a gate near which were some white mules. At this he exclaimed: 'The angel of death is in this house! Shall I then dine here?' When Rabbi heard of this, he went out to meet him. 'I shall sell the mules', said Rabbi. R. Phinehas replied: 'Thou shalt not put a stumbling block before the blind'.⁶ 'I shall abandon them'. 'You would be spreading danger'. 'I shall hamstring them'. 'You would be causing suffering to the animals'. 'I shall kill them'. 'There is the prohibition against wanton destruction'.⁷ Rabbi was thus pressing him persistently, when there rose up a mountain between them.

Then Rabbi wept and said. 'If this is [the power of the righteous] in their lifetime, how great must it be after their death!' For R. Hanina b. Hama asserted: The righteous are more powerful after death than in life, for it is written. And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha; and as soon as the man touched the bones of Elisha, he revived and stood up on his feet.⁸ Said R. Papa to Abaye: Perhaps [the restoration to life was] to fulfil Elijah's blessing, as it is written: Let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me!⁹ — He replied: If so, why has it been taught: He stood upon his feet but walked not to his home?¹⁰ Wherein, then, was Elijah's blessing fulfilled? — As R. Johanan has said: He healed the leprosy of Naaman,¹¹ leprosy being the equivalent of death, as it is written: Let her not, I pray, be as one dead.¹²

R. Joshua b. Levi said: Why are they [mules] called yemim?¹³ — Because they cast fear [emah]¹⁴ upon men. For R. Hanina has said: 'No one has ever consulted me for a case of a wound from a white mule and has recovered'. But do we not see people recovering from it? — 'I mean, never has the wound healed'. But do we not see cases where the wound has healed? — 'I am referring to [a wound inflicted by] a white-legged mule'.

There is none else beside Him:¹⁵ R. Hanina said: Even sorcery.¹⁶ A woman once attempted to cast a spell over R. Hanina.¹⁷ He said to her, 'Try as you will, you will not succeed in your attempts, for it is written: There is none else beside Him'. Has not, however, R. Johanan declared: Why is sorcery called keshafim? Because it overrules [the decree of] the heavenly council?¹⁸ — R. Hanina was in a different category, owing to his abundant merit.¹⁹ R. Hanina further said: No man bruises his finger here on earth unless it was so decreed against him in heaven, for it is written: It is of the Lord that a man's goings are established.²⁰ How then can man look to his way?²¹

R. Eleazar said: The blood of a bruise atones like the blood of a burnt-offering. Raba added: It is only the blood of a second bruising of the thumb of the right hand that atones, and then only if it happened to one who was about to do a religious act.

It is related of R. Phinehas b. Jair that never in his life did he say grace over²² a piece of bread which was not his own;²³ and furthermore, that from the day he reached years of discretion he derived no benefit from his father's table.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 8a

R. Zera said in the name of Samuel: If one made a knife red-hot and slaughtered with it, the slaughtering is valid, because [the effect of] the sharp edge precedes [the effect of] the heat.¹ But, what about the sides [of the knife]?² — The cut opens wide.³

The following question was raised: If one made a spit red-hot and struck with it, is the resulting wound⁴ to be regarded as a boil⁵ or as a burning?⁶ But what is the difference between the two?⁷ Even as it has been taught: A boil and a burning, each is declared unclean within seven days by one of two symptoms: by white hair, or spreading.⁸ Why, then, did the Torah deal with them separately? To teach you that they cannot unite one with the other.⁹ And we have learnt: What is a boil, and what is a burning? A wound caused by wood, or stone, or olive-peat, or the hot springs of Tiberias, or any wound that is not caused by fire, including a wound caused by lead just taken from the mine, is a boil. And what is a burning? A burn caused by a live coal, or hot ashes, or boiling lime, or boiling gypsum, or any burn that is caused by fire, including a burn caused by water heated by fire, is a burning. And it was further taught: In the case of [a wound which is both] a boil and a burning, if the boil came first then the subsequent burning annuls the boil [and it is considered a burn]; but if the burning came first then the subsequent boil annuls the burn [and it is considered a boil]. Now the circumstances of our case are as follows: A man had a boil of the size of half a bean,¹⁰ and was struck close to it with a red-hot spit, another wound of the size of half a bean resulting, [making the whole wound the size of a whole bean]. In such a case how [are we to consider the resulting wound]? Did the force of the blow take effect first, and the burn caused by the glowing heat that followed annul the effect of the blow, so that the whole wound is composed of a boil and a burning [each to the extent of half a bean] which do not unite [to make him unclean]? Or did the glowing heat take effect first, and the force of the blow that followed annul the effect of the glowing heat, and consequently the whole wound is composed of two boils [each to the extent of half a bean] which unite [to make him unclean]? Come and hear: R. Zera said in the name of Samuel: If one made a knife red-hot and slaughtered with it, the slaughtering is valid, because the effect of the sharp edge precedes the effect of the heat. It thus proves that the force of the blow precedes [the glowing heat]! — No; in the case of a sharp edge it is different.¹¹

Come and hear: If one was struck with a red-hot spit, the resulting wound is regarded as a ‘burning by fire’.¹² It thus proves that the force of the blow precedes [the glowing heat]. — No; here too, the wound was made by a thrust with the point, which is a sharp edge.¹³

R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: A knife which has been used in connection with idolatrous services¹⁴ may be used for slaughtering, but it may not be used for cutting up meat — ‘It may be used for slaughtering’, for thereby one impairs [the value];¹⁵ ‘but it may not be used for cutting up meat’, for thereby one enhances [the value].¹⁶ Raba remarked: There are times when one may not slaughter with it, to wit, if the animal is at the point of death;¹⁷ and there are times when one may cut up meat with it, to wit, if the meat was in large pieces intended for a present.¹⁸

But should not the prohibition thereof be considered on account of the forbidden fat?¹⁹

(1) So that the throat is cut and not burnt.

(2) They would scorch the organs of the throat before the requisite amount had been cut through, and then the slightest scorching of the gullet would invalidate the slaughtering.

(3) Lit., ‘the place (or house) of slaughtering, i.e., the cut. The two sides of the cut spring apart as soon as the throat, which has been stretched taut, has been cut; therefore only the sharp edge touches the throat, but not the sides of the knife.

(4) Which turned into leprosy.

(5) Heb. ihj a V. Lev. XIII, 18.

(6) Heb. vufn V. Ibid. 24.

(7) I.e., in what case is it of consequence whether the wound is regarded as a boil or a burn. The text proceeds to discuss the law as to boils and burns and provides an illustration of such a case.

(8) The appearance of white hair ill the wound, and the wound spreading further on the skin, are the symptoms, in cases of a burning or a boil, by which one is declared unclean as a leper. V. Lev. XIII, 18-28. Furthermore, if these wounds remained stationary for seven days they are declared clean, whereas with other leprous wounds it is necessary to keep them under observation for a further seven days. V. Lev. XIII, 5.

(9) The minimum size of a leprous wound to be declared unclean is that of a bean. Leprous wounds of different classes cannot unite; e.g., a boil the size of half a bean next to a burning also the size of half a bean cannot unite to form together a leprous wound the size of a whole bean and make one unclean as a leper.

(10) This would not make him unclean as a leper.

(11) The sharp edge of a knife, being thin and pointed, cannot contain great heat; therefore only in such cases can it be said that the heat follows the blow, but not elsewhere.

(12) V. Lev. XIII, 24.

(13) And the case of a sharp edge is different, v. n. 1 .

(14) It is forbidden to derive any benefit or advantage from idolatry or from that which is connected with idolatry.

(15) A living animal is more useful and of more value than a slaughtered one; for, living, it may be used for breeding, for ploughing, and for food, but slaughtered, it has only its food value.

(16) For after slaughtering it becomes necessary to cut up the meat.

(17) By slaughtering an animal which is at the point of death one derives a gain, for otherwise it would have died and become carrion (which may not be eaten).

(18) In which case it has very little value if cut up in small pieces.

(19) Surely the knife should be forbidden to be used even for cutting up meat on account of the forbidden fat of carrion that it has absorbed in the past. This forbidden fat would now be imparted into the meat.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 8b

— It was a new [knife]. If new, [it should not be prohibited at all, since] it is merely an appurtenance for the worship of idols, and appurtenances of idols, both according to R. Ishmael and R. Akiba,¹ are not forbidden till actually used in idol worship. — If you wish I can answer: It was used for cutting up wood for the idol;² or if you wish I can answer: It was an old knife which was cleansed in the fire.³

It was stated: If a man slaughtered with the knife of a Gentile, Rab says. He must pare (the flesh);⁴ Rabbah b. Bar Hana⁵ says: He need only rinse it. Shall we say that their difference lies in this: One holds the view that the throat is cold.⁶ while the other holds the view that it is hot?⁷ No. All hold the view that the throat is hot; therefore, he who says: 'he must pare it', is clearly understood, but he who says that he need only rinse it [argues thus]: while the organs [of the throat] keep on spurting out blood they will not absorb [any fat from the knife].⁸

Some there are who state as follows: All hold the view that the throat is cold; therefore, he who says: 'he need only rinse it'.is clearly understood, but he who says that he must pare it [argues thus]: by reason of the pressure of the knife [the flesh] must absorb [to some extent].

A knife which was used for slaughtering an animal found to be trefah,⁹ is the subject of a dispute between R. Aha and Rabina. One says, [It must be cleansed] with hot water;¹⁰ the other says. [It may be cleansed even] with cold water.

The law is: Even with cold water. And if there is at hand a piece of cloth¹¹ wherewith to wipe [the knife], nothing more is required. Now what is the reason of the one who says that it must be cleansed with hot water? It is [is it not] because it absorbed forbidden fat?¹² If so, even after slaughtering an animal which is permitted to be eaten it should also require [cleansing with hot water] because it absorbed [the fat] of the limbs of a living animal?¹³ — [It is not so;] for [the knife] absorbs [the fat] only when [the throat] is hot, and it becomes hot only at the end of the slaughtering when the animal is ritually permitted.

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: A butcher requires three separate knives, one for slaughtering, one for cutting meat, and one for cutting away the [forbidden] fat. But why should he not use the same knife first for cutting meat and then for cutting fat? — It is forbidden to do so lest he cut with it the fat first and then the meat.¹⁴ Well, even now, he might get them mixed! — No; since he must have two separate knives he will make a distinguishing mark on each.¹⁵

Again Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: A butcher requires two separate pails of water, one in which he washes the meat and one in which he washes the fat. But why should he not use the same pail for washing in it first the meat and then the fat? — It is forbidden to do so lest he wash in it the fat first and then the meat.¹⁶ Well even now, he might get them mixed! — No; since he must have two separate pails he will make a distinguishing mark on each.

Amemar said in the name of R. Papa: One should not place the loins on top of other meat for fear that the fat [attached to the loins] will run and will be absorbed by the meat. If so, why not apprehend the same even when the loins lie in their natural position, namely, that the fat [upon the loins] will run and will be absorbed by the flesh [of the loins]? — There is a membrane underneath [the fat of the loins] which separates it [from the flesh of the loins]. But then,

(1) V. A.Z. 51b. These Rabbis differ in the case of a newly made idol as to whether it is prohibited immediately or only after it has been worshipped; but in the case of appurtenances of idols they agree that these are not prohibited until actually used in worship.

(2) Therefore there is here no question of any forbidden fat.

(3) The knife was thus cleansed and all the forbidden fat removed from it.

(4) I.e., he must cut away from the parts of the throat which came into contact with this knife a thin layer of flesh because of the fat of forbidden foods that was absorbed in the knife and was now transmitted to the flesh.

(5) MS.M: Samuel.

(6) Lit.. 'the place of slaughtering', I.e., the throat at the time of slaughtering is not sufficiently hot to absorb much from the knife and, therefore, Rabbah b. Bar Hana maintains that rinsing of the flesh in water is sufficient.

(7) Rab's view. Therefore the flesh of the throat must be pared.

(8) Nevertheless, it is necessary to wash the flesh because of the forbidden fat that may have been on the surface of the knife.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) Before slaughtering another animal with it.

(11) Lit., 'a shred of a curtain'.

(12) I.e., the fat of the trefah animal that had been slaughtered previously.

(13) The fat, as well as the flesh, of a living animal is forbidden, and therefore in the duration of the slaughtering before the requisite amount has been cut, the knife will have absorbed forbidden fat.

(14) Without first removing the fat from the knife. 'Fat' throughout the whole of this passage means forbidden fat.

(15) As regards the third knife, the knife for slaughtering, there is no fear that he will use it for any other purpose because of the danger of damaging or notching it.

(16) The danger is that particles of the fat will remain in the water and will adhere to any meat washed in the same water.

is there not a membrane above [the fat]?¹ — [This membrane,] since it is handled by the butcher, crumbles away.

Again Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: A scholar must learn three things, viz.: writing, shechitah, and circumcision. R. Hanania b. Shelemia said in the name of Rab, He must also learn the art of forming the knot of the Tefillin,² the benedictions recited at the marriage ceremony,³ and the art of binding the Zizith.⁴ And the other [Rab Judah]? — [He says], These are frequent.⁵

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: One may not eat of the slaughtering of any butcher who does not know the rules of shechitah. And these are the rules of shechitah:⁶ [the rules as to] pausing,⁷ pressing,⁸ thrusting,⁹ deflecting,¹⁰ and tearing.¹¹ Why is it necessary to teach us this? Have we not learnt about each of these [elsewhere]? — It is only necessary for the case where one [not knowing the rules] slaughtered two or three times in our presence correctly. You might argue that since on those occasions he slaughtered correctly so now, too, he will slaughter correctly. It is therefore necessary to teach you that [he may not slaughter because,] since he does not know the rules, it may sometimes happen that he will pause or press, and will not know [that it is wrong to do so].

Again Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The butcher must examine the organs of the throat after slaughtering.¹² R. Joseph remarked: We have learnt the same [in a Mishnah]:¹³ R. Simeon says. If one paused for the time taken to examine . . .¹³ Now does it not mean the time taken to examine the organs [of the throat]? — Abaye replied: No; thus did R. Johanan say: It means the time taken for the Sage to examine [the knife]. If this is the meaning, then the rule would vary according to circumstances?¹⁴ — Rather [the meaning is]: The time taken for a butcher [who is himself] a Sage to examine [the knife].

If one did not examine [the organs of the throat after slaughtering], what is the law? — R. Eliezer b. Antigonus ruled in the name of R. Eliezer son of R. Jannai: The animal is trefah¹⁵ and may not be eaten. In a Baraita it was taught: The animal is nebelah¹⁵ and defiles one who carries it. On what principle do they differ? — On the principle laid down by R. Huna, who said: An animal while alive is presumed to be forbidden¹⁶ [and, therefore, remains forbidden when dead] until it becomes known to you that it was ritually slaughtered; once ritually slaughtered, it is presumed to be permitted until it becomes known to you how it became trefah. The one¹⁷ reasons thus: It is presumed to be forbidden, and now that it is dead [it is nebelah and therefore defiles].¹⁸ The other¹⁹ reasons thus: The presumption holds good²⁰ only in respect of the prohibition [to be eaten], but there is no presumption in respect of defilement.²¹

The text [above stated]: ‘R. Huna said: An animal while alive is presumed to be forbidden [and, therefore, remains forbidden when dead] until it becomes known to you that it was ritually slaughtered; once ritually slaughtered, it is presumed to be permitted until it becomes known to you how it became trefah’. Should he not [simply] have said: ‘Once ritually slaughtered it is permitted’?²² — He teaches you this: That even if something happened to the animal to impair its status²³ [it is nevertheless permitted]. For example, the question which was put to R. Huna by R. Abba: If a wolf came and carried away the intestines [of a slaughtered animal], what is the law? [You ask] ‘carried away’! Then they are not here!²⁴ — Rather, say: ‘and perforated the intestines’. ‘Perforated the intestines’! Then it is evident that the wolf did it! Rather say: ‘carried away the intestines and brought them back perforated’ — Now, what is the law? Are we to apprehend that the wolf inserted [its teeth] in a perforation that was there previously,²⁵ or not? — R. Huna replied: We do not apprehend that it inserted [its teeth] in a perforation.²⁶ [R. Abba] thereupon raised an objection [from the following Baraitha]: If one saw a bird nibbling at a fig or a mouse nibbling at a melon,

(1) For all fat is enclosed in a membrane so that there can be no harm when placing the fat of the loins on top of other meat.

(2) V. Glos. When properly tied the knot in the Tefillin worn on the head forms the shape of the Hebrew letter Daleth and that of the letter Yod in the Tefillin worn on the hand.

(3) V. Keth. 8b.

(4) V. Glos.

(5) I.e., the latter three acquirements. These being matters of common knowledge, it is not the special duty of a scholar to learn them. According to another explanation. ‘these’ refers to the accomplishments enumerated by Rab Judah. A scholar should particularly acquire these arts because he will be frequently called upon to practise them.

(6) The infringement of any of these rules invalidates the shechitah and renders the animal nebelah (v. Glos.).

(7) Heb. vhlva. There should be no pause or interruption while the slaughtering is being performed. The knife should be kept in continuous motion, forward and backward, until the organs or the greater part of them are cut through. V. infra 32a.

(8) Heb. vxrs. The knife must be moved horizontally across the throat and must not be pressed downwards. V. infra 30b.

(9) Heb. vskj. During the act of slaughtering the whole of the knife must be visible. If e.g., one thrust the knife into the side of the throat and thus cut the organs, the slaughtering would be invalid, since the knife would have been covered either by the organs or the skin of the throat. V. infra 32a.

(10) Heb. vnrđv. The slaughtering must be performed within a certain prescribed region in the throat of the animal. If the knife cut anywhere outside this region the slaughtering would be invalid. V. infra 18a.

(11) Heb. ruehg. Various interpretations have been suggested as to the meaning of this term. According to Rashi it means: tearing out the windpipe after having cut through the gullet; V. infra 32a. According to Halakoth Gedoloth it means: cutting through the organs after the windpipe has been dislocated or torn out of its position; v, infra 85a. According to Tosaf. s.v. uvkuf it means: slaughtering with a notched knife, which tears and does not cut the organs. V. article by Dr. S. Daiches in Hazafeh vol. 12, pp. 255-8 where it is shown that the Halakoth Gedoloth in fact agrees with Rashi.

- (12) To satisfy himself that they have been properly and sufficiently cut through.
- (13) V. infra 32a.
- (14) It would depend upon whether the Sage was close by or far away; in the latter case the time for examination must, of necessity, be longer than in the former case.
- (15) V. Glos.
- (16) Since it is not permitted to eat a limb or flesh cut off from a living animal. This being so, the animal retains its status of being forbidden food until we have definite proof that it has been properly slaughtered. Once, however, we know that an animal has been ritually slaughtered the presumption that it is permitted food will not be rebutted without proof that some internal defect has made it trefah.
- (17) The Baraitha.
- (18) Following the general rule that any dead animal which has not been ritually slaughtered is nebelah and therefore defiles.
- (19) R. Eliezer son of R. Jannai.
- (20) Lit., 'we say'.
- (21) R. Eliezer's argument is: The animal is now forbidden only because of the presumption which arose during its lifetime. Now, during its lifetime the animal was forbidden only to be eaten; it certainly could not defile. The effect, therefore, of the presumption can only be to render the animal forbidden to be eaten and not that it should defile.
- (22) Why speak of a presumption at all?
- (23) E.g., if some defect or disorder is now found in the animal, and there is a doubt whether it was there before the slaughtering or not, the animal is permitted because of the principle stated by R. Huna.
- (24) If the intestines have been carried away we have no reason to apprehend that there was any defect in them.
- (25) In which case the animal would be trefah.
- (26) Because of the presumption that, once ritually slaughtered, the animal is permitted until it becomes known how it became trefah.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 9b

one must apprehend that it was nibbling in a pre-existing hole!¹ — He replied: How can you compare what is forbidden ritually with what is forbidden on account of possible danger to life! In the latter case we are certainly more apprehensive. Said Raba:² What difference is there? Whenever there arises a doubt concerning a prohibition based on danger to life the stricter view is preferred, and the same is the case with regard to a doubt in connection with a ritual prohibition! — Said Abaye to him, Is there then no difference between laws concerning danger to life and laws concerning ritual prohibitions? But let us see! Whenever there is a doubt regarding any object whether it is clean or unclean, if such doubt arose in a public place, it is deemed clean; but whenever there is a doubt regarding water that was left uncovered it is deemed to be forbidden.³ He answered: In the case of uncleanness the rule is derived by analogy from the case of a woman suspected of adultery, viz., as [the doubt in connection with] the suspected woman can only occur in a private place.⁴ so [every doubt in connection with] uncleanness must have occurred in a private place.⁵

R. Shimi raised an objection: [We have learnt:] If a weasel has a [dead] reptile in its mouth, and walks over loaves of terumah,⁶ and it is doubtful whether the reptile came into contact with the loaves or not, they are deemed clean.⁷ Yet in the case of water left uncovered, if there is any doubt about it, it is forbidden? — Here again, the rule [in the case of uncleanness] is derived by analogy from the case of a woman suspected of adultery, viz., as [the doubt in connection with] the suspected woman [relates to a person that] has understanding to be questioned about it,⁸ so every doubt in connection with uncleanness must relate to such as have understanding to be questioned about it.⁹

Come and hear: If a man left uncovered a bowl [containing purification water]¹⁰ and came and found it covered, it is regarded as unclean, for I can say that an unclean person entered and covered it. If he left it covered and came and found it uncovered, and a weasel or, even a snake, according to R. Gamaliel¹¹ — could have drunk from it, or if dew fell on it during the night.¹² the water is invalid.¹³ And R. Joshua b. Levi said: What is the reason for this?¹⁴

- (1) I.e., , a hole made by a snake in which it deposited poison; the fruit is, therefore, prohibited to be eaten on account of this danger.
 - (2) V. D.S. a.l. Cur. edd.: Said Raba to him (R. Huna).
 - (3) Laws relating to uncleanness come under the category of ritual prohibitions, while the rule concerning waters left uncovered belongs to the class of laws concerning danger to life. The danger in this case is that a snake may have drunk from the water.
 - (4) Where this woman has been in seclusion with her paramour. It is only in such cases that the suspicion is well founded and the woman must undergo the ordeal of the bitter waters, v. Num. V. 11ff. Seclusion with a paramour in a public place is not considered an act of infidelity.
 - (5) And it is only in such cases that the law regards the object as unclean, v. A.Z. 36b. It is thus only because of the analogy drawn from the case of the suspected woman that a doubt of uncleanness in a public place constitutes an exception to the general rule that wherever doubt arises in cases of ritual prohibitions, as well as danger to life, the law adopts the stricter view.
 - (6) V. Glos.
 - (7) Even though the doubt arose in a private place; v. Toh. IV, 2, 'Ed. II, 7.
 - (8) The suspected woman could, if she so desired, answer the question whether she was defiled or not.
 - (9) And it is only in such cases that the law regards the person as unclean. Thus a further exception to the general rule is admitted in the case of a doubt regarding uncleanness arising in connection, with anything other than a human being. In the case of the weasel the loaves cannot be asked whether or not they have been defiled.
 - (10) V. Num. chap. XIX.
 - (11) R. Gamaliel holds the view that a snake also invalidates the purification water by drinking therefrom, because it spits back the water it drinks into the bowl, and this action invalidates the water because of the reasons given in n. 9, infra.
 - (12) And might have fallen into the water. V. MS.M. cur. edd. 'into it'.
 - (13) But not unclean. V. Parah IX, 3, where it is taught that if a weasel drinks from purification water it becomes invalid, because the weasel, when drinking, laps up the water. Lapping or spitting invalidates the purification water either because it disturbs the water and it is considered as though the water were put to some work, or because by lapping or spitting the water drips back out of the mouth into the bowl, and it is regarded as though the water were poured out of another vessel into the original bowl, and this is not permitted, for according to the biblical injunction there must be living water in the bowl; v. Num. XIX, 17.
 - (14) That in the second case (where the bowl was found uncovered) the water is merely invalid, whereas in the first case (where the bowl was found covered) it is also regarded as unclean.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 10a

Because it is the habit of reptiles to uncover [a vessel]¹ but not to cover one.² (Or you might argue thus: the above decisions only apply to the cases mentioned, viz., where he left the bowl uncovered and came and found it covered, and where he left it covered and came and found it uncovered, but if he found it as he left it, [the water] is neither unclean nor invalid.)³ Whereas, in the case of water left uncovered, if there is any doubt about it, it is forbidden.⁴ This, therefore, proves that regulations concerning danger to life are more stringent than ritual prohibitions. It stands proved.

We have learnt elsewhere.⁵ Three liquids are prohibited if left uncovered; water, wine and milk.⁶ How long must they have remained [uncovered] to become forbidden? Such time as it would take a reptile to come forth from a place near by and drink. What distance is meant by 'a place near by'? R. Isaac the son of Rab Judah explained: Such time as it would take a reptile to come forth from under the handle of the vessel and drink therefrom. 'And drink therefrom'! Then you see it!⁷ — Rather; And drink therefrom and return to its hole.

It was stated: If a man slaughtered with a knife⁸ which was found afterwards to have a notch in it, R. Huna says, even if he broke bones with it the whole day long [after the slaughtering], the shechitah is invalid, because we apprehend that it became notched while cutting the skin [before actually cutting the throat]. R. Hisda, however, says that the shechitah is valid, because we assume that it became notched by a bone. Now R. Huna's opinion is clear, it being in accordance with the principle he laid down above;⁹ but what is the reason of R. Hisda's opinion?— He reasons thus: A bone certainly notches [the knife], whereas the skin may or may not notch [the knife]; there is thus a doubt against a certainty, and a doubt cannot set aside a certainty.

Raba raised an objection [against R. Hisda], thereby supporting the opinion of R. Huna. [It was taught:] If a man immersed himself and came up,¹⁰ and then there was found something adhering to his body,¹¹ even though he was using that particular substance all day long [after his immersion], it is not regarded as a proper immersion unless he can declare: 'I am certain it was not upon me before [my immersion]' — Now in this case, he certainly immersed himself, and there is a doubt whether the substance was or was not upon him [before his immersion], yet the doubt sets aside the certainty! — This case is different, for one can say: Let the unclean person remain in his [unclean] status, and assume that there has been no immersion. Well, then, in our case too, one can say: let the animal remain in its [forbidden] status, and assume that there has been no slaughtering? — Surely the animal is slaughtered before us. But, here too, surely this man has immersed himself before us! In the latter case, something has happened to impair [his immersion]. But in the former case, too, something has happened to impair [the slaughtering]! — No; the defect is in the knife but not in the animal.

An objection was raised: If one cut through the gullet¹² and then the windpipe was torn away from its position, the slaughtering is valid. If the windpipe was first torn away and then one cut through the gullet, the slaughtering is invalid. If one cut through the gullet and then the windpipe was found to be torn away, and it is not known whether it was torn away before or after the slaughtering — this was an actual case [brought before the Rabbis], and they ruled: Any doubt whatsoever arising about the slaughtering makes it invalid. Now what is the scope of this rule?¹³ Does it not include the case mentioned above?¹⁴ — No. It includes those cases where there is a doubt as to whether or not one paused or pressed [in the act of slaughtering].

(1) Therefore, in the second case the alternatives are (a) the bowl might have been uncovered by a reptile or by a clean person — in either case the water remains clean; (b) it might have been uncovered by an unclean person which would make the water unclean. The chances being more in favour of the first alternative, the water is regarded as clean on the principle of following the majority.

(2) Therefore, in the first case, as the possibility of a reptile having covered the bowl is excluded, the only alternatives are that it was covered either by a clean person or by an unclean person; and as the one is not more probable than the other, the law adopts the stricter view and regards the water as unclean.

(3) This bracketed passage is omitted by Rashal, neither is it found in MS.M.

(4) On the ground of danger to life. In cases regarding uncleanness however, it is clear from the foregoing statements that the law does not always adopt the stricter view; v. n. 2.

(5) Ter. VIII, 4.

(6) It is feared that these liquids might have been poisoned by a snake or by other poisonous reptiles.

(7) According to the time limit here laid down, it is clear that a man who came at the end of this period would see the reptile at the vessel, if any reptile had come; and there would therefore be no doubt but that the liquids had been poisoned. If, on the other hand, no reptile is seen, it is clear that no reptile could have been there in his absence.

(8) It is assumed throughout the whole of this discussion that the knife was perfectly good at the beginning, i.e., it had been examined before the slaughtering and pronounced to be free from notches.

(9) V. supra p. 39.

(10) Out of the mikweh, the ritual bath of purification.

(11) This substance may have been adhering to his body before the immersion and interposed between the water and his flesh, to which case the immersion is invalid.

(12) The statement deals with the slaughtering of a bird, in which case it is sufficient to cut through one organ, either the windpipe or the gullet.

(13) Lit., 'what does "whatsoever doubt about slaughtering" mean to include'.

(14) I.e., where after the slaughtering the knife was found to be notched.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 10b

But what is the difference?¹ — In the latter cases the defect has arisen in the animal, whereas in the above mentioned case the defect has arisen in the knife but not in the animal.

The law is as R. Huna ruled² where he did not break up bones [with the knife after slaughtering]. And the law is as R. Hisda ruled³ where he did break up bones. It follows that R. Hisda maintains his view even where no bones were broken up;⁴ then the question is: how did the knife become notched? — You can say: It became notched through striking the bone of the neck.⁵ There happened such a case⁶ and R. Joseph declared as many as thirteen animals to be trefah. Now, whose view did he follow? Did he follow R. Huna's view [and so declared them all trefah,] including the first animal?⁷ — No, he may have followed R. Hisda's view, and [so declared then, all trefah.] excepting the first animal.⁸ If you wish, however, I can say that he followed R. Huna's view, because if he followed R. Hisda's view, then, since R. Hisda adopts a lenient view, why is it suggested that the knife became notched through striking the neck-bone of the first animal? Should we not say that it became notched through striking the neck-bone of the last animal?⁹

R. Aha the son of Raba told R. Ashi that R. Kahana required the knife to be examined after each animal that was slaughtered. Now, whose view did he adopt? Was it R. Huna's view, with the result that [if the knife were not examined between each animal that was slaughtered,] even the first animal would be trefah? — No. It was R. Hisda's view that he adopted,¹⁰ and [he therefore required the knife to be examined after each animal so that] even those slaughtered after [the first] should be permitted. If this is so, should not the knife be examined by a Sage?¹¹ — [It is not necessary, for] one witness is believed in matters concerning ritual prohibition.¹² If so, it should never be necessary.¹³ — Indeed, has not R. Johanan said that it is only out of respect to the Sage that it was ruled that one must present the knife to the Sage [for inspection]?

Whence is derived the principle which the Rabbis have adopted, viz.: Determine every matter by its status?¹⁴ — R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan. It is derived from the verse: Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days.¹⁵ Now may it not have happened that, while he was going out, the leprous spot diminished in size?¹⁶ [Yet we do not apprehend this] because we say: Determine every matter by its status.¹⁷ R. Aha b. Jacob demurred to this: Perhaps the priest in going out of the house walks backwards so that he can see [the spot] as he is leaving!¹⁸ — Abaye retorted: There are two answers to your objection. In the first place, going out backwards is not a 'going out'.¹⁹ In the second place, what will you say when the leprous spot is behind the door?²⁰ And if you say that he opens up a window [in the door]; have we not learnt: In a dark house one may not open up windows to inspect the leprous spot?²¹ — Said Raba to him, With regard to your statement that going out backwards is not a 'going out', the case of the High Priest on the Day of Atonement proves otherwise; for in that case, though it is written: And he shall go out,²² we have learnt: The High Priest goes out and leaves as he entered.²³ And with regard to your reference to the statement that 'in a dark house one may not open up windows to inspect the leprous spot', this rule only applies when the leprosy has not yet been ascertained; but once the leprosy has been ascertained the matter is determined.²⁴

A [Baraitha] was taught which is not in agreement with the view of R. Aha b. Jacob: [Since it is written,] 'Then the priest shall go out of the house', you might think that he may go to his own house and shut up [the affected house from there].²⁵ the verse therefore reads: 'To the door of the house'. But if [we had only] 'the door of the house' to go by you might think that he may stand under the doorpost [of the affected house] and shut it up. The verse therefore reads: 'Out of the house', that is to say, he must go right out of the house. How is this done? He stands outside the doorpost and shuts it up. Moreover, whence do we know that if he went to his own home and shut it up [from there], or if he remained within the [affected] house and shut it up the shutting-up is valid? The verse therefore says. 'And he shall shut tip the house', implying that the shutting-up in whatever way effected [is valid].²⁶ And R. Ahab. Jacob?²⁷ —

(1) Between these various cases of doubt. Why is it that in the case of the notched knife the slaughtering is valid, while in the cases where there is a doubt as to pausing or pressing in the act of slaughtering, it is invalid?

(2) That the slaughtering is invalid.

- (3) That the slaughtering is valid.
- (4) For otherwise there would be no dispute between them.
- (5) Which can only be done after having first cut through the organs of the throat, by which time the slaughtering has been completed and therefore the slaughtering is not affected thereby.
- (6) Where several animals were slaughtered without the knife being examined between each slaughtering, and after all the animals had been slaughtered the knife was found to be notched.
- (7) For R. Huna apprehends that the notch may have arisen in the knife while cutting the skin of the first animal.
- (8) For R. Hisda assumes that the notch was caused by striking the neck-bone after the animal had been duly slaughtered. It is therefore clear that at least the first animal had been properly slaughtered. On this view we must assume that the number of animals slaughtered was fourteen.
- (9) And therefore all the animals should have been permitted.
- (10) I.e., that we assume this notch to have been caused by the neck-bone of the first.
- (11) Since according to R. Hisda the purpose of the examination is to render valid those animals slaughtered after the examination, then it becomes necessary for a Sage to examine the knife, for there is a rule that the inspection of the knife before the slaughtering must be by a Sage; v. infra p. 85.
- (12) Therefore the slaughterer is trusted and his word is accepted when he examines the knife and pronounces it free from notches.
- (13) Lit., 'from the very beginning'. At no time should it be necessary to have the knife examined by a Sage since the slaughterer is trusted.
- (14) In cases of doubt it is presumed, unless there is evidence to the contrary, that all things retain the same status which they were last known to have had.
- (15) Lev. XIV. 38.
- (16) And it may thus have become less than the minimum size of a bean required to render the house unclean, so that there would be no necessity to shut up the house at all, and the act of 'shutting up' is consequently invalid.
- (17) And as the house has acquired the status of being unclean, it is presumed to remain so, and requires to be 'shut up'.
- (18) He can thus be certain that the spot has not diminished in size.
- (19) For when Scripture says: 'And he shall go out', it implies going out in the normal way.
- (20) In which case the spot would not be visible to the priest even though he walks out backwards.
- (21) Neg. II, 3; Sanh. 92a.
- (22) Lev. XVI, 18.
- (23) I.e., walking backwards, facing the Holy of Holies; V. Yoma 52b.
- (24) And then any means may be used, e.g. opening up a window, in order to confirm the existence of the leprosy.
- (25) By means of a long rope attached to the door of the affected house.
- (26) According to this Baraita the suggestion of R. Aba b. Jacob seems untenable; for the Baraita regards it valid even when the priest shut up the affected house from his own home, in which case it would be impossible for him to keep the leprous spot in view the whole time.
- (27) How will he meet this objection?

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 11a

[The Baraita refers to a case] where there was a row of men who reported that the leprous spot remained unaltered.¹

Whence is derived the principle which the Rabbis have adopted, viz.: Follow the majority?

Whence? [you ask]; is it not expressly written: Follow the majority?² — In regard to those cases where the majority is defined,³ as in the case of the Nine Shops⁴ or the Sanhedrin,⁵ we do not ask the question. Our question relates to cases where the majority is undefined, as in the case of the Boy and Girl.⁶ Whence then is the principle derived?

(Mnemonic: Zeman SHEbah Mekanesh.)⁷ R. Eleazar said: It is derived from the head of a burnt-offering. The verse reads: And he shall cut it into its pieces,⁸ which means, he shall cut it up into its pieces but not its pieces into [smaller] pieces. Now why do we not fear that the membrane which encloses the brain is perforated?⁹ Is it not because we follow the majority?¹⁰ But is this really so? Perhaps he splits open [the head] and examines the membrane, and as for the rule, 'he shall cut it into its pieces but not its pieces into [smaller] pieces', this only prohibits the cutting up of a limb into pieces but does not prohibit [the mere splitting open of a limb] so long as the parts remain joined!¹¹

Mar the son of Rabina said: It is derived from the rule concerning breaking the bones of the paschal lamb. The verse reads: And ye shall not break a bone thereof.¹² Now why do we not fear that the membrane which encloses the brain is perforated? Is it not because we follow the majority! But is this really so? Perhaps he places a burning coal upon the head, burns away the bone and examines the membrane; for it has been taught: He who cuts the sinews or burns away the bones [of the paschal lamb] has not transgressed the law of breaking the bones.¹³

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: It is derived from the law concerning the tail [of sheep]. The verse reads: The fat thereof, and the fat tail entire.¹⁴ Now why do we not fear that the spinal cord is severed? Is it not because we follow the majority! And should you say. He can cut off the fat tail lower down?¹⁵ Surely the Divine Law says [Which he shall take away] hard 'by the rump bone',¹⁶ that is to say, hard by the place where the counselling kidneys¹⁷ are seated!¹⁸ But perhaps he cuts open the fat tail and examines it; and as for [the law that] the fat tail be entire, this only prohibits the complete severing of it but does not prohibit cutting it open so long as it is still one piece!¹⁹

R. Shesheth the son of R. Idi said: It is derived from the case of the heifer whose neck was to be broken. The Divine Law says: Whose neck was broken,²⁰ [which has been interpreted] to mean that [after the neck has been broken] the heifer must remain whole. Now why do we not fear that it has some defect which makes it trefah? Is it not because we follow the majority! And should you say. What does it matter [even if it is trefah]?²¹ Surely it was taught in the school of R. Jannai: Forgiveness²² is mentioned in connection therewith as with sacrifices!²³

Rabbah b. Shila said: It is derived from the case of the Red Cow. The Divine Law says. And he shall slaughter it . . . and he shall burn it,²⁴ which signifies, just as for the slaughtering the animal must be whole, so for the burning it must be whole. Now why do we not fear that it is trefah? Is it not because we follow the majority? And should you say. What does it matter [even if it is trefah]? Surely the Divine law calls it a sin-offering!²⁵

R. Aha b. Jacob said: It is derived from the case of the Scapegoat.²⁶ The Divine Law says. And he shall take the two goats, which implies that the two shall be alike in all respects,²⁷ Now why do we not fear

- (1) The report being passed along the line up to the priest.
 - (2) Ex. XXIII, 2. This is the traditional interpretation of the verse by the Rabbis. In the English versions it is rendered: to turn aside after a multitude to pervert justice.
 - (3) Lit., 'that is before us'; i.e., the number constituting the majority can be easily ascertained.
 - (4) V. Pes. 9b. Where if in a particular neighbourhood there are nine shops which sell ritually slaughtered meat and a tenth which sells trefah meat, any meat found in that neighbourhood is kosher or permitted, it being presumed to have come from the majority, i.e., one of the nine shops.
 - (5) V. Sanh. 40a. The Great Sanhedrin was the supreme court of the Jews and consisted of seventy-one Judges; the Small Sanhedrin was an inferior court and consisted of twenty-three Judges. In each case the decision of the majority of the Judges was the decision of the court.
 - (6) Where a boy who is a minor marries his deceased brother's wife who is also a minor, in accordance with the law of Levirate marriage laid down in Deut. XXV, 5, the marriage is valid, and we do not fear that one of them may prove to be sterile, in which case, the purpose of the levirate marriage having failed, the marriage would be unlawful as coming within the prohibited degrees. The reason is that we follow the majority, and the majority of people are not sterile. V. Yeb. 61b, and 111b.
 - (7) This mnemonic is formed by taking a characteristic letter from each of the names of the Rabbis who are quoted in the following passages. The Hebrew letters form three words which may be translated: Time brings profit.
 - (8) Lev. I, 6. The animal was cut up into limbs and these were offered on the altar whole, but it was not permitted to cut up a limb into smaller pieces.
 - (9) This defect, as well as the other defects mentioned in these passages, would make the animal trefah and consequently unfit for a sacrifice. The sacrifice of the burnt-offering is nevertheless valid, in spite of the fact that it was not possible to cut open the head and examine the membrane by reason of the prohibition against cutting up a limb.
 - (10) And the majority of animals are not trefah.
 - (11) Since in the way suggested it is possible to examine the animal as to any defect there is no proof from here that we follow the majority.
 - (12) Ex. XII, 46.
 - (13) V. Pes. 84b. This suggestion thus fails to prove our principle.
 - (14) Lev. III, 9. The fat tail of a sheep or ram in cases of sin-offerings or peace-offerings was offered in one whole mass upon the altar.
 - (15) I.e., below the point of partition where the spinal cord branches off into three minor cords, one extending into the right thigh, the second into the left thigh, and the third continuing straight on into the tail. If any one of these minor cords is severed the animal does not become trefah. V. infra 45b. It is therefore suggested that the fat tail should be cut off below the point of partition, in which case even if the cord is severed in the tail it is of no consequence.
 - (16) Lev. III, 9.
 - (17) Cf. Ber. 61a, where it is stated that the function of the kidneys is to give counsel.
 - (18) Which is above the point of partition.
 - (19) Since it is possible to examine the tail in the manner suggested, there is no proof from this case that we follow the majority.
 - (20) Deut. XXI, 6. After the breaking of the neck the heifer was immediately buried whole and on no account was it permitted to cut up the carcass.
 - (21) Since it was not a sacrifice in the ordinary sense of that term.
 - (22) Deut. XXI, 8: Forgive, O Lord, Thy people Israel.

(23) Therefore, just as a trefah animal was unfit for a sacrifice, so the heifer, if trefah, was unfit for the purpose. It is to be noted that R. Shesheth's argument succeeds in proving the principle of following the majority. This is also the case with the arguments used in the following passages, with the possible exception of R. Mari's argument. V. infra p. 51, n. 6.

(24) Num. XIX, 3, 5.

(25) Ibid. 9. And therefore like all sacrifices the Red Cow may not be trefah.

(26) Lev. XVI, 7. On the Day of Atonement two goats were required, one to be a sacrifice unto the Lord and the other, the Scapegoat, to be sent away to Azazel (ibid. 8), i.e., it was taken into the wilderness where it was hurled down a steep mountain. Lots were cast to decide which goat was to be for the Lord and which for Azazel.

(27) This interpretation suggests that the goat for Azazel may not be trefah, just as the goat which was for the Lord clearly may not be trefah. This, however, would seem to be superfluous as the reason why it may not be trefah is stated subsequently. The words, 'that the two shall be alike in all respects' are omitted in MS.M.

that one of them is trefah?¹ Is it not because we follow the majority! And should you say, What does it matter [even if it is trefah]? Surely it has been taught: The lot cannot determine [the goat] for Azazel unless it is fit to be for the Lord!² And should you say: It can be examined?³ Surely we have learnt: Before it reached half way down the mountain it was already broken into pieces!⁴

R. Mari said: It is derived from the case of one that smiteth his father, or his mother,⁵ for which offence the Divine law prescribes death. Now why do we not fear that the person struck may not have ben his father? Is it not because we follow the majority, and a woman cohabits with her husband more often [than with a stranger]? But perhaps [the law applies] only to the case where the father and mother were locked up in prison!⁶ — Even so there is no guardian against unchastity.⁷

R. Kahana said: It is derived from the case of a murderer, for whom the Divine law prescribes death. Now why do we not fear that the victim may have been trefah?⁸ Is it not because we follow the majority! And should you say: We can examine the body? [This is not allowed because] it would thereby be mutilated! And should you say: Since a man's life is at stake, we should mutilate the body? Surely there is always the possibility that there was a hole [in the victim] in the place [where he was stuck] by the sword.⁹ Rabina said: It is derived from the law concerning witnesses who are found to be zomemim,¹⁰ in connection with whom the Divine Law says. Then shall ye do unto him, as he had purposed [to do unto his brother].¹¹ Now why do we not fear that the person against whom they gave false evidence [that he committed a capital offence] is trefah?¹² Is it not because we follow the majority! And should you say. We can examine him now? Sure]y it has been taught: Beribbi¹³ said: If the person [against whom their evidence was directed] has not been executed they are put to death; if he has been executed they are not put to death!¹⁴

R. Ashi said: It is derived from the law of Shechitah itself;¹⁵ for the Divine Law says [in effect]. Slaughter and eat. Now why do we not fear that there is a hole [in the gullet] in the place where It was cut through?¹⁶ Is it not because we follow the majority!

R. Ashi added: I put forward this argument to R. Kahana — others say: R. Kahana put forward this argument to R. Shimi — and he replied: perhaps the law is that where it is possible to ascertain the facts we must do so; it is only where it is impossible to ascertain the facts that we follow the majority.¹⁷ For if you do not accept this [argument], then the question will be asked: Did R. Meir, who is of the opinion that the minority must be taken into consideration, always abstain from eating meat? And if you reply that this indeed was the case, then it will be asked:

(1) I.e., the one which was to be sent to the wilderness. It was obviously impossible to examine it as to any defects, since it was sent away alive.

(2) In other words, though only one of the goats was offered as the sacrifice to the Lord, it was necessary for both goats to be such as might have been sacrificed to the Lord; it follows therefore that neither goat might be trefah.

(3) After being sent away.

(4) Yoma 67a.

(5) Ex. XXI, 15.

(6) Where his mother conceived him and where it would be impossible for the mother to have intercourse with strangers.

(7) So that the offence of striking a father is made punishable only by reason of the principle of following the majority. This answer, however, is omitted in MS.M; if it is omitted, R. Mari's argument stands disproved.

(8) A person afflicted with a fatal organic disease, for whose killing a person is not punishable as a murderer.

(9) The murderer may have killed the victim by striking him in a place where he was already suffering from a fatal wound, and in so doing removed all traces of the previous wound. In such a case it is clear that no amount of post mortem examination would show that the victim was trefah; hence it is proved that we follow the majority.

(10) A technical term for a particular form of perjury. Cf. Deut. XIX, 16ff and Mak, chaps 1. The punishment meted out to these false witnesses is the sentence which the court had pronounced upon the person who was found guilty on the strength of their false evidence. This law, as will be seen from the subsequent statement, does not apply where the sentence has in fact been carried out.

(11) Deut. XIX, 19.

(12) Cf. p. 51, n. 7.

(13) I.e., a prominent scholar, or as Rashi suggests in Mak. 5 b a teacher of that name. V.J. E. III, p. 52.

(14) V.M ak. 5b. The position is this: if the person against whom the witnesses testified has been executed the witnesses are not punished at all, and if he has not been executed then it is not possible to examine him as to whether or not he is a trefah; hence it is proved that we follow the majority.

(15) The basic law of Shechitah, which is that one may eat an animal which has been ritually slaughtered.

(16) And therefore the slaughtering should not be valid because the animal may have been trefah.

(17) Lit., 'where (it is) possible, it is possible; where impossible, impossible'. Although in the cases previously quoted, it is true that the majority principle is adopted, it is not to be enlarged into a general principle, for in each of those cases it was impossible to ascertain the true facts; where, however, it is possible to do so one should not follow the majority.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 12a

What about the meat of the paschal lamb and of other sacrifices?¹ You are therefore obliged to say [that R. Meir's view is]: where it is possible to ascertain the facts² one must do so, and only where it is impossible to ascertain the facts does one follow the majority. Our view then is the same: Where it is possible to ascertain the facts we must do so, and only where it is impossible to do so do we follow the majority.

R. Nahman said in the name of Rab: If [a man] saw another slaughtering, and he watched him from beginning to end, he may eat of the slaughtering; otherwise he may not eat of the slaughtering. What are the circumstances of the case? If he knows that the slaughterer is conversant [with the rules of shechitah], then why is it necessary to watch over him? If he knows that the slaughterer is not conversant [with the rules at all], then the case is obvious!³ Again, if he does not know whether the slaughterer is conversant [with the rules] or not, then should not the principle that ‘the majority of those who slaughter⁴ are qualified’ apply?⁵ For has it not been taught: If [a man] found a slaughtered chicken in the market, or if he said to his agent. ‘Go and slaughter [an animal]’, and subsequently found it slaughtered, it is presumed to have been ritually slaughtered? This proves that we apply the principle that ‘the majority of those who slaughter are qualified’; in our case, too, should we not apply this principle? — The actual facts of our case are that he knows that the slaughterer is not conversant [with the rules at all] and that the latter has cut one of the organs [of the throat] in his presence properly [according to ritual]. Now it might be said: since he has cut the one organ properly [he will cut] the other just as well; Rab therefore teaches us [that we may not assume such to be the case, because it might just as well be] that it happened merely by chance that he cut the one organ properly but in the cutting of the other he might pause or press.

R. Dimi b. Joseph put to R. Nahman the following questions: If [a man] said to his agent: ‘Go and slaughter [an animal]’, and he subsequently found it slaughtered, what [is the law]? — He replied: It is presumed to have been ritually slaughtered. If [a man] said to his agent: ‘Go and set aside the terumah’,⁶ and he subsequently found it set aside, what [is the law]? — He replied: It is not presumed to have been validly set aside as terumah. [He thereupon contended:] What is your opinion? If you hold that there is a presumption that an agent carries out his instructions, then apply it also to the case of terumah;⁷ and if you hold that there is no presumption that an agent carries out his instructions, then even in the case of shechitah it should not be presumed! — He replied: If you will measure out for it a kor of salt [I will then explain it to you].⁸ Actually there is no presumption at all that an agent carries out his instructions; now in the case of shechitah, even if we take into account the possibility that a stranger, having overheard the instructions, went and slaughtered [the animal], there is no harm, because of the principle that ‘the majority of those who slaughter are qualified’; whereas in the case of terumah if we take into account the possibility that a stranger, having overheard the instructions, went and set aside the terumah [it would be invalid] for he would have done so without the consent of the owner, and [the law is that] if one sets aside terumah without the consent of the owner the terumah is not valid.⁹

Shall we say that the principle, ‘The majority of those who slaughter are qualified’, is the issue between the following Tannaim? For it has been taught: If [a man] lost his kids or his chickens and subsequently found them slaughtered. R. Judah forbids them [to be eaten], but R. Hanina the son of R. Jose the Galilean permits them [to be eaten]. Said Rabbi: R. Judah's view is acceptable [to me] in the case where they [the kids or chickens] were found on a rubbish heap,¹⁰ and R. Hanina's view is acceptable [to me] in the case where they were found in a house. May we not assume that the issue between them is the above principle; one [R. Hanina] accepts the principle that ‘the majority of those who slaughter are qualified’, and the other [R. Judah] does not accept this principle? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is not so. Both accept the principle that ‘the majority of those who slaughter are qualified', and if [the lost kids and chickens were found] in a house, both agree that they are permitted [to be eaten]; and furthermore, if [they were found] on a public rubbish heap, both agree that they are forbidden; the issue between them is only in the case where [the were found] on the rubbish heap of a private house: one [R. Judah] is of the opinion that a man is wont to cast a nebelah on to the rubbish heap in his house, while the other [R. Hanina] is of the opinion that a man is not wont to cast a nebelah on to the rubbish heap in his house.¹¹

The Master stated: 'Said Rabbi, R. Judah's view is acceptable [to me] in the case where they [the kids or chickens] were found on a rubbish heap'. Now what kind of rubbish heap is meant? Shall I say. A public rubbish heap? But you have said above that both agree that in such a case they are forbidden [to be eaten]! It must then be a rubbish heap of a private house. Now consider the next statement [of Rabbi]: 'And R. Hanina's view is acceptable [to me] in the case where they were found in a house'. What is meant by 'in a house'? Shall I say: In the house itself? But you have said above that in such a case both agree that they are permitted [to be eaten]! It must then be on the rubbish heap of a private house. Is there not then a contradiction between these two statements of Rabbi? —

- (1) Did he likewise abstain therefrom? This is inconceivable, for it is a positive duty to eat the meat of the paschal lamb and of certain other sacrifices!
 - (2) By carefully enquiring into the case, taking into account even the minority.
 - (3) That the slaughtering is invalid unless some reliable person was watching him all the time.
 - (4) Lit., 'who have to do with slaughtering'.
 - (5) It would therefore be unnecessary to watch over him at all; v. supra 3b.
 - (6) V. Glos.
 - (7) The terumah would then be valid by reason of this presumption.
 - (8) As a reward for my labour! A facetious remark, generally used when about to explain to some person a subtle distinction between two cases. Kor is a measure of capacity.
 - (9) V. Ter. I, 1, and Git 23b.
 - (10) The fact that they were found on a rubbish heap is an indication that they were unfit to be eaten, probably nebelah.
 - (11) Therefore, whatsoever is found on a private rubbish heap is permitted to be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 12b

This is what he [Rabbi] meant to say: The view of R. Judah is acceptable to R. Hanina the son of R. Jose the Galilean in the case where they were found on a public rubbish heap; for the latter differs from R. Judah only in the case where they were found on the rubbish heap of a private house, but agrees with him if they were found on a public rubbish heap. And the view of R. Hanina is acceptable etc.¹

EXCEPT A DEAF-MUTE. AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR, LEST THEY INVALIDATE THEIR SLAUGHTERING. It does not say: 'Lest they have invalidated', it says. LEST THEY INVALIDATE; this, said Raba, proves that one may not give them [even] common² beasts [to slaughter] in the first instance.³

AND IF ANY OF THESE SLAUGHTERED WHILE OTHERS WERE STANDING OVER THEM, THEIR SLAUGHTERING IS VALID. Who is the author of this statement [which suggests] that one does not require to have the intention to slaughter according to ritual?⁴ — Raba answered, It is R. Nathan. For Oshaia, junior of the collegiates,⁵ learnt: If one threw a knife intending to thrust it into a wall, and [in its flight] it slaughtered an animal in the usual way. R. Nathan declares the slaughtering valid; but the Sages declare it invalid. And [Oshaia] having learnt this [Baraita] added that the halachah was in accordance with R. Nathan's view. But do we not require a forward and backward motion [in slaughtering]?⁶ — There was here a forward and backward motion⁷ in the usual way.

R. Hiyya b. Abba reported that R. Johanan raised the following question: Does the law recognize the [expression of the] intention of a minor or not?⁸ — Said R. Ammi to R. Hiyya. He might as well have put the question in regard to the act [of a minor].⁹ Why did he not put the question in regard to the act [of a minor]? [Presumably] because we have learnt that the law recognizes the act [of a minor as sufficient evidence of his intention]; for the same reason he need not have put the question in regard to the [expression of the] intention of a minor, because we have learnt that the law does not recognize the [expression of the] intention [of a minor as sufficient evidence of his intention]! For we have learnt:¹⁰ Acorns or pomegranates or nuts which children hollowed out in order to measure sand therewith, or which they fashioned into scales, are susceptible to uncleanness,¹¹ because the law recognizes the act [of a minor as sufficient evidence of his intention]

(1) These last words are omitted in MS.M., and it would also seem that Rashi did not have them in his text, if they are to remain in the text they should be expanded thus: And the view of R. Hanina is acceptable to R. Judah in the case where they were found in a house, for the latter only differs from it. Hanina in the case where they were found on the rubbish heap of a private house, but agrees 'with him if they were found in a house.

(2) Hullin, v. Glos.

(3) Even when others are prepared to stand and watch over them they may not slaughter in the first instance, for they are liable at any moment to infringe the rules of shechitah.

(4) For the Tanna, in holding that the slaughtering of (inter alia) an imbecile is valid when others were standing over him, clearly is of opinion that the intention to slaughter according to ritual is not essential, since an imbecile is incapable of forming such an intention.

(5) Or, as others interpret, Oshaia Ze'ira of Haberya, v. Ta'an., Sonc. ed., p. 124, n. 2.

(6) V. infra 30b and Tosef. Hul. I, 4 and 5. In this case there was only a forward motion of the knife.

(7) The knife in its flight cut the throat in a forward motion, it then struck the wall, and in its rebound cut the throat again, now in a backward motion.

(8) The question refers to cases where the legal status of a thing is determined by the intention formed in relation thereto. It is not here disputed that it is sufficient if the necessary intention was formed by a minor; the question asked is: what evidence does the law require before it is satisfied that the minor has in fact formed the necessary intention? Is a minor's statement as to his intention sufficient evidence of that intention? Throughout this discussion Rashi's interpretation has been followed; v. however Tos. s.v. hgch, u.

(9) I.e., whether the law is satisfied as to the existence of any particular intention on the part of a minor when that expressed intention is evidenced by some unequivocal act on his part.

(10) Kel. XVII, 15.

(11) All articles are rendered susceptible to uncleanness by the intention to use them for some purpose. Here the intention of the children is clearly seen from their act of hollowing out the nuts.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 13a

hut not [the mere expression of] his intention. — He replied. He certainly did not put the question in regard to the mere [expression of the] intention [of a minor]. What he asked was whether his intention¹ could be inferred from his act.² For example: there stood [an animal intended for] a burnt-offering on the south side [of the altar], and the minor brought it to the north side and slaughtered it there. Should we say that since he brought it to the north side and slaughtered it there [it is clear that] he had the proper intention,³ or should we rather say that he did not find a convenient place [in the south]?⁴

But has not R. Johanan already expressed his view in such a case? For we have learnt:⁵ If [a man] took his fruit up to the roof in order to keep it free from maggots and dew fell upon it, it does not come within the rule of 'if water be put'.⁶ If, however, he had the Intention [that the dew should fall upon it] it comes within the rule of 'if water be put'. If it was taken up by a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor, it does not come within the rule of 'if water be put', even though they had the intention [that the dew should fall upon it], because the law recognizes the act of a minor but not [mere] intention. And R. Johanan explained that this rule only applies where they⁷ did not turn the fruit over, but if they did turn the fruit over it comes within the rule of 'if water be put'.⁸ The question [R. Johanan] put was this: Was this rule⁹ laid down by the Torah or only by the Rabbis?¹⁰ R. Nahman b. Isaac gives this version [of the foregoing argument]. R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan put this question: Does the law recognize the act of a minor [as sufficient evidence of his expressed intention] or not? Said R. Ammi to R. Hiyya. He might as well have put the question in regard to the [expression of the] intention [of a minor]. Why did he not put the question in regard to the [expression of the] intention [of a minor]? Because we have learnt that the law does not recognize the [expression of the] intention of a minor [as sufficient evidence of his intention]; for the same reason he need not have put the question in regard to the act of a minor because we have learnt that the law recognizes the act of a minor [as sufficient evidence of his expressed intention]! — The question [R. Johanan] put was this: Is this rule laid down by the Torah or only by the Rabbis? — And [R. Johanan himself] solved [it]: The act of a minor [as sufficient evidence of his unexpressed intention] is recognized even by the Torah; [the mere expression of] his intention is not recognized even by the Rabbis;¹¹ the [unexpressed] intention of the minor evidenced from his act is not recognized by the Torah but only by the Rabbis.

Samuel put the following question to R. Huna: Whence do we know that an act performed incidentally in connection with sacrifices¹² is invalid? — [He replied,] Because it is written: And he shall slaughter the bullock,¹³ thus teaching that the slaughtering should be intended for a bullock. Thereupon Samuel said: This we already know;¹⁴ but whence do we know that this rule is indispensable?¹⁵ — He replied: It is written: Ye shall slaughter it at your will,¹⁶ that is to say, slaughter it intentionally.¹⁷

MISHNAH. THAT WHICH IS SLAUGHTERED BY A GENTILE¹⁸ IS NEBELAH¹⁹ AND DEFILES BY CARRYING.²⁰

GEMARA. It is nebelah only but it is not prohibited for all other purposes. Who is the authority for this view? — R. Hiyya b. Abba in the name of R. Johanan replied: It cannot be R. Eliezer, for were it R. Eliezer [it should also be prohibited for all other purposes] since he maintains that the thoughts of a gentile are usually directed towards idolatry.²¹

R. Ammi said that the Mishnah is to be interpreted thus: THAT WHICH IS SLAUGHTERED BY A GENTILE IS NEBELAH, but [that which is slaughtered] by a min²² is presumed to be intended for idolatry.²¹ We thus learnt here what our Rabbis have taught: That which is slaughtered by a min [is regarded as] intended for idolatry, his bread as the bread of Cutheans,²³ his wine as wine used for idolatrous purposes, his scrolls of the Law as books of soothsayers,²⁴ his fruit as tebel.²⁵ Some add, even

(1) I.e., where he did not express it.

(2) In cases where the intention was unexpressed but the act was evidence thereof.

(3) Sacrifices of the highest grade had to be slaughtered on the north side of the altar; v. Zeb, chap. V. Furthermore, every act in connection with any sacrifice had to be intended for the particular sacrifice.

(4) So that the slaughtering of the animal may have been performed on the north side not because he knew that it was necessary to slaughter a burnt-offering there but because he found the place more convenient.

(5) Maksh, VI, 1.

(6) Lev. XI, 38. From this verse the law is derived that produce becomes susceptible to uncleanness only after it has been made wet by water or other liquids specified in Maksh. VI, 4. It is provided, however, that the owner must have applied the water to the produce intentionally, or, at least, that the presence of the water on the produce was acceptable to him. V. Maksh. I, 1.

(7) I.e., the deaf-mute, the imbecile or the minor.

(8) Their turning over the fruit shows that they intended the dew to fall on the other side of the fruit too. It must be assumed, however, that they did not expressly state their Specific purpose, for if they did, it would not be necessary for R. Johanan to teach this, for it is obvious that their act is conclusive evidence of their expressed intention. Here is a clear case of an act which, though not conclusive, might well serve to indicate the minor's intention; yet R. Johanan ruled that the law was satisfied with such evidence of intention.

(9) Viz., that the law recognizes the unexpressed intention of a minor where it can be inferred from his act.

(10) If the rule is Biblical then it would be applied in all cases, even where the effect of such application would produce a more lenient result; e.g., in the case of the burnt-offering mentioned above, the result of applying the rule would be to declare the sacrifice valid. If, however, the rule was only laid down by the Rabbis, it would only be applied in such cases where the effect of such application would produce a more stringent result; e.g. in the case of the fruit on the roof, the result of applying the rule would be to regard the fruit as susceptible to uncleanness.

(11) And therefore the expression of his intention is ignored in all cases, even where the effect would produce a more stringent result.

(12) E.g., a person while handling a knife unintentionally slaughters a consecrated animal.

(13) Lev. I, 5.

(14) Lit., 'that is in our hand'.

(15) I.e., that if the proper intention was absent the sacrifice is invalid even after the act.

(16) Lev. XIX, 5.

(17) Since we have two verses each directing that the slaughtering of a consecrated animal must be accompanied by the proper intention the rule becomes indispensable, in accordance with the Rabbinic dictum: wherever

Scripture repeats an injunction it is meant to be indispensable.

(18) Even though the slaughtering was performed according to ritual and in the presence of an Israelite, the animal is regarded as nebelah and may not be eaten; but also, like nebelah, it may be used for any other purpose.

(19) V. Glos.

(20) V. Lev. XI, 40.

(21) And it is established law that no use or benefit may be derived from anything connected with idolatrous worship.

(22) Heb. ihn pl. ohbhn. A Jew or a gentile who is devoted to the worship of idols, or who acts as priest unto idols, V. Glos.

(23) The bread of Cutheans (i.e., Samaritans) was forbidden to be eaten. V. Sheb. VIII, 10: He who eats the bread of a Cuthean is as one who eats the flesh of swine.

(24) Which serve for idolatrous purposes. V. Git. 45b: A scroll of the Law written by a min must be destroyed by fire.

(25) Produce from which there have not yet been separated the tithes and the priestly dues, and which may not be eaten on penalty of death at the hands of Heaven.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 13b

his children as bastards. And the first Tanna?¹ — He holds that he would not allow his wife to prostitute herself.

The Master stated above: 'THAT WHICH IS SLAUGHTERED BY A GENTILE IS NEBELAH'. But perhaps he is a min? — R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha answered: There are no minim among the gentiles. But we see that there are! Say: The majority of gentiles are not minim. For he accepts the opinion expressed by R. Hiyya b. Abba in the name of R. Johanan: The gentiles outside the land [of Israel] are not idolaters; they only continue the customs of their ancestors.

R. Joseph b. Minyomi stated in the name of R. Nahman: There are no minim among the idolatrous nations.² Now, to what would this rule apply? Do you say to shechitah? But surely, if what is slaughtered by a min who is an Israelite is prohibited, it goes without saying that what is slaughtered by a gentile min is prohibited! Do you then say it applies to the law of 'casting down into a pit'?³ But surely, if a min who is an Israelite may be cast down, it goes without saying that a gentile min may be cast down! R. 'Ukba b. Hama said: The rule applies to the matter of accepting sacrifices from them. For it has been taught:⁴ Of you,⁵ but not all of you, thus excluding an apostate. 'Of you', that is to say, among you [Israelites] is a distinction drawn but not among the gentiles.⁶ But are you correct in this? Perhaps this is the meaning [of the Baraitha]: As regards Israelites, you may accept sacrifices from the righteous but not from the wicked, but as regards gentiles you may not accept sacrifices from them at all?⁷ — You cannot entertain such a view, for it has been taught: [It would have sufficed had Scripture stated], a man,⁸ why does it state, 'a man, a man? To include gentiles, that they may bring either votive or freewill-offerings like an Israelite.

AND DEFILES BY CARRYING. Is not this obvious? Since it is nebelah [it follows that] it defiles by carrying! Raba answered: This is the interpretation. This animal defiles by carrying, but there is another [similar] case where the animal even defiles [men and utensils that are] in the same tent.⁹ Which is that? It is the case of an animal slaughtered as a sacrifice to idols. This then is in accordance with the view held by R. Judah b. Bathyra.¹⁰ Some report this statement as follows: Raba answered: This is the interpretation. This animal defiles by carrying, and there is another case which is similar to this one in that the animal [there too] only defiles by carrying but does not defile [men and utensils that are] in the same tent. Which is that? It is the case of an animal slaughtered as a sacrifice to idols. This then is not in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathyra. For it has been taught: R. Judah b. Bathyra said: Whence do we know that sacrifices unto idols defile [men and utensils that are] in the same tent? From the verse: They joined themselves also unto Baal-Peor and ate the sacrifices of the dead¹¹ as a dead body defiles [men and utensils that are] in the same tent so also do sacrifices unto idols.

MISHNAH. IF ONE SLAUGHTERED BY NIGHT,¹² LIKEWISE IF A BLIND MAN SLAUGHTERED. THE SLAUGHTERING IS VALID. GEMARA. The expression 'IF ONE SLAUGHTERED' implies that the slaughtering is valid only after the act but it does not imply a right in the first instance.¹³ Now is not this contradicted [by the following statement]: At all times one may slaughter,¹⁴ by day or by night, and [in all places,] whether on the rooftop or on top of a ship?¹⁵ — R. Papa answered [that in the latter case] the man slaughters to the light of a torch. R. Ashi added. This is supported by the context, for in the latter case night and day are in juxtaposition,¹⁶ whereas in the Mishnah night and a blind man are in juxtaposition.¹⁷ This is conclusive.

(1) What is his view about the children?

(2) I.e., the law does not regard a gentile mill as a min.

(3) V. A.Z. 26a and b: Minim, betrayers and apostates may be endangered and need not be delivered from danger, whereas idolaters and Jewish shepherds of small cattle are not to be endangered, though one is not obliged to deliver them from danger. The expression 'cast down into a pit' is synonymous with 'endangering life'.

(4) V. supra p. 19.

(5) Lev. I, 2.

(6) I.e., sacrifices may be accepted from all gentiles without exception.

(7) And so when the Baraitha states that no distinction is made among the gentiles it is entirely negative, i.e., on no account and in no circumstances may sacrifices be accepted from gentiles.

(8) Lev. XXII, 18. The verse, translated literally, reads: A man, a man of the children of Israel . . . that bringeth his offering etc. It is suggested that the repetition of 'a man' extends the law to include such persons other than those contemplated in the ordinary meaning of the verse; in this case, gentiles.

(9) V. Num. XIX, 14: This is the law, when a man dieth in a tent, every one that cometh into the tent, and everything that is in the tent shall be unclean seven days. The rule laid down in this verse has been extended by the Rabbis to include a person or thing which is directly over (and thus forming a tent over) the unclean object.

(10) V. infra.

(11) Ps. CVI, 28.

(12) In the dark.

(13) And the reason is because it is to be feared that the slaughterer will not be able to ascertain whether he has sufficiently cut through the organs of the throat.

(14) This expression implies a right in the first instance to do so.

(15) Although we learnt (infra 41a) that one may not slaughter and allow the blood to run into the sea or vessel, lest it be said the slaughtering was an act of idolatrous worship to the deity of the sea, or that it was being collected for an idolatrous purpose, here, where the slaughtering is performed on the roof top and the blood collected in a vessel, there is no such apprehension, for it was collected in a vessel merely to avoid fouling the roof. Similarly where the blood is allowed to run into the sea from the top of the ship it is done merely to avoid fouling the top of the ship.

(16) Suggesting that the distinction is merely one of time but not necessarily that the slaughtering is done in the dark.

(17) Implying that the darkness of the night is intended, corresponding with the darkness of a blind man.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 14a

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SLAUGHTERED ON THE SABBATH OR ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, NOTWITHSTANDING HE IS GUILTY AGAINST HIS OWN LIFE,¹ THE SLAUGHTERING IS VALID.

GEMARA. R. Huna said that Hiyya b. Rab in an exposition [on this Mishnah] said in the name of Rab that the animal was nevertheless forbidden to be eaten that same day.² The colleagues thereupon suggested that [the reason for this decision was that] the view [expressed in the Mishnah] was that of R. Judah. Now where does R. Judah express such a view? — R. Abba said, in the matter of 'Readiness'.³ For we have learnt: One may cut up [on the Sabbath] pumpkins for beasts or a carcass⁴ for dogs. R. Judah says. It is forbidden to do so⁵ if the animal was not dead on the eve of the Sabbath, for then it would not belong to that class of things set in readiness for the Sabbath.⁶ This therefore shows that since it was not set in readiness on the eve of the Sabbath [for that particular use] it is forbidden [to be so used on the Sabbath]; so, too, in the case of our Mishnah, since the animal was not set in readiness on the eve of the Sabbath [for food] it is forbidden [to be so used on the Sabbath]. Thereupon Abaye said to him: What a comparison! In the case quoted the animal was originally set in readiness to serve for human food but now it merely serves for dog's food, whereas in the case of our Mishnah the animal was originally set in readiness to serve for human food and now too it serves for human food!⁷ — [He replied.] You are assuming that a living animal is intended for food; in reality it is intended for breeding purposes. If so, why is it permitted, on this view of R. Judah, to slaughter an animal on a festival?⁸ — R. Abba then replied. The truth of the matter is that a living animal is intended both for breeding purposes and for food. If it is slaughtered,⁹ this act proves that it was intended originally to serve for food; if it is not slaughtered,⁹ it proves that it was intended originally for breeding purposes.¹⁰ But surely R. Judah does not hold bererah!¹¹ Whence do we know this? Shall we say from the following [Baraita] wherein it is taught: If a man bought wine from the Cutheans¹² he may say. 'Let two logs which I intend later to set aside be terumah,¹³ ten first tithe,¹⁴ nine second tithe',¹⁵ and then, after redeeming [this latter tithe with money], he may drink it. This is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Judah. R. Jose and R. Simeon do not allow this?¹⁶ —

(1) For breaking the Sabbath the offender is put to death by stoning, cf. Exod. XXXI, 14-15 and Num. XV. 35; and for profaning the Day of Atonement he incurs the heavenly punishment of Kareth (v. Glos.) in accordance with Lev. XXIII, 30.

(2) Even if he desires to eat it raw.

(3) Heb. vbfv. The rule adopted by R. Judah is that such things which on the eve of the Sabbath were not set in readiness or intended for the purpose which they actually serve on the Sabbath are forbidden to be so used on the Sabbath. They are mukzeh (v. Glos.), set apart, not counted on for use. This rule is based on Ex. XVI, 5, and applies particularly to fruit which fell from the tree on the Sabbath and also to an animal slaughtered on the Sabbath. In these cases neither the fruit nor the animal can be said to have been set in readiness for food on the Sabbath since on the eve of the Sabbath the fruit was still on the tree and the animal was still alive; v. Bez. 2b.

(4) Even though the animal died on the Sabbath.

(5) Sc. to cut up the carcass.

(6) Since on the eve of the Sabbath the animal was still alive and so was not set in readiness for food, it is forbidden to be so used (i.e., for food) on the Sabbath (Shab. 156b).

(7) It should therefore be permitted on the Sabbath.

(8) Since the animal on the eve of the festival was kept for breeding purposes it is clearly mukzeh on the festival, and therefore forbidden. Nevertheless the law is established beyond all doubt that one may slaughter an animal on a festival.

(9) At a time when it is permitted so to do.

(10) And so in the case of our Mishnah, since the animal was not slaughtered before the Sabbath, it is clear that the owner intended to keep it for breeding purposes, accordingly it is mukzeh and therefore forbidden to be eaten on the Sabbath.

(11) Heb. vrhrc, retrospective designation, i.e., the legal effect resulting from an actual selection or disposal of things previously undefined as to their purpose. It is applied in our case thus: the purpose of a living animal is uncertain, but the subsequent use of the animal will define its purpose retrospectively. Unless we hold that the animal was definitely intended for food on the eve of the Festival it would be forbidden, according to R. Judah's view, to slaughter it and eat it on the Festival.

(12) Also called Samaritans. V. supra p. 5, n. 6. It was doubtful whether the Cutheans were wont to set aside the terumah (v. next note) and other dues or not, and therefore it was necessary when purchasing wine or other produce from them to set aside the various dues. The circumstances of this case are as follows: A man has bought 100 logs (a liquid measure) of wine from the Cutheans and has got no other vessels wherein to set aside the dues; or the case may be that it is the eve of Sabbath and there is not sufficient time wherein to set aside the dues before the Sabbath begins.

(13) An offering to be given to the priest. The amount to be so given 15 not specified in the Torah but it was the general practice to offer two per cent of the produce. V. Glos.

(14) This tithe had to be given to the Levite.

(15) This tithe had to be consumed by the owner in Jerusalem. The Torah permits the redemption of this tithe with money, which money must be spent in Jerusalem; cf. Deut. XIV, 25. In the present case the circumstances do not prevent the owner from redeeming this tithe with some money that he may possess.

(16) It is assumed that the issue between these Rabbis relates to bererah. It must be remembered that the wine named as dues is not actually separate from the rest, and R. Meir, holding bererah, argues that when this purchaser subsequently sets aside the various dues, either after the Sabbath or when he acquires sufficient vessels, it is deemed that that which is now set aside is identical with that which was originally named, and there is no fear at all that this person has drunk any of the wine which was consecrated as dues. The other Rabbis, including R. Judah, apparently do not hold bererah, and therefore forbid this procedure on the ground that it is not established retrospectively that that which this person now separates as dues is identical with that which was previously named, and it is to be feared that he may have drunk of the wine consecrated as dues.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 14b

[This case is quite different for] there the reasoning is expressly stated, viz., They said to R. Meir: Do you not agree that if the cask were to break the result would be that this person has from the outset been drinking untithed wine?¹ To this [R. Meir] replied: When it breaks . . . !² Rather we can derive it,³ from the teaching of Ayyo. For Ayyo taught: R. Judah says that a person cannot conditionally reserve for himself two contingencies simultaneously.⁴ [He may declare that] if a Sage comes to the east his 'erub⁵ at the east should serve him,⁶ and if to the west his 'erub at the west should serve him; but on no account [may he make such conditions] in the event of two Sages coming one to this side and the other to that side. Now it was argued. Why is it that in the event of two Sages coming one to this side and the other to that side that he may not make conditions? It is, is it not, because bererah is not held?⁷ Then even in the event of the Sage coming [to one side only], either to the east or to — the west, he should not be allowed to make conditions. [for the very same reason] that bererah is not held? And R. Johanan had explained that [in the latter case] the Sage had already arrived.⁸

Rather said R. Joseph:⁹ It is the view of R. Judah expressed in the matter of 'Vessels'. For we have learnt: Whatsoever vessels, which may be moved on the Sabbath, fragments thereof¹⁰ may likewise be moved on the Sabbath, provided they can perform aught in the nature of work,¹¹ e.g., fragments of a kneading trough that can be used for stopping the bung-hole of a cask, or fragments of a glass for covering the mouth of a flask. R. Judah says: Provided they can perform aught in the nature of their former work, e.g., fragments of a kneading trough that can have porridge poured into them, or fragments of a glass that can have oil poured into them. Now according to R. Judah [they are permitted to be moved] only if they can perform aught in the nature of their former work, but not if they can perform aught in the nature of some other work. This, therefore, shows that since they were not set in readiness on the eve of the Sabbath for that particular work, it is forbidden [to use them for such purpose on the Sabbath]; so, too. In the case of our Mishnah, since the animal was not set in readiness on the eve of the Sabbath for food, it is forbidden [to be so used on the Sabbath]. Thereupon Abaye said to him: What a comparison! There we are dealing with something that was originally a vessel and is now a fragment of a vessel, which is a case of nolad¹² and consequently forbidden; whereas here [in our Mishnah] we are dealing with something that was originally [intended for] food¹³ and now, too, is [intended for] food, it is therefore the same foodstuff merely more defined.¹⁴ And we have already ascertained that according to R. Judah, where the foodstuff is the same but more defined it is permitted.¹⁵ For we have learnt:¹⁶ One must not press fruit [on the Sabbath] in order to extract the juice, and even if the juice oozed out by itself it is forbidden.¹⁷ R. Judah says. If [the fruits were intended] to be eaten, the juice which oozed out is permitted,¹⁸ but if [they were kept only] for their juice, that which oozed out by itself is forbidden. [R. Joseph replied:¹⁹ But] has it not been stated in connection therewith: Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel that R. Judah accepts the opinion of the Rabbis in the case of baskets of olives and grapes?²⁰ Now the reason for this is clear, namely, since these fruits are usually kept for pressing one would always be inclined to do so at all times. Similarly it must be said [here in the case of our Mishnah], since an animal is usually kept for slaughtering one would always be inclined to do so.²¹ — [Abaye replied]. Indeed, the whole argument is based upon Rab's original statement, is it not? And Rab has stated that R. Judah was in conflict with the Rabbis even in the case of baskets of olives and grapes!²²

Rather said R. Shesheth b. Idi, It is the view of R. Judah expressed in the matter of 'Lamps'.

For it has been taught: A new lamp may be moved [on the Sabbath] from place to place but not an old one;²³ so according to R. Judah. But perhaps we are to understand R. Judah's view only in case of mukzeh on account of nausea,²⁴ but are we to understand that it applies also to cases of mukzeh in consequence of a ritual prohibition? — Yes, indeed, for it has been taught: R. Judah says,

(1) And it is because of the possibility of such an event happening that R. Judah and his colleagues prohibit this procedure and not because they do not hold bererah.

(2) I.e., R. Meir regards such a possibility too remote to be taken into consideration.

(3) That R. Judah does not hold bererah.

(4) This is explained anon.

(5) According to Sabbath law no person is allowed to go on the Sabbath beyond two thousand cubits from the boundaries of his town. If, however, he desires to go further, he must make an 'erub, i.e., he deposits on the eve of Sabbath some food, enough for two meals, at a spot at the limit of the prescribed two thousand cubits' distance. This spot is regarded in law as his temporary abode and he may then go two thousand cubits beyond it. Having, however, gained two thousand cubits in one direction he forfeits his right of movement in any other direction outside the town boundaries. It is obvious that a person can make only one 'erub and place it in that direction in which he intends to go. It is, however, provided for, in the event of a person being undecided as to which direction he will take on the Sabbath, that he may place a conditional 'erub in each direction, and on the Sabbath when he makes his decision the 'erub in the particular direction chosen will be effective.

(6) In order that he be enabled to attend the lecture of the Sage on the Sabbath which will be held at some place more than two thousand cubits beyond the boundaries of his town.

(7) In the case of a conditional 'erub recourse must be had to the principle of bererah. For when each 'erub is placed, it is not known which is to be effective; it is only when the decision is made on the Sabbath that a particular 'erub is determined retrospectively to be the one intended to be effective from the outset.

(8) The latter case therefore does not come within the purview of bererah since it is actually known and determined before the Sabbath which 'erub is effective by the arrival of the Sage. All that remains is for this person to ascertain this fact. This Baraitha, however, clearly proves from the first clause that R. Judah does not hold bererah; hence the suggestion of R. Abba that the view in the Mishnah corresponds with that of R. Judah in the matter of 'Readiness' can no longer be maintained.

(9) In answer to the first question: Where does R. Judah express the view which accords with that of our Mishnah.

(10) Even if the vessel was broken on the Sabbath.

(11) That they might still be regarded as vessels and not as potsherds.

(12) Heb, Skub 'born, created'. An object which is Produced, and only becomes available for a particular use, on a festival or on the Sabbath, may not be so used on that day.

(13) For it is established according to R. Judah that an animal while living is kept in order to be slaughtered and used as food, for otherwise it would be forbidden to slaughter an animal on the Festival.

(14) Lit., 'broken off', separated and distinct. Consequently the animal should be Permitted to be eaten even when slaughtered on the Sabbath.

(15) For it is not a case of nolad.

(16) Shab. 143b.

(17) It is a precautionary measure lest one will press the fruit deliberately for the sake of its juice on the Sabbath, which would constitute a breach of one of the main classes of work prohibited.

(18) R. Judah does not regard the juice which oozed out of the fruit as nolad, i.e., something new issuing from the fruit, but as the fruit itself in a more particular and defined form.

(19) The statement which follows is a counter argument against Abaye, and it further attempts to show that the view of R. Judah in the Mishnah quoted corresponds with the view of our Mishnah.

(20) For these fruits are usually kept for pressing, and it is only with such, other fruits as pomegranates and mulberries that R. Judah adopts a lenient view.

(21) And therefore the animal is forbidden to be eaten on the Sabbath for fear that one might deliberately slaughter it on the Sabbath.

(22) In which case also, R. Judah maintains a lenient view. Accordingly a similar view should be adopted in our Mishnah; so that the original question remains open: Why, according to R. Judah, is the animal forbidden to be eaten on the Sabbath?

(23) A new earthenware lamp before being used for lighting might well be used for other purposes, but an old lamp having already had oil poured into it for lighting would rarely be used for another purpose — it would be nauseating to do so — and so would be regarded in law as mukzeh (set apart, not counted on for use), and consequently forbidden to be moved. This same reasoning applies to our Mishnah: since the animal was not slaughtered before the Sabbath it certainly was not counted on as food for the Sabbath; it is therefore mukzeh and forbidden to be eaten.

(24) As in the case of an old lamp which has been used for lighting. In the case of our Mishnah, however, the animal is mukzeh in consequence of a ritual prohibition.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 15a

All metal lamps¹ may be moved on the Sabbath, excepting a lamp that has been alight on this Sabbath.² But perhaps it might be suggested that in the latter case the law is exceptional since [the lamp] has been put away by the hand of man!³ Rather said R. Ashi: It is the view of R. Judah expressed in the matter of 'Cooking'. For it has been taught: If a man cooked food on the Sabbath inadvertently, [even] he himself may eat of it,⁴ but if deliberately, he may not eat of it:⁵ so R. Meir. R. Judah says: If inadvertently, he may eat of it only after the termination of the Sabbath,⁶ but if deliberately, he may never eat of it.⁷ R. Johanan ha-Sandlar⁸ says: If inadvertently, it may be eaten after the termination of the Sabbath by others only but not by himself, but if deliberately, it may never be eaten, neither by him nor by others.⁹ But may we not explain [the Mishnah] to be the case of a deliberate act and so in accord with R. Meir's view? — This cannot be, for [in our Mishnah,] Sabbath and the Day of Atonement are stated in juxtaposition, suggesting that as on the Day of Atonement the one who slaughtered may on no account eat of it whether he acted inadvertently or deliberately,¹⁰ so on the Sabbath he may not eat of it whether he acted inadvertently or deliberately.¹¹ But how can you explain [the Mishnah] to be a case of inadvertence and in accord with R. Judah's view? Does it not read: NOTWITHSTANDING HE IS GUILTY AGAINST HIS OWN LIFE?¹² — This is the interpretation: NOTWITHSTANDING HE IS GUILTY AGAINST HIS OWN LIFE had he acted deliberately, since in our case he has acted inadvertently, the slaughtering is valid. But may we not explain the Mishnah in accordance with R. Johanan ha-Sandlar who holds the view that whether he acted inadvertently or deliberately he may never eat of it? — Nay, for R. Johanan ha-Sandlar discriminates between him and others after the termination of the Sabbath, whereas the Tanna of our Mishnah states: THE SLAUGHTERING IS VALID, without discriminating between him and others.

A Tanna recited before Rab: If a man cooked food on the Sabbath inadvertently, even he himself may eat of it, but if deliberately he may not eat of it. Rab thereupon bade him to keep silent. Now why did Rab silence him? Was it because Rab accepts the view of R. Judah and the Tanna was reciting the teaching in accordance with R. Meir's view? [Is he then justified,] because he himself accepts R. Judah's view, in bidding one who recites according to R. Meir's view to keep silent? Moreover, is it true to say that Rab accepts R. Judah's view? Has not R. Hanan b. Ammi reported that whenever Rab laid down the rule to his disciples he would rule according to R. Meir's view, but whenever he lectured at the public session he would expound the law according to R. Judah's view because of the ignorant masses present?¹³ And if you will say that this Tanna was reciting the teaching in the presence of Rab at the public Session?¹⁴ — Would then the public pay attention to the Tanna? They would pay attention to the Amora!¹⁵ — R. Nahman b. Isaac answered that the Tanna recited before Rab the case of slaughtering, thus: If a man slaughtered on the Sabbath inadvertently, he himself may eat of it, but if deliberately, he may not eat of it. Whereupon [Rab] said to him, You are inclined, no doubt, to accept R. Meir's view; but even so, R. Meir adopts a lenient view only in the case of cooking, inasmuch as the food could indeed be chewed raw;¹⁶ but not in case of slaughtering, since the animal could not be eaten raw.¹⁷ But then our Mishnah is a case of slaughtering and [it has been remarked above that] R. Huna said that Hiyya b. Rab in an exposition [on the Mishnah] in the name of Rab said that the animal was nevertheless forbidden to be eaten that same day, and furthermore that the colleagues thereupon suggested that the view expressed was that of R. Judah. Now does it not follow, therefore, that R. Meir would permit it to be eaten [that same day]?¹⁸ — R. Meir only permits it in such circumstances

(1) Even old ones.

(2) I.e., when the Sabbath began this lamp was alight, and so it immediately became mukzeh in consequence of the law prohibiting the moving of a lighted lamp for fear of extinguishing it, and it remains mukzeh the whole of the Sabbath.

(3) The mukzeh in this case is brought about by the definite act of man, that is, when he lights the lamp; whereas in our Mishnah the mukzeh comes of itself with the commencement of the Sabbath. In this latter case it is suggested that the mukzeh is not so strict, and if by some means it comes about that the animal is fit for eating it should be permitted.

(4) Immediately on the same day.

(5) Nor anybody else on the Sabbath.

(6) He and also others, but only after the lapse of such time as would be taken to cook the food, so that no benefit be derived from cooking on the Sabbath.

(7) Though others may eat of it after the Sabbath.

(8) The sandal maker; or, the Alexandrian. He was a disciple of R. Akiba.

(9) It is suggested that in our Mishnah the slaughtering was done inadvertently, nevertheless the animal is permitted to be eaten only after the Sabbath, thus being entirely in agreement with R. Judah's view.

(10) For it is a day of fasting.

(11) According to R. Meir, however, if he acted inadvertently he may eat of it immediately on the Sabbath.

(12) The death penalty is incurred only when one acts deliberately.

(13) Because of these, Rab would teach the stricter view, i.e., R. Judah's, merely as a precautionary measure.

(14) And for this reason Rab silenced him.

(15) Sc. Rab's Amora. The official speaker attached to a school or synagogue who expounded aloud to the public what the Rabbi said to him in brief and in a low voice.

(16) So that not only is there no infringement of the Sabbath laws, since the cooking was done inadvertently, but there is not even the prohibition of mukzeh since whilst raw it was also fit for food.

(17) I.e., whilst alive; so that it would be prohibited on the ground of mukzeh.

(18) In contradiction to what has just been stated in the name of Rab as to the view of R. Meir.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 15b

as when there was an invalid in the house on the eve of the Sabbath.¹ If that be so, then why does R. Judah forbid it? — It must be the case of an invalid who recovered [on the Sabbath].²

The above view³ agrees with the statement of R. Aha b. Adda in the name of Rab, (others say, with the statement of R. Isaac b. Adda in the name of Rab), viz., If a man slaughtered [an animal] on the Sabbath for an invalid,⁴ it may not be eaten by a healthy person, but if a man cooked food on the Sabbath for an invalid, it may be eaten by a healthy person. What is the reason? — In the latter case the food could be eaten raw, in the former the animal could not be eaten raw.⁵

R. Papa⁶ stated: In certain cases even when a man-slaughtered [for an invalid on the Sabbath], it may be eaten [by a healthy person], e.g., where the invalid was ill already on the eve of the Sabbath.⁷ And in certain cases even when a man cooked [for one who fell ill on the Sabbath], it may not be eaten [by a healthy person], e.g., where a pumpkin was plucked [out of the ground on the Sabbath and cooked].⁸

R. Dimi of Nehardea said: The law is that where a man slaughtered on the Sabbath for an invalid,⁹ [the meat] may be eaten raw by a healthy person. What is the reason? — Inasmuch as one cannot have even an olive's bulk of meat without slaughtering [the animal], it is clear that the slaughtering was done for the sake of the invalid. But where a man cooked on the Sabbath for an invalid,⁹ it [the food] may not be eaten by a healthy person, for [otherwise] it is to be feared lest a greater amount will be cooked on account of the healthy person.

MISHNAH. IF ONE SLAUGHTERED WITH [THE SMOOTH EDGE OF] A HAND SICKLE,¹⁰ WITH A FLINT OR WITH A REED, THE SLAUGHTERING IS VALID. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER; AT ALL TIMES ONE MAY SLAUGHTER; WITH ANY IMPLEMENT ONE MAY SLAUGHTER, EXCEPTING A SCYTHE,¹¹ A SAW, TEETH¹² OR A FINGER NAIL,¹³ SINCE THESE STRANGLE.¹⁴

GEMARA. The expression 'IF ONE SLAUGHTERED' implies that the slaughtering is valid only after the act but it does not imply a right in the first instance. Now this view is reasonable in the case of a hand sickle, for it is always to be feared lest one will slaughter with the other edge;¹⁵ but is it right to say that one may not slaughter with a flint or reed in the first instance? Is there not an obvious contradiction from the following [Baraita]: With any implement one may slaughter.¹⁶ with a flint, with glass or with a reed haulm? — It is no contradiction, for the latter statement refers to [a reed or flint] that is detached [from the ground], whereas our Mishnah refers to [a reed or flint] that is attached [to the ground]. For R. Kahana reported: If one slaughtered with an implement that was attached to the ground. Rabbi declares the slaughtering invalid; but R. Hiyya declares it valid. And even R. Hiyya declares it valid only after the act, but there is no right to do so in the first instance.¹⁷

Now what is the position? [Our Mishnah is] in agreement with R. Hiyya and the slaughtering is valid only after the act! Then what of the following which was taught: With any implement one may slaughter,¹⁶ whether it be detached or attached, whether the knife be on top and the throat below, or the knife below and the throat on top? Who can be the author [of this Baraitha]? It can be neither Rabbi nor R. Hiyya: If R. Hiyya, the slaughtering is valid only after the act but not in the first instance; if Rabbi, such slaughtering is invalid even after the act! — In truth, the author is R. Hiyya and he is [indeed] of the opinion that such¹⁸ slaughtering is permitted even in the first instance; and as to the reason why the dispute is reported with regard to the validity of such slaughtering after the act it is in order to demonstrate the [strong] view of Rabbis.¹⁹ If this be so, what of our Mishnah which reads: IF ONE SLAUGHTERED, implying that it is valid only after the act but not a right in the first instance, who can be the author thereof? It can be neither Rabbi nor R. Hiyya; if R. Hiyya, the slaughtering should be permitted even in the first instance; if Rabbi, it is always invalid even after the act! — In truth, the author [of the Baraitha] is R. Hiyya who holds that such slaughtering is permitted even in the first instance; and as to our Mishnah, which reads: IF ONE SLAUGHTERED, the author of it is Rabbi. But is not Rabbi then contradicting himself?²⁰ — There is no contradiction; for in the one case²¹ the implement had always been so attached [by nature], whereas in the other case²² the implement was first loose and subsequently attached. Whence do you know that a distinction is to be drawn between that which was always attached and that which was first loose and subsequently attached? — From the following [Baraitha] which was taught: If one slaughtered with a wheel,²³ the slaughtering is valid; with an implement that was attached to the ground, the slaughtering is valid; if one inserted a knife into a wall and slaughtered, [moving the throat of the animal to and fro across the knife], the slaughtering is valid; if there was a sharp flint jutting from the wall, or a reed growing of itself, and one slaughtered therewith, the slaughtering is invalid.

(1) In the case of an invalid an animal, even alive, is always regarded as set aside for food, for in such circumstances it is permitted to slaughter it on the Sabbath, in accordance with the Rabbinic dictum: the duty of saving life supersedes the Sabbath laws.

(2) And the animal was slaughtered after the invalid had recovered. Mukzeh of course does not apply, since on the eve of Sabbath the animal was set in readiness for food for the invalid. The difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Judah is, therefore, only with regard to the breaking of the Sabbath by the slaughterer inadvertently; according to the latter he is to be penalized for his inadvertent act, whilst according to the former he is not.

(3) Sc. the explanation by R. Nahman b. Isaac as to why Rab bade the Tanna to keep silent, which introduced the distinction between foodstuffs which can be eaten raw and those which cannot.

(4) Who fell ill on this Sabbath.

(5) For although there is no infringement of the Sabbath laws, since the work was done for the invalid, there is, however, in the case of slaughtering the prohibition of mukzeh involved.

(6) MS.M. Raba.

(7) There is here neither the profanation of the Sabbath, since the slaughtering was for the invalid, nor mukzeh, since the invalid was already ill before the Sabbath.

(8) It is forbidden to be eaten because of mukzeh, since on the eve of the Sabbath the pumpkin was still attached to the ground. Cf. however Tosaf ad loc.

(9) Who was ill already on the eve of the Sabbath.

- (10) An implement with two cutting edges, one being smooth and the other serrated.
- (11) An implement with indentations.
- (12) Attached to the jaw bone of a dead animal.
- (13) Attached to the person.
- (14) These implements do not cut but tear the organs of the throat and consequently strangle the animal. In the case of the finger-nail it is prohibited because it is attached to the person. V. infra 16a.
- (15) Which is serrated and so invalidates the slaughtering.
- (16) Even in the first instance.
- (17) Accordingly our Mishnah is in agreement with R. Hiyya's view.
- (18) I.e., slaughtering with an implement which is attached to the ground.
- (19) That the slaughtering is invalid even after the act.
- (20) In the Mishnah Rabbi maintains that slaughtering with an implement attached to the ground is valid after the act, yet in dispute with R. Hiyya he declares such slaughtering absolutely invalid.
- (21) In dispute with R. Hiyya, where Rabbi declares the slaughtering invalid.
- (22) In our Mishnah, where Rabbi declares the slaughtering valid after the act.
- (23) A knife was fixed to the wheel so that it cut the throat of the animal whilst the wheel revolved.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 16a

Now is there not a contradiction here?¹ — This proves that there is a distinction between that which was always attached and that which was first loose and subsequently attached.² This is proved.

The Master said: 'If one slaughtered with a wheel, the slaughtering is valid'. But was it not taught [in another Baraitha] that the slaughtering is invalid? — It is no contradiction, for the former [Baraitha] deals with a potter's wheel,³ whereas the latter with a wheel turned by water.⁴ If you wish, however, I can say that in both [Baraithas] the wheel was turned by water, and yet there is no contradiction, for in the former case it was turned by the first onrush⁵ [of the water], whereas in the latter case it was turned by the subsequent onrush [of the water]. And this [distinction] is in agreement with R. Papa's statement, who said that if a man bound his neighbour and turned on to him a jet of water so that the victim died, he is culpable. What is the reason? — It [the water jet] is, as it were, his arrow wherewith the victim has been attacked. But this is [the law] only [in the case] where [the victim was killed] by the first onrush⁶ of the water, but not [where he was] killed by the subsequent onrush⁷ of the water, for then the act was but the indirect cause of the death.

Rab was once sitting behind R. Hiyya whilst R. Hiyya was before Rabbi, when Rabbi, in session, expounded the following: Whence is it derived that the slaughtering must be performed with a detached implement? From this verse: And he took the knife to slay.⁸ Rab then asked R. Hiyya: What can he mean? — He replied: It is just idle talk!⁹ But does he not adduce a verse? — The verse merely serves to show the enthusiasm of Abraham.¹⁰

Raba stated: I have no doubt at all that in the law concerning idolatry, an object which was first loose and subsequently attached to the ground is regarded as detached. For Rab¹¹ has ruled that if a man worshipped his own house,¹² it thereby becomes forbidden [to be used for any purpose].

Now if you were to hold that such an object is to be regarded as attached, wherefore is the house forbidden? Is it not written, [Ye shall surely destroy. . .] their gods upon the mountains,¹³ but not the mountains which are themselves their gods?¹⁴ In the law concerning the susceptibility of plants to become unclean,¹⁵ it is the subject of dispute between Tannaim.¹⁶ For we have learnt:¹⁷ If one inverted a dish and placed it upon a wall in order that the dish might be washed [by the rainwater, and the rainwater subsequently ran off the dish on to foodstuffs], the rule of ‘if water be put’ applies.¹⁸ If, however, it was placed in order that the wall might not be damaged, [and the rainwater ran off the dish on to the foodstuffs], the rule of ‘if water be put’ does not apply.¹⁹ Now is there not an inconsistency here? The first clause reads: ‘If. . . in order that the dish might be washed, the rule of "if water be put" applies’. It follows, however, that if one placed it in order that the wall might be washed, [and the rainwater subsequently fell on the foodstuffs], the rule of ‘if water be put’ does not apply. Yet the second clause reads: ‘If it was placed in order that the wall might not be damaged, the rule of "if water be put" does not apply’. It follows, however, that if it was placed in order that the wall might be washed [and the rainwater subsequently fell on the foodstuffs], the rule of ‘If water be put’ applies. — R. Eleazar replied. You must break up [this Mishnah], for he who taught the first clause could not have taught the second!²⁰ R. Papa, however, answered: Indeed, the whole was taught by one Tanna, but the first clause deals with the wall of a cave,²¹ whereas the second clause deals with a built-up wall. Accordingly, the Mishnah is to be read thus: If one inverted a dish and placed it upon a wall in order that the dish might be washed, the rule of ‘if water be put’ applies; from which it follows that if one placed it in order that the wall might be washed, the rule of ‘if water be put’ does not apply. Now this is stated only in the case of a cave wall; but in the case of a built-up wall the law is: if one placed it in order that the wall might not be damaged, the rule of ‘if water be put’ does not apply; from which it follows that if one placed it in order that the wall might be washed, the rule of ‘if water be put’ applies.

Raba now raised the question:

- (1) Between the second and last statements of this Baraitha.
 - (2) In the second clause the implement was first loose and subsequently attached to the ground, in which case the slaughtering is valid, whilst in the last clause it was always so attached by nature, and so the slaughtering is invalid.
 - (3) A wheel turned by the hand of the potter, in which case the slaughtering is valid. It is suggested, however, that even in the case of a potter's wheel the slaughtering is valid only if the throat was cut by the first revolution of the wheel. The subsequent revolutions are not directly referable to the human act. V. comment of R. Jonah on Ber.; end of chap. VIII.
 - (4) The slaughtering in this case is invalid for it is essential that there should be man power in the act of slaughtering. V. infra 31a and Deut. XXVII, 7.
 - (5) The water having been released by man, the slaughtering of the animal is directly referable to the act of man and is therefore valid.
 - (6) In this case the victim was placed close to the water outlet and the murderer then released the water jet, which in its first spurt inundated the victim.
 - (7) Here the victim was placed some distance away from the water outlet, so that the act of releasing the water jet was not the immediate and direct cause of death, for death came about only later on when the water actually reached the victim.

- (8) Gen. XXII, 10. This verse certainly suggests that the knife used was a detached implement.
- (9) Lit., ‘a vav carved on wood’, i.e., something unintelligible and indistinct like a line drawn on a rough piece of wood. He meant to say that Rabbi was not to be taken seriously, for R. Hiyya is of the opinion that it is not essential for the slaughtering to be performed with a detached implement.
- (10) Abraham took a knife with him merely because he was in doubt whether he would find on the holy mountain a suitable implement wherewith to slaughter his sacrifice.
- (11) So Bah.; cur. ed: ‘A master said’.
- (12) A house consists of materials originally loose which were subsequently built up and attached to the ground.
- (13) Deut. XII, 2.
- (14) This verse proves that whatever is attached cannot become prohibited, even if it is itself an object of idolatrous worship.
- (15) From the verse in Lev. XI, 38: If water be put upon seed, and aught of their carcass fill thereon, it is unclean unto you, is derived the rule that produce or foodstuffs, in order to be rendered capable of becoming unclean, must first be made wet by water or other specified liquids (v. Maksh. VI, 4). So that the rule should apply, that is, that the produce should become susceptible to uncleanness, it is necessary that: (a) the water should have been applied purposely, or (b) the presence of the water on the foodstuff should have afforded pleasure or should have been acceptable at some time to the owner, or (c) where the water on the foodstuff was not acceptable, the presence of this same water on some other object should have previously afforded pleasure, provided that such object was loose or detached.
- (16) Whether what was first loose and subsequently attached is to be regarded as attached or not. V. R. Eleazar's view infra.
- (17) Maksh. IV, 3.
- (18) This case would come under rule (c) in note 5 supra.
- (19) Because here the rainwater is in no wise acceptable; cf. rule (b).
- (20) I.e., this Mishnah contains the different opinions of two Tannaim.
- (21) I.e., a wall so formed by nature, as opposed to a wall built up from loose materials.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 16b

In the law concerning slaughtering, how are we to regard an implement which was first loose and subsequently attached? Come and hear: If there was a sharp stone jutting from the wall, or a reed growing of itself, and one slaughtered therewith, the slaughtering is invalid!¹ — It is dealing here with the wall of a cave. Indeed the context proves this, for it puts ‘wall’ in juxtaposition with ‘a reed growing of itself’.² This is proved.

Come and hear: If one inserted a knife into a wall and slaughtered, the slaughtering is valid! — This case is different because one would not allow the knife to remain fixed [to the wall].³ Come and hear: [If one slaughtered] with an implement that was attached to the ground, the slaughtering is valid!⁴ — perhaps this clause is defined by the subsequent clause [of this Baraita, thus]: What is meant by ‘an implement that was attached’? A knife, which clearly would not remain fixed permanently.⁵

The Master said: ‘If one inserted a knife into a wall and slaughtered, the slaughtering is valid’. Said R. ‘Anan in the name of Samuel: This is the law provided the knife was on top and the throat of the animal below.’⁶ If, however, the knife was below and the throat of the animal on top, [the slaughtering is invalid], for it is to be feared that the head might press down heavily upon the knife.⁷ But does not the aforementioned⁸ [Baraita] read: ‘Whether the knife be below and the throat on top or the knife on top and the throat below’? — R. Zebid answered: The cases are to be interpreted each in its own way, thus: ‘Whether the knife be below and the throat on top’, where [the knife is] loose;⁹ ‘or the knife on top and the throat below’, where [the knife is] attached. R. Papa answered, [The Baraita deals] with [the slaughtering of] a bird which is of light weight.¹⁰

R. Hisda stated in the name of R. Isaac, (others report that it was taught in a Baraita) viz., Five rules have been laid down in connection with a reed haulm:¹¹ (i) One must not slaughter with it, (ii) One must not perform circumcision with it, (iii) One must not cut flesh with it, (iv) One must not pick the teeth with it, (v) One must not cleanse oneself with it.

‘One must not slaughter with it’. But has it not been taught: One may slaughter with any implement, with flint, with glass or with a reed haulm? — R. Papa answered: [This Baraita deals] with simuna of the marshes.¹²

‘One must not cut flesh with it’. R. Papa used to cut with it the entrails of fish, for they are transparent.¹³ Rabbah son of R. Huna used to cut with it the flesh of chicken, for it is tender.¹⁴

‘One must not cleanse oneself with it’. But is it not indeed [prohibited to do so] because of what a Master said viz., Whosoever cleanses himself [after an evacuation] with a material that is inflammable tears away the ligaments [of the anus]?¹⁵ R. Papa answered: We must say [that the Baraita deals with] the cleansing of the opening of a wound.

ALL MAY SLAUGHTER; AND AT ALL TIMES ONE MAY SLAUGHTER. ALL MAY SLAUGHTER, that is to say, everything must be slaughtered,¹⁶ including birds.¹⁷

AT ALL TIMES ONE MAY SLAUGHTER. Who is the Tanna who holds this view? Rabbah replied: It is R. Ishmael. For it has been taught: [It is written] When the Lord thy God shall enlarge thy border, as He hath promised thee, and thou shalt say: ‘I will eat flesh’ . . .¹⁸ This verse, says R. Ishmael, is stated specially in order to permit the Israelites to eat flesh at will.¹⁹ For in the beginning they were forbidden to eat flesh at will,²⁰ but on entering the land of Israel they were permitted. But, now they are exiled, it might be said that they should revert to the former restriction; the Mishnah therefore teaches us: AT ALL TIMES ONE MAY SLAUGHTER. To this R. Joseph demurred, [In the first place,] why does the Mishnah read: AT ALL TIMES ONE MAY SLAUGHTER? It should read, ‘At all times one may slaughter and eat the flesh’!²¹ And in the second place, why were they forbidden in the beginning? [Surely] because they were near to the Sanctuary.²² And why were they permitted subsequently? [Similarly] because they were far away from the Sanctuary.

(1) It is suggested now that the stone was at some time inserted into the wall; nevertheless the slaughtering is said to be invalid, thus proving that such an implement is to be regarded as attached.

(2) Indicating that in each case it was so attached by nature.

(3) Lit., ‘he does not abandon it’. It was attempted to prove from this clause that whatever was loose and subsequently attached is regarded as loose; but it fails because it deals only with the case of a knife, which could not have been intended to be attached permanently. Other things, however, which could be thought of as attached permanently might be regarded as attached.

(4) This clause deals with an implement which was loose but was subsequently attached, v. supra p. 75, n.6.

(5) The slaughtering is therefore valid. The question put by Raba remains unanswered.

(6) And the slaughterer moved the head to and fro across the knife.

(7) This would invalidate the slaughtering; v. p. 37, n. 8.

(8) Supra p. 74.

(9) In this case the slaughterer holds the knife beneath the throat of the animal and cuts upwards.

(10) There is, therefore, no fear of the head pressing heavily on to the knife. According to R. Papa, both cases of the Baraita deal with a knife which is attached.

(11) In all the following cases there is the danger of splinters breaking away from the reed and penetrating into the matter which is being cut, causing thereby damage or hurt. In the case of slaughtering it is feared that a splinter will perforate the gullet of the animal, thus invalidating the slaughtering.

(12) A species of reed which is smooth and hard. With such reeds there is no fear of splinters breaking off.

(13) And any splinter that might be lodged in them would easily be seen.

(14) So that there is no fear of splinters, for no pressure is necessary in cutting the flesh of a chicken.

(15) V. Shab, 81a. The teacher no doubt had in mind such materials as wood or twigs which if used for cleansing oneself might easily cause the injury mentioned.

(16) The word kfv 'all, everything', might just as well be taken as the object of the sentence, thus: One must slaughter everything.

(17) For in no passage in the Torah is shechitah ever mentioned in connection with birds. There is even the view that according to Biblical law birds need not be slaughtered at all. V. infra 27b.

(18) Deut. XII, 20.

(19) Lit., 'of desire'. I.e., on entering the Holy Land the Israelites would be permitted to slaughter animals at will and eat the flesh without having recourse to sacrifices.

(20) When the Israelites were in the wilderness they were not permitted to slaughter and eat flesh at will. The animal had first to be offered up as a sacrifice, v. Lev. XVII, 3 and 4.

(21) Seeing that the main point of the teaching is the permission to eat flesh at will.

(22) Lit., 'tabernacle'. It was therefore within reach of anyone who desired to eat meat to bring the animal as a sacrifice and to receive the meat for his own use after the blood and the fat had been offered upon the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 17a

Then is there not all the more reason [for them to be permitted] now that they are even further away from the Sanctuary!¹

Rather said R. Joseph: The Tanna of our Mishnah is R. Akiba. For it has been taught: [It is written] If the place which the Lord thy God will choose to put his name there be too far from thee, then thou shalt slaughter of thy herd and of thy flock.² This verse, says R. Akiba, is stated specially in order to prohibit the flesh of a stabbed animal. For in the beginning the Israelites were permitted to eat the flesh of a stabbed animal,³ but on entering the land of Israel they were forbidden. But now that they are in exile it might be said that they should revert to their former license, the Mishnah therefore teaches us: AT ALL TIMES ONE MAY SLAUGHTER.⁴

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. [AN ISRAELITE] WHO BUYS AN EMBRYO¹ OF AN ASS BELONGING TO A HEATHEN OR WHO SELLS ONE TO HIM, ALTHOUGH THIS IS NOT PERMITTED,² OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM,³ OR WHO RECEIVES [AN ANIMAL] FROM HIM TO LOOK AFTER⁴ OR WHO GIVES [HIS ASS] TO HIM TO LOOK AFTER,⁵ IS EXEMPT FROM THE [LAW OF THE] FIRSTLING,⁶ FOR IT SAYS:⁷ [‘I HALLOWED UNTO ME ALL THE FIRSTBORN] IN ISRAEL’, BUT NOT IN GENTILES⁸

GEMARA. What need is there for all these [cases mentioned in the Mishnah]⁹ — It is necessary [to state all these cases]. For if it taught only the case of HE WHO BUYS etc., I might have thought the reason was because he brings it [the animal] into the state of holiness¹⁰ but where he sells [to a heathen], since he releases it from holiness, he should be punished.¹¹ He accordingly states the second case [WHO SELLS etc.] What need is there for the statement OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM?¹² — It is to exclude the ruling of R. Judah Who said: A partnership with a heathen is subject to the law of the first-born.¹³ [The Mishnah] accordingly informs us [that a partnership with a heathen exempts the Israelite from the duty of the first-born]. What need is there for the case OR [AN ISRAELITE] WHO RECEIVES etc.?¹⁴ — It is necessary because [the Mishnah] wishes to teach the next case: OR [AN ISRAELITE] WHO GIVES [HIS ASS] TO HIM TO LOOK AFTER. And what need is there to state [the latter case itself.] OR [AN ISRAELITE] WHO GIVES etc.?¹⁵ — It is necessary. You might be inclined to assume that since the animal itself belongs to the Israelite¹⁶ we should punish him lest one come to confuse this with another animal.¹⁷ [The Mishnah] accordingly informs us that we have no such fear. We have learnt elsewhere:¹⁸ R. Judah permits the selling to a heathen of a maimed [animal]¹⁹ Ben Bathyra permits the selling of a horse.²⁰ The question was asked: What is R. Judah's ruling on selling an embryo to a heathen? Is the reason of R. Judah for allowing in that case²¹ because the animal is maimed and therefore an embryo also being incapable of work is on a par with a maimed [animal]? Or is the reason perhaps because a maimed [animal] is not a frequent occurrence,²² but a case of an embryo, being a frequent occurrence,²³ is unlike the case of a maimed [animal]? — Come and hear: OR WHO SELLS AN EMBRYO TO HIM ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED; and R. Judah does not contest this!²⁴ — But, according to your argument [in the cases mentioned in the Mishnah] OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP OR WHO RECEIVES FROM HIM OR WHO GIVES HIM, where [the Mishnah] does not expressly state that R. Judah differs, is it really the fact that he does not differ?²⁵ You must admit that he does differ without [the Mishnah] saying so; similarly here²⁶ also he differs without the Mishnah saying so. Come and hear: R. Judah says: If one received an animal from a heathen to look after²⁷ and it gave birth [to a firstling] we settle [with the gentile partner] for what it is worth and half of its value is given to the priest.²⁸ Or if [an Israelite] gives [an animal] to him [a heathen] to look after, although he is not permitted.²⁹ we punish him by compelling him to redeem the animal³⁰ even up to ten times its value and he gives its whole value to the priest.

(1) A firstling.

- (2) For one is forbidden to sell large cattle to a heathen because the animal is worked on the Sabbath. (A.Z. 14b).
- (3) Both purchasing an animal between them.
- (4) The Israelite for attending to the animal receiving in payment half of the offspring, but the animal itself belonging to the heathen.
- (5) The Israelite sharing a half or a third of the offspring.
- (6) Which required the Israelite to set apart the first-born as holy to be given to the priest and in the case of the firstling of an ass, to redeem it with a sheep, failing which its neck was broken. (Ex. XIII, 12, 13).
- (7) Num. III, 13.
- (8) Lit., 'in others'; where a Gentile has any share in the mother or the offspring, the firstborn is not holy.
- (9) HE WHO . . . SELLS ... FORMS A PARTNERSHIP etc., since obviously the principle that a non-Jew sharing in an animal or its offspring exempts the Israelite from the law of the first-born and which is applied in the first case (HE WHO BUYS etc.), applies equally to the others.
- (10) The animal coming into the possession of an Israelite will now rest on the Sabbath and therefore, having thereby performed a meritorious act he should not be punished by being made liable to observe the law of the firstling.
- (11) By being compelled to redeem it and give it to the priest.
- (12) If where the whole firstling belongs to the Israelite he is exempt, how much more so when he only shares in the offspring as a partner?
- (13) Half of the value of the first-born is consequently given to the priest.
- (14) Since, clearly, the rule that a non-Jew sharing in the animal or offspring exempts the Israelite from the law of the firstborn, applies here as in the previous passages.
- (15) What is the difference whether the Israelite undertakes to care for the heathen's animal or the non-Jew undertakes to attend to the Israelite's animal? For in both instances, since the non-Jew has a share in the offspring, the law of the first-born does not apply.
- (16) In the case of: OR WHO GIVES HIM etc., the whole animal, as well as half of the offspring. belongs to the Israelite.
- (17) In which the gentile has no portion either in the mother or in its offspring, claiming that exemption is also applicable in this instance.
- (18) A.Z. 14b.
- (19) An animal with a broken leg. The permission refers only to a place where there is no fear of carnal relations with animals.
- (20) Since a horse is generally used for riding, and if a gentile employed it in that manner on the Sabbath, there would be no breaking of the biblical prohibition of the Sabbath law, as riding on the Sabbath is only a rabbinic restriction.
- (21) In the case of a maimed animal.
- (22) And therefore we do not fear that if this is permitted, one would sell an ordinary animal to a heathen.
- (23) Because after its birth it is fit for work, and therefore if we allow it to be sold as an embryo, we may think that it is also permissible to sell an ordinary animal to a heathen.
- (24) And we are dealing with the case of an embryo and the Mishnah says ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED. Hence from the silence of R. Judah we may infer that the selling of an embryo to a heathen is forbidden according to every authority.
- (25) R. Judah differs from the Mishnah, as we have seen, with reference to a partnership with a heathen, and he also differs as stated later in the cases where an Israelite undertakes to look after a heathen's animal where a heathen looks after an Israelite's animal.
- (26) Where an Israelite sells an embryo to a heathen.

- (27) To share half the offspring between the Israelite and the heathen.
(28) The animal, however, is not consecrated for sacrifice on the altar, since half of it belongs to a heathen.
(29) To sell an animal to a heathen.
(30) From the possession of the heathen.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 2b

Now, does this¹ not refer to the case of an embryo?² — No, it refers to the animal.³ But it does not say ‘damaw’ [‘its value’]?⁴ — Read ‘dameha’.⁵ But does it not say ‘and he gives its whole value to the Priest’? Now if [the words ‘its value’] refer to the animal, what has the priest to do with it?⁶ — [No.]⁷ We are dealing here with a case where e.g., [an Israelite] gave him a pregnant animal to fatten;⁸ since we punish him for [selling the] animal [to a gentile,] we also punish him for [selling] an embryo.⁹ Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: R. Judah permits the selling of a maimed [animal].¹⁰ because it cannot be cured.¹¹ But if it could be cured, it would be forbidden. Now, is not an embryo also like [an animal] which can be cured?¹² Deduce, therefore, from this [that it is forbidden to sell an embryo to a heathen according to R. Judah].

Some there are who referred [R. Judah's ruling on an embryo] to our Mishnah:¹³ AND WHO SELLS [AN EMBRYO] TO HIM [A HEATHEN] ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED. May we say that the Mishnah is not in agreement with R. Judah? For we have learnt: R. Judah permits the selling of a maimed [animal]!¹⁴ — You can even say [that the Mishnah] agrees with R. Judah. For the case of a maimed [animal] is not a frequent occurrence¹⁵ whereas the case of an embryo is a frequent occurrence.¹⁶ Come and hear: R. Judah Says: if one received an animal from a heathen to look after and it gave birth [to a firstling], we settle [with the gentile partner] for what it is worth and half of its value is given to the priest. Or if [an Israelite] gives [an animal] to him to look after, although he is not permitted to do so, we punish him [by making him, redeem the animal] even up to ten times its value and he gives its whole value to the Priest. Now, does this not refer to the case of an embryo? — No, it refers to the animal. But does it not say ‘damaw’? [‘its value’?] — Read ‘dameha’. But does it not say ‘and he gives its whole value to the Priest’? Now if [the words ‘its value’] refer to the animal, what has the Priest to do with it? — We are dealing here with a case where e.g., an Israelite gave him a pregnant animal to fatten, and since we punish him for [selling] the animal [to a gentile,] we also punish him for [selling] an embryo. Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: R. Judah permits the selling of a maimed [animal] because it cannot be cured. But if it could be cured it would be forbidden. And an embryo is on a par with an animal that can be cured. Deduce therefore from this [that according to R. Judah it is not allowed to sell an embryo to a heathen]. The following query was put forward: If one sold an animal for its [future] offspring [to a gentile,]¹⁷ what is the ruling?¹⁸ You can put this question to R. Judah and you can put this query to the Rabbis.¹⁹ You can put the query to R. Judah thus: are we to say that R. Judah only permits the case of a maimed [animal]²⁰ because he [the Israelite] will not come to confuse it with another animal and sell it [to a heathen], but in the case of a whole animal,²¹ where he may confuse it with another, [he will say that] it is forbidden, or are we to say that perhaps, if in the case of a maimed [animal] where he severs all connection with it,²² [it is allowed,] how much more so in the case of a whole animal where he has not severed all connection with it?²³ You can put this query to the Rabbis, thus: are we to say that the Rabbis only prohibit in the case of a maimed [animal] because he severs all connection with it,²⁴ but in the case of a whole animal, where he does not sever his connection from the animal, it is permissible; or are we perhaps to say that if in the case of a maimed [animal], where he will not come to confuse it [with another animal], they forbid [the selling to a heathen,] how much more so in the case of a whole animal, is there the fear [of confusion.]²⁵ But is the reason of the Rabbis because of what [is stated] here?²⁶ Has it not been taught: They, [the Rabbis,] said to R. Judah:²⁷ Is it not possible to couple [an animal with a broken foot] so that it gives birth? Consequently, the reason is on account of the [future] offspring?²⁸ — This is what the Rabbis said [to R. Judah:] ‘Our reason [why we forbid the selling of a maimed animal] is because he may come to confuse it with another [animal]. But as for you, why do you permit a maimed [animal]? [It is] because it cannot be cured, and therefore it is as if he had sold it to be slaughtered.²⁹ But do we not couple it and it gives birth? And since we couple it and it gives birth, he will detain it.’³⁰ And thereupon he replied to them: ‘When it gives birth,³¹ for [in fact] it cannot take a male [for coupling purposes].’³² Come and hear: OR AN ISRAELITE WHO GIVES [HIS ASS] TO HIM [A HEATHEN] TO LOOK AFTER. And it does not say ‘although he is not permitted’!³³ — But, according to your argument, when it says: OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM, since it does not say [it is forbidden,] are we to infer that it is allowed? Has not the father of Samuel said: One must not form a partnership with a heathen lest he [the heathen] will be bound to take an oath to him and he will swear in the name of his idol and the Torah says: [And make no mention of the name of other gods.] neither let it be heard out of thy mouth?³⁴ You must, therefore, admit that when [the Mishnah] lays down that selling [to a heathen] is forbidden³⁵ the same ruling applies to a partnership [with a heathen]. Likewise here also when [the Mishnah] lays down that selling [is prohibited] the same ruling applies to kabanuth.³⁶ Why then does the Mishnah cite [the prohibition] specifically in connection with selling?³⁷ — Because the main prohibition refers to the selling. Come and hear: R. Judah said: If one receives an animal from a heathen to look after and it gives birth [to a first-born] we settle [with the gentile partner] for what it is worth and half of its value is given to the priest. If again an Israelite gives an animal [to a heathen] to look after, although [he knows that] this is not permitted, we fine him even up to ten times its value and he gives its whole value to the Priest.³⁸ But the Sages say, so long a gentile has a share in it,³⁹ it is exempt from the law of the first-born.

- (1) The statement that we punish him because he is not permitted to sell to a heathen.
 - (2) I.e., where an Israelite gives a pregnant animal to a heathen to look after, both sharing the offspring while the animal itself belongs to the Israelite, the words ‘although it is not permitted’ referring to the embryo. We punish him by making him give the value of the embryo to the Priest. Hence we can deduce that one is forbidden to sell an embryo to a heathen.
 - (3) The words ‘although it is not permitted’ refer to the animal, but an embryo is allowed to be sold to a heathen.
 - (4) The masculine ending of the Hebrew word uhns, proves that it refers to the embryo.
 - (5) With a feminine ending referring to VNVC (animal), which is a feminine noun.
 - (6) The Priest having no claim on the animal itself, only on its first-born.
 - (7) We cannot deduce from here the prohibition to sell an embryo to a heathen.
 - (8) The Israelite and the heathen share the offspring and any increase in the animal's value after it is sold.
 - (9) But elsewhere, R. Judah may hold that an embryo may be sold to a gentile, just as he allows the selling of a maimed animal.
 - (10) Supra p. 2, n. 8.
 - (11) To enable it to do work on the Sabbath.

- (12) For in time, after its birth, it will be fit for work.
- (13) And do not, in the first place, propound a query which they subsequently attempt to solve from the Mishnah.
- (14) And an embryo may be compared with a maimed animal since in both cases the animals are unable to work, and therefore R. Judah will hold that an embryo may be sold to a heathen, contrary to the ruling of our Mishnah.
- (15) As it is an unusual occurrence, R. Judah permits its selling, and we do not fear lest one will sell in other circumstances also.
- (16) If we therefore permit in this case, one may come to sell in other cases also.
- (17) The animal itself, however, he does not sell.
- (18) Should we punish him by forcing him to redeem the animal for having broken the rule prohibiting the selling of large cattle to a gentile?
- (19) Who differ from R. Judah with reference to a maimed animal.
- (20) Supra p. 4, n. 22.
- (21) As in our query, he may think that it is permissible to sell to a gentile a whole animal, since here, too, we allow him to sell an animal for its future offspring.
- (22) The Israelite leaving nothing for himself after selling.
- (23) Since the animal itself belongs to the Israelite and is not yet pregnant, and when the offspring is born, it will be in the possession of the heathen.
- (24) The selling her is complete and, therefore, there is the fear that one might sell also a whole animal to a heathen.
- (25) For another animal, where the selling is complete and the Israelite has no share in the animal, unlike the circumstances in our query, where the animal still belongs to the Israelite and there is as yet no offspring.
- (26) So that the above query naturally arises.
- (27) In arguing why they forbid the selling of a sheburah to a heathen.
- (28) We may therefore solve from here our query by concluding that according to the Rabbis it is forbidden to sell an animal to a heathen for the sake of its future offspring, and according to R. Judah it is permissible.
- (29) Therefore there can be no fear that one might substitute another animal which is not to be slaughtered and sell it to a gentile.
- (30) For the sake of its offspring, and one who sees it in the house of a heathen at the end of a year or two may come to the conclusion that it is permissible to sell an animal which is not for slaughter to a heathen.
- (31) You will then inform me.
- (32) Because of the animal's disability.
- (33) Now here the animal was sold to the heathen for its offspring and therefore we can infer that it is permissible to sell an animal to a gentile for its future offspring.
- (34) Ex. XXIII, 23. 'Out of thy mouth', caused by thy mouth, i.e., when you are responsible for the heathen's oath, which shows that it is not allowed.
- (35) The passage in the Mishnah ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED.
- (36) Where the heathen undertakes to take care of the Israelite's animal in return for its offspring.
- (37) And not in connection with the other cases enumerated in the Mishnah.
- (38) Supra 2b.
- (39) Lit., 'has a hand in the middle'.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 3a

Now, does not this statement¹ deal with the case of the animal? — No. It deals with the case of an embryo.² I can also prove this [from the wording]. For it says: We fine him up to ten times its value; from which you may deduce that it refers to the embryo.³ [The ruling that we punish him for selling to a heathen] supports the view of Resh Lakish. For Resh Lakish said: If one sells large cattle to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the animal]⁴ even up to ten times its value. [Does Resh Lakish mean] exactly ten times or not?⁵ — Come and hear: For R. Joshua b. Levi said: If one sells a slave to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the slave] even up to a hundred times his value.⁶ — The case of a slave is different, for every day he [his gentile master] prevents him from carrying out religious duties.⁷ Another version [of this argument] is: Said Resh Lakish: If one sells large cattle to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him to redeem the animal even up to one hundred times its value. But we have learnt in a Mishnah: or if [an Israelite] gives an animal to him [a heathen] to look after, although he is not permitted, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the animal] even up to ten times its value!⁸ — By selling he severs all connection with it [the animal].⁹ But in the ‘case of kablanuth’¹⁰ there is no severing of his connection with the animal.¹¹ [Does Resh Lakish mean] exactly [one hundred times] or not?¹² — Come and hear: For R. Joshua b. Levi said: If one sells his slave to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the slave], even up to ten times his value!¹³ — The case of a slave is different, for he does not return¹⁴ [to his master after being redeemed].¹⁵ Now in the case of an animal, what is the reason [why an Israelite is forced to redeem it even up to one hundred times its value]? Presumably, because it comes back [to its master]. Let us then force him [to pay] once over [the ten etc.]?¹⁶ — Rather the reason must be because the case of a slave [being sold to a heathen] is a rare occurrence,¹⁷ and any case which is of a rare occurrence, the Rabbis did not [in their rulings] guard against.¹⁸ ‘But the Sages say: So long a gentile has a share in it etc.’ Said R. Joshua:¹⁹ And both²⁰ expounded the same verse: [Sanctify unto me] all the first-born [whatsoever openeth the womb in Israel].²¹ The Rabbis hold that [the word] ‘first-born’ is to be understood as meaning even if a portion [of a first-born] belongs to an Israelite.²² Therefore the Divine Law inserts the word ‘all’ implying that the whole [of the first-born must belong to the Israelite].²³ R. Judah on the other hand holds that the word ‘first-born’ [by itself] is to be understood as meaning the whole of the first-born. Therefore the Divine Law inserts ‘all’ to show that even if any portion whatsoever [of the first-born belongs to the Israelite it²⁴ is subject to the law of the firstling.] Or if you prefer, I may say that all [the authorities] understand that the word ‘first-born’ denotes the larger part [of the animal]. One Master, however, holds that the [purport of the] word ‘all’ is to add²⁵ while the other Master²⁶ holds that it is to diminish.²⁷ And how much must a gentile's share be to exempt [the animal] from the law of the first-born? — Said R. Huna: Even if it is no more than of the [firstling's] ears. R. Nahman demurred. Let him [the Priest] say to him [the gentile] ‘Take your portion of the ear and go’?²⁸ It was stated: R. Hisda said: [The heathen's share in the animal] must be something which renders an animal nebelah.²⁹ Raba said: [The heathen's share in the animal] must be something which renders it trefah.³⁰ What is the point at issue between them? — Whether a trefah can live. He who says that [the gentile's share in the animal] must be something which renders it trefah, would maintain that a trefah cannot live,³¹ whereas he who says [the gentile's share] must be something which renders the animal nebelah but a trefah, he would maintain, that it is able to live.³² The Rabbis said in the presence of R. Papa: The ruling of R. Huna on the one hand and the rulings of R. Hisda and Raba on the other, do not differ.³³ The one [R. Huna's] relates to it [the first-born;]³⁴ the other [the rulings of R. Hisda and Raba] relate to the mother.³⁵ Said R. Papa to them [the Rabbis]: Why is there this ruling in connection with the first-born? [Presumably] because we require [the condition of] ‘all of the first-born’³⁶ and it is not found here.³⁷ In connection with its mother also,³⁸ we require [the condition specified in the verse]: And of all thy cattle thou shalt sanctify the males,³⁹ which is not found here. But there is in fact no difference.⁴⁰ Mar, the son of R. Ashi demurred: Why should this⁴¹ be different from the premature [first births] of animals, which although they are not viable, are sacred? For a Master said: The words, [And every firstling that is a male] which thou hast coming from an animal [shall be the Lord's],⁴² [denote the foetus] which dwells in the animal? — There,⁴³ since there is no mixture of an unconsecrated [part of the animal],⁴⁴ we apply to it the words 'in the animal', 'all the first-born'.⁴⁵ Here,⁴⁶ however, since there is a mixture of the unconsecrated part of the animal,⁴⁷ we do not read concerning it the words 'all the first-born'.⁴⁸ R. Eleazar once did not attend the House of Study. He came across R. Assi and asked him 'What did the Rabbis say in the House of Study'? — He replied

- (1) The ruling that we punish the Israelite to redeem it from the gentile refers to the animal. Consequently we see that if one sold an animal to a gentile for its future offspring, we punish him according to both the ruling of R. Judah and the Rabbis, for the opponents of R. Judah only differ from him in connection with the first-born.
 - (2) We punish him for making over the embryo in a pregnant animal to a gentile. But with the case of an animal sold for its future offspring, we are not here concerned. Therefore we are unable to solve the above query.
 - (3) Since it says וְהָיָה ('its value') with the masculine ending and also speaks of giving it to the Priest, v. supra p. 4, n. 2.
 - (4) From the possession of the heathen.
 - (5) Must the Israelite actually pay even ten times its value in order to redeem the animal or does the ruling only mean that even if the gentile demands a larger price than its worth, the Israelite is compelled to redeem it?
 - (6) Now, since it says here a hundred times the value of the object sold and in reference to an animal it states ten times, we can infer that the numbers are meant to be taken literally, for if it were otherwise, why does it not say in both instances either a hundred times or ten times?
 - (7) And in the case of a heathen slave he would be preventing him from living up to the obligations resting on the Noahide. We therefore force the Israelite to pay even one hundred times the value of the slave. But in the case of an animal, we are not so strict and the ten times mentioned may be taken as an exaggeration.
 - (8) Thus the Mishnah is contrary to the ruling of Resh Lakish.
 - (9) We therefore force him to pay even one hundred times its value to the gentile.
 - (10) The case in the Mishnah just cited where a heathen undertakes to attend to an Israelite's animal.
 - (11) Since the animal still belongs to the Israelite.
 - (12) Or is the one hundred times mentioned a mere hyperbole?
 - (13) And since in connection with a slave it says ten times and in reference to an animal one hundred times, we may infer that the numbers mentioned are not to be taken literally, for otherwise in the case of a slave where he is prevented from observing his religious obligations, the penalty should be much more severe than in the case of an animal.
 - (14) According to Rashi he is automatically set free. Y. Git. 43b. R. Gershom says that the slave hates to return of his own free will to his former master, after the latter had sold him to a heathen.
 - (15) And therefore we do not force him to pay more than ten times the value of the object sold, but in the case of an animal the number stated may be taken as precise.
 - (16) Since the animal returns to its former owner it cannot be counted as part of the fine i.e. the Israelite should be forced to pay eleven times its value.
 - (17) And therefore we do not force the Israelite to pay more than ten times the value of the object sold.
 - (18) But in the case of selling an animal which is a frequent occurrence, the Rabbis were more stringent.
 - (19) Var. lec.: R. Johanan.

- (20) The Sages and R. Judah.
- (21) Ex. XIII, 2.
- (22) In order to be subject to the law of the first-born.
- (23) Meaning literally 'all'.
- (24) The animal.
- (25) So that the entire animal must, be in the Israelite's possession.
- (26) R. Judah.
- (27) Meaning 'any', so that if the Israelite has a share in the first-born, however small, he is required to carry out the duty of the first-born.
- (28) For a first-born, even with a blemish, although unfit for sacrifice on the altar, is given to the Priest.
- (29) An animal that has died a natural death or was killed not in accordance with the Jewish ritual law, is called nebelah. If the gentile therefore had for his share an essential part of the animal the absence of which would make it impossible to perform ritual slaughter, e.g., its gullet or windpipe, since such a vital part of the animal was in his hand, it was as if the whole animal belonged to him and was therefore exempted from the law of the first-born.
- (30) An animal afflicted with an organic disease or disability as e.g., the removal of a certain portion of the knee. v. Hul. 42a.
- (31) And since the animal cannot live, it is as if it belonged completely to the gentile.
- (32) The gentile consequently does not possess a vital part of the animal.
- (33) R. Hisda and Raba however do differ.
- (34) Even if the gentile has the share of an ear in it, the law of the first-born does not apply.
- (35) And they differ as to whether the blemish must be of a nature which renders it nebelah or trefah.
- (36) In the possession of the Israelite so as to be subject to the duty of the first-born.
- (37) Where the ear belongs to the gentile.
- (38) Where the gentile has an element in the animal which makes it either trefah or nebelah.
- (39) Ex. XXXIV, 19, i.e. if the animal belongs entirely to you, then you are commanded to observe the law of the first-born.
- (40) Between the mother and its first-born, and consequently R. Huna on the one hand and R. Hisda and Raba on the other, do actually differ.
- (41) The case of a heathen having a share in an animal which renders it either trefah or nebelah.
- (42) Ex. XIII, 12 rda (shegor) coming from the word rda (shegor), the root being rd to dwell, sojourn. Or rda (shegor) that which it casts forth prematurely.
- (43) In the case of premature first births.
- (44) Shared by a heathen.
- (45) Whatever is in the animal has the holiness of a firstling.
- (46) In the case of the mother.
- (47) Shared by a heathen.
- (48) Which phrase denotes that any part shared by an Israelite makes it subject to the law of the first-born.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 3b

Thus did R. Johanan say: Even if [the heathen's share in the firstling was only something constituting] a slight blemish,¹ And as to what we have learnt:² 'A ewe which gave birth to a species of a goat or a goat which gave birth to a species of a ewe, is exempt from the duty of the firstling'.³ But if [the offspring] possessed some features [similar to the mother] it is subject to the [law of the firstling]. [Thereon R. Johanan commented that this⁴ means that] it is [like a firstling] with] a permanent blemish, on account of which it is slaughtered.⁵ We well understand R. Johanan laying down a ruling with reference to a slight blemish, for this informs us that [the law] is according to R. Huna and excludes the rulings of R. Hisda and Raba. But his ruling regarding a permanent blemish — what new thing does he teach us therewith? Is it to inform us that since it [the animal] is abnormal this is regarded as a blemish? [Surely] we have [already] learnt [this ruling⁶ in a Mishnah]: Or if the firstling's mouth is like a pig, it is a blemish!⁷ And should you argue that [in the Mishnah just cited] the firstling has changed into a species [of animal] in which the sanctity of the firstling does not exist⁸ but here the firstling has changed into a species [of animal] in which the sanctity of the firstling does exist,⁹ this too we have learnt: If one of its eyes is large and one is small [it is a blemish].¹⁰ And a Tanna taught that 'large' means large like a calf's and 'small', small like that of a goose. Now, we may grant your argument as far as [the case of a firstling] with a small eye like a goose is concerned, this being a species¹¹ in which the sanctity [of the firstling] does not exist.¹² But in the case of a large eye like a calf's — this is a species in which the sanctity of the firstling does exist.¹³ Must you not therefore admit that [the reason is] that we say since [the animal] is abnormal, it is regarded as a blemish?¹⁴ — No. The reason is because it is a sarua'.¹⁵ This really also stands to reason. For we have learnt: The above mentioned blemishes, whether permanent or transitory, make also human beings unfit for the Priesthood. To these must be added in the case of blemishes of human beings, two large eyes or two small eyes.¹⁶ [Because] with reference only to human beings it is written: Whatsoever man of the seed of Aaron¹⁷ requiring 'man' among the seed of Aaron to be with normal [human features].¹⁸ But the case of an animal, two large or two small eyes is not also regarded as a blemish. Now in the case of an animal with one large or one small eye what is the reason [why it is a blemish]? If because of the abnormality, then the same should apply to an animal with two large eyes or two small eyes? Then must you not admit that the reason [in the former case] is because of sarua'?¹⁹ — No. I can indeed still say that [the reason why an animal with one large and one small eye is blemished] is because of the abnormality. And as for your question that the [same ruling] should apply to the case of an animal with two large and two small eyes, [the answer is that] there [in the latter instance] if [the change is] because of the animal's extra obesity, the two eyes need to be large, and if because of its unusual leanness, then both [eyes] have to be lean [small].²⁰ There was a woman proselyte to whom the Achii²¹ gave an animal to fatten. She came before Raba.²² He said to her: There is no authority that pays any attention to the ruling of R. Judah who said: The partnership of a heathen [in an animal] is subject to the law of the firstling. R. Mari b. Rahel possessed a herd of animals. He used to transfer [to a heathen] possession of the ears [of the firstlings while still in the womb].²³ He [nevertheless] forbade the shearing and the working of the animals and gave them to the Priests.²⁴ The herd of R. Mari b. Rahel died. Now, since he forbade the shearing and the working of the animals and gave them to the Priests, why did he give [a heathen] possession of the ears [of the firstlings?]²⁵ — [It was] lest he should be led to commit an offence.²⁶ If so, why did the herd of R. Mari die?²⁷ — Because he deprived them of their holiness.²⁸ But has not Rab Judah said: One is permitted to make a blemish in a firstling before it comes into the world?²⁹ — There, [in the latter case] he deprives the animal of the holiness of being sacrificed on the altar but he does not deprive it of the holiness [of belonging to] the Priests.³⁰ But in the former case, he even deprives it of the holiness [of belonging to] the Priests.³¹ Or, if you prefer, I may say that R. Mari b. Rahel knew how to make a valid transfer to a heathen.³² But we are afraid that another man may see this and go and do [likewise], thinking that R. Mari did nothing significant³³ [when transferring to a heathen].³⁴ And thus he will be led to commit an offence.

MISHNAH. PRIESTS AND LEVITES ARE EXEMPT³⁵ A FORTIORI: IF THEY EXEMPTED THE FIRST-BORN BELONGING TO THE ISRAELITES IN THE WILDERNESS,³⁶ IT FOLLOWS A FORTIORI THAT THEY SHOULD EXEMPT THEIR OWN.

(1) Like the ear of the animal which is not a vital part, in which case the Israelite is exempt from the duty of the firstling.

(2) V. infra 16b.

(3) For Scripture says: Or the firstling of a goat. Num. XVIII, 17. Both the firstling and the mother must belong to the same species and class i.e. a goat.

(4) The ruling that it is subject to the law of the firstling.

(5) I.e., outside the Temple. And eaten like any other firstling which possesses a blemish. It is, however, not suitable for sacrifice on the altar. This was R. Johanan's novel ruling emanating also from the House of Study, i.e., that a change in the animal renders it blemished.

(6) That a change in the animal renders it blemished.

(7) Infra 402.

(8) That of a pig.

(9) And therefore this would be the novelty in the ruling of R. Johanan, that even in such an instance it is regarded as a blemish.

(10) Infra 40b.

(11) Birds being exempt from the law of the firstling.

(12) There is need therefore for R. Johanan to inform us that even in this case it is a blemish since there is a change in the animal.

(13) And even so it is regarded as blemished.

(14) What new thing consequently does R. Johanan tell us in his ruling that a change renders it blemished, since this may be inferred from the Mishnah?

(15) An animal whose one limb is larger than the other is called a sarua'. Therefore were it not stated in the House of Study that a change in the offspring e.g., where its wool resembles that of a goat, renders it blemished, I should not have been in a position to infer this from the Mishnah, as sarua' is a permanent blemish explicitly mentioned in the Scripture.

(16) Infra 43a.

(17) Lev. XXII, 4.

(18) V. infra p. 289, n. 8.

(19) And it is not because of the change that an animal with one long and one short eye is regarded as blemished and therefore there is need for R. Johanan to inform us that elsewhere a change in the animal constitutes a blemish.

(20) So that two large or small eyes constitute no change. Now since we can after all deduce from the Mishnah that a change renders the animal blemished, one can still raise the question, what is there novel in R. Johanan's ruling? (R. Gershom).

(21) Certain heathens.

(22) To enquire whether the duty of the firstling applies.

(23) To be exempt from the law of the firstling.

(24) As if they were actually firstlings and holy.

(25) For in this manner he carried out the prohibitions in connection with the firstling.

- (26) In case he should shear and work the animal. And therefore he rendered himself exempt by transferring a part of the embryo to a heathen.
- (27) Since his motives were good.
- (28) By transferring a share of them to heathens.
- (29) As the sanctity of a firstling only begins after its birth.
- (30) Like a firstling with a blemish whose shearing is forbidden and work with which is prohibited, still possessing a certain degree of holiness.
- (31) Although he actually observes all the prohibitions with reference to a blemished firstling, it is really rendered, owing to the share of the heathens, an unconsecrated animal.
- (32) To accept money from a heathen which is the valid method whereby a selling transaction is concluded with a gentile.
- (33) Lit., 'did a mere word'.
- (34) By means of words only the transference was effected and no money was paid i.e., he simply informed the heathen that he had given him possession.
- (35) Presumably from the first-born of an ass.
- (36) This at present understood as meaning that since the Levites themselves exempted the asses of the Israelites in the wilderness, how much more should they exempt their own asses.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 4a

GEMARA. Did they [themselves] exempt?¹ [Surely] a man [a Levite] exempted a man [a first-born Israelite]; an animal [of a Levite] exempted an animal [an Israelite's first-born ass]. For it is written: 'Take the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle'² — Said Abaye: The Mishnah means this: 'As for priests and Levites, their animals are exempt a fortiori. If the animal [the sheep] of the Levites released the animal of the Israelites in the wilderness,³ it follows a fortiori that it should release their own'.⁴ Said Raba to him: But does not the Mishnah say: 'THEY EXEMPT' meaning the Levites] themselves? And further, if it is [as you state],⁵ they [the Levites] should be exempted even from [liabilities for] a clean animal?⁶ Why have we learnt: They [the Levites] are not exempted from the law of the firstling of a clean animal only from the redemption of the first-born male, and the first birth of an ass!⁷ No, said Raba; the [Mishnah] must be read thus: 'Priests and Levites exempt themselves [from the redemption of the first-born] a fortiori'. If the holiness of the [non-first-born] Levites canceled the holiness of the first-born Israelite [in the wilderness], should it not cancel that of their own [first-born]? We thus find that man [the Levite first-born is exempt]. Whence do we know that this also applies to an unclean animal?⁸ The text says: Howbeit the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem.⁹ Whosoever is required [to redeem] the first-born of a man, is required [to redeem] the firstling of an unclean animal. But whosoever is not required [to redeem] the first-born of a man¹⁰ is not required to redeem the firstling of an unclean animal. Said R. Safra to Abaye: According to your interpretation, which is that [the a fortiori argument] also refers to their [the Levites'] animals,¹¹ a Levite who had a sheep [in the wilderness] to release [a first-born of an Israelite ass], could ipso facto release [his own], but he who did not possess a sheep to release [a first-born of an Israelite ass] could not release his own? Further, both according to your interpretation and Raba's,¹² [a Levite] of a month old who released [an Israelite first-born of a month old in the wilderness]¹³ should therefore release [himself from the necessity of redemption,] while [a Levite first-born] less than a month old, who did not release [a first-born Israelite of the same age], should not therefore be able to release himself?¹⁴ Also, a Levite's daughter¹⁵ who gave birth to a first-born, should not be exempt [from redemption].¹⁶ Why then did R. Adda b. Ahaba say: If a Levite's daughter [married to an Israelite] gave birth, her son is exempt from the five sela's?¹⁷ — That is no objection, as Mar the son of R. Joseph [explained in the name of Raba who said: [Scripture says]: petur rehem [the opening of the womb]. The Divine Law makes [the duty of the first-born] depend on the opening of the womb.¹⁸ But what of Aaron since he was not included in that counting [of the Levites],¹⁹ then [the first-born of his asses] should not be released [from redemption]; (for it has been taught: Why is [the word] 'Aaron' dotted in the Book of Numbers?²⁰ Because he [Aaron] was not in that numbering [of the Levites]?) — Scripture said 'The Levites' implying that all Levites are compared to one another.²¹ And whence do we know [that] Priests [are included in the term Levite?] — As R. Joshua the son of Levi explained. For said R. Joshua: In twenty-four places Priests are called Levites and the following [instance] is one of them: But²² the Priests the Levites the sons of Zadok.²³

(1) The first-born of asses in the wilderness.

(2) Num. III, 45.

(3) From the redemption of the first-born of an ass.

(4) The Levites' own first-born of asses. Similarly, according to Abaye, just as the Levites themselves exempted the first-born of the Israelites in the wilderness, so they should a fortiori exempt their own first-born.

(5) That we argue a fortiori with reference to the animals of the Levites.

(6) From the law of the firstling, for the Levites' clean animals exempted the clean animals of the Israelites in the wilderness.

(7) Infra 13a.

(8) I.e., that priests and Levites are exempt from the law of the first-born of an ass!

(9) Num. XVIII, 15.

(10) E.g., the Levites and priests who are exempt a fortiori, are therefore also free from redeeming their first-born of asses.

(11) Inferring that the firstling of an ass belonging to a Levite and Priest is also exempt a fortiori.

(12) For both agree that we argue a fortiori that the first-born of a Levite is exempt from redemption.

(13) If the holiness of a plain (non-first-born) Levite of a month old released from holiness an Israelite first-born of a month old—as only the first-born of a month old were numbered, V. Num. III,40 — how much more so should the Levite first-born of a month old release himself from redemption?

(14) Why therefore does not Scripture state that the first-born Levites in the wilderness who were at the time of counting less than a month old had to be redeemed?

(15) Who married an Israelite.

(16) Since females were not included in the count in the wilderness.

(17) The sum of money necessary for the redemption of the first-born.

(18) We go therefore by the mother and since she comes of a tribe which is exempt from redemption of the first-born, we link the son with the mother and not with the father, that is provided the exemption in the wilderness extended to all Levites, even those who were not a month old at the time.

(19) Num. III, 14 etc. Neither he nor his animals were included and therefore they did not cancel the holiness of the first-born of the Israelites.

(20) Num. III, 39: All that were numbered of the Levies which Moses and Aaron numbered. For all dottings of a word have the purpose of limiting and excluding something.

(21) All Levites irrespective of age, including anybody performing sacred functions, such as the priests, all were exempt from redeeming the first-born of an ass. This answers all the questions raised above.

(22) Ezek. XLIV, 15.

(23) We see here therefore that the priests are described as Levites. Similarly where the word 'Levites' is mentioned by itself, it also embraces the priests.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 4b

Whence do we know [that the exemptions]¹ apply to all time?² The text says: 'And the Levites shall be mine';³ 'and they shall be' means that they [the Levites] retain their status [for all time]. And whence [do we know] that [the Levite exempted the Israelite's first-born of asses in the wilderness] with a sheep?⁴ — Said R. Hisda: Money⁵ is written [in connection with the redemption of the first-born] for all time; and 'a sheep' is written [in connection with the redemption of the first-born of an ass]⁶ for all time. Just as with the money prescribed for all time, they both redeemed [the first-born] at all times and they redeemed at that particular time [in the wilderness], so with sheep prescribed for all time, they [the Levites] both redeemed [the firstlings] at all times and they redeemed at that particular time [in the wilderness]. But it may be objected⁷, that the case of money is different, because with it we also redeem consecrated objects and the second [year's] tithing!⁸ Rather [we deduce from the following]. Scripture said: 'Nevertheless the first-born of man thou shalt surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem'.⁹ Just as in the case of the first-born of a man you make no distinction between all time and that particular time [in the wilderness, the redemption in each case being] with money, so [in the case of an unclean animal], you shall not make a distinction between for all time and that particular time, [the redemption in each case being] with a sheep. R. Hanina said: One sheep of a Levite exempted many firstborn of the asses of the Israelites. Said Abaye: The proof is that Scripture numbers the surplus of men¹⁰ [over the Levites] but does not number the surplus [of Israelite] animals [over the Levites' animals]. But what proof is this? Perhaps they [the Israelites in the wilderness] did not possess many animals [asses] to redeem?¹¹ — That cannot enter your mind. For it is written: 'Now the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle'.¹² Perhaps even so the ordinary [non-first-born animals] of the Levites just corresponded with [the number] of the first-born of the Israelites?¹³ — Scripture says: And the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle;¹⁴ one Levite animal instead of many [Israelite] animals [firstlings of asses]. But why can we not say that the word ['cattle'] also implies many [animals?]. — If so let Scripture write either 'cattle instead of cattle' or 'their cattle instead of their cattle'. Why does Scripture write 'cattle of . . . instead of their cattle'? Deduce from this that one [Levite] animal exempted many [Israelite] animals. Said Raba: We have also learnt [R. Hanina's ruling]: And he can redeem with it [the sheep]¹⁵ many times [the first-born of asses]. And R. Hanina?¹⁶ — He explains the reason of the Mishnah and what he means is this: What is the reason that he can redeem with it [the sheep] many times [the first-born of asses]? Because one sheep of a Levite exempted many firstborn of asses belonging to an Israelite. It was stated: R. Johanan said: The first-born¹⁷ in the wilderness were sanctified; Resh Lakish said: The first-born in the wilderness were not sanctified.¹⁸ R. Johanan said that the first-born were sanctified in the wilderness, for the Divine Law said that they should be sanctified, as it is written: Sanctify unto me all the first-born.¹⁹ Resh Lakish said that the first-born were not sanctified in the wilderness, since it is written: And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee [into the land of the Canaanites] and it says subsequently: That thou shalt set apart [unto the Lord all that openeth the womb].²⁰ From this you can infer that previously [to their entering the land],²¹ it [the first-born] was not sanctified.²² R. Johanan raised an objection to Resh Lakish's [view]: Before the Sanctuary was erected,²³ the High places²⁴ were permitted and the service [was performed] by the first-born!²⁵ — He replied to him: [The service was performed] by those [first-born] who departed from Egypt.²⁶ It also stands to reason. For if you will not say so, is a one year old²⁷ capable of performing the service? And [R. Johanan] how could he raise such a question at all?²⁸ — This was his [R. Johanan's] objection [to Resh Lakish's view]. You would be right if you said that the holiness [of the first-born] did not cease [in the wilderness],²⁹ because then those [first-born] also originally born [in Egypt], did not have their holiness canceled. But if you say that their holiness ceased,³⁰ then those [firstborn] originally born in Egypt, should also have had their holiness canceled?³¹ And [what says] the other [to this]? — Those who were holy [the first-born of Egypt], remained holy³² and those who were not hitherto holy,³³ [did not become] holy. He [R. Johanan] raised an objection: On the day on which the Sanctuary was erected, votive-offerings, freewill-offerings, sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, firstlings and the tithe of cattle, were sacrificed in Israel!³⁴ — Here, also, it refers to those [firstborn] who departed from Egypt. And [from the Baraitha] itself we can deduce this: 'On that day [firstlings] were sacrificed', but after that, [in the wilderness], there was no sacrifice [of firstlings].³⁵ Some there are who say, Resh Lakish cited against R. Johanan the following: 'That day on which the Sanctuary was erected, votive-offerings, freewill-offerings, sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, firstlings, tithe of cattle were sacrificed in Israel', as much as to say 'on that day' but after that [in the wilderness], there was no [sacrifice of firstlings]!³⁶ — R. Johanan replied: Amend [the Baraitha] thus: 'From that day and onward'.³⁷ And what does he tell us here? — That from that day [these sacrifices] were permitted but not at first, from which we are to infer that obligatory sacrifices were not sacrificed on a High place.³⁸ Come and hear: 'Consequently in three places were the firstborn sanctified for Israel: in Egypt, in the wilderness, and when they entered the Land. With reference to the first-born in Egypt, what does Scripture say? Sanctify unto me all the firstling.³⁹ With reference to the firstling in the wilderness Scripture says: For the first-born of the children of Israel are mine.⁴⁰ With reference to [the first-born] when they entered the Land, [Scripture] says: And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee [into the land of the Canaanites] . . . That thou shalt set apart!⁴¹ Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [This passage means] that in three places the Israelites were commanded concerning the sanctification of the first-born but they were not [actually] sanctified.⁴² And were not also the [first-born] in Egypt sanctified? Did we not say that they were holy?⁴³ — This is what the [passage] means: In some [of the three places referred to], [the first-born] were sanctified, and in some, they were not sanctified.⁴⁴ R. Papa demurred: And were not the first-born sanctified in the wilderness? Behold it is written: Number all the first-born males of the children of Israel.⁴⁵ Rather [if the above dispute was] stated, it was stated as follows: R. Johanan said: They [the first-born] were sanctified and did not cease [from their holiness].⁴⁶ But Resh Lakish said that they were sanctified [temporarily]

(1) For priests and Levites.

(2) And not limited to the wilderness.

(3) Num. III, 45.

(4) Perhaps the verse 'And the cattle of the Levites instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel', (Num. III, 41.) means that the first-born of the Levite's ass exempted the Israelite's firstling of an ass, but not the sheep, (R. Gershom).

(5) Num. XVIII, 16.

(6) Ex. XIII, 13.

(7) To this analogy between 'money' and 'sheep'.

(8) Whereas we do not as a rule redeem sacred objects with a sheep. Consecrated objects are redeemed with money. V. Lev. XXVII, 15 and the second year's tithes are also redeemed with money, V. Deut. XIV, 25.

(9) Num. XVIII, 15.

(10) Of first-born Israelites who had to be redeemed with money. And since Scripture does not mention the surplus of Israelite animals over the Levites' animals, we can infer that one Levite sheep exempted many Israelite animals.

(11) And this being the case, one Levite sheep did not have to redeem many first-born of asses.

(12) Ibid. XXXII, I.

(13) So that there was no surplus and there is thus no evidence that the firstlings of the Israelites outnumbered the plain Levites' animals.

(14) Ibid. III, 45.

(15) Infra 9a. If the sheep which he gave to the priest as a redemption for the first-born of an ass, comes back to him either through the priest selling or giving it as a present to him, he can redeem another first-born of an ass with the same sheep.

(16) Since the Mishnah just cited teaches his ruling, then his is superfluous.

(17) Both of men and animals and certainly those born in Egypt.

(18) And Only the first-born in Egypt and those who were born when they entered the land were sanctified.

(19) Ex. XIII, 2.

(20) Ibid. XIII, II, 12.

(21) In the wilderness.

(22) And the above verse 'Sanctify unto me all the first-born' will refer to those born in Egypt.

(23) Zeb. 112b.

(24) Improvised and temporary altars.

(25) We therefore see that the first-born in the wilderness, were sanctified contrary to the ruling of Resh Lakish.

(26) But the first-born born in the wilderness were not sanctified.

(27) Since only one year had elapsed since the departure from Egypt and the erection of the Sanctuary.

(28) Surely there could be only one explanation of the Mishnah in Zebahim.

(29) That the first-born born in the wilderness were also sanctified.

(30) For a period, namely, those first-born born in the wilderness.

(31) And therefore the question is raised, according to Resh Lakish, how were the first-born permitted to offer sacrifices.

(32) And their holiness never ceased.

(33) The firstborn born in the wilderness.

(34) We therefore see that the first-born in the wilderness were sanctified contrary to the ruling of Resh Lakish.

(35) Because, as Resh Lakish says, the first-born in the wilderness either of men or cattle were not sanctified and those of cattle offered on the day the Sanctuary was erected, were born in Egypt.

(36) Which is contrary to the view of R. Johanan.

(37) For the first-born were sanctified in the wilderness.

(38) An improvised and temporary altar. Obligatory offerings are e.g. sin-offerings, firstlings, etc.

(39) Ex. XIII, 2.

(40) Num. VIII, 17.

(41) Ex. XIII, 11, 12. We see therefore that contrary to the view of Resh Lakish the firstlings were sanctified in the wilderness.

(42) Until they entered the land.

(43) For this was agreed by all the above.

(44) Those born in the wilderness.

(45) Num. III, 40. The male first-born were to be numbered from a month and upwards and this took place in the wilderness.

(46) After being numbered in the wilderness.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 5a

and then ceased [from their holiness]. As to Resh Lakish it is well, for the reason stated above.¹ But what is the reason of R. Johanan? — Said R. Eleazar: R. Johanan appeared to me in a dream telling me that I said an excellent thing, viz., Scripture said: Mine shall they be² [denoting] that they [the first-born] shall remain in their status. And what does R. Johanan do with the verses [which follow:] And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee unto the land . . . That thou shalt set apart unto the Lord? — That [textual proximity] is required [to deduce] what the School of R. Ishmael taught: Perform this Divine command,³ on account of which you will be worthy to enter the Land. Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: You reported it in this manner, we reversed the names; R. Johanan said: Firstlings were not sanctified in the wilderness. But Resh Lakish said: Firstlings were sanctified in the wilderness. He thereupon asked him: ‘And do you also propose to reverse [the name of the author] of the refutation⁴ together with R. Eleazar's statement?’⁵ — He replied to him: [The words] ‘They were not sanctified’ [of R. Johanan] mean, there was no need for the firstlings to be sanctified [in the wilderness].⁶ If so, then it is identical with our version [of the dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish]? — It teaches us that a man must cite a ruling in the exact language of his master.⁷ A Roman general Contrococ⁸ questioned R. Johanan b. Zakkai. ‘In the detailed record of the numbering of the Levites, you find the total is twenty-two thousand three hundred,⁹ whereas in the sum total you only find twenty-two thousand.¹⁰ Where are the [remaining] three hundred?’ He replied to him: [‘The remaining] three hundred were [Levite] first-born, and a first born cannot cancel the holiness of a first-born’. What is the reason? said Abaye: Because it is sufficient for a [Levite] first-born to cancel his own holiness. And again he questioned him: ‘With reference to the collection of the money,¹¹ you count two hundred and one kikkar¹² and eleven maneh¹³ for Scripture writes: A beka’ for every man, that is, half a shekel after the shekel of the Sanctuary,¹⁴ whereas when the money was given,¹⁵ you find only one hundred kikkar, for it is written: And the hundred talents of silver were for casting, etc.’¹⁶ Was Moses your teacher either a thief or a swindler or else a bad arithmetician? He gave a half, took a half, and did not [even] return a complete half?’¹⁷ — He replied to him: ‘Moses our teacher was a trustworthy treasurer and a good arithmetician, only the sacred maneh was double the common’.¹⁸ R. Ahi argued: What is his [the general's] difficulty? It says: And the hundred talents that were for casting etc.; these were used for casting¹⁹ and those others, [the two hundred and one kikkar] were for the treasury! — [Scripture] wrote another verse: And the silver of them that were numbered of the congregation, was a hundred talents etc.²⁰ And as to his reply that the sacred maneh was double the common, — whence did he derive this? If you say from it [this very verse], for here we have seventy-one maneh,²¹ since Scripture writes: And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks for the pillars and recorded them only in Units [of shekels]. Now if [the value of a sacred maneh] is [not higher], Scripture ought to have written one hundred and one kikkar and eleven maneh?²² But since Scripture does not record them except in units [of shekels,] you may deduce from here that the sacred maneh was double the common.²³ But perhaps it is only the sum total [of a hundred] kikkar that Scripture records but the odd amount [of only one kikkar or so], it does not record?²⁴ Rather deduce then from here.²⁵ And the brass of the offering was seventy talents and two thousand and four hundred shekels.²⁶ For here are ninety-six maneh, and Scripture does not record them except in units [of shekels]. Deduce from here, therefore, that the sacred maneh was double the common.²⁷ Perhaps, however, a large odd number [of kikkar]²⁸ Scripture records but a small odd number²⁹ it does not record? Rather said R. Hisda, Deduce from here:³⁰ And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs; twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.³¹ [

(1) The juxtaposition of the verses in Ex. XIII, 11 and 12.

(2) Num. III, 13, indicating that there was no break in their holiness, even in the wilderness.

(3) The law of the firstling.

(4) That it was R. Johanan who refuted Resh Lakish with reference to the Baraita; 'That day on which the sanctuary was erected etc.' and not vice versa, as in our version.

(5) That he saw R. Johanan in a dream, and will you also alter this to Resh Lakish? Surely, it is more feasible to assume that it was R. Johanan, the teacher of R. Eleazar, who appeared to him in a dream.

(6) Since they were holy at birth, as R. Johanan maintains above that the first-born in the wilderness were sanctified.

(7) Although there may be no actual difference in the ruling.

(8) Rashi and Tosaf. in Hullin 27b read Contricon. There are a number of variants in the reading of this name, owing to corruptions. It is suggested that the name refers either to Quintus or Quietus. V. Hul., Sonc. ed., p. 141, n. 2.

(9) The families of Gershon numbered seven thousand and five hundred, the families of Kohath numbered eight thousand and six hundred, and the families of Merari numbered six thousand and two hundred, making a grand total of the families of the Levites of twenty-two thousand and three hundred.

(10) V. Num. III, 39.

(11) When every Israelite was bidden to give half a shekel.

(12) A weight of silver or gold, a talent. Now a kikkar contains sixty maneh, a maneh has twenty five sela's or holy shekels, therefore we have one thousand and five hundred shekels in one kikkar. Six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty half shekels collected from the people make three hundred and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels. Divide one thousand and five hundred into this, we have two hundred and one kikkar with the remainder of two hundred and seventy-five shekels, i.e., eleven maneh.

(13) A weight in gold or silver of twenty-five common shekels.

(14) Ex. XXXVIII, 26.

(15) When Moses rendered the account to the Israelites.

(16) Ibid. 27.

(17) For a complete half would have been one hundred and a half kikkar and five and a half maneh and he only returned one hundred kikkar. And although Scripture says: 'And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks' and consequently, he returned more than a half, the general did not mention this verse, for he wanted to catch him with words.

(18) There were therefore one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar. The hundred kikkar were therefore really two hundred and the remaining kikkar and eleven maneh, were the one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekel mentioned, from which hooks were made.

- (19) And this would be separate from the two hundred and one kikkar mentioned.
- (20) Ex. XXXVIII, 25. And here no mention is made of being used for casting purposes.
- (21) A maneh containing twenty-five shekels; therefore one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels make seventy-one maneh.
- (22) If all maneh consisted of sixty shekels, then seventy-one maneh is one kikkar more, plus eleven maneh.
- (23) And therefore the seventy-one maneh i.e. the one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels, could not be counted in terms of kikkar, as there would then be one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar.
- (24) It is not of sufficient importance to record in terms of kikkar, but the sacred maneh may still have the same value as the common. Therefore the point would once again arise that Moses received two hundred and one kikkar and, when rendering the account, Scripture only mentions one hundred kikkar. (5) That the sacred maneh was double the common.
- (25) Ibid. XXXVIII, 29.
- (26) There being twenty-five shekels in a maneh.
- (27) I.e., one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar, and therefore Scripture could not count this in terms of kikkar.
- (28) Like seventy kikkar, although they cannot be counted in terms of one hundred kikkar.
- (29) Like one kikkar; but a sacred kikkar may contain only sixty maneh as the common.
- (30) That the sacred maneh was double the common.
- (31) Ezek. XLV, 12. We therefore see there were sixty shekels in a maneh.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 5b

Now would not this [maneh] be two hundred and forty [denars]?¹ Therefore deduce from this that the sacred maneh was double [the common].² And further deduce from here that we may add to the measures, but not more than a sixth part. And still further deduce from here, that the sixth part added, is a sixth of the total.³ Said R. Hanina: I asked [R. Eliezer] in the great School of Learning [Beth Hamidrash:] 'Why were the first-born of asses different from the first-born of horses and camels?' — He replied: 'It is a decree of Scripture'.⁴ Moreover, they [the asses] helped the Israelites when they departed from Egypt, for there was not an Israelite who did not possess ninety Libyan asses laden with the silver and gold of Egypt. I also asked him: 'What does the word "Rephidim" signify?' And he told me: 'Rephidim was the name [of a place]'. There is a difference between Tannaim. R. Eliezer says: 'Rephidim' was the name [of a place], but R. Joshua says, it means that they relaxed [rifu] their hold on the words of the Law. And so Scripture says: The fathers shall not look back to their children for [rifyon] feebleness of hand.⁵ And I asked him further: 'What is the meaning of the word "Shittim"?' And he told me: 'Shittim was the name [of a place]'. Here too Tannaim differ. R. Eliezer says: 'Shittim' was the name of the place, whereas R. Joshua says, it means that they gave themselves up to lust.⁶ 'And they called to the people unto the sacrifices of their gods'.⁷ R. Eliezer says, this verse means that they [the Israelites] came into contact with naked bodies.⁸ But R. Joshua says they all became polluted.⁹

MISHNAH. IF A COW GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF ASS, OR AN ASS GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF HORSE, IT IS EXEMPT FROM [THE LAW OF] THE FIRSTLING, FOR IT IS SAID: FIRSTLING [PETER] OF AN ASS',¹⁰ 'FIRSTLING [PETER] OF AN ASS',¹¹ TWICE [TO TEACH] [THAT THE LAW OF THE FIRSTBORN DOES NOT APPLY] UNTIL THAT WHICH GIVES BIRTH IS AN ASS AND THAT WHICH IS BORN IS AN ASS. AND WHAT IS THE LAW WITH REFERENCE TO EATING THEM?¹² IF A CLEAN ANIMAL GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF UNCLEAR ANIMAL, IT IS PERMITTED TO BE EATEN. BUT IF AN UNCLEAR ANIMAL GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF A CLEAN ANIMAL, IT IS FORBIDDEN TO BE EATEN, FOR THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAR IS UNCLEAR AND THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE CLEAN IS CLEAN.

GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere:¹³ If a ewe gave birth to a species of goat or a goat gave birth to a Species of ewe, it is exempt from [the law of] the firstling. But if the offspring possesses some marks [resembling the mother], it is subject to [the law of] the firstling. Whence is this proved? Said Rab Judah: Scripture says: 'But the firstling of an ox',¹⁴ meaning that it [the animal] should be an ox and its firstling must be an ox; 'Firstling of a sheep',¹⁵ indicating that [the animal] should be a sheep and its firstling must be a sheep; 'Firstling of a goat',¹⁶ indicating that [the animal] 'Firstling of a goat',¹⁶ indicating that [the animal] should be a goat and its firstling must be a goat. You might think that even if it [the offspring] possesses some marks [similar to the mother]?¹⁷ There the text stated 'ak' [but],¹⁸ intimating that there is a distinction.¹⁹ But does not the Tanna [of our Mishnah] derive the ruling [for the exemption] of a cow [which gave birth to a species of ass] from 'peter' [firstling] ['peter' [firstling].²⁰ — He [R. Judah] follows the view of R. Jose the Galilean. For it was taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: 'But the firstling of an ox':²¹ [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is an ox and its firstling is an ox; 'firstling of a sheep': [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is a sheep and its firstling is a sheep; 'firstling of a goat': [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is a goat and its firstling is a goat. You might think that even if it [the offspring] possesses some marks [similar to its mother]?²² The text states 'ak' intimating that there is a distinction.²³ Wherein do they differ?²⁴ — Our Tanna [in the Mishnah] holds that the Divine Law informs us in that case of that which is consecrated for its value²⁵ [that a change in the offspring exempts it from the law of the firstling], and the same applies to an object consecrated as such.²⁶ But R. Jose the Galilean maintains that the Divine Law informs us in connection with an object consecrated as such [that a change in the offspring exempts it from the law of the firstling] and the same principle applies in connection with an object which is consecrated for its value. And we derive an object which is consecrated for its value from an object which is consecrated as such. And our Tanna²⁷ — what does he make of 'bekor' [firstling], 'bekor' [firstling].²⁸ — He requires it for R. Jose b. Hanina's [explanation]. For R. Jose b. Hanina said: Why does Scripture mention 'emurim'²⁹ in connection with the firstling of an ox, emurim in connection with the firstling of a sheep, emurim in connection with the firstling of a goat? It is necessary. For if the Divine Law had written 'emurim' in connection with the firstling of an ox [only], [I might have said], the reason [for the emurim was] because there was an increased drink offering.³⁰ [And if the Divine Law had written 'emurim'] in connection with the firstling of a sheep [only], [I might have said] the reason [for the 'emurim'] was because of the fat-tail which was included [to be sacrificed together with the emurim].³¹ [And if the Divine Law had written 'emurim'] in connection with the firstling of a goat [only], [I might have said] the reason [for the 'emurim' was] because a goat was included as a suitable offering in the case of the sin of idolatry committed by an individual. You could not have derived 'emurim' in connection with any single case [of a firstling of an ox, firstling of a sheep or firstling of a goat] from any other single case. [Perhaps] you could derive however 'emurim' in a single case [of a firstling mentioned] from the remaining two cases?³² in connection with what case should the Divine Law have omitted to write ‘emurim’? Should the Divine Law not have written [‘emurim’] in connection with the firstling of an ox, and should we have proceeded to derive this from the remaining two cases, [the firstling of a sheep and the firstling of a goat quoted above], [I might have raised the objection] that the two cases [mentioned where emurim was written], were different, for a sheep and a goat are included as suitable to be brought as Passover sacrifices.³³ Or should the Divine Law have omitted [emurim] in connection with the firstling of a sheep and should we then have derived this from the remaining two cases [of the firstling of an ox and the firstling of a goat], [I might have raised the objection] that the cases [of an ox and a goat] were different, for they are included as suitable offerings for the sin of idolatry committed communally.³⁴ Or should the Divine Law have omitted [emurim] in connection with the firstling of a goat and should we then have derived this from the remaining two cases [of the firstling of an ox and the firstling of a sheep], [I might have raised the objection] that the cases [of an ox and a sheep] were different, for they have the [common] point of an increased offering upon the altar.³⁵ Therefore, all the three cases [to which the verse³⁶ refers] are necessary. And R. Jose the Galilean?³⁷ — [His answer is:] If so,³⁸ let the Divine Law write: ‘But the firstling of an ox, sheep and goat’. What need is there for the words ‘bekor’ ‘bekor’?³⁹ Hence you must deduce from here [the teaching also] that both [the animal] and its firstling must be an ox. And R. Jose the Galilean, what does he do with the texts ‘peter hamor’ ‘peter hamor’?⁴⁰ — He requires this for what was taught. R. Jose the Galilean says: Because it is said in the Scriptures: Howbeit the firstborn of man shalt thou surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem,⁴¹ I might infer from the text that even the first-born of horses and camels [are liable to the law of the first-born]. Therefore, there the text stated ‘peter hamor’. I have only spoken to you [says Scripture] of firstlings of asses⁴² but not of the firstlings of horses and camels. I can still maintain, however, that the firstlings of asses are to be redeemed with a sheep but the firstlings of horses and camels may be redeemed with any object.⁴³

(1) And a maneh has only one hundred dear or zuz, for there are twenty-five shekels to a maneh and four denar to a shekel.

(2) I.e., fifty shekels would be the maneh. This is two hundred denar and the remaining forty were added subsequently.

(3) Lit., ‘from outside’. I.e., to each five portions, one is added, an addition of twenty per cent. And here, also, there was an addition to the two hundred denar which constitute the sacred maneh of twenty per cent, making a total of two hundred and forty denar. This addition of forty denar makes therefore a sixth part of the sum total, i.e., a sixth ‘from the outside’, although not a sixth part of the value of the sacred maneh as such, as forty denar would be a fifth part of two hundred denar.

(4) There is no special reason for this differentiation.

(5) Jer. XLVII, 3. The feebleness being due to their neglect of the Law.

(6) The word ‘Shetuth’ (a stupid thing, like lust) and the word ‘Shittim’, have a verbal resemblance.

(7) Num. XXV, 2.

(8) For lustful purposes. The word itre, u is also derived from the word vre to meet; they themselves, their bodies, met naked bodies in order to stimulate sexual desire.

(9) itre, u is connected here with the word hre meaning seminal pollution,

(10) Ex. XIII, 13.

(11) Ibid. XXXIV, 20.

(12) The animals born which do not resemble their mother.

- (13) Supra 3b and infra 16b.
- (14) Num. XVIII, 17.
- (15) Ibid.
- (16) Ibid. In connection with the words 'ox', 'sheep' and goat', Scripture prefaces in each case the word rufc (firstling) which in each case is superfluous, as it is clearly dealing with the subject of a firstling.
- (17) That it is also excluded from the law of the firstling.
- (18) But the firstling etc.
- (19) Between total physical change in the offspring and where there is a partial resemblance to the mother, the word 'ak' having limiting qualifications.
- (20) Why therefore does R. Judah bring his own Scriptural proof since what applies to a cow whose offspring changes species applies equally to a sheep whose offspring changes?
- (21) Num. XVIII, 17.
- (22) V. supra.
- (23) V. supra.
- (24) The Tanna in our Mishnah and R. Jose the Galilean.
- (25) The case of an ass which is not holy in itself and is redeemed with a sheep.
- (26) The case of a cow or any clean animal where it is holy as such, and is irredeemable. In such an instance, the law of the firstling should certainly only apply where the offspring resembles its mother, as since it is irredeemable, the offspring should be required all the more to resemble its mother.
- (27) In the Mishnah.
- (28) The threefold repetition of the word 'bekor' (firstling) in Num. XVIII, 17.
- (29) The portion of the animal sacrificed on the altar. Scripture says: Thou shalt dash their blood against the altar and shalt make their fat smoke for an offering made by fire, which verse refers to all the three cases of firstlings mentioned in the text. If Scripture had written 'emurim' in connection with one of the firstlings mentioned, I could have inferred the rest.
- (30) A half of a hin, whereas with reference to a goat or a sheep, the amount is only a quarter of a hin.
- (31) Unlike the case of a goat or an ox.
- (32) One of the references to 'emurim' would, then, be unnecessary.
- (33) Whereas an ox is not brought as a passover sacrifice.
- (34) A bull for a burnt offering and a goat for a sin-offering.
- (35) Compared with a goat. For an ox has an increased drink-offering and a sheep has, in addition, its fat-tail offered up on the altar.
- (36) Thou shalt dash their blood against the altar etc. quoted above.
- (37) Since he explains the verse: 'But the firstling of an ox etc.' quoted above, as teaching that the mother and its offspring must be of the same species, how does he then explain the references to 'emurim' in connection with the three cases of firstlings mentioned above?
- (38) That the verse only teaches what R. Jose b. Hanina says.
- (39) The threefold repetition of the word 'bekor' ('firstling').
- (40) Employed by our Mishnah as basis for its teaching.
- (41) Num. XVIII, 15.
- (42) As liable to redemption.
- (43) And the law of the firstling will apply to these as well.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 6a

The text therefore states ‘peter hamor’ ‘peter hamor’ twice, to intimate: ‘I have only spoken of the firstling of asses¹ but not [at all] of the firstlings of horses and camels’. R. Ahai raised an objection. [There is need for the repetition of ‘peter hamor’]. For if the Divine Law had written only one [‘peter hamor’], I might have said that it [the law of the firstling of an ass requiring redemption] is a thing which was included in the general proposition² and then made the subject of a special statement,³ so that the specification is not limited to itself alone but is to be applied to the whole class [of unclean animals], and so, in all cases, the redemption is indeed with a sheep. Therefore the Divine Law wrote in another text ‘peter hamor’ to intimate that only firstlings of asses are redeemed with a sheep but not the firstlings of horses and camels. But one might say that the limitation [with reference to horses etc.] only refers to [redemption] with a sheep, but, elsewhere, they may indeed be redeemed with any object? — If so, let the Divine Law write: ‘The firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’; ‘and an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’. Why [this repetition], ‘The firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’,⁴ ‘the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’?⁵ It is to intimate, ‘I have only spoken to you of the firstlings of asses [as requiring redemption] but not of the firstlings of horses and camels’.⁶ And our Tanna of the Mishnah, whence does he derive a limitation of horses and camels [as being altogether exempt from the law of the firstlings]? — Said R. Papa: [Scripture says:] And of all the cattle thou shalt sanctify the males,⁷ this is a general proposition. ‘The firstling of an ox and sheep . . . And the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem’, is a specification; and with a general proposition complemented by a specification the general proposition includes only the specification; thus teaching that an ox, sheep and an ass [are liable to the law of the firstling], but not any other [animal]. And R. Jose the Galilean?⁸ — [His answer is] that the word ‘peter’ interrupts the subject.⁹ And the Rabbis?¹⁰ — The letter waw¹¹ joins it again to the previous verse. And R. Jose the Galilean? — Let not Scripture write neither the waw [which joins it with the previous verse] nor [write the word] ‘peter’ [which interrupts the subject].¹² And the’ Rabbis? — Since the one part¹³ deals with objects consecrated in respect of their value and the other part with objects consecrated as such,¹⁴ Scripture, therefore, at first interrupts the subject and subsequently connects it again [with the previous verse]. The question was asked: If a cow gave birth to a species of ass and it possesses some marks similar [to its mother]; what is the ruling? If a goat gave birth to a species of ewe and a ewe gave birth to a species of goat, the ruling is that when it possesses some marks [similar to its mother] it is subject to the law of the firstling, the reason being that this one [the mother] is a clean animal and this one [the offspring] is a clean animal, this one [the mother] is an object consecrated as such and this one [the offspring] is also an object consecrated as such. But here, where this one [the offspring] is an unclean animal and this one [the mother] is a clean animal, this one [the mother] is an object consecrated as such and this one [the offspring] is an object consecrated for its value, the ruling should not be [the same]. Or, perhaps, since in both cases, [even in the case where the offspring is a species of ass and the mother is a cow], they belong to a category of animals possessing the sanctity of the first-born, shall we say that it is therefore sanctified?¹⁵ And should you maintain that since both cases mentioned above come under the law of the sanctity of the firstborn, therefore [where a cow gave birth to a species of ass which possesses some features akin to its mother] it is sanctified, what will be the ruling for an ass which gave birth to a species of horse? Here, surely, it¹⁶ does not belong to the category of animals which have the sanctity of the firstling. Or, are we perhaps to say that since [the horse] belongs to the same class of unclean animals,¹⁷ it is sanctified? And would you say that since it belongs to a class of unclean animals, it is sanctified, what will be the ruling regarding a cow which gave birth to a species of horse? Here, surely, this one [the cow] is a clean animal whereas this one [the offspring] is an unclean animal, this one [the cow] belongs to a category of animals which possess the sanctity of the firstling, whereas this one [the horse] does not belong to the category of animals which have the sanctity of the firstling. Or are we perhaps to say that marks [similar to the mother] are the decisive factor?¹⁸ — Come and hear: ‘A clean animal which gave birth to a species of unclean animal is exempted from the law of the firstling. If it possesses, however, some marks [similar to the parent], it is liable to the law of the firstling¹⁹. What [does this mean]? Does it not refer even to the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of horse?’ — No, it refers to the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass.²⁰ Come and hear: ‘If a cow gave birth to a species of ass or an ass gave birth to a species of horse, it is exempt from the law of the firstling. If it possesses, however, some marks [similar to the mother], it is liable to [the law of] the firstling’. What [does this mean]? Does this [the last clause] not refer to both cases mentioned?²¹ — No, it refers only to the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass. But the case of an ass which gave birth to a species of horse—why does it state this? Is it to exempt it [from the law of the first-born]? Is this not obvious? Since, in the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of an ass, where both [the mother and its offspring] belong to a category of animals which have the sanctity of the firstling, you say if the ass has some marks [similar to its mother], it is sanctified, but if not, it is not sanctified, is there any question in the case of an ass which gave birth to a species of horse?²² — It is necessary to state this. You might be inclined to assume that there [in the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass] the reason is because the cow has horns but here the ass has no horns, here [the cow] its hoofs are cloven but there [the ass] its hoofs are closed.²³ But here [in the case where an ass gave birth to a species of horse], since in both instances, they have no horns and the hoofs of both are closed, I might have said that the offspring [a species of horse] was merely a red ass.²⁴ We are therefore informed [that this is not so].²⁵ WHAT IS THE LAW WITH REFERENCE TO EATING THEM etc. What need is there [for the Mishnah] to lay down FOR THAT WHICH GOES’ FORTH etc.? — It is a mere [mnemonical] sign so that you should not change the version [of the Mishnah]²⁶ and that you should not say ‘decide according to the offspring, and this is a perfectly clean animal and this is a perfectly unclean animal’.²⁷ But we rather say, ‘Follow the mother’. Whence is this proved? — Because our Rabbis taught: ‘Nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud or²⁸ of them that divide the hoof’.²⁹ You have the case of an animal which chews the cud and has divided hoofs which you are, nevertheless, forbidden to eat. And what is it? This is the case of a clean animal born from an unclean animal. Perhaps, it is not so but [the verse] refers to the case of an unclean animal born from a clean animal? And what is the interpretation of the verse: ‘Of them that chew the cud or of them that divide the hoof’?

(1) As requiring redemption.

(2) In the verse, ‘And the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem’ cited supra.

(3) That the firstling of an ass must be redeemed with a sheep.

(4) Ex. XIII, 13.

(5) The repetition of the word רִפְיָא (firstling) in Ex. XXXIV, 20.

(6) Because there is no holiness at all in regard to the firstlings of other unclean animals.

(7) Ibid. XXXIV, 19.

(8) Who infers the ruling that other animals beside the firstling of an ass, sheep and goat are not liable to the law of the firstborn from the repetition of ‘peter hamor’, why does he not derive this from the verse quoted by R. Papa and in the manner interpreted by the latter.

(9) We do not interpret the verse as a general proposition complemented by a specification, as the word 'peter' before the text 'ox or sheep' indicates a break in the subject.

(10) The majority of the Rabbis who dispute with him as to the derivations of the various teachings under discussion.

(11) The 'waw', a conjunction, meaning 'and' in the word רַיְפִי which commences the following verse.

(12) If Scripture did not interrupt the theme with the word 'Peter', there would have been no need for the 'waw' to connect again.

(13) The general proposition: 'All that openeth the womb is mine etc.' which includes an ass, that is not holy as such and must be redeemed with a sheep.

(14) The firstlings of ox or sheep.

(15) A species of ass born from a cow is, therefore, holy if it has some features resembling its mother, for an ass although an unclean animal, is liable to the law of the firstling.

(16) A horse. Therefore, even if it has some marks like the mother, it should not be liable to the law of the firstling.

(17) . Like an ass, which though unclean, is liable to the law of the firstling. Therefore, if the offspring is a species of horse, and if there is a measure of resemblance between it and its mother, we do not regard the change between the ass and its offspring of such great importance, as to exempt it altogether from the law of the firstling.

(18) And although the difference between the parent and the offspring is great, since the latter resembles the mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling.

(19) We therefore deduce that signs in the offspring akin to the parent are an important matter and the other points raised above are also, incidentally, thereby solved.

(20) But where there is such a gap between the Parent and its offspring as e.g. where a cow gave birth to a species of horse, it is exempt from the law of the firstling. Therefore, only one of the above queries can be solved.

(21) Where a cow gave birth to a species of ass and an ass gave birth to a species of horse, if the offspring had some marks like its mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling.

(22) If the horse does not possess signs resembling the ass, that it should be exempt?

(23) Therefore only if the ass has signs resembling the cow, is it liable to the law of the firstling.

(24) And not a horse at all. An ordinary horse is red in color and an ordinary ass is black. Consequently, if the horse had some features like its parents, we ought perhaps to regard it as a kind of red ass, thus making it liable to the law of the firstling.

(25) Since a horse's color is generally red we regard it as a species of a horse and not as a freak ass. There is, consequently, no proof as to what is the ruling concerning an ass which gave birth to a species of horse.

(26) And say that a clean animal which gave birth to an unclean animal is forbidden to be eaten and an unclean animal which gave birth to a clean animal is permitted to be eaten. Clean animals are those which may be eaten according to the Jewish law and possess the necessary signs of a clean animal and unclean animals are those which do not possess these signs. .

(27) Therefore where a clean animal is born from an unclean animal, it should be permitted to be eaten.

(28) This can also be rendered 'and'.

(29) Lev. XI, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 6b

It means this: An object which proceeds from them which chew the cud and of them that divide the hoof, ye shall not eat!¹ The text therefore states: The camel . . . he is unclean,² intimating that he is unclean³ but an unclean animal born from a clean animal is not Unclean, but clean. R.

Simeon says: The word 'camel' occurs twice,⁴ once referring to a camel born from a camel [as forbidden], and the other, to a camel born from a cow. And as to the Rabbis who differ from R. Simeon — what do they do with the repetition 'camel', 'camel'? — One is to forbid [the camel itself] and the other to prohibit its milk. And whence does R. Simeon derive the prohibition of a camel's milk? — He derives it from the word 'eth, [with] the camel'.⁵ And the Rabbis? — They do not stress the word eth [occurring in the Scriptures]. As it was taught: Simeon the Imsonite used to expound the word eth wherever it occurred in the Law. When he reached, however, the verse, eth [with] the Lord thy God thou shalt fear,⁶ he abstained.⁷ His pupils, thereupon, said to him: 'Rabbi, every eth which you have expounded, — what will become of them?' He replied to them: 'Just as I have received reward for interpreting every eth, so I shall receive reward for abstaining'. Finally, however, R. Akiba came and taught that the verse: 'eth [with] the Lord thy God thou shalt fear', intimates that we must pay reverence to scholars next to God. Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: According to this, the reason of the Rabbis [why milk of an unclean animal is forbidden], is because of the repetition 'camel', 'camel', and that of R. Simeon is because of the text 'eth [with] the camel', but were it not so, I might have said that milk from an unclean animal is permitted. Why should it be different from what was taught: [The verse] These are the unclean,⁸ implies the prohibition of their brine, their soup and their jelly!⁹ — It is necessary [to find another basis for milk]. For I might have been inclined to assume that since even the use of milk itself of a clean animal is an anomaly, for a Master said: The blood [during the nursing period] is disturbed [decomposed] and turns into milk; and since it is an anomaly,¹⁰ therefore even from an unclean animal the milk should be permitted. We are accordingly informed [that this is not so]. This would indeed hold good according to him who says that the blood [during the nursing period] is disturbed [decomposed] and turns into milk. But according to him who says [that the reason why there is no menstruation period while nursing is] because her limbs become disjointed¹¹ and she does not become normal in herself for twenty-four months,¹² what can you reply? — It is still necessary. I might have been inclined to assume, that since there is nothing which proceeds from a living being which the Divine Law permits and yet milk which is similar to a part from a living animal [is permitted], therefore even from an unclean animal the milk should be permitted. We are accordingly informed [that this is not so]. And whence do we derive that milk itself from a clean animal is permitted? Shall I say that since the Divine Law prohibits [the boiling of] milk and meat together, this implies that separately milk is permitted? But might I not still maintain that milk by itself is forbidden to be eaten though permitted for other general use,¹³ whereas in the case of boiling meat and milk together, it is also forbidden for any use. And even according to the view of R. Simeon who holds that meat and milk boiled together is permitted for general use,¹⁴ the prohibition can be explained as necessary to inflict lashes for the boiling!¹⁵ Rather,¹⁶ since the Divine Law states in connection with dedicated objects which became unfit, Notwithstanding thou mayest kill¹⁷ but not to use the shearing, 'flesh', but not the milk,¹⁸ this implies that milk from an unconsecrated animal is permitted. But may I not take the meaning to be that milk from an unconsecrated animal is forbidden to be eaten but may be used for other general use, whereas in the case of consecrated objects, it is forbidden even for any use? — Rather deduce [the law] from what [Scripture] has written, And thou shalt have goats' milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance of thy maidens.¹⁹ Perhaps, however, this only refers to business?²⁰ Rather deduce this from what [Scripture] writes, And carry these ten cheeses unto the captain of their thousand.²¹ Perhaps, here also, it refers to business.²² Is it usual in war to sell [food to the enemy]?²³ If you prefer, I may deduce from here:²⁴ A land flowing with milk and honey.²⁵ Now if milk were not permitted, would Scripture commend the country to us with something which is not fit to be eaten? Or, if you prefer, I may deduce it from here:²⁶ Come ye buy and eat, yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price.²⁷ Now, according to this,²⁸ , the repetition ‘Rockbadger’, ‘Rockbadger’,²⁹ ‘Hare’, ‘Hare’, ‘Swine’, ‘Swine’, — are these also come for some purpose?³⁰ But [the object of these repetitions quoted] is really as was taught: Why is there a repetition [of the clean and unclean] animals?³¹ On account of shesu'ah.³² Why with reference to birds, [is there the same repetition in the Scripture]? On account of ra'ah.³³ Then, perhaps, [the repetition of] ‘Camel’, ‘Camel’ also has the same purpose?³⁴ — All the same, wherever we can derive a lesson from the biblical text, we interpret it.³⁵ Our Rabbis taught: If a ewe gave birth to a species of a goat or a goat gave birth to a species of a ewe, it is exempt from the law of the firstling. But if the offspring possesses some marks similar to its mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling. R. Simeon says [it is not liable to the law of the firstling] until the head and the greater part of the body resemble the mother. The following query was put forward. Does R. Simeon require, in order that the animal may be permitted to be eaten, the head and the greater part of the body,³⁶ or not? In connection with a firstling, Scripture writes: ‘But the firstling of an ox’³⁷ indicating [that the law of the firstling does not apply] until the animal is an ox and its firstborn is an ox.³⁸ But as regards permission for eating, the Divine Law says that only a camel is prohibited, but

(1) I.e., a species of an unclean animal born from a clean animal.

(2) Ibid.

(3) And usually camels are born from camels and, since Scripture emphasizes that ‘he’ is unclean etc., this implies that a camel, however, born from a cow, is clean.

(4) Once in Lev. XI, 4 and again in Deut. XIV, 7.

(5) kndv , t. The accusative article , t can be rendered also ‘with’.

(6) Deut. X, 20.

(7) Because the word eth means by implication an amplification and he felt that here he could not amplify the word so as to include fearing someone besides the Deity.

(8) Lev. XI, 31. The v before ohitny meaning ‘the’. The superfluous letter suggests the inclusion of something else as unclean.

(9) And the sediments of boiled meat.

(10) This shows that blood, which ordinarily is prohibited, after a change is permitted, and the same is the case in connection with the milk of a clean animal.

(11) On account of the labor of childbirth.

(12) The period of nursing, and not because the blood is changed into milk. Therefore, the use of milk is not an anomaly and what need is there, consequently, for a special prohibition with reference to the milk of an unclean animal?

(13) I.e., to be sold to non-Jews.

(14) V. infra 10a.

(15) But milk by itself may still be forbidden, only, in addition, there is a penalty of forty lashes for boiling the meat and milk together.

(16) From the following verse, you may derive the permission for the use of milk.

(17) Deut. XII, 15.

(18) Although the animal is no longer fit for the purpose dedicated, even after its redemption, it possesses a measure of sanctity.

- (19) Prov. XXVII, 27.
- (20) To sell the milk profitably to non-Jews to maintain his family. But milk may be still prohibited for food.
- (21) I Sam. XVII, 18. And Jesse instructs David to bring them to the captain of their thousand in the war, which shows that milk is permitted to be eaten.
- (22) That the captain of their thousand might sell to the gentile enemy.
- (23) Their intention being to destroy the enemy heathen, the Hebrews would not do business with them to increase their power of resistance. Therefore the cheeses must have been intended for the Hebrews.
- (24) From the following verse, we can derive that milk is permitted.
- (25) Ex. III, 8.
- (26) From the following verse, one can derive that milk is permitted.
- (27) Isa. LV, 1.
- (28) Both according to the Rabbis and R. Simeon who derive lessons from the repetition of 'Camel', 'Camel', although variously.
- (29) Once in Leviticus and again in Deuteronomy, the same applying to the other repetitions quoted.
- (30) What need is there for these repeated prohibitions?
- (31) In Leviticus and Deuteronomy.
- (32) A creature with two backs and two spinal columns, which is not mentioned in Leviticus as forbidden.
- (33) The name of an unclean bird, not mentioned in Leviticus.
- (34) The repetition having no object except for the inclusion of one new animal and bird left unmentioned in Leviticus.
- (35) And the reason why we infer that special deductions are made from 'Camel', 'Camel', and not from the repetition of 'Rockbadger', 'Rockbadger' etc., is because the word 'Camel' occurs first in the text.
- (36) In the case of an unclean animal born from a clean animal where R. Simeon forbids the eating, if the offspring has no marks similar to the mother, but permits it if there are marks similar to the mother, the question arises whether he requires that the offspring must be like the mother to the extent of its head and the greater part of the body?
- (37) Num. XVIII, 17.
- (38) I.e., the head and the greater part of the body to be similar to its mother.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 7a

if it has changed from a camel,¹ there is no objection. Or is there perhaps no difference?² — Come and hear: If a clean animal gives birth to a species of unclean animal it is forbidden to be eaten, but if the head and the greater part of the body resemble its mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling. May we not deduce from here³ that even as regards permission to eat, R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body to be [similar to its mother?] — No, only as regards [the law] of the firstling.⁴ I can also prove it. For he leaves [the first clause of the above passage] relating to eating [as it is] and places [the provision of the head and the greater part of the body] in conjunction with the firstling. We deduce from here, therefore, [do we not] that only in connection with the firstling does R. Simeon require the head and the greater part of the body, but not as regards permission for eating! — No. I may still tell you that also as regards eating, R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body; and that it was necessary to state this with particular reference to the firstling. For I might be inclined to assume that since Scripture writes: 'But the firstling of an ox',⁵ [that the law of the firstling does not apply] until the animal is an ox and its first-born is an ox, and that therefore it is not sufficient for the offspring to resemble its mother to the extent only of its head and the greater part of its body, but the whole animal must resemble its mother. He accordingly informs us [that this is not so]. Come and hear: [Scripture says]: Nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud or of them that divide the hoof.⁶ We infer that this you must not eat,⁷ but you may eat an animal which has one mark similar [to its mother]. And what is this which has one mark? This is an unclean animal which was born from a clean animal impregnated from a clean animal. I might think that this is the case even if it was impregnated from an unclean animal? The Text therefore states: 'A sheep [born from a pair] of lambs', 'a goat [born from a pair] of goats',⁸ intimating that the father must be a sheep and the mother must be a female sheep. These are the words of R. Joshua. R. Eliezer says: The object of the text is not to allow what is [already] permitted⁹ but to add to what is already permitted. And what is this? This is the case of an unclean animal born from a clean animal impregnated from an unclean animal. Or, shall I say that this is not the case, but its pregnancy must be from a clean animal? Scripture therefore states: 'a sheep of lambs', 'a sheep of goats' in any case.¹⁰ Now he describes [in the above passage] the animal as unclean, therein agreeing with R. Simeon,¹¹ and proceeds to say, 'But you may eat an animal which possesses one [clean] mark similar to its mother'! — This Tanna [of the above passage] holds with R. Simeon in one thing¹² but he differs from him in the other.¹³ Some there are who raise a question [with reference to the above Baraitha], and answer it.¹⁴ [The question was asked]. Can impregnation take place from an unclean animal? For R. Joshua b. Levi said: There can be no impregnation either of an unclean animal from a clean animal, or of a clean animal from an unclean animal, or of large cattle from small cattle, or of small cattle from large cattle, or of a domestic animal from a beast of chase, or a beast of chase from a domestic animal, except in the case¹⁵ discussed by R. Eliezer and his disputants, where all say that a beast of chase can become pregnant from a domestic animal. And R. Jeremiah explained that the animal became pregnant from a kalut born of a cow,¹⁶ adopting the view of R. Simeon.¹⁷ And the Baraitha states: But you may eat an animal which has one mark like its mother?¹⁸ — This Tanna [from the Baraitha] holds with R. Simeon in one thing but differs from him in the other.¹⁹ Does this mean to say that R. Eliezer holds that a product of two [heterogeneous] factors is permitted²⁰ and that R. Joshua holds that a product of two such factors is forbidden? But have we not learnt the reverse of them? [For we have learnt]: The offspring of a trefah²¹ must not be offered upon the altar. But R. Joshua says it may be offered upon the altar!²² — As a rule, R. Eliezer maintains that a product of two [heterogeneous] factors is forbidden, but the case is different here.²³ For if it were so, Scripture should write: The sheep of lambs and goats. Why is the repetition of 'sheep', 'sheep' needed? Deduce from here, therefore, 'sheep' in any circumstances.²⁴ And R. Joshua? — He will explain the matter to you [as follows]. In general, a product of two [heterogeneous] factors is permitted, but here [in the Baraitha], if this were the case, let Scripture write: 'Ox', 'sheep of a lamb', 'sheep of a goat'. What need is there for the words 'lambs', 'goats'?²⁵ Deduce, therefore, from here that the father must be a sheep and the mother must be a sheep.²⁶ Come and hear: R. Simeon says: [We find] 'camel', 'camel' twice;²⁷ one refers to a camel born from a camel [as prohibited] and the other refers to a camel born from a cow. But if its head and the greater part of its body resemble the mother, it is permitted to be eaten. Deduce, therefore, from here that even for eating R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body [to be similar to the mother]. This is proved. FOR THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAR, etc. A question was put to R. Shesheth. What is the ruling concerning the urine of an ass? Why should not the question be put [concerning the urine] of horses or camels? The question was not put [concerning the urine] of horses or camels, for it is not thick and, consequently, it is not similar to milk. [It is merely] water coming in,²⁸ and water coming out. But the question does arise [concerning the urine] of an ass, because it is thick and is similar to milk. What is the ruling? Is the urine drained from the body of the ass itself and therefore it is forbidden, or, perhaps, [it is merely] water coming in and water coming out and its thickness is due to the exudations of the body? — R. Shesheth replied to his questioners. We have learnt it: FOR THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAR IS UNCLEAR, AND THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE CLEAR IS CLEAR. Now, it does not say ‘from what is Unclear’.²⁹

- (1) But in some respects it is like its mother.
 - (2) Even for permission to eat, we require the head and the greater part of the body to be like the mother.
 - (3) For it is R. Simeon who holds that an unclean animal born from a clean animal is forbidden, and since the prohibition of eating is put in the proximity of the expression of the head and the greater part of the body, we therefore may conclude that for eating purposes, as well as for the law of the firstling, the offspring must resemble the mother as regards its head and the greater part of the body.
 - (4) Does R. Simeon require that the head and the greater part of the body must be similar to its mother.
 - (5) Num. XVIII, 17.
 - (6) Lev. XI, 4.
 - (7) E.g., a camel even born from a cow.
 - (8) So literally. Deut. XIV, 4.
 - (9) Where both parents are clean animals.
 - (10) From the repetition of the word ‘seh’, it is inferred that even if the unclean animal has only a mother which is a clean animal, the father being an unclean animal, it is still permitted.
 - (11) The language used, ‘an unclean animal’, in the Baraita but not ‘that which issues from a clean animal’, is in accordance with the view of R. Simeon who forbids the offspring as definitely unclean, if it has not marks resembling its mother; and it says here that if it has one mark similar to its mother, it is permitted. Hence, we see that we do not require according to R. Simeon the head etc. to resemble its mother.
 - (12) That an unclean animal born from a clean animal is unclean.
 - (13) For R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body to resemble its mother before it is permitted to be eaten.
 - (14) And from the answer, our query whether R. Simeon requires the head etc. to be like the mother in order to be permitted to be eaten, can be solved.
 - (15) A koy: (An antelope or bearded deer). The Rabbis are undecided whether it belongs to the genus of cattle or the beasts of the chase. This animal, however, comes from a he-goat, and a hind, and R. Eliezer and the majority of the Sages dispute whether the law forbidding the killing of the mother and its young on one day applies to it. But apparently they agree that impregnation is possible in such circumstances.
 - (16) The unclean animal referred to in the Baraita above, does not actually mean an unclean animal but a kalu! (closed), an animal with closed and uncloven hoofs born of a cow.
 - (17) Since the Baraita describes the kalut born of a cow as unclean, this indicates that its views are in accordance with R. Simeon who holds that an unclean animal born from a clean animal is unclean.
 - (18) Hence we can infer that for eating purposes, R. Simeon does not require the head and the greater part of its body to be like its mother.
 - (19) As regards requiring the head etc. to resemble its mother.
 - (20) R. Eliezer who permits the offspring when the impregnation is from an unclean animal, because he maintains that since it is a product of combined causes and one of these, the mother, is a clean animal, it is permitted.

(21) V. Glos.

(22) If its sire is a clean animal, although the mother is trefah. V. Hul. 58a and Tem. 30b. We have here, consequently, a product of combined causes, one of which is a clean animal.

(23) In the Baraitha quoted above.

(24) Even where the pregnancy is from an unclean animal, the offspring is permitted.

(25) Why are these words put in the plural.

(26) The father must also belong to the same class.

(27) Once in Leviticus and again in Deuteronomy.

(28) When the animal drinks.

(29) The phrase 'from what is unclean' would imply coming from the body itself, and therefore whether the substance which came forth was turgid or otherwise, it would be forbidden to be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 7b

but FROM THE UNCLEAN,¹ and this too [the urine of an ass thick as milk] is from that which is unclean. Some state the argument as follows: With reference to [the urine of] horses or animals, the question was not put forward, because it is not drunk.² The question, however, arose concerning [the urine of an ass] which people drink and is good for jaundice. What is the ruling? — R. Shesheth replied to this. We have learnt this in the Mishnah: THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAN IS UNCLEAN, AND THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE CLEAN IS CLEAN, and this [urine] also comes from an unclean animal.³ An objection was raised. Why did [the Sages] say that honey from bees is permitted? Because the bees store it⁴ up in their bodies but do not drain it from their bodies.⁵ — He [the Tanna of the passage quoted above] holds with R. Jacob who said: The Divine Law expressly permitted honey.⁶ For it was taught: R. Jacob says: Yet these may ye eat of all the winged swarming things.⁷ This you may eat, but you are forbidden to eat an unclean winged swarming thing. But is not an unclean winged swarming thing expressly mentioned in the Scripture [as forbidden]? Rather we must explain [thus]: An unclean fowl that swarms you must not eat, but you may eat what an unclean fowl casts forth from its body. And what is this? This is bees' honey.⁸ You might think that this also includes gazins'⁹ honey or hornets' honey as permissible. You cannot, however, say this. And why should you include bees' honey and exclude gazins' honey or hornets' honey? I include bees' honey because it has no qualifying epithet¹⁰ but I exclude gazins' honey or hornets' honey, since they have a qualifying epithet. Whom does this dictum that has been taught follow: Gazins' honey or hornets' honey is clean and is permitted to be eaten? Not R. Jacob. [The Baraitha says concerning gazins' or hornets' honey] that it is clean, consequently, it requires the intention [of using it as a food].¹¹ We infer from this that bees' honey does not need the intention [of using it as a food].¹² It has also been taught likewise: Honey in its hive becomes unclean¹³ with the uncleanness of food, even without the intention [of using it as a food]. With regard to ball-like concretions in a fallow-deer, the Rabbis in the presence of R. Safra proposed to lay down that they were real eggs and were therefore forbidden.¹⁴ Said R. Safra: It was really the seed of a deer which sought to couple with a hind, but since the latter's womb is narrow and it is unable to copulate, the deer, therefore, seeks to couple with a fallow-deer, releasing its semen into the latter's womb.¹⁵ Said R. Huna: The skin which is over the face of an ass at birth¹⁶ is permitted to be eaten.¹⁷ What is the reason? — It is a mere secretion [but no real skin]. Said R. Hisda to him. There is a [Baraitha] taught which supports you: A skin which is over the face of a man, whether alive or dead, is clean.¹⁸ Now does not this mean whether both the offspring and its mother are alive, or whether both the offspring and its mother are dead?¹⁹ No. It means, whether the offspring is alive and its mother is dead, or whether the offspring is dead and its mother is alive.²⁰ But has it not been taught: Whether the offspring and its mother are alive, or whether the offspring and its mother are dead, [the ruling is that the skin is clean]? If it has been actually taught in a Baraita, then it has been taught.²¹

MISHNAH. IF AN UNCLEAN FISH SWALLOWED A CLEAN FISH, IT IS PERMITTED TO BE EATEN. BUT IF A CLEAN FISH HAS SWALLOWED AN UNCLEAN FISH, THE LATTER IS FORBIDDEN TO BE EATEN, BECAUSE IT IS NOT [THE CLEAN FISH'S] PRODUCT.²²

GEMARA. The reason²³ is because we actually saw that it swallowed. But if we did not see that it swallowed, we would say that it was bred²⁴ [by the unclean fish]. Whence do we know this? For it has been taught: An unclean fish breeds, whereas a clean fish lays eggs.²⁵ If this is a fact, even if we see that it actually swallowed, we should say that the clean fish had been consumed and [the fish found inside] was bred by the unclean fish!²⁶ — Said R. Shesheth: [It means,] if e.g., he found it in the secretory channel.²⁷ R. Nahman said: if e.g., he found it whole.²⁸ R. Ashi said:²⁹ The majority of fish breed their own kind and therefore [when we discover a different kind of fish inside] it is as if we had witnessed the swallowing. Our Rabbis taught: An Unclean fish breeds, but a clean fish lays eggs. Whatsoever gives birth,³⁰ gives suck.³¹ And whatsoever lays eggs, supports its brood by picking up [food for it], except the bat, for although it lays eggs, it gives suck [to its young].

- (1) The phrase 'from the unclean' implies something which proceeds from the inside of an unclean creature, and although it does not drain from the body itself, it is yet forbidden.
 - (2) As a medicine. Therefore it is of little value and is not forbidden.
 - (3) According to this version therefore, whether it is thick or otherwise, it is forbidden (R. Gershom).
 - (4) From the sap of flowers and plants.
 - (5) There is, therefore, an objection here according to both versions. According to the first version, if the substance which proceeds from an unclean creature is thick although it does not drain from the body, it is prohibited, whereas here, in the case of honey, the reason why it is allowed is because it does not drain the body. And according to the second version, honey, since it comes from an unclean creature, should be forbidden.
 - (6) The Divine Law explicitly permits honey, although it may come from the body of the bee itself, and no reason is given for this.
 - (7) Lev. XI, 21.
 - (8) And is not like the embryo or offspring which is part of the creature itself.
 - (9) A species of wild bees or locusts.
 - (10) Bees' honey is known briefly as honey, without any necessity to describe it as such.
 - (11) Food, which is recognized as such, automatically receives the uncleanness pertaining to food when coming in contact with an unclean object such as a corpse or carcass. But, an object which is not ordinarily considered as food requires, in order to receive uncleanness, the intention that it is to be used as food.
 - (12) For it is regarded as ordinary food and receives uncleanness in the usual manner. This passage is to be added with Sh. Mek.
 - (13) For ordinary hives are used for bees, although the honey is still in the hive and the consumer has not as yet expressed his intention of using it as food.

(14) Like a limb from a living animal, having been communicated from the male organ to the womb.

(15) The semen, however, owing to the delay in copulation, has meanwhile hardened, and although it enters the womb, owing to its congealed state, it has no effect and issues later in the animal's excrements, in the form of ball concretions.

(16) A thin skin somewhat similar to the after-birth, but not actually the same.

(17) For it is not regarded as the after-birth in any way.

(18) He who touches or carries it remains clean.

(19) And even if both are dead, nevertheless, the skin is clean. Hence, we learn that the skin is a false membrane and is not considered as the after-birth of either the mother or the offspring.

(20) For the skin comes from both the mother and its offspring and therefore it is clean until both are dead. This is one explanation. Rashi's explanation, however, is that the Baraitha in both cases supposes the mother to be alive, only in one instance the offspring is also alive, therefore the skin is clean. But where both are dead, R. Hisda cannot find support for R. Huna's ruling.

(21) And nothing further need be said.

(22) For the unclean fish was swallowed alive, but if it was actually a growth of the clean fish, it would be permitted, as is the ruling with something which proceeds from a clean being.

(23) Why the Mishnah states that if an unclean fish swallowed a clean fish, the latter is permitted to be eaten.

(24) And we should then regard it as its progeny and as part of the unclean fish.

(25) And hatches them till the young emerge.

(26) And it should therefore be forbidden to be eaten, as the progeny of any unclean fish.

(27) And if it were an embryo, it should have been found in the womb.

(28) And if it were an embryo, it would have left the womb before now.

(29) The Mishnah does not refer to the case where we actually saw the swallowing.

(30) To an embryo or offspring, a creature like itself.

(31) I.e., possesses breasts.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 8a

Dolphins are fruitful and multiply by coupling with human beings. What are dolphins? — Said Rab Judah: Humans of the sea.¹ In any species which has its male balls outside,² [the female] give birth [to its young]. But where the male balls are inside, [the female] lay eggs. It is not so. Did not Samuel Say: The domestic and wild goose are forbidden copulation?³ And we raised the point, what is the reason? Said Abaye: In one case, the male balls are outside, and in the other, the male balls are inside. Yet both lay eggs! — Rather say: Whatsoever has its male genital outside, gives birth, but whatsoever has its male genital inside lays eggs.⁴ Whatsoever copulates in the day time, gives birth in the day time. Whatsoever copulates in the night, gives birth in the night. Whatsoever copulates in the day and night time, gives birth both in the day and in the night. 'Whatsoever copulates in the day time gives birth in the day time:' for instance, a cock. 'Whatsoever copulates in the night, gives birth in the night': for instance, a bat. 'Whatsoever copulates in the day and night time, gives birth both in the day and in the night': for instance, man and all beings resembling him. What is the practical rule [to be derived from this statement]? — The rule of R. Mari, the son of Kahana. For R. Mari, the son of Kahana said: If one searched a nest of chickens on the eve of a Festival and did not find an egg therein and on the morrow, he rose early⁵ and found there an egg, it is permitted to be eaten on the Festival.⁶ [But did he not search?]⁷ — You presume that he did not search thoroughly. But did he not search thoroughly? — You presume that the greater part [of the egg] came forth from the intestines of the chicken but returned,⁸ and this is in accordance with the ruling of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan said: An egg, the greater part of which came forth [from the intestines of a chicken] on the eve of a Festival and returned [to its intestines,] may be eaten on the Festival. All animals whose copulating and pregnancy are alike,⁹ give birth from one another, and nurse each other's young. All animals copulate with their faces against the back [of the female], except three, which copulate face to face, and these are a fish, man, and a serpent. And why are these three different? — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: In the West [Palestine] it was said: Because the Divine Presence spoke with them.¹⁰ In a Baraita it was taught: Camels [copulate] back to back. Our Rabbis taught: A hen lays its eggs after twenty-one days,¹¹ and corresponding [to a hen] is the almond-tree among trees.¹² A dog [goes with young] for fifty days, and corresponding [to a dog] is a fig-tree among trees. A cat [goes with young] for fifty-two days, and corresponding [to a cat] is a mulberry-tree among trees, [whose fruit ripens fifty-two days after its blossoming]. A pig [goes with young] for sixty days, and corresponding [to a pig] is an apple tree among trees. A fox and all kinds of reptiles [go with young] for six months, and corresponding [to a fox] etc. is wheat among trees.¹³ Small clean animals [go with young] for five months, and corresponding [to small animals] is a vine among trees. Large unclean cattle [go with young] for twelve months, and corresponding [to large unclean cattle] is a palm-tree among trees.¹⁴ Clean large cattle [go with young] for nine months, and corresponding [to clean large cattle] is an olive-tree among trees. The wolf, lion, bear, leopard, bardeles,¹⁵ elephant, monkey, and long-tailed ape [go with young] for three years, corresponding to them are white figs among trees. A viper [or adder] goes with young for Seventy years, and corresponding to it is the carob-tree among trees. From the time of the planting of the carob-tree to the ripening of its fruit, a period of seventy years elapses; and the time of its pregnancy',¹⁶ is three years. A serpent [goes with young] for seven years, and for that wicked animal there is no companion [among trees]. Some, however, say that [corresponding to a serpent] is a kind of white fig [among trees],¹⁷ Whence is this proved?¹⁸ — Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab and they trace it in tradition up to the name of R. Joshua b. Hanania: Because [Scripture] says: Cursed art thou from among all cattle and from among all the beasts of the field.¹⁹ Now if [the serpent] was cursed [to go with young for a period] longer than an animal,²⁰ [how much] longer must this have been than that of a beast?²¹ But [the object of the verse is] to tell you: Just as the animal is cursed [to go with young] longer than a beast in the proportion of one to seven²² — and what is this? An ass which [goes with young longer] than a cat — so [the serpent] is cursed [to go with young] in the proportion of one to seven, which is seven years.²³ But why not say, that just as the beast has been cursed [to go with young longer] than an animal in the proportion of one to three — and what is this? A lion [which goes with young longer] than an ass²⁴ — so, [the serpent] has been cursed [to go with young] longer than the beast in the proportion of one to three, which is nine years?

(1) Half fish and half human.

(2) Outside its belly, i.e. animals and beasts.

(3) The coupling together of heterogeneous animals or birds is one form of kil'ayim.

(4) And as regards the domestic and wild goose, although the latter has its male balls outside, its male genital is inside. Therefore, in both instances, they lay eggs and do not give birth to their brood.

(5) Before dawn.

- (6) For since a hen does not lay eggs at night, it must have been laid on the previous day. An egg newly laid on a festival is forbidden on that day. V. Bez. 2a.
- (7) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
- (8) The greater part of the egg came forth from the inside of the chicken on the eve of the Festival, but it returned, and therefore he did not find it when he searched for it at first in the nest. Consequently, even if, as in this case, it laid the egg at night, it is permitted to eat it on the Festival. But it does not, usually, lay eggs in the night time.
- (9) Like sheep and goats, which copulate in a similar manner, their faces against the back of the female and whose period of pregnancy is five months.
- (10) The serpent in the Genesis story and the fish in that of Jonah.
- (11) After pregnancy from a cock, the egg takes this period for completion. Another explanation is that the hen hatches its eggs for a period of twenty-one days before the young ones emerge. (Rabbenu Gershom.)
- (12) From the time of its blossoming until the fruits are ripened, a period of twenty-one days elapse.
- (13) Wheat is here described as a tree, in accordance with the authority who maintains that the tree from which Adam partook was wheat; v. Ber. 40a.
- (14) V. supra n. 1.
- (15) A spotted beast, either a leopard or a hyena.
- (16) The time of the blossoming of the carob-tree until the ripening of its fruit extends over the last three years of the seventy years.
- (17) A species of fig, inferior to white figs.
- (18) That a serpent goes with young for seven years.
- (19) Gen. III, 14.
- (20) For the least of animals, i.e., a goat, takes five months to produce its young, whereas the shortest period for a beast, i.e., a cat, is fifty-two days.
- (21) If Scripture had written: 'Cursed art thou from among all cattle', this would have embraced the period also for which beasts are cursed to go with young.
- (22) A cat goes with young for fifty-two days and an ass for one year, i.e., three hundred and sixty-five days, the proportion therefore being one to seven.
- (23) Hence we infer that a serpent goes with young for seven years.
- (24) An ass goes with young for one year and a lion for three years.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 8b

— Does [Scripture] write: 'From among all the beasts and from among all the cattle'?¹ It writes [in the following order:] from among all the cattle and from among all the beasts. [The serpent] is cursed from among all the animals which are cursed [in that it takes longer to produce their young] than the beasts. But why not say: Just as the animal has been cursed [to go with young longer] than the beast in the proportion of one to three — and what is this? A goat [which goes with young longer] than a cat — so the serpent has been cursed in the proportion of one to three, which is fifteen months?² — If you choose, I may reply that Scripture writes: 'From among all cattle'.³ Or if you prefer [still another solution], it is a curse [which it is the object of the verse to inflict] and therefore we cast the [heaviest] curses possible [on the serpent].⁴ The Emperor once asked R. Joshua b. Hanania: 'How long is the period of gestation and birth of a serpent'? — He replied to him: 'Seven years'. 'But did not the Sages of the Athenian school couple' [a male serpent with a female] and they gave birth in three years'? — 'Those had already been pregnant for four years'. 'But did they not have sexual contact'?⁵ — 'Serpents have sexual intercourse in the same manner as human beings'.⁶ 'But are not [the sages of Athens] wise men [and surely they must have ascertained the true facts about the serpent]?' 'We are wiser than they'. 'If you are wise' said the Emperor, 'go and defeat them [in argument], and bring them to me'. He asked him: 'How many [are the Athenian sages]?' 'Sixty persons'. Thereupon he said to him: 'Make me a ship containing sixty compartments, each compartment containing sixty cushions'.⁷ He did this for him. When [R. Joshua] reached [their city], he went up to a slaughter-house. He found a certain man who was dressing an animal. He asked him: 'Is thy head for sale?' The other replied 'Yes'. Thereupon he asked him: 'For how much?' And the man answered: 'For a half a zuz'. He gave him [the money]. Eventually, he said to him: 'Give me thy head'. [He gave him an animal's head]. Thereupon [R. Joshua] exclaimed: 'Did I say the head of an animal? [I told thee, thy head]'. [R. Joshua] then said to him: 'If you wish that I should leave thee alone, step in front of me and show me the door of the school of the Athenian sages'. Thereupon the man replied: 'I am afraid, for whoever points them out, they put to death'. R. Joshua then said: 'Take a bundle of reeds, and if you reach the spot, throw it down as if to rest'.⁸ He went and found guards inside and guards outside the school; for when the [wise men] saw somebody enter, they used to kill the outside guards, and when they saw someone leaving, they killed the inside guards.⁹ He reversed [the heel] of his shoe and they killed the inside guards. He then reversed the shoe [to its normal position] and they killed all of them.¹⁰ He proceeded and found the young men sitting high up [in the upper chamber] and the elders below. He said: 'If I give greetings [to the elders], then [the young men] will kill me, the latter claiming "we are more important", [for we sit high up and they sit below]. [And if I give greetings to the young men, then the elders will kill me], the latter claiming "we are older and they are just youngsters"'. [R. Joshua] then said: 'Peace to you'. They asked him: 'What are you doing here?' He replied to them: 'I am a sage of the Jews, I wish to learn wisdom from you'. 'If so, we will ask you questions' [said the Athenian wise men]. He answered them: 'Very well. If you defeat me, then whatever you wish, do Unto me, but if I defeat you, eat bread with me in the ship'. They said to him: 'If a person wished to marry a woman and the consent was not given, is it feasible that he should seek a woman of higher birth?'¹¹ He took a peg and stuck it below [on the stone wall]¹² and it would not join, and then he stuck it higher up,¹³ and it went in. He said: 'Here also therefore, it- may happen that the second woman is his destined one'. 'If a man lends money and is compelled to seize his debt by force, is it to be expected that he should lend again?'¹⁴ He replied to them: 'A man goes into a forest, cuts the first load of wood and cannot [lift it].¹⁵ He continues cutting, until somebody comes along and helps him to lift the bundle'.¹⁶ They said to him: 'Tell us some stories'. He said to them: 'There was a mule which gave birth, and round its neck was a document in which was written, "there is a claim against my father's house of [one hundred]¹⁷ thousand zuz"'. They asked him: 'Can a mule give birth?' He answered them: 'This is one of these stories'. 'When salt becomes unsavory, wherewith is it salted?' He replied: 'With the after-birth of a mule'. 'And is there an after-birth of a mule?' 'And can salt become unsavory?' 'Build as a house in the sky'. He pronounced the Name [of the Deity], [suspended himself in the air] and hung between heaven and earth. He then said to them: 'Bring me up bricks and clay from down there'. [They asked: 'And is it possible to do this?' He replied: 'And is it possible to build a house between heaven and earth'].¹⁸ 'Where is the centre of the world?' He raised his fingers and said to them: 'Here'. They said to him: 'How can you prove it?' He replied: 'Bring ropes and measure'. They said: 'We have a pit in the field. Bring it to the town'. He replied: 'Knot ropes of bran flour for me and I will bring it in'.¹⁹ 'We have a broken millstone. Mend it'. [He took a detached portion from it and threw it before them]¹⁸ saying: 'Take out the threads for me, like a weaver, and I shall mend it'. 'A bed of knives, wherewith can we cut it'? 'With the horns of an ass'. They asked: 'But has an ass horns'? 'And is there a bed of knives'? [He replied:] They brought him two eggs. 'Which is from the black clucking hen and which is from the white'? He himself brought them two cheeses and asked them: 'Which is from a black goat and which from a white'? 'A chicken dead in its shell-where has the spirit gone'? 'From whence it came, thither it went'. 'Show us an article whose value is not worth the loss it causes'. He brought a mat of reeds and spread it out. It could not get through the door [being too long and wide]. He then said: 'Bring a rake [and pickaxe]', and demolished [the door of the building].²⁰ 'That is an example of an article whose value is not worth the loss it causes'. He brought them to eat in the ship, one by one to his Separate chamber. When they saw the sixty cushions, each one thought that all the companions would come to this chamber. He ordered the captain to set sail. As they were about to journey, he took some earth from their [native] soil.

The outside guards were put to death when a footprint was visible indicating that someone had entered, for which they were held responsible. On the other hand, when a footprint was visible indicating that someone had left, the inside guards were held responsible and put to death. The guards did not, however, put anybody to death unless he made a forced entry or an exit.
 - (10) The two footsteps seen on the threshold, pointing in different directions, suggested to the Athenians that there had been two persons, one leaving and the other entering, and consequently all the guards were punished and put to death. Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 9a

When they reached the straits,¹ they filled a jug of water from the waters of the straits. When they arrived, they were presented to the Emperor. He observed that they were depressed, [being far from their native land]. He said: 'these are not the same [people]'. He, therefore, took a piece of the earth of their country and cast it at them. Thereupon, they grew haughty² towards the King. He then said to R. Joshua: 'Whatever you desire, do with them'. He fetched the water which [the Athenians] had taken from the straits and poured it into a ditch.³ He said to them: 'Fill this and depart'. They tried to fill it by casting therein the water, one after the other, but it was absorbed. They went on filling until [the joints] of their shoulders became dislocated and they perished. MISHNAH. IF A SHE-ASS THAT HAD NEVER BEFORE GIVEN BIRTH GAVE BIRTH TO TWO MALES, [THE ISRAELITE] GIVES ONE LAMB TO THE PRIEST AS A REDEMPTION.⁴ [IF IT GAVE BIRTH TO] A MALE AND A FEMALE, HE SETS ASIDE ONE LAMB [WHICH REMAINS] FOR HIMSELF.⁵ IF TWO SHE-ASSES THAT HAD NEVER BEFORE GIVEN BIRTH GAVE BIRTH TO TWO MALES, HE GIVES TWO LAMBS TO THE PRIEST. [IF THEY GAVE BIRTH TO] A MALE AND A FEMALE OR TWO MALES AND A FEMALE, HE GIVES ONE LAMB TO THE PRIEST.⁶ [IF THEY GAVE BIRTH TO] TWO FEMALES AND A MALE OR TO TWO MALES AND TWO FEMALES THE PRIEST RECEIVES NOTHING.⁷ IF ONE SHE-ASS HAD GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE AND ONE HAD NOT GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE AND THEY GAVE BIRTH TO TWO MALES, HE GIVES ONE LAMB TO THE PRIEST. [IF THEY GAVE BIRTH TO] A MALE AND A FEMALE, HE SETS ASIDE ONE LAMB [WHICH REMAINS] FOR HIMSELF,⁸ FOR [SCRIPTURE] SAYS: AND THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS THOU SHALT REDEEM WITH A LAMB.⁹ [THE LAMB CAN COME EITHER] FROM THE SHEEP OR THE GOATS MALE OR FEMALE, LARGE OR SMALL, UNBLEMISHED OR BLEMISHED. HE CAN REDEEM WITH THE SAME ONE MANY TIMES.¹⁰ AND THE LAMB] ENTERS THE SHED TO BE TITHED.¹¹ IF IT DIES, THE PRIEST CAN BENEFIT FROM IT.¹² GEMARA. Who is the authority [of the first passage in the Mishnah]?¹³ R. Jeremiah said: It does not follow the opinion of R. Jose, the Galilean. For if it were the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean — did he not say that it is possible to ascertain exactly [that both heads came forth simultaneously]?¹⁴ Said Abaye: You may even assume that [the passage in the Mishnah] represents the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean, and that he makes a difference [in connection with the first-born of a clean animal], for [Scripture] writes: The males shall be the Lord's.¹⁵ But why not infer [the case of the first-born of an unclean animal] from [the case of the firstborn of a clean animal]? — The Divine Law excludes this [by the definite article in the expression], 'The males'.¹⁶ Some there are who say: Must we say that [the passage in the Mishnah]¹³ does not represent the view of R. Jose the Galilean? For if it were the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean, did he not say that it is possible to ascertain exactly [that both heads came forth simultaneously]? — Said Abaye: You may even assume that it is the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean and he makes a difference [in connection with the first-born of a clean animal], for [Scripture] writes: 'The males shall be the Lord's'. Now we can understand R. Jeremiah stating that [the passage in the Mishnah] does not follow R. Jose the Galilean; that is the reason why the [Mishnah] does not say: 'And both their heads came forth simultaneously'.¹⁷ But according to Abaye, let it Say: 'And both heads came forth simultaneously'?¹⁸ Moreover, it has been taught: If his ass had never given birth before, and it gave birth to two males, and the two heads came forth simultaneously, R. Jose the Galilean says that they both belong to the priest, for Scripture Says: 'The males are the Lord's.' But is this not written in connection with [an animal] consecrated as such [which is a clean animal]? — Rather say, On account of what [Scripture] Says: 'The males are the Lord's'.¹⁹ This is a confutation of Abaye. — It is a refutation.

(1) Probably Scylla and Charybdis (Jast.). Rashi explains that hghkc hc refers to the ocean mostly the Mediterranean Sea which absorbs all the waters of the world which flow therein. The waters are then brought to the depths from which they are subsequently discharged. Other explanations (by R. Gershom) are that there is a particular spot in the sea that absorbs other waters or that it refers to Miriam's Well.

(2) After smelling their native earth, they imagined that they were back again in their own country.

(3) A vessel or an earthen jug (Rashi).

(4) Because, at all events, one of the offspring must be a first-birth.

(5) There is a doubt here as to whether the male ass was born before the female; so, by setting aside a lamb for redemption, he releases the animal from the prohibitions which attach to the first-birth of an ass, in case the male was born first. He is not required, however, to give the lamb to the priest, since the claim of the latter is purely that of a debt due to him as laid down in the Scripture, the lamb not possessing any sanctity, and being like the ass which it redeems. Consequently, the priest is in the position of a claimant who must produce the evidence, the evidence here being that the male was born prior to the female.

(6) One male must be a first-birth and the other, as there is a doubt whether the male was born before the female, therefore, he sets aside one lamb for redemption, which, however, remains for himself.

(7) Where two males and two females are born, the priest receives nothing, because the female might have been born prior to the males; also, where two females and a male are born, because here too there is a doubt, and the female might have been born before the male. The Israelite, however, must set aside two lambs which remain for himself.

(8) In case the she-ass which had never given birth before had given birth to the female.

(9) Ex. XIII, 13. From here we derive the general rule that the first-birth of an ass is redeemed with a sheep.

(10) If the lamb which the priest receives as a redemption for the first-birth of an ass was sold or returned to the Israelite as a present, it can exempt another first-birth of an ass. This process can be repeated in connection with many first-births of asses.

(11) The lamb which he sets aside is an absolutely unconsecrated animal and enters the shed to be tithed with the rest of his animals.

(12) As soon as the lamb is set aside, the Priest has a claim on it as belonging to him, and it is as if it were already in his possession. Therefore, if the lamb died before it was delivered to the priest, the latter benefits from its skin and carcass.

(13) That if a she-ass which had never before given birth, gave birth to two males, he only gives one lamb to the Priest.

(14) Infra 17a. If a ewe which had never given birth before gave birth to two males, R. Jose, the Galilean, says that both belong to the priest since both heads came forth at the same time.

(15) Ex. XIII, 12. The plural indicates two males, but in the case of the first-births of asses, where the singular is used throughout, even if it were possible to make sure that both heads came forth simultaneously, they are not sanctified.

(16) The superfluous V ('the') implies that only in the case of a clean animal do we apply the said law.

(17) As in the case of a clean animal, infra 17a.

(18) According to Abaye, it is possible to ascertain exactly that both heads came forth simultaneously, as the Mishnah is in accordance with R. Jose, only in the case of an unclean animal, it is different, because of the restrictive word 'The males'. Why should not the Mishnah, therefore, state that even if both heads came forth simultaneously, only one lamb is given to the Priest?

(19) The inference from the verse is indirect. Since Scripture has indicated in this verse that it is possible to ascertain that both heads come forth simultaneously in connection with a clean animal, we apply the same to the first-birth of an ass. In any case we therefore clearly see here that R. Jose's ruling applies even to the first-birth of an ass.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 9b

And as to the Rabbis,¹ must we say that the Rabbis hold that even if a portion of the womb touches [the firstling] it consecrates? For if it consecrates only when the whole womb touches [a firstling], granted it is impossible to ascertain that both heads came forth simultaneously, nevertheless, there is here an interposition?² — Said R. Ashi: Objects of a homogeneous kind are not reckoned as an Interposition [with reference to each other].³ IF IT GAVE BIRTH TO A MALE AND FEMALE, HE SETS ASIDE etc. Since it remains for himself what need is there to set it aside? — [In order] to release it from the prohibitions [attaching to the first-birth of an ass].⁴ Consequently, [we infer] that until it is released, it is forbidden to be used. Whose opinion does the Mishnah represent? It is the opinion of R. Judah. For it has been taught:⁵ It is forbidden to make any use of the first-birth of an ass. These are the words of R. Judah. But R. Simeon permits this. What is the reason of R. Judah? Said 'Ulla: 'Can you find an object which requires redemption and yet is permitted to be used while unredeemed'? But is there not? What of the case of the first-born of a man who requires redemption and yet [even before redemption] one may derive benefit from him? — Rather argue [thus]: Is there an object concerning which the Torah particularly enjoined that redemption must be with a sheep and which was yet permitted to be used [before redemption]? And was [the Torah] indeed so particular? Did not R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph redeem [an ass] with boiled herbs of its equivalent value? — As regards an object of equivalent value, this is not referred to here.⁶ What we are speaking of is the redemption [of an object] not with its equivalent value. And 'Ulla means this: Can you find an object concerning which the Torah was particular to release its prohibition only with a sheep even though not Its equivalent in value and yet it is permitted to benefit therefrom [unredeemed]? — But what of the second tithing which the Torah was particular that the redemption must be with coined money, and yet we have learnt, R. Judah says: If he betrothed a woman [with second tithe] wilfully she is betrothed?⁷ — Also with a first-birth of an ass is a woman betrothed, as R. Eleazar [taught]. For R. Eleazar said: A woman knows that the second tithe is not rendered unconsecrated through her,⁸ and she, therefore, goes up to Jerusalem and eats it. Similarly, here also, a woman is aware that the first-birth of an ass is prohibited, she redeems it therefore with a lamb, and is betrothed with the difference [between the value of the ass and the sheep].⁹ And as to R. Simeon, what is his reason? — Said 'Ulla: Can you find an object whose ransom¹⁰ is permitted to be used while [the object itself] is forbidden? But can we not? What of [the fruit of] the Sabbatical year, whose ransom is permitted to be used and yet the fruit itself is forbidden?¹¹ — Also with [the fruit of] the Sabbatical year is the ransom forbidden, for a Master said: [The prohibitions attaching to the Sabbatical year] take effect on the very last thing [bought].¹² Or, if you choose, I may say that R. Judah and R. Simeon differ in the interpretation of the following verse. For it has been taught: [Scripture says]: Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox:¹³ but you may do work with a firstling which belongs [both] to you and to a gentile;¹⁴ nor shear the firstling of thy flock:¹³ but you may shear what belongs [both] to you and to a gentile. These are the words of R. Judah. But R. Simeon says: 'Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox', implying, but you may work with the first-born of a man; thou shalt not shear the firstling of thy sheep; implying, but you may shear the first-birth of an ass. We understand why, according to R. Simeon's interpretations Scripture needs to write both verses. But, according to R. Judah, what need is there for two verses to exclude a firstling which belongs [both] to you and to a gentile? And furthermore, according to R. Judah, the first-born of a man also should we say is forbidden [to work with before redemption]? Rather therefore, explain that all [the authorities mentioned] hold that the words, 'thine ox', have for their object the exclusion of the first-born of a man. The dispute, however, is in the interpretation of the words, 'thy sheep', for R. Judah is in agreement with his own dictum elsewhere, where he says: A partnership with a gentile is subject to the law of the first-born, so that there is need of a verse to make it permissible for shearing and working [of a firstling]. R. Simeon, however, holds that a partnership with a gentile is not subject to the law of the first-born. And, therefore, in respect to shearing and working, there is no necessity for a verse to make it permissible. The necessity, however, arises for a verse in respect to the first-birth of an ass. This is quite right on the view of R. Judah, for it is for the reason [stated above] that Scripture writes, 'thy sheep', and the words, 'thine ox', [Scripture adds merely] on account of the words, 'thine ass'. But according to R. Simeon, what need is there for the words, 'thine ox', and 'thy sheep'?¹⁵ This is indeed a difficulty. Rabbah said: R. Simeon agrees, however, that after the breaking of its neck,¹⁶ it is forbidden to use it. What is the reason? — He draws a conclusion by analogy between 'arifah' [the breaking of the neck] here and the 'arifah' [mentioned] in connection with the heifer that had its neck broken.¹⁷ Said Rabbah: On what evidence do I say this? Because it has been taught: The fruit of trees of the first three years, the mixed seeds in a vineyard, an ox that is to be put to death by stoning,¹⁸ or the heifer that has had its neck broken,¹⁹ the birds of the leper,²⁰ the first-birth of an ass,²¹ and [the mixture] of meat and milk [boiled together],²² all of them receive the uncleanness relating to food.²³ R. Simeon says: All of them do not receive the [levitical] uncleanness relating to food. R. Simeon, however, agrees with regard to the [mixture] of meat and milk, that it receives the uncleanness relating to food, since at one time, it was fit [to receive the uncleanness relating to food],²⁴ And R. Assi explained in the name of R. Johanan: What is the reason of R. Simeon? Scripture writes: All food therein which may be eaten.²⁵ [We deduce] that food which you can give gentiles to eat is called food, but food which you are unable to give gentiles to eat is not called food.²⁶

(1) Of the Mishnah, who say that he gives one lamb to the priest, for we have explained that the Mishnah is not according to R. Jose and therefore it is the opinion of the majority of the Rabbis. Or the reference may be to the Rabbis who differ with R. Jose in the case of a clean animal that gave birth to two males, the Rabbis holding that one lamb must be given to the priest and one remains for himself.

(2) For before one male came forth entirely, the other was on its way out. Therefore, although one came forth prior to the other and was sacred, it did not have the whole womb to consecrate it, owing to the other male, which was coming out at the same time. There was, consequently, an interposition between the first male and the womb.

(3) And the two males are of the same kind.

(4) Of working with it and the restriction on its shearing.

(5) Kid. 57b.

(6) For it is not more restricted in respect of the manner of its redemption than other consecrated objects.

- (7) v. Kid. 2b. Therefore, we see here that it is permitted to benefit from an object even before its appropriate redemption. Hence we conclude that according to R. Judah, it is permitted to use it.
- (8) I.e., by giving her second tithe as kiddushin (token of betrothal).
- (9) The ass being of greater value than the sheep. Therefore, no objection can be cited to 'Ulla's interpretation of R. Judah's views from the case of second tithe.
- (10) Here the lamb wherewith the ass is redeemed is permitted for all use.
- (11) If one sold fruit of the Sabbatical year, the object purchased may be used, but the fruit itself is forbidden and must be removed from the house when the beasts in the field have consumed the fruit there.
- (12) If one purchased flesh in exchange for the fruit of the Sabbatical year, both are liable to the law of removal pertaining to the Sabbatical year. If he then bought wine for the flesh, then the flesh may be used but not the wine. And if again he bought oil for the wine, the last thing purchased is forbidden to be used as well as the fruit itself of the Sabbatical year.
- (13) Deut. XV, 19.
- (14) In the case e.g., of a firstling of an animal in which a gentile has a share, although R. Judah requires the Israelite to give a half of its value to the priest, nevertheless working with the animal and the shearing thereof are permitted. Since the verse, however, does not exclude the first-birth of an ass, we do not permit its use prior to its redemption and it is on a par with a firstling of a clean animal.
- (15) If Scripture had merely written: The firstling of an ox and The firstling of a sheep, R. Simeon could still have expounded the verse in the manner he does.
- (16) If the law of redeeming the first-birth of an ass with a lamb is not carried out, the law prescribes that its neck must be broken with a hatchet.
- (17) In the case where an unknown man is found dead, the law requires the bringing of a heifer whose neck must be broken as an atonement, and here also for failing to redeem the ass with the lamb, the neck of the ass was broken. As in the former case, it is forbidden to be used, so here also by analogy, it is forbidden to be used.
- (18) If it had been ritually killed after it was sentenced to death for killing a man.
- (19) Which was ritually slaughtered, after being brought down into the rough valley.
- (20) The two clean birds, one of which was killed, which the leper brought after his recovery.
- (21) Which was ritually slaughtered for a gentile, and as it was still struggling and not dead, it did not possess the uncleanness of nebelah (a carcass). Therefore, if a dead reptile came in contact with it, it received the uncleanness relating to food, so that if it touched other food, it causes levitical uncleanness. The ritual slaughtering, however, helped at least to make it fit to receive the uncleanness of food. Another interpretation is that even if the ass had its neck broken and it was, therefore, nebelah, we can still apply here the principle of the uncleanness of food, if e.g., there was less of the carcass in size than an olive which, although it did not become unclean as nebelah, may yet be supplemented with other food to the required size of an egg to make it receive the uncleanness of food.
- (22) And consequently forbidden for any use.
- (23) For although they are forbidden to be used, the uncleanness has the effect that should they come in contact with other food, the latter becomes unclean.
- (24) I.e., before its boiling.
- (25) Lev. XI, 34.
- (26) I.e., when it is forbidden to be used and therefore it does not receive the uncleanness relating to food.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 10a

But if this is so, then in the case of [the mixture] of meat and milk, why should it be said that the reason that it receives levitical uncleanness is because, at one time, it was fit for the uncleanness relating to food? Why not derive this from the fact that it is a food which you can give to gentiles? For it has been taught: R. Simeon, the son of R. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon: [The mixture of] meat and milk is forbidden to be eaten but it is permitted for general use since [Scripture says]: For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.¹ And, in another place, Scripture says: And ye shall be holy men unto Me.² As in that case,³ it is forbidden to be eaten but it may be used generally, so here [in connection with the mixture of meat and milk] it is forbidden to be eaten but it may be used generally! — R. Simeon gives one [reason] and still another [reason]. One [reason why it should receive the uncleanness of food is because it is a food] which can be given to gentiles. And still another [reason], because for [the Israelite] himself, too, there was a time [before its boiling] when it was fit to receive uncleanness.⁴ Now,⁵ if there is any substance in the opinion that after the ass's neck is broken it is permitted according to R. Simeon to be used, let the above [Baraita] state: But R. Simeon agrees in connection with the first-birth of an ass⁶ and [the mixture of] meat and milk that they receive the levitical uncleanness relating to food? — [No]. If one had formed the intention [of using the ass as food], it would be so [as you argue]⁷ We are dealing here, however, in a case where he had not formed such an intention.⁸ And what is then the reason that [the majority of] the Rabbis, [R. Simeon's disputants], make it receive uncleanness? — Rabbis said the following in the presence of R. Shesheth: [The reason is that] its prohibition [by Scripture] renders it important [to be regarded as food].⁹ But, do we say according to the Rabbis that the reason is, since its prohibition renders it important? Have we not learnt [in a Mishnah]: Thirteen things were said with reference to the carcass of a clean bird, and this is one of them: it requires the intention [to be used as food],¹⁰ but it does not need to be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness].¹¹ Now, if its prohibition signalizes it [as food] [to receive uncleanness], what need is there for the intention of using it as food? — [The Mishnah just quoted] represents the opinion of R. Simeon. Come and hear: ‘The carcass of an unclean animal in all places, and the carcass of a clean bird and the fat [of the carcass of a clean animal] in the villages,¹² require the intention [of being used as food in order to receive uncleanness], but they do not need to be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness].¹³ Now, if you say that its prohibition renders it important [to receive uncleanness], what need is there for the intention [of using it as food]? — This, [too], represents the opinion of R. Simeon. Come and hear: The carcass of a clean animal¹⁴ in all places,¹⁵ or the carcass of a clean bird, or the fat [of a ritually slaughtered animal] in market places,¹⁶ do not require the intention [of being used as food]. Nor do they need to be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness of food].¹⁷ This implies that an unclean animal does require the intention [of using it as food in order to receive uncleanness].¹⁸ And should you say that this too represents the opinion of R. Simeon; surely since the second part [quoted below] is the opinion of R. Simeon, then the first part cannot be according to the opinion of R. Simeon. For the second part states: R. Simeon says: Also a camel, hare, rockbadger and swine, do not require the intention [of using them as food in order to receive uncleanness], nor need they be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness]. And R. Simeon [further] explained. What is the reason? Since [these animals mentioned] have marks of a clean animal!¹⁹ — No, said Rabbah: All [the authorities mentioned] agree that we do not say that its prohibition [by the Scriptures] renders it important [to receive the uncleanness relating to food]. And [as to your question, what is the reason of the Rabbis]? If the ass's neck has been broken, it would really be so.²⁰

(1) Deut. XIV, 21, which is followed by the prohibition of seething a kid in its mother's milk.

(2) Ex. XXII, 30, in connection with the prohibition of trefah (ritually forbidden food).

- (3) In the Scriptural verse: And ye shall be holy, etc., referring to trefah which may be used for general purposes as stated in the context: Ye shall cast it to the dogs.
- (4) Unlike the case of the ox and heifer mentioned above, since they have a forbidden status when alive.
- (5) Rabbah continued his argument.
- (6) Since it can be given to gentiles for food. Hence Rabbah concludes that even R. Simeon admits that an ass whose neck was broken because its owner failed to redeem it, is forbidden to be used.
- (7) That the ass with a broken neck would have received the uncleanness relating to food.
- (8) And that is the reason why the Baraitha does not include the case of an ass in the statement of R. Simeon as receiving the uncleanness of food, for ordinarily, without expressing the intention of regarding it as food, it is not considered as such.
- (9) The very prohibition which Scripture imposes upon it indicates that it is food fit for gentiles to eat, otherwise, Scripture would not have considered it of sufficient importance to forbid it and, therefore, it receives the uncleanness relating to food even without the express Intention of using it as such.
- (10) And if a dead reptile touched it and, in turn, it touched other food, it renders the latter unclean. This intention of using it as food is necessary, as the carcass of a clean bird has no uncleanness of touch, for it conveys uncleanness only in the gullet in the process of eating. Or, in the case where it is less in size than an olive and consequently there is no uncleanness as regards nebelah, it combines with other foods to make up the required size of an egg, in order to receive food uncleanness when it comes In contact with a dead reptile.
- (11) Like seeds, by having water poured on it, since it already possesses a more stringent uncleanness by causing uncleanness to man and garments by eating it; v. Nid. 50b, Zeb. 105b.
- (12) In the villages, where the inhabitants are poor and are not accustomed to eat birds or fat, the intention of using these as food to be given to gentiles is necessary before it can receive the uncleanness relating to food. With reference also to the carcass of a forbidden animal, the intention of using it as food is also necessary, for the reason that it is loathsome and, ordinarily, is not considered food even for gentiles.
- (13) 'Uk. III, 3.
- (14) I.e., one which had not been ritually slaughtered.
- (15) It is usually given to gentiles as food, for it is not loathsome and therefore it does not require the intention of using it as food.
- (16) I.e., the towns, containing many people of means who are accustomed to eat birds or fat so that these are usually considered food.
- (17) The carcass of a clean animal, because its uncleanness is of a more stringent character, and the fat, because the very act of ritual slaughter has made it fit to receive uncleanness, since the intention of using it as food is not required, v. ibid.
- (18) And we do not maintain that its prohibition renders it important to receive food uncleanness, without the intention being expressed using it as food.
- (19) Therefore the first passage with reference to the carcass of an unclean animal etc. requiring the intention of being used as food, must be in accordance with the view of the Rabbis., Hence we infer that the Rabbis do not hold that its prohibition marks it out as fit to receive food uncleanness and therefore the Baraitha quoted above by Rabbah, where the Rabbis say that the first-birth of an ass receives the uncleanness relating to food, must deal with a case where he expressed the intention of Using it as food. And R. Simeon maintains that it does not receive uncleanness, because it is food which cannot be given to a gentile to eat, I.e., It is forbidden to be used. Rabbah consequently is able to deduce from this that an ass which had its neck broken because it was not redeemed is forbidden to be used.
- (20) That the Rabbis would agree that it does not receive the uncleanness relating to food, since he had not intended to use it as food.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 10b

But here we are dealing with a case where e.g., he ritually killed [the ass] to practice therewith [to kill ritually],¹ and the difference here corresponds to the difference of opinion of Nimos and R. Eleazar. For it has been taught: R. Jose said: Nimos the brother of Joshua the grist-maker told me that if one killed a raven ritually in order to practice therewith, its blood renders food fit [to receive uncleanness].² [R. Eleazar] says: The blood of shechitah³ always renders fit [to receive uncleanness]. Now is not [R. Eleazar's] opinion identical with the first Tanna? We must suppose then that the difference between them is whether its prohibition⁴ renders it important [as fit to receive uncleanness]? The first Tanna holds: Its blood renders it fit [for conveying uncleanness] to other [food], but as regards [the raven itself], it requires the intention [of being used as food].⁵ Upon which [R. Eleazar] remarks: The blood of shechitah always renders it fit [to convey or receive uncleanness] and as regards the [raven] itself too, it does not require the intention [of using it as food] in order to receive [levitical uncleanness]. But how do you know [this]? Perhaps the reason of R. Eleazar there,⁶ is because the case of a raven is different, since it has marks of cleanness.⁷ And how do we know that marks of cleanness are of importance? — Because it says in connection with the Baraitha above,⁸ R. Simeon said: What is the reason? Since it has marks of cleanness. And should you object that if the reason is because of the marks of cleanness, why should it say [according to R. Eleazar] [that he killed the raven] in order to practice, since even if he unintentionally ritually killed it, the case should also be identical; the answer is, Yes, it is so, but it is on account of Nimos [that it does not state this].⁹ Abaye¹⁰ raised the following objection.¹¹ If he did not wish to redeem [the ass], he breaks its neck with a hatchet from the back and buries it, and it must not be used. These are the teachings of R. Judah. But R. Simeon permits it [to be used]?¹² — Explain [in the following manner]: When alive it is forbidden to use [the first-birth of an ass], but R. Simeon permits this. But since the second part [of the above passage] refers to it when alive, then the first part must refer to it when it is not alive? For the second part states: 'He must not kill [the ass] with a cane, nor with a sickle, nor with a spade, nor with a saw. Nor may he let it enter an enclosure and lock the door on it, in order that it may die. And it is forbidden to shear it or to work with it. These are the teachings of R. Judah. But R. Simeon permits this'! — The first and the second parts [we may explain] both refer to an ass when alive. The first part, however, refers to monetary benefit,¹³ and the second part refers to the benefit derived from its body.¹⁴ [And both parts] require [to be stated]. For if we had only the part referring to monetary benefit, I might have assumed that in that peculiar case R. Simeon permits, whereas with regard to the benefit derived from its body, I might have said that he agrees with R. Judah. And if we had only the part referring to the benefit derived from its body, I might have supposed that R. Judah forbids in that particular case, whereas in the case of monetary benefit, I might have said that he agrees with R. Simeon. [Therefore both parts] are necessary. And so R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah, the son of Abbuha: R. Simeon agrees that after the neck has been broken it is forbidden to be used. And R. Nahman said: On what evidence do I say this? Because it has been taught, [Scripture says]: Then thou shalt break its neck.¹⁵ Here [the word] "arifah"¹⁶ is used and above¹⁷ [the word] "arifah" is used; just as above it is forbidden to be used, so here also it is forbidden to be used. Whose opinion does this represent? Shall I say it is according to the opinion of R. Judah? Surely he prohibits it even when alive, Must you not therefore admit that it is the opinion of R. Simeon?¹⁸ — Said R. Shesheth to him: Safra our fellow-student interpreted it as follows: [The above Baraitha] can still be the opinion of R. Judah, and yet there is need [for stating it]. I might have assumed that since 'arifah' stands in the place of redemption, as redemption makes it permissible [to be used], so 'arifah' is permitted. He consequently informs us [that it is not so]. Said R. Nahman: On what evidence do I say this?¹⁹ From what R. Levi taught, The Israelite causes a monetary loss to the priest;²⁰ therefore he should suffer a monetary loss.²¹ Whose opinion does this represent? Shall I say that it is the opinion of R. Judah? Surely his loss is of long standing!²² [Must we not therefore admit] that it is the opinion of R. Simeon? — If you choose I may say it is the opinion of R. Judah, and, if you choose, I may say that it is the opinion of R. Simeon. If you choose I may say that it is the opinion of R. Judah, and he speaks of the loss entailed in the difference.²³ And if you choose I may say that it is the opinion of R. Simeon, and he speaks of the loss incurred by its death.²⁴ And so did Resh Lakish say: R. Simeon agrees that the ass after its neck has been broken is forbidden to be used. But R. Johanan, (or as some say, R. Eleazar) says: The difference between the Rabbis and R. Simeon still prevails even in such circumstances.²⁵ Some report this, R. Nahman's ruling,²⁶ in connection with the following: If one betrothed a woman with the first-birth of an ass, she is not betrothed.²⁷ Are we to say that the Mishnah is not according to the opinion of R. Simeon? — R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: [The Mishnah refers to a case] where the neck had been broken and therefore agrees with all the authorities concerned. Some there are who say: Whose opinion does this represent? Neither the opinion of R. Judah nor that of R. Simeon. For if it is the opinion of R. Simeon, let her become betrothed with the whole value of the ass.²⁸ And if it is the opinion of R. Judah, let her become betrothed with the difference!²⁹ — Said Rabbah b. Abbuha in the name of Rab: [The Mishnah] can still be the opinion of R. Judah, e.g., where the ass was of the value only of a shekel;³⁰ and he holds according to the view of R. Jose b. Judah. For it has been taught, [Scripture says]: 'Thou shalt redeem' . . . 'Thou shalt redeem'.³¹ [One text] 'Thou shalt redeem' intimates immediately,³² [and the other text] 'Thou shalt redeem' intimates with whatever value.³³ But R. Jose b. Judah says: There can be no redemption with less than the value of a shekel.³⁴ The Master said. '[Scripture says]: "Thou shalt redeem, . . . Thou shalt redeem"'. [The one text] "Thou shalt redeem" intimates immediately [and the other text] "Thou shalt redeem" intimates with whatever value'. Is not this obvious?³⁵ — It is necessary [to state it]. I might have assumed that since an unclean animal is compared with the first-born of a man,³⁶ just as in the case of a first-born of a man the redemption takes place after a period of thirty days and with the sum of five sela's,³⁷ so here also the redemption should take place after a period of thirty days and with the sum of five sela's. [Therefore Scripture states]: 'Thou shalt redeem, viz, immediately, 'Thou shalt redeem', viz., with whatever value. 'R. Jose b. Judah says: There is no redemption with less than the value of one shekel'. But which way do you take it; if R. Jose compares an unclean animal with the first-born of a man, then the sum of five sela's is required for redemptions and if he does not compare [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man], whence does he derive that the redemption is with a shekel? — In fact he does not compare [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man]; [yet] said Rabba: Scripture says: And all thy valuations shall be according to the shekel of the Sanctuary,³⁸ intimating that any valuations which you assess shall be no less in value than a shekel. And the Rabbis [who differ with R. Jose], what say they? —

(1) But not for the purpose of eating therefrom.

(2) If the blood fell on food or vegetables. And certainly this would be the case if he killed it ritually in order to eat therefrom; its blood would render itself and other food fit to receive levitical uncleanness.

(3) The act of ritual slaughter of an animal or bird.

(4) The prohibition referred to here in the context must be understood to mean the fact that it was not a proper shechitah, in the sense that it was not being killed for eating purposes but merely in order to practice.

(5) For its prohibition does not render it fit to receive uncleanness and its shechitah here is of no importance to cause it to be considered as food. R. Simeon, therefore, holds as regards the first-birth of an ass which was ritually killed, according to the view of Nimos that it does not receive the uncleanness of food, and the Rabbis agree with the opinion of R. Eleazar that the ritual killing, in itself, causes it to be regarded as food, without the express intention of regarding it as such.

(6) In the passage quoted above where R. Eleazar differs with Nimos in connection with a raven ritually killed for practice.

(7) A raven has a crop, which is one of the signs of a clean bird, and, therefore, it is considered as food as regards levitical uncleanness. But in the case of the first-birth of an ass, which does not possess any marks of cleanness, unless he intended to use it as food, the Rabbis would not hold that it receives the uncleanness pertaining to food, and R. Simeon would maintain that even if he had thought of it as food, it receives no uncleanness, owing to the fact that it is forbidden to be used after its neck has been broken.

(8) A carcass of a clean animal in all places etc.

(9) To inform us that according to Nimos, although there was a deliberate ritual killing for practice purposes, nevertheless the raven itself does not receive the uncleanness relating to food. But as regards R. Eleazar, it is true that even if the raven was killed unintentionally, (the intention having been to cut some other object), the blood renders other food fit to receive uncleanness, and the raven itself also receives uncleanness. Consequently, you cannot explain the difference between the Rabbis and R. Simeon on the basis of the difference of Nimos and R. Eleazar. Therefore, the difference of the former disputants refers to the case where the ass's neck was broken, and the reason why R. Simeon maintains that it is not clean is because, as Rabbah explains, it is forbidden to be used.

(10) Inserted from Sh. Mek.

(11) Referring to the ruling of Rabbah concerning the ass which had its neck broken and which is forbidden to be used, for any purpose.

(12) Therefore we derive from here the reverse of the ruling of Rabbah.

(13) If he hired or sold it to others.

(14) I.e., the shearing and the working with it.

(15) Ex. XIII, 13.

(16) Indicating the broken neck of the first-birth of an ass.

(17) In connection with the ceremony of the heifer, whose neck was broken when an unknown man's body was found dead.

(18) We therefore see here that R. Simeon agrees that it is prohibited after its neck is broken.

(19) That R. Simeon agrees that it is forbidden for all use after its neck is broken.

(20) By not redeeming the ass with a lamb and giving it to the priest.

(21) The Beth din should therefore compel him to have its neck broken after thirty days.

(22) Even when the ass was alive it was forbidden to be used according to R. Judah.

(23) Between its value when alive and dead. For whereas when it was alive, although forbidden to be used, it could be redeemed, now he loses everything.

(24) For being dead it can only be given to dogs to eat and therefore, there has been a considerable loss.

(25) Where the neck of a first-born of an ass was broken.

(26) That after the ass's neck had been broken it was forbidden to use it and this was expressed not as separate and independent ruling but with reference to the following Mishnah.

(27) Kid. 56b.

(28) For the whole of it may be used.

(29) The difference between the ass of the value of a shekel and a sheep even of the value of a danka i.e., a sixth of a denar.

(30) And the sheep being not less in value than a shekel as stated below, there is no difference in value between it and the ass in order that a woman may be betrothed thereby.

(31) Ex. XIII, 13. There is a repetition of the text.

(32) Before the period of thirty days has elapsed.

(33) There is no fixed sum and redemption may therefore be carried out even for less than a shekel or sela'.

(34) The sheep must therefore possess at least the value of a shekel, so that there is no surplus left to effect a betrothal.

(35) For Scripture does not mention that redemption commences when the ass is a month old nor does it say that the lamb must be of some specific value.

(36) Howbeit the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem. Num. XVIII, 15.

(37) A sela' is a coin equal to two common shekels.

(38) Lev. XXVII, 25.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 11a

That [verse] refers to the amount of one's means.¹ Said R. Nahman: The halachah is according to the teachings of the Sages.² And how much [must be the value of the lamb]? — Said R. Joseph: Even a puny lamb worth no more than a danka.³ Said Raba: We have learnt this too: [The lamb for redemption can either be] large or small, without a blemish or blemished. Is this not evident?⁴ — You might have assumed that to that extent [i.e., that of a puny lamb etc.] it is not an adequate redemptions or indeed [which would be better], a puny lamb is not [an adequate redemption at all].⁵ [R. Joseph consequently] informs us [that it is an adequate redemption]. R. Judah the Prince had a first-birth of an ass. He sent it to R. Tarfon.⁶ He asked him, 'How much am I required to give the Priest'? He replied to him 'Behold the Rabbis said: The liberal person redeems with a sela' [four zuz], the stingy person redeems with a shekel [two zuz], an average person redeems with a rigia. Said Raba: The law [requires redemption] with a rigia. And how much is this? Three zuz, less than one and more than the other.⁷ Does not this ruling contradict the above?⁸ There is no difficulty.⁹ [We are dealing] here with the case when one comes to seek advice and the case there is where he redeems of his own accord.¹⁰ R. Isaac reported in the name of Resh Lakish: If one possesses a first-birth of an ass and he has not a lamb with which to redeem it, he redeems it for its equivalent value. According to whose opinion is this? Shall I say it is according to R. Judah?¹¹ Did he not say that the Torah was particular that the redemption must be with a sheep? You must then say it is according to the view of R. Simeon.¹² R. Ahah stated it thus. Rabina found a difficulty: [In a difference between] R. Judah and R. Simeon, the law is according to R. Judah; moreover, the Tanna [of our Mishnah]¹³ states the law anonymously in the sense of R. Judah; and still you declare the halachah is according to R. Simeon? But [rather say] that [R. Isaac's statement] accords even with the opinion of R. Judah. For let not [the redemption of the first-birth of an ass] be more stringent than other consecrated objects.¹⁴ Moreover the Torah did not propose [by the law of redeeming] with a lamb to make it severe for him,¹⁵ but, on the contrary, to make it easier for him.¹⁶ R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph redeemed the first-birth of an ass with boiled herbs of its equivalent value. R. Shizbi reported in the name of R. Huna: If one redeems the ass of his neighbor, it is a valid redemption. The question was raised: Is it a valid redemption as regards the person who redeems it,¹⁷ or does it mean that it is a valid redemption as regards the owner?¹⁸ According to the opinion of R. Simeon, there is no need to inquire, for, since he says that it is permitted to use the first-birth of an ass, it is the owner's money.¹⁹ The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of R. Judah who says that it is forbidden to use it. Does he compare it with a consecrated object concerning which the Divine Law says: And he shall give money and it shall be assured to him?²⁰ Or, perhaps since the owner possesses the difference [between the value of the ass and a sheep], it is not compared with a consecrated object?²¹ — Said R. Nahman: Come and hear: 'If one stole the first-birth of an ass belonging to his neighbor, he pays double to the owner, for although he does not possess [the rights of ownership] now, he will possess subsequently.'²² Now, whose opinion does this represent? Shall I say that it is the opinion of R. Simeon? Why has he no rights of ownership now? Then obviously, it must be the opinion of R. Judah. Now if you were to assume that we compare it with a consecrated object, does not the Divine Law say: And it be stolen out of a man's house,²³ implying, but not from the possession of the sanctuary?²⁴ And there is nothing more to be said. IF ONE SHE-ASS HAD GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE AND ONE HAD NOT GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE etc. Our Rabbis taught. Under what circumstances did the Sages rule that IT ENTERS THE SHED TO BE TITHED? You cannot say that it means where the lamb came into the possession of the priest, [and then it was returned to the Israelite],²⁵ for we have learnt: An animal purchased, or which is given to him as a gift, is exempted from the law of the tithes of animals.²⁶ This must refer then to the case of an Israelite who had ten uncertain first births of asses²⁷ in his house. He sets aside on their behalf ten lambs, [makes them enter the shed],²⁸ tithes them, and they are his. [This] supports the opinion of R. Nahman. For R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: If an Israelite had ten uncertain first-births of asses, he sets aside on their behalf ten lambs, tithes them and they are his. R. Nahman further reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: If an Israelite has ten asses, distinctly first-births, in his house, which fell to him [as an inheritance] from his maternal grandfather, a priest, to whom this inheritance had fallen from his maternal grandfather, an Israelite,²⁹ he sets aside³⁰ ten lambs, tithes them and they are his.³¹

R. Nahman [further] reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: If an Israelite who possessed *tebel*³² evenly piled up; in his house, which fell to him [as an inheritance] from his maternal grandfathers a priest, to whom it had fallen from his maternal grandfather³³ an Israelite, he tithes it and it is his.³⁴ And it was necessary [to teach both cases]. For had R. Nahman taught only the first case, [I might have assumed that the reason was] because it was already set aside.³⁵ But, here, in the second case, since gifts for the priest, which have not yet been taken [by the priest] are not considered as having been given, I might have said it is not so.³⁶ And if he had only taught the second case, [I might have assumed that the reason why the tithes are his] is because it is possible to tithe tebel as it is, for it lies [in one place],³⁷ but in the other case, since the lamb comes from another place, we do not say that it is as if it were already set aside,³⁸ and therefore I might have said that it was not [as stated]. It was therefore necessary [to state both cases]. R. Samuel b. Nathan reported in the name of R. Hanina: If one who buys untithed grain

(1) A man who says 'I vow my own value' or according to Rabbenu Gershom, the value of a specified persona

Scripture informs us here that we do not accept the valuation if his means are less than one shekel. But as regards the redemption of the first-born of an ass, redemption may be with whatever value, however small.

- (2) That its redemption with a sheep may be of any value no matter how insignificant.
- (3) A small Persian coin, the value of a sixth of a denar (Rashi), or, a sixth of a shekel (R. Gershom).
- (4) That a puny lamb is adequate for redemption, since the Rabbis state above that it can be of any value whatever.
- (5) For although a small lamb may be an adequate redemption, a lean lamb is not.
- (6) Who was a priest.
- (7) One zuz less than a sela' which is the redemption of a liberal person and one more zuz than that of a stingy person, i.e., three zuz. Lit., 'running this way and running that way'.
- (8) The above ruling that the law is according to the Sages who hold that even the worth of a danka is sufficient for redemption.
- (9) How much should be given to the priest. We accordingly advise him to give three zuz.
- (10) When he redeems the first-birth of an ass even with a lamb worth a danka, we do not compel him to give something of greater value.
- (11) This questioner quotes the view of R. Judah, which was mentioned above in the first instance, although it is not the final conclusion, namely, that only with a lamb can it be redeemed but not with any other object.
- (12) Who does not mention when giving his reason for the view he holds that the Torah was particular that the redemption must be with a sheep, thus implying that the first-birth of an ass may also be redeemed with its equivalent value.
- (13) Stated above, that the Israelite sets aside a lamb in order to release the first-birth of an ass from the prohibitions attaching to it, which is the opinion of R. Judah.
- (14) Which are redeemed with their equivalent value.
- (15) I.e., that only with a lamb is he allowed to redeem the ass.
- (16) If he wished to redeem it with a lamb, even a puny one, it is an adequate redemption. But he need not necessarily redeem with a lamb.
- (17) The person who redeems acquires the first-birth of the ass in virtue of the redemption.
- (18) The ass is redeemed, but the first-birth belongs to the owner. The person who redeems, consequently, is unable to dispose of it.
- (19) And the person who redeemed it cannot sell it and is not reimbursed.
- (20) Lev. XXVII, 19. The verse is given here in an abbreviated form, the full verse being Then he shall add a fifth part of the money and it shall be assured to him. V. Tosaf. on Shab. 128a, i, bu.
- (21) And since a portion of it is the owner's money, if he redeems it, we account the whole of it as belonging to him.
- (22) After its redemption it will be his money.
- (23) Ex. XXII, 6.
- (24) Since, therefore, he pays double for the stolen first birth of an ass, we infer that it is not compared with a consecrated object.
- (25) Either in the form of a gift or it was sold to him.
- (26) V. infra 55b.
- (27) E.g., where he had ten she-asses and each gave birth to a male and a female and there was a doubt whether the males were born before the females. Ten sheep are therefore set aside on their behalf to release them from the prohibitions attaching to the first-birth of asses and these are unconsecrated animals, to be tithed in the ordinary manner. The same principle also applies to two or three uncertain first-births, but the reason why it mentions ten uncertain first-births is to inform us that although in the latter case they are entitled to be tithed on their own account, we still set aside the ten lambs to be tithed among the others in the shed.

- (28) Supplemented from R. Gershom.
- (29) These are certainly subject to the law of redemption, since they were born in the Israelite's possession.
- (30) To redeem them from their prohibition as first-births.
- (31) The present Israelite does exactly what the priest would have been required to do. As the priest who inherited from the Israelite would have been required to set aside the lambs on behalf of the first-births of the asses, since they were born in the possession of the Israelite, the present Israelite does the same. And just as the priest would have kept the lambs for himself, being a priest, so the Israelite who inherited from the priest retains these for himself, for it is as if the priest had bequeathed the lambs to him.
- (32) Fruits or grain before the separation of the priestly and levitical dues.
- (33) The even piling up or storing of the grain is the finishing touch which prepares it for tithing.
- (34) He must give the tithe because it belonged to an Israelite and still belongs to an Israelite. But it is retained by him, since it came to him from a priest and therefore he sells the priestly gift to a priest and the tithes to a Levite.
- (35) The lambs and the asses belong to different species and nothing special is required to be done; therefore it is as if the asses and the lambs had fallen to him from his maternal grandfather, a priest, already separated.
- (36) And the tithes must be given to the priest. He therefore teaches us that the tithes belong to him and that he need not give the tithes to the priest.
- (37) With the parts to be separated, and therefore it is considered as if it had been already separated and tithed and in the priest's possession, before it fell to the Israelite.
- (38) For it requires a special action to bring the lamb in order to redeem whereas in the case of tebel, no effort is necessary.

evenly piled up from a gentile, he tithes it and it is his.¹ Who piled it up? Shall I say that a gentile piled it up? Surely the text says, 'thy corn' implying, but not the corn of a gentile?² Rather we are dealing here with a case where the Israelites piled it up in the domain of a gentile.³ 'He tithes it', because a gentile has not the right of possession in Palestine to release [produce] from the obligation of tithing. 'And it is his', because he says to the priest, 'I have acquired my rights from a man with whom you cannot go to law'. We have learnt elsewhere: If a man deposits his fruits with a Cuthean,⁴ or with an 'am ha-arez,⁵ it may be presumed that they retain their former condition in respect of tithes and the sabbatical year,⁶ but if with a gentile, they are like [the gentile's] fruits.⁷ R. Simeon says: They are dem'ai.⁸ Said R. Eleazar: That [the priest's share] should be set aside all the authorities mentioned agree. Where they differ is on the question whether to give it⁹ to the priest. The first Tanna [mentioned] holds that he has certainly changed them and therefore he must give the priestly share to the priest, whereas R. Simeon maintains that they have the law of dem'ai. R. Dimi was once sitting and repeating this teaching. Said Abaye to him: The reason is because we are in doubt whether he changed them or not. But if he certainly changed the fruits, all the authorities [mentioned] would agree that he is required to give the priestly share to the priest, would they not? But surely did not R. Samuel report in the name of R. Hanina: If one bought untithed grain from a gentile piled up [in proper shape], he gives tithes and it is his? — Perhaps [he replied], the one¹⁰ refers to great terumah, and R. Samuel's report refers to the terumah of the tithe!¹¹ [Said Abaye], This indeed reminds me of something [which supports your very explanation]. For R. Joshua the son of Levi said: Whence do we derive that a purchaser of untithed grain from a gentile piled up in proper shape is exempt from the terumah of the tithe? Because Scripture says: Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites and say unto them, when ye take of the children of Israel.¹² [We infer that] from the untithed grain which you buy from the children of Israel, you separate the terumah of the tithe and give it to the priest. But from untithed grain which you buy from a gentile you do not separate terumah of the tithe and give it to the priest. AND IF IT DIED, HE BENEFITS THEREFROM. In what circumstances are we to suppose it to have died?¹³ Shall I say that it died in the possession of the priest and that he is permitted to benefit therefrom? This is obvious, since it is his own money. Again, if it means that it died in the possession of the owner and that he [the priest] is permitted to benefit therefrom, this too is obvious! — I might have assumed that as long as the animal has not reached the priest's hands, the latter does not really possess it. [The Mishnah] accordingly informs us that from the time that [the Israelite] has set it aside, it stands in the domain of the priest.

- (1) And the priest's share of the crop he sells to a priest.
 - (2) What the Israelite stores and evenly piles up becomes subject to the priestly contribution, but not what is stored by a gentile. The text is in Deut. XIV, 23 and also in Deut. XVIII, 4.
 - (3) Where the Israelite is a tenant in a gentile's field, for which he takes a share of the produce, and the Israelite stored up the grain, R. Hanina therefore means by the words: 'One who buys untithed grain etc.', that the Israelite acquired it by virtue of his labour for him. Another explanation is that the Israelite bought the corn in the ear, and afterwards stored it up in the gentile's domain. (Tosaf.).
 - (4) Samaritan.
 - (5) V. Glos. A person suspected of not observing certain customs regarding tithes.
 - (6) We do not fear lest the fruits are not the same as those deposited and therefore are untithed. And, with reference to the sabbatical year, if he deposited with them the fruits of the sixth year and they are returned in the sabbatical year, we do not fear that the fruits returned have been exchanged and that, actually fruits of the sabbatical year are being restored, which fruit must not be sold and which require removal from the house after the fruits of the field have been consumed by the beasts.
 - (7) They are considered gentile's fruits, for we say that they have been undoubtedly exchanged.
 - (8) Fruits concerning which there is a suspicion as to the tithes being properly taken therefrom and, owing to this doubt, must be tithed, v. Dem'ai III, 4.
 - (9) The share of the priest from the fruits and grain. It is called 'great terumah', since it is the first sacred gift to be set aside and, also, to distinguish it from the terumah of the tithe, mentioned below.
 - (10) The teaching reported by R. Dimi from which Abaye made his deduction.
 - (11) The tithe of the tithe, which the Levite owes to the priest.
 - (12) Num. XVIII, 26.
 - (13) A physical disability of the animal, which renders it forbidden to be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 12a

MISHNAH. WE DO NOT REDEEM A FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS EITHER WITH A CALF, A BEAST OF CHASE, AN ANIMAL RITUALLY KILLED,¹ A TREFAH, KIL'AYIM² OR A KOY.³ R. ELIEZER PERMITS HOWEVER [REDEMPTION] WITH KIL'AYIM BECAUSE IT IS ALSO DESCRIBED AS A LAMB. BUT HE FORBIDS WITH A KOY, BECAUSE ITS NATURE IS DOUBTFUL. IF HE GAVE [THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS] ITSELF TO THE PRIEST, THE LATTER MUST NOT RETAIN IT, UNLESS HE SETS ASIDE A LAMB IN ITS PLACE. GEMARA. Whose opinion does the Mishnah represent? It is that of Ben Bag Bag. For it has been taught: We read here, [in connection with the redemption of a first-birth], the word, lamb,⁴ and we read elsewhere, [with reference to the Paschal-offering] the word, lamb,⁵ just as there [Scripture] excludes all those named [in the Mishnah above as unsuitable for the Paschal-offering],⁶ so here also, it excludes all those named [as unsuitable for the object of redeeming]. [Now you might assume that] just as the Paschal-offering must be a male, without a blemish, and a year old, similarly here, [in connection with the redemption of the first-birth of an ass] it must be a male, without a blemish, and a year old. The text therefore states: 'Thou shalt redeem', [and repeats], 'Thou shalt redeem' to include [even other than a male etc.]. Now if the repetition: 'Thou shalt redeem', 'Thou shalt redeem', has for its purpose to include, then why not include also all those [animals named in the Mishnah, as being unsuitable to redeem]? — If this were so, what is the use of [the analogy above between the words], 'lamb', 'lamb'? The question was raised: What is the ruling as regards redeeming a first-birth with a ben peku'ah?⁷ According to the opinion of R. Meir, there is no need for you to ask, for since R. Meir said: 'A ben peku'ah requires ritual slaughter', it is a perfect lamb. But the question does arise according to the opinion of the Rabbis, who hold that its mother's slaughtering makes it permitted to be eaten [without slaughtering] 'so that it is like flesh in the pot.'⁸ Or are we to say that since at the moment it runs and walks, we can describe it as a lamb?⁹ — Mar Zutra said: We do not redeem [with it]. Said R. Ashi to Mar Zutra: What is your reason? Is it because you infer this from the Paschal-offering, [which cannot be a hen peku'ah]? Then why not say also, that as in the case of the Paschal-offering it must be a male, without a blemish, and a year old, so here [the animal for redeeming] must be a male, without a blemish and a year old? — [The text]: 'Thou shalt redeem' [and its repetition], 'Thou shalt redeem', includes [even other than a male etc.]. But if the repetition: 'Thou shalt redeem', 'Thou shalt redeem', has for its object to include, then why not include also ben peku'ah? If so, what need is there [for the analogy above derived from the words], 'lamb', 'lamb'?¹⁰ The question was raised. What is the ruling as regards redeeming the first-birth of an ass with a nidmeh?¹¹ You cannot ask according to R. Eliezer, for since according to him we may redeem with kil'ayim, how much more so with a nidmeh?¹² The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of the Rabbis: Do we say that we are forbidden to redeem with kil'ayim, but we may redeem with a nidmeh? Or perhaps, there is no difference, [and in both cases we are forbidden to redeem with them]? Come and hear. 'If a cow gave birth to something looking like a kid, we do not redeem [with it].'¹³ From this we infer that if a ewe gave birth to what looks like a kid, we do redeem [with it]. Now whose opinion does this represent? Shall I assume it is the opinion of R. Eliezer? But do we not also redeem with kil'ayim [according to him]?¹⁴ You must then say that it is the opinion of the Rabbis!¹⁵ — No. You can still maintain that it is the opinion of R. Eliezer; and he teaches us this very thing,¹⁶ that if a cow gave birth to what looked like a kid, we do not redeem with it, and that you should not say, 'decide according to the offspring itself', and this is a genuine kid, but we rather say, 'decide according to its mother', and therefore it is a calf. Come and hear: For Rabbah b. Samuel learnt: What is kil'ayim? A ewe which gave birth to something that looked like a kid, though its father was a sheep. If the father was a sheep, is it kil'ayim? Is it not nidmeh? — Rather then put it in this way: What is that which is like kil'ayim, so that the Rabbis have placed it on a par with kil'ayim? A ewe which gave birth to what looked like a kid, though its father was a sheep. Now, for what purpose [does the Baraitha say that we liken nidmeh to kil'ayim]? If in respect of dedicating it as a sacrifice,¹⁷ surely [this is not necessary, since] from the text from which we derive the exclusion of kil'ayim [as unsuitable for a sacrifice on the altar], we also derive the exclusion of nidmeh. For it has been taught [Scripture says]: When a bullock or a sheep,¹⁸ intimating the exclusion of kil'ayim; 'or a goat'¹⁸ intimates the exclusion of nidmeh. Is it then in order [to exclude nidmeh] from the rule of the firstling? Surely the Divine Law says: But the firstling of an ox¹⁹ implying [that it is not subject to the law of the firstling] until the father is an ox and the offspring is an ox, [obviously excluding nidmeh]. Is it then from the rule of tithing [of animals]? The rule for [both nidmeh and kil'ayim] is expressly derived from the analogy of the words, 'under', 'under' [mentioned in both cases].²⁰ [You must say that it is] with regard to the first-birth of an ass!²¹ — No.²² [The comparison of nidmeh with kil'ayim] can still refer to tithing, and we suppose to a case where the nidmeh possesses certain marks [similar to its mother]. I might in this case assume that we draw an analogy between the 'passing' mentioned [in connection with tithing] and the 'passing' [mentioned] in connection with a firstling.²³ Therefore, we are told²⁴ that we rather draw the analogy between 'under' mentioned here and 'under' mentioned in connection with consecrated sacrifices.²⁵ The question was raised: What is the ruling as regards [redeeming the first-birth of an ass] with dedicated sacrifices which became unfit [for the altar]?²⁶ This question does not arise if we accept the opinion of R. Simeon, for since he holds that it is permitted to be used [before its redemption], it is unconsecrated.²⁷ The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of R. Judah, who says that it is forbidden to be used [before its redemption]. What is the ruling? Since it is forbidden to be used, [do we apply the principle that] one prohibition does not take effect where another prohibition already exists,²⁸ or perhaps, since [the lamb] does not assume any sanctity,²⁹ do we say that the redemption has the purpose only of releasing the ass from a mere prohibition?³⁰ — Said R. Mari the son of Kahana, And is this which is written in connection with these, As the gazelle and the hart',³¹ a small matter? [Consequently] just as we do not redeem [the first-birth of an ass] with the gazelle or the hart,³² [being beasts], similarly, we do not redeem with dedicated sacrifices which became unfit for the altar! Now that you have arrived at this conclusion,

- (1) Even a lamb.
 - (2) A lamb born from the coupling of a he-goat and a ewe.
 - (3) The offspring of a he-goat and a hind. There is, therefore, a doubt whether it is to be considered an animal or a beast.
 - (4) Thou shalt redeem with a lamb. (Ex. XIII, 13).
 - (5) Your lamb shall be without a blemish, a male of the first year. (Ex. XII, 5).
 - (6) A calf and a beast are excluded, because the text says: From the sheep and goats. A ritually slaughtered animal is excluded, because the killing must be specifically for the Passover, and kil'ayim is forbidden because a Paschal lamb must be suitable for offering on the altar.
 - (7) An animal taken alive out of the slaughtered mother's womb.
 - (8) It is on a par with a ritually slaughtered animal, and, like the latter, we are not permitted to redeem with it a first-birth of an ass.
 - (9) And all those cases enumerated in the Mishnah do not possess the equivalent value of the ass, for otherwise it would be permissible, as mentioned above, to redeem even with boiled herbs.
 - (10) And since something must be excluded, we rather include ben peku'ah as unsuitable to redeem with, than the case of a female etc., since, after all, the latter are lambs, whereas hen peku'ah is like a ritually slaughtered animal.
 - (11) An animal suspected to be a hybrid or looking like one. And in this case, although its sire is a ram and its mother a ewe, the offspring looks like some other species.
 - (12) If the offspring born from two different kinds of animals is permitted, how much more so this one.
 - (13) For we say it is a calf, with which, as the Mishnah states above, it is forbidden to redeem.

- (14) As stated in the Mishnah above.
- (15) Therefore we see that according to the Rabbis it is forbidden to redeem with a nidmeh.
- (16) But not to deduce therefrom the ruling as regards redemption with offspring which looked like a kid given birth to by a ewe.
- (17) That nidmeh may not be offered up on the altar as kil'ayim.
- (18) Lev. XXII, 27.
- (19) Num. XVIII, 17.
- (20) It says in connection with dedicated sacrifices: Then it shall be seven days under its dam (Lev. XXII, 27). And in connection with the tithing of animals the text says: Even of whatsoever passeth under the rod (Lev. XXVII, 32). Just as nidmeh and kil'ayim are invalid to be brought as offerings in the case of consecrated sacrifices, they are similarly unsuitable in connection with the tithing of animals.
- (21) And that nidmeh is unsuitable to redeem with, as is the case of kil'ayim, which answers the above query.
- (22) There is no proof from here that the first-birth of an ass can be redeemed with a nidmeh.
- (23) 'Even whatsoever passeth under the rod', the text in connection with tithing and the text in connection with the firstling, 'That thou shalt cause to pass (set apart)'. As in the latter case, if it possesses some marks similar to its mother it is liable to the law of the firstling, so too with reference to its tithing.
- (24) In the teaching reported by Rabbah b. Samuel.
- (25) That we exclude nidmeh from animal tithing, comparing it with kil'ayim, even in such circumstance.
- (26) And had been redeemed. Such an animal even after redemption retains some sanctity in that it may not be used for work and shearing.
- (27) I.e., the first-birth of the ass. It can therefore be redeemed, for we apply here the principle that one prohibition cannot take legal hold where another already exists, as there exists no prohibition in the case of a first-birth.
- (28) The prohibition attaching to the first-birth of an ass cannot be transferred to a dedicated animal unfit for the altar which is liable to the prohibitions regarding its shearing and working with it.
- (29) As a result of the redemption of the first-birth of an ass.
- (30) In order to render it permissible to be used, but not that its sanctity shall fall upon the object with which it is redeemed.
- (31) Deut. XII, 22 with reference to sacrifices which became unfit for the altar.
- (32) Being beasts of chase, v. Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 12b

it may be that even according to the opinion of R. Simeon,¹ [it is forbidden to redeem with it], since the text says in connection with them: 'As the gazelle and the hart'. The question was raised: What is the ruling as regards redeeming with an animal bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year? With reference to an ass, distinctly a first-birth, there is no need for you to ask, since the Divine Law says [that the fruits of the sabbatical year are]: For food,² implying, but not to trade therewith.³ The question does arise regarding the uncertain [first-birth of an ass]. And according to the opinion of R. Simeon you need not ask, because he holds there is no uncertain [first-birth of an ass which requires redemption].⁴ The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of R. Judah. What is the ruling? Since he sets aside a lamb and it remains for himself, we can apply to it [the designation]: 'For food'? Or perhaps, since as long as the ass's prohibition is not canceled it is not permitted,⁵ it is like trading [with the fruits of the sabbatical year]? — Come and hear: For R. Hisda said: If an animal has been purchased with the fruits of the sabbatical year, we are not permitted to redeem with it an ass, distinctly a first-birth, but it is permitted to redeem therewith an uncertain first-birth. R. Hisda further said: An animal bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year is not liable to the law of the firstling. It is subject, however, to the law of the gifts [which are the prerogative of the priest].⁶ It is not liable to the law of the firstling, because the Divine Law says: 'For food', implying, but not for burning.⁷ And it is subject to the law of gifts, for we can apply to it⁸ [the designation], 'For food'. An objection was raised from the following: If one eats from the dough of the sabbatical year before the hallah⁹ has been taken, he incurs the guilt of death [at the hands of Heaven]. But why?¹⁰ Since, if it became levitically unclean, it is fit for burning, and the Divine Law says: 'For food', implying, but not for burning? — The case is different here, for it says: Throughout your generations.¹¹ It has been taught to the same effect: Whence do we derive that if one eats from the dough of the sabbatical year before its hallah is taken, he incurs the guilt of death? Because it is said: 'Throughout your generations'. But why not derive [that the firstling bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year is liable to the law of the firstling], from the case [of hallah]?¹² — In the case of hallah [its separation] is mainly 'for the eating [of the priests], [except when it receives uncleanness], but in the case of the firstling, [the portion for the altar] is mainly for burning.¹³ IF HE GAVE IT TO THE PRIEST etc. We have learnt here that which our Rabbis have taught: 'If an Israelite had a first-birth of an ass in his house and the priest said to him, "Give it to me and I will redeem it", he should not give it to him, except [the priest] redeem it in his presence'. R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: 'This proves¹⁴ that the priests are suspected of neglecting the redemption of the first-births of asses'. Surely [this deduction] is evident? — You might have assumed that this is the case only where he is known to be suspected,¹⁵ but generally we do not suspect the priest. He therefore informs us that he usually decides that it is a legitimate act.¹⁶ MISHNAH.

IF ONE SETS ASIDE [A LAMB] FOR THE REDEMPTION OF THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS AND IT DIED, R. ELIEZER SAYS: HE IS RESPONSIBLE AS IS THE CASE WITH THE FIVE SELA'S IN CONNECTION WITH THE REDEMPTION OF THE FIRST-BORN. BUT THE SAGES SAY: HE IS NOT RESPONSIBLE, AS IS THE CASE WITH THE REDEMPTION OF THE SECOND [YEAR'S] TITHING.¹⁷ R. JOSHUA AND R. ZADOK TESTIFIED CONCERNING THE REDEMPTION OF THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS WHICH DIED THAT THE PRIEST RECEIVES NOTHING [IN SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES] — IF THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS DIED [AFTER THE LAMB FOR REDEMPTION HAD BEEN SET ASIDE], R. ELIEZER SAYS: IT SHALL BE BURIED, BUT THE LAMB MAY BE USED,¹⁸ WHEREAS THE SAGES SAY: IT IS NOT REQUIRED TO BE BURIED AND THE LAMB BELONGS TO THE PRIEST.

GEMARA. Said R. Joseph: What is the reason of R. Eliezer? — Because Scripture writes: Nevertheless the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem [and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem].¹⁹ Just as in the case of the first-born of a man, he is responsible [if the redemption money is lost], similarly, in the case of the first-birth of an unclean animal, he is responsible [if the redemption lamb dies] — Said Abaye to him: [If the comparison be correct, then] as in the case of the first-born of a man, it is permitted to benefit [from his work before redemption], so in the case of an unclean animal, it should be permitted to benefit from it. And should you assume that this is so, have we not learnt in a Mishnah: IF THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS DIES, R. ELIEZER SAYS: IT SHALL BE BURIED? What does he mean by the phrase

IT SHALL BE BURIED? Does he not mean that it is forbidden to use it? — No, It means, it shall be buried as in the case of the first-born of a man.²⁰ But [am I to infer that on]y] a first-born of a man requires burial, but that a plain Israelite does not require burial? And moreover, it has been taught: R. Eliezer agrees that if an Israelite has an uncertain first-birth of an ass in his house, he sets aside a lamb on its behalf and it is his?²¹ — Rather, said Raba; [the following is the reason of R. Eliezer]. Scripture says: Nevertheless the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem. Scripture implies, ‘I have compared [an unclean animal with the first-birth of a man] in connection with [the responsibility for] redemption, but not as regards any other matter.²² We have learnt elsewhere [in a Mishnah]:²³ Valuations are according to their period;²⁴ the redemption of the first-born takes place after thirty days and the redemption of the first-birth of an ass takes place immediately. But does the redemption of the first-birth of an ass take place immediately? Against this I quote the following in contradiction: The period of valuation or redemption of the first-born, or Naziriteship,²⁵ or redemption of the first-birth of an ass, is in no case less than thirty days. But we can extend the time in each of these cases indefinitely!²⁶ — Said R. from it, but owing to the fact that an unclean animal is compared with the first-born of man; and usually a dead first-born receives burial. Nahman: [The statement above, that the redemption of a first-birth takes place immediately means] to inform us that if he redeemed it, it is redeemed.²⁷ This would imply that in the case of his first-born son, if he redeemed him within the thirty days he is not redeemed? Has it not been stated: If one redeems his son within the thirty days, Rab holds: his son is redeemed? — But surely has it not been stated in this connection: Raba said: All authorities agree [that if he said that the first-born should be redeemed] from now [before the expiry of the thirty days], then his son is not redeemed?²⁸

(1) For although it is permitted according to his view to benefit from the first-birth of an ass, we are, nevertheless, not allowed to redeem it with a dedicated animal which became unfit for the altar.

(2) Lev. XXV, 6.

(3) Redeeming the first-birth with an animal bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year is like trading with sabbatical fruits, and, moreover, while the fruits of the sabbatical year may be eaten by means of this redemption, he acquires an ass which cannot be eaten.

(4) An uncertain birth, e.g. where its mother gave birth to a male and a female and there was a doubt as to whether the male was born first. The Mishnah states above that in such a case, a lamb is set aside and it remains for himself. And according to R. Simeon, since he permits a first-birth of an ass to be used, (v. supra p. 9b), there is no need to set aside a lamb to release the first. birth from any prohibition attaching to it.

(5) Unless he sets aside a lamb for redemption.

(6) The priestly share consisting of the shoulder, jaw and the maw. V. Deut. XVIII, 3.

(7) And if it be liable to the law of the firstling, certain portions are burnt on the altar.

(8) Sc. the animal.

(9) The priestly share of the dough; v. Num. XV, 18ff.

(10) Should the dough be liable to hallah on the sabbatical year?

(11) Num. XV, 21, implying that even on the sabbatical year, hallah must be given.

(12) I.e., why do we not make an exception in the application of the text ‘For food’, implying, ‘but not for burning’, with reference to a firstling, as we do in the case of hallah.

(13) And since it is burnt, we apply the text: ‘For food’, with its implication, ‘but not for burning’; whereas it is otherwise In connection with hallah.

(14) Since the Mishnah says that he should not give the first-birth to the ‘priest unless the latter redeems it before him.

(15) Where we have reason to suspect him. Or, where we actually saw him working the firstling of an ass prior to its redemption, either wilfully or through ignorance of the law on the matter.

(16) Not to set aside a lamb to redeem it, as he argues that in any case the lamb remains with him.

(17) Where if the redemption money is lost, it is not replaced.

(18) For as R. Eliezer maintains that the Israelite is responsible, it is as if the lamb had not yet been set aside and the Israelite may therefore benefit from it. But the first-birth must be buried, since it is forbidden to use it, as is the case when alive.

(19) Num. XVIII, 15.

(20) Not because it is forbidden to benefit

(21) And although with reference to an ass, distinctly a first-birth, he maintains that so long as the lamb is not in the possession of the priest it is not redeemed, he agrees with regard to an uncertain first-birth that he need not give its redemption to the priest but sets aside a lamb, thus implying that the first-birth of an ass is forbidden to be used otherwise. And since we do not compare an unclean animal with the first-born of man in this respect, the same should apply in respect of his responsibility for it. The question therefore remains, what is the reason of R. Eliezer in the opening passage of our Mishnah?

(22) The limiting word 'nevertheless', indicates that only with regard to the responsibility for redemption is an unclean animal compared with the firstborn of a man.

(23) Var. lec.: It has been taught, as the statement which follows is not a Mishnah but a Baraitha.

(24) Between the ages of one month and five years, if one said, 'I vow my valuation' and he delayed till the age of six, when there is an increased valuation, he still only gives the original valuation, as laid down in Scripture. Some maintain that since a child of that age is not legally permitted to dedicate its valuation to the sanctuary, therefore it means here that somebody else said, 'I vow the child's valuation upon myself'.

(25) The unspecified vow of a Nazirite, i.e., one bound by a vow to abstain from wine etc., is at least for thirty days.

(26) With reference to valuations, as the ages increase the valuation will correspondingly increase, as mentioned in Scripture. A Nazirite also can vow for a period of years and the first-birth of an ass may be redeemed even after the lapse of years and it is not necessary to give more because of the delay.

(27) Although he has not carried out properly the religious command of redemption, the animal is redeemed.

(28) And the difference of opinion only arises when he said, 'I give the money now but its redemption shall only take effect after thirty days'.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 13a

R. Shesheth said: [The above Baraitha means] to inform us that he does not transgress on account of the first-birth.¹ Rami the son of Hama raised an objection from the following: The duty of redemption is for the entire period of thirty days. After that, either he redeems it, or breaks its neck. What [does it mean]? Does it not mean that it is a religious duty to retain it for the whole period of thirty days?² No, it means that it is a religious duty to redeem it all the thirty days. If this is the case, what it should say is: After that, either he redeems it³ or he transgresses [the command to redeem]!⁴ Rather, said Raba:⁵ There is no contradiction: the one statement [that redemption is after thirty days] gives the opinion of R. Eliezer who compares [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man], and the other statement [that redemption takes place immediately] gives the opinion of the Rabbis who do not make this comparison. MISHNAH. IF HE DOES NOT WISH TO REDEEM IT [THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS], HE BREAKS ITS NECK FROM BEHIND AND BURIES IT. THE MIZWAH⁶ OF REDEMPTION IS PRIOR TO⁷ THE

MIZWAH OF BREAKING ITS NECK, FOR IT SAYS: AND IF THOU WILT NOT REDEEM IT, THEN THOU SHALT BREAK ITS NECK.⁸ THE MIZWAH OF YI'UD⁹ IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF REDEMPTION, FOR IT SAYS: WHO HATH BETROTHED HER TO HIMSELF.¹⁰ THE MIZWAH OF YIBBUM¹¹ IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF HALIZAH.¹² THIS WAS THE CASE AT FIRST WHEN THE PARTIES CONCERNED USED TO CARRY OUT THE LAW WITH RELIGIOUS INTENTIONS.¹³ BUT NOW THAT THEY DO NOT CARRY OUT THE LAW RELIGIOUSLY,¹⁴ THE [RABBIS] HAVE SAID: THE MIZWAH OF HALIZAH IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF YIBBUM. THE MIZWAH OF REDEMPTION [OF AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL WHOSE VALUE IS DEDICATED TO THE SANCTUARY] RESTS WITH THE OWNER. HE IS FIRST, BEFORE ANY OTHER MAN, FOR IT SAYS: OR IF IT BE NOT REDEEMED, THEN IT SHALL BE SOLD ACCORDING TO THY VALUATION.¹⁵

MISHNAH. [AN ISRAELITE] WHO BUYS AN EMBRYO¹⁶ OF A COW BELONGING TO A HEATHEN, OR WHO SELLS ONE TO HIM, ALTHOUGH THIS IS NOT PERMITTED,¹⁷ OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM,¹⁸ OR WHO RECEIVES AN ANIMAL FROM HIM TO LOOK AFTER,¹⁹ OR WHO GIVES [HIS COW] TO HIM TO LOOK AFTER,²⁰ IS EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING, FOR IT SAYS: [I HALLOWED UNTO ME ALL THE FIRST-BORN] IN ISRAEL,²¹ BUT NOT IN GENTILES. PRIESTS AND LEVITES ARE SUBJECT [TO THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING]. THEY ARE NOT EXEMPT FROM [THE LAW OF] THE FIRSTLING OF A CLEAN ANIMAL, BUT ONLY OF A FIRST-BORN SON AND THE FIRST-BORN OF AN ASS.

GEMARA. Why does [the redactor of the Mishnah] state the case of the embryo of an ass in the first [chapter],²² and subsequently [in the second chapter], the case of an embryo of a cow? Why not state in the first [chapter] the case of an embryo of a cow, since it is a case of an animal consecrated as such, and, subsequently. in the case of an embryo of an ass, as it is a case of an animal consecrated only for its value? — It was explained in the West [Palestine]:²³ If you choose, I may say the reason is because he dwelt with peculiar pleasure on this case, in the manner of R. Hanina [explained above].²⁴ Or if you prefer, I can say it is because the regulations concerning an unclean animal are relatively few;²⁵ [the redactor of the Mishnah] therefore cleared them out of the way first.

R. Isaac b. Nahmani reported in the name of Resh Lakish on behalf of R. Oshiah: If an Israelite gave money to a heathen for his animal, [we judge the transaction] according to their laws and even though he did not pull the animal,²⁶ he acquires possession and is subject to the law of the firstling. If a heathen gives money to an Israelite for his animal, [we also judge the transaction] according to their laws, and although he did not pull [the animal], he acquires possession and is exempt from the law of the firstling. The Master says: 'If an Israelite gave money to a heathen, [we judge the transaction] according to their laws, and although he did not pull [the animal], he acquires possession and is subject to the law of the firstling'. What does 'their laws' mean? Shall we say that 'according to their laws' means, as regards the person [of the heathen], and we conclude a fortiori, that if the person [of a heathen] is acquired by the Israelite for money, as Scripture writes: To hold for possession²⁷ — [Scripture] compares a Canaanitish slave with a possession: as a possession is acquired by handing over the money to the seller, by a bill of sale, and taking possession,²⁸ so a Canaanitish slave is acquired with money — how much more so, therefore, is this the case with reference to a heathen's property?²⁹ If this were the case, then a heathen's property should also be acquired even by means of a bill of sale and taking possession? And, moreover, this idea can be confuted by the case of an Israelite [having a transaction] with an Israelite. For though the person [of an Israelite] is acquired with money, yet his property is acquired by means of meshikah!³⁰ Rather said Abaye: The expression ‘according to their laws’ means, those which the Torah laid down for them. [For Scripture says]: Or buy of thy neighbour's hand,³¹ [and we deduce from this that] from ‘the hand of thy neighbour’ the way of acquiring possession is meshikah,³² but from the hand of a heathen the way of acquiring possession is with money. But why not deduce that from the hand of a heathen there is no way of acquiring possession at all?³³ — It was explained: You cannot assume this a fortiori: If [the heathen's] person can be acquired, how much more so his property! But perhaps say that in the case of a heathen, two ways of effecting possession are required?³⁴ — The answer was given: Have we not here an a fortiori [argument]? If his person is acquired only in one way, shall his property be acquired in two ways? But why not say that [a heathen acquires an object] either by means of one or the other?³⁵ — [The method of his acquiring] must resemble [the form of acquiring mentioned in connection with the text] ‘thy neighbour’. Just as in the case of ‘thy neighbour’, [i.e., an Israelite], possession [can be acquired] only in one way, so in the case of a heathen only in one way.

The Master said: ‘But if a heathen gave money to an Israelite for his animal, [we judge the transaction according to their laws, and even though he did not pull [the animal], he acquires possession and is exempt from the law of the firstling’. What does ‘according to their laws’ mean? If the expression ‘according to their laws’ refers to the person [of the Israelite] who is acquired with money by a heathen and we infer a fortiori: If the person [of an Israelite] is acquired with money — for Scripture writes: Out of the money that he was bought for,³⁶ — how much more so is [the Israelite's] property [acquired by means of money by a gentile]? This can be refuted by the case of a transaction between Israelites, for his person is acquired with money and yet his property is acquired by meshikah! Rather, said Abaye: ‘According to their laws’ means those which the Torah laid down for them. [Scripture says]: ‘And if thou sell ought to thy neighbour’,³⁷ [we infer from this] that ‘to thy neighbour’ the way of acquiring possession is by meshikah, but in the case of a gentile, possession is acquired with money. But why not say that for a heathen there is no way [for acquiring possession] at all?³⁸ — I can answer, No. Have we not an a fortiori [argument]? If a heathen can acquire the person [of an Israelite] with money, how much more so is this the case with the property [of an Israelite]? But why not say that for a heathen there must be two ways of acquiring possession? — But is there not the a fortiori argument [to the contrary]? If a heathen acquires possession of the person [of an Israelite] by one act only, should the Israelite's property be acquired only by two acts? But why not say that [a heathen acquires possession of an Israelite's property] either by means of one or the other! — [The way of acquiring possession] must resemble [what is mentioned in connection with the text] ‘thy neighbour’.

(1) The duty to redeem the first-birth of an ass is indeed immediately after its birth, and the Baraita which says that redemption does not take place for thirty days means that he does not transgress the command to redeem until the period of thirty days has elapsed.

(2) In accordance with the opinion of R. Nahman, who maintains that redemption does not take place before thirty days have elapsed. This seems to contradict the opinion of R. Shesheth.

(3) Var. lec.: He either breaks its neck. V. R. Gershom.

(4) And since it says: 'Either he redeems it or breaks its neck', we infer that redemption only commences after the thirty days and that during the thirty days it is a duty to retain it.

(5) We may indeed say that it is a religious duty to retain the first-birth for thirty days and still we do not explain the Baraitha cited by Rami b. Hama as being in accordance with R. Nahman's view (Rashi). Sh. Mek.: Raba's reply can be explained as being entirely independent of the opinions of R. Shesheth and R. Nahman and that it merely explains the conflicting statements regarding when redemption should take place.

(6) A religious act and duty.

(7) I.e., has precedence over.

(8) Ex. XIII, 13. The verse implies that redemption comes first.

(9) Designation, especially the betrothal of a Hebrew handmaid.

(10) Ex. XXI, 8. The verse implies that the first duty is to betroth her.

(11) To marry the wife of a brother who died without issue.

(12) The ceremony of taking off the brother-in-law's shoe after refusing to marry his brother's widow. Deut. XXV, (5-11).

(13) In order to preserve the name of the dead brother.

(14) But merely for sexual pleasure, and, since this is the case, it is sexual intercourse with a brother's wife, which is one of the forbidden relations.

(15) Lev. XXVII, 27. The verse therefore implies that redemption is a prior duty. Also redemption takes precedence, because where the owner redeems he has to add a fifth part, but in the case of another redeeming, there is no addition of a fifth for the benefit of the sanctuary, as Scripture says in the first part of the verse quoted in this connection: 'And If it be of an unclean beast, then he shall ransom it according to thy valuation and shall add unto it the fifth part thereof'.

(16) A firstling.

(17) It is forbidden to sell large cattle to a heathen, because the animal is worked on the Sabbath.

(18) Both purchasing an animal between them.

(19) The Israelite in return for attending to the animal receives in payment half of the offspring, but the animal itself belongs to the heathen.

(20) The Israelite sharing a half or a third of the offspring.

(21) Num. III, 13. The text implies that where a gentile has a share in the mother or an offspring, the firstling is not holy.

(22) The first Mishnah in the first chapter of the tractate.

(23) Palestine is designated as the West, being so situated geographically relative to Babylon, where the Talmud Babli was evolved.

(24) Supra 5b.

(25) For only one chapter is devoted to the rules and regulations appertaining to an unclean animal, whereas the remainder of the tractate of Bekoroth deals with the firstling of a clean animal.

(26) Into his possession, which is one of the ways of effecting transference between Israelites, whereas with reference to a gentile, the handing over of the money effects transference; v. Glos. s.v. Meshikah.

(27) Lev. XXV, 46.

(28) Performing some kind of work on the estate. V. Kid, 26a.

- (29) That it is acquired from him by handing over the purchase money.
- (30) V. p. 90, n. 3 and Kid, 26a. Similarly, although the person of the heathen is acquired with money, his property may require another form of acquiring possession.
- (31) Lev. XXV, 14.
- (32) The expression 'of thy neighbour's hand' implies that the object has to be filled from the hands of the seller into the hands of the buyer.
- (33) Short of actually bringing the object completely into the domain of the Israelite.
- (34) Possession by means of money and meshikah, but not with money alone.
- (35) Money or Meshikah.
- (36) Lev. XXV, 51. And the verse deals with a gentile who purchases a Hebrew slave.
- (37) Lev. XXV, 14.
- (38) And that in order to secure possession of an Israelite's chattels, he must transfer them completely to his domain.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 13b

As 'thy neighbour' [i.e., an Israelite] acquires possession only in one way,¹ so the heathen acquires possession only in one way.² It was argued: Now according to Amemar who said that meshikah effects possession in the case of a heathen, this might be right if he holds according to the opinion of R. Johanan who maintains that according to the Biblical law, money effects possession between Israelites, whereas meshikah does not effect possession;³ the text 'to thy neighbour' serves then the purpose of allowing us to deduce that 'to thy neighbour' [i.e., an Israelite] money effects possession, but for a heathen to effect possession meshikah is required. But if he holds according to the opinion of Resh Lakish, who maintains that meshikah is expressly mentioned in the Torah, [with the indicating result that] 'to thy neighbour' [an Israelite] with meshikah and for a heathen with meshikah, what need then is there for the text 'to thy neighbour'? — It can be explained thus: The text means: 'to thy neighbour' you return an overcharge,⁴ but you do not return an overcharge to a Canaanite [a heathen] — But do we not derive [the exclusion of the law of overcharging in connection with] the Canaanite from the following text: Ye shall not oppress one another?⁵ — One text refers to a Canaanite and the other refers to sacred property.⁶ And it was necessary [to teach both cases]. For if the Divine Law had written only one text, I might have assumed that, as regards the Canaanite there is no law concerning overreaching, but in regard to sacred property⁷ the law of overreaching is enforced. Therefore Scripture teaches us [that this is not so]. This would hold good according to him who says that the robbed object of a Canaanite is forbidden [to be retained]; therefore a scriptural text is necessary to permit [the retention of] overreaching. But⁸ if he holds with him who says that the robbed object of a Canaanite is allowed [to be retained], can there be any question about permitting [to retain] overreaching? I can answer: If [Amemar] holds according to him who says that the robbed object of a Canaanite is allowed [to be retained], then perforce he will hold according to the view of R. Johanan.⁹ An objection was raised. If one buys broken pieces [of silver] from a heathen and finds among them an idol, if he made meshikah before he had given the purchase money, he should withdraw [from the transaction]. But if he made meshikah after he had given the money, he should carry the benefit derived therefrom to the Dead Sea.¹⁰ Now, if you hold that money effects possession, what need is there for meshikah? — We are dealing here with the case where [the heathen] undertook to act in the matter in accordance with Israelite law. If so, what need is there for money [as a means of effecting possession]? — This is what [the Baraitha] intends to say: Although he had given the money, if he made meshikah, [then he can withdraw], but if not, [he] cannot [do so]. If this is the case, there is a difficulty in the first part [of the Baraitha]?¹¹ — Said Abaye: The reason of the first part [of the Baraitha] is because it was made in error.¹² Raba said to him: ‘[You say that the reason of] the first part [of the Baraitha] is because it was made in error. But is the last part [of the Baraitha] also not a case of a purchase in error?’ Rather, said Raba: Both the first and the last parts deal with the case of a purchase in error;¹³ but in [the case stated in] the first part where he had not yet given the money, the idol does not appear to have been in the possession of an Israelite, whereas in the last part [of the Baraitha], where he had given the money, the idol appears to have been in the possession of an Israelite.¹⁴ And Abaye? — He will explain thus. The first part is a case of a purchase made in error, for he did not know of the idol, since he had not yet paid the money.¹⁵ But the last part is a case of a purchase made in error, for since he had given the money, when he was [about] to make meshikah he should have examined the purchase and then made meshikah.¹⁶ R. Ashi said:¹⁷ Since in the first part [of the Baraitha], meshikah does not effect possession, in the last part also, meshikah does not effect possession. But as he mentions meshikah in the first part, he also states meshikah in the last part. Rabina said: Since in the last part meshikah effects possession, in the first part too meshikah effects possession.¹⁸ And what the first part says in effect is this: If he had not given the money, nor made meshikah, he withdraws. What is [then] meant by ‘he withdraws’?¹⁹ — That he can retract his words, for he [the Tanna of the Baraitha] maintains: To retract one’s words indicates a want of honesty, but this is the case only with an Israelite dealing with an Israelite, because they stand by their word, whereas in the case of an Israelite dealing with gentiles, since the latter do not stand by their word, it is not so.

(1) I.e., meshikah.

(2) I.e., with money and not meshikah, for the verse implies ‘thy neighbour’ with meshikah but not a heathen, and by analogy we assume that the same limitation applies in the case of the form of acquisition which exists for gentiles. i.e., money.

(3) B.M. 46b, Kid. 26a.

(4) The law of overcharging and overreaching being mentioned later in the same chapter of the Bible.

(5) Lev. XXV, 14. The text implies that for a heathen this law does not apply, as the words ‘one another’ refer to Israelites.

(6) To which also the law does not apply.

(7) An object dedicated for the Temple, or for some other sacred purpose, and I might have said that secular property should not have an advantage over sacred property in this respect.

(8) v. Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 388, n. 6 and B.M., Sonc. ed., p. 506, n. 9.

(9) For since the robbed object of Canaanite may be retained, therefore there is no need to deduce the retention of the overreaching from the text, ‘Thy neighbour’. Consequently the text will imply that although money effects possession in a transaction between Israelites, in the case of heathens meshikah is required. Hence we see that Amemar must necessarily hold according to the opinion of R. Johanan.

(10) For an idol in the possession of an Israelite can never be freed from its prohibition, and it is therefore forbidden to derive any profit therefrom.

(11) Why should his withdrawal cancel the sale? Since he made meshikah, he should be required to carry the benefit to the Dead Sea!

(12) For he did not know there was an idol and therefore the withdrawal cancels the sale.

(13) And legally the withdrawal cancels the sale even under the circumstances mentioned in, the last part of the Baraitha, and meshikah is the form here of effecting possession, this having been agreed upon by the parties concerned.

(14) On withdrawal he receives back his money from the heathen.

(15) And before the purchase is handed over, the buyer does not usually trouble to examine the contents of a purchase.

(16) And as he omitted to make the examination, the transaction was valid and, consequently, the meshikah was a genuine one.

(17) On R. Ashi's view we are dealing here with a case where the parties did not agree to act according to Jewish law, and therefore money payment is the method of effecting possession of an object bought. And no difficulty can be raised from the last part of the Baraitha, by arguing that, if this be a fact what need is there for meshikah, for meshikah is mentioned here only because it is mentioned in the first part, and there it had to be mentioned to inform us, that it has no effect, since the purchase money was not handed over.

(18) When e.g., the parties agree to act according to Jewish law, i.e., use meshikah as a form of transference.

(19) Since neither meshikah nor money did take place.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 14a

MISHNAH. ALL DEDICATED SACRIFICES WHICH HAD A PERMANENT BLEMISH BEFORE THEIR DEDICATION¹ AND WERE REDEEMED, ARE LIABLE [TO THE LAW] OF THE FIRSTLING AND THE [PRIESTLY] GIFTS;² THEY BECOME UNCONSECRATED ANIMALS AS REGARDS SHEARING AND WORKING;³ THEIR OFFSPRING AND MILK ARE PERMITTED TO BE USED AFTER THEIR REDEMPTION;⁴ HE WHO SLAUGHTERS THEM WITHOUT⁵ [THE TEMPLE COURT] DOES NOT INCUR [THE PUNISHMENT OF EXCISION]; AND THE LAW OF SUBSTITUTE DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM;⁶ AND IF THEY DIED [BEFORE REDEMPTION]. THEY MAY BE REDEEMED,⁷ EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF A FIRSTLING AND AN ANIMAL SET ASIDE FOR TITHE [OF CATTLE].⁸ ALL ANIMALS HOWEVER WHICH WERE DEDICATED BEFORE THEY BECAME BLEMISHED OR HAD ONLY SUFFERED A TRANSITORY BLEMISH BEFORE THEIR DEDICATION AND AFTER THAT DEVELOPED A PERMANENT BLEMISH, AND WERE REDEEMED, ARE EXEMPT [FROM THE LAW] OF THE FIRSTLING AND FROM THE [PRIESTLY] GIFTS; THEY DO NOT BECOME UNCONSECRATED AS REGARDS SHEARING AND WORKING; THEIR OFFSPRING AND MILK ARE FORBIDDEN TO BE USED AFTER THEIR REDEMPTION; HE WHO SLAUGHTERS THEM WITHOUT [THE TEMPLE COURT] IS PUNISHABLE [WITH EXCISION]; THE LAW OF SUBSTITUTE APPLIES TO THEM; AND IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE TO BE BURIED.

GEMARA. The reason⁹ is because they were redeemed, but if they were not redeemed, they would have been exempt from [the law of] the firstling and from the [priestly] gifts, for [the Mishnah] holds that the consecration of an object consecrated for its value sets aside [the law of] the firstling and the duty of the [priestly] gifts.

AND THEY BECOME UNCONSECRATED etc. The reason¹⁰ is because they were redeemed, but if they were not redeemed, they would have been forbidden as regards shearing and working. This would confirm the opinion of R. Eleazar who said: Animals dedicated for keeping the Temple in repair,¹¹ are forbidden as regards shearing and working! — [No]. It can be maintained that this is no proof. For an object consecrated for its value, eventually to be used for the altar,¹² might be confused with an object which is itself consecrated for the altar, therefore the Rabbis enacted a prohibition.¹³ But in the case of an object dedicated for keeping the Temple in repair, the Rabbis did not enact a prohibition.¹⁴

THEIR OFFSPRING AND MILK ARE PERMITTED etc. How is this to be understood? Shall I say that [we speak of where] they became pregnant and gave birth after their redemption? Surely this is obvious? They are unconsecrated animals! Rather what is meant is that they were pregnant before their redemption and gave birth after their redemption. This implies that before their redemption, [the offspring] are forbidden!¹⁵

- (1) And the object of the dedication, since they possessed already a permanent blemish, was to sell them and purchase with the money sacrifices for the altar.
 - (2) The shoulder, jaw and maw, as is the case with genuine hullin (unconsecrated animals).
 - (3) For they are considered hullin, as they were blemished before dedication, and the law of dedicated sacrifices which had become unfit for the altar, where shearing and working are prohibited, does not apply to them.
 - (4) Even if they were pregnant before their redemption, for since they gave birth after their redemption. their offspring are permitted. V. Gemara.
 - (5) Even before their redemption. since the animals did not receive any sanctity from the outset, owing to their blemishes before dedication.
 - (6) V. Lev. XXVII, 10.
 - (7) In order to give the carcasses to dogs to eat. Moreover, we are taught here also that they hold an inferior status compared with other dedicated sacrifices, which can only be redeemed when alive.
 - (8) A firstling, even with a permanent blemish. is sanctified as the passing through the womb consecrates it. And with reference also to tithing. Scripture ordains that whether it be good, i.e., without a blemish, or bad (blemished), the animal passes under the rod to be tithed.
 - (9) Why the first clause of the Mishnah says that they are liable to the law of the firstling.
 - (10) Why the Mishnah says that shearing and working are permissible.
 - (11) The dedicated animals are sold and the money is devoted to the repair of the Sanctuary.
 - (12) The money realized from its sale is used to purchase sacrifices for the altar, and we therefore prohibit its shearing and working.
 - (13) Because if in the former case we permit the shearing and working, we might be led to permit in the latter case.
 - (14) For there is little fear here that because in the one case we permit the shearing and working. we might be led to permit in connection with the object consecrated as such, as there is an obvious distinction between the two.
 - (15) To be used for any purpose without redemption, nor could they be offered up on the altar, since even their own mother is not fit for the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 14b

[The point then arises], can they be redeemed even when they are without a blemish, or, can they not be redeemed so long as they are without a blemish?¹ — Come and hear: If one consecrated animals having a permanent blemish for the altar and they gave birth, they are to be sold and [the offspring] do not need a blemish, because they receive no sanctity. For we cannot be more stringent with the subsidiary than with the principal object.²

Now the reason [why the offspring do not require a blemish before redemption], is because we should not be more stringent with the subsidiary than with the principal, but if he consecrated a male³ animal for its value, it receives the sanctity of an animal consecrated as such. This would support Raba's teaching. For Raba said: If one consecrated a male animal for its value,⁴ it receives the sanctity of an animal which has been consecrated in itself.

HE WHO SLAUGHTERS THEM WITHOUT [THE TEMPLE COURT], DOES NOT INCUR [THE PUNISHMENT OF EXCISION]. R. Eleazar quoted [with reference to this passage of the Mishnah]: He is culpable.⁵ and he explains [the word 'WITHOUT' in the Mishnah] as meaning that he slaughters them on a private altar.⁶ For R. Eleazar said: Whence do we deduce that he who slaughters a blemished animal on a private altar at a period when high places are used legitimately, is guilty of transgressing a negative precept? Scripture says: Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord thy God an ox or a sheep wherein is a blemish.⁷ If this text has no bearing on a national altar,⁸ since Scripture has already stated: Blind or broken, ye shall not offer these unto the Lord,⁹ apply it to a private altar. Why not say that if the text has no bearing on dedicated sacrifices, apply it to a firstling?¹⁰ For I might have been inclined to assume that since it is holy even when blemished, [the shearing and working being forbidden], it should therefore be offered up even if blemished. Therefore Scripture teaches us that it is not so! — I might argue against this that in connection with a firstling. Scripture expressly states: Lame or blind thou shalt not sacrifice it.¹¹ But why not say: If the above text has no bearing on dedicated sacrifices,¹² let us apply it to animal tithes?¹³ For I might have been inclined to assume that since a tithed animal is holy even blemished, as Scripture writes, He shall not inquire whether it be good or bad,¹⁴ therefore we should offer it up even blemished, and Scripture consequently informs us that this is not so? — [In connection with] a tithed animal, too, we draw an analogy between 'passing'¹⁵ and 'passing' used in connection with a firstling. But why not then say: Let us apply the text above to an animal exchanged for a dedicated sacrifice? For I might have been inclined to assume that since it is sacred, even if blemished, since Scripture writes: Neither shall he alter it or change it etc.¹⁶ Therefore it should be offered up even blemished; and consequently Scripture teaches us that it is not so! Scripture says: Then it and that for which it is changed, shall be holy.¹⁷ It thus compares the exchanged animal with the animal itself; as the animal itself is unfit [for the altar] if blemished, so the exchanged animal with a blemish is unfit [for the altar]. R. Zera demurred: Why not say, apply the text¹⁸ to the blemished offspring [born of unblemished sacrifices]?¹⁹ For I might have been inclined to assume they are holy even blemished. through their mother, therefore they may be offered up even blemished, and Scripture therefore informs us that it is not so? — Said Raba: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael has already pronounced on the matter.²⁰ For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Scripture says: Only thy holy things which thou hast and thy vows:²¹ 'Only thy holy things'; this refers to exchanged animals,²² 'which thou hast': these are the offspring of dedicated sacrifices; 'and thy vows': Scripture here compares them with an animal vowed for a sacrifice: as an animal vowed for a sacrifice is unfit for the altar with a blemish, so these too are unfit with a blemish.²³

THE LAW OF SUBSTITUTE DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM etc. What is the reason? Because Scripture Says: He shall not alter it nor change it, a good for a bad or a bad for a good.

Now, if a bad [i.e., a blemished consecrated animal] must not be exchanged for a good [an unblemished and unconsecrated animal], is it necessary to inform us concerning the prohibition of exchanging a good [an unblemished consecrated animal] for a bad [a blemished animal]? What is meant then is, that to an animal good [i.e., unblemished] from the start [before dedication] [but which became blemished afterwards] the law of substitute applies, but to one bad [i.e., blemished] from the start [before dedication] the law of substitute does not apply.

AND IF THEY DIED, THEY MAY BE REDEEMED. Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: This²⁴ is the teaching of R. Simeon who said: Objects consecrated for the altar were [at first] included [in the law of] presentation²⁵ and valuation, whereas objects consecrated for keeping the Temple in repair were not included in [the law of] presentation and valuation. For we have learnt: R. Simeon says: Objects consecrated for keeping the Temple in repair, if they die, are redeemed. R. Simeon agrees, however, that an animal blemished from the start [before dedication] may be redeemed.²⁶ What is the reason? Because Scripture says: And [the priest shall value] it;²⁷ the word 'it' excludes²⁸ the case of an animal with a blemish from the start [before dedication]. But the Sages say: If they die they are to be buried. Who are the Sages referred to here?²⁹ It is a Tanna of the School of Levi. For a Tanna of the School of Levi taught: All objects were [at first] included in [the law of] presentation and valuation, even an animal blemished from the start [before dedication]. And thus did the School of Levi teach in his Mishnah:³⁰ Even a beast and even a bird.³¹ But does not Scripture say, 'It'? — The word 'It', according to the opinion of the Tanna of the School of Levi, is a difficulty. But the Rabbis who differ from R. Simeon³² — what is the position? Is it a fact that they hold that if [the blemished dedicated animal] died, it is redeemed? If so,

- (1) Must we delay until the offspring are blemished and then we can proceed to redeem them or, can they be redeemed as they are, without waiting?
 - (2) I.e., we cannot be more stringent with the offspring than with the mother, seeing that the offspring is holy only in virtue of its mother. And as the mother can be redeemed at all times, the same rule should apply to its offspring, which solves the question.
 - (3) I.e., a ram which was dedicated for its value and which has the sanctity of an animal consecrated as such, insofar that it does not become hullin without a blemish appearing on it. The same ruling applies to a female animal, but as later on he wishes to support Raba's opinion and Raba mentions a male, he speaks here of a male.
 - (4) And for its money, a burnt-offering is purchased. The reason why Raba mentions a male animal is because the majority of people who bring a sacrifice offer up a burnt-offering, which is a male.
 - (5) I.e., he is liable to forty lashes.
 - (6) Lit., 'high place'. A temporary altar. Private altars were e.g., like those made by Manoah, Gideon and Samuel, in times when any individual could build an improvised altar for himself; v. Meg. 9b.
 - (7) Deut. XVII. 1.
 - (8) Lit., 'great high place'. As the high places of Nob and Gibeon, which were national and public ones.
 - (9) Lev. XXII, 22.
 - (10) Therefore there is no proof that the text, Thou shalt not sacrifice etc., refers to a private altar.
 - (11) Deut. XV, 21.
 - (12) Since this is already provided for in Lev. XXII, 22.
 - (13) The text, therefore, may still refer to a national altar and not to a private altar,
 - (14) Lev. XXVII, 33. 'Bad', i.e., blemished, and even so, if it is the tenth, it is holy.

- (15) Mentioned in regard to the tithing of animals, Even of whatsoever passeth and the text, Then thou shalt cause to pass (set apart), referring to a firstling.
- (16) Ibid. XXVII,10.
- (17) Ibid.
- (18) Quoted by R. Eleazar.
- (19) As unfit to be sacrificed on the altar.
- (20) That the instances mentioned above as unfit for the altar if blemished, are derived from another verse. Therefore there is no need to deduce them from the above text, Thou shalt not sacrifice.
- (21) Deut. XII, 26.
- (22) Which Scripture informs us are sacrificed on the altar.
- (23) Consequently, the verse 'Thou shalt not sacrifice' refers, as R. Eleazar explains, to a private altar.
- (24) The statement of the Tanna of the Mishnah, that if they died, they may be redeemed.
- (25) Before the priest of the object whose value is dedicated, as Scripture says: Then he shall present the beast before the priest. (Lev. XXVII, 11.)
- (26) For although objects consecrated for the altar require presentation and valuation, and therefore, cannot be redeemed when dead, in the case here of a sacrifice blemished from the start, he agrees that it can be redeemed when dead, although there can be no presentation and valuation here; for it is like an object consecrated for Temple repairs. which was not included in the law of presentation and valuation.
- (27) Lev. XXVII, 12.
- (28) From the requirements of presentation and valuation.
- (29) For they are not the same Sages who differ with R. Simeon in Tem. 32b.
- (30) Levi compiled a collection of teachings.
- (31) Whose value he dedicated for the keeping of the Temple in repair, as they are not suitable for the altar, require presentation and valuation.
- (32) The Rabbis who dispute with R. Simeon in Tem. 32b, holding that both objects consecrated for the altar and objects consecrated for Temple repairs are included in the law of presentation and valuation, though they agree that an animal blemished from the start may be redeemed after its death.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 15a

[in connection with Rab's observation above], what should be said is: This is the teaching of R. Simeon and those who dispute with him? — I can answer: Rab holds with R. Simeon the son of Lakish, who explained that according to the Rabbis [who differ with R. Simeon] objects dedicated for the keeping of the Temple in repair were [at first] included in [the law of] presentation and valuation, whereas objects dedicated for the altar were not included in [the law of] presentation and valuation. Therefore the Mishnah can not be explained [to agree completely] with the views of the Rabbis. For it states in the later clause: AND IF THEY DIED, THEY SHALL BE BURIED.¹ But whence can we prove that the reason [of the Mishnah] why they shall be buried is because they are subject to the law of presentation and valuation? Perhaps the reason is because we may not redeem dedicated sacrifices in order to give food to dogs?² — We can answer: If this is so, then, let the [Mishnah] state: If they become trefah,³ they shall be buried.⁴ Or if you choose [another solution]. I can say that Rab in fact holds with R. Johanan,⁵ and read [in the passage above]. This is the teaching both of R. Simeon and of those who dispute with him.

BUT IF THEIR DEDICATION PRECEDED etc. Whence is this proved? — Our Rabbis have taught: [Scripture says]: Howbeit as the gazelle⁶ [and as a hart]; as a gazelle is exempt from [the law of] the firstling,⁷ so dedicated sacrifices which have become unfit for the altar are also exempt from [the law of] the firstling. I would then exclude the firstling and not the priestly gifts! The text [therefore] states, 'A hart'; as a hart is exempt from [the law of] a firstling and from [the duty of priestly] gifts, so blemished dedicated sacrifices are exempt from the law of the firstling and of [the priestly] gifts. Am I to say that just as the fat of the gazelle and a hart is permitted to be used, so the fat of [blemished dedicated sacrifices] is also permitted to be used? [For this reason] the text states 'ak' ['howbeit'], which intimates a distinction.⁸

The Master said: 'I would then exclude the firstling but not [the priestly] gifts'! Now, what is the difference?⁹ — I exclude the firstling, because its law does not equally apply in all cases, whereas I do not exclude [the priestly] gifts, as their law applies equally in all cases.¹⁰ Hence Scripture states 'A hart'. Said R. Papa to Abaye: Why not [say that] just as the law concerning the killing of the young¹¹ with its mother on the same day does not apply to a gazelle and a hart so the law concerning the killing of the mother on the same day does not apply to dedicated sacrifices which have become unfit for the altar? — He replied to him: With what will you compare [blemished dedicated sacrifices, to render them exempt from the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother on the same day]? If you compare them with unconsecrated animals, then the law concerning the killing of the young with its mother on the same day should apply to them! And if you compare them with dedicated sacrifices, here [also] the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother on the same day should apply to them.¹² — He replied to him: If so, then in regard to the fat [of blemished dedicated animals], why not say likewise, as follows: With what will you compare them? If with unconsecrated animals, their fat is forbidden, and if with dedicated sacrifices, their fat is forbidden? — But¹³ did you not say that the [word] 'ak' implies 'but not their fat'?¹⁴ Then similarly adduce the word 'ak' as implying, 'but the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother on the same day, is not [included in the analogy]'. Raba said: The word 'ak' serves [to exclude from the analogy] the law concerning the killing of the young with its mother on the same day, while as regards the fat of blemished dedicated sacrifices, we derive [the prohibition] from the words 'the blood thereof', for it is written: 'Only thou shalt not eat the blood thereof'.¹⁵ What do the words 'The blood thereof' mean? You can hardly say that it actually means 'the blood thereof'. For granting that it is only as the blood of the gazelle and a hart — is then the blood of a gazelle and a hart permitted? The words 'The blood thereof' then refer to its fat. And why does not Scripture expressly write 'Its fat'? — If the Divine Law had written the word 'fat', I might have assumed that both the analogy and the scriptural verse helped [to define the nature of the prohibition of the fat]. The analogy [between the word 'fat' and the words 'as a gazelle and a hart'], helped to exclude it from [the punishment of] excision, for Scripture imposes the punishment of excision only on one who eats the fat of an animal, as it says: For whosoever eateth the fat of the animal.¹⁶ And the scriptural verse also helped to make [the eating of the fat of blemished sacrifices equivalent to the breaking of] a mere prohibition. Therefore the Divine Law used the expression 'the blood thereof', to teach you that as the eating of its blood is punishable with excision, so the eating of its fat is punishable with excision.

But does not the Tanna [above in the Baraita] say that the word 'ak' implies 'but not its fat'?¹⁷ — This is what [the Tanna] intends to say: If there were not a text 'The blood thereof'. I might have said that [the word] 'ak' implies 'but not its fat'. Now, however, that Scripture says

‘The blood thereof’, the word ‘ak’ serves [to exclude from the analogy] the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother [on the same day].

AND THEY DO NOT BECOME UNCONSECRATED. Whence is this derived — Our Rabbis taught. Scripture says: Notwithstanding thou mayest kill,¹⁸ implying, but not shear. [The text continues further], ‘flesh’, implying. ‘but not milk’. ‘And eat’, implying, ‘but not for dogs’. Hence we infer that we do not redeem dedicated sacrifices to give food to the dogs.

- (1) From which we may infer that objects consecrated for the altar are included in the law of presentation and valuation, whereas the Rabbis hold the reverse view, according to the interpretation of R. Simeon b. Lakish.
 - (2) And not because the Mishnah holds that objects dedicated for the altar are included in the law of presentation and valuation.
 - (3) V. Glos.
 - (4) From which I could infer that, although it was possible to make presentation and valuation here, nevertheless since they were only fit for dogs, they must be buried. But since the Mishnah states, ‘IF THEY DIED etc.’, I deduce that the reason is because presentation and valuation cannot be carried out.
 - (5) Who says in Tem. 32b that according to the Rabbis, both objects dedicated for the altar and objects dedicated for keeping the Temple in repair were included in the law of presentation and valuation, and that an animal blemished from the start may be redeemed.
 - (6) Deut. XII, 22. And Scripture is dealing here with dedicated sacrifices which received their blemish after dedication, as the text says: The unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike, and they still retain some measure of holiness.
 - (7) For Scripture says: All the firstling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify. (Deut. XV, 19.)
 - (8) I.e., it warns us that the analogy is not complete and therefore the fat is forbidden.
 - (9) Deriving the limitation of a firstling from the first text, and requiring another text to exclude the priestly gifts.
 - (10) For the law of the firstling only applies to a male, whereas the duty of the priestly gifts applies to females as well.
 - (11) Lev XXII, 28.
 - (12) v. Hul. 78a.
 - (13) [This appears to be Abaye's reply].
 - (14) V. supra n. 1.
 - (15) Deut. XV, 23. The verse deals here with the case of a firstling with a blemish.
 - (16) Lev. VII, 25. It is also understandable that excision should be incurred only for eating the fat of an animal, as it is suitable for sacrifice on the altar.
 - (17) I.e., it excludes its fat from the analogy. How can Rab, therefore, maintain that the text ‘ak’ excludes from the analogy the law of killing the young with its mother on the same day, seeing that the Baraitha above says that ‘ak’ excludes the eating of the fat?
 - (18) Deut. XII, 15.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 15b

Some there are who say: ‘Thou mayest kill and eat’: The permission of eating of blemished dedicated sacrifices is only from the time of their killing and thenceforward.¹ We may, however, redeem dedicated sacrifices to give food to dogs.²

THEIR OFFSPRING AND THEIR MILK ARE FORBIDDEN AFTER THEIR REDEMPTION. How is this to be understood? Shall I say that they became pregnant and gave birth after their redemption? Why [in that case should they be forbidden]? [The offspring] are [as] the gazelle and a hart!³ Rather what is meant is that they became pregnant before their redemption and give birth after their redemption. But if [they were born] before their redemption, they would indeed become holy. Whence is this proved? For our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says]: ‘Whether male’:⁴ this includes the offspring [of a peace-offering].⁵ [It goes on] ‘or a female’; this includes an animal [exchanged for a peace-offering].⁶ Now I can only infer from these unblemished offspring and unblemished exchanged animals. Whence, however, can I derive blemished offspring⁷ and blemished exchanged animals? When Scripture says: ‘Whether a male’, it includes even blemished offspring and the text ‘or a female’, includes an exchanged blemished animal. Those young [which were In embryo before their redemption] and were born after their redemption — what shall become of them? Concerning those born before their redemption there is a difference of opinion. There is one authority who says they are so far holy as to be offered up, and there is another authority who says they are only so far holy as to be left to graze.⁸ But what is to be done with [the offspring] born after their redemption. — Said R. Huna: We put them in a vault and they die [of hunger]. For what are we to do? Shall we offer them up on the altar? They derive their status from a holiness which has been cancelled.⁹ Shall we redeem them? They are not qualified to receive redemption.¹⁰ In the West [Palestine] it was stated in the name of R. Hanina: Before their redemption he consecrates them for that particular sacrifice.¹¹ ‘Before their redemption’? Does this mean to say that they are capable of redemption? Explain rather [as follows]: Before the redemption of their mother,¹² he consecrated them for that particular sacrifice. And what is the reason?¹³ — Said R. Levi: It is a preventive measure, lest he should rear of them flocks.¹⁴ Rabina asked of R. Shesheth: May he consecrate [the offspring]¹⁵ for any sacrifice that he chose? — He replied: He may not consecrate them, [except for the particular sacrifice of the mother]. What is the reason? — He said to him: There is an analogy between the words ‘within thy gates’¹⁶ [used in connection with blemished dedicated sacrifices] and the words ‘within thy gates’¹⁷ [used in connection with the firstling]: just as a firstling does not become consecrated after birth for any sacrifice which he chooses, because Scripture writes: Howbeit the firstling among the beasts which is born a firstling to the Lord, no man shall sanctify it,¹⁸ so these young ones do not become consecrated for any sacrifice he chooses. It has been taught in accordance with the opinion of R. Shesheth: Dedicated sacrifices which became permanently blemished before their dedication and were redeemed are subject to the law of the firstling and of the [priestly] gifts; whether before their redemption or after their redemption. one who shears them and works with them does not receive forty lashes; whether before their redemption or after their redemption, the law of substitute does not apply to them; before their redemption. the law of Sacrilege¹⁹ applies to them, but after their redemption it does not; their offspring are unconsecrated [even if in embryo before redemption and born after redemption]; they are redeemed unblemished²⁰ and become consecrated for any sacrifice he chooses. The general rule in this matter is: They are like unconsecrated animals in all particulars. The only religious duty which applies to them is that of valuing them [for redemption].²¹ But if their dedication preceded their blemish, or if a transitory blemish [preceded] their dedication and after that there appeared on them a permanent blemish, and they were redeemed, they are exempt from the law of the firstling and from the [priestly] gifts; whether before their redemption or after their redemption, one who shears and works them receives forty lashes; whether before their redemption or after their redemption, the law of substitute applies to them; before their redemption. Sacrilege applies to them, but not after their redemption;²² their offspring are holy [if in embryo before redemption]; they are not redeemed unblemished; and they do not become consecrated for any sacrifice that he chooses.²³ The general rule in the matter is that they are like consecrated animals in all particulars. You have only the permission to eat them. Now the general rule of the first part [of the Baraitha above] is stated in order to include the rule that one who slaughters them without [the Temple Court] is exempt [from the punishment of excision]. The general rule of the second part [of the Baraitha]

(1) This excludes milking and shearing, and is deduced from the proximity of the texts referring to killing and eating. The word 'flesh' is on this view not expounded.

(2) As there is no special text to prohibit this.

(3) I.e. they are hullin (unconsecrated animals).

(4) Lev. III, 1, with reference to peace-offerings. The whole verse is superfluous, for unless it expressly stated that a peace-offering must be a male, as is the case with a burnt-offering. I should have known that there was no restriction as regards the sex of the animal.

(5) That it is offered as a peace-offering.

(6) V. n. 6.

(7) Whose dedication preceded their blemish.

(8) Until they become blemished. Then they are sold and their money is devoted for a freewill-offering. The reason for delaying until a blemish appears is because unblemished animals are not redeemed.

(9) The offspring possess two disqualifications. First, they are born from a mother which though once fit for the altar, has now lost its sanctity, owing to its blemish. Secondly, since the offspring were born after the mother's redemption, they cannot be invested with any sanctity so as to be sacrificed on the altar.

(10) For since they are redeemed through their mother, they retain no sanctity to enable redemption to render them hullin.

(11) That of the mother, and this holiness helps to make them capable of redemption.

(12) While she was still pregnant and before their birth, the offspring received the holiness of their mother's dedication, and in this way redemption, after a blemish appears on them, is required, as their mother's redemption did not cancel their sanctity.

(13) Of. R. Huna above, that they are condemned to die. Why not devise a method of redemption as R. Hanina suggests.

(14) If there were a remedy for the offspring of blemished dedicated offerings, we might raise flocks of these blemished animals, delay the redemption of their mothers, and even be led to eat them without the required redemption. Another explanation (quoted by Rashi) is: What is the reason of the authority who says that we condemn the offspring to die, and also, what is the reason of the other authority who maintains that we consecrate them for a sacrifice? Why did the Rabbis trouble in the matter at all? Could not the offspring be left in their forbidden state? The answer is that we fear lest one might raise flocks, that these offspring will in turn give birth to others and we might be led to commit an offence, whereas after redemption, we do not entertain any fears, as the offspring then are hullin. Still another explanation (quoted by Rashi) is: Why does the Mishnah say that the offspring are forbidden after redemption, seeing that their mother's holiness has been cancelled? And the reply given is because, if we permit the offspring to be used, we might raise flocks of blemished dedicated sacrifices for the sake of the offspring born after redemption and, thus might be led to transgress the law concerning shearing and working.

(15) Of blemished dedicated sacrifices.

(16) Deut. XII, 21.

(17) Ibid. XV, 22.

(18) Lev. XXVII, 26. The text continuing, No man shall sanctify it, indicates that no other holiness except that of a firstling attaches to it.

(19) To make an inappropriate use of a sacred object is Sacrilege (v. Lev. X, 15) and since he benefits therefrom, it is no worse a case than using an object dedicated to the keeping of the Temple in repair.

(20) If they were pregnant and gave birth before their redemption.

(21) The only restrictive enactment is that of redeeming the animal with money.

(22) For they are compared with 'a gazelle and a hart', but the shearing of them is forbidden.

(23) Which is the view of R. Shesheth.

is adduced to include its milk.¹

The Master said: They are not redeemed unblemished and they do not become consecrated for any sacrifice he chooses. The unblemished are not redeemed; we infer from this that the blemished² are redeemed. Also for any sacrifice he chooses they are not consecrated; we infer from this that for that particular sacrifice they are consecrated. Now what do we find here? That they are consecrated for that particular sacrifice and are redeemed when blemished. Shall we say that this confutes R. Huna?³ — R. Huna can answer thus: The rule really is that blemished animals also are not redeemed, but, since the first part [of the Baraitha] states: 'They are redeemed unblemished',⁴ therefore the second part [of the Baraitha] also states: 'they are not redeemed unblemished'. And also, since it states in the first part [of the Baraitha]: For any sacrifice he chooses, the second part [in the Baraitha] also states: For any sacrifice he chooses. 'And he who slaughters them without [the Temple Court] is not culpable'.⁵ R. Huna read [as in the Mishnah]:⁶ He is culpable, and he explains it, of a case where the blemished animal had a withered spot in the eye, [a cataract] and in accordance with the opinion of R. Akiba, who maintains: If they have been put on the altar, they must not be taken down again.⁷

'Both before its redemption and after its redemption, the law of substitute applies'. R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabba the son of Abbuha: And the exchanged animal after its redemption is left to die. What is the reason? — How are we to do? Shall we offer it up? The animal exchanged derives its status from cancelled holiness.⁸ Shall we redeem it? It is not qualified to receive redemption; therefore we leave it to die. R. Amram demurred. And why should the exchanged animal not be eaten by the owners when blemished? In what way is this different from an animal exchanged for a firstling and a tithed animal? For we have learnt: Animals exchanged for a firstling and a tithed animal, and also their offspring and their offspring's offspring until the end of time are like a firstling and a tithed animal and are eaten by their owners when blemished!⁹ Said Abaye to him: In this case it bears the name of its mother, and, in the other case, it bears the name of its mother. In this case it bears the name of its mother,¹⁰ for it is called the animal substituted for a firstling and a tithed animal; and, therefore, as a firstling and a tithed animal are eaten by their owners when blemished, so the exchanged animal is eaten under similar circumstances. And in the other case, it bears the name of its mother. It is called the animal exchanged for the dedicated sacrifice; and, as a dedicated sacrifice which became blemished may not be eaten unless redeemed, so also an animal exchanged for a dedicated sacrifice is not eaten unless redeemed. But in this present case, it is not qualified to receive redemption and, therefore, [it is left to die]. It has been taught in accordance with the opinion of R. Nahman: Whence do we derive that an animal exchanged for a blemished dedicated sacrifice is left to die? Because it says: ‘nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud, he is unclean to you’.¹¹ But is this text not required to teach that there are five sin-offerings that are left to die?¹² — The latter teaching we learn from [the continuation of the text]: ‘Of them that divide the hoof, he is unclean to you’. It has also been taught to the same effect: Whence do we derive that the five sin-offerings are left to die? Because it says: ‘All of them that divide the hoof, he is unclean’. But is not the rule of the five sin-offerings that are left to die learnt purely from tradition? — Rather the text comes to teach us concerning the animal exchanged for a guilt-offering that it pastures [until blemished]. But is not the rule of a guilt-offering also learnt purely from tradition, for wherever a sin-offering is left to die, in a corresponding case, a guilt-offering pastures?¹³ — The fact is that the text still refers to the rule of the five sin-offerings left to die, and both the text and the traditional law are necessary. For had I the text alone, I might have said that they are condemned to pasture. Therefore, the traditional law teaches us that they are to die. And had I the traditional law alone I might have said that if by chance he ate of these five sin-offerings, he performed a forbidden action, but he did not transgress a negative precept. Therefore a scriptural text teaches us that he transgresses a negative precept, [ye shall not eat]. Or if you wish, I may say that it is in order to compare an object the rule of which is derived from the text of them that chew the cud, with an object the rule of which is derived from the text of them that divide the hoof, so as to teach that, just as there, they are condemned to die, so here also they are condemned to die.¹⁴

- (1) As forbidden to be used, as the text says, And eat, implying, ‘but not milk’. There is no need to make the general rule of the first part of the Baraitha include milk as permissible, for since the offspring are permitted, all the more so is the milk. Again, the general rule in the second part of the Baraitha could not include the case of one who slaughters without the Temple Court as punishable with excision, for here, too, he may be exempt, for since the sacrifice cannot be offered up in the Temple, there is no prohibition of killing them outside the Temple Court.
- (2) Those in embryo before redemption and born after redemption and consecrated for a sacrifice, i.e., for the particular sacrifice of the mother.
- (3) For R. Huna holds that they are not subject to redemption at all and that they are condemned to die whereas from the Baraitha we deduce that they are subject to redemption and are consecrated for a particular sacrifice.
- (4) Which is an anomaly, that an unblemished animal should be redeemed.
- (5) Where the dedication preceded the blemish. This is the continuation of the latter part of the Baraitha above. V. Rashi and R. Gershom.
- (6) So (Rashi), v. Sh. Mek.
- (7) An animal with a cataract, if offered up in the Temple, is not disqualified as a sacrifice according to the view of R. Akiba, because, in the first place, a cataract is not considered a blemish in birds and, moreover, it is not a blemish of a prominent nature. But an animal with a prominent and permanent blemish, since it is invalid as a sacrifice in the Temple, is not forbidden to be slaughtered outside the Temple precincts.
- (8) Of the blemished animal for which it was exchanged, the exchange having taken place after redemption.
- (9) Tem. 21a.

(10) The expression 'its mother' used in this connection means, in virtue of the animal from which it derives its status. The expression also 'eaten by their owners' mentioned in connection with the firstling, means that if blemished it is eaten by the priests, whereas in connection with a tithed animal, 'the owners' refers to the Israelites.

(11) Lev. XI, 4. And we infer this that there is an animal possessing marks of cleanness and yet forbidden to be eaten, viz., an animal exchanged for a blemished sacrifice.

(12) V. Tem. 21b.

(13) V. Nazir 25b.

(14) There is no need for a scriptural text, for the rule of the five sin-offerings is a traditional law. The reason, however, why the Baraita refers it to the text 'of them that divide the hoof' is because it wishes to draw an analogy between the animal exchanged for a blemished sacrifice after redemption, which is inferred from the text 'of them that chew the cud' and the rule of the five sin-offerings, inferring that just as the latter are condemned to die, so the former is condemned to die, thus confirming the view of R. Nahman.

(15) Lit., 'flock of iron'. The terms are that the flock or their equivalent value should be restored to the heathen owner at the end of a stipulated period and that meanwhile the owner shares the offspring. The interests of the owner are consequently well protected against loss and the security is like barzel (iron). V. B.M.. Sonc. ed., p. 405. n. 3.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 16b

THEIR OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT [FROM THE LAW OF] THE FIRSTLING.¹ BUT THE OFFSPRING OF THEIR OFFSPRING ARE LIABLE [TO THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING].² IF [THE ISRAELITE] PUT THE OFFSPRING IN THE PLACE OF THEIR MOTHERS,³ THEN THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT,⁴ BUT THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING ARE LIABLE [TO THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING]. RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: EVEN UNTO TEN GENERATIONS THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT [FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING]. SINCE THEY ARE PLEDGED TO THE HEATHEN.⁵ IF A EWE GAVE BIRTH TO WHAT LOOKED LIKE A KID, OR A KID WHICH GAVE BIRTH TO WHAT LOOKED LIKE A EWE, IT IS EXEMPT FROM [THE LAW OF] THE FIRSTLING BUT IF IT POSSESSES CERTAIN CLEAR MARKS [RESEMBLING THE MOTHER] IT IS LIABLE [TO THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING].

GEMARA. Does this mean to say that since the owner does not take money, therefore it is still the property of the owner? Against this I quote: One must not receive a flock from an Israelite on 'iron terms', because It is usury. This shows that it is in the ownership of the receiver?⁶ — Said Abaye: This is no difficulty. In the one case [our Mishnah] he [the heathen owner] took the risks of accidents and a fall in value while in the other he [the owner] did not take the risks of accidents and a fall in value. Raba said to him: If he took the risks of accidents and a fall in value, do you call this receiving a flock on 'iron terms',⁷ and, moreover, where is this distinction implied [in the context]? And, moreover, why does the second part [of the passage quoted above] state: 'One may receive from a heathen a flock on "iron terms"'? Why not draw a distinction in the first part [itself, as follows]: When does this apply? Where he [the owner] did not undertake the risks of accidents and a fall in value, but where he undertook the risks of accidents and a fall in value, it is permitted! — Rather said Raba, In both cases he [the owner] did not take the risks of accidents and a fall in value. But here, in connection with the firstling,⁸ this is the reason. If the heathen came and wanted money and the Israelite did not give it to him, he would seize the animal, and if he did not find the animal, he would seize its offspring. Therefore the heathen has a share in it,⁹ and wherever the heathen has a share [in an animal], it is exempt from [the law of] the firstling.

(IF THE ISRAELITE PUT THE OFFSPRING IN THE PLACE OF THEIR MOTHERS, THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT:)¹⁰ Said R. Huna:¹¹ Their offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling, but the offspring of the offspring are liable to the law of the firstling. Rab Judah, however, said: The offspring of the offspring are also exempt, but the offspring of the offspring of the offspring are liable [to the law of the firstling]. We have learnt in a Mishnah: IF THE ISRAELITE PUT THE OFFSPRING IN THE PLACE OF THEIR MOTHERS, THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT.¹² The reason for exemption is because he put them in place of their mothers. But if he did not do so, they would not be exempt. Now, is this not an argument against Rab Judah? — Rab Judah can answer: The same applies even if he did not put the offspring [in the place of the mothers];¹³ but the Mishnah, however, teaches us this, that even if he put [the offspring in the place of their mothers],¹⁴ since it is the custom of the heathen to seize the offspring [failing the mother], it is as if he had not put the offspring [in place of their mothers].¹⁵ We are therefore informed [that even so] the offspring of the offspring are exempt, but the offspring of the offspring of the offspring are liable [to the law of the firstling].

We have learnt in the Mishnah: RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: EVEN UNTO TEN GENERATIONS THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT, SINCE THEY ARE PLEDGED TO THE HEATHEN.¹⁶ Now there is no difficulty on the view of Rab Judah who said that the first Tanna [in the Mishnah] goes up to [two] generations,

(1) For, in the first place, a half of the offspring belongs to the heathen and secondly the latter will seize the offspring if he cannot have the flock (v. infra). The heathen therefore having an interest in the offspring, the Israelite is legally exempt from the law of the firstling.

(2) For the heathen will not go as far as to seize the third generation in place of the mother.

(3) The Israelite has expressly stipulated that if the flock died, the heathen could have the offspring.

(4) Since the owner has a hold on the succeeding generation of animals.

(5) For every time the heathen would lay hands on whatever he found.

(6) And therefore it is as if the giver in return for waiting for his money receives a share of the offspring, which is usury, whereas if the money remained in the possession of the giver, it would not be usury.

(7) For then there would be no security like 'iron' for the giver of the animal.

(8) The reason is not because it is in the possession of the heathen, but because it is a pledge with the Israelite.

(9) Lit., 'the hand (finger) of the heathen is between'.

(10) [The bracketed passage is best left out. V. Marginal Gloss Z.K.].

(11) Referring to the first passage in the Mishnah.

(12) [No objection is raised from the first clause of our Mishnah, as the phrase 'OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING' there may be of a more general connotation meaning simply that with certain later generations the liability begins. V. Sh. Mek. and p. 115. n. 1.]

(13) That the second generation of offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling.

(14) And thus mortgaged the first generation for the heathen, so that the latter ought not to have any further claim on successive generations of offspring.

(15) And therefore I might have said that successive generations of offspring should always be exempted.

(16) It is assumed that R. Simeon b. Gamaliel refers to the first clause.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 17a

[of offspring in exempting] that is why Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said to him: EVEN UNTO TEN GENERATIONS THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT.¹ But according to R. Huna who said that the first Tanna does not go up to [two] generations [of offspring in exempting], what does Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel mean by 'unto ten generations'?² R. Huna can reply: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel refers to [the second clause] where the Israelite put [the offspring in the place of their mothers], and where the Tanna In question goes up to [two] generations [of offspring].³

Come and hear: If one received a flock from a heathen on 'iron terms', their offspring are exempt. but the offspring of the offspring are liable [to the law of the firstling].⁴ Now, is this not an argument against R. Judah? — R. Judah can reply: Read: They and their offspring.⁵ Some there are who say: 'They and their offspring are exempt'. Now is this not an argument against R. Huna? — R. Huna can reply: Read: They,⁶ the offspring, are exempt, whereas the offspring of the offspring are liable to the law of the firstling.

IF A EWE GAVE BIRTH TO WHAT LOOKED LIKE A GOAT etc. R. Oshaia of Nehardea⁷ came bringing a Baraitha with him: A ewe born of a goat or a goat born of a ewe, is declared liable by R. Meir, whereas the Sages exempt it. Said R. Oshaia to Rabbah: When you go up into the presence of R. Huna, inquire from him: R. Meir makes it liable for what? Shall I say for [the law of] the firstling? Does not R. Meir hold that [when Scripture says]: But the firstling of an ox,⁸ it intimates that the law of the firstling does not apply until the sire is an ox and its firstling is an ox? [Shall I say] then, he means liable to the rule of [giving] the first shorn wool to the priest? [Hardly so], for does he not hold with the Tanna of the School of Ishmael who taught: Lambs whose wool is hard, are exempt from the rule of the first shorn wool, for it says: And if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep?⁹ He replied to him: Let us see, we are dealing here with a case where a ewe gave birth to what looked like a goat and its sire was a he-goat¹⁰ and the difference of opinion is whether we take into consideration the nature¹¹ of the sire in connection with the prohibition of killing the mother with its young on the same day.¹² For R. Meir holds that we take into consideration the nature of the sire, whereas the Rabbis hold that we do not take into consideration the nature of the sire.¹³ If so, let them also differ as to whether we take into consideration the nature of the sire in other cases, as in the dispute between Hanania and the Rabbis?¹⁴ Rather, the reference is indeed to the law of the firstling, and what we are dealing here with is the case of a ewe born of a ewe which, in turn, was born of a goat. One authority [R. Meir] maintains that we follow the mother and this is not a nidmeh,¹⁵ while the other authority maintains that we follow the mother's mother, and therefore this is a nidmeh. Or if you prefer I may say: It is a case of a ewe born of a goat which, in turn, was born of a ewe. One authority maintains that the sheep goes back to its former status¹⁶ whereas the other authority maintains that the sheep does not go back to its former status. R. Ahi said: We suppose it possesses certain marks [resembling the mother].¹⁷ And who are the Sages [who exempt]? — R. Simeon, who holds [that the law of the firstling does not apply] until its head and the greater part of the body resemble its mother. Said R. Johanan: R. Meir agrees however¹⁸ that in the case of the goat for

MISHNAH. ALL [PERSONS] ARE FIT TO EVALUATE OR TO BE MADE THE SUBJECTS OF VALUATION,¹ ARE FIT TO VOW² [ANOTHER'S WORTH] OR HAVE THEIR WORTH VOWED: — PRIESTS, LEVITES AND [ORDINARY] ISRAELITES, WOMEN AND SLAVES. PERSONS OF UNKNOWN³ SEX AND HERMAPHRODITES ARE FIT TO VOW [ANOTHER'S WORTH], OR TO HAVE THEIR WORTH VOWED, AND ARE FIT TO EVALUATE, BUT THEY ARE NOT FIT TO BE MADE THE SUBJECTS OF VALUATION, FOR THE SUBJECT OF VALUATION MAY BE ONLY A PERSON DEFINITELY EITHER MALE OR FEMALE.⁴ A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE, OR A MINOR⁵ ARE FIT TO HAVE THEIR WORTH VOWED OR BE MADE THE SUBJECT OF VALUATION, BUT THEY ARE NOT FIT TO MAKE EITHER A VOW [OF ANOTHER'S WORTH] OR TO EVALUATE, BECAUSE THEY HAVE NO MIND.

GEMARA. What does ALL [PERSONS] ARE FIT TO EVALUATE mean to include? — It is meant to include one close to manhood who must be examined.⁶ What does [ALL⁷ ARE] FIT TO BE MADE THE SUBJECTS OF VALUATION mean to include? — It is meant to include a person disfigured, or one afflicted with boils.⁸ For one might have assumed that since Scripture says: A vow according to thy valuation,⁹ that only such persons as are fit to be made the subjects of a vow [as regards their worth], are fit to be made subjects of a valuation, and that persons who are unfit to be made subjects of a vow [as regards their worth], are also unfit to be made subjects of a valuation, hence Scripture informs us: of persons.⁹ i.e., no matter who they be. What does [ALL PERSONS] ARE FIT TO VOW mean to include? — [The phrase ALL] is needed only for [the clause] 'are fit to have their worth vowed' — What is to be included [in the phrase ALL] ARE FIT TO HAVE THEIR WORTH VOWED? Is it to include persons of unknown sex or hermaphrodites — but they are expressly stated [in our Mishnah]! Again is it to include a deaf-mute, an imbecile and a minor — they too are expressly stated! And if it is to include a person below the age of one month — that too is expressly mentioned!¹⁰ And again if it is to include an idolater — he too is expressly mentioned!¹¹ — In reality it is meant to include a person below the age of one month; and the Mishnah states it [by implication] and later on expressly mentions it.¹²

What does 'All persons are obliged to lay on hands' mean to include?¹³ — It is meant to include the heir, and this against the view of R. Judah.¹⁴ What does 'All persons can effect a substitute'¹⁵ mean to include? — That, too, means to include the heir, in contrast to the view of R. Judah. For it was taught: An heir must lay on hands, an heir can effect a substitute. R. Judah says: An heir does not lay on hands, and an heir cannot effect a substitute. What is the reason of R. Judah's view? — [Scripture says:] His offering,¹⁶ i.e., but not his father's offering. And he infers the rule concerning the commencement of the dedication of the animal from the rule governing its end. Just as at the end of the dedication the heir does not lay on hands, thus also at the beginning¹⁷ he cannot effect a substitute. And the Rabbis? — [Scripture says redundantly:] And if he shall at all change — that included the heir. And we infer the rule concerning the end of the dedication from the rule governing the commencement of the dedication. Just as at the beginning of the dedication the heir has power to effect a substitute, so at the end is he obliged to lay his hands on the animal's head.¹⁸ But what do the Rabbis do with 'his offering'? [They interpret:] 'his offering', but not the offering of an idolater; 'his offering', but not the offering of his neighbour; 'his offering. i.e., to include all who have a share¹⁹ in the ownership of a sacrifice in the duty to lay on hands. And R. Judah?²⁰ — He does not hold that all who have a share in the ownership share the obligation of laying hands thereon; or, indeed, if he should hold so

(1) Lev. XXVII, 1f fixes the value of the person dedicated to the sanctuary, this value depending only on the age of the person dedicated. Hence, if someone uses the formula: Erek peloni 'alay. i.e., the valuation of So-and-so be upon me (to pay to the sanctuary). he must make payment in accord with the valuation fixed in Lev. XXVII, independent of the person's physical or mental condition. Thus e.g., the valuation fixed there for a man of the age of between twenty and sixty, is fifty shekels.

(2) But if he said: Deme peloni 'alay, i.e., the equivalent of the market value of So-and-so be upon me (to pay to the sanctuary), he has made a vow and he must pay the amount which that person would fetch, if sold on the slave market. In this case the deciding factor would be not age, but physical and mental condition.

(3) Tumtum; lit., 'one hidden, stopped up'. i.e., a person whose genitalia are covered by a skin, hence one of unknown sex.

(4) Scripture refers (ibid.) to 'male' and 'female', but persons whose sex cannot be determined are excluded from the valuation.

(5) A boy under the age of thirteen, a girl under the age of twelve years.

(6) Mufla' from the root meaning, to make clear, to examine, hence 'one to be examined' as to the purpose for which he made the valuation. Above the age of thirteen such knowledge is taken for granted. Below the age of twelve it is assumed to be absent. During the period from twelve to thirteen the boy is to be subject to questioning. If the examination establishes his knowledge of the purpose of the dedication, his dedication is considered valid, and renders payment obligatory. Otherwise no significance is to be attached during that period to his utterance of the formula: Erek peloni 'alay.

(7) The first word of the Mishnah ALL is assumed to apply to the four cases enumerated. This word does not seem necessary, the Mishnah might have stated e.g., Priests, Levites and Israelites are fit etc. The additional ALL hence is assumed by the questioner to have implied the inclusion of persons whom, without this inclusion, one might have excluded. Hence the series of questions establishing the identity of the persons included in each case. This discussion leads to the consideration of other passages throughout the Mishnah, in which the word 'all' occurs, and to an explanation of who is included in each statement.

(8) Lev. XXVII, 2.

(9) A person disfigured, or afflicted with boils would fetch no price at all on the market place. In the expression A vow according to thy valuation, one might have inferred from this juxtaposition, that a certain fundamental agreement prevailed between cases of vow (of one's worth) and of valuation, and that therefore a person unfit to have his worth vowed (because a vow was redeemable by payment of the market value, which did not exist in the case of a disfigured person) would be unfit to be made the subject of a valuation. But this inference is cancelled by another Biblical phrase, which indicates that what is required is but 'persons', independent of their physical condition: When a man shall clearly utter a vow of persons (ibid.).

(10) V. infra 5a.

(11) Ibid. 5b.

(12) By the redundant ALL, which obviously includes some person or persons, which but for this all-inclusive term, would have been excluded. The particular reason why this case rather than any other of the four here dealt with is included here Rashi finds in the fact that it is the only one concerning which a controversy exists (infra 5a), whence the statement here by implication is of importance in teaching that even the Rabbis who hold that one who is less than a month cannot be subject to evaluation, nevertheless agree that he can have his worth vowed.

(13) The Gemara proceeds now to discuss all other cases in which a redundant 'all' is to convey some inclusion in the principle of other persons. The laying on of the hands on the head of the animal to be sacrificed conveyed the sense of ownership. It was a duty, hence a question arises in the case of several partners, or in the case of proxy.

(14) R. Judah denied this obligation to an heir. Lev. I, 3 reads: If his be a burnt-offering . . . he shall lay his hand upon the head. This, R. Judah argues, expressly limits the duty of laying the hand to the man who offered it, not to his heir, who is freed from his obligation.

(15) Lev. XXVII, 10: He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good; and If he shall at all change beast for beast, then both it and that for which it is changed shall be holy. The dispute concerns only the case of an heir in respect of an offering dedicated by his father but all agree that an exchange made by anyone besides the original owner of the sacrifice would have no effect at all, the first animal remaining sacred, the second not being affected by the unauthorized attempt at exchange.

(16) Lev. III, 2, 7 and 13 in connection with the laying on of hands in the case of peace-offerings. V. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.

(17) First an animal is separated for the purpose of being offered on the altar. That is the commencement of its sanctification. At the end, just before the slaying of the animal, the owner lays his hand on its head. R. Judah infers from the regulations at the end, viz., the prohibition for anyone but the owner to lay hands on the head, the inefficacy of the change at the beginning, i.e., his intended exchange has no effect on the animal he wanted to substitute.

(18) The Sages infer from the redundant 'shall at all change' that even another may effect the substitute and argue from the beginning of the sanctification to the end, hence permit an heir to lay hands on the animal.

(19) The phrase 'his offering' occurs three times in Lev. III, viz., vv. 2, 7 and 13, and while two of these expressions have a limiting sense, one has an inclusive meaning, just as 'his' implies ownership, so must anyone who has a claim to ownership lay his hands on the animal's head. Therefore, every member of a group who offer the animal together must perform the laying on of hands.

(20) Since R. Judah would interpret 'his offering' in each case in an exclusive sense, how could he derive the obligation of the laying on of hands on the part of anyone who shares in it—for which an inclusive interpretation is necessary?

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 2b

he would infer [the exclusion of] idolater and neighbour from one passage,¹ so that two more would remain redundant, from one of which he would infer that 'his offering' means 'but not that of his father', and from the other that all who have a share in the ownership of a sacrifice are obliged to perform the laying on of hands. But what does R. Judah do with 'If he shall at all change'? — He needs that to include woman,² for it was taught: Since all this chapter is couched in masculine gender, what brings us eventually to include woman? The text stated: 'If he shall at all change'.³ But [whence do] the Sages [infer this]? — From the' [redundant] 'And if'. And R. Judah? — He does not interpret 'And if'.⁴

What does 'All persons are obliged⁵ to observe [the laws concerning] the booth' mean to include? — That is meant to include a minor that no more needs his mother,⁶ for we have learnt: A minor that no more needs his mother is obliged to observe the laws concerning the booth.⁷

What does ‘All are obliged to observe the law of the lulab’⁸ mean to include? — That includes a minor who knows how to shake the lulab, for we learnt: A minor who knows how to shake⁹ the lulab is obliged to observe [the laws of] the lulab.¹⁰ What does ‘All are obliged to observe the [law of] the fringes’ include? — That includes the minor who knows how to wrap himself, for it was taught: A minor who knows how to wrap himself [into the tallith]¹¹ is obliged to observe the law of the fringes. What does ‘All are obliged to observe the rules concerning the tefillin’ include? — That includes a minor who knows how to take care of the tefillin, for it was taught: If a minor knows how to take care of the tefillin,¹² his father buys tefillin for him. What does ‘All are obliged to appear’ include?¹³ — It is meant to include one who is half¹⁴ slave and half freedman. According, however, to Rabina, who holds that one who is half slave and half freed is free from the obligation to appear, [the word ‘All’] is meant to include one who was lame¹⁵ on the first day of the festival and became normal again on the second day. That would be right according to the view that all the days of the festival may make up for each other. But according to the view that they all are but making up for the first day, what will ‘All’ come to include?¹⁶ — It will include one blind in one of his eyes. This [answer] is not in accord with the following Tanna, for it was taught:¹⁷ Johanan b. Dahabai said in the name of R. Judah: One blind in one eye is free from the obligation to appear, for it is said:¹⁸ Yir’eh-yera’eh [he shall see — he shall appear] i.e., just as He is present to see [the comer], so shall He be seen, just as His sight is complete,¹⁹ so shall the sight of him who appears be intact.¹⁹ Or, if you like, say this: In truth it is meant to include one who is half slave and half freed man, and if the view of Rabina should appear as the difficulty, this is no difficulty either; the first view is in accord with the former Mishnah, the second with the later Mishnah. For we learnt:²⁰ One who is half slave and half freed man shall serve himself one day and his master the other — thus Beth Hillel. Said Beth Shammai to them: You took care of the interests of his master, but you have done nothing [thereby] on his behalf. For he is unable to marry either a female slave or free woman. Shall he do without marriage? But the world was created only for propagation of the species, as it is said: He created it not a waste. He formed it to be inhabited.²¹ Rather, for the sake of the social welfare we force his master to set him free, and the slave writes out a document of indebtedness covering the other half of his value. Beth Hillel retracted and taught as Beth Shammai.²² What does ‘All are obliged to sound the shofar’²³ mean to include? — That includes a minor who has reached the age of training, for we learnt: One does not prevent a minor from blowing the shofar on the festival.²⁴ ‘All are obliged to read the scroll’.²⁵ ‘All are fit to read the scroll’. What are these meant to include? —

(1) The word ‘his’ could exclude both the fellow-Jew and the idolater, since the Scriptural ‘his sacrifice’ logically excludes both.

(2) That a woman can effect a substitute in her offering.

(3) Lit., ‘if change he shall change’ the emphasis is inclusive.

(4) He does not ascribe to that word the implications attributed to it by the Sages. About the limits of such interpretation and the basic suggestions implied in disputes thereon v. D. Hoffman, Leviticus I, 9f.

(5) The Gemara proceeds now to a systematic examination of all cases in which the word ‘all’ is used. Unless it can be proved that in each case that word includes something normally excluded, the argument, or rather the first question posed on 2a will be invalidated.

(6) A child which (Suk. 28b) on awakening no more calls out ‘Mother!’ but attends to his needs, dresses himself, etc.

(7) Suk. 28a.

- (8) The palm-branch forming with citron, myrtle and willow, the cluster taken during the Feast of Tabernacles (v. Lev. XXIII, 40) is every day waved in every direction to symbolize the omnipresence of God.
- (9) The lulab is waved in the four main directions: south, north, west and east, and there are some details as to the position of the components of the cluster, which are known to the worshipper, so that he may follow the cantor's lead.
- (10) Suk. 42a.
- (11) The prayer shawl at the four corners of which the fringes are attached, and into which one wraps oneself, 'in order to remember the commandments of the Lord'. The wrapping must be performed in a special manner, v. M.K. 24a.
- (12) Commonly called phylacteries. The attachment, leather box and leather strap, each on left arm and forehead, containing the Shema' and other extracts from the Torah, originally worn all day, now only at the morning prayer.
- (13) Ex. XXIII, 17: Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the Lord God. The Scriptural text is all-inclusive, hence the Mishnaic 'All' must deal with a case which, but for its redundant 'all', one would have excluded from the obligation to appear.
- (14) A full slave is free because 'before the Lord God' is interpreted to mean: only those who have but one Lord or Master, I.e., excluding the slave, who has a terrestrial master in addition to the Eternal Lord to serve. If owned by two masters, one of whom frees him, the slave becomes half freed, and stays half slave.
- (15) The word regel in Hebrew may mean either 'foot' or 'festival' (on the three festivals the men 'footed' it to Jerusalem). Hence the inference that only those who could foot it normally are obliged to appear on these three festivals, which excludes a lame man.
- (16) There are two views as to the statement of the Mishnah (Hag. 9a: One who has made no offering on the first day of the feast must make up, or has the opportunity to make up for it, throughout the other days of the festival), the first holding that each day has its own obligation; hence even if the worshipper was unfit on the first day of the festival, provided he is fit on the next, he is not exempt on the other days per se imposing the obligation, whilst the other considers only the first day imposing the obligation of an offering. Consequently, if he was disqualified on the first day, or free of that obligation, he would be exempt a complementary offering. The practical difference, in our case, would be this: One who on the first day of the festival had been lame, hence not obliged to offer the festal sacrifices, would be free according to the second view, but according to the first, would be obliged to make the offering on one of the subsequent days of the festival.
- (17) Hag. 2a.
- (18) The massoretic text y-r-'-h may be accentuated to read either yir'eh (he will see) or yera'eh (he will be seen). The first reading applied to the Lord, the second to the Israelite appearing before Him, would be thus interpreted: Just as the Lord sees him 'with two eyes' i.e., with undisturbed vision, so shall the worshipper be one appearing with 'both eyes intact, i.e., with undiminished sight. For an alternative rendering v. Hag., Sonc. ed., p. 3. n. 3.

- (23) The trumpet blown on the New Year, v. Lev. XXIII, 24.
- (24) R.H. 32b. The source quoted does not seem to fit the 'inference made, for the answer postulates evidence that a minor is obliged to sound the shofar, whereas the reference quoted refers to the fact that one does not prevent a minor from sounding the horn, which allows for the possibility of his being neither obliged nor forbidden to sound it. There is a lacuna in the text which Tosaf. s.v. ihcfn iht supplies, from R.H. 33a, where such obligation is definitely stated.
- (25) I.e., the Scroll of Esther read on the feast of Purim.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 3a

They are meant to include women, in accord with the view of R. Joshua b. Levi; for R. Joshua b. Levi said: Women are obliged to read the scroll because they, too, had a part in that miracle.¹ What does 'All are obliged to arrange zimmun'² mean to include? — It means to include women and slaves, for it was taught: Women are under the obligation of zimmun amongst themselves, and slaves are under the obligation of zimmun amongst themselves.³ What does 'All may be joined to a zimmun' mean to include? — That includes a minor who knows to Whom one pronounces a blessing, for R. Nahman said: One may arrange a zimmun with a minor who knows to Whom one pronounces a blessing.⁴ What does 'All defile by reason of their flux' include? — That includes a child one day old, for it was taught: [It could have said,] When a man [hath an issue out of his flesh].⁵ Why does the text state 'any man'? That is to include a child one day old, [teaching] that he defiles by reason of his flux; this is the view of R. Judah. R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka says: [This inference] is not necessary, for behold, Scripture reads: And of them that have an Issue, whether it be a male or a female,⁶ i.e., once he is 'a male', however minor or major, once she is 'a female', whether minor or major.⁷ If so, why does the Torah use [the redundant phrase] 'any man'? The Torah speaks in the language of man.⁸ What does 'All are susceptible to be defiled by someone defiled through contact with a corpse'⁹ include? — That includes a minor. For one might have assumed that since Scripture reads: But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself,¹⁰ that means only [to] a man [does this law apply] but not to a minor, therefore it is said: And upon the souls [persons] that were there.¹¹ What then did 'man' come to exclude?¹² — It is meant to exclude a minor from the penalty of excision.¹³ What does 'All contract uncleanness by leprosy' include?—That includes a minor. For one would have taught: [Scripture reads:] A leprous man,¹⁴ that means only a man but not a minor, therefore we are taught [that a minor, too, is defiled when leprous]. But say perhaps: Thus, indeed?¹⁵ — [The text reads:] When adam [a man] shall have in the skin of his flesh,¹⁶ i.e., as long as it is [an adam].¹⁷ Then why the word 'man'? — This is in accord with what was taught: '[A leprous] man', thence I derive only the law as referring to a man, whence am I to infer it for woman? When it says: And the leper,¹⁸ that includes two. Why then does the text state, [A leprous] man'? That refers to [the matter referred to] later,¹⁹ [viz.,] only a [leprous] man lets the hair of his head go loose and rends his clothes, but a [leprous] woman does not let the hair of her head go loose, nor does she rend her clothes. What does 'All may inspect the signs of leprosy', 'All are fit to inspect the signs of leprosy' include?²⁰ — That includes one who is not familiar with them and their names. But did not a Master say that one unfamiliar with them and their names may not inspect leprous signs?²¹ Rabina said: This is no difficulty: One case speaks of one who understands them when they are explained, the other of one who, even when they are explained, does not understand them. What does 'All are fit to mix the ashes'²² include? According to R. Judah it includes a minor; In accord with the Sages it includes a woman, for we are taught: All are fit to mix the ashes except a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor. R. Judah considers a minor fit, but a woman and a hermaphrodite unfit. What does 'All are fit to sprinkle'²³ include? — That includes an uncircumcised²⁴ person In accord with the view of R. Eleazar; for R. Eleazar said: If an uncircumcised person sprinkled, his sprinkling is valid.

What does 'All are fit to slaughter ritually' include? — The first includes a Samaritan, the second a non-conforming Israelite.²⁵ What does ‘All may compel to go up to the land of Israel’ include?²⁶ —

That includes slaves.¹ But according to the one who teaches ‘slaves’ explicitly, what does it include? — That includes the case [when the husband moves] from a beautiful habitation [in the Diaspora] into a bad one [in the land of Israel]. What does 'All may compel to go up to Jerusalem' include?² It includes the case [of moving] from a beautiful habitation into a bad one.

'All are obliged to observe the laws concerning the booth even priests, Levites and Israelites'. But that³ is self-evident, for if they are not obliged, who is obliged? — The statement is necessary for the priests, for I would have thought, since Scripture says: Ye shall dwell in booths,⁴ and a Master said: 'Ye shall dwell' [means] 'in the same manner as you occupy your habitation', just as in the dwelling husband and wife are living together, so shall husband and wife live together in the booth, and since the priests are prevented by the [Temple] service,⁵ one would have assumed they are free from the obligation to dwell in the booth; we are therefore taught that though they are free at the time of the service, outside the time of the service they are definitely obliged [to observe the laws of the booth]; just as is the case with travellers; for a Master has said: those who travel by day are free from the obligation of the booth by day and are bound to it at night. 'All are obliged to observe the law concerning the fringes, even priests, Levites and Israelites'. But that is self-evident? — It is necessary because of the priests, for I would have thought, since it is written: Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff . . . thou shalt make thee twisted cords,⁶ that only such persons as are bound by the prohibition of mingled stuff in their garments are obliged to make the twisted cords, as since to them [the wearing of mingled] stuff has been permitted,⁷ one might have thought that they would not be obliged to make themselves fringes, therefore we are informed that although that prohibition does not apply at the time of their service, it does apply outside that time of service.⁸

'All are obliged to observe the commandment of the tefillin, even priests, Levites and Israelites'. But that is self-evident? — It is necessary because of the priests. For I might have assumed that since it says: And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hands, and they shall be for frontlets between thine eyes,⁹ that only those to whom [the obligation to bind] upon the hand applies are bound to [bind upon] the head; but as to the priests [the obligation of the sign] upon the hand does not apply to them, as it is written: [And his linen garment, his linen breeches] shall he put upon his flesh,¹⁰ [which means] that nothing may intervene between them and his flesh,¹¹ one might say [the obligation of the sign upon] the head similarly does not apply to them, therefore we are informed that they are not indispensable one to another, as we learnt: The tefillin of the arm is not indispensable to the tefillin of the head, neither is the tefillin of the head indispensable to the tefillin of the arm.¹² But why shall it be different with the tefillin of the hand?¹³ [Evidently] because Scripture says: [And his linen garments] ... shall he put upon his flesh? But in connection with [the sign upon] the head it is similarly written: And thou shalt set the mitre upon his head?¹⁴ — It was taught: 'Between the plate and the mitre his hair was visible', at the place where he put his tefillin.¹⁵

'All are obliged to perform the commandment touching the horn, even priests, Levites and Israelites'. But that is self-evident? — For the sake of the priests is it necessary, for I might have assumed since it is written: It is a day of blowing the horn unto you,¹⁶ that only those who are obliged to sound the horn one day [a year] are obliged to do so on that day; the priests, however, since they are obliged to sound the horn throughout the year, as it is written: Ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings,¹⁷ one might have assumed to be free from that obligation. But these things are not similar. Here it is a case of the horn, there one of trumpets? — Still, the information is necessary, for I might have assumed, since we learnt¹⁸ that the Jubilee year is like the New Year with regard to the sounding of the horn and the benedictions, that therefore only he to whom the laws of the Jubilee year apply is obliged to perform the laws touching the New Year, but he to whom the laws of the Jubilee year do not apply, need not perform the laws touching the New Year, and since priests are not affected by the laws governing the Jubilee year, as we learnt:¹⁹ priests and Levites may sell at any time

(1) A circumcised Canaanite slave, whom his master must not sell outside the Holy Land, if the slave desires to be imported to Palestine. The master must either take him to the Holy Land or emancipate him outside thereof. Tosaf. s.v. hhu, tk.

(2) I.e., the husband can compel the wife to go up to the land of Israel even under such conditions.

(3) Here starts a new type of question, really a sub-question of the first. In the first the problem was to discover the case to be included because of the inclusive 'all'; in the following cases the redundant 'priests, Levites and Israelites' is to be accounted for. The law was given to Israel. Israel is divided into the three groups, Priests, Levites and (common, not levitical) Israelites. Why then the repetition? The answer in each case will have to show that for some particular reason one of the three classes might have been excluded, but for the repeated clause, which expressly includes them.

(4) Lev. XXIII, 42.

(5) Priests must be levitically pure when performing the service, whilst the act of conjugality would render them levitically impure.

(6) Deut. XXII, 11 and 12 are read together, and according to the principle that the proximity of passages in Deut. justified legalistic inference (Ber. 10a), they are assumed here to be interdependent.

(7) The girdle of the priests was of mingled stuff, linen and wool, v. Yeb. 4b in explanation of Ex. XXXIX, 29.

(8) With the corollary that when not engaged in the service divine, they are subject to the rule of the twisted cords.

(9) Deut. VI, 8.

(10) Lev. VI, 3.

(11) Hence not the tefillin either since such binding would intervene between the priestly garment and the flesh.

(12) Men. 38a. The Mishnah means that the performance of the obligation of the sign upon head and arm respectively is not interdependent, i.e., failure to bind the sign upon the head does not render the binding upon the hand invalid, or superfluous. Although part of the same sign-symbolism, they represent two independent, individual acts.

(13) That priests are exempt from binding it on.

(14) Ex. XXIX, 6, so that the tefillin on the head would act as interposition between the head and the mitre.

(15) Hence the argument of the last note could not be made here, whilst the tefillin of the arm does interfere with the regulation that nothing shall intervene between the linen garment and the priest's flesh, the tefillin being placed upon the biceps of the left arm, tradition provides for a free space between plate (Ex. XXVIII, 36) and mitre, where the tefillin of the head had its legitimate place.

and redeem at any time, one might say that they are not affected by the laws governing the New Year either, therefore we are informed that although they are unaffected by the law of release of landed property, the law concerning the release of debts and the emancipation of slaves binds them at any rate.¹

‘All are obliged to read the scroll, even priests, Levites and Israelites’. Is that not self-evident? — No, it is necessary [to state that] concerning the interruption of their [Temple] service, in accord with Rab Judah in the name of Rab; for Rab Judah in the name of Rab said: Both the priests in their [Temple] service, the Levites on their platform, the Israelites at their posts² interrupt their work and come to listen to the reading of the scroll.

‘All are obliged to arrange a zimmun even priests, Levites and Israelites’. Is not that self-evident? — No, it is necessary for the case in which the priests were eating consecrated foods. I might have thought since the Divine Law said: And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement hath been made,³ that this is an atonement, therefore we are informed: The Divine Law has said: Thou shalt eat and be satisfied,⁴ and this applies to them as well.

‘All may be joined for a zimmun, even priests, Levites and Israelites’. Is that not self-evident? — No, it is necessary for the case where the priests eat of terumah⁵ or of consecrated foods, whilst the non-priest eats of profane foods. I might have assumed that since the commoner, even though he desired to eat with the priest [of the latter's food], he could not do so, therefore he could not be joined to him [for the zimmun] either, so we are informed that granted that the non-priest may not eat together with the priest, the priest could surely eat together with the non-priest.⁶ ALL MAY EVALUATE, EVEN PRIESTS, LEVITES AND ISRAELITES. But that is self-evident? — Rabbah said: This is necessary in view of the opinion of Ben Bukri, for we learnt:⁷ R. Judah said: Ben Bukri testified at Jabneh that any priest who paid the shekel⁸ does not thereby commit a sin. R. Johanan b. Zakkai said to him: Not so! But a priest who does not pay the shekel commits a sin. The priests, however, Used to explain the following verse to their advantage: And every meal-offering of the priest shall be wholly made to smoke; it shall not be eaten.⁹ Now, [they argued] since the ‘Omer and the two loaves and the shewbread are ours, how could they be eaten? — But according to Ben Bukri, since they are not de jure obliged to bring it [pay the shekel], if one brings it he should be considered a sinner, for he brings profane things to the Temple Court?¹⁰ — [The assumption is that] they bring the shekel and hand it over to the community.¹⁰ Now I might have assumed that since Scripture reads: And all thy valuations shall be according to the shekel of the Sanctuary,¹¹ that only he to whom the obligation of the shekel applies is subject to the laws of valuation, but as to priests, since the obligation of the shekel does not apply to them, are not subject to the laws of valuation; therefore we are informed [that they are]. Said Abaye to him: But the words, ‘And all thy valuations’ serve to teach that ‘all thy valuations’ must each amount to no less than one sela’? Rather, said Abaye, [the inclusion of priests] is necessary [for this reason]: I might have assumed that since Scripture reads: And their redemption money — from a month old shalt thou redeem them — shall be according to thy valuation,¹² that only he to whom the law of redeeming [the first-born] applies, is subject to the laws of valuation, but as to priests, since they are not included in the law concerning redemption, therefore they are not subject to the law of valuations; therefore we are informed [that they are]. Said Raba to him: If so, since with regard to the ram of guilt-offering Scripture reads: And he shall bring his forfeit unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flock, according to thy valuation,¹³ let us also argue that only he to whom the law of valuation applies is liable to bring a ram of guilt-offerings but one of doubtful sex, or a hermaphrodite, who is not subject to the law of valuation, is free from the obligation to offer up a ram of guilt-offering? Rather, said Raba, or as some say, R. Ashi: [The inclusion of priests] is necessary, for I might have said, since Scripture reads: Then he shall be set before the priest, etc.,¹⁴ that [only an Israelite is set] before the priest, but not a priest before a fellow priest; therefore we are informed [that priests, too, are included in the law of valuation].

What does ALL ARE FIT TO BE MADE THE SUBJECT OF VALUATION include? — That includes one disfigured or afflicted with boils. Whence do we derive that? — For our Rabbis have taught: ‘According to thy valuation’, that includes a general valuation.¹⁵ Another interpretation: ‘According to thy valuation’, i.e., one pays only for the valuation of a whole person, but not for the valuation of his limbs. One might have assumed that they exclude [the valuation of] any thing on which life [the soul] depends, therefore the text states: ‘Persons’.¹⁶ ‘Persons’ [souls], but not a dead person. Thence I would exclude the dead, but not the dying, therefore the text states: Then he shall be set [before the priest], and the priest shall value him,¹⁷ [which means] only one who can be set [before the priest] can be evaluated but one who cannot be set before the priest cannot be evaluated either. Another interpretation: ‘Persons’ — thence I could infer only the case of one evaluating person; whence do I know the case of one evaluating a hundred persons? The text therefore states: ‘Persons’. Another interpretation: ‘Persons’

(1) The Jubilee year affects more than the sale of land, viz., also the manumission of slaves; the priests do not enjoy any privileged position, hence they are also included in Jubilee legislation, whence their obligation to blow the horn on New Year's day.

(2) V. Meg. 3b.

(3) Ex. XXIX, 33.

(4) Deut. VIII, 10. According to Sh. Mek.: ‘I would have thought that since it is written: Thou shalt eat and be satisfied, and bless, i.e., only when you eat for the purpose of appeasing your hunger is it obligatory for you to pronounce the blessing, but since priests (also) eat to obtain forgiveness, they would be free from that obligation, therefore we are informed etc.’.

(5) V. Glos.

(6) It need not be mutually possible to join in the meal, hence as long as priest and non-priest are able to partake of one meal together, the zimmun is obligatory, for even the priest is permitted to eat non-consecrated food.

(7) Shek I, 4.

(8) The sin, as explained infra, would lie in his bringing profane money into the sanctuary. The command of Ex. XXX, 13: This they shall give, every one that passeth among them that are numbered, half a shekel after the shekel of the sanctuary, yields several inferences. ‘Among them that are numbered’ excludes the tribe of Levi who were not numbered among the rest of the tribes. Hence the priest offering his shekel might be assumed to offend by introducing non-consecrated, i.e., profane, hence forbidden, money into the sanctuary. Nevertheless, Ben Bukri maintains he does not offend, because he may surrender it to the non-priestly community, which is obliged to offer the shekel, thus converting his own shekel into consecrated money. R. Johanan b. Zakkai, however, points out that there are indications in the text justifying a different interpretation. — Every one that passeth’ may refer to the whole people, including the Levites, who passed through the Red Sea.

(9) Lev. VI, 16. They argued: Since this verse prohibits the enjoyment of anything offered up by priests, our shekel, the proceeds of which should be completely used for 'smoking' would render the 'omer and the shewbread, the costs of which were defrayed from the shekel payments, prohibited for any human use; whereas they are eaten by the priests in the sanctuary. Consequently, for any priest to pay the shekel would be sinful. But this argument is faulty for it is only the priest's own flour-offering which must be wholly burnt, in all other cases the majority of the givers, i.e., the non-priestly community, determine the character of the offering, which need therefore not be consumed wholly on the altar.

(10) V. n. 1.

(11) Lev. XXVII, 25.

(12) Num. XVIII, 16.

(13) Lev. V, 25. This inference would be absurd; none would suggest that the hermaphrodite be freed from this law.

(14) Lev. XXVII, 8.

(15) The normal form of the valuation is: The valuation of So-and-so or the valuation of myself be upon me, i.e., I undertake to pay. A general valuation is: I undertake to pay a valuation, without referring to any person thus to be valued.

(16) Lev. XXVII, 2: persons, souls. Without a leg, for example, one would still be a person, but not without the head. Hence the valuation, say, of a man's head or heart, is taken to be equal to the valuation of his whole person, whereas the valuation of a non-vital part of his body has no significance.

(17) Ibid. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 4b

, thence I could infer only the case of a man evaluating either man or woman. But whence do we know the case of a woman evaluating a man, or of a woman evaluating a woman? The text therefore states: 'Persons'. Another interpretation: 'Persons' — that means to include one disfigured or afflicted with boils. For I might have assumed: 'A vow . . . according to thy valuation' [meaning] whatsoever can have its worth vowed is subject to valuation, but whatsoever cannot have its worth vowed is not subject to valuation,¹ therefore Scripture states: 'Persons'. 'Then thy valuation shall be' — that includes the person of 'doubtful sex and the hermaphrodite among those who can have their worth vowed. For I might have assumed: Since [Scripture reads]: 'A vow according to thy valuation' that only such things as are subject to valuation can have their worth vowed; but whatsoever is not subject to valuation cannot have its worth vowed, therefore the text states: Then shall thy valuation be for the male,² [viz.,] only for the male but not for one of doubtful sex, or an hermaphrodite. One might have assumed that they may not be subject to the valuation of a man, but that they are subject to the valuation of a woman, therefore [the text reads]: Then thy valuation shall be for the male . . . and if it be a female — that means only one definitely male or female [is subject to valuation], but not one of doubtful sex or a hermaphrodite.

The Master taught: 'According to thy valuation': that includes a general valuation. What is a general valuation? — For it was taught: If someone says, I assume the obligation of a general valuation,³ then he gives according to the minimum amount possible in valuations. What is the minimum due in valuations? Three shekels. But say, perhaps, fifty shekels?⁴ — If you take hold of the larger [amount], you may lose your hold, but if you take hold of the lower, you will keep it!⁵ Then say, perhaps, one shekel? As it is written: And all thy valuations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary?⁶ — That passage refers to the regard to one's means.⁷ What then is the purpose of the Scriptural passage?⁸ — R. Nahman, in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha said: To tell us that in this case he is not adjudged according to his means.⁹ What is the reason? — Because it is as if he had made an express statement [of the minimum]. Others say: R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha said, He is adjudged according to his means. But that is self-evident? — I might have assumed that [a general valuation] is considered like an express statement, therefore we are informed [that it is regarded like a poor man's vow]. 'Another interpretation: "According to thy valuation", i.e., he pays only in case of the dedication of a whole person, but not for the valuation of his limbs'. But you have used this text to infer the rule concerning a general valuation? — Read: [Since instead of] 'valuation', it says, 'according to thy valuation'.¹⁰

'One might have assumed that this excludes anything on which life [the soul] depends, therefore the text states: "Persons" [souls] viz., souls but not the dead person'. But you have used that word for another purpose. Read: [Since instead of] 'person' [it says] persons'.¹¹

'Thence I would exclude the dead but not the dying, therefore the text states: "He shall be set [before the priest] and [the priest] shall value him"'. But, if so, you might exclude the dead also through inference from: 'He shall be set . . . and the priest shall value him'? — In truth so. Wherefore then [the exposition] of 'person', 'persons'? As we shall explain later on.¹²

'Another interpretation: "Persons", thence I could infer the case of one evaluating one person; whence do I know the case of one evaluating a hundred? The text therefore states: "Persons". Another interpretation: "Persons", thence I could infer only the case of a man evaluating either ma_n or woman. But whence do I know the case of a woman evaluating a man, or of a woman evaluating a woman? The text therefore states: "Persons". Another interpretation: "Persons", that means one disfigured or afflicted with boils'. But you have used the word for these [other teachings]?¹³ — No Scriptural text is necessary for these, because the balance [between them] is even, hence all may be inferred therefrom.¹⁴ The passage is necessary only for [the inclusion of] one disfigured or afflicted with boils. "'Then thy valuation shall be", that includes one of doubtful sex and an hermaphrodite among those who can have their worth vowed'. But why is a Scriptural passage necessary for [including these in the rule of those whose] worth [can be vowed]? Let them be no worse than the worth of a palm tree! If he said: The worth of a palm tree [do I oblige myself to pay], would he not have to pay it? — Said Rabbah:¹⁵ It means to say that he [his worth] be assessed according to the importance [of his limb].¹⁶ I would have thought that since it is written: 'A vow according to thy valuation', that whatsoever is affected by the law of evaluation is assessed according to the importance [of the limb] ' but that whosoever is not affected by the laws of evaluation is not assessed according to the importance [of the limb, hence the Scriptural indication]. Said Abaye to him: Is indeed one to whom the laws of valuation do not apply assessed according to the importance [of the limb]? Was it not taught: [If someone said], The head of this slave shall be consecrated to the sanctuary, then he and the sanctuary share it in partnership.¹⁷ If he said: The head of this slave be sold to you, they assess its value between them.¹⁸ [If he said], The head of this ass is consecrated, he and the sanctuary share it in partnership; [if he said], The head of this ass is sold to you, they assess it between them. [If he said], The head of this cow is sold to you, he has sold no more than her head. And not only that but even if he said: The head of this cow Is consecrated to the sanctuary, the sanctuary has no more than her head. And R. Papa said: [The reason why there is no partnership in the case of a cow is] because the head of an ox is sold¹⁹ in the butcher's shop. Now ass and cow are not affected by the law of valuations, and yet are not assessed according to the importance [of the limb]? But according to your own position, what of the case of a slave to whom the law of valuation does apply, and yet he is not assessed according to the importance [of the limb]?²⁰ Rather: There is no difficulty. This latter [Baraita] refers to things dedicated to the altar, the former to things dedicated to the Repair of the House.²¹ How did you explain [the latter Baraita]? As referring to things dedicated to the altar? But look at the second part: And not only that, but even if he said: The head of this cow is consecrated to the sanctuary, the sanctuary owns no more than her head. Why that? Let the sacred character spread so as to include the whole animal?²² Has it not been taught:

(1) V. supra p. 16 n. 4.

(2) Ibid. 3.

(3) The suggestion is that the lowest possible amount is involved, namely three shekels, for a female from one month to five years of age.

(4) But why give him the benefit of the doubt? Why not impose, with even justification, the maximum?

(5) A proverb, v. Hag. 17a.

(6) If, however, we consider it safer to impose the minimum amount, because that is definitely included in any general valuation, whereas the maximum may be fought as against the intention of the man who dedicated, then why not impose the minimum possible in connection with valuations, one shekel, v. 25.

(7) That verse refers to a poor person, having made a vow of valuation, in which case the payment of his vow is regulated in accord with the valuator's means, never less than a shekel. But that does not affect the case of one who made a vague general evaluation, who, therefore, must pay the minimum of a valuation, viz., three shekels.

(8) What is the significance then of 'According to thy valuation'? Since it is simple inference that a general valuation implies the minimum of three shekels, below which no valuation can go, the text seems meaningless.

(9) In the case of a general valuation the payment is fixed at three shekels, even if it is beyond the means of him who made the vow.

(10) The word without any suffix would have sufficed. The redundancy of the suffix implies additional information. Hence a double inference such as made here is quite legitimate.

(11) Cf. n. 1. mutatis mutandis.

(12) I.e., to include one disfigured or afflicted with boils.

(13) That one may evaluate a hundred persons, and that a woman too may evaluate.

(14) The word 'nefesh' (person, soul) allows with even logic a number of inferences: any person, male or female, may dedicate or he dedicated; person as well as persons may be dedicated; anything that is vital (to person, or soul) may be dedicated, even if it be but part of a person. Anyone of these inferences are therefore 'balanced', evenly justified and neither could one be inferred exclusively as more logical than the other. But the inclusion of one disfigured or afflicted with boils, which would have seemed incongruous because such persons cannot have their worth vowed, needed some textual justification or at least intimation, and that is provided by the plural 'persons', which includes even persons disfigured etc.

(15) So Sh. Mek. Cur. edd. Raba.

(16) So R. Gershom; e.g., if a person's head or heart or any other vital organ were vowed, such vow, because of the vital need to that person of the respective organ, would be considered as equal to a vow of the whole person's worth, thereupon due to the Temple Treasury.

(17) Sc. its worth, which then is divided between them.

(18) V. infra.

(19) In the case of slave and donkey the head could not be (cut off and) sold, whence the vow implies part ownership. This shows that objects to which the law of valuation does not apply, are nevertheless not considered as having been vowed in their totality when a vital organ has been vowed, which contradicts the thesis, above, of Rabbah.

(20) The same question applies to Abaye's position inasmuch as from the same Baraitha it appears that even a slave, who is affected by the law of valuation, is not assumed to have been vowed in his totality, even though one of his vital organs has been vowed.

(21) Only with regard to dedications, the money of which flows to the repair fund, do we go by vow of vital organs, therefore also a hermaphrodite whose worth had been vowed to the repair fund, would be considered totally vowed, as long as a vital organ had been vowed; but such a regulation does not apply to objects dedicated to the altar.

(22) Since the whole animal could be offered up as a sacrifice.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 5a

If one said: 'The leg of this [animal] shall be a burnt-offering', one might have assumed that the whole animal thereby becomes a burnt-offering, therefore the text states: All that any man giveth thereof unto the Lord shall be holy,¹ i.e., only [that] 'thereof' [which he giveth] shall be holy, but not the whole thereof shall be holy. One might have assumed that the whole becomes profane,² therefore the text states: '[It] shall be', i.e., It retains its present character. How then? It is sold for the purchase of burnt-offerings and the money realized, with the exception³ of the [value of the] limb dedicated, shall be profane; this is the view of R. Meir. R. Judah, R. Jose and R. Simeon say: Whence do we know that if a man said: The leg of this animal shall be a burnt-offering, that the whole animal is a burnt-offering, therefore the text states: 'All that any man giveth thereof unto the Lord shall be holy': that means to include the whole. Now even according to the view that thereby the whole animal does not become consecrated, that applies only to [the vow of] an organ upon which life does not depend, but whenever a limb is vowed upon which the life [of the animal] depends, the whole [animal] becomes consecrated?⁴ — This is no difficulty. One speaks of the vow of the animal itself,⁵ the other of the vow of its equivalent in money. But it 'was the Master himself⁶ who said that if someone consecrates a male [animal] in its money equivalent, that [animal] becomes consecrated in itself!⁷ — That is no difficulty: one case⁸ speaks of his having dedicated the whole, the other of his dedicating one member of the body.⁹ But even concerning [the dedication of] one member it is a matter of doubt, for Rabbah asked: If a man had dedicated one member in its money value, how then? — The question was asked about a perfect animal, whereas here we are dealing with a blemished one, similar to the donkey¹⁰ [discussed above]. But the case of [the dedication of] a blemished one is also doubtful, for Rabbah asked: If someone says the money value of my head¹¹ is [dedicated] to the altar, what then? — The question was asked before he heard this teaching,¹² but now that he has heard this teaching, it is no more doubtful to him.

[To turn to] the main text: Rabbah asked, [If a man said,] The money value of my head be for the altar, shall he be valued according to the importance [of this], or shall he not be so valued? [Do we say that] it never happens that a vow regarding [a person's] worth be not assessed according to the importance [of the limb] or, [on the other hand, do we say] it never happens with regard to a consecration for the altar that [the consecration] is determined by the importance [of the limb)?¹³ — The question remains [unanswered].

Raba asked: [If someone said:] The valuation of myself I undertake to pay for the altar, is he adjudged according to his means, or not? [Do we say,] It is never found in connection with valuation that one is not adjudged according to one's means; or, [on the other hand] it never happens with regard to any vow to the altar that¹⁴ one be adjudged according to his means? — The question remains [unanswered].

R. Ashi asked: If a man dedicated a field of possession¹⁵ for the altar, what then? Do we say it never occurs that a field of possession can be redeemed except on the basis of fifty shekels for each [part of the field sufficient for] the sowing of a homer of barley, or [perhaps, we say] it does not happen with regard to any [gift for] the altar that it be redeemed otherwise than in accord with its actual value?¹⁶ — The question remains [unanswered]. MISHNAH. A PERSON LESS THAN ONE MONTH OLD MAY HAVE HIS WORTH VOWED¹⁷ BUT NOT HIS VALUATION.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If one evaluates a person less than one month old, R. Meir says, He gives his worth [its market value], but the Sages say, 'He has said nothing'. Wherein are they of divided opinion? — R. Meir says: No man utters his words in vain,¹⁸ and knowing that a person less than one month old cannot be made the subject of a valuation [and having spoken] he makes up his mind to vow his worth. The Sages, however, hold that a man may utter his words in vain. According to whose view [of the disputants] will be what R. Giddal said in the name of Rab, who said. if one said: the valuation of this vessel¹⁹ is upon me, he shall pay its worth! — That is in accord with R. Meir. But this is self-evident? — You might have said: It could be in accord with the view of the Rabbis [Sages]. For in the other case one could have erred in thinking that just as a child of one month has valuation thus also one less than one month old; but in this case where there is nothing to err about, for a man surely knows that a vessel has no valuation, and therefore he had intended his statement to mean to vow the vessel's worth, therefore we are informed [that even here the Sages do not so hold].

(1) Lev. XXVII, 9.

(2) The whole animal, apart from the dedicated limb, is profane without further ado.

(3) Both groups base their interpretation on the same Scriptural verse, emphasis deciding the issue. R. Meir stresses the words 'that any man giveth thereof' in a private sense, to exclude such portions as were not included in his gift. The other Rabbis interpret: 'All that any man giveth thereof' to mean that all animals whereof any part is given become fully consecrated.

(4) Tem. 11b places the dispute between R. Meir and the Sages only in the case of a non-vital organ and thus the question arises: why in the case of the head does the sanctuary not own more than the head?

(5) The consecration of one organ is suggested as spreading over the whole animal, when that organ itself has been consecrated, but where only the money value of such an organ has been vowed there, that organ itself remains a detached entity, not connected in its consecration with the rest of the body, hence not affecting it as to consecration.

(6) Rabbah, who gave the last answer.

(7) Tem. 11b.

(8) Rabbah's ruling in Tem.

(9) In the case where he consecrated the head only for its value obviously the consecration is limited to the monetary value of the member consecrated.

(10) Both a blemished animal of a class admitted to the altar, or an animal, though unblemished, but of a class unfit for sacrifices, are in one category.

(11) Shall the vowing of his head be considered, because of the vital importance of the head, as equal to the vowing of his whole worth or not? Now a man is in the same category as an unblemished animal as far as the altar is concerned.

(12) Cited supra. If one consecrates the head of an ass.

(13) I.e., that by consecrating the value of one vital organ the worth of the animal is consecrated to the altar.

(14) Text corrected in accordance with Sh. Mek. cur. ed.: That it can be redeemed except for its value.

(15) V. Lev. XXVII, 16ff.

(16) If someone consecrated that field for the fund from which burnt-offerings were provided, how could he redeem his pledge? Do we abide by the general rule in such cases of a vow for Temple repairs, or do we consider the special circumstance governing vows for the altar?

(17) Because, no matter how young, it would fetch its price in a market; but as to valuation a definite minimum age is stated.

(18) R. Meir holds that no man utters any statement uselessly; he might, however, talk loosely, use terms applicable to a case somewhat different from the one involved. Thus the terminology of dedication might well be used by someone who has in his mind a vow. 'Or, as Tosaf. s.v. ost has it: A man, indifferent to the exact terminology, or ignorant of it, would intend to have his utterance serve whatever purpose the Rabbis attributed to the words he used.

(19) 'Valuation' was fixed only for human beings, hence vessels cannot be evaluated, thus an illustration of the former problem is offered here.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 5b

But why was it necessary [for Rab] to state [this ruling] on the view of R. Meir? — One might have thought the reason for R. Meir in that case was that he decreed [the obligation to pay] in the case of a child less than one month old out of consideration¹ for one which was one month old, but that in the case here,² where no such decree is warranted, one might [assume that R. Meir would] not [rule thus], therefore we are informed that R. Meir's reason is that no man utters his words at random, so that the same rule applies in both cases.

According to whose view will be the teaching of Rabbah b. Jose³ in the name of Rab [according to others R. Yeba b. Jose in the name of Rab]: If one consecrates [to the sanctuary] his neighbour's animal, he shall pay its worth.⁴ According to whom? According to R. Meir. But Rab has already said that once before, for R. Giddal in the name of Rab said: If one said, 'The valuation of a vessel be upon me, he shall pay its worth'. — You might have said: In the one case he knew that a vessel has no valuation whereupon he made up his statement with the intention for its worth, but in the case of an animal, which is normally fit to be consecrated, one might say that this is what he meant: If I report it to its owner he will sell it [to me], therefore let it be consecrated as from now already, and I shall offer it up [after having purchased it], but that he did not mean its worth,⁵ therefore he informs us [that this is not so].⁶ R. Ashi⁷ said: This applies only where he said: I undertake the responsibility [for an animal], but not if he said: I assume the obligation [to consecrate] this [animal].⁸ MISHNAH. AN IDOL-WORSHIPPER ACCORDING TO R. MEIR CAN BE MADE THE SUBJECT OF A VALUATION BUT CANNOT EVALUATE, WHEREAS ACCORDING TO R. JUDAH HE MAY EVALUATE BUT CANNOT BE MADE THE SUBJECT OF A VALUATION. BOTH AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT HE CAN BOTH VOW ANOTHER'S WORTH AND HAVE HIS WORTH VOWED BY OTHERS.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The children of Israel⁹ may evaluate, but idol-worshippers may not evaluate. One might have assumed that they cannot be made the subject of a valuation either, therefore the text states: Man,¹⁰ these are the words of R. Meir. Said R. Meir: Now that one Scriptural verse includes and the other excludes, whence am I [justified in] saying: He may be made the subject of a valuation, but may not evaluate himself?¹¹ It is because Scripture has included more among those subject to valuation than among those fit to evaluate; for a deaf-mute, an imbecile and a minor each may be made the subject of a valuation, but is not fit to evaluate. R. Judah said: The children of Israel may be made the subject of a valuation, but idol-worshippers are not fit to be made the subject of a valuation. One might have assumed that they [the latter] are not fit to evaluate either, therefore the text states: 'Man'. Said R. Judah: Since one verse includes and the other excludes, whence do I come to make the statement that idol-worshippers are fit to evaluate and are not subject to valuation? Because Scripture has included more among those fit to evaluate than among those subject to valuation. For one of doubtful sex and a hermaphrodite are fit to evaluate, but are not subject to valuation. Said Raba: The decision of R. Meir appeals to logic, but not the reason; the reason of R. Judah is logical, but not his decision. The decision of R. Meir appeals to logic as it is written: Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God.¹² His reason does not appeal, for he argues from the case of a deaf-mute, an imbecile or a minor; but it is different with them since they have no intelligence. The reason of R. Judah is logical, for he deduces it from the case of one of doubtful sex and a hermaphrodite, which, although endowed with intelligence, are yet excluded by the Divine Law [from evaluation]. His decision, however, does not appeal, as it is written: 'Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God'. How, indeed, does R. Judah deal with 'Ye have nothing to do with us'? — R. Hisda said in the name of Abimi: His valuation [money] must be hidden.¹³ But then one should not be guilty of sacrilege in connection with them, for it was taught: Concerning the five kinds of sin-offerings which must be left to die, and all moneys that must be cast into the Dead Sea, one must not derive any benefit from them, nor is one guilty of sacrilege [if one has used them].¹⁴ Why then was it taught with regard to the consecration of idol-worshippers: These things apply only to things consecrated for the altar, but things consecrated for Temple repairs are subject to the law of sacrilege?¹⁵ — Rather, said Raba: It¹⁶ was due to the 'weakening of the hands', as it is written: Then the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah and harried them while they were building.¹⁷

(1) I.e. , to safeguard the payment fixed in the Bible.

(2) Referring to a vessel.

(3) So Sh. Mek. cur. edd. Joseph.

(4) Since none can consecrate an object not belonging to himself, the suggestion is that he meant to offer the money value of the object in question, such offering, of course, being independent of his owning the animal.

(5) If his hope was to obtain the animal and to consecrate it (and not its money value), then his utterance was quite in vain and no obligation results: The money value he had not vowed, the animal itself did not belong to him, wherefore he incurred no obligation whatsoever.

- (6) That, according to R. Meir he must have known that the animal itself cannot be consecrated, and therefore must have had in mind the payment of its market value, which is now obligatory.
- (7) Sh. Mek.: Mar b. R. Ashi.
- (8) If a man said: My neighbour's animal do I consecrate, only then does an obligation arise to pay its money value, but if he said 'This animal' shall I provide for the altar,' he obviously has said nothing. For he could undertake to make himself responsible for the money value of an animal, but he could surely not oblige himself to dedicate the animal that does not belong to him. In the latter case his words are for practical purposes meaningless. He has said nothing.
- (9) Thus does the chapter on dedications commence: Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them (Lev. XXVII, 2), the inference being obvious.
- (10) Ibid.
- (11) What is the justification for declaring the idol-worshipper fit for one rather than for the other? The text has both inclusive and exclusive indications. 'The children of Israel' excludes, while 'man' includes.
- (12) Ezra IV, 3.
- (13) R. Judah's view that idol-worshippers are fit to evaluate does not imply that such money is to be used — that is excluded by Ezra IV, 3, — but it does mean that it acquires sacredness, so as to be forbidden for profane use; and since it is also not fit for sacred use, it must be hidden or destroyed.
- (14) V. Me'ilah 3a.
- (15) Since they are to be destroyed they ought not, according to the cited Baraitha from Me'ilah be subject to the law of sacrilege.
- (16) The refusal to accept the idol-worshippers' gifts in the days of Ezra.
- (17) Ezra IV, 4.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 6a

One [Baraitha] taught: If an idol-worshipper offers a freewill- gift towards Temple repairs 'one accepts it from him, whilst another [Baraitha] taught: One does not accept it from him. Said R. Ela in the name of R. Johanan: This is no difficulty: The first applies to the beginning,¹ the latter to the end.² For R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: In the beginning one should not accept from them even salt or water, whereas at the end one may not accept a thing that can be easily identified,³ but something that cannot easily be identified one may accept. What is a 'thing that can be easily identified'? — R. Joseph said: Like the cubit [of metal] keeping off the raven.⁴

R. Joseph raised an objection: And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's park [that he may give me timber to make beams, etc.]⁵ — Abaye said: It is different with the government because it will not retract. For Samuel has said: If the government said, I will uproot a mountain, it will uproot the mountain and not retract!

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: If an idol-worshipper separated the terumah⁶ from his pile [of produce], then we examine him. If he said:⁷ I have separated it with the same intention as an Israelite, it is to be handed to the priests but if not, it must be hidden, because we consider the possibility of his having in his heart intended it for the Lord.⁸ An objection was raised [against that]: If an idol-worshipper had dedicated a beam to the Sanctuary upon which the Name [of God] is inscribed, he is to be examined. If he said: I have separated it with the same intention as an Israelite, then one should cut off [the part containing the Name of God] and use the rest. But if [he does] not [offer this explanation], it must be hidden away, because we fear his heart [intention] may have been [to dedicate it] to the Lord. The reason then [for this decision] is because the Name [of God] is inscribed thereon, and only therefore does it require to be hidden away, but if the Name [of God] were not inscribed thereupon, then indeed, it would not have to be hidden away!⁹ — [No!] Even if the Name [of God] were not inscribed thereupon it would likewise have to be hidden away, and it is exactly this that we are told, that although the Name [of God] is thereon inscribed, he need but cut off that portion and use the rest For the Name of God not in its proper place is not considered sacred.¹⁰ For it was taught: If it [the Name of God] was written upon the handles of a vessel, or upon the props of a bed, behold, it shall be cut off and hidden.¹¹

R. Nahman said in the name of R. Abbuha: If one says, This sela' is dedicated to charity, he is permitted to exchange it. Now it was assumed that this is permitted only for himself, but not for anybody else;¹² but it was stated that R. Ammi said in the name of R. Johanan that it is permitted both for oneself and for someone else. R. Ze'ira said: We have learnt that only where he said: [I take] upon myself [generally], but if he said: [I take] upon myself to [give] this, then he is obliged to give this [sela']. Whereupon Raba demurred: On the contrary! The opposite is logical. If he said: Behold this [sela' I take upon myself to pay], then he may use it for himself, so that he may be responsible for it, but when he said: [I take] upon myself [a sela'], he should not [be permitted to exchange it]? But the fact is it makes no difference.¹³ It was taught in accord with Raba: Vows are [like] charity, but consecrations [to the sanctuary] are not like charity. What does that mean? Neither vows nor dedications are charity. Is it not rather this that is meant: Charity [is like vows] in respect of the prohibition 'Thou shalt not delay it',¹⁴ but is not like a consecration [to the sanctuary] because anything so consecrated one must not use, whereas [money dedicated to] charity one may [meantime] use for oneself! R. Kahana said: I reported this teaching before R. Zebid of Nehardea whereupon he said: This is how you stated it;¹⁵ we, however, state it thus: R. Nahman in the name of R. Abbuha based on Rab said: If one said, This sela' is [dedicated to] charity, he may exchange it both for himself, or for someone else independent of whether he had said: [I take it] upon myself [in general], or [I take it upon myself to pay] this [sela'].

Our Rabbis taught: [If one said:] This sela' shall be for charity, then before it has reached the hand of the [charity] treasurer, it is permitted to exchange it, but after it has come into the treasurer's hand, it is forbidden to exchange it.

(1) At the beginning of the building the intention of the idol-worshippers may not be a good one, their gift being made to give them entry into the building programmed which they plan to interfere with or delay. But according to the law they may be accepted for Temple repairs, hence the ruling of R. Judah.

(2) When the building is completed.

(3) Which might cause the heathen to point Boastfully to their contribution, or to its importance for the Temple.

(4) An arrangement of iron points on the roof of the Temple designed to keep ravens away. V. M.K. 9a.

(5) Neh. II, 8. From this passage it is evident that gifts were accepted from (Cyrus) an idolator, and that happened at the beginning of the building.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) One may not accept a gift for the sanctuary from a heathen. Hence, if he says: I want the terumah to go where the Jew's terumah goes, one may accept it from him and give it to the priest, who is permitted to receive it. Rashi:

The reference is to the present day when there is no sanctuary, and when consequently things dedicated to the sanctuary must be hidden away, v. Bek. 53a.

(8) But a gift 'Unto the Lord', i.e., for the sanctuary must not be accepted from, him, and must be hidden.

(9) This contradicts the earlier teaching!

(10) There attaches no holiness whatsoever to the name inscribed on the wrong kind of place or material, the right kind would be parchment, or paper, everything else is not normally fit to have the name inscribed thereon.

(11) Shab. 61b.

(12) I.e., to use this coin for his own purpose, to refund it to the Sanctuary afterwards. But it would be wrong for him to lend it to his neighbour, for it may be argued reasonably that he meant to use it meantime for himself, whilst conscious of his obligation to pay it later into the Temple treasury. But he surely did not, in his intention to use it, include any benefit to his neighbour such as a loan to him of this sum.

(13) One might argue with even force: If he said, I take upon myself to pay this sela' into the Temple treasury, then it thereby has become its property, and by using it one has incurred the obligation, not only moral but legal, of restoring that property; whereas in the case of a general vow (I accept it upon myself to give a sela') a different argument is to be made. At any rate, since both claims have support, we recognize no practical difference between the one form and the other.

(14) Deut. XXIII, 22.

(15) I.e., you reported R. Nahman's statement in general terms, relying on R. Ammi and Raba to explain its implications.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 6b

But it is not so, for R. Jannai borrowed and paid it [afterwards]?¹ — It is different with R. Jannai, for what he did was acceptable to the poor, for the more he delayed the more did he succeed in collecting and bringing in to them.

Our Rabbis taught: If an Israelite dedicated a candlestick or a lamp to the synagogue, he is not permitted to exchange it. R. Hiyya had thought that was to say [it may not be changed] either for a secular or a religious purpose. Whereupon R. Ammi said to him: This is what R. Johanan said: We have learnt [of the prohibition] only in connection with a secular purpose, but for a religious purpose it is permitted to exchange [the object dedicated] — For R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: If an idol-worshipper had dedicated a candlestick or a lamp to the synagogue, then, before the name of its owner has become forgotten, it is forbidden to exchange it; after the name of the owner has been forgotten, it is permitted to change it. Now to what purpose is it to be changed? Shall I say for secular use? — Then why speak of an idol-worshipper's gift, the same applies to that of an Israelite? Hence you must say for a religious use, and nevertheless the reason [why it may not be changed is]² because an idol-worshipper would create a row about it, but in the case of an Israelite who would not create a row about it, it would be proper [to change it].³

Sha'azrek, an Arab, made a gift of a lamp to the synagogue of Rab Judah. Rehaba changed it [‘s use] and Raba took it amiss. (Some say: Raba changed it and Rehaba took it amiss. Others say: The sextons of pumbeditha changed it and both Rehaba and Raba rebuked them for it.) He who changed it held: It would⁴ be a rare occurrence, whereas he who rebuked held: It may happen that he comes.⁵

MISHNAH. ONE AT THE POINT OF DEATH OR ABOUT TO BE PUT TO DEATH CANNOT HAVE HIS WORTH VOWED, NOR BE SUBJECT TO VALUATION. R. HANINA B. AKABIA SAID: HE IS FIT TO BE MADE THE SUBJECT OF A VALUATION BECAUSE HIS PRICE IS FIXED. R. JOSE SAID: HE MAY VOW ANOTHER'S WORTH, EVALUATE, AND CONSECRATE [TO THE SANCTUARY], AND IF HE CAUSED DAMAGE, HE IS OBLIGED TO MAKE RESTITUTION.

GEMARA. It is quite right that one at the point of death cannot have his worth vowed, because he has no money [value]; nor can he be made the subject of a valuation because he is not fit to be set and valued.⁶ But as regards one about to be put to death, whilst it is true that he cannot have his worth vowed since he has no money [value], why should he be unfit to be made the subject of a valuation?⁷ — Because it was taught: Whence do we know that if one about to be put to death says: The valuation of myself is upon me,⁸ he has said nothing? The text states: No devoted thing . . . shall be redeemed.⁹ One might have assumed that this holds good even before the proceedings [of his case] are finished, therefore the text states: Of man,¹⁰ i.e.,but not [as long as he is] a whole man. But what will R. Hanina b. Akabya who holds him fit to be made the subject of a valuation 'because his price is fixed', do with 'No devoted thing, etc.'? — He needs this in accord with what was taught: R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: Since we find that those to be put to death by the hand of heaven can offer a monetary expiation and thereby obtain atonement, as it is said: If there be laid on him a ransom,¹¹ I might have thought the same applied to those who are to be put to death by the hand of man, therefore we are taught: 'No devoted thing shall be redeemed'. From here I may derive teaching only for severer penalties of death, for which even when committed in error no atonement is possible.¹² But whence do I know that it applies also to lesser penalties of death,for which at least when committed in error atonement is possible? The text therefore states: 'Any devoted thing, etc.'

R. JOSE SAYS: HE MAY VOW ANOTHER'S WORTH, EVALUATE. But did the first Tanna say that he may? Rather, there is no dispute whatsoever that he may vow another's worth, evaluate and consecrate, the dispute touches only the case of his having caused damage,¹³ the first Tanna holding that if he had caused damage he is not obliged to make compensation, whereas R. Jose holds he is obliged to make compensation when he has caused damage. What principle are they disputing? — R. Joseph said: They are disputing whether an oral¹⁴ debt can be collected from the heirs, the first Tanna holding an oral debt cannot be collected from the heirs, whereas R. Jose considers it can be collected. Raba¹⁵ said: All agree that an oral debt cannot be collected from the heirs, what they are here disputing is the [nature of a] debt arising from the law of the Torah, the first Tanna holding that a debt arising from the law of the Torah is not to be considered equal to one acknowledged in a document [of indebtedness], whilst R. Jose considers it like one acknowledged in a document [of indebtedness]. There are some who refer it¹⁶ to the following matter: If one¹⁷ about to be executed wounded others, he is obliged to make reparation, but if others have wounded him, they are free [from reparation].¹⁸ R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Even if he has wounded someone he is free, because he may not be placed before the Court of Law again.¹⁹

(1) He was a commissioner of charity, yet he used to borrow funds to use them for his own purposes!

(2) Before the name of its owner is forgotten.

(3) This proves that R. Johanan holds that it may be changed even for a secular purpose.

- (4) That the donor would notice such a change, and protest.
- (5) It is not impossible that the donor, who travelled much, might come to the city and see the change and protest therefore their rebuke.
- (6) C. supra p. 16 n. 4.
- (7) Surely the amount of valuation is fixed.
- (8) Var. lec.: and somebody says, The valuation of him is upon me, v. Keth. 37b.
- (9) Lev. XXVII, 28. I.e., all condemned persons are not redeemable.
- (10) Once a man is sentenced to death he is no more a whole man, hence the partitive 'of man'; v. Keth. 37b. But before such a sentence has actually been pronounced, he is still a whole man to whom the text, 'of man' (i.e., part of man, in the ad hoc meaning) does not apply.
- (11) Ex. XXI, 30. As is evident from Sanh. 15b, in the case of the goring ox, the owner incurs death through the decree of heaven for his negligence, and in such a case the evil decree may be averted by a monetary compensation or expiation. The word 'devoted' is interpreted as devoted by human beings, hence 'devoted to death' by human beings. Such interpretation removed the possibility of any devoted thing being saved from execution by compensation-payment, for, No devoted thing shall be redeemed (from death by payment).
- (12) The crime of blasphemy even if committed in error cannot be remedied as is done with other unintentionally committed crimes, by sin-offering or (in the case of involuntary manslaughter) by exile.
- (13) Since he has a mind, he obviously is fit to do things which one possessed of mentality is fit to do. This obligation would, of course, descend upon his heirs, hence the principle involved.
- (14) An obligation arising from the law of the Torah has the character of an orally admitted debt. Hence, even if no definite decision had been made by the court on the question of his damage, a delay in his execution would be considered unnecessary, hence prohibited. Nevertheless the debt arising from the law of the Torah is considered an oral debt.
- (15) Var. lec.: Rabbah.
- (16) The statements of R. Joseph and Raba.
- (17) Tos. B.K. 9.
- (18) He is obliged to make reparation because until his moment of death he is presumed to have a mind, hence is responsible. But since he is about to be executed, his body as such is no more in its integrity, hence one who wounds him should be free from any obligation to make compensation payment. All these refer to someone about to be executed by the laws of Israel, i.e., after careful investigation and examination. One, however, sentenced to death by the heathen tyrants or other malefactors, might perhaps be ransomed, freed by persuasion or payment, hence his physical integrity may yet be said to be unimpaired.
- (19) The examination of the claim against him would consume some time. This would involve a delay in his execution, which is forbidden, v. Sanh. 89a.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 7a

From this it would appear that the first Tanna holds that he may be placed before the Court of Law again! Said R. Joseph: They are disputing whether an oral debt can be collected from the heirs, the first Tanna holding an oral debt may be collected from the heirs, whilst R. Simeon b. Eleazar holds it cannot be collected. Rabbah said: All agree that an oral debt cannot be collected from the heirs, they are disputing here whether an obligation arising from the law of the Torah may be considered as one written in a document of indebtedness, the first Tanna holding it is to be regarded like one acknowledged in a document of indebtedness, whilst R. Simeon b. Eleazar holds it is not to be regarded like one acknowledged in a document of indebtedness.

An objection was raised:¹ If one dug a pit in a public thoroughfare, and an ox fell upon him and killed him, [the owner of the latter] is free, and even more, if the ox should die, then the heirs of the owner of the pit must repay its money value to the owner of the ox! Said R. Ela in the name of Rab: [This speaks of the case] where he stood before the Court of Law.² But the text reads: 'And killed him'! — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: It means he hurt him fatally. But did not R. Nahman say that R. Hagga read: Killed and buried him!³ But the law is [that the heirs are liable] where the judges were sitting at the opening of the pit. Our Rabbis taught: If one is about to be executed one sprinkles⁴ for him the blood of the sin-offering or the blood of the guilt-offering. But if he sinned at that time,⁵ one is no more obliged to attend to him.⁶ What is the reason? — R. Joseph said: We must not put off his execution. Said Abaye: If so, then concerning the first part, too?⁷ — That refers to the case that his sacrifice by that hour was killed already. But if it had not been slaughtered before that hour, what then [would be the law]? presumably it would not be so! Then instead of having the text read, 'If he sinned at that time they do not attend to him', let the distinction be made with reference to [the sacrifice itself]: These things apply only when his sacrifice by that hour had been slaughtered already, but if his sacrifice had not been slaughtered by that hour, one does not [sprinkle of his blood upon him]? — This indeed is what he said: These things apply only if by that hour his sacrifice had been slaughtered already, but if his sacrifice had not been slaughtered yet, then his case is like that of one who sinned at that hour, and to whom therefore one need not attend in this matter.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN IS ABOUT TO BE EXECUTED, ONE DOES NOT WAIT FOR HER UNTIL SHE GIVES BIRTH:⁸ BUT IF SHE HAD ALREADY SAT ON THE BIRTHSTOOL,⁹ ONE WAITS FOR HER UNTIL SHE GIVES BIRTH. IF A WOMAN HAS BEEN PUT TO DEATH ONE MAY USE HER HAIR; IF AN ANIMAL HAS BEEN PUT TO DEATH IT IS FORBIDDEN TO MAKE ANY USE OF IT.¹⁰

GEMARA. But that is self-evident, for it is her body!¹¹ — It is necessary to teach it, for one might have assumed since Scripture says: According as the woman's husband shall lay upon him,¹² that it [the unborn child] is the husband's property, of which he should not be deprived, therefore we are informed [that it is not so]. But perhaps [the former point of view] may indeed [be the law]? — Said R. Abbuha in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture says: They shall die, also both of them,¹³ that includes the child. But this [verse] is required for the inference that they must both be of equal condition,¹⁴ as R. Joseph teaches? — We infer it from 'also'.¹⁵

BUT IF SHE HAD ALREADY SAT ON THE BIRTHSTOOL: What is the reason? — As soon as it moves [from its place in the womb] it is another body. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: If a woman is about to be executed one strikes her against her womb so that the child may die first, to avoid her being disgraced.¹⁶ That means to say that [otherwise] she dies first? But we have an established [assumption] principle that the child dies first, for we learnt: A child one day old inherits and bequeaths;¹⁷ and R. Shesheth said [in explanation]: He inherits the mother's property to bequeath it to his brothers from his father. Now this [as is clearly indicated] applies only to a child 'one day old', but not to an embryo, because it would die first and no son already in the grave can inherit from his mother to bequeath to his paternal brothers?¹⁸ — This applies only to [her natural] death, because the child's life is very frail, the 'drop' [of poison] from the angel of death enters and destroys its vital organs,¹⁹ but in the case of death by execution she dies first. But there was a case in which [the child] moved three times? — Mar son of R. Ashi said: That is analogous to the tail of a lizard which moves [after being cut off].²⁰

R. Nahman said in the name of Samuel: If a woman who has been sitting on a birthstool died on a Sabbath, one may bring a knife and cut her womb open to take out the child. But that is self-evident? What is he doing?

- (1) From here it is evident that an obligation arising out of the law of the Torah is considered like one acknowledged in a document of indebtedness, and since the principle is there definitely established as legitimate, it is wrong to assume that what is a recognized Tannaitic principle, since it is reported in an anonymous, i.e., accepted form, is opposed by the majority view in our Mishnah on Raba's explanation.
 - (2) Before he died the court had decided that he must pay the fine, such decision being equal to a debt acknowledged by himself in writing.
 - (3) The ox killed and buried the man, by his fall upon him, in the pit. According to this reading the owner of the pit could not have been adjudged before the court. I.e., the court was held at the pit, with the fatally wounded man adjudged guilty before his actual death, the obligation arising having the character of a debt acknowledged in writing.
 - (4) I.e., for his sake, to obtain for him forgiveness for another sin committed in error, for which this sacrifice had been offered up.
 - (5) E.g., he ate some forbidden fat in error whilst on his way to be executed.
 - (6) He is about to be executed and any ceremony on his behalf would have to take place before he actually dies, and thus may cause the prohibited delay in his execution.
 - (7) One would have to wait here with the killing of the animal and the sprinkling, and thus delay his execution.
 - (8) If she were found to be pregnant.
 - (9) I.e., if her pains of parturition had begun already. Rashi holds this to apply to a woman whose pains had started before sentence was pronounced; accord ing to Tosaf, even if the pains had begun only after the sentence. For the child is considered as of one body with the mother only as long as it still is in its normal place. But as soon as it has started to move, it is another body and thus unaffected by the mother's state.
 - (10) In the case of an animal sentenced by the court to be destroyed (as e.g., an ox which gored a man to death) the prohibition to use its corpse in any manner comes into force as soon as sentence is pronounced, in the case of a human being only with the execution proper.
 - (11) The embryo is part of her body, having no identity of its own and dependent for its life upon the body of the woman.
 - (12) Ex. XXI, 22 refers to the indemnity to be paid to the husband for a premature child.
 - (13) So literally. E.V. 'They shall both of them die'. Deut. XXII, 22. The redundant 'both of them' is used for another situation.
 - (14) That they must both be of age so that both are punishable; if one is a minor, no death penalty for this adultery is inflicted.
 - (15) Which is redundant, and from which the law here concerning the embryo is derived.
 - (16) If the child, having escaped death, came forth after her execution, it would cause bleeding and thus expose the executed mother to be disgraced.
 - (17) If on that one day of its life it should inherit some property, by dying on the same day the child would cause its paternal brothers to inherit it. V. B.B. 142a; Nid. 44a.
 - (18) Hence, when the mother dies after the child, her property does not s ow to the child, which is legally assumed to be in the grave; he is therefore unable to inherit his mother's property and much less to bequeath it to his paternal brothers. This proves that the child is assumed to die before the mother as otherwise the case above could also deal with an unborn child, whilst the Mishnah limits it to the child born and one day old.

(19) The phrase here is borrowed from the death of an animal, which is achieved in accordance with the laws of Shechitah by the cutting of the windpipe and the gullet, the two organs to be cut in accordance with the ritual law.

(20) Although no more alive; similarly such moving on the part of the child is no sign of its life.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 7b

Only cutting flesh?¹ — Rabbah said: It is necessary [to permit the] fetching of the knife by way of a public thoroughfare.² But what is he informing us? That in case of doubt one may desecrate the Sabbath! Surely we have learnt already: If debris falls down upon one and there is doubt whether he is there or not, or whether he is alive or dead, whether he is a Canaanite or an Israelite, one may remove the debris from above him!³ You might have said: There [permission was given] because [the person in question] had at least presumption of having been alive, but here where it [the embryo] did not have such original presumption of life, one might say no [desecration of the Sabbath shall be permitted], therefore we are informed [that it is].

IF A WOMAN HAS BEEN PUT TO DEATH etc. But why? These things are forbidden for any use? — Rab said: [This refers to the case] where she had said: Give my hair to my daughter. But if she had [similarly] said: Give my hand to my daughter, would we have given it to her? — Rab said: It refers to a wig.⁴ Now the reason [for the permission] is that she had said: 'Give [it]', but if she had not said: 'Give [it]', it would have been as part of her body and forbidden [for any use]. But this matter was questioned by R. Jose b. Hanina, for R. Jose b. Hanina asked: What about the hair of righteous women, and Raba had remarked: His question refers to [their] wig?⁵ — The question of R. Jose b. Hanina referred to the case of [such wig] its hanging on a peg; but here the wig is attached to her [head], therefore the reason [it is permitted] is because she said: 'Give [it]', but if she had not said 'Give [it]', it would be as her body and forbidden.

This appeared difficult to R. Nahman b. Isaac for it is placed in juxtaposition to the [law concerning an] animal, hence just as there [the hair] is part of the body, here too it should be part of the body?⁶ — Rather, said R. Nahman: In the one case [the woman's] it is the actual death which renders the body prohibited for any use,⁷ whereas in the other case [the animal's], the close of the legal proceedings [the pronouncement of the death sentence] renders it prohibited for any use. Levi taught in accord with Rab and he also taught in accord with R. Nahman b. Isaac.⁸ He taught in accord with Rab: If a woman went forth to be executed and she said: 'Give my hair to my daughter', one would give it to her; but if she died [before making such a demand] one would not give it, because the dead must not be used for any purpose. But that is self-evident? — [Say] rather the ornaments of the dead are prohibited for any use.⁹ It was taught in accord with R. Nahman b. Isaac: If a woman died, her hair is permitted for use. If an animal was put to death, it is forbidden for any use. And what is the difference between the one and the other? In the one case it is only the actual death which renders the body prohibited for any use, and in the other case the pronouncement of the death sentence in itself renders it prohibited for any use.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO VALUATION LESS THAN ONE SELA' NOR MORE THAN FIFTY. HOW IS THAT? IF ONE PAID A SELA'¹⁰ AND BECAME RICH, HE NEED NOT GIVE ANY [MORE]. BUT IF HE GAVE LESS THAN A SELA' AND BECAME RICH, HE MUST PAY FIFTY SELA'S.¹¹ IF HE HAD FIVE SELA'S IN HIS POSSESSION,¹² R. MEIR SAYS, THEN HE NEED NOT GIVE MORE THAN ONE, WHEREAS THE SAGES SAY HE MUST GIVE THEM ALL. FOR THERE IS NO VALUATION OF LESS THAN ONE SELA NOR MORE THAN FIFTY SELA'S.

GEMARA. THERE IS NO VALUATION LESS THAN ONE SELA. Whence do we know that? — For Scripture said: And all thy valuations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary,¹³ i.e., all valuations which you evaluate shall be of no less than a shekel. Nor more than fifty sela's, as it is written: Fifty.¹⁴

IF HE HAD FIVE SELA'S IN HIS POSSESSION, etc. What is the reason of R. Meir? — Scripture says: 'Fifty', and it is also written: 'Shekel', i.e., either fifty or one shekel. And the Rabbis? That means that all valuations which you evaluate shall be of no less than one shekel.¹⁵ But where he has [more], there applies the Scriptural verse: According to the means of him that vowed,¹⁶ and here he has means. And R. Meir?¹⁷ — That indicates that the possessions of him who evaluates rather than of him who is evaluated are to be considered. And the Rabbis? — Does this not incidentally prove that where he has possessions, take from him as much as he can pay?

R. Adda b. Ahabah said: If a man had five sela's in his possession and said: My own valuation be upon me [to pay], and he repeats: My own valuation be upon me, and then he paid four sela's on account for the second valuation and one sela' for the first, then he has fulfilled his duty to both. What is the reason? — Because:¹⁸ A creditor, later in order of time, who has collected before [an earlier one] retains what he has collected. [Likewise] here when he paid for the second [valuation] he was in debt for the first,¹⁹ and when he paid for the first he had no more.

(1) Only the cutting of a living person constitutes desecration of the Sabbath, the cutting of meat is unavoidable in eating.

(2) The bringing of any portable property from private territory into a public thoroughfare or vice versa constitutes transgression of the law of the Sabbath as Biblically stated.

(3) V. Yoma 83a.

(4) That wig, tied to her hair, might have been considered part of her body and therefore forbidden for any use, hence also inadmissible as a gift to her daughter. But since she left instruction of such gift, she evidently did not consider the wig part of her body, and guided by her view we do not consider it such either, hence the gift is valid.

(5) According to Deut. XIII, 13ff the inhabitants of a city condemned for idolatrous practices to which they had been led astray were to be destroyed with all their property. Righteous persons, however, lost only their property but not their life. The theoretical question touched the wig of righteous women of such a city: Was it to be considered part of their body and thus will it escape destruction, or is it to be regarded as detachable from the head and as general property does it fall under the ban? At any rate what is a matter of doubt there could not possibly be taken here as settled law!

(6) How then could he interpret our Mishnah as referring to the woman's wig, which is not part of the body?

(7) The reference is indeed to her natural hair, but since hair never lived it is not affected by death, which renders forbidden all such parts of the body which had their vitality cut off by death (Rashi).

(8) Levi had an ancient Baraitha the view of which accorded with Rab and another with R. Nahman b. Isaac.

(9) The reference must hence be to a wig.

(10) A Biblical shekel. According to Lev. XXVII, 8 a special reduction was made in the case of the poor, but any such reduced estimate may not fall below a sela'.

(11) One twenty years of age and of male sex whose normal valuation is fifty sela's, happens to be poor when paying the poor man's exceptional one sela' for any valuation. That sela', being the legal minimum for a poor man, therefore has paid his debt, and freed him from any obligation, even if afterwards he became rich. But if, whilst poor, he had paid less than a sela', he has not paid the minimum, his obligation to pay his valuation still rests upon him, and on becoming rich he must therefore pay the complete sum due, under the circumstances of payment which for a man not poor, amounts to fifty sela's.

(12) And his prescribed valuation was, say, fifty.

(14) Ibid. 3.

(15) Indicating only a minimum beyond which the sum may be increased to the maximum of fifty. There are no rigorous restrictions between these two sums, adjustments being made in accordance with the possessions of the respective dedicant.

(16) Lev. XXVII, 8.

(17) How will he explain this latter verse?

(18) B.K. 34a.

(19) To the extent of the whole five sela's on the view of the Sages in our Mishnah, so that as far as the second valuation is concerned he had no five sela's to pay and hence discharged his obligation by paying the four sela's.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 8a

But if he paid four for the first [valuation] and one for the second, then he has fulfilled his obligation regarding the second one, but he has failed to discharge his obligation touching the first, as all [his sela's] were subject to the payment for the first.¹

R. Adda b. Ahabah asked: If he had five sela's and said in one utterance, Two of my valuations be upon me [to pay], how then? [Shall I say]. Since he said it in one utterance the obligations arise simultaneously so that he would have to pay two and a half for the one valuation and two and a half for the other, or is the whole sum due for each of them? — The question remains [unanswered].

THERE IS NO VALUATION LESS THAN ONE SELA' NOR MORE etc. Why is this re-statement necessary? — This is what we are told: There is none less than one sela', but there are some above one sela'; there is none above fifty sela's, but there are some below fifty sela's, and it [the teaching] is stated anonymously² in accord with the Rabbis.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN GOES ASTRAY³ IN HER RECKONING THERE IS NO RE-OPENING FOR HER [OF THE NIDDAH COUNT] EARLIER THAN SEVEN, NOR LATER THAN AFTER SEVENTEEN DAYS.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a woman astray in her reckoning said: 'I saw uncleanness for one day' then her re-count begins after seventeen days;⁴ [if she says.] 'I saw uncleanness for two days', her re-count commences after seventeen days;⁵ [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for three days', her re-count commences after seventeen days.⁶ [If she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for four days', her re-count commences after sixteen days;⁷ [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for five days', her re-count commences after fifteen days.⁸ [If she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for six days', her re-count commences after fourteen days; [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for seven days', her re-count commences after thirteen days; [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for eight days', her re-count commences after twelve days; [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for nine days', her re-count commences after eleven days; [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for ten days', her re-count commences after ten days;⁹ [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for eleven days', her re-count commences after nine days; [if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for twelve days',¹⁰ her re-count commences after eight days;

(1) The decision being in accord with the Sages, all his sela's were affected by the first valuation. The practical difference lies in the fact that since now he is considered as still obliged to make payment for the first valuation, he would have to pay full fifty sela's if at any later time he became rich.

(2) Whenever one Mishnah reports conflicting opinions in the name of the disputants, and another a decision in this case anonymously, the latter is regarded as authoritative.

(3) Lev. XV deals with the regulations touching the woman's issue (of blood), and distinguishes between an issue 'in time of her impurity' and one 'not in' or 'beyond' the time of her impurity. The flow 'in the time of her impurity' is called dam niddah — the blood of her menstruation; the flow beyond or outside the time of her impurity is called dam zibah — the blood of one having an issue. According to the law of the Torah a woman who menstruates for the first time becomes unclean as niddah for seven days, the day on which she menstruated included. She remains in this state of uncleanness for seven days, independent of whether she has had that issue of blood for the first day only or on any other of the seven days. Even if she should suffer such issue for seven days continuously, as long as it has stopped before sunset on the seventh day, she takes the ritual bath that night and becomes clean thereby. These seven days are her niddah days. The eleven days following are called 'the days of her having an issue', yeme zibah, any issue of blood during which is considered 'not in' or 'beyond the time of her impurity'; this period starts at the end of the seven days of her normal impurity, quite independent of her having taken the bath prescribed or not. Any issue of blood on one of these eleven days renders the woman a zabah ketannah, one having a minor issue, and by taking the ritual bath on the day following the issue, she becomes clean if no new issue appeared on the day of the bath. The same law applies if on any other of the eleven days issue should have appeared. But if such issue appeared on three consecutive days, the woman's considered zabah gedolah, one having a major issue, and she does not regain her ritual cleanness until seven days free from any issue following the last of the three days, have passed. On the seventh day she takes the ritual bath of purification, and on the eighth day she offers two turtle-doves as her sacrifice of purification. If during these eleven days there had been no issue of blood, or only a 'minor issue' then any day from the twelfth on, on which she should have an issue, is the commencement of her niddah days, yeme niddah. If, however, she had become during the eleven days zabah ge dolah, one having a major issue, then she does not become a niddah again until there have been seven days after the last day of the flow during which there was no issue whatsoever. Any issue of blood appearing before such seven days have passed is considered part of the days of zibah. Even after the days of her niddah have started she of course becomes a niddah only when and if she has an issue, yeme niddah signifying no more than that she becomes a niddah in case of any issue, as against her being a zibah during the other period. After she has become a niddah again she remains in this state for seven days. to be followed again by the days of zibah. A woman thus can become a zabah only in the eleven days following her yeme niddah; or, if during these eleven days she had three days' consecutive flow, she remains a zabah until she had had seven days of freedom from any flow. After that period she becomes a niddah again, with the first flow. And similarly a woman can become niddah again only after the passing of the eleven days of zibah, or, if during these days she had become a zabah gedolah, one having a large issue, she can become a niddah only after seven days have gone after the last day of the flow during which no further flow was experienced. Upon the day on which the woman becomes niddah again, depends the count of the rest of these days of her niddah state as well as the count of the days of her zibah. Therefore the day on which she becomes niddah is considered the 'entrance', the 'gate', the 're-opening'. The Mishnah refers to a woman 'astray in her reckoning', i.e., one who after purification has experienced a flow of blood, and does not remember whether she was passing through the days of niddah or those of her zibah. She is unable to emerge from this state of uncertainty to a new safe reckoning until after the end of the present flow she experiences a new one, as to which she is definitely sure that it was her period of niddah. This certainty cannot be obtained earlier than after seven days, nor later than after seventeen days, during which she experiences no flow of blood at all.

(4) If the flow of blood had lasted for only one day, followed by seventeen days free from any flow, then any new flow signifies the commencement of her days of niddah. For the day on which she had the flow concerning which she was astray fell either into her period of zibah or into that of niddah. If that day was one, or even the first one, of her days of zibah then the days of her niddah would have commenced no later than on the tenth day after the flow; and her flow on the eighteenth day renders her a niddah. If, however, the day on which she had that flow, concerning which she was astray, should have been one of her yeme niddah, then having become niddah on that day (after her bath of purification which terminated her uncleanness) she remains in the state of niddah for six more days, becomes a zabah for the eleven days following, to enter her period of niddah thereupon, eleven days later, which is on the eighteenth day or any day following it.

(5) Similarly, if she had seen blood for two days, then the flow of blood again after seventeen days of cleanness is there-commencement of her days of niddah. If these two days were days of zibah then the days of niddah would commence no later than nine days after the flow, Or, if the two days of the flow were in the period of niddah then that period of niddah was over in five days, the following period of zibah terminated after eleven days, or the new period of niddah would re-commence after only sixteen days. But it is also possible that the first of the two days was the last day of the zibah period and the second the first of the niddah period, in which case six more days would be necessary to terminate her niddah period, to be followed by eleven days for her zibah period, so that seventeen days must pass before she can definitely be said to have become a niddah again.

(6) If all the three days were part of the zibah period, then the niddah period would commence no later than eight days after that, the assumption throughout being that there was no flow whatsoever during these seventeen days. If all of the three days fell into the niddah period, then the new period of niddah would commence after fifteen days, i.e., after the last four days of the niddah period, and the following eleven of the zibah period. But since it is also possible that the first two of the three days of the flow were the last days of the zibah period, and that consequently the niddah period would commence only with the third, six more days of the niddah period followed by eleven days of the zibah period must pass before the woman can re-commence her new niddah period, hence again the necessity of seventeen clean days before she can definitely re-commence her reckoning.

(7) If all the four days were either yeme niddah or yeme zibah, the new re-commencement could have started before seventeen days. If they were yeme zibah, the new period of niddah would start after seven days. If the days of the flow fell in the niddah period, the new reckoning could start after fourteen days, viz., the remaining three days of the niddah period and the eleven of the zibah period. In this case one cannot posit the possibility of the first three days of the four days' flow having been the last days of the zibah period, followed by the fourth day as the first of the new niddah period, for, as explained above, the niddah period does not follow upon a three-day flow in the zibah period, before seven completely free days have passed. But it is possible that the first two of the four-day flow were the last days of the zibah period, whereupon only the third day signified the commencement of the zibah period, so that five more days of the niddah and eleven days of the zibah period are required before her re-commencement of her new niddah period may be definitely assumed.

(8) V. next note.

(9) The same consideration, that the first two days may be the last days of her zibah period, necessitates, in the case of the five-day flow, the counting of at least fifteen days, the remaining four of the niddah plus the complete eleven of the zibah periods, in the case of the six-days flow, the counting of the remaining four days of the niddah plus the eleven of the zibah period; of three remaining niddah plus eleven zibah days in the case of a seven-day flow; of two niddah and eleven zibah days in the case of an eight-day flow, and of one remaining day of niddah and eleven days of zibah in the case of a nine-day flow. So that the number of the days necessary moves from seventeen to twelve, on the above considerations. In the case of a ten-day flow, then, even on the assumption that the first two days had belonged to the zibah period, the zibah period recommenced after the seven days of niddah, i.e., on the tenth day, whence only the remaining ten days of zibah need pass before the woman becomes niddah again.

(10) In the case of eleven days, on the same basis, two days of the new zibah period have passed after the intervening days of niddah, so that only the remaining nine days of zibah must be counted before the woman re-enters her niddah period; in the case of a twelve-day flow there are only eight; in the case of a thirteen-day flow only seven days of the zibah period before the new niddah period re-commences. Never earlier than before the passing of seven days, because that is the period necessary for a zibah to become a niddah again, never later than after seventeen days, so that the Mishnaic law becomes evident as indicating the minimum and the maximum necessary for a woman astray in her reckoning before she can definitely reach the 'gate' of her safe reckoning, i.e., the re-commencement of her niddah period.

[if she says,] 'I saw uncleanness for thirteen days', then her re-count commences after seven days; for the re-opening [of the Niddah count] does not come before seven nor later than after seventeen days. R. Adda b. Ahabah said to Rabbah: Why all this [reckoning]? Let her count seven days and be permitted [to have intercourse]! — He answered: [We are meaning] to set her right concerning her menstruation and its re-commencement.¹

Our Rabbis taught: All women who are astray in their reckoning are zaboth² and must offer a sacrifice which must not be eaten,³ with the exception of those whose [niddah] re-count started after the seventh or after the eighth day.⁴ who must offer a sacrifice which is to be eaten. But are women astray in their reckoning zaboth? Furthermore, must a woman who has had an issue one day, or two days, at all offer up a sacrifice? — Rather read, Zaboth who are astray in their reckoning⁵ must offer a sacrifice which is not to be eaten, with the exception of the woman whose [niddah] re-count starts after seven or after eight days, who must offer up a sacrifice that is to be eaten.

MISHNAH. NO SIGNS OF LEPROSY ARE SHUT⁶ UP LESS THAN ONE WEEK AND NONE MORE THAN TWO WEEKS.

GEMARA. NO LESS THAN ONE WEEK refers to human leprosy. NONE MORE THAN THREE WEEKS refers to leprosy of houses. R. Papa said: Thy righteousness is like the mighty mountains,⁷ refers to human leprosy. Thy judgments are like the great deep,⁷ refers to the leprosy of houses. What is the simple meaning of the Scriptural verse? — Were it not for Thy righteousness [as great] as the mighty mountains, who could stand before Thy judgments [as profound] as the great deep! Rabbah said: 'Thy righteousness is like the mighty mountains', because 'Thy judgments are like the great deep'. Wherein are they conflicting? — In the dispute of R. Eleazar and R. Jose b. Hanina, for it was reported that R. Eleazar says: He suppresses;⁸ R. Jose b. Hanina says: He forgives;⁹ Rabbah agrees with the view of R. Eleazar, whilst Rab Judah concurs with that of R. Jose b. Hanina.

MISHNAH. THERE ARE NEVER LESS THAN FOUR FULL MONTHS IN THE YEAR, NOR DID IT SEEM RIGHT TO HAVE MORE THAN EIGHT.¹⁰ THE TWO LOAVES¹¹ WERE CONSUMED NEVER EARLIER THAN THE SECOND, NOR LATER THAN THE THIRD DAY. THE SHEWBREAD¹² WAS CONSUMED NEVER EARLIER THAN THE NINTH NOR LATER THAN THE ELEVENTH DAY. AN INFANT MAY NEVER BE CIRCUMCISED EARLIER THAN THE EIGHTH NOR LATER THAN THE TWELFTH DAY.¹³

GEMARA. What does DID NOT SEEM RIGHT TO HAVE MORE THAN EIGHT mean? — R. Huna said: It did not appear right to the Sages to make more than eight months full. Wherefore is the difference with regard to nine, that they would not [make full]? Because if they did not [stop at eight]

(1) R. Adda meant that this counting of the days has as its sole purpose the permission of renewed sexual congress, whereas our purpose was to enable her to re-establish a definite rule of her counting. For, if e.g., she does not know whether she is in the period of niddah or zibah, she would be confused as to how soon she becomes clean again. as niddah only four more days would be required for her to become clean after a three-day flow, whereas if she were a zibah seven days would be necessary before she becomes a niddah again; or, after one-day's flow, as niddah she would have to wait six more days for the bath of purification, whereas in the case of a minor zibah, such a bath may be taken on the next day.

(2) Plur. of zabah, v. Glos.

(3) This is explained as referring to women astray as to their reckoning who may be suspected of being zaboth. As such they must offer the sacrifices, prescribed for a zabah gedolah, a pair of turtle-doves of which one is a sin-offering, the other a burnt-offering. The burnt-offering is consumed on the altar, but the sin-offering as a rule is partly eaten by the priests. The form of killing, melikah (pinching of the bird's neck with the fingernail) is legitimate only with the required bird sin-offering. Since the woman in the above cases is only suspected of being a 'zabah', her sin-offering is not definitely required. In this doubtful case the sin-offering had to be brought to satisfy the possibility of the woman having been a zabah; but it must not be eaten, because there is reasonable doubt, hence the sacrifice may be legally profane and having been killed in a manner prohibited for profane food, is unfit to be eaten by anybody.

(4) In which the woman must have been a zabah. Having had a twelve-day flow of blood, she must have been zabah. For even on the assumption that the first two days were the last days of a zibah, the woman became zibah again on the second count, for the ten days left, seven had belonged to the niddah and the other three to the new zibah, and of course, if the first days came at the beginning of niddah, or three of them were the end of zibah, the woman would definitely be a zibah. In all other cases, however, the woman is only doubtfully a zabah, for just as one could say that three of the days were in the zibah period, making her a zibah proper (zabah gedolah), so could one say that the last two days of the flow came from the zibah period, without making her a zabah gedolah, so that within the days concerned she could not become a zibah again.

(5) I.e., only those who, having had a three-day flow and being thus under the definite suspicion of zibah, whilst astray in their reckoning.

(6) Rashi reads: There is no cleanliness obtainable in the case of leprosy. etc. Lev. XIII distinguishes between leprosy which the priest at his first inspection may be able to declare as either clean or unclean, and doubtful cases. In case of doubt (ibid., 4) the priests must shut up the suspected leper for at least one week, in the case of leprosy of a house, which has remained unchanged after the first week, and has either remained unchanged or has spread at the end of the second week, the priest must shut up the house for another, the third week. V. Neg. XIII, 1.

(7) Ps. XXXVI, 7. The word zedakah (righteousness) has also the meaning of 'mercy'. It is a mark of divine mercy in prescribing one week's shutting in for man.

(8) Or, presses down the balance of merits; v. next note.

(9) Or, raises the scale of impurity. According to R. Eleazar: The Lord in His mercy ignores man's sins, so that his good deeds may save him when before the throne of God in judgment. According to R. Jose b. Hanina: The Lord forgiving, wipes the sins off completely, or, in the case of the man's repentance, changes his very sins into virtues. (V. R.H. 17a.) Rabbah, explaining in terms of R. Eleazar, sees God's zedakah in the fact He keeps His judgment of man's sins in the deep abyss, invisible on the day of judgment, whereas Rab Judah suggests, in accord with the other Tanna, that but for God's supreme zedakah which forgives iniquity, or, for the repentant changes it into moral asset, man could not stand the divine judgment.

(10) A full month (lit., 'a prolonged one') is one of thirty days, a defective one is one of twenty-nine days. The average year has six months of thirty days each, and six of twenty-nine days each. For there are about twenty-nine and one half days between one new moon and the other, whence a month of thirty days, to restore the balance, must be followed by one of twenty-nine days. However, there are more than twenty-nine and one half days between one new moon and the other, approximately twenty-nine days, twelve hours and forty minutes; furthermore, there are other causes influencing the fixing of the calendar, as the result of which the arrangement of six full and defective months undergoes certain variations, so that one year might have a larger number of full, the other more than the half of defective months. In the time of the Mishnah the Sanhedrin decreed the beginning of the new months on the basis of the testimony of witnesses who had actually seen the new moon. But even then conditions would arise (such as non-visibility of the new moon, due to cloudy weather) when the Sanhedrin would be guided by its own astronomical calculations. For such a decree the principle was adopted that no year may have more than eight, nor less than four full months.

(11) Of the Feast of Weeks, v. Lev. XXIII, 27. Since they could not be eaten before the lambs of the sacrifice had been offered up, they were not as profane food, for which alone permission to bake or cook was given on the Holy Day on which all manner of work is prohibited. And as not immediately ready for human food, and hence not under the category of permitted labour, these breads had to be baked on the day before the Feast of Weeks, or, if the latter fell on a Sabbath, on the Friday preceding it. i.e., on the third day. Ex. XII, 16: Save that which every man must eat, that alone may be done by you, excludes that which is not immediately available for human use.

(12) Placed every Sabbath on the Table in the Sanctuary and consumed by the priests on the following Sabbath, they had to be baked on the preceding Friday (not earlier, since they were to be fresh). If a Holy Day fell on Friday, they were baked on Thursday. If the two days of the New Year fell on Thursday and Friday (the only Holy Day which could, even in the time of the Sanhedrin, last for two days. v. Men. 100b), the shewbread would be baked on Wednesday to be eaten on the following Sabbath, on the eleventh day, its baking overriding neither the Sabbath, nor a Holy Day.

(13) The circumcision performed on the eighth day overrides both Sabbath and Holy Day. Here, however, we deal with a boy born Friday eve at twilight. Hence his birthday is doubtful: it may be either Friday or Saturday. the twilight may be considered as belonging either to the day past or to the following one. The Sabbath following may therefore be the eighth or the ninth day after the birth and the circumcision must be postponed (for a doubtfully eighth day circumcision does not override the Sabbath) to the following, the tenth day. If the following day be a Holy Day, the circumcision could not take place before the eleventh day. If the two days of New Year fall on Sunday, the circumcision is postponed to the twelfth day. V. Shab. 137b.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 9a

the new moon¹ would come three days too early! But now, too. It would come two days too early?² — This is in accord with what R. Mesharsheya said: ‘It refers to a case where the preceding year was prolonged’,³ Here, too, the reference is to a year following a prolonged year, and the prolongation of a year is one month.⁴ But put one full month against one incomplete month, and there will be still one day left?⁵ — People do not pay too much attention to that.⁶

‘Ulla said: [the meaning is,] It did not seem right to the Sages to make more than eight defective months. He [the Tanna] states here a reason:⁷ What is the reason that it did not seem right to the Sages to have less than four full months? Because it did not seem right to them to have more than eight defective months. Why not nine? Because in that case the new moon would be coming three days too late?⁸ But now, too, it would be coming two days too late? — That is to be explained in accord with R. Mesharsheya: ‘It refers to a case where the preceding year was prolonged’; here, too, the reference is to a year following a prolonged year.⁹ Deduct one defective month against one full month, and still there will be one day left?¹⁰ They [the people] will say: It [the moon] has actually been seen, whilst we had paid no attention.¹¹ [

(1) The new moon, coming say on Wednesday, with New Year starting only on the Sabbath. This discrepancy would cause popular murmuring against the ‘arbitrariness of the Sages’.

(2) But the arrangement of eight months, too, would leave a difference of two days, hence what is the value of limiting it to eight full months? Normally six full months plus six defective ones would take care of the situation.

(3) I.e., a year of thirteen months.

(4) Which may be either full or defective, and having made the intercalation of the preceding year defective, we have regained one day. which is counter-balanced by one day of the eight full months this year.

(5) Yet, even with one month full, and one month of last year incomplete. we gain only one day, so that one day still intervenes between the new moon of Tishri and the fixation of the New Year; so that popular clamour against the Sanhedrin's margin would be aroused still.

(6) A one day's margin would not be considered abuse of the Sanhedrin's function.

(7) And ‘for what reason’, he says.

(8) ‘Ulla's interpretation of the Mishnah: No less than four full months, but not more either, because ‘it did not seem right to the Sages to have more than eight defective months’, so that the New Moon should not appear three days after the New Year.

(9) And the prolonged month was made full, the consideration being the reverse of the former.

(10) Cf. n. 3 mutatis mutandis.

(11) The people assume in this case that the Sanhedrin had good reason, the basis of which, the actual seeing of the new moon, had escaped themselves.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 9b

In what principle do they differ?¹ — In regard to the prolonged year. For it was taught: By how much is a year prolonged? By thirty days. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: By a month.²

An objection was raised: The Feast of Weeks can fall only on the day of the waving,³ and the New Year can fall only on either the day of the waving or the day following the night of the last day of the full month [of Nisan].⁴ Now that will be right according to ‘Ulla if eight defective months could be arranged, but not full ones; hence this may happen thus: if both are defective, it falls on the day of the waving; if one is full and the other defective, it falls on the day following the night of the last day of the full month.⁵ But according to R. Huna who says one does make [eight] full months, it may happen that it falls on the day following the day after the night of the last day of the full month?⁶ — R. Huna will answer you: But is it indeed right, according to ‘Ulla? Only eight [full] months are not made, but we do make seven. Now can it not happen that we arrange them not in winter but in the summer, with the result that it would possibly fall upon the day following the day after the last day of the full month!⁷ — Rather, this is in agreement with the ‘Others’, for it was taught: ‘Others’ taught. Between one Feast of Weeks and the other, and between one New Year and the other, there is an interval of no more than four days [of the week], or in the case of a prolonged year, five days.⁸ But, at all events, on the view of the ‘Others’, it could not fall on the day of the waving? — R. Mesharsheya said: The reference is to a prolonged year, and the prolongation of a year is by thirty days. Deduct one [full] month against the other [full one] and it will fall upon the day of the waving.⁹

Said R. Adda b. Ahabah to Raba: Do ‘Others’ intend teaching us [how to count] the number?¹⁰ — This is what they convey to us: That it is not obligatory to proclaim a new moon on the basis of having seen it.¹¹ Rabina demurred: But there are days made of hours,¹² and days of thirty years?¹³ — Since they do not occur every year, he does not count them. Samuel, too, agreed with the view of R. Huna, for Samuel said: The lunar year consists of no less than three hundred and fifty-two, nor of more than three hundred and fifty-six days. How is that? — If the two are full,¹⁴ there are [fifty] six; if the two are incomplete, [fifty] two; if one is complete and one incomplete, [fifty] four.

An objection was raised: [If one said,] I shall be a Nazirite according to the number of the days of the solar year, then he must count for his Naziriteship three hundred and sixty-five days according to the years of the sun; [if he said,] According to the days of the lunar year, he must count for his Naziriteship three hundred and fifty-four days according to the days of the lunar year. Now, if that [account above] were right, at times you find [a year of three hundred and fifty] six days?¹⁵ — With regard to vows go after human parlance as well as after the majority of years. Rabbi, too, held the view of R. Huna, for it was taught: Rabbi happened to have arranged for nine defective months, and the moon [of Tishri] was seen in its due season! Whereupon Rabbi was amazed and said: We have arranged nine incomplete ones and yet the moon [of Tishri] appeared in due season! R. Simeon b. Rabbi said to him: perhaps this happened to be a prolonged year

(1) R. Huna and ‘Ulla. R. Huna accepts R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's view and ‘Ulla that of the first Tanna.

(2) A month of twenty-nine days. The margin is the point of difference.

(3) The second day of Passover (v. Lev. XXIII, 10-12) i.e., on the same day of the week as the second day of Passover. The fifty days are counted from the sixteenth of Nisan to the first of Shabuoth. Hence the fiftieth day must fall upon the same week-day as the first, the day of the waving.

(4) Or iburo, the night of its being made a full month, because upon the night depends its completeness, for if the new moon is proclaimed for the thirty-first day, that fact renders the month just passed full (one of thirty days).

(5) [Normally the twelve months of the year beginning with Tishri are full and defective in rotation. Where there is a departure from this order, the only months affected are Kislew in the winter and Siwan in the summer, which months are made defective instead of being normally full. Now if both these months are made defective, giving eight defective months for the year, there is an interval between the 30th of Nisan and the first of Tishri of eight days of the week, i.e., the first of Tishri falls on the same day of the week as the 31st of Nisan; and since the 30th of Nisan falls on the same day as the day of waving, which is exactly fifteen days before, the New Year will also fall on the day of waving. Should, on the other hand, only one of these two months be made defective — namely Kislew, whilst Siwan is full, there would be nine days of the week difference between the 30th of Nisan and the first of Tishri, so that New Year will fall on the 31st day. i.e., the day following the night of the last day of the full month of Nisan.]

(6) [On the view of R. Huna that we make eight full months, the two months Heshwan (in winter) and Iyyar (in summer) normally defective are made full, with the result that one extra day of the week is added as interval between the 30th day of Nisan and the first Tishri making New Year to fall two week-days after the 30th of Nisan.]

(7) [By making the extra full month in the summer, there would be added an extra day of the week as in p. 51, n. 6 with the same result.]

(8) The statement that the New Year must fall either on the day of the week on which the waving day falls or upon the day following the night after the last day of the full month is in accord with the teaching of 'Others', who hold that all months are full and defective in strict rotation, making a total of 354 which is four days over fifty weeks, leaving four days of the week as interval between one New Year and the other in a normal year and five in a prolonged year.

(9) [Having added in winter an extra full month, Nisan is made defective, with the result that we have four defective months during the summer, making New Year fall on the day of the waving. v. p. 51, n. 5.]

(10) From the fact that all months follow each other in regular order, it follows that there are four days' difference between the New Years.

(11) Even without having actually seen the new moon the new month may be proclaimed by the proper authorities.

(12) Granted that 'Others' go by the order of the new moons, yet it happens that in a simple (not prolonged) year, five days may intervene between one Passover and the other. For the forty minutes above twenty-nine days and twelve hours, between one moon and the other, make in one year an additional eight hours, in three years an additional day.

(13) And even when that is accounted for, there remain minutes, which added to one another amount in every thirty years to one complete day. The exact duration is: twenty-nine days, twelve $\frac{793}{1080}$ hours, which time fragments combined add one day in every three, and one additional one every thirty years.

(14) Of the defective ones (i.e., Marheshwan and Iyyar) they add two days, i.e., three hundred and fifty-six days altogether; if two of the full ones (i.e., Kislew and Siwan) are made defective, there are two days less than usual, and the year has but three hundred and fifty-two days.

(15) Then why should the Nazirite be given a reduced term, two days shorter?

and the prolongation of a year is by thirty days. and last year we made the two full, put the three full against the three defective, and it will come to Its proper place.¹ He answered to him: Light of Israel! So it was! MISHNAH. THEY BLEW NEVER LESS THAN TWENTY-ONE BLASTS IN THE SANCTUARY AND NEVER MORE THAN FORTY-EIGHT.² THEY PLAYED

NEVER ON LESS THAN TWO HARPS,³ OR MORE THAN SIX, NOR EVER ON LESS THAN TWO FLUTES OR MORE THAN TWELVE. ON TWELVE DAYS IN THE YEAR WAS THE FLUTE [HALIL] PLAYED BEFORE THE ALTAR:⁴ AT THE KILLING OF THE FIRST PASSOVER-SACRIFICE,⁵ AT THE KILLING OF THE SECOND PASSOVER-SACRIFICE,⁶ ON THE FIRST FESTIVAL DAY OF PASSOVER, ON THE FESTIVAL DAY OF THE FEAST OF WEEKS, AND ON THE EIGHT DAYS OF THE FEAST [OF TABERNACLES].⁷ AND THEY DID NOT PLAY ON A PIPE [ABUB]⁸ OF BRONZE BUT ON A REED PIPE, BECAUSE ITS TUNE IS SWEETER. NOR WAS ANY BUT A PIPE SOLO USED FOR CLOSING⁹ A TUNE. BECAUSE IT MAKES A PLEASANT FINALE. THEY¹⁰ WERE SLAVES OF THE PRIESTS. ACCORDING TO R. MEIR. R. JOSE SAID: THEY WERE OF THE FAMILIES BETH HAPEGARIM, BETH-ZIPPORUA AND FROM EMMAUS,¹¹ FROM WHICH PRIESTS WOULD MARRY [WOMEN].¹² R. HANINA B. ANTIGONOS SAID: THEY WERE LEVITES.¹³

GEMARA. Our Mishnah¹⁴ will not be in accord with R. Judah. for it was taught: R. Judah said: One who sounds a smaller number of blasts may not sound less than seven, and one who sounds a larger number must not exceed sixteen. What principle are they disputing? — R. Judah says: Teki'ah, teru'ah, teki'ah¹⁵ constitute one sound,¹⁶ whereas the Sages hold: Teki'ah is a separate sound, so is teru'ah, and so the [second] teki'ah.¹⁷ What is the reason for R. Judah's view? — It is written: And when ye blow an alarm [teki'ah],¹⁸ and again it is written: They shall blow an alarm [teru'ah],¹⁹ from this it is evident that teki'ah, teru'ah and teki'ah are one sound.²⁰ And the Sages? — That merely indicates that the teru'ah sound is to be both preceded and followed by a teki'ah sound.²¹ What is the reason of the Sages' view? — Scripture says: But when the assembly is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm.²² Now, if one should assume that teki'ah, teru'ah, and teki'ah are together only one sound would the Divine Law have said: perform but one half of the command! And R. Judah? — This is no more than a signal.²³ According to whom will be the following teaching of R. Kahana: There may be no interruption whatever between teki'ah and teru'ah? — According to whom? According to R. Judah. But this is obvious. You might have said: It may be in accord even with the Rabbis, and it is taught thus only to exclude the view of R. Johanan who said that if one heard nine sounds even in the course of nine hours during the day, he had fulfilled his duty,²⁴ therefore we are informed [that this is not so]. But say, perhaps it is indeed so? — If that were the case, what means: 'No interruption whatever'?

ON TWELVE DAYS IN THE YEAR WAS THE FLUTE PLAYED etc. Why just on these days? Because an individual²⁵ completes the Hallel psalms on them.²⁶ For R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: There are eighteen days on which an individual completes the Hallel: the eight days of the Feast [of Tabernacles], the eight days of Hanukkah, the first Festival day of Passover and the Festival day of the Feast of Weeks. In the exile²⁷ [one praying individually completes the Hallel] on twenty-one days: the nine days of the Feast [of Tabernacles], the eight days of Hanukkah, the two Festival days of Passover, and the two Festival days of the Feast of Weeks. Why this difference that on the Feast [of Tabernacles] we complete Hallel on all the days, and on the Passover Festival we do

(1) Rabbi also held that eight full months are the limit, hence his astonishment when the new moon of Tishri came at the proper time in spite of the additional incomplete months. Last year the two normally defective months (Heshwan and Iyyar) were made full and the intercalated month was full. If the three defective ones of this year are placed against the three full ones of last year a normal situation is achieved, hence the new moon of Tishri appeared at the moment when it was fixed.

(2) V. Suk. 53b.

(3) Lit., 'a kind of hose', nabla in Greek, which according to Josephus had twelve strings and was played with the hand.

(4) On these days all the thanksgiving Psalms (Hallel. Ps. CXIII-CXVIII) were sung. The meaning here is doubtful: either, 'on these days the flute was played before the altar, whereas on other days it was played together with all other instruments on the Dukhan by the Levites', or on these days alone the flute was played, on other days other instruments only. The technical term 'beat' (vfn) applies to the flute, because tunes are evoked thereon by beating with the fingers on the holes.

(5) During the singing of the Hallel, Pes. 64a.

(6) On Iyyar the fourteenth, when the Passover-sacrifice of those who on Nisan the fourteenth were on a journey afar off, or in an unclean state, was offered up. V. Num. IX, 9ff.

(7) The playing of the flute on these days was part of the official music in the Sanctuary, prescribed during the process of offering up the sacrifices, and overriding both Sabbath and Holy Days. But the playing of the flute at the Water Festival (Suk. 50a) overrode neither, and was permissible on a week-day only.

(8) The change in the Hebrew designation for 'pipe' is explained in the Gemara.

(9) Either, 'to smoothe', then in the causative, to close a tune softly; or, 'to separate', to close one before the other starts; or, the overture, before the song commences.

(10) It was the youths or servants who played the flutes as well as the other instruments.

(11) Near Tiberias.

(12) Not slaves but youths of noble families, with whom the proud priestly families were willing to intermarry. The practical difference arising from this dispute has something to do with a man's claim to descent and desire to marry into a priestly family. If none but the youths of such excellent families were admitted to such service, participation in the latter would be sufficient evidence of noble descent and would eo ipso be sufficient ground for admission into such family. According to R. Meir even servants were admitted to such service, hence former participation therein is no evidence of noble descent, and no self-sufficient ground for admission into a priestly family.

(13) Legally also non-Levites were admissible. Actually, however, only Levites were admitted, whence the fact of ones participation was sufficient proof of levitical descent,

(14) In that it teaches: 'They blew never less than twenty-one, nor more than forty-eight blasts'.

(15) Teki'ah: one long sound; teru'ah; a rapid succession of three notes each, a broken tune. The value (length) of a teki'ah is equal to a teru'ah. V. R.H. 34a as to the significance and form of the sounds.

(16) And consequently are to be sounded without a break between them.

(17) And consequently are to be separated from each other by a small pause.

(18) Num. X, 5.

(19) Ibid. 6.

(20) The Hebrew verb used to denote 'blow' in both instances is derived from the same root as teki'ah.

(21) The proof is derived from the fact that teru'ah in these passages is preceded and followed by the root word of 'teki'ah', interpreted here as indicative of the form the blast took.

(22) Num. X, 7.

(23) It is not a proper sound of teki'ah, but a mere signal of assembly.

not do so on all of its days? — The days of the Feast [of Tabernacles] are differentiated from one another in respect of the sacrifices due thereon, whereas the days of Passover are differentiated from one another in respect of their sacrifices.¹ Let it then be read on the Sabbath which is distinguished by its sacrifices? — It [Sabbath] is not called a festival. But what of New Moon which is called a festival, let the complete Hallel be said on it? — [New Moon] is not sanctified as to [prohibition of] labour, as it is written: Ye shall have a song as in the night when a feast is hallowed,² i.e., only the night sanctified towards a festival requires a song, but the night which is not sanctified towards a festival does not require a song. Then let the Hallel be said on the New Year and on the Day of Atonement, both of which are called Festival and are sanctified by [the prohibition of] labour?³ — That [is not possible] because of R. Abbahu, for R. Abbahu said: The ministering angels said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Why do not the Israelites sing a song before you on the New Year and on the Day of Atonement? He answered them: Would that be possible; the King sits on the throne of Judgment, with the books of those destined to live and destined to die before Him, and Israel singing a song before Me? But there is Hanukkah, on which neither one nor the other [condition applies] and the Hallel is said? — That is due to the miracle. Then let it be said on Purim, on which, too, a miracle occurred? — Said R. Isaac: [It is not said] because no song [Hallel] is said for a miracle that occurred outside the [Holy] Land. To this R. Nahman b. Isaac demurred: But there is the exodus from Egypt, which constitutes a miracle that happened outside the Land, and yet we say Hallel? — There it is due to the fact taught, for it was taught: Before Israel entered the [Holy] Land, all the lands were considered fit for song to be said [if a miracle had occurred in their boundaries]; once Israel had entered the Land, no other countries were considered fit for song to be said. R. Nahman, however, answered: The reading [of the Megillah]⁴ that is its [Purim's] Hallel. Raba said: It fits quite well there: Praise ye servants of the Lord,⁵ but not servants of Pharaoh; but here 'servants of the Lord', not servants of Ahasuerus. Surely they are still servants of Ahasuerus! But according to R. Nahman who says the reading [of the Megillah] is its Hallel, was it not taught that after Israel had entered the Land, no other land was considered fit to sing Hallel about? — After Israel was exiled they [the other countries] were restored to their original fitness.

THEY DID NOT PLAY ON A PIPE OF BRONZE: He [the Tanna] begins with Halil and closes with Abub? — Said R. Papa. Halil is the same of Abub [this latter being its right name], and why was it called Halil? — Because its tune is sweet [hali].

Our Rabbis taught: There was a pipe in the Sanctuary which was smooth and thin, made of reed, and from the days of Moses, [and its sound was pleasant].⁶ The king commanded to overlay it with gold, whereupon its sound was no more pleasant. Then its overlay was taken off, and its sound was pleasant again as before. There was a cymbal in the Sanctuary from the days of Moses, made of bronze, and its sound was pleasant; then it became damaged. The Sages sent for craftsmen from Alexandria of Egypt, and they mended it, but its sound was not pleasant any more. Thereupon they removed the improvement and its sound became as pleasant as it was before. A bronze mortar was in the Sanctuary, from the days of Moses, and it would mix the drugs. When it became damaged the Sages sent for craftsmen from Alexandria of Egypt who mended it, but it would no more mix the drugs as well as it used to.⁷ Whereupon they removed the improvement, and it would mix them well again as before. These two vessels were left over from the first Sanctuary, and after they had been damaged there was no remedy for them. It is with reference to them that David said: They were of burnished brass,⁸ and bright brass.⁹ In connection with them it is said also: And two vessels of fine bright brass, precious as gold.¹⁰ Rab and Samuel were disputing: One said each of them had the full weight of two of gold; the other held both of them had the weight of one of gold. R. Joseph learnt: Both of them had the weight of one of gold. It was taught: Nathan said: They were two each,¹¹ for shenayim is the written text, which one should read: not shenayim [two], but shniyyim [double ones].

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel taught: The Siloah was gushing forth through a mouth of the size of an issar.¹² The king commanded and it was widened so that its waters be increased, but the waters diminished. Thereupon it was narrowed again, whereupon it had its [original] flow, to make true that which was said: Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might.¹³ Thus also would R. Simeon b. Gamaliel say: There was no hirdolim in the Sanctuary. [What is hirdolim?] — Abaye said: A musical instrument [table]¹⁴ worked by pressure [of water] because its sound was heavy and disturbed the music. Rabbah b. Shila, in the name of R. Mattenah, on the authority of Samuel, said: There was a magrefa¹⁵ in the Sanctuary; it had ten holes, each of which produced

(3) In spite of the fact that the New Moon is also called a festival, it lacks the condition of 'sanctification by Prohibition of labour'.

(13) Jer. IX, 22. The lesson to be derived from these accounts seems to be, no 'foreign' improvements could remove what appeared imperfect in the Sanctuary. Things became right after the disastrous 'improvements' were removed.

(14) No absolutely satisfactory interpretation of this work is available: The very letters are uncertain, nor is the text clear. V. Tosaf. a.l. The rendering here adopts the reading ab (heavy) instead of 'areb (pleasant) of cur. edd. V. Marginal Gloss. Jast. connects it with hydraula (water-organ) and renders: There was no organ used in the Sanctuary because it would interfere (eliminating 'areb, pleasant. perhaps as dittography of um'arbeb) with the sweetness of the song.

ten different kinds of sounds, with the result that the whole amounted to one hundred kinds of sounds. A Tanna taught: It was one cubit long, one cubit high, from it projected a handle, which had ten holes. Each of them produced one hundred kinds of sounds, amounting for the whole to one thousand kinds of sounds. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: To remember whose teaching it is: The Baraitha exaggerates'.¹ THEY WERE SLAVES OF THE PRIESTS. Shall we say they are of conflicting opinions concerning the following principle: He who said they [the players of the instruments] were slaves holds that the essential in the music of the Sanctuary was the singing with the mouth, the instrumental music being just for sweetening the sound; whereas he who said that they were Levites holds the instrumental music to have been the essential. But if you reason this way, what will appear as R. Jose's view? If he holds that the essential of the [Sanctuary] music was the singing with the mouth, it [the instrumental music] should have been satisfactory [if performed] by slaves; if [on the other hand] he holds that instrumental music was the essential, it would have to be done by Levites?² — In reality he holds that vocal music was the essential; here, however, they are disputing as to whether one may promote one from the dukhan³ to noble⁴ families and to the enjoyment of tithes.⁵ He who said that they [the players of the instruments] were slaves would hold one may not promote any one from the dukhan to either noble families or to the enjoyment of tithes; whereas he who said they were Levites would hold one may promote any one from the dukhan both to [marriage into] noble families and to the enjoyment of tithes; whereas he who said that they [the players of instruments] were Israelites, would hold that one may promote any one from the dukhan to [marriage into] noble families, but not to the enjoyment of tithes.⁶

Our Rabbis taught: The omission of the song invalidates the sacrifice, this is the view of R. Meir. The Sages, however, hold that the omission of the song does not invalidate the sacrifice. What is the reason of R. Meir? — R. Eleazar⁷ said: Because Scripture said, And I have given the Levites — they are given to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel . . . and to make atonement for the children of Israel,⁸ i.e., just as atonement⁹ is indispensable, so is the song indispensable. And the Rabbis? — This [analogy is] with reference to another teaching of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar said: Just as the atonement is performed during the day, so does the song take place during the day.¹⁰

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Whence do we know that fundamentally the song is obligatory on the basis of the Torah? As it is said: Then shall he minister in the name of the Lord his God.¹¹ Now which ministry is it in the course of which the Lord's name is mentioned? You must say: It is the song. But perhaps it is the [priest's] raising of the hands [to bless]? — Since Scripture said: To minister unto Him and to bless in His name,¹² it follows that the priest's blessing [in itself] is no ministry. R. Mattenah said: [It is derived] from here: Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God in joyfulness and with gladness of heart.¹³ Now which service is it that is 'in joyfulness and with gladness of heart'? — You must say: It is song. But perhaps it means the words of the Torah, as it is written: The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart?¹⁴ — They are described as 'rejoicing the heart', but not as 'gladdening [the heart]'. But say [it refers to] first-fruits. as it is written: And thou shalt rejoice in all the good?¹⁵ — They are called ‘good’, but not ‘gladdening the heart’. R. Mattenah said: Whence do we know that the [offering up of] first-fruits requires a song? — We infer that from the analogy of the words ‘good’, ‘good’¹⁶ which occur here too. But that is not so, for R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Whence do we know that the song is not sung [in the Sanctuary] except over wine? — Because it is said: And the vine said unto them: Should I leave my wine, which cheereth God aid man?¹⁷ Granted that it cheers men, whereby can it cheer God? From this it is evident that the song is not sung except over wine! — That is possible in accord with what R. Jose taught: [You shall take of the fruit of the ground¹⁸ implies] You may offer the fruit, but not liquids. Whence do we know that if he brought grapes and pressed them [he has performed his duty de facto]? The text therefore states: Which thou shalt bring.¹⁹

Hezekiah said [we infer this] from the following passage.²⁰ And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was over the song; he was master [yazor] in the song, because he was skilful.²¹ Do not read ‘yazor’, but ‘yashir’ [he sang]. Belvati, in the name of R. Johanan inferred it from here: To do the work of service.²² Which work needs [depends on] service? Say: That is the song. R. Isaac inferred it from here: Take up the melody, and sound the timbrel, the sweet harp with the psaltery.²³ R. Nahman b. Isaac derived it from here: Those yonder lift up their voice, they sing for joy; for the majesty of the Lord they shout from the sea.²⁴ One Tanna derived it from here: But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none, because the service of the holy things belonged unto them: they bore them upon their shoulders.²⁵ Would I not have known from the meaning of ‘upon their shoulders’, that they bore them? Wherefore then they bore them? But ‘they bore them’ here means ‘in song’, for thus also it is said: Take up [se’u] the melody and sound the timbrel,²³ and it is said also: They lift up [yisse’u] their voices, they sing for joy, etc.²⁴ Hananiah, the son of the brother of R. Joshua derived it from here: Moses spoke and God answered him by a voice²⁶

(1) Whereas the Mishnah is exact in its style, the Baraitha allows itself occasional hyperbolic language. R. Gershom a.l. uses severe language against the Baraitha. Rashi refers to Hul. 90b where, however, some of the exaggerations go back to the Mishnah Middoth, or are no exaggerations. In this case, at any rate, the Mishnah reports a reasonably effective instrument, whereas the Baraitha tells a tall instrument story.

[i.e.,] concerning the voice.¹ R. Ashi² derived it from here: It came even to pass when the trumpeters and singers were as one to make one sound to be heard.³ R. Jonathan derived it from here: That they die not, neither they, nor ye.⁴ [i.e.,] just as you at the service of the altar, so they, too, at the service of the altar. It was taught also thus: 'That they die not, neither they, nor ye. viz., ye by engaging in their work, or they by engaging in yours, would incur penalty of death; they, however, by engaging in [another's] work of their⁵ own [group] would be incurring penalty for transgression, but not death. Abaye said: We have it on tradition that a singing Levite who did his colleague's work at the gate incurs the penalty of death,⁶ as it is said: And those that were to pitch before the tabernacle eastward before the tent of meeting toward the sunrising, were Moses and Aaron, etc. and the stranger that drew nigh was to be put to death.⁷ What 'stranger' is meant here? Would you say a real stranger [non-priest]? But that has been mentioned [by Scripture] already! Rather, must it mean a 'stranger' to this particular service.

An objection was raised: Concerning a Levite chorister that attended to the Temple gates, or a gate-keeping Levite who sang, as to whether they are guilty of a transgression or incurring penalty of death, that is a matter of dispute among Tannaim, for it was taught: It happened that R. Joshua b. Hananyia went to assist R. Johanan b. Gudgeda in the fastening of the Temple doors,⁸ whereupon he [the latter] said to him: My son, turn back, for you are of the choristers, not of the door-keepers. Would you not say that they were of divided opinion herein, that one held⁹ he incurs the penalty of death, and for this reason the Rabbis forbade [their assisting], whereas the other held that only a transgression was involved, whence [the Rabbis] did not decree this preventive measure? — No, both agree that only a transgression is involved; [and their point of issue is the following:] one holds that the Rabbis forbade assisting as a preventive measure, the other holding that they did not forbid assisting as a preventive measure.¹⁰

R. Abin asked: Does a freewill burnt-offering of a community require song or not? The Divine Law says: Your burnt-offerings¹¹, which means no matter whether they are obligatory or freewill-offerings; or in saying 'your burnt-offerings' does perhaps the Divine Law mean those of all Israel?¹² — Come and hear: And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar. And when the burnt-offering began, the song of the Lord began also, and the trumpets, together with the instruments of David, King of Israel.¹³ What need was there here for song? Would you say it was on account of [the daily] obligatory burnt-offering? That surely needed no consultation? Rather, it was one in connection with a freewill burnt-offering! Said R. Joseph: No, it was the burnt-offering [offered] on the new moon, and it was questionable as to whether the new month has been fixed in its right time so that it should be offered up, or not. Said Abaye to him: How can you say so,¹⁴ is it not written: And on the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end . . . then Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar, etc.¹⁵ — Rather, said Rami the son of R. Yeba: The question was with reference to the lamb offered up with the ‘Omer,¹⁶ [namely]: Was the new month decreed in its right time or not so that the lamb may be offered? — R. Avya demurred to this: They should have seen when the paschal lamb had been sacrificed, when the leavened bread had been eaten!¹⁷ Rather, said R. Ashi: It is the same as with the messenger of the congregation, who consults [formally asks for permission to start the prayer].¹⁸ Now that you have come to this answer, say: Even if it was the case of the [daily] obligatory burnt-offering, [yet there is no difficulty]: It is the same as with any messenger of a community, who consults [his congregation].

Come and hear: R. Jose said, Good¹⁹ things are brought about on a good [auspicious] day, and evil ones on a bad one. It is said, The day on which the first Temple was destroyed was the ninth of Ab, and it was at the going out of the Sabbath,²⁰ and at the end of the seventh [Sabbatical] year. The [priestly] guard was that of Jehoharib, the priests and Levites were standing on their platform singing the song. What song was it? And He hath brought upon them their iniquity, and will cut them off in their evil.²¹ They had no time to complete [the psalm with] ‘The Lord our God will cut them off’, before the enemies came and overwhelmed them. The same happened the second time [the second Sanctuary's destruction].²² Now what need was there for song? Would you say that it was on account of the [daily] burnt-offering? But that could not be, for on the seventeenth of Tammuz the continual sacrifice had been abolished.²³ Hence it was on account of a freewill burnt-offering! But how could you think so? Why should an obligatory-offering have been impossible and a freewill-offering available? — That is no difficulty: A young ox may accidentally have come to them!²⁴ Said Raba, or, as some say, R. Ashi: But how could you think so?²⁵ The song of the day was: The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof,²⁶ whereas the verse, ‘And He hath brought upon them their iniquity’ belongs to the song due on the fourth day of the week! Rather [what you must say is.] It was just a lamentation text that had come to their mouth. But it says: ‘They were standing upon the platform’²⁷ [Rather, say] That is in accord with Resh Lakish who said: The song may be sung even without any [attending] sacrifice.²⁸ But that principle might be applied to a voluntary burnt-offering, too?²⁹ — That might lead to an offence.³⁰ How is it therewith?³¹ — Come and hear: R. Mari the son of R. Kahana taught: Over your burnt-offerings and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings,³² just as the burnt-offering is Most Holy, so are the peace-offerings [referred to] Most Holy,³³ and just as the peace-offerings have a definite time fixed for them, so have the burnt-offerings a definite time fixed for them.³⁴

(1) He commanded him concerning the voice of song, Moses being a Levite.

(2) Marginal Gloss suggests R. Oshaia, the usual disputant of R. Jonathan who follows.

(3) II Chron. V, 13.

(4) Num. XVIII, 3. The only altar service of fit Levites was the singing. Anyone performing at the altar any service for which he is unfitted, as e.g.. exchanging the Levite's task for that of the priest's incurs that penalty.

(5) If a Levite engaged in the work of another Levite, his offence is not as serious as that of one who had undertaken Priest's work; still, it is an offence.

(6) Abaye does not appear satisfied with the distinction made just now, because he found a teaching much more severe,

(7) Num. III, 38. The Torah would not state anything twice. In III, 10: The stranger that draweth nigh shall be put to death (i.e., by the hand of heaven). Hence the statement involving a similar penalty to the stranger in verse 38 must refer to another 'stranger', a Levite who was a 'stranger' because unfit for that service allotted to another.

(8) Both Rabbis were Levites.

(9) When a chorister or doorkeeper do each other's work.

(10) R. Johanan held that if a chorister did gate-service alone he incurred penalty of death, hence if he assisted in such work as was not allotted to him, he, at any rate, fell under the interdiction of the Sages, whence he advised him to return; the interdiction of the Sages having for its purpose the prevention of any Levite's doing his neighbour's work unassisted, which offence would involve death as the penalty. But R. Joshua held that even if a Levite did his neighbour's work alone, no more than a transgression of a prohibition, without attendant severe penalty, was involved; hence if one only assisted one's neighbour, not even Rabbinic interdiction was transgressed.

(11) Num. X, 10.

(12) Restricting it, however, to obligatory dues.

(13) II Chron. XXIX, 27. Obviously he had been consulted, otherwise he would not have commanded a self-evident thing. Hence the matter must have been non-obvious.

(14) That this was on the new moon,

(15) Ibid. 17.

(16) V. Lev. XXIII, 12. The lamb was an obligatory burnt-offering.

(17) Aliter: How could they have offered up if the date was not clear to them?

(18) Similarly with the case of Hezekiah, formal permission was first obtained from him before sacrificing the lamb offered in connection with the omer, though it was an obligatory one.

(19) E.g., the redemption from Egypt, as well as the final redemption, fall into the month of Nisan. In Num. XIV, 1 the whole congregation is reported to 'have lifted up their voice and cried', complaining against Moses and Aaron, and against God. That evil day fell on the ninth of Ab. The ninth of Ab therefore was a day predestined to disaster. (R. Gershom.)

(20) I.e., Sunday.

(21) Ps. XCIV, 23.

(22) V. Ta'an, 27a.

(23) Because no lambs were left for the sacrifice and none would be imported on account of the siege.

(24) The siege had prevented the securing of proper animals (lambs) for the continual offering. but any cattle was fit for the freewill burnt-offering.

(25) That the song referred to is the song sung in connection with offerings.

(26) Ps. XXIV, 1. This is the song for Sunday; every day had its song definitely arranged.

(27) [How then could it be assumed that the references to a freewill-offering; surely not all the Levites would take their stand on the platform for the offering of a freewill sacrifice (v. R. Gershom).]

(28) [So that the song could have been sung though there was no continual sacrifice. Consequently the song in the cited Baraitha may refer to the one sung in connection with the obligatory daily burnt-offerings, affording no solution to R. Abin's query.]

(29) If a song was in order even without any sacrifice being offered, the answer would have been found for the question above of R. Abin (Tosaf.).

(30) One would have inferred that no freewill-offering may be offered up without a song, so that if no Levites were present or available, as happened in the time of Ezra, no freewill burnt-offerings would be made at all! (R. Gershom.) According to Rashi: If voluntary singing were permitted, its very voluntariness would occasion legal laxities, and such laxities would be transferred to obligatory songs. too.

(31) What is the answer to R. Abin's question?

(32) Num. X, 10. Here Scripture compares the freewill peace offering to the burnt-offering, in connection with prescribed music.

(33) I.e., congregational peace-offerings, v. Lev. XXIII, 19.

(34) Only burnt-offerings due at a definite time, i.e., only prescribed, obligatory ones, require a song, but not voluntary ones.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 12a

The following question was asked: Do libations offered¹ up by themselves require a song or not? Since R. Samuel b. Nahmani had said: Whence do we know that one does not sing the [Sanctuary] song except over wine, etc.?² Do we say it [over wine alone], or do we say it only when [the sacrifice] includes food and drink, but not over drink alone? — Come and hear: R. Jose said, Good things are brought about on an auspicious day. etc. Now what need was there for song? Would you say it was on account of an obligatory burnt-offering? But that could not be for on the seventeenth of Tammuz the continual offering was abolished! And if it was on account of a voluntary burnt-offering! Did not R. Mari the son of R. Kahana teach that such did not require a song?³ — Hence it must have been the song on account of libations?⁴ Said Raba, or as some say. R. Ashi: But how could you think so? The song of the day was ‘The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof’, whereas the verse, ‘And He brought upon them their iniquity’ belongs to the song due on the fourth day of the week? Rather [say]: It was a verse of lamentation that came to their mouth! But it says: ‘And they were standing on their platform’? — [Rather say,] That is in accord with Resh Lakish; for Resh Lakish said: The song may be sung even without any [attending] sacrifice. Then let the same be said for libations, too? — That might lead to an offence.

[To turn to] the [above] text: R. Jose said, Good things are brought about on an auspicious day, etc. ‘At the first time it was at the end of the seventh year’. How could that have been? Is it not written: In the five and twentieth year of our captivity. in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten.⁵ Now which is the year the beginning of which falls on the tenth of Tishri? Say: This is the jubilee year.⁶ And if you should think that [the Sanctuary] was destroyed in the first year [of the seven years' cycle], [consider] there are from the first year of one seven years' cycle to the first year of another seven years' cycle eight years, and to the first of the next seven years cycle fifteen years? — Said Rabina: It was in the fourteenth year after the year in which the city was smitten. But how, then, in ‘the twenty-fifth year’? It was, really in the twenty-sixth year, for a Master said: They were exiled in the seventh year, they were exiled in the eighth year, they were exiled in the eighteenth year, they were exiled in the nineteenth year. Now from the seventh to the eighteenth are eleven years, add fifteen and that makes it twenty-six years!⁷ — Rabina will answer you: But even according to your own reckoning is it right? Since they were exiled also in the nineteenth year, [you have] from the seventh to the nineteenth twelve years, add fourteen years and you have twenty-six years?

What you must therefore say⁸ is that [the counting] excludes the year in which they were exiled. So is it with me: [the counting] excludes the year in which they were exiled. But, at any rate, the number nineteen remains a difficulty according to Rabina?⁹ Do you think three exiles are involved? [No, rather:] they were exiled in the seventh year after the subjection of Jehoiakim,¹⁰ which happened to be the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar; they were exiled in the eighteenth year¹¹ after the conquest of Jehoiakim. which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, for a Master has taught: In the first year he [Nebuchadnezzar] conquered Nineveh

(2) V. supra 11a.

(3) V. supra p. 66 n. 10.

(4) Which solves the query first propounded.

(5) According to Ezek. XL, 1 this was the year when the Sanctuary was destroyed. 'Our Exile' meaning the exile of Jehoiakim in 597.

(6) In the jubilee year the beginning falls on the Day of Atonement, on which the Sanhedrin sounds the shofar, the slaves are set free, and the fields are restored to their original owners. V. R.H. 8b.

(7) This is soon explained.

(8) In order to explain the statement of Ezekiel satisfactorily.

(9) For, if he counts from seven to nineteen, he finds twelve years, which with fourteen added, again are twenty-six.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 12b

, in the second he came up and conquered Jehoiakim.¹ 'The same happened with the second [destruction of the Temple]'. But how is it possible that the second time it happened at the end of a septennate? For how long did the second [Temple] stand? Four hundred and twenty years. Now, four hundred years correspond to eight [cycles of] jubilees, fourteen years would make two septennates, leaving six years over. Hence it [the second destruction] should have happened in the sixth year [of the septennate]! — This is in accord with R. Judah, who says that the fiftieth year is counted both ways.² Take the eight years of the eight jubilee [cycles], add [to them] those six [years] which will amount to fourteen years, thus it is found that it [the destruction of the second Sanctuary] happened at the end of a septennate. But on the view of R. Judah it could not have happened the first time at the end of a septennate; for it was taught: Seventeen jubilee [cycles] did Israel count from the time they entered the Land [of Israel] until they left it. And you cannot assume that they counted from the moment they entered, for if you were to say so, it would be found that the [first] Temple was destroyed at the beginning of a jubilee, and you could not find [right the statement]: 'in the fourteenth year, after that the city was smitten'.³ Rather, deduct from them the seven years of the conquest and the seven during which the land was distributed, thus you find [substantiated]: 'In the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten'. But according to R. Judah you must count the seventeen years of the seventeen jubilee [cycles], and add them to these, so that it happened in the third year of a seven years cycle! — The years from the exile by Sennecherib until their return through Jeremiah are not counted.⁴ Or, if you like, I can say it is indeed in accord with the Rabbis, and as to the statement 'the same happened the second time', this refers to the remaining [details].⁵ This also stands to reason, for if you were not to take it thus, was there indeed the guard of Jehoiarib at the second Sanctuary? Was it not taught: Four guards went up from the Exile: Jedaiah,⁶ Harim, Pashhur and Immer. The prophets who were among them divided them into twenty-four guards. They mixed them [the lots] and placed them into an urn. Thereupon came Jedaiah and took six for his own portion and for that of his fellows;

(1) It was not exile, but subjection which Jehoiakim suffered. According to II Kings XXIV, 1: Jehoiakim became his servant three years; then he turned and rebelled against him.

(2) The fiftieth year is counted as the end of the last and as the beginning of the new jubilee cycle.

(3) Which, as explained supra 12a, was a jubilee year.

(4) So Rashi and Tosaf. According to tradition Jeremiah restored the ten tribes in the eighteenth year of King Josiah (v. infra 33a and Meg. 14b). With their return began the counting of a new jubilee cycle to mark the renewed observance of the laws of the Year of Release and Jubilee which had fallen into disuse while the Northern Kingdom was in exile. The Temple was destroyed 36 years later so that the 'fourteenth year after that the city was smitten' fell in the jubilee year. Cur. edd. read: 'the three years from the exile' which is inexplicable.

(5) Outgoing of Sabbath, ninth of Ab.

(6) In the first Sanctuary the guard of Jedaiah came before that of Pashhur, which again preceded that of Immer. Now, however, the order was not clear, hence the prophets chose to abide by the decision of the lots.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 13a

then came Harim and took six for his own portion and for that of his fellows. Thus also Pashhur and Immer. Then the prophets who were among them regulated that even if Jehoiarib the head of the guards were to come up he could not push Jedaiah from his place, but Jedaiah would remain the chief, and Jehoiarib only an adjunct to him.¹ Hence [the statement refers only] to the remaining [details].

R. Ashi said: He does not count the six years until Ezra had come up and dedicated [the Sanctuary].² For it is written: Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem.³ And it is also written: And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.⁴ And a Tanna taught: About the same time in the following year Ezra with his exiled community went up [to the Land], as it is said: And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.⁵ [To revert to] the main text: 'Seventeen jubilee cycles did Israel count from the time they entered the Land until they left it'. But you cannot say that they counted from the moment they entered. For if you were to say so, then it would be found that the Temple was destroyed at the beginning of a seven years cycle and you could not account for: 'In the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten, etc.' Whence do we know that it took seven years to conquer [the Land]? — Caleb said: Forty years old was I when Moses the servant of the Lord sent me from Kadesh-Barnea to spy out the land⁶. . . and now, lo, I am this day four-score and five years old.⁷ And a Master said: 'The first year Moses built the tabernacle, in the second the tabernacle was put up, then he sent out the spies. When Caleb passed over the Jordan how old therefore was he? He was two years less than eighty years old.⁸ When he distributed the inheritances, he said: 'Now, lo, I am this day four-score and five years old'. Whence it follows that it took seven years for them to conquer the land. And whence do we know that it took them seven years to distribute it? — If you like, say: Since the conquest took seven years, so did the distribution. Or, if you like, say: Because otherwise one could not account for 'In the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten'.

MISHNAH. THERE WERE NEVER LESS THAN SIX⁹ INSPECTED LAMBS IN THE CELL OF LAMBS,¹⁰ SUFFICIENT FOR A SABBATH AND THE [TWO] FESTIVAL DAYS OF THE NEW YEAR,¹¹ AND THEIR NUMBER COULD BE INCREASED INTO INFINITY. THERE WERE NEVER LESS THAN TWO TRUMPETS AND THEIR NUMBER COULD BE INCREASED INTO INFINITY.¹² THERE WERE NEVER LESS THAN NINE LYRES, AND THEIR NUMBER COULD BE INCREASED INTO INFINITY. BUT THERE WAS ONLY ONE CYMBAL.

GEMARA. But the continual and the additional sacrifices were larger in number?¹³ — The Tanna refers to average days, and only to continual daily offerings. As for SUFFICIENT FOR A SABBATH AND THE [TWO] FESTIVAL DAYS OF THE NEW YEAR, that is to serve only as a mnemotechnical note, and this is what he says: There were never less than six inspected

(1) V. Ta'an, 27a.

(2) And thereby reintroduced into force the laws of the Years of Release and Jubilee.

(3) Ezra IV, 24.

(4) Ibid. VI, 15.

(5) Ibid. VII, 8. R. Ashi holds that the statement 'the same happened with the second Temple' refers also to the termination of the jubilee and explains it by deducting six years from the total of 420.

(6) Jos. XIV, 7.

(7) Ibid. 10.

(8) Allowing forty years for the sojourn of Israel in the wilderness.

(9) Two lambs each were required for the continual daily morning and evening sacrifice. The Gemara infers below that just as with the paschal lamb, which was ordered on the tenth of Nissan to be slaughtered on the fourteenth, the lambs for the continual daily sacrifices too had to be examined four days before the actual slaughtering for any blemish which would render them invalid. Whenever the two lambs were taken out for the daily need, at least six other examined ones had to be left at the same time, so that the lambs, newly introduced, were actually used only on the fourth day thereafter.

(10) V. Tam. III, 3.

(11) When the three fell on consecutive days, the Gemara described these words as a mnemotechnical expression. Rashi: The number of six is required for Sabbath and the two days of the New Year if they ate consecutive, each needing two. Maimonides: Six was the necessary number, because the newly introduced lambs had to be inspected for four days before they could be used, four being the number of the days which remain in a week after one has taken off the maximum of festival days that can occur in one week, i.e., the Sabbath and the two days of the New Year. Bartinoro follows Maimonides with this modification: The lambs required inspection four days, just as it would be necessary when the New Year's two days followed the Sabbath, because in that case the lambs to be used the following Tuesday would have to have been provided on the Friday before, in order that they be available early on Tuesday.

(12) There seems to be a contradiction between the Mishnah and the statement in the Gemara that the maximum number of trumpets is one hundred and twenty. As a matter of fact, some editions of the Talmud omit the words 'and their number could be increased, etc.'

(13) On these three days, the Sabbath and the two days of the New Year Festival.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 13b

lambs in the cell of lambs, [having thus been inspected] four days before they were actually slaughtered. Whose view is this? That of Ben Bag Bag, for it was taught: Ben Bag Bag said, Whence do we know that it [the lamb destined for the continual daily offering] requires to be inspected four days before the slaughtering? The text states: Shall ye observe [tishmru] to offer unto Me in its due season,¹ and there it is said: And ye shall keep it [le-mishmereth] until the fourteenth day of the same month;² just as there³ it was required that it [the animal] be inspected four days before the slaughtering, so here, too, is it required that it be examined four days before the slaughtering. That⁴ may also be inferred from [the wording]: SUFFICIENT FOR A SABBATH, not 'for a Sabbath'. That inference is conclusive.

NEVER LESS THAN TWO TRUMPETS AND THEIR NUMBER COULD BE INCREASED INTO INFINITY. How far? — R. Huna b. Zabdi (or, according to others, R. Zabdi said in the name of R. Huna): Up to one hundred and twenty. And it is said: And with them a hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets.⁵

NEVER LESS THAN NINE LYRES . . . BUT ONLY ONE CYMBAL. Whence do we know that? — R. Ashi said: Scripture said: And Asaph with cymbals, sounding aloud.⁶ But 'cymbals' implies two? — Since they both perform one function and are played by one man, he [the Tanna] called them one.

MISHNAH. THERE WERE NEVER LESS THAN TWELVE LEVITES⁷ STANDING ON THE PLATFORM⁸ AND THEIR NUMBER COULD BE INCREASED INTO INFINITY. NO MINOR COULD ENTER THE COURT OF THE SANCTUARY TO TAKE PART IN THE SERVICE EXCEPT WHEN THE LEVITES STOOD UP TO SING.⁹ NOR DID THEY¹⁰ JOIN IN THE SINGING WITH HARP AND LYRE, BUT WITH THE MOUTH ALONE, TO ADD FLAVOUR TO THE MUSIC, R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAID: THEY DID NOT HELP TO MAKE UP THE REQUIRED NUMBER, NOR DID THEY STAND ON THE PLATFORM. BUT THEY WOULD STAND ON THE GROUND, SO THAT THEIR HEADS WERE BETWEEN THE FEET OF THE LEVITES. AND THEY WOULD BE CALLED THE TORMENTORS OF THE LEVITES. GEMARA. To whom did these correspond? — To the nine lyres, two harps, and the one cymbal, as it is said: He and his brethren and sons were twelve.¹¹

NO MINOR COULD ENTER THE COURT OF THE SANCTUARY etc. Whence do we know that? — R. Johanan said: Because Scripture said, Then stood Jeshua with his sons and his brethren, and Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah together, to have the oversight of the workmen in the house of God.¹²

NOR DID THEY JOIN IN THE SINGING WITH THE HARP AND LYRE, BUT WITH THE MOUTH ALONE etc. One would say therefore that harp and lyre are different instruments. Is this to say that our Mishnah is not in accord with R. Judah, for it was taught: R. Judah said, The harp of the Sanctuary had seven cords, as it is written: In Thy presence is fitness [soba'] of joy;¹³ read not, fulness [soba'], but seven [sheba']! The harp of the messianic days has eight cords, as it is said: For the leader on the Sheminith,¹⁴ [i.e., the eighth string]. The harp of the world to come has ten cords, as it is said: With an instrument of ten strings, and with the psaltery; with a solemn sound upon the harp.¹⁵ Furthermore, it is said: Give thanks unto the Lord with harp, sing praises unto Him with the psaltery of ten strings. Sing unto Him a new song; play skilfully midst shouts of joy.¹⁶ You could say also that [our Mishnah will be] in accord with R. Judah: Since, in the world to come, it will have more cords and its sound will be stronger, like that of a harp, he calls it 'harp'.

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAID: THEY DID NOT HELP TO MAKE UP THE REQUIRED NUMBER etc. A Tanna taught: They were called assistants to the Levites. Our Tanna, however, called them tormentors of the Levites because their voice was high, the voice of the others low: they could sing high. whereas the others could not do so.

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. THE LAW OF VALUATION IS AT TIMES IN THE DIRECTION OF LENIENCY, AT OTHERS IN THE DIRECTION OF STRINGENCY. THE LAW OF THE FIELD OF POSSESSION¹⁷ IS AT TIMES MORE LENIENT, AT OTHERS MORE STRINGENT. THE LAW CONCERNING A MU'AD¹⁸ OX THAT HAS KILLED A SLAVE IS AT TIMES MORE LENIENT, AT OTHERS MORE STRINGENT. THE LAW OF THE VIOLATOR¹⁹ AND SEDUCER²⁰ AND OF HIM THAT HATH BROUGHT UP AN EVIL NAME²¹ IS AT TIMES MORE LENIENT, AT OTHERS MORE STRINGENT. THE LAW OF VALUATION IS AT TIMES MORE LENIENT, AT OTHERS MORE STRINGENT. HOW IS THAT? IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A MAN HAS EVALUATED THE FAIREST IN ISRAEL, OR THE UGLIEST IN ISRAEL, HE MUST PAY FIFTY SELA'S.²² BUT IF HE SAID: I VOW HIS WORTH,²³ HE NEED PAY BUT AS MUCH AS HE IS WORTH [THERE].

GEMARA. THE LAW OF VALUATION IS AT TIMES MORE LENIENT, AT OTHERS MORE STRINGENT etc. HOW IS THAT? IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A MAN HAS EVALUATED etc. Only IN ISRAEL but not in the case of an idolater. Shall We say that our Mishnah will not be in accord with R. Meir? For it was taught: Concerning an idolater, R. Meir said he may be made the subject of valuation, but he may not evaluate!²⁴ You may say also that it is in accord With R. Meir, and that the same law would apply to idolaters, but

(8) The raised platform, on which the Levites stood whilst playing or singing.

(9) According to Rashi minors were not admitted at all to any service in the Sanctuary except to join the Levites in the singing. Maimonides, however, refers this passage to the introduction of young priests and Levites to the service, who, even after having reached maturity, could enter the Sanctuary for first time participation in the service, only when the Levites, standing on the platform, were singing.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 14a

[our Mishnah] informs us incidentally¹ of a teaching in accord with Rab Judah, Who said in the name of Rab: One should not say, How beautiful is this Canaanite!² Then let it teach: 'Whether a man has dedicated the fairest in Israel or the ugliest among Canaanites'? It deals with one nation, not With two nations. But does it not? Surely it teaches: 'Of the noblest among the priests, and the humblest in Israel'³ — There it is one nation, except that the priests are holier. And if you like, say: Since it is about to teach, in the second part of the Mishnah, concerning a field of possession which applies only to Israel, not to idolaters, because they do not possess fields [by inheritance in the Land],⁴ therefore it teaches also [in the first part of the Mishnah] with reference to Israel alone.

MISHNAH. 'THE LAW OF THE FIELD OF POSSESSION IS AT TIMES MORE LENIENT, AT OTHERS MORE STRINGENT. HOW IS THAT? IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A MAN DEDICATES A FIELD IN THE SANDY PLAIN OF MAHUZ⁵ OR IN THE GARDENS OF SEBASTE, [IF HE WOULD REDEEM IT] HE MUST PAY FIFTY SHEKELS OF SILVER FOR [EVERY PART OF THE FIELD SUFFICIENT FOR] THE SOWING OF A HOMER OF BARLEY,⁶ BUT IF IT WAS A FIELD WHICH HE HATH BOUGHT',⁷ HE MUST PAY WHAT IT IS WORTH. R. ELIEZER SAYS: IT IS ALL THE SAME WHETHER IT BE A FIELD OF POSSESSION OR ONE THAT HE HATH BOUGHT. THE ONLY DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE FIELD OF POSSESSION AND THAT WHICH HE HATH BOUGHT LIES THEREIN: FOR A FIELD OF POSSESSION HE MUST PAY THE [ADDED] FIFTH, WHEREAS FOR A FIELD THAT HE HATH BOUGHT HE NEED NOT PAY THE ADDED FIFTH.'⁸

GEMARA. R. Huna said: If a man had dedicated a field full of trees, he must, when he comes to redeem them, redeem the trees for what they are worth, and then redeem the ground at [the rate of] fifty shekels of silver for [every part of the field sufficient for] 'the sowing of a homer of barley'. We see thus that R. Huna tells one Who dedicated, dedicates with a generous eye.⁹ R. Nahman raised the following objection to R. Huna: IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A MAN DEDICATES A FIELD IN THE SANDY PLAIN OF MAHUZ OR IN THE GARDENS¹⁰ OF SEBASTE, HE MUST PAY FIFTY SHEKELS OF SILVER FOR [EVERY PART OF THE FIELD SUFFICIENT FOR] THE SOWING OF A HOMER OF BARLEY? — He answered: He [the Tanna] means: Such as are fit to be gardens.¹¹

He raised a further objection: 'Field for the sowing':¹² from this I know only [the rule] in the case of a field for sowing. whence do we know it concerning a field of vines, or a field of reeds, or a field of trees? Therefore Scripture says: Field,¹³ i.e., as long as it is a field! — R. Huna replied: Here, too, he redeems, and then redeems again!

He raised a further objection: If one dedicates three trees of a plantation in which ten were planted in a field sufficient for the sowing of one se'ah,¹⁴ then he also dedicates the soil as well as the trees between them.¹⁵ When he redeems them, he redeems them at the rate of fifty shekels of silver for every piece of the field sufficient for the sowing of a homer of barley.¹⁶ If they are planted more thickly or less thickly than this, or if he dedicates them one after the other, then he does not dedicate thereby either the soil or the trees between them;¹⁷ therefore, when he redeems them he redeems the trees at their value; and even more, if he first dedicates his trees¹⁸ and afterwards dedicates the ground, when he comes to redeem them, he must redeem the trees at their value, and then he must redeem the ground again, at the rate of fifty shekels of silver for [every part of the field sufficient for] the sowing of a homer of barley!¹⁹ And, if you were to say: Here²⁰ too, he redeems and then must redeem again; but surely since the second clause expressly mentions 'he must redeem and redeem again', it follows that in the first clause this is not so! Rather, say: According to whom is this [teaching]?¹⁹ It is in accord with R. Simeon, who holds that one who dedicates does so 'with an ungenerous eye', for it was taught: If one dedicates a field, he dedicates the whole of it.²¹ R. Simeon says: He does not dedicate anything [together with the field] save the full grown carob tree and the cropped sycamore tree. If this be in accord with R. Simeon, consider the second part: 'And not only that, but if he dedicates the trees and afterwards the ground, when he comes to redeem, he must redeem the trees at their value, and then must redeem the ground again at the rate of fifty shekels of silver for [every part of the field sufficient for] the sowing of a homer of barley'! Now if it were in accord with R. Simeon, one should be guided only by the circumstances²² at the time of redemption, and hence they should be redeemed [automatically] with the ground, for we have heard from R. Simeon to be guided by circumstances at the time of redemption. For it was taught: Whence do we know that if one buys a field from his father and dedicates it, and the father died afterwards, that that field is considered a 'field of possession'? Because the text states: And if he sanctify unto the Lord a field which he hath bought, which is not of the field of his possession,²³ i.e., a field which could not become a field of possession,²⁴ that excludes [such a field as] this, which would have become his field of possession. This is the view of R. Judah and R. Simeon. R. Meir said: Whence do we know that if one buys a field from his father, and his father died, and he thereupon dedicated it, that it is considered a field of possession?

- (1) By not teaching 'the fairest among Canaanites', because one should not attribute any beauty to those indulging in the cruelty and immorality of idolaters.
 - (2) This was Rab Judah's teaching (v. A.Z. 20a). for which the Mishnah offers authoritative endorsement by implication.
 - (3) V. infra 15a.
 - (4) An idolater could not, by Biblical law, redeem his field of possession for the payment of fifty shekels; he would have to repay its value.
 - (5) Mahuz may be the term tech. for 'place', 'circle', or the name of an unidentified locality. 'The desert, sandy wilderness of Mahuz' would be a good contrast to the rich, developed gardens of Sebaste, the city built by Herod on the ruins of Samaria. According to Rashi the reference in Mahuz is to a field in the environs of a town the ground of which is continually trodden on and thus has become sterile.
 - (6) Lev. XXVII, 16. A field sufficient for the sowing of a 'homer of barley', according to 'Er. 23b would hold 75,000 square cubits.
 - (7) V. Lev. XXVII, 22.
 - (8) For the field of possession as well as for the field bought, the price of redemption is fifty silver pieces for every part of the field sufficient for the sowing of a homer of barley. But with the field of possession, the owner must pay the additional fifth, whereas with a field bought he need but pay what it is worth.
 - (9) He dedicated the tract and in addition thereto, the trees, hence when he comes to redeem, he must redeem the tract after having redeemed the trees.
 - (10) The gardens of Sebaste were planted vineyards, nevertheless the Mishnah states they can be redeemed with fifty silver pieces etc., which shows that the trees were redeemed with them, thus disproving the view of R. Huna. The latter says the sum mentioned refers only to the field; as for the trees, they must be redeemed at their value, the redemption of one following the other.
 - (11) Without being actually planted with trees.
 - (12) The reference is probably to Lev. XXVII, 16, although the word 'field' (lit., 'house') does not occur in the Biblical text.
 - (13) Ibid.
 - (14) One se'ah is the thirtieth part of a homer; the field corresponding would contain 2,500 square cubits.
 - (15) Small trees.
 - (16) This would be contra R. Huna.
 - (17) The usual way of planting trees is to plant ten in a field sufficient for the sowing of one se'ah. The whole tract is needed for these trees, hence if they are dedicated, the tract and the small trees between them are dedicated too. If the trees are planted either more or less thickly, only the trees are considered dedicated, and only they need be redeemed.
 - (18) Planted more or less thickly.
 - (19) V. B.B. 72a.
 - (20) In the first clause from which an objection is raised against R. Huna.
 - (21) All that it contains. (9) Which are old and large. and derive their sustenance from the ground more than any other tree, v. B.B., Sonc. ed., p. 282 notes.
 - (22) At the moment of the redemption the trees are on the ground, and the question as to whether they were dedicated together with or after the tract is then irrelevant.
 - (23) Lev. XXVII, 22.
 - (24) Since he bought it from a stranger, from whom he would not inherit it.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 14b

— Because the text states: ‘And if he sanctify unto the Lord a field which he hath bought, which is not the field of his possession’, i.e., a field which is not a field of possession, excluding one that is his field of possession. Now according to R. Judah and R. Simeon, even if he dedicated it and his father died subsequently, it is still considered a field of possession. What is the reason therefore? It is on account of the Scriptural text?¹ But that is in favour of R. Meir's view!² Rather must you say because one is guided by the circumstances at the redeeming!³ Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: R. Judah and R. Simeon found a Scriptural verse and expounded it. If it were so [as R. Meir holds], the Divine Law should have written: ‘If he sanctify . . . a field which he hath bought, which is not his possession’. But since it says: Which is not of the field of his possession, [it means:] A field which is not fit⁴ to be the field of his possession.

R. Papa said: If one dedicates stony ground, he must redeem it at its value. Why? — The Divine Law speaks of a ‘field for the sowing’, and this ground cannot be sown. If he has not redeemed it, then in the jubilee year, it goes forth to the priests.⁵ Why? — Because the Divine Law speaks of a ‘field’, no matter of what kind. If he sold stony ground, it can be redeemed even within two years.⁶ Why? ‘According to the number of the years of the crops’, says the Divine Law, and it [stony ground] is incapable of having crops. If he has not redeemed it, it returns in the jubilee year to the owners. Why? And he shall return into his possession,⁷ the Divine Law says, and this, too, is possession. If he dedicates trees he redeems them at their worth. What is the reason? — The Divine Law says: ‘a field for sowing’, but not trees. If he did not redeem them they do not go forth in the jubilee year to the priest. What is the reason? — The Divine Law says, ‘and the field shall be’, but not trees. If he sold trees they are not redeemed before two years. What is the reason? — ‘According to the number of the years of the crops’, says the Divine Law, and these are productive of crops. If he has not redeemed them they do not return to the owner at Jubilee. What is the reason? — ‘And he shall return unto his possession says the Divine Law, but not trees.

The Master said: If he dedicates trees he redeems them at their worth [etc.]. But why? — Let them become sacred [property] through the ground and be redeemed together with it and return to their owners [at Jubilee] together with the ground? And if you were to argue: He dedicated trees, but not ground, but did not the Nehardeans say: If one sells to his neighbour a [date] palm, the latter acquires it from the base⁸ to the furthest depth? — But it was taught in connection therewith: Only if he came with such a claim.⁹

BUT IF IT WAS A FIELD WHICH HE HATH BOUGHT HE MUST PAY WHAT IT IS ACTUALLY WORTH: Our Rabbis taught: The worth,¹⁰ what does that teach us? Since it is said: ‘Fifty shekels of silver for every piece of the field sufficient for the sowing of a homer of barley’, I might have thought the same applied also to a field which he bought, therefore the text states ‘the worth’.¹¹ R. Eliezer says: Here it is said: [The priest] shall reckon,¹⁰ and above it is said: [The priest] shall reckon.¹² Just as there a definite [sum], so here, also, a definite [sum]. The following question was asked: Do the Rabbis accept this gezerah shawah,¹³ and hence they infer also the additional fifth,¹⁴ or do they not accept this gezerah shawah and neither the fifth? — Said Raba: It seems logical that they do not accept this gezerah shawah. For the Divine Law revealed [taught] concerning the fifth, both in connection with a field of possession, and also with one who dedicated his house;¹⁵ we have thus two Scriptural verses teaching the same thing and ‘whenever two Scriptural verses teach the same thing, they do not serve as illustrations for other cases’.¹⁶ But what according to him who says ‘they do serve as illustrations for other cases’? — Since the Divine Law revealed about a fifth in connection with the tithing of pure and impure cattle, it is a teaching occurring frequently, and hence they do not serve as illustrations in other cases. It was taught in accord with Raba, but not for the reason he advanced:¹⁷ It was taught: ‘The worth of thy valuation’, herewith Scripture compares it to valuation: just as no fifth is added in connection with valuation, so no fifth is added in connection with a field that he has bought.

MISHNAH. THE LAW CONCERNING A MU'AD OX THAT HAS KILLED A SLAVE,¹⁸ IS AT TIMES IN THE DIRECTION OF LENIENCY, AT OTHERS IN THE DIRECTION OF STRINGENCY. HOW IS THAT? IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER IT KILLED THE FINEST SLAVE OR THE UGLIEST SLAVE, HE MUST PAY THIRTY SELA'S. IF IT KILLED A FREE MAN HE MUST PAY WHAT HE IS WORTH. IF IT WOUNDED HIM. WHETHER THE ONE OR THE OTHER, HE MUST PAY THE DAMAGE IN FULL.¹⁹

GEMARA. This²⁰ then applies only to a mu'ad,²¹ but not to a tam?²² Shall we say that our Mishnah will not be in accord with R. Akiba? For it was taught: R. Akiba said, Even with a tam which injured a man, the larger²³ damage must be paid in full! — You can even say that it is in accord with R. Akiba, for it applies to a tam too; but since he wishes to teach in the latter part the case where IT KILLED A SLAVE OR A FREE MAN, which applies only to a mu'ad, but not to a tam, therefore it speaks of mu'ad.

MISHNAH. ‘THE LAW OF THE VIOLATOR AND SEDUCER IS AT TIMES IN THE DIRECTION OF LENIENCY, AT OTHERS IN THE DIRECTION OF STRINGENCY.’ HOW IS THAT? IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A MAN VIOLATED OR SEDUCED A WOMAN FROM AMONG THE NOBLEST OF THE PRIESTLY STOCK OR THE HUMBLEST IN ISRAEL, HE MUST PAY FIFTY SELA'S.²⁴ BUT COMPENSATION FOR SHAMING AND FOR BLEMISH IS IN ACCORD WITH THE [CIRCUMSTANCES] OF HIM WHO SHAMES AND OF HER WHO SUFFERS THAT SHAME.²⁵

GEMARA. But why? Perhaps the Divine Law means: Fifty sela's for all the things together? — R. Ze'ira replied: People would say, How should one who has lain with a king's daughter pay fifty, and one who has lain with the daughter of a commoner pay fifty! — Abaye replied to him: If that be right, one could argue in the case of a slave too: why for a slave who perforates pearls thirty, and for one who does needlework also thirty?²⁶ Rather said R. Ze'ira:

(1) ‘Which is not the field of his possession’.

(2) The text quoted may not mean to exclude a field which he has dedicated before the father died; rather does it support the interpretation of R. Meir: to exclude the case where his father died and he afterwards dedicated it.

(3) And since at the redemption the father was dead, it is a field of possession.

(4) The argument is based on the mem privative. v. B.B. Sonc. ed., p. 285ff notes.

(5) Lev. XXVII, 20-21.

(6) Normally a field cannot be redeemed before two years (v. infra 29b). The stony ground is a field and therefore falls into some part of the law, but since it is an abnormal field, it is not affected by such regulations as apply to the usual type. Lev. XXV. 15 covers the ordinary field, bearing crop.

(7) Lev. XXV, 27.

(8) And can therefore plant a new one when this one withered, B.B. 37b, which teaching indicates that he who owns the tree owns the land on which it stands, whence the dedication of a tree implied the dedication of such ground.

(9) That he had bought the ground with the tree. That renders it an exceptional case, not a general rule, v. ibid.

(10) Lev. XXVII, 23.

(11) I.e., only the actual worth not the amount imposed by the Torah on the field of possession.

(12) With reference to a field of possession: Lev. XXVII, 18: arguing hence from analogy of expression, the fixed sum is fifty shekels.

(13) I.e., the inference based on the similarity of expression. v. Glos.

(14) The consequence of the inference from analogy would be that with regard to other items too, hence with regard to the fifth additional in case of redemption, a field which is bought shall be governed by the rules applicable to a field of possession.

(15) V. Lev. XXVII, 14.

(16) Lit., 'they do not teach'. The Torah does not repeat itself. A general law would be stated once. The very fact that it appears twice indicates that it applies only to those detailed situations and that no general rule may be inferred from them for others.

(17) His argument came from the fact that the rule was stated too often to be considered one generally applicable, whereas this teaching is based on an analogy with valuation, as explained.

(18) Ex. XXI, 29. The owner must pay the damage caused by his ox, for which he is responsible.

(19) The value which he would have had as bond-servant.

(20) The ruling in the last clause that full damage must be paid by the owner in case the ox has wounded either a free man or slave.

(21) As is indicated by the introductory words of our Mishnah.

(22) Lit., 'simple', 'innocuous', i.e., an ox whose owner had not been forewarned (v. Glos.).

(23) Lit., 'the difference (between the two damages)'. If ox and man injured each other, then if the owner of the ox had not been forewarned, he need pay but one half of the greater damage. R. Akiba held he must pay in full, even though the ox was a tam, v. B.K. 33a.

(24) V. Deut. XXII, 29.

(25) In addition to the fifty sela's the violator as well as the seducer must pay damages for the shame and the blemish caused. V. Keth. 40a.

(26) Just as the shame suffered by a king's daughter is greater than that suffered by one of common descent, so is the damage suffered in the loss of a skilled slave much greater than that suffered in the loss of an unskilled one.

Talmud - Mas. Arachin 15a

[Argue thus,] If two men had intercourse with her, the one in a natural way, the other in an unnatural manner,¹ people will say: He who has lain with a blemished [woman pays] fifty, and he who has lain with a sound [woman]² fifty! Said Abaye to him: But with regard to a slave they would equally say: For [the death of] a healthy slave thirty, and for one afflicted with boils also thirty? Rather, said Abaye: [This is his answer,] Scripture said: Because he hath humbled her,³ from this it is evident that there is also indemnification for shame and blemish. Raba said: Since Scripture said, Then the man that lay with her shall give,³ it indicates that for the enjoyment of lying with her [he must pay] fifty shekels, from which we infer that there are other things [to pay for], viz., shame and blemish.

MISHNAH. THE LAW OF HIM THAT HATH BROUGHT UP AN EVIL NAME⁴ IS AT TIMES IN THE DIRECTION OF LENIENCY, AT OTHERS IN THE DIRECTION OF STRINGENCY. HOW IS THAT? IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER A MAN HATH BROUGHT UP AN EVIL NAME AGAINST A WOMAN FROM THE NOBLEST OF PRIESTLY STOCK OR OF THE HUMBLEST IN ISRAEL. HE MUST PAY A HUNDRED SELA'S. THUS IT IS FOUND THAT HE WHO SPEAKS WITH HIS MOUTH SUFFERS MORE THAN HE THAT COMMITS AN ACT.⁵ THUS WE DO ALSO FIND THAT THE JUDGMENT AGAINST OUR FATHERS IN THE WILDERNESS WAS SEALED ONLY BECAUSE OF THEIR EVIL TONGUE, AS IT IS WRITTEN: YET HAVE PUT ME TO PROOF THESE TEN TIMES etc.⁶

GEMARA. Whence do we know that?⁷ Perhaps it is due to the fact that he wanted to bring about her death, as it is written: But if this thing be true . . . then they shall bring out the damsel . . . and stone her with stones that she die!⁸ — Raba answered: Scripture said, Because he hath brought up an evil name,⁹ i.e., [only] because of the evil name that he has brought up.

THUS DO WE ALSO FIND THAT THE JUDGMENT etc. Whence do we know that? Perhaps it was due to the fact that their measure [of guilt] was not full yet. for R. Hamnuna said: The Holy One, blessed be He, does not punish man until his measure is full, as it is said: In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits!¹⁰ — Resh Lakish replied: Scripture said, 'Yet have put Me to proof these ten times', i.e., because of 'these' was the judgment against them sealed,

It was taught: R. Eleazar b. Perata said, Come and see how great the power of an evil tongue is! Whence do we know [its power]? From the spies: for if it happens thus to those who bring up an evil report against wood and stones, how much more will it happen to him who brings up an evil report against his neighbour! But whence [follows] that? Perhaps it is as explained by R. Hanina b. Papa; for R. Hanina b. Papa said: A stark thing did the spies say in that hour, as it is written: For they are stronger than we'.¹¹ Do not read: 'than we' but 'than He': as it were, even the Master of the house cannot remove his utensils from here!¹² Rather, said Rabbah in the name of Resh Lakish: Scripture said, Even those men that did bring up an evil report against the land, died by the plague against the Lord,¹³ i.e., [they died just] because of the evil report which they had brought up.

It was taught: R. Judah said, With ten trials did our forefathers try the Holy One, blessed be He: two at the sea, two because of water, two because of manna, two because of the quails, one in connection with the golden calf, and one in the wilderness of Paran, 'Two at the sea': one at the going down, the other at the coming up. 'At the going down', as it is written: Because there were no graves in Egypt [hast thou taken us away to die in the wilderness]?¹⁴ 'At the coming up': That is in accord with what R. Huna taught, for he said: The Israelites of that generation were among those of little faith; as Rabbah b. Mari expressed it; for Rabbah b. Mari said: It is written: But they were rebellions at the sea, even at the Red Sea; nevertheless He saved them for His name's sake.¹⁵ This teaches that Israel were rebellious at that very hour, saying: Just as we go up from this side, so will the Egyptians go up from the other side. The Holy One, blessed be He, said to the Prince of the Sea: Cast them out on the dry land! He answered: Sovereign of the Universe, is there a slave to whom his Master gives a gift and then takes it away from him again? He said to him: I shall give you [afterwards] one and a half times as many of them.¹⁶ He said before Him: Sovereign of the Universe, is there any slave who can claim anything against his master? He said: The brook of Kishon shall be surety. At once he cast them on the dry land, as it is written: And Israel saw the Egyptians dead on the sea-shore.¹⁷ 'Twice because of water': at Marah, and at Refidim. 'At Marah', as it is written: And when they came to Marah, they could not drink,¹⁸ and it is written: And the people murmured against Moses.¹⁹ 'At Refidim', as it is written: They encamped in Refidim and there was no water to drink,²⁰ and it is also written: Wherefore the people strove with Moses.²¹ 'Twice because of the manna as it is written:

(1) So that she remained a virgin still and could obtain the fifty shekels, compensation in case of another attack or seduction. Thereupon she suffered the second violation.

(2) I.e., he who had intercourse with her without blemishing her shall pay fifty sela's, and he who had intercourse with her when she was blemished shall pay the same. Hence the additional indemnifications.

(3) Deut. XXII, 29.

(4) Ibid. 13-19.

(5) Because he must pay a hundred sela's for bringing up an evil name against her, whereas if he himself had committed that act (before she was married), he would have to pay but fifty sela's. (If she was betrothed and he violated or seduced her, he suffers the penalty of death, she only in case of seduction, not of course if she was violated).

'Do not go out',¹ whereas they did go out. Do not leave over,² but they did leave over. Twice because of the quails': of the first and second quails. With the first: When we sat by the fleshpots;³ with the second quails: And the mixed multitude that was among them.⁴ 'With the golden calf': as it happened.⁵ 'In the wilderness of Paran': As it happened.⁶ R. Johanan said in the name of R.

Joseph b. Zimra: What is the meaning of: What shall be given unto thee, and what shall be done more unto thee, thou deceitful tongue.⁷ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to the tongue: All members of the human body⁸ are standing, you are lying; all members of the human body are outside, you are guarded inside; not only that, but I surrounded you with two walls, one of bone and one of flesh; ‘What shall be given unto thee, what shall be done more unto thee, thou deceitful tongue’! And R. Johanan said in the name of R. Joseph b. Zimra: One who bears evil tales almost denies the foundation⁹ [of faith].¹⁰ as it is said: Who have said: Our tongue will we make mighty; our lips are with us; who is lord over us?¹¹ — Further did R. Johanan say in the name of R. Joseph b. Zimra: Any one who bears evil tales will be visited by the plague of leprosy, as it is said: Whoso slandereth his neighbour in secret, him azmith [will I destroy].¹² And there it is said: La-zemithuth [in perpetuity],¹³ which we translate as: ‘absolutely’ [permanently],¹⁴ and we learnt: The leper that is shut up differs from the leper that is certified unclean only in respect of unkempt hair and rent garments.¹⁵ Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of: This shall be the law of the leper?¹⁶ [It means,] ‘This shall be the law for him who brings up an evil name’. Further, said Resh Lakish: What is the meaning of the Scriptural verse: If the serpent bite before it is charmed, then the charmer hath no advantage?¹⁷ — At some future time all the animals will assemble and come to the serpent and say: The lion attacks and devours; the wolf tears and consumes; but what profit hast thou? But he will answer: What benefit has he who uses his tongue? Further said Resh Lakish: One who slanders makes his sin reach unto heaven, as it is said: They have set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth.¹⁸

R. Hisda said in the name of Mar ‘Ukba: One who slanders deserves to be stoned with stones. It is written here: ‘Him azmith [will I destroy]’, and it is written there: zamethu [they have cut off] my life in the dungeon, and have cast stones upon me.¹⁹ Further did R. Hisda say in the name of Mar ‘Ukba: Of him who slanders, the Holy One, blessed be He, says: He and I cannot live together in the world, as it is said: Whoso slandereth his neighbor in secret, him will I destroy; whoso is haughty of eye and proud of heart, him will I not suffer.²⁰ Do not read: ‘Otho [him] will I not suffer’, but ‘Itto [with him] can I not suffer [to be together]’. Some refer this to the arrogant.

Further said R. Hisda in the name of Mar ‘Ukba: About one who slanders, the Holy One, blessed be He, says to the prince of Gehinnom: I shall be against him from above, you be against him from below, and we shall condemn him, as it is said: Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of broom.²¹ ‘Arrow’ means nothing else but the evil tongue, as it is said: Their tongue is a sharpened arrow, it speaketh deceit;²² and ‘mighty’ means only the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is said: The Lord will go forth as a mighty man;²³ and ‘coals of broom’ is Gehinnom.

R. Hama b. Hanina said: What is the remedy for slanderers? If he be a scholar, let him engage in the Torah, as it is said: The healing for a tongue is the tree of life,²⁴ and ‘tongue’ here means the evil tongue, as it is said: ‘Their tongue is a sharpened arrow’, and ‘tree [of life]’ means only the Torah, as it is said: She is a tree of life, to them that lay hold upon her.²⁵ — But if he be an ignorant person, let him become humble, as it is said: But perverseness therein is a wound to the spirit.²⁶ R. Aha b. R. Hanina said: If he has slandered already, there is no remedy for him, for King David, in his holy spirit, has cut him off already, as it is said: May the Lord cut off all flattering lips, the tongue that speaketh great [proud] things!²⁷ Nevertheless, what shall be his remedy so that he may not come to [utter] evil speech? If he be a scholar, let him engage in the Torah, and if he be an ignorant person, let him humble himself, as it is said: ‘But perverseness therein is a wound to the spirit’.

The School of R. Ishmael taught: Whoever speaks slander increases his sins even up to [the degree of] the three [cardinal] sins: idolatry, incest,²⁸ and the shedding of blood. It is said here: ‘The tongue that speaketh great things’, and it is written in connection with idolatry: Oh, this people have sinned a great sin.²⁹ Touching incest Scripture said: How then can I do this great wickedness?³⁰ And in connection with the shedding of blood it is written: My punishment is greater than I can bear.³¹ Perhaps ‘great things’ refers to two [sins of the three]? Which of them would you exclude? In the West [Palestine] they say: The talk about third [persons]³² kills three persons: him who tells [the slander], him who accepts it, and him about whom it is told. R. Hama b. Hanina said: What is the meaning of: Death and life are in the hand [power] of the tongue?³³ Has the tongue ‘a hand’? It tells you that just as the hand can kill, so can the tongue. One might say that just as the hand can kill only one near it, thus also the tongue can kill only one near it, therefore the text states: ‘Their tongue is a sharpened arrow’. Then one might assume that just as an arrow kills only within forty or fifty cubits, thus also the tongue kills only up to forty or fifty cubits, therefore the text states: ‘They have set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth’. But since it is written already: ‘They set their mouth against the heavens’, why was it necessary to state also: ‘Their tongue is a sharpened arrow’? — This is what we are informed: That [the tongue] kills as an arrow. But once it is written: ‘Their tongue is a sharpened arrow’, why was it necessary to state: Death and life are in the hand of the tongue’? — It is in accord with Raba; for Raba said: He who wants to live [can find life] through the tongue;³⁴ he who wants to die [can find death] through the tongue.

What constitutes evil speech? — Rabbah said: For example [to say] there is fire in the house of So-and-so.³⁵ Said Abaye: What did he do? He just gave information? — Rather, when he utters that in slanderous fashion: ‘Where else should there be fire if not in the house of So-and-so? There is always meat and fish’.³⁶ Rabbah said: Whatsoever is said in the presence of the person concerned is not considered evil speech. Said Abaye to him: But then it is the more impudence and evil speech! — He answered: I hold with R. Jose, for R. Jose said: I have never said a word and looked behind my back.³⁷

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: Whatsoever is said before three is not considered slander. Why? Your friend has a friend, and your friend's friend has a friend.¹ When R. Dimi came [from Palestine]. he said: What is the meaning of the verse: He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him?² It refers, for example, to the case of one who happened to stay in a house where they laboured much on his behalf, and next morning he goes out into the street and says: May the Merciful One bless So-and-so, who laboured so much on my behalf. Whereupon people will hear it and come and plunder him.³

R. Dimi, brother of R. Safra, learnt: Let no man ever talk in praise of his neighbour, for through [talking in] his praise he will come⁴ to disparage him. Some there are who say: R. Dimi, brother of R. Safra, was ill. R. Safra entered to inquire about his state of health. He said, May it come [home] to me⁵ that I have kept whatever the Rabbis have enjoined. He said to him: Hast thou also kept [their command]: Let no man ever talk in praise of his neighbour. for through talking in his praise he will come to disparage him? He answered: I have not heard it, for had I heard it, I would have kept it.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Johanan: Because of seven things the plague of leprosy is incurred: [These are:] slander, the shedding of blood, vain oath,⁶ incest, arrogance, robbery and envy. Because of slander, as it is written: Whoso slandereth his neighbour in secret, him will I destroy.⁷ For 'blood-shed', as it is written: And let there not fail front the house of Joab one ... hath an issue or that is a leper.⁸ For a vain oath', as it is written: And Naaman said: be content, take two talents,⁹ and it is written: The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee.⁹ For 'incest', as it is written: And the Lord plagued Pharaoh . . . with great plagues.¹⁰ Because of 'arrogance'. as it is written: But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up so he did corruptly, and he trespassed against the Lord, his God . . . and the leprosy broke forth in his forehead.¹¹ Because of 'robbery', as it is written: And the priest shall command that they empty the house,¹² in connection with which a Tanna taught: Because he had gathered money that was not his own, the priest comes and scatters it. And because of 'envy', as it is said: Then he that owneth the house shall come,¹³ referring to which the school of R. Ishmael taught: He who would reserve his house for himself.¹⁴ But that is not so, for R. 'Anani b. Sason said: Why is the portion about the priestly garments¹⁵ placed next to the portion about the sacrifices? It is to tell you that just as sacrifices procure atonement, so do the priestly garments. The tunic procures atonement for bloodshed, as it is written: And they dipped the coat in the blood.¹⁶ The breeches procure atonement for incest, as it is written: And thou shalt make them linen breeches to cover the flesh of their nakedness.¹⁷ The mitre procures atonement for those of arrogant mind, in accord with what R. Hanina taught; for he said: Let that which is [placed] high procure atonement for acts of haughtiness. The girdle procures atonement for sinful thoughts of the heart, [for it atones] where it is [worn].¹⁸ The breastplate procures atonement for [error in] legal decisions, as it is written: And thou shalt make a breastplate of judgment.¹⁹ The ephod procures atonement for idolatry, as it is written: And without ephod or teraphim.²⁰ The robe procures atonement for slander, for the Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let that which emits a sound,²¹ procure atonement for an act of sound [the voice]. The [golden] plate procures atonement for impudent deeds, for there it is written: And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead,²² and it is written there: Yet thou hadst a harlot's forehead!²³ — This is no contradiction: The one results when his actions were effective, the other when they were not effective. If his acts were effective, the plague of leprosy visits him, if his actions were not effective, the robe procures atonement.²⁴ But R. Simeon said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: For two things we do not find any atonement through sacrifices, but we do find atonement for them through something else, [viz.,] bloodshed and slander. Bloodshed through the heifer whose neck is to be broken, and slander through incense. For R. Hanina taught: We have learnt that the incense procures atonement, as it is written: And he put oil the incense and made atonement for the people.²⁵ And the School of R. Ishmael taught: For what does incense procure atonement? For slander. The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let that which is [offered]²⁶ in secret [come and] procure atonement for what was done in secret. Now we have a contradiction from [one teaching concerning] bloodshed as against another [teaching touching] bloodshed; and a contradiction from [one teaching about] slander against [another about] slander? — There is no contradiction between the two teachings about bloodshed; one speaks of the case where it is known who has killed him, and the other where it is unknown. But where it is known who has killed him, he ought to be executed? — It speaks of a case where he did it deliberately, but without having been forewarned.²⁷ Neither is there a contradiction between the two teachings about slander; the one was committed in secret,

the other in public.¹

R. Samuel b. Elnadab asked of R. Hanina, or as others say. R. Samuel b. Nadab, the son-in-law of R. Hanina, asked of R. Hanina; or, according to still others, asked of R. Joshua b. Levi: Wherein is the leper different that the Torah said: He shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his dwelling be?² He separated a husband from his wife, a man from his neighbour, therefore said the Torah: 'He shall dwell alone'. R. Joshua b. Levi said: Wherein is the leper different that the Torah said: Two living clean birds³ [he should bring] so that he may become pure again? The Holy One, blessed be He, said: He did the work of a babbler, therefore let him offer a babbler as a sacrifice.⁴

Our Rabbis taught: Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart.⁵ One might have believed one may only not smite him, slap him, curse him, therefore the text states: 'In thy heart'; Scripture speaks of 'hatred in the heart'. Whence do we know that if a man sees something unseemly in his neighbour, he is obliged to reprove him? Because it is said: Thou shalt surely rebuke.⁶ If he rebuked him and he did not accept it, whence do we know that he must rebuke him again? The text states: 'surely rebuke' all ways. One might assume [this to be obligatory] even though his face blanched, therefore the text states: 'Thou shalt not bear sin because of him'.⁶

It was taught [in a Baraitha]: R. Tarfon said, I wonder whether there is any one in this generation who accepts reproof, for if one says to him: Remove the mote from between your eyes, he would answer: Remove the beam from between your eyes! R. Eleazar b. Azariah said: I wonder if there is one in this generation who knows how to reprove! R. Johanan b. Nuri said: I call heaven and earth to witness for myself that often was Akiba punished⁷ through me because I used to complain against him before our Rabban, Gamaliel Beribbi,⁸ and all the more he showered love upon me, to make true what has been said: Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee; reprove a wise man and he will love thee.⁹

R. Judah son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi asked of R. Simeon b. Pazzi: What is preferable: reproof with honest purpose or false modesty?¹⁰ — He answered: Won't you agree that true modesty is better,¹¹ for a Master said: Modesty is the greatest of them all? Thus also is false modesty preferable. For Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: By all means let a man engage in the study of the Torah and in good deeds, even if not for their own sake, because through the work for an ulterior purpose he will arrive at the stage of doing [good] for its own sake.¹² What is honest reproof and what is false modesty? — For instance the case of R. Huna and Hiyya b. Rab who were sitting before Samuel, when Hiyya b. Rab said: Sir, look how he is vexing me greatly. He [R. Huna] undertook not to vex him any more. After he [the former] left, he [R. Huna] said: He did this and that [unseemly] thing. Whereupon Samuel said: Why did you not tell him that to his face? He replied: Forbid that the seed of Rab should be put to shame through me!¹³

How far shall reproof be administered? Rab said: Until he [the reprover] be beaten. Samuel said: Until he be cursed. R. Johanan said: Until he be rebuked. This is a point at issue between Tannaim. R. Eliezer said: Until he be beaten. R. Joshua said: Until he be cursed. Ben 'Azzai said: Until he be rebuked. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: All the three expounded one Scriptural verse; [It is written:] Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan and he said unto him: Thou son of perverse rebellion, do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own shame, and unto the shame of thy mother's nakedness?¹⁴ And it is written: And Saul cast his spear at him to smite him.¹⁵ The one who said [above] 'Until he be beaten' [said so] because it is written: 'to smite him'; the other who said: 'Until he be cursed' [said so] because it is written: 'to thine own shame and to the shame of thy mother's nakedness'; the other, who said: 'Until he be rebuked' [said so] because it is written: 'Then Saul's anger was kindled'. But according to him who says: 'Until he be shouted at', does not Scripture mention 'beating' and 'cursing'? — That was different, because for his great love of David, Jonathan risked his life even further. How far shall a man suffer before changing his lodging? — Rab said: Until he is beaten, Samuel said: Until they throw his bundles over his shoulder. Where he himself is beaten there is no dispute [that it is proper for him to leave]; similarly if they threw his bundles over his shoulder, there is likewise no dispute. They are of conflicting opinion only in case his wife is beaten, one holding: 'As long as he himself is not vexed what difference does it make?'¹⁶ The other's view being: 'It will end in a quarrel [ultimately]'. Why all that [deliberation]?¹⁷ — Because a Master said: A boarder [constantly changing his lodging] discredits others and himself.¹⁸ R. Judah in the name of Rab said: Whence is derived from the Torah the view that a man should not change his lodging? Because it is said: [And he went] unto the place where his tent had been at the beginning.¹⁹ R. Jose b. Hanina said: [It is derived] from here: And he went on his [former] journeys.²⁰ What is the practical difference between them? — There is this difference: the case of a casual lodging.

R. Johanan said: Whence do we know that a man should not change his occupation and that of his forebears? As it is said: And King Solomon sent and fetched Hiram out of Tyre. He was the son of a widow of the tribe of Naphtali,²¹ and his father was a man of Tyre, a worker in brass,²² and a Master said: His mother was of the house of Dan,²³ and it is written: And I behold I have appointed him with Ohaliab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan.²⁴

At what stage do [Divine] visitations commence?²⁵ — R. Eleazar said: If a man had, for example, a garment woven for him to wear and it does not fit him. Raba the younger (or, as others say. R. Ze'ira; or again. as others say. R. Samuel b. Nahmani) demurred to this: But more than that was said. 'Even if it had been intended to serve him [the wine] hot, and it was served cold to him; or it was intended to be served cold, and it was served hot to him [is accounted as a divine visitation]', and you say [only] at that stage? Mar, the son of Rabina, said: Even if his shirt gets turned inside out. Raba (or, as others say, R. Hisda, or again, as some say. R. Isaac, or as it was said, it was taught in a Baraitha): Even if he puts the hand into his pocket to take out three [coins] and he takes out but two. Now this is only in the case [where he intended to take out] three, and [took out] two, but not if [he meant to take] two and three came into his hand, because it is no trouble to throw it back. But why all this [information]? — Because the School of R. Ishmael taught: Anyone upon whom forty days have passed without [divine] visitation, had received his world. In the West [Palestine] they say:

(1) If he slandered in private the incense procures atonement, as it, too, functions in private. If he slandered in public the robe, emitting sound, procures atonement for the act of sound which is his sin.

Retribution is prepared for him.

It was taught: R. Eliezer the great said: If the Holy One, blessed be He, wished to enter in judgment with Abraham, Isaac or Jacob, not [even] they could stand before His reproof! As it is said: Now therefore stand still, that I may plead with you before the Lord concerning all the righteous acts of the Lord, which He did to you and to your fathers.¹ [It is written:] Such is the generation of them that seek after Him, that seek Thy face, even Jacob. Talmud - Mas. T'murah 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. ALL PERSONS CAN EXCHANGE,¹ MEN AS WELL AS WOMEN; NOT THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EXCHANGE,² BUT THAT IF ONE DID SO, THE SUBSTITUTE IS SACRED,³ AND HE RECEIVES FORTY LASHES.⁴

GEMARA. [The Mishnah] contains a contradiction in itself. You say: ALL PERSONS CAN EXCHANGE, implying that it is [permissible to exchange in the first instance] and [then it says]: NOT THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EXCHANGE, implying, only after it has been done?⁵ — But how can you understand it that ALL PERSONS CAN EXCHANGE in the first instance! In that case, instead of bringing a contradiction from the Mishnah, you could rather bring it from the Scriptural verse, since it says: He shall not alter it nor change it!⁶ Rab Judah therefore said: What [the Mishnah] means is this: ALL PERSONS CAN EFFECT AN EXCHANGE,⁷ MEN AS WELL AS WOMEN;⁸ NOT THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EXCHANGE, BUT THAT IF ONE DID SO, THE SUBSTITUTE IS SACRED, AND HE RECEIVES FORTY LASHES.

What additional case is included by [the word] ALL?⁹ — It includes the case of an heir,¹⁰ and [the Mishnah] will not be in accordance with the view of R. Judah,¹¹ for it has been taught:¹² An heir can lay hands [on the head of a sacrifice];¹³ an heir can effect exchange [with his father's dedication]. This is the teaching of R. Meir; whereas R. Judah says: An heir cannot lay hands [on the head of a sacrifice] nor can an heir effect exchange [with his father's dedication]. What is R. Judah's reason? — We infer the case of a preliminary act in the dedication¹⁴ from the case of a final act in the dedication.¹⁵ Just as in the case of the final act, an heir cannot lay hands [on the head of a sacrifice], so in the case of the preliminary act, an heir cannot effect exchange [with his father's dedication]. And how do we know this in the case of laying on of hands itself?¹⁶ — Three times the expression his offerings¹⁷ is used: One [intimates that] 'his offering' [requires laying on of hands], but not that of a gentile. One [that] 'his offering', but not that of his fellow. And one 'his offering' but not his father's dedication.¹⁸ But as for R. Meir, who rules that an heir can effect exchange [with his father's dedication], surely 'his offering' is written?¹⁹ — He needs this in order to include partners in a sacrifice²⁰ as requiring to perform laying on of hands. And [what does] R. Judah [say to this]?²¹ — He does not hold that partners in a sacrifice must perform laying on of hands.²² What is the reason? Because their sacrifice is not designated.²³ Or if you prefer [another solution] I may say that R. Judah may still be of the opinion [that partners in a sacrifice must perform laying on of hands] but he derives the cases both of the sacrifice of a gentile and a fellow's sacrifice²⁴ from the one text.²⁵ There is left over therefore one text, from which we derive that partners in a sacrifice must perform laying on of hands.²⁶ And as to R. Meir, who rules that an heir can exchange [with his father's dedication] what is his reason? — He can tell you: [Scripture says:] And if he shall at all change,²⁷ to intimate that an heir can change.

(1) This unconsecrated animal for that consecrated animal.

(2) Since Scripture says: Nor chance it (Lev. XXVII, 10).

(3) Thus both animals become sacred.

- (4) For violating the prohibitory law of 'nor change it'.
- (5) Is the exchange effective, but not that it is directly permissible.
- (6) Ibid.
- (7) So that the substituted animal becomes sacred whilst the original animal retains its sanctity.
- (8) Even the exchange by a woman renders the substituted animal sacred.
- (9) Besides the MEN and WOMEN actually mentioned.
- (10) Who exchanges a sacrifice which his father consecrated during his lifetime.
- (11) Who holds that an heir cannot effect an exchange with his father's dedication.
- (12) Men. 93a; 'Ar. 2a.
- (13) If the father was unable to do so during his life-time.
- (14) E.g., that of exchanging.
- (15) I.e., that of laying on of hands on the animal's head, which act is prior to sacrificing it.
- (16) That an heir cannot perform this.
- (17) And if his offering be a sacrifice of a peace-offering (Lev. III, 1). And if his offering for a sacrifice unto the Lord be of the flock (Ibid. 6). And if he offer a lamb for his offering (Ibid. 7). And in each text the law of 'laying on of hands' is laid down.
- (18) R. Judah therefore deduces from here that an heir cannot lay hands on his father's dedication.
- (19) Thus intimating that an heir cannot lay hands on his father's dedication.
- (20) If, for example, two or three people share one sacrifice, we apply to each partner the text 'his offering' and thus they all have to lay hands on the animal prior to killing it.
- (21) If the text is interpreted for this purpose, how can he infer his ruling that an heir cannot lay hands?
- (22) He is of the opinion that an offering brought by partners does not require the laying on of hands.
- (23) As belonging specifically to any one of the partners. Consequently R. Judah can still maintain that the text 'his offering' excludes a father's dedication from the need of the laying on of hands.
- (24) As being excluded from the laying on of hands
- (25) The expression 'his offering' implies the exclusion of the sacrifice by an agent, whether Jew or gentile, from the law of laying on of hands. For it cannot be said to be solely for the purpose of excluding the sacrifice of a gentile from the laying on of hands, since this is already derived from another Biblical text as explained in Men. 93a.
- (26) And there still remains a third text of 'his offering' to imply that laying on of hands is not required in connection with a father's dedication, since a father's sacrifice might naturally be regarded as one's own and consequently subject to the laying on of hands. There is need therefore for a special text to inform us that this is not so.
- (27) Lit., 'changing he shall change'. The reduplicated expression enables us to infer that an heir's exchange of his father's sacrifice is effective.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 2b

We infer then the case of a final act in the dedication¹ from the case of a preliminary act in the dedication.² Just as in the case of the preliminary act, an heir can effect exchange [with his father's dedication], so in the case of the final act, an heir can lay on hands. And what will R. Judah do with the text: 'And if he shall at all change'?³ — It is to include [the exchange by] a woman, and as it is taught: Since the whole context [of exchanging] speaks only of the masculine gender, as it says: He shall not alter it nor change it,⁴ whence do you derive that the same applies to a woman? The text therefore states:⁵ 'And if he shall at all change',⁶ in order to include a woman. And whence does R. Meir⁷ derive that a woman [can effect an exchange]? — He derives it from the waw [‘and’].⁸ And [what does] R. Judah [say to this]? — He does not interpret the waw.⁹ Now according to the view both of R. Meir and of R. Judah, the reason [why the law of substitution applies to a woman] is because Scripture expressly included the case of a woman,¹⁰ but if it had not included it, I might have thought that when she exchanged she was not punishable [with lashes].¹¹ Surely Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab and likewise a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: [Scripture says:] When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit;¹² Scripture thus places woman on a par with man in respect of all the penalties mentioned in the Torah! — You¹³ might be under the impression¹⁴ this is the case only as regards a penalty which applies equally, both to the individual and the community, but there,¹⁵ since the penalty does not apply equally in all cases, for we have learnt: A community or partners cannot effect an exchange,¹⁶ therefore in the case of a woman also if she performed an exchange she would not be punishable [with lashes]. Hence we are informed [that this is not so].

Rami b. Hama asked: Can a minor effect an exchange? What kind of case do you mean? Shall I say, it is the case of a minor who has not yet reached the stage of [legal] vows?¹⁷ Surely there should be no question about this, for since he is unable [legally] to dedicate, how can he effect an exchange? — Rather the case is that of a minor who has reached the stage of [legal] vows.¹⁸ Do we say, seeing that a Master said: [Scripture could have stated:] When a man shall utter a vow of persons. Why then does it say: If a man shall clearly utter¹⁹ a vow? It is in order to include ‘a doubtful person²⁰ next to a man’ in that his dedication is valid.²¹ Now do we say that since he can dedicate, he can effect an exchange? Or, perhaps, since a minor is not punishable,²² he cannot effect an exchange?²³ And if you were to maintain that a minor can effect an exchange, since ultimately he comes into the category of being punishable,²⁴ can a gentile effect an exchange? Should we say, since he can legally dedicate an animal for sacrifice, as it has been taught: [Scripture says:] A man, a man [of the house of Israel].²⁵ What need is there for Scripture to repeat ‘man’? It is in order to intimate that the gentiles can make votive freewill-offerings like the Israelites;²⁶ [do we say that] they therefore can also effect an exchange? Or perhaps since [they] never come into the category of being punishable,²⁷ [do we say that] when an exchange is performed by them [the animal] is not sacred? — Said Raba, Come and hear: For it has been taught, No secular use may be made of the dedications of gentiles, but the law of sacrilege does not apply to them.²⁸ Nor are [these] subject to the law of piggul,²⁹ nothar,³⁰ and uncleanness. [Gentiles] cannot effect an exchange, nor can they bring drink-offerings,³¹ but the animal offering [of a gentile] requires [the accompaniment of] drink-offerings. These are the words of R. Simeon. R. Jose said: In all [these things]³² I favour the strict view.³³ This³⁴ applies only to things dedicated for the altar,³⁵ but with things dedicated [for their value] to be used for Temple needs, the law of sacrilege applies. At all events [the Baraitha] says: [Gentiles] cannot effect an exchange.³⁶ And what does Rami b. Hama [say to this]?³⁷ — My inquiry does not refer to a case where a gentile dedicates [an animal] for his own atonement.³⁸ My inquiry has reference to a case where a gentile dedicated an animal so that an Israelite may be atoned for [by its sacrifice]. Do we go by the person who consecrates³⁹ or by the person for whom atonement is made?⁴⁰ But why not solve this question from what R. Abbuha said? For R. Abbuha reported in the name of R. Johanan: [Only] he who dedicates must add a fifth,⁴¹ and he who is to procure atonement can effect an exchange,⁴² and if one separates [the priestly due] from his own [grain]

- (1) The laying on of the hands which is prior to the sacrificing of the animal.
- (2) The exchanging of an unconsecrated animal for a consecrated one.
- (3) Why the reduplicated expression, since he holds that an heir cannot effect exchange with his father's dedication?
- (4) Lev. XXVII, 10.
- (5) V. supra n. 4.
- (6) The reduplicated expression when the one word 'he shall change' would have sufficed.
- (7) Who needs the text 'and if he shall at all change' in order to include the case of an heir.
- (8) As Scripture could have said simply, 'If he shall at all change, etc.' without the 'and'.
- (9) The waw in otū does not call for a special interpretation.
- (10) Stating that the exchange is effective.
- (11) I.e., that her exchange is not holy.
- (12) Num. V, 6.
- (13) The phrase 'it is necessary' is omitted with Sh. Mek.
- (14) Var. lec. (v. Rashi): You might be under the impression that this is the case, viz., that a woman is placed on a par with man with reference only to a prohibition where an action is involved (e.g., the desecration of the Sabbath etc.) but in the case of a prohibition where no action is involved (as, for example, the exchanging of an unconsecrated animal for a consecrated one, where the words themselves constitute an action) I might have thought that she is not punishable with lashes, hence we are informed otherwise.
- (15) With reference to exchanging.
- (16) Infra 13a.
- (17) I.e., if he is less than twelve years and a day. At that age, even if he knows to whom he vows and dedicates, his word is of no importance. From the age of thirteen years and a day, however, his vows and dedications are legal, even if he is not conscious of their significance.
- (18) I.e., the age of twelve years and a day, when his vows and consecrations are subject to examination as to whether he realises their import.
- (19) Heb. Ki yafli (Lev. XXVII, 2).
- (20) Heb. Mufla.
- (21) I.e., a boy near the age of religious majority.
- (22) Till the age of thirteen years and one day.
- (23) For Scripture says: He shall not alter it nor change it . . . Then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy. We therefore say anyone to whom this prohibitory law and the penalty attached thereto apply, can perform an exchange, but as the prohibition and the penalty are not relevant to a minor, therefore his exchange is not valid.
- (24) With the penalties mentioned in the Torah when he attains his religious majority.
- (25) Lev. XVII, 8. E.V. 'whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel'.
- (26) Naz. 62a; Men. 73b.
- (27) As the Biblical commands and prohibitions do not apply to them.
- (28) V. Lev. V, 15ff.
- (29) A sacrifice rejected in consequence of improper intention in the mind of the officiating priest, to eat it beyond the prescribed time limit, v. Glos.
- (30) Portions of the sacrifice left over beyond the legal time, v. Glos.
- (31) They cannot offer drink-offerings for the altar without bringing a sacrifice at the same time, unlike an Israelite.
- (32) Relating to sacrilege, piggul, etc.
- (33) That sacrifices of gentiles are subject to the respective laws, the only exception being drink-offerings, which they cannot bring.

(34) The teaching of the first Tanna in the above Baraitha that says: Dedications of gentiles are not subject to the law of sacrilege.

(35) I.e., an animal sacrificed.

(36) Which solves the above query of Rami b. Mama regarding a gentile.

(37) Why does he inquire, since it is explicitly mentioned in the Baraitha.

(38) Lit., 'so that a gentile may be atoned for'. There is no doubt that in such a case the gentile cannot effect an exchange, since he does not come into the category of being punishable.

(39) And the consecrator being a gentile cannot effect an exchange.

(40) Who is an Israelite and punishable and therefore an unconsecrated animal can be substituted for it, both animals thus becoming sacred.

(41) Where a man dedicates his house or field, the owner, if he is desirous of redeeming it, must add a fifth. But if a stranger redeems it, Scripture does not make it incumbent upon the redeemer to add a fifth, v. Lev. XXVII, 15.

(42) Since the animal was consecrated for his benefit we regard it as his offering, because we go by the person for whom atonement is made.

for [the untithed grain of] his fellow,¹ the power of disposing of it² belongs to him [who separated].³ What does Rami b. Hama [say to this]?⁴ — There,⁵ [as the dedication] came through the agency of an Israelite, we go by him to whom atonement is made and thus both the beginning⁶ and the end⁷ are in the hand of an Israelite. But here,⁸ the question is: Do you require that both the beginning and the end should remain in the control of one who can effect an exchange,⁹ or not?¹⁰ The question remains undecided.

The Master said: 'No secular use may be made of dedications of a gentile, but the law of sacrilege does not apply to them'. [The ruling that] no secular use may be made of them is Rabbinical,¹¹ and that the law of sacrilege does not apply to them is Biblical. What is the reason? — It is written: If a soul commit a trespass and sin through ignorance.¹² We draw an analogy between [the word] 'sin' here and sin mentioned in connection with terumah;¹³ and with reference to terumah it is written: The children of Israel,¹⁴ [intimating] but not gentiles.¹⁵ 'Nor are these subject to the law of piggul, nothar and uncleanness; because in connection with uncleanness it is written: Speak unto Aaron and unto his sons that they separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel¹⁶ and that they profane not My holy name, etc.;¹⁷ and we infer that nothar [does not apply to the dedications of gentiles] by means of an analogy between the word 'profaned'¹⁸ and the word 'profaned' mentioned in connection with the law of uncleanness: with reference to uncleanness it is written: 'The children of Israel and that they profane not, etc.', and in connection with nothar it is written: Therefore everyone that eateth it shall bear his iniquity because he hath profaned the hallowed things of the Lord.¹⁹ And we derive the case of piggul²⁰ by means of an analogy between the word 'iniquity'²¹ and the word 'iniquity' mentioned in connection with nothar; for in connection with piggul it is written: And the soul that eateth of it shall bear its iniquity.²² And in connection with nothar it is written: Therefore everyone that eateth it shall bear his iniquity for he hath profaned the hallowed things of the Lord,²³ and so in connection with all [these cases]²⁴ we apply the text] 'the children of Israel'²⁵ but not gentiles.

‘Gentiles cannot effect an exchange’, because it is written: He shall not alter it nor change it,²⁶ and earlier in the context it is written: Speak unto the children of Israel and say unto them when a man shall clearly utter a vow of persons,²⁷ [thus referring to the children of Israel and not to gentiles]. Another version: Gentiles cannot effect an exchange. What is the reason? There is an analogy between the exchange of an animal and the tithing of animals,²⁸ and there is also an analogy between animal tithing and the tithing of grain;²⁹ and in connection with the tithing of grain it is written: But the tithes of the children of Israel which they offer unto the Lord;³⁰ ‘the children of Israel’ but not gentiles.³¹

‘Nor can they bring drink-offerings, but the animal offering of a gentile requires [the accompaniment of] drink-offerings. These are the words of R. Simeon.’ Whence is this proved? — Our Rabbis have taught: [Scripture says:] All that are home born;³² a home born³³ brings drink-offerings but the gentile does not bring drink-offerings. One might think that a burnt-offering of a gentile does not require drink-offerings! The text therefore states: After this manner.³⁴

‘Said R. Jose: In all these cases I favour the strict view’. What is the reason? — The words ‘unto the Lord’³⁵ are used [in connection with the dedications of gentiles].³⁶

‘This applies only to things dedicated for the altar, but with things dedicated [for their value] to be used for Temple needs, the law of sacrilege applies’. What is the reason? — Since when we derive the law of sacrilege on the basis of the analogy of ‘sin’ and ‘sin’³⁷ mentioned in connection with terumah,³⁸ there must be some resemblance to terumah which is dedicated as such.³⁹ But with things dedicated to be used for Temple needs, which are dedicated for their value, the case is not so.

Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: In the case of every negative command mentioned in the Torah [the transgression of] which involves action is punishable with lashes, but if it involves no action, it is exempt [from lashes]. And is this a general rule, that a negative command [the transgression of which] does not involve an action is not punishable with lashes? But is there not the case of one who exchanges [an unconsecrated animal for a consecrated animal] which involves no action,⁴⁰ and yet it is punishable [with lashes]? For we have learnt: NOT THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EXCHANGE, BUT THAT IF ONE DID SO, THE SUBSTITUTE IS SACRED AND HE RECEIVES FORTY LASHES! — Rab can answer you: This [our Mishnah] is the opinion of R. Judah who holds: A negative command [the transgression of] which involves no action is punishable with lashes. But how can you explain the Mishnah in accordance with the view of R. Judah, surely have we not explained the first clause [of the Mishnah] as not being in accordance with the view of R. Judah? For the Mishnah states: ALL PERSONS CAN EXCHANGE; [and it was asked]: What does hakkol [all] include? [And the answer was that] it includes the case of an heir, not in accordance with R. Judah!⁴¹ This Tanna [of the Mishnah] agrees with R. Judah on one point, [namely] that a negative command [the transgression of] which involves no action is punishable with lashes, but differs from him in another point, for whereas R. Judah holds that an heir cannot lay hands [on the head of his father's sacrifice] and that an heir cannot effect an exchange, our Tanna holds that an heir can lay hands [on the head of his father's sacrifice] and can effect an exchange.

R. Iddi son of R. Abin reported in the name of R. Amram, R. Isaac and R. Johanan: [R. Judah reported]⁴² in the name of R. Jose the Galilean: In respect of every negative command laid down in the Torah, if one actually does something [in transgressing it], he is punishable with lashes ‘ but if he does not actually do anything [in transgressing it] he is not punishable, except in the cases of one who takes an oath, exchanges [an unconsecrated animal for a consecrated animal], and curses his fellow with the Name,⁴³ in which cases though he committed no action, he is punished [with lashes].

[The Rabbis] said in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina: In the case also of one who named⁴⁴ terumah before bikkurim.⁴⁵

Whence do we derive that one who takes an oath is punishable [with lashes]? — R. Johanan reported in the name of R. Meir:⁴⁶ [Scripture says:] For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his Name in vain;⁴⁷ thus intimating that the Heavenly tribunal

- (1) In order to exempt his neighbour's grain from tithes.
 - (2) Lit., ‘the pleasure of (conferring) a benefit’, i.e., the satisfaction one feels in obliging somebody.
 - (3) Rami b. Hama could thus solve his query from R. Abbuha's statement.
 - (4) So Sh. Mek. Cur. edd. ‘he said to him’.
 - (5) In the case cited by R. Abbuha.
 - (6) The consecration of the animal.
 - (7) The sacrificing for atonement.
 - (8) With reference to Rami b. Hama's inquiry.
 - (9) I.e., an Israelite whose substitution makes the animal sacred. But where in the beginning the animal's dedication was through a gentile, although the atonement was for an Israelite, its exchange is not holy.
 - (10) And since the person for whom atonement is made is an Israelite who can effect an exchange, although the consecrator is a gentile, the exchange is sacred.
 - (11) For since the law of sacrilege does not apply to them, then necessarily the prohibition of making secular use of the dedications of a gentile can only be of a rabbinical character; and this leniency is indicated by the fact that other laws like piggul etc. do not apply to them.

 - (17) Ibid. XXII, 2.
 - (18) Mentioned in connection with nothar.
 - (19) Lev. XIX, 8. And just as the laws of ritual uncleanness do not apply to the sacrifice of a gentile, since it says the children of Israel, so the law of nothar does not apply to the dedication of a gentile.
 - (20) That it does not apply to a gentile dedication.
 - (21) Used with reference to piggul.
 - (22) Ibid. VII, 18.
 - (23) Ibid. XIX, 8.

- (31) The same ruling which excludes a gentile therefore applies to animal tithing, as both kinds of tithing come under the term of ma'aser (tithe); and on the basis of this, by reason of the analogy mentioned above between an exchanged animal and a tithed animal, we derive the ruling that a gentile cannot effect an exchange.
- (32) Num. XV, 13.

will not hold him guiltless but the earthly tribunal punish him [with lashes] and hold him guiltless.¹ Said R. Papa to Abaye: Why not say that the meaning of the text is that the earthly tribunal will not punish him at all?² — He replied to him: If this be the case, let Scripture state: He shall not hold him guiltless, and say no more; what is the need for the word ‘the Lord’? In order to intimate: It is the Heavenly tribunal which will not hold him guiltless, but the earthly tribunal punish him [with lashes] and hold him guiltless. We find therefore [Biblical authority] for the case of a vain oath.³ Whence do we derive that [one is punishable with lashes] for a false oath?⁴ — R. Johanan himself⁵ said: [The expression] in vain [is stated] twice.⁶ If it⁷ has no bearing on the subject of a vain oath, apply it to the case of a false oath, as intimating that one is punishable [with lashes]. To this R. Abbuha demurred: How is a false oath to be understood? Shall we say, if he said: ‘I will not eat and he did eat? But in that case he performed action!’⁸ On the other hand where he said: 'I will eat', and he did not eat, would he be punishable [with lashes in such a case]? Has it not been stated:⁹ If he says, 'I swear that I will eat this loaf to-day' and the day passed and he did not eat, both R. Johanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish hold that he is not punishable with lashes. R. Johanan says: He is not punishable [with lashes] because it is a negative command [the transgression of] which involves no action, and for breaking a prohibitory law which does not involve an action one is not punishable [with lashes]; whereas R. Simeon b. Lakish says: He is not punishable with lashes because he can be given only a doubtful warning,¹⁰ and a doubtful warning cannot render one punishable [with lashes]! — Rather said R. Abbuha: Let the case of a false oath then be if he says: 'I have eaten' or 'I have not eaten'.¹¹ And why is the case if he says: '[I swear] I have eaten' or '[I swear] I have not eaten' different?¹² — Said Raba: The Torah plainly implies a false oath similar to a vain oath. Just as a vain oath refers to the past,¹³ so a false oath also refers to the past.¹⁴

R. Jeremiah cited the following in objection to R. Abbuha: If he says, 'I swear that I will not eat this loaf', 'I swear I will not eat it', 'I swear I will not eat it'¹⁵ and he ate it, he is punishable only on one count,¹⁶ and this is the 'oath of utterance'¹⁷ for which one is liable to lashes if it is wilfully broken, and to a sliding scale sacrifice¹⁸ if in error.¹⁹ Now what case does the expression 'This is' exclude?²⁰ Is it not surely the case of one who says: 'I swear I have eaten' or 'I swear I have not eaten' that he is not lashed?²¹ — No. [This is what it means:] This is [an example of an oath of utterance] for which, if broken in error, one brings a sacrifice, but where he says: 'I swear I have eaten' or 'I have not eaten', he does not bring a sacrifice.²² And whose opinion is this? That of R. Ishmael who says: One is liable to bring [a sacrifice for an oath of utterance] only when the oath relates to the future.²³ But [you may say that] he is punishable [with lashes];²⁴ read then the second clause:²⁵ 'This is a vain oath for which one is punishable with lashes if it is wilfully broken, and if in error, one is exempt'.²⁶ Now what case does [the word] 'This is' exclude? Is it not surely the case of one who says 'I swear I have eaten' or 'I swear I have not eaten', so that he is not punishable with lashes?²⁷ — No. [It means this:] This is [a case of a vain oath] where if it is broken in error, one is exempted from bringing a sacrifice, but where one says 'I swear I have eaten' or 'I swear I have not eaten', he brings a sacrifice. And whose opinion is this? That of R. Akiba who says: One brings a sacrifice [for an oath of utterance] even if it relates to the past. But have you not explained that the first clause is the opinion of R. Ishmael?²⁸ Rather [we must say,] since the second clause is the opinion of R. Akiba, therefore the first clause will also be the opinion of R. Akiba; and the first clause therefore will not exclude the case of one who says 'I have eaten' or 'I have not eaten'²⁹ but will exclude the case of one who says 'I shall eat' or 'I shall not eat'.³⁰ And what is the difference?³¹ — Where [it] speaks of the future,³² it excludes something relating to the future;³³ but where it speaks of the future, would it exclude something relating to the past?³⁴

'And one who exchanges'. Said R. Johanan to the Tanna.³⁵ Do not read: 'And one who exchanges',³⁶ because his very words³⁷ constitute an action.³⁸

'And he who curses his fellow with the Name'. Whence is this proved? — R. Eleazar reported in the name of R. Oshaia: The verse says: If thou wilt not observe to do etc.³⁹ And it says: Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful.⁴⁰ Now I do not know in what this 'wonder' consists.⁴¹ But when Scripture says:⁴² That the judge cause him to lie down to be beaten,⁴³ this shows that

[the] ‘wonderful’ [punishment]⁴⁴ means [punishment with] lashes. But why not say that it⁴⁵ refers even to a true oath?⁴⁶ — It is explicitly stated:⁴⁷ Then shall the oath of the Lord be between them.⁴⁸ But why not say that this⁴⁹ is only with the object of appeasing his neighbour,⁵⁰ but that in reality he is punished [with lashes]?⁵¹ — You cannot say this. For is it not written: And shalt swear by his Name?⁵² But we need this text in order to derive the ruling of R. Giddal? For R. Giddal said: Whence do we derive that one may swear to observe the commandments,⁵³ for it says: I have sworn and I will perform it that I will keep thy righteous judgments?⁵⁴ — Is there not however another text, And to him shalt thou cling and swear by his Name?⁵⁵ Then what does the text, [‘If thou wilt not observe to do’] come to teach us? That one who curses his fellow with the Name is punishable [with lashes].⁵⁶ But why not say that the text refers to one who pronounces the Lord's name for no purpose?⁵⁷ — Is then one who curses his fellow with the Name less culpable than one who pronounces the Lord's name for no purpose? — Our question is really this: Why not say that for one who pronounces the Lord's name for no purpose the punishment of lashes will suffice, but if one curses his fellow with the Name, since he commits two [forbidden things], first in pronouncing the Lord's name for no purpose and then in vexing his fellow, therefore punishment with lashes should not be sufficient?⁵⁸

- (1) By means of lashes his sin will be atoned.
 - (2) Since no action is involved in taking an oath, therefore no punishment at all is inflicted.
 - (3) That one is punishable with lashes. A vain oath means if one swears to that which is universally known to be otherwise, e.g. saying of a stone column that it is gold.
 - (4) If one swears to the opposite of the truth, e.g., ‘I have eaten’ when he has not.
 - (5) Without reporting it in the name of some other teacher.
 - (6) In the same verse Ex. XX, 7.
 - (7) The additional repetition of ‘in vain’.
 - (8) And therefore it is only right that he should be punishable with lashes, for he ate and took an action in transgressing the oath.
 - (9) Pes. 63b; Mak. 15b; Shebu. 3b, 21a.
 - (10) One swears he will do a certain thing during the day when the actual moment of the offence (of omission) cannot be defined, so as to make the warning precede immediately. Here too when he is warned to eat the loaf of bread, he can say he has plenty of time and has no fear of the warning. And even if the day passed, he can still plead that he forgot both the oath and the warning. Consequently he is not liable to punishment with lashes.
 - (11) Referring to what has already taken place, so that no action is involved in the violation of the oath.
 - (12) That you include if he says ‘I have eaten’ and he did not eat as punishable with lashes and you exclude from punishment if he says ‘I will eat’ and he did not eat, since in both cases the transgressions do not involve an action. Sh. Mek. deletes the words ‘I will eat and he did not eat’ that follow.
 - (13) For if he swears concerning a column of stone that it is gold, this refers to the past, for in the past, before he took the oath, it was a stone, as it is now (Rashi).
 - (14) E.g., if he says: ‘I swear I have eaten’ or ‘I have not eaten’, whereas ‘I will eat’ refers to the future. And just as one is liable to lashes for the vain oath as explained above, similarly one is liable to lashes for a false oath.
 - (15) Uttering the same oath three times.
 - (16) For one oath cannot be superimposed on another.
 - (17) Of which Scripture says: Pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good (Lev. v, 4). It is an oath which neither benefits nor injures anybody.
 - (18) According to pecuniary conditions.

- (19) V. Shebu. 27b.
- (20) So that one is not liable to lashes if he offends wilfully.
- (21) For although it is an 'oath of utterance' it is not punishable with lashes, since Scripture says 'to do evil or to do good', implying the future and excluding the past, e.g., 'I have eaten' etc. At all events, we have not yet found a definition of what constitutes a 'false oath' which we say above is punishable with lashes.
- (22) For the Scriptural verse: 'To do evil or to do good' which refers to the future is mentioned in connection with the bringing of a sacrifice. But there would be the punishment of lashes where he says. 'I have eaten' as in the case of a vain oath.
- (23) For Scripture says: To do evil or to do good (Lev. v, 4); v. Shebu. 25a.
- (24) If he swears: 'I have eaten' or 'I have not eaten'.
- (25) Of the Mishnah in Shebu. 27b.
- (26) v. Shebu. 29a.
- (27) This therefore contradicts the inference from the first clause above.
- (28) Who says that a sacrifice is brought only when the oath has reference to the future. How then can you have the same Mishnah holding contrary opinions?
- (29) So that if one says: 'I have eaten' or 'I have not eaten' one would certainly be bound to bring a sacrifice if he swore in error, since we accept the opinion of R. Akiba on this point.
- (30) From the bringing of a sacrifice.
- (31) That I exclude from the first clause the case of 'I will eat' from bringing a sacrifice and include the case of 'I have eaten' in the second clause as being bound to bring a sacrifice.
- (32) 'I will not eat it', mentioned in the first clause.
- (33) The case of 'I will eat' and he did not eat.
- (34) E.g., 'I have eaten' or 'I have not eaten'. For fuller notes v. Shebu. (Sonc. ed.) 27b et seq.
- (35) V. Glos. s.v. (b).
- (36) As being one of the exceptions of a transgression involving no action for which one is lashed.
- (37) 'This unconsecrated animal be exchanged for that consecrated animal'.
- (38) For the unconsecrated animal becomes sacred.
- (39) Deut. XXVIII, 58. The passage continues: That thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, the Lord thy God, i.e., that one should not utter the Deity's name in vain and similarly one who curses his neighbour with the Name, utters God's name in vain.
- (40) In verse 59 which follows.
- (41) What exactly is the nature of the punishment referred to when Scripture says tkpvu , He will make . . . wonderful.
- (42) . Ibid. XXV, 2.
- (43) Here the word 'beaten' is mentioned in connection with ukhpvu , the latter word being a similar expression to tkpvu , And (the Lord) will make wonderful.
- (44) Alluded to by the word.
- (45) The Scriptural passage above: If thou wilt not observe to do etc.
- (46) That one is warned not to utter the name of the Deity even with a true oath, under the penalty of lashes.
- (47) That a true oath may be uttered with the Name.
- (48) Ex. XXII, 10.
- (49) That an oath is taken with the Name.
- (50) So that he should not claim money from him.
- (51) For taking an oath with the Name.
- (52) Deut. VI, 13. Thus we see that it is permissible to swear with the Name.

(53) So that one cannot go back on one's word.

(54) Ps. CXIX, 106. And therefore there is need for the text: And shalt swear by His name to inform us that one may even utter the Name in an oath which is taken to observe commandments.

(55) Deut. X, 20. Therefore one of the texts is required in order to deduce the ruling that one can swear with the Name to observe the commandments, and the other, that it is permissible to utter the Name in connection with a true oath.

(56) Although no action is involved.

(57) But if one curses one's fellow with the Name, there is no punishment with lashes.

(58) That atonement with lashes alone is not adequate for the offence.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 4a

— You cannot say this, since it is written: Thou shalt not curse the deaf.¹ Or if you prefer [another solution] I may say:² There is no difficulty [if the text above]³ refers to one who curses his fellow [with the Name]; its warning⁴ in that case would be derived from here, since it is written: Thou shalt not curse the deaf.⁵ But if you say that it refers to one who utters the Lord's name for no purpose,⁶ whence is its warning derived?⁷ — But why not?⁸ But does not Scripture say: Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God and serve Him?⁹ — That text is only a positive admonition.¹⁰

‘[The Rabbis] said in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina: In the case also of one who names terumah before bikkurim.’ What is the reason of R. Jose son of R. Hanina? — The verse says: Thou shalt not delay to offer of the fulness of thy harvest and of the outflow of thy presses.¹¹ ‘The fulness of thy harvest’, this refers to the bikkurim;¹² ‘the outflow¹³ of thy presses’, this refers to terumah;¹⁴ and [Scripture] says: Thou shalt not delay.¹⁵

It was stated: If one named terumah before bikkurim there is a difference of opinion between R. Eleazar and R. Jose son of R. Hanina. One says he is punishable with lashes, while the other says he is not punishable with lashes. You may conclude that it is R. Jose son of R. Hanina who says that he is punishable [with lashes], since R. Jose son of R. Hanina says: Also one who names terumah before bikkurim is punishable [with lashes]. On the contrary, you may conclude that it is R. Eleazar who says that he is punishable [with lashes]. For we have learnt:¹⁶ If one has before him two baskets of tebel [untithed produce] and he says: The tithe of this [basket] shall be in that one, the first basket is considered tithed.¹⁷ [If he says:] The tithe of this one shall be in the other one, and the tithe of the other one in this one, the first is tithed,¹⁸ whereas the second is not tithed.¹⁹ [If he says:] Their tithes shall serve for another, he has named them.²⁰ And it was stated: R. Eleazar says:²¹ He is punishable with lashes because he named the second tithes [of the one basket] before the first tithes of the other.²² This is proved.²³ Then it is R. Jose son of R. Hanina who holds that he is not punishable with lashes.²⁴ Must it then be said that there is a contradiction between the two rulings of R. Jose son of R. Hanina?²⁵ — No. R. Jose son of R. Hanina

(1) Lev. XIX, 14. Implying whether without the Name or with the Name, for which there is a prohibitory law. The texts therefore, ‘If thou wilt not observe to do’ and ‘Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful’ inform us that there is punishment of lashes for one who curses his fellow with the Name. Aliter: You cannot say that atonement with lashes alone is not sufficient in a case where one curses his fellow with the Name, for by means of an analogy in Sanh. 61a we compare the text ‘Thou shalt not curse the deaf’ with the text: Nor curse the ruler of thy people (Ex. XXII, 27) and just as in the case of the latter punishment of lashes is sufficient, so in the case of ‘the humblest of thy people’, i.e., the deaf, lashes are sufficient atonement. The Gemara also explains in Sanhedrin that we are dealing in the text with a case where the Name is uttered (Rashi).

(2) So Rashi.

(3) ‘If thou wilt not observe to do’.

(4) in order that the transgression of a prohibition should entail lashes, a text giving the warning is first necessary.

(5) And we have explained that the text implies even with the Name. Therefore here we have the warning, and the punishment of lashes is derived from the text: If thou wilt not observe to do.

(6) And is therefore punishable with lashes.

(7) Where is the Biblical warning that it is forbidden to pronounce the Lord's name for no purpose?

(8) Can we not find a text giving the required warning?

(9) Deut. VI, 13 ‘which informs us that the Deity's name must be treated with respect.

(10) It is not therefore called a warning. Consequently we explain the text: If thou wilt not observe to do . . . then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful as referring to the case of one who curses his fellow with the Name and not to a case of one who pronounces the Lord's name to no purpose.

(11) Ex. XXII, 28.

(12) And the reason why bikkurim is described as ‘fulness’ is because soon after the grain is full and ripened it is ready for bikkurim. Another reason (R. Gershom) is because bikkurim is given when the grain is still intact, prior to any separation.

(13) I gns .

(14) Terumah is called dema’ (mixture) because the mixing of secular grain with it, to the extent of one hundred and one times its quantity, neutralizes it.

(15) Meaning that the proper sequence of the setting aside of the various priestly dues must be observed.

(16) Dem. VII, 6.

(17) Although he had not actually made the separation.

(18) Because the tithe has been set aside on its behalf from the second basket.

(19) For the first basket is now exempt, and we cannot in turn set aside the tithe from it on behalf of the second basket which is still subject to tithe.

(20) We cannot say here that we are separating what is exempt from tithe on behalf of what is subject to tithe, for in both baskets the separation is viewed as taking place simultaneously and with one declaration.

(21) R. Eleazar's words refer to the first case where one names tithe of the second basket for the first basket and where it is ruled that only the first basket is exempted.

(22) For we hold that when he names tithe this includes also the second tithes. Thus the first basket was exempted from both the first and second tithes, whilst the second basket is still tebel, even in respect of the first tithe. There is therefore the penalty of lashes because he named the second tithes before the first tithes. For, although the text only speaks of delaying with reference to terumah and bikkurim, the same law applies to the correct sequence of the two tithes and also to terumah and tithes.

(23) That it is R. Eleazar who holds that one is punishable for changing the sequence of the priestly dues.

(24) Since it is R. Eleazar who says that he is punishable with lashes, therefore the Tanna who differs from him and holds that one is not punishable with lashes must be R. Jose son of R. Hanina.

(25) For he says above that one who names terumah before bikkurim is punishable with lashes.

was speaking of exempting [from lashes];¹ and he says thus: Transgression of a negative command which does not involve an action is not punishable with lashes. [The Rabbis] said in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina: Also one who names terumah before bikkurim.² And why is it that one who exchanges is punishable [with lashes]?³ [Assumedly] because with his very words⁴ he performs an action.⁵ Then the case of one who names terumah before bikkurim should also be punishable with lashes, since with his words he performed an action?⁶ — Said R. Abin: It is different there,⁷ for [the prohibition of not delaying the priestly dues] is a negative command that is remediable by a positive command,⁸ since it is written: Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave offering.⁹

R. Dimi was once sitting and repeating this tradition.¹⁰ Abaye asked him: And is it true that every negative command which is remediable by a positive command is not punishable [with lashes]? Is there not the case of one who exchanges [an unconsecrated animal for a consecrated animal] which is a negative command remediable by a positive command and is yet punishable with lashes? For we have learnt in our Mishnah: NOT THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EXCHANGE BUT THAT IF ONE DID SO, THE SUBSTITUTE IS SACRED AND HE RECEIVES FORTY LASHES. — [The case of one who exchanges is different, for]¹¹ here are two negative commands¹² and one positive command¹³ and one positive command cannot displace two negative commands.¹⁴ But is there not the case of one who violates [a woman] for which act there is one negative command¹⁵ and one positive command,¹⁶ and yet the positive command does not displace the negative command? For it has been taught:¹⁷ If one violates [a maiden] and then divorces her [after marriage],¹⁸ if he is an Israelite he takes her back and is not punished [with lashes];¹⁹ but if he is a priest, he is punished [with lashes]²⁰ and he does not take her back!²¹ — You mention the case of priests. Their case is different, for the Divine Law²² invests them with added sanctity.²³

This is a matter of dispute between Tannaim.²⁴ And ye shall let nothing remain of it until the morning and that which remains of it until morning ye shall burn with fire.²⁵ Scripture here has come to state a positive command²⁶ following a negative command in order to inform us that one is not punishable with lashes on account thereof. So R. Judah.²⁷ R. Jacob says: This comes not under this head,²⁸ but the reason is because it is a negative command [the transgression of] which involves no action,²⁹ and the transgression of a negative command in which no action is involved is not punishable with lashes. This implies [does it not] that R. Judah holds that it is punishable with lashes.³⁰ And according to R. Jacob, what does the text: ‘And that which remains of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire’ come to teach? It is required for what we have learnt:³¹ The bones, the tendons and that which remains of the Paschal lamb are burnt on the sixteenth [of Nisan].³² If the sixteenth [of Nisan] fell on the Sabbath they are burnt on the seventeenth, because the burning of sacred things does not supersede either the Sabbath or Festivals. And Hezekiah said, and so taught a Tanna of the School of Hezekiah: What is the reason? Scripture says: ‘That which remains of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire’; the text came to give a second morning³³ for its burning.³⁴

Said Abaye: Any act which the Divine Law forbids³⁵, if it has been done, it has legal effect,³⁶ for if you were to think that the act has no legal effect, why then is one punishable [on account thereof with lashes]? Raba however said: The act has no legal effect at all, and the reason why one is punishable with lashes on account thereof is because one has transgressed a command of the Divine Law.

- (1) R. Jose b. R. Hanina's statement has reference to the first Tanna who holds that transgression of a negative command which does not involve an action is not punishable with lashes. R. Jose thereupon declares that the case also of one who named terumah before bikkurim is exempt from lashes for the same reason. This is contrary to the assumption held hitherto that R. Jose made him liable to lashes.
- (2) Is also exempt from the punishment of lashes.
- (3) As stated above, that the case of one who exchanges is an exception to the rule that the transgression of any negative law in order to merit punishment with lashes must involve an action, for here, in exchanging, no action is taken.
- (4) 'Let this unconsecrated animal be instead of that consecrated animal'.
- (5) The hullin (unconsecrated animal) becoming sacred.
- (6) By naming it he invests the fruit with the holiness of terumah.
- (7) In the case of the naming of terumah before bikkurim.
- (8) A negative command the transgression of which must be repaired by a succeeding act. Now if he violates the prohibition by not naming the priestly dues in their right sequence, he can rectify the matter by setting aside the priestly due which has been omitted. In such a case, where a forbidden act can be repaired, there is no punishment of lashes.
- (9) Num. XVIII, 29.
- (10) That the reason why one is not punishable with lashes where one names terumah before bikkurim is because the prohibition is remediable by the positive command.
- (11) So Sh. Mek.
- (12) 'He shall not alter nor change it'.
- (13) 'Then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy' (Lev. XXVII, 10).
- (14) And therefore he who exchanges is punishable with lashes.
- (15) He may not put her away all his days (Deut. XXII, 29).
- (16) And she shall be his wife (ibid).
- (17) Mak. 15a.
- (18) Which is forbidden by the Scripture.
- (19) For after committing the transgression he can always carry out the positive command by re-marrying her,
- (20) Since he cannot take her back after divorcing her, as a priest is forbidden to re-marry a divorcee. Therefore he cannot repair the act and the positive command does not as a result displace the transgression.
- (21) You have therefore here a difficulty for the one who maintains that a transgression of a negative command which is remediable by a positive command is not punishable with lashes.
- (22) Lit., 'the merciful one'.
- (23) The reason therefore is not because a positive command does not displace a negative command, but because we are stricter in the case of a priest than in that of an Israelite, and therefore a priest is liable to lashes.
- (24) There is a difference of opinion among Tannaim as to whether or not the transgression of a negative command which involves no action is punishable with lashes.
- (25) Ex. XII, 10.
- (26) 'And that which remains, etc.'.
- (27) Who therefore holds that transgression of a negative command which is remediable by a positive command is not punishable with lashes.
- (28) This is not the real reason why one is exempt from lashes.

- (29) Since to leave over the remains of the Paschal lamb entails no action.
- (30) Hence we see that there is a difference of opinion among Tannaim as to whether transgression of a negative law which does not entail an action is punishable with lashes.
- (31) Pes. 83a.
- (32) But not on the fifteenth, for it is forbidden to burn holy things on festivals.
- (33) The word 'morning' being mentioned twice in the same verse.
- (34) The text therefore means as follows: One must not leave the remains of the Paschal lamb until the next morning, i.e., the fifteenth; but that which remains till the second morning, you shall burn it in fire, i.e., on the sixteenth which is the intermediate day of the festival.
- (35) Lit., 'said, "do not"'.
(36) I.e., what has been done is valid.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 5a

An objection was raised: If one violates [a maiden] and then divorces her [after marriage], if he is an Israelite he must take her back and is not punished with lashes. Now if you say that since one has transgressed the command of the Divine Law one is punished with lashes, then here he, too, should be punished with lashes! This refutes Raba?¹ — Raba can answer you: The case is different there,² for Scripture says: 'All his days'³ [intimating that] all his days, [if he divorces her] he is required to take her back.⁴ And what does Abaye⁵ say to this? — If the Divine Law had not said: 'All his days' I might have thought that there exists a mere prohibition,⁶ but that if he wishes he can take her back, and if he wishes he need not.⁷ The text 'All his days' therefore teaches us [that this is not so].⁸ (Another version: They raised an objection: If one violates [a woman] and [marries her] and then divorces her, if he is an Israelite, he takes her back and is not punishable with lashes; but if he is a priest, he is punishable with lashes and he does not take her back. At all events it [the Baraita] says: If he is an Israelite, he takes her back and he is punishable with lashes. This refutes Abaye? — The case is different there, since the Divine Law says: 'All his days', intimating that all his days [if he divorces her] he is required to re-marry her. And what does Raba [say to this]? — [Raba] can answer you: If the Divine Law had not said 'All his days', I might have thought that he would be punishable with lashes and that he must re-marry her, [for the law of one who violates a woman] is an unqualified negative command, since it is written: He may not put her away all his days. For this reason Scripture says: 'All his days', to make the law of one who violates [a woman] a negative command remediable by a positive command, for which there is no punishment of lashes.)⁹

But is there not the case of one who separates [terumah] from bad [grain] for good [grain], concerning which the Divine Law says: Of all the best thereof,¹⁰ [he must bring as terumah] 'the best thereof',¹¹ but not from the inferior?¹² And yet we have learnt: We may not separate terumah from the bad [grain] for the good, but if one did so,¹³ it is counted as terumah?¹⁴ Consequently we see [that a forbidden act] has a legal effect! Shall we say that this refutes Raba?¹⁵ — Raba can answer you: The case is different,¹⁶ for it will be as R. Elai. For R. Elai said: Whence do we deduce that if one separated [terumah] from bad [grain] for good [grain] it is counted as terumah? It says: And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it when ye have heaved from it the best of it.¹⁷ Now if the terumah¹⁸ is not holy, wherefore should he bear sin?¹⁹ Hence we infer that if one separates terumah from bad [grain] for good [grain] it is counted as terumah. And Abaye?²⁰ — If the Divine

Law had not said: ‘And ye shall bear no sin’ I might have thought what the Divine Law means is, ‘Perform a mizwah²¹ in the best [way]’,²² but if one did not do so, he is not called a sinner. [The text]²³ therefore informs us [that this is not so].²⁴ But is there not the case of one who separates from one species to serve as terumah for another species, concerning which the Divine Law says:²⁵ All the best of the oil [and all the best of the wine],²⁶ [intimating] that he must give the best [as terumah]²⁷ for the one [species] and the best [as terumah]²⁸ for the other? And we have learnt: One must not separate terumah from one species for another species, and if one did so, it is not counted as terumah.²⁹ Consequently we see that a forbidden act has no legal effect. Shall we say that this refutes Abaye?³⁰ — Abaye can answer you: The case is different there,³¹ since Scripture says: The first part of them,²⁵ thus implying the first of this [species]³² and the first of that [species].³³ And Elai said likewise: [The text says:] ‘The first part of them’ [intimating the first of this species and the first of that species].³⁴ And Raba?³⁵ — If the Divine Law had not stated ‘the first part of them’³⁶ I might have thought that [only] in the case of wine and oil, with reference to which the text says: ‘The best’, ‘the best’,³⁷ we may not set aside one species for the other; but in the case of wine and corn, or corn and corn,³⁸ where ‘the best’³⁹ is mentioned only once, we may separate one species for the other.⁴⁰ The Divine Law therefore says: ‘The first part of them’, [to teach] that one must give ‘the best’ of one species and ‘the best’ of the other.⁴¹

Another version:⁴² But in the case of wine and corn in connection with which ‘the best’ is mentioned only once, [I might think that] one may separate from this [wine] for that [corn]. Scripture therefore says: The first part of them.

But is there not the case of devoted things, with reference to which Scripture says: [Notwithstanding, no devoted thing that a man may devote unto the Lord of all that he hath whether of man or of beast or of the field of his possession] shall be sold or redeemed.⁴³ And we have learnt: Things devoted to priests⁴⁴ are not subject to redemption but must be given to the priest.⁴⁵ Consequently we see that [a forbidden act]⁴⁶ has no legal effect.⁴⁷ Shall we say that this refutes Abaye? — He [Abaye] will answer you: The case is different there, for the Divine Law says:⁴⁸ ‘Every devoted thing most holy unto the Lord it is’,⁴⁹ intimating that it shall remain in its status.⁵⁰

(1) It is now assumed that the implication of the ruling that he must take her back is that the divorce is of no effect since he is in duty bound to re-marry her. Now this would be in order according to Abaye who holds that the punishment of lashes is determined by the validity of the act; since the divorce is of no legal effect, he is not flagellated. But according to Raba, who holds that the punishment is inflicted because of transgressing a Scriptural command, irrespective of the effect of the act, here, too, he should be flagellated (v. Tosaf.).

(2) In the Baraita just quoted.

(3) Deut. XXII, 29.

(4) The Torah thus distinctly states that the divorce, even if effective, can never be of permanent character, as he is at all times in duty bound to take her back. The Torah is thus supplying a remedied action to the prohibition and consequently there are no lashes.

(5) According to Abaye, what need is there for a special text ‘All his days’ to inform us that one is in duty bound always to re-marry her and that therefore there is no punishment of lashes? Even without the text ‘All his days’, according to Abaye, there is no punishment of lashes, since he can take her back, his divorce having no permanent character.

- (6) By divorcing her.
- (7) That the re-marrying is optional.
- (8) And that it is a definite duty to re-marry her, not a mere option, and that all his days he is required to take her back, should he send her away.
- (9) The whole passage is omitted in Ms. M.
- (10) Num. XVIII, 29.
- (11) That he must separate from the best grain on behalf of the best grain.
- (12) On behalf of the good grain, for it is forbidden to do so. This is a matter therefore for which there is a Scriptural prohibition, although there would not be the punishment of lashes in this case, since the prohibition is merely derived by implication from the positive precept.
- (13) Lit., 'if he set aside terumah'.
- (14) Lit., 'his terumah is terumah'. V. Ter. II, 6.
- (15) Who holds that a forbidden act has no legal effect.
- (16) In the case of terumah just mentioned.
- (17) Num. XVIII, 32.
- (18) Set aside from inferior grain for good grain.
- (19) On account of the act of separation.
- (20) Since he holds that a forbidden act has a legal effect, what need is there for the text 'And ye shall bear no sin, etc.', which implies that the setting aside of inferior grain as terumah for good grain has legal effect?
- (21) A religious command.
- (22) Separate from the very best grain for terumah.
- (23) 'And ye shall bear no sin'.
- (24) But that he actually is designated a sinner.
- (25) Num. XVIII, 12.
- (26) The word 'best' being repeated in connection with oil and wine.
- (27) On behalf of its own species of oil but not for wine.
- (28) On behalf of its own species of wine but not for oil.
- (29) Ter. II, 4.
- (30) Who says that a forbidden act has a legal effect.
- (31) In the Mishnah just quoted.
- (32) I.e., oil is to be separated for the same species.
- (33) I.e., wine is to be separated for the same species; thus teaching that fruit cannot be set aside except for its own species. For this reason it is not counted as terumah; but elsewhere a forbidden act may have a legal effect.
- (34) So Sh. Mek.
- (35) Who holds that a forbidden act has no legal effect; what need, according to him, is there for the text 'the first part of them', to tell us this?
- (36) o, hatr So Rashi; cur. edd. have throughout 'first'.
- (37) The word 'best' is repeated.
- (38) I.e., wheat and barley, all of which come under the heading of corn (ids).
- (39) And all the best of the wine and the corn, Num. XVIII, 12
- (40) V. Rashi and Sh. Mek. Cur. edd.: where we separate one for the other there are no lashes.
- (41) I.e., that we cannot separate from one species of fruit or grain for another.
- (42) Of Raba's reply.

 (48) Lev. XXVII, 28.
 (49) So lit.
 (50) It does not pass from its sacred state through redemption.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 5b

But according to Raba¹ the text 'it is' comes to exclude the case of a firstling. For it has been taught: With reference to a firstling, it says: Thou shalt not redeem,² implying that it may be sold.³ In connection with a tithing animal, it says: It shall not be redeemed,⁴ and may neither be sold alive nor dead, neither unblemished nor blemished.⁵

But is there not the case of temurah⁶ concerning which the Divine Law says: He shall not alter it nor change it,⁷ and yet we learnt: NOT THAT ONE IS PERMITTED TO EXCHANGE BUT THAT IF ONE DID SO, THE SUBSTITUTE IS SACRED AND HE RECEIVES FORTY LASHES. Consequently we see that [a forbidden act] has a legal effect. This refutes Raba?⁸ — [Raba] can answer you: The case there⁹ is different, for Scripture says: 'Then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy', implying that it [the exchanged animal] must retain its sacred character. And Abaye?¹⁰ — If the Divine Law had not said: 'Then it and the exchange thereof [shall be holy]', I might have thought that the consecrated animal ceases [to be holy] and this one [the exchanged animal] enters into holiness. [Scripture] therefore informs us [that this is not so.]¹¹

But is there not the case of a firstling of which the Divine Law says: But the firstling of a cow or the firstling of a sheep or the firstling of a goat thou shalt not redeem,¹² and we have learnt:¹³ [Sacrifices rendered unfit for the altar]¹⁴ have redemption themselves¹⁵ and their exchanges,¹⁶ except in the case of a firstling or a tithing animal?¹⁷ Consequently we see that [a forbidden act] has no legal effect.¹⁸ This refutes Abaye?¹⁹ — He [Abaye] will answer you: The case is different there,²⁰ for Scripture says: [Holy] they [are]²¹ intimating that they remain in their sacred status. And what will Raba do with the word 'they'?²² — It intimates that 'they' are offered up but not their exchanges.²³ And whence does Abaye derive this ruling?²⁴ — [He derives it from the text:] Whether it be an ox or sheep, to the Lord it is;²⁵ 'it' [the firstling itself] is offered up but not its exchange. And Raba?²⁶ — It is indeed so that he does derive it²⁷ from that text.²⁸ Then what need is there for the text 'they are'? It teaches that if the blood of a firstling or a tithing animal became mixed up with things which are offered up,²⁹ they are still offered on the altar.³⁰ And whence does Abaye derive this ruling? — [He derives it from the text:] And shall take of the blood of the bullock and of the blood of the goat.³¹ Now is not the blood of the bullock more than the blood of the goat? This proves that things which are offered up do not neutralize one another. For it has been taught: 'And shall take of the blood of the bullock and of the blood of the goat', intimating that they must be mixed up.³² These are the words of R. Josiah. And Raba?³³ — There³⁴ he sprinkles the blood of the bullock separately and the blood of the goat separately, for he accepts the view of R. Jonathan.³⁵

But is there not the case of a tithing animal in reference to which the Divine Law says:³⁶ 'It shall not be redeemed', and we have learnt: They have redemption themselves and their exchanges except in the case of a firstling or tithing animal?³⁷ Consequently we see that a forbidden act has no legal effect!³⁸ This refutes Abaye? — He [Abaye] will answer you: The case is different there,³⁹ since we draw an analogy⁴⁰ between the term 'passing'⁴¹ used in connection with an animal tithed and the term 'passing'⁴² used in connection with a firstling.⁴³

But is there not the case of one who names terumah before bikkurim, concerning which the Divine Law says: Thou shalt not delay to offer of the fulness of thy harvest and of the outflow of thy press,⁴⁴ and we have learnt: If one [names] terumah before bikkurim, although he is guilty of transgressing a negative command,⁴⁵ his action is valid?⁴⁶ This refutes Raba?⁴⁷ — Raba will answer you: The case is different there,⁴⁸ since Scripture says: Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave offering.⁴⁹ And Abaye?⁵⁰ — He needs [the words 'Out of all your gifts'] for [answering the question which] R. Papa put to Abaye: If this be the case,⁵¹ then even if he [the Levite, anticipated the priest] when [the grain was] in the pile, he should be exempt from the obligation of terumah?⁵² And [Abaye] answered him: To meet your query Scripture says: Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave offering.⁵³ But why do you see fit to include the case of when [the grain was] in the pile,⁵⁴ and to exclude the case of grain in the ear?⁵⁵ — I include the case of [grain] in the pile because it comes under the title of corn, whereas I exclude the case of grain in the ear because it does not come under the title of corn.

But is there not the case of a widow married by a High Priest, concerning which the Divine Law says: A widow or a divorced woman, these shall he not take,⁵⁶ and we have learnt: Wherever betrothal is valid and yet involves a transgression,⁵⁷ the child has the legal status of the party which causes the transgression!⁵⁸ — The case is different there since Scripture says: Neither shall he profane his seed among his people.⁵⁹ And Abaye?⁶⁰ — Let Scripture then say: 'Lo yahel'.⁶¹ Why 'lo yehalel'?⁶² One [profanation refers] to it [the child]⁶³ and the other to [the woman] herself.⁶⁴

But is there not the case of one who dedicates blemished animals for the altar, concerning which the Divine Law says: But whatsoever hath a blemish, that shall ye not offer.⁶⁵ And it has been taught:⁶⁶ If one dedicates blemished animals for the altar, although he infringes a negative command, the act is valid?⁶⁷ This refutes Raba!⁶⁸ — Raba can answer you: The case is different there, since Scripture says: 'For it shall not be acceptable for you',⁶⁹ [intimating that] it is not acceptable but that its consecration is legal.⁷⁰ And Abaye?⁷¹ — If Scripture had not stated: 'For it shall not be acceptable for you', I might have thought the case⁷² should be similar to that of one who transgresses a religious command, but that it [the animal] is fit [even to offer up]. [The text therefore] informs us [that it is not so].⁷³

But is there not the case of one who dedicates unblemished animals for Temple repairs,⁷⁴ concerning which the Divine Law says:

(1) Who says a forbidden act is not valid; what need has he for the phrase 'it is'?

(2) Num. XVIII, 17. Redemption is forbidden so that the owners should not treat it as unconsecrated, as regards shearing its wool and working it.

(3) If a blemish occurred in the firstling the owner may sell it as a firstling to a priest, since Scripture only forbids its redemption, but not its selling; v. Bek. 31b.

(4) Lev. XXVII, 28.

(5) Because we draw an analogy between ma'aser and dedications, just as in the latter both redemption and selling are forbidden, similarly in the former, i.e., a tithing animal, selling is also forbidden. Now I might have supposed that the law of the firstling animal would be the same as that of an animal tithed as regards its selling. Therefore the word תִּיב (it is) used in connection with dedications comes to exclude a firstling animal from the restriction of selling.

(6) An unconsecrated animal exchanged for a consecrated one.

(7) Ibid. 10.

(8) Who says that a forbidden act has no validity.

(9) Of temurah.

(10) According to his view that a forbidden act has a legal effect, what need is there for the text, Then it and the exchange thereof, etc.?

(11) But that both become consecrated.

(12) Num. XVIII, 17.

(13) Infra 21a.

(14) Having become blemished. The difference between a firstling and a tithing animal and other disqualified sacrifices is that the flesh of the latter may be sold by weight and in shops like ordinary flesh, and this is not considered an unbecoming treatment of sacrifices since all profits accrued thereby go to the Sanctuary. But in regard to the flesh of a firstborn or a tithing animal, since the benefit accrues to the owners — in the case of the firstborn to the priest and in the case of a tithing animal to the Israelite owners — we do not allow them to be sold in the shop and by weight, as not in keeping with the treatment becoming to sacred things.

(15) The money acquires holiness and the animal becomes hullin.

(16) In which a blemish occurred. They become hullin and the money of redemption acquires holiness, after redemption.

(17) Blemished firstlings and tithing animals are not redeemable and remain sacred. The redemption money therefore does not acquire holiness, v. infra 21a.

(18) In the case of a blemished firstling or a blemished tithing animal.

(19) Who holds that a forbidden act has a legal effect.

(20) The Mishnah just quoted.

(21) So lit. E. V. 'They are holy'; Num. XVIII, 17.

(22) Since he holds that a forbidden act is not valid, the redemption here of a firstling is of no legal effect. Consequently there is no need for the word 'they' to teach us the same thing.

(23) For they do not receive any holiness by substitution.

(24) That substitutes do not become sacred.

(25) So lit. E. V. 'it is the Lord's'. Lev. XXVII, 26.

(26) Since we derive the ruling excluding the substitute of the firstling from holiness from the text 'whether it be an ox etc.', what need is there for the text 'holy they are' to teach the same thing?

(27) That a substitute of a firstling is not sacred.

(28) 'Whether it be an ox'.

(29) E.g., blood of several sacrifices that have become mixed up.

(30) And the flesh is rendered permissible by the sprinkling, for things which are offered up do not neutralize one another. From here we apply the same ruling to all cases of things which are offered up. The meaning of the text 'holy they are' is therefore that they remain in their sacred status, even if the blood is mixed up with the blood of other sacrifices.

- (31) Lev. XVI, 18. Scripture continuing: And put it upon the horns of the altar.
- (32) Implying that the sprinkling is done from both the blood of the bullock and the goat after mixing.
- (33) Since we derive the ruling that we may sprinkle the mixed blood of sacrifices from the text. 'And shall take from the blood of the bullock, etc.', what need is there for the words 'they are', used in connection with the law of a firstling?
- (34) In the text: And shall take from the blood of the bullock, etc.
- (35) Who says that we do not mix the blood of the bullock with the blood of the goat to sprinkle on the horns of the altar; v. Zeb. 81a.
- (36) Lev. XXVII, 33.
- (37) V. supra p. 25 notes. What is the difference between an animal tithed and a firstling on the one hand, and other sacrifices?
- (38) For the Mishnah says it has no redemption.
- (39) With reference to a tithed animal.
- (40) Zeb. 9a.
- (41) All that passes under the rod (Lev. XXVII, 32).
- (42) That thou shall cause to pass (set apart); Ex. XIII, 12.
- (43) And just as for a firstling there is no redemption (v. supra) so a tithed animal has no redemption. But elsewhere, Abaye maintains, it may be that a forbidden act has a legal effect.
- (44) V. supra 3a, 4a and notes.
- (45) 'Thou shalt not delay, etc.'
- (46) Lit., 'what he has done is done'. Ter. III, 6.
- (47) So Sh. Mek.
- (48) Where terumah was named before bikkurim.
- (49) Num. XVIII, 29, intimating that although you have named first tithe before terumah you can still separate terumah; and the same applies to terumah and bikkurim.
- (50) Since he holds that a prohibited act can have legal effect, what need is there for the text 'Out of all your gifts, etc.'?
- (51) In Bez. 13b if a Levite anticipated a priest by taking his first tithes from the grain still in the ear before the priest secures his terumah (v. Glos.) although thereby he causes the priest a loss, for a priest in the normal way receives two portions for every hundred and now after the Levite has taken his first tithe, the terumah will be only for the remaining ninety, nevertheless the Levite is not required to make good the priest's loss. The reason is because Scripture says the Levite must give a tenth part from the tithe (Num. XVIII, 26) implying that he need give not only a tithe from the tithe but both tithe and terumah. If, however, the Levite anticipated the priest when the grain was stacked up in piles, i.e., when it became liable to both terumah and tithes, then the Levite must make up for the terumah when he separates his tithe. Thereupon R. Papa said to Abaye: If you exempt the Levite from giving terumah because of the text: A tenth part of the tithe.
- (52) Why then is the Levite exempt from the obligation of terumah only when the grain is in ear?
- (53) Terumah. I.e., that he must, in certain circumstances, set aside terumah as well as the tithe from the tithe.
- (54) As requiring the Levite to give terumah.
- (55) As not requiring the Levite to give terumah.
- (56) Lev. XXI, 14.
- (57) As a result, as e.g., in the case of a widow marrying a High priest.
- (58) Lit., 'which is defective'. In this case, the widow or divorcee, and the child becomes a halal (profane, unfit for the priesthood) v. Kid. 66b. Consequently we see here that a forbidden act has a legal effect, for it says that the betrothal is valid. For if a prohibited act has no legal effect, should the betrothal be valid?

- (59) Lev. XXI, 15, implying that such marriages produce halalim (unfit for the priesthood) but not mamzerim (illegitimate children). Consequently we see that the betrothal in this case is valid.
- (60) Since he holds that a prohibited act has a legal effect, what need is there for the text: Neither shall he profane etc.
- (61) Which would imply that it refers to the status of the child alone.
- (62) kkj h the extra k indicates a further teaching.
- (63) That it becomes a halal.
- (64) That she becomes profaned (vkkj) and therefore if she is the daughter of a priest, she cannot eat her father's terumah. It is for this purpose that the text is necessary and not to teach that the betrothal is valid, despite the prohibition involved, as there is no need of an extra text to inform us of this, since in every case, according to Abaye, the ruling is that a forbidden act is valid.
- (65) Lev. XXII, 20; which text is explained (infra) as meaning: Ye shall not consecrate.
- (66) So Sh. Mek.
- (67) And they are sacred to the extent of their value.
- (68) Who holds that a forbidden act has no legal effect.
- (69) Lev. XXII, 20. So Bah.
- (70) To the extent of its value for the altar.
- (71) Since he holds that a forbidden act has a legal effect, what need is there for this text?
- (72) Of one who consecrates a blemished animal.
- (73) That it cannot be offered up on the altar.
- (74) But not for sacrifice on the altar.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 6a

[Anything too long or too short that mayest] thou offer for a freewill-offering,¹ that is, for dedications for Temple repairs,² and we have learnt: If one consecrates unblemished animals for Temple repairs, although he infringes a negative command,³ the act is valid? This refutes Raba?⁴ — Raba can answer you: From the same verse⁵ from which you include the case of blemished animals dedicated for the altar,⁶ you include the case of unblemished animals dedicated for Temple repairs.⁷

But is there not the case of one who steals, concerning which the Divine Law says: 'Thou shalt not steal',⁸ and we have learnt: If one steals⁹ wood and makes it into vessels or wool and makes it into garments, he pays [the value of the object] as it was at the time of the theft?¹⁰ This refutes Raba?¹¹ — Raba can answer you: The case is different there, since Scripture says: That he shall restore [that which he took by robbery],¹² intimating [that the restoration is to be] according to what he had robbed.¹³ And Abaye?¹⁴ — The text: That which he took by robbery¹⁵ is required in order to teach that he adds a fifth for his own robbery¹⁵ but not for that of his father.¹⁶

But is there not the case of one who takes the pledge,¹⁷ concerning which the Divine Law says: Thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge¹⁸ and we have learnt: 'He [the creditor] returns the pillow at night and the plough in the day'?¹⁹ — This refutes Raba?²⁰ — Raba can answer you: The case is different there,²¹ for Scripture says:²² Thou shalt surely restore [the pledge].²³ And Abaye?²⁴ — If the Divine Law had not stated 'thou shalt surely restore [the pledge]', I might have thought that he has only broken a prohibition,²⁵ and if he wishes, he can restore the pledge, and if he wishes, he need not. The text therefore informs us [that it is not so].²⁶

But is there not the case of pe'ah,²⁷ concerning which the Divine Law says: Thou shalt not wholly reap the corner of thy field,²⁸ and we have learnt.²⁹ [The proper performance of] the command of pe'ah is to separate from the standing corn. If he did not separate from the standing corn, he separates from the sheaves. If he did not separate from the sheaves, he separates from the pile [of grain] before he evens it. If he has evened it,³⁰ he tithes it and then gives pe'ah to him [the poor man]. In the name of R. Ishmael it was said: He also separates from the dough?³¹ This refutes Abaye?³² — Abaye can answer you: The case is different there,³³ since Scripture says: Thou shalt leave,³⁴ [and again] thou shalt leave³⁵ as redundant.³⁶ And Raba?³⁷ — He can answer you:³⁸ There is another case of 'leaving' similar to this. And what is it? It is the case of one who renounces ownership of his vineyard, for it was taught: If one renounces ownership of his vineyard and wakes in the morning and harvests it, he is bound to give peret,³⁹ the defective grapecluster,⁴⁰ the forgotten sheaf⁴¹ and pe'ah, but he is exempt from tithe.⁴²

Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: And now that you have given all these [various] answers,⁴³ wherein do Abaye and Raba really differ? — They differ in the case of stipulated usury⁴⁴ and will be on the lines of R. Eleazar's [statement]. For R. Eleazar said: Stipulated usury can be reclaimed through the judges,

(1) Lev. XXII, 23.

(2) From which it is inferred that only blemished animals are fit to dedicate for Temple repairs, but not unblemished animals; v. infra 7b.

(3) V. infra 7b.

(4) Who says that a forbidden act has no legal effect.

(5) From the text: 'But for a vow it shall not be accepted'.

(6) Which we explained above as implying that they are not acceptable but are consecrated, at least for their money value, for the altar.

(7) As being forbidden to offer; and we thus compare the case of unblemished animals dedicated for Temple repairs to the case of blemished animals dedicated for the altar. Just as in the case of the latter, we say although there is a negative command the act is valid, so in the case of the former, though there is a negative command, the act is valid. But elsewhere, Raba maintains, a forbidden act has no legal effect.

(8) Lev. XIX, 13.

(9) Lit., 'he robbed', 'he took it openly by force'.

(10) I.e., for the wood or wool alone, as we say that he obtains the ownership of the garment or vessel by reason of the change which he has effected, in spite of the forbidden act of stealing; v. B. K. 93a

(11) Who says that a forbidden act has no legal effect.

(12) Lev. V, 23.

(13) But not according to its value at present, after being improved and changed.

(14) Who holds that a forbidden act has a legal effect. What need is there for the text: 'That which he took by robbery'?

(15) For the text occurs in connection with the taking of a false oath and making a confession following a robbery, for which there is the extra penalty of adding a fifth to the value of the theft.

(16) Even if he swore falsely concerning it.

(17) For a debt, without the consent of the debtor.

- (18) Deut. XXIV, 10.
- (19) B. M. 113a. The law applies even if he took the pledge without the warrant of the court. We see therefore that a prohibited act is valid, otherwise the pledge would not be the creditor's at all and he would have to restore the pillow even in the day (Tosaf.).
- (20) Who says that a forbidden act has no legal effect.
- (21) In the Mishnah just quoted.
- (22) Deut. XXIV, 13.
- (23) Since the text repeats 'thou shalt surely restore, etc.', which teaches that the law applies also to the case where the pledge was taken without the warrant of the court; v. Tosaf.
- (24) Who holds that a forbidden act has a legal effect; what need is there for the text 'thou shalt surely restore the pledge'?
- (25) By taking the pledge without warrant.
- (26) That the restoration is in every case compulsory.
- (27) The corner of the field which belongs to the poor.
- (28) Lev. XXIII, 22.
- (29) B. K. 94a.
- (30) When it becomes subject to tithes and terumah.
- (31) And the change of name from grain does not give him ownership so as to exempt him from pe'ah. The Rabbis, however, differ from R. Ishmael and hold that the change in the name makes it exempt from pe'ah; v. B.K. 94a.
- (32) Who says that a forbidden act has a legal effect. The difficulty will arise if we accept the view of the Rabbis, for since he has not separated pe'ah from the standing corn, he transgresses a negative command. He ought then, according to Abaye, to be exempt from pe'ah, as a forbidden act is valid. The difficulty will even more certainly arise according to Abaye, if we adopt the view of R. Ishmael, for he goes even further than the Rabbis as regards the duty of giving pe'ah. V. Sh. Mek.
- (33) With reference to pe'ah.
- (34) Lev. XIX, 10.
- (35) Ibid. XXIII, 22.
- (36) The extra text therefore teaches us that although the grain has changed in his possession, he does not acquire possession of it, and is still bound to separate pe'ah and to leave it for the poor.
- (37) Who holds that a forbidden act is not valid. What will he do with the additional text 'thou shalt leave'?
- (38) The object of the extra text 'thou shalt leave' is to teach the following.
- (39) Grapes fallen off during cutting, v. Pe'ah VIII, 3.
- (40) Heb. 'oleloth; which belong to the poor, v. ibid 4.
- (41) Which also belongs to the poor. And although in the normal way renunciation of ownership exempts from the duty of giving all these things to the poor, this kind of renunciation does not exempt, on account of the additional command 'thou shalt leave' mentioned in connection with peret, pe'ah, etc.
- (42) For in connection with tithes there is no text 'thou shalt leave'.
- (43) The Baraithas and the Mishnahs quoted above in the Gemara either as questioning Abaye's or Raba's dictum, as the case may be, and the replies of each of these teachers explaining that, although elsewhere they maintain their own view on the subject as to whether a forbidden act has a legal effect or otherwise, the case of the particular Baraitha or Mishnah adduced was different, inasmuch as there existed a text to render it an exception.
- (44) Where the creditor arranges for a fixed amount as interest on loan. Abaye will hold that the action is valid and therefore the interest would not be reclaimed, in spite of transgressing the negative command relating to usury. Raba, however, will hold that the action has no legal effect and the interest therefore must be returned.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 6b

whereas the dust of usury¹ cannot be reclaimed through the judges. R. Johanan, however, says: Even stipulated usury is not reclaimed through the judges.² Thereupon he [R. Aha] said to him: But do they³ differ merely in opinion? Do they not differ in the interpretation of Scriptural texts? For R. Isaac said: What is the reason of R. Johanan? Scripture says: He hath given forth upon usury and hath taken increase: shall he then live? He shall not live,⁴ thus intimating that the taking of usury is a matter that affects life⁵ but is not subject to restoration.⁶ R. Aha b. Adda says: From here:⁷ Scripture says, 'But fear thy God',⁸ intimating that the taking of usury is a matter of fearing God but is not subject to restoration. Raba says: From here:⁷ [Scripture says:] He hath done all these abominations: he shall surely die: his blood shall be upon him.⁹ Now, lo, if he begat a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood.¹⁰ Lenders on interest are compared to shedders of blood. Just as shedders of blood cannot make restoration [of the lives lost], so lenders on interest are not required to make restoration [of interest]. And R. Nahman b. Isaac said: What is the reason of R. Eleazar?¹¹ Scripture says: That thy brother may live with thee,¹² thus intimating that he must return the interest so that he [the borrower] may live with you.

But then wherein do Abaye and Raba [really] differ? — On the question whether a change¹³ enables one to obtain ownership.¹⁴ Another version: The difference will be¹⁵ in the various answers [given above].¹⁶ [Still] another version: The difference¹⁷ will be in the matter of stipulated usury. According to Abaye he [the debtor] does not return the interest whereas according to Raba he is required to return the interest.¹⁸ But does not Abaye also hold that we reclaim stipulated usury through the judges? For Abaye said: If one claims four zuz from his fellow as interest, and the latter gave the lender in his shop for it a garment to the value of five [zuz], we recover four [zuz] from him and the remaining [zuz] we say he gave as a gift. Raba says however: We recover from him five [zuz]. What is the reason? The whole [sum] came to him as interest.¹⁹ — Rather than the difference of opinion between Abaye and Raba is in whether a change confers ownership.²⁰

Our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says:] Whatsoever hath a blemish, that ye shall not offer.²¹ Now what does the text teach us? If it means that ye shall not kill, is this not stated below?²² Why then does the text state: 'Ye shall not offer'? It means, Ye shall not dedicate. Hence [the Sages] said: He who dedicates blemished animals for the altar²³ is guilty on all five counts; for transgressing the prohibitory laws with reference to offering,²⁴ to dedicating,²⁵ killing,²⁶ sprinkling and burning wholly or partly.²⁷ They [the Sages] said in the name of R. Jose: [He is guilty] also [on account of the prohibition of] the receiving of the blood.

The Master said: 'If it means, Ye shall not kill, is not this mentioned below?' Where is this stated? — It has been taught: Blind or broken or maimed ye shall not offer these unto the Lord.²⁸ What does Scripture teach us here? If it means not to dedicate,²⁹ this is already stated above.³⁰ Then what does Scripture mean by 'Ye shall not offer'? [That] ye shall not kill. [The text:] Nor make an offering by fire of them²⁹ refers to the burning [of the sacrifices on the altar].³¹ From this I could only prove the burning of the whole sacrifice [as being prohibited]. Whence, however, will you deduce that the same applies to a part [of a sacrifice]? Because the text states: Of them.³² Whence will you deduce the prohibitory law for the sprinkling of the blood [of blemished animals]? The text states: Upon the altar.³³ [The succeeding words:] ‘Unto the Lord’ include the case of a scapegoat.³⁴ But do [the words]: ‘Unto the Lord’ come to include [something additional]? Has it not been taught.³⁵ Now³⁶ if you expound the word korban [offering], am I to understand it to include the case of animals dedicated for Temple repairs,³⁷ which are described as korban as for instance when it says: We have therefore brought the Lord's korban?³⁸ The text, however, states: And hath not brought it unto the door of the tent of the meeting.³⁹ [We therefore argue as follows]: In respect of whatever is fit for the door of the tent of the meeting,⁴⁰ one may become liable on account of the prohibition of slaughtering consecrated animals outside the Temple court; but in respect of whatever is not fit for the door of the tent of the meeting,⁴¹ one cannot become liable on account of the prohibition of slaughtering consecrated animals outside the Temple court. Shall I therefore exclude these⁴² but not the Red Heifer⁴³ and the scapegoat, since they are fit for ‘the door of the tent of the meeting’?⁴⁴ Therefore the text states: ‘Unto the Lord’; [the law concerning slaughtering outside the Temple court applies] only to those designated as ‘unto the Lord’,⁴⁵ but these⁴⁶ are excluded, for they are not designated ‘unto the Lord’!⁴⁷ — Said Raba: There we go according to the context [and⁴⁸ here we go according to the context]. There,⁴⁹ since the text, ‘Unto the door of the tent of the meeting’ includes,⁵⁰ therefore the text, ‘Unto the Lord’ in that connection excludes.⁵¹ Here, however, as the text ‘by fire’ excludes,⁵² therefore the text, ‘Unto the Lord’ in that connection includes.⁵³

The reason then why a blemished scapegoat is not brought is because Scripture says, ‘Unto the Lord’. But if Scripture had not included [the case of a scapegoat] by means of the text, ‘Unto the Lord’, I might have thought that it was permissible to bring a blemished scapegoat. But consider: The lot⁵⁴ designates only such as are fit ‘for [the Lord]’?⁵⁵ — Said R. Joseph: This represents the opinion of Hanan the Egyptian. [For it has been taught:] Hanan the Egyptian said: Even if there was blood⁵⁶ in the cup,⁵⁷ he brings another [goat]⁵⁸ to pair with it.⁵⁹ Granted that you can understand from Hanan the Egyptian that there is no rejection,⁶⁰ can you Understand that there is no casting of lots? Perhaps he brings two new goats and casts lots?⁶¹ Rather said R. Joseph: This⁶² will represent the view of R. Simeon, for it has been taught: If one [of the two animals] died, he brings the other without casting lots.⁶³ Raba says: [The text]⁶⁴ is not required save for the case where e.g., [the scapegoat] became blemished on that day⁶⁵ and he redeemed it for another [animal].⁶⁶

(1) I.e., indirect usury, e.g., when a man sells his field and says to the buyer that if he pays him at once he wants so much but if at a later date, he demands a larger sum. Therefore because he waits for the money, the buyer pays more, and this is called the ‘dust of usury’.

(2) Raba will therefore agree with R. Eleazar and Abaye with R. Johanan, for here there is no special text in virtue of which one or the other of these Amoraim can say that the case is different.

(3) Abaye and Raba.

(4) Ezek. XVIII, 13.

(5) That he shall not live who takes usury.

(6) Therefore even according to Raba who holds that a forbidden act has no legal effect, here the act will be valid, because of the text.

(7) Where the Scriptural text makes the case of usury different, so that even Raba can agree that the forbidden act here is valid.

(8) Lev. XXV, 36. The text occurs in connection with the law of usury.

- (9) Ezek. XVIII, 13.
- (10) Ibid. XVIII, 10. The passage, Now etc. is omitted in Raba's statements in B.M. 61a.
- (11) Who holds that stipulated usury is reclaimed through the judges.
- (12) Lev. XXV, 36.
- (13) By transgressing a Scriptural command.
- (14) Abaye and Raba differ as to whether a change wrought in a thing brings about ownership, e.g., one who stole wood and made it into a vessel or wool and made it into a garment. According to Abaye the action is valid, for he acquires ownership and therefore he only pays the price of the wood or wool; whereas according to Raba the act is not valid, for he does not acquire ownership of the article and therefore must return the garment or the article. And when in the Gemara above we raise a difficulty for Raba from the relevant Mishnah: If one steals etc., do not reply that the case is different from the Mishnah because of a text, but answer that Raba will hold according to one Tanna in B.M. 61a who says that a change in an object does not confer ownership, whereas Abaye holds with another Tanna there who holds that a change does confer ownership. For other interpretations v. Rashi.
- (15) Between Abaye and Raba,
- (16) There will not actually be a difference in any specific case except in the kind of explanation each of these teachers will give in answer to the Baraita or Mishnah as quoted above in the Gemara. Abaye, who says a forbidden act has a legal effect will explain any particular Baraita or Mishnah which appears to contradict this according to his view, and Raba, who holds that a prohibited act has no legal effect, will explain any particular Baraita or Mishnah according to his point of view.
- (17) Between Abaye and Raba.
- (18) As the action is not valid.
- (19) We therefore see that even according to Abaye the interest is recovered.

- (36) The Baraita opened as follows: One might think that if one kills hullin (an unconsecrated animal) inside a Temple court one is guilty of excision? Scripture, however, says: Korban (offering) Lev. XVII, 4, thus implying that guilt is only incurred in connection with a korban. Now if you expound, etc.
- (37) That if one killed them outside the Temple court he would be liable to the penalty of excision.
- (38) Num. XXXI, 50. And the offerings mentioned here were for the Sanctuary, as it speaks of jewels of gold, chains, bracelets, etc.

(39) Lev. XVII, 4.

(40) I.e., to be offered up on the altar.

(41) I.e., dedications for Temple repairs because they are blemished.

(42) Dedicated animals for Temple repairs.

(43) Lit., 'the cow for expiation'.

(44) For they are unblemished, as both a red heifer and a scapegoat must be unblemished for their several purposes.

(45) Actually offered up on the altar.

(46) The red heifer and the scapegoat.

(47) We therefore see that the text, 'Unto the Lord' implies exclusion and yet above you say the text 'Unto the Lord' is intended to include.

(48) So Sh. Mek.

(49) In connection with slaughtering outside the Temple court.

(50) All unblemished animals to incur guilt for slaughtering them outside the Temple court.

(51) It can only be to exclude something and we therefore exclude the cases of the scapegoat and the red heifer.

(52) That only in respect of an offering which is burnt is there liability for dedicating a blemished animal, and that in respect of a sacrifice which is not burnt and is dedicated in its blemished state, one does not incur any guilt for its dedication. I might therefore have thought that a scapegoat, since it is not burnt, is in the same category.

(53) The case of a scapegoat, so that if one dedicates it in its blemished state one is guilty of transgressing the prohibitory law of 'Ye shall not offer it'.

(54) Which determines which goat was to be offered on the altar, and which the scapegoat, which was sent to Azazel.

(55) I.e., the two animals must be unblemished. For since we do not know on which will fall the lot 'for the Lord' and on which 'for Azazel', then necessarily both must be fit, as either may be destined 'for the Lord'.

(56) Of the goat 'for the Lord',

(57) The sprinkling of the blood not having yet taken place and the scapegoat was either lost or became blemished.

(58) For a scapegoat.

(59) With the slaughtered goat. This obviously must be without casting lots, since he cannot do so as the animal 'for the Lord' has already been slaughtered. Now just as according to Hanan one can bring a second animal for the scapegoat without casting lots, so it might be assumed he can bring it in a blemished condition. The special text therefore, 'Unto the Lord' is necessary to inform us that this is not so.

(60) That although the goat 'for the Lord' has been already slaughtered, since the sprinkling had not yet taken place, it is not denied as having suffered a disability in the process of the ritual, thus becoming rejected from the altar. We can consequently proceed with the selection of another animal for the scapegoat. The first Tanna, however, will hold that the blood is poured out, since there was a break in the ritual.

(61) Perhaps the casting of lots still takes place in the following manner. He brings two fresh animals and casts lots as to which shall be 'for the Lord' and which for the scapegoat. The animal which is designated 'for the Lord' he leaves to pasture until blemished, and the other one, on which the lot for Azazel has fallen, he brings and pairs it with the slaughtered goat. Now since he must cast lots, the second animal, in order to become a scapegoat, must be unblemished.

(62) The view that without the text 'Unto the Lord' I might have thought that a scapegoat could be brought even in a blemished state.

(63) Yoma 40a, 63b, I might therefore have thought since lots are not required in these circumstances, there is no need that the scapegoat should be unblemished. The Scriptural text 'Unto the Lord' therefore teaches us that it is not so.

(64) 'Unto the Lord'.

(65) After the lots had been cast.

(66) Which was also blemished and there would be a penalty for the dedication.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 7a

You might argue that we can well understand why at the outset [we require both animals to be unblemished] because we do not know which one will be designated 'for the Lord'. But here, since the animal designated 'for the Lord' is recognised, there is no punishment of lashes.¹ The text ['Unto the Lord' mentioned above] therefore informs us [that it is not so].²

The Master said: 'It is reported in the name of R. Jose son of R. Judah: [There is] also [the case of the prohibitory law relating to] the receiving of the blood'. What is the reason of R. Jose son of R. Judah? Scripture says: That which hath its stones bruised or crushed or torn or cut etc. [ye shall not offer unto the Lord];³ this refers to the receiving of the blood mentioned by R. Jose son of R. Judah.⁴ And according to the first Tanna,⁵ what need is there for this text: 'Ye shall not offer'? — It is necessary for the case of the sprinkling of the blood of a blemished animal.⁶ But do we not deduce this from the text: Upon the altar?⁷ — This⁸ is simply Scripture's manner of speaking.⁹ But may it not also be, according to R. Jose son of R. Judah, Scripture's manner of speaking?¹⁰ — Yes, it is so.¹¹ Then whence does he deduce the prohibition in respect of receiving the blood?¹² — He derives [this ruling] from the following: 'Neither from the hand of a foreigner shall ye offer';¹³ this refers to the receiving of the blood [mentioned by R. Jose son of R. Judah]. And what does the first Tanna do with this text, 'Neither shall ye offer'? — He needs it for this: It may occur to you to think that since the Noahides¹⁴ were only commanded concerning the loss of limbs,¹⁵ it is therefore immaterial whether the sacrifice is for their altar¹⁶ or ours.¹⁷ [The text]¹⁸ therefore informs us [that this is not so].

Another version: R. Jose son of R. Judah says: '[There is] also [the prohibition relating to] the receiving of the blood'. What is the reason? — Since Scripture says: 'That which hath its stones bruised or crushed etc. ye shall not offer unto the Lord', this refers to the receiving of the blood and the prohibition of sprinkling¹⁹ is derived from the text, 'Upon the altar'. And according to the Rabbis, why not also derive the prohibition of sprinkling from the text, 'Upon the altar'? — In fact they do. Then what does the text, 'Ye shall not offer' stated in connection with the text, 'Bruised or crushed' come to teach? — It is required to teach us the case of a private bamah.²⁰ And according to R. Jose son of R. Judah, do we not require the text²¹ to teach us the case of a private bamah? — Yes, it is so, Then whence does he derive [the prohibition of] offering with reference to the receiving of the blood? — He derives it from the text, 'Neither from the hand of a foreigner shall ye offer', this meaning the receiving of the blood. And the Rabbis?²² — There is need for the text. You might think that since the Noahides are only commanded concerning the loss of a limb for their own bamah,²³ we too may therefore accept from them [a permanently blemished animal].²⁴ The text, 'Of any of these' therefore informs us that we do not accept.²⁵ To this Resh Lakish demurred:²⁶ Perhaps this²⁷ is stated only in connection with the case of an unblemished animal which became blemished,²⁸ in which case there is a transgression, but if it is an originally blemished animal, it is then a mere palm-tree!²⁹ — Thereupon R. Hiyya b. Joseph said to him: [Scripture says:] 'Too long or too short'³⁰ in the section³¹ and these are originally blemished animals.³² He [Resh Lakish] said: Perhaps we have learnt this³³ only with reference to substitutes,³⁴ for we have learnt: There is a restriction in the law regarding substitutes which does not apply to original sacrifices, in that holiness can attach [as substitute] to an animal permanently blemished!³⁵ — R. Johanan replied to him: Have you not heard what R. Jannai said: At the college a vote was taken and it was decided: He who dedicates a blemished animal for the altar is guilty on five counts.³⁶ Now if [this passage] deals with substitutes, then there are six, for there is also the prohibition of exchanging?³⁷ — What then? Do you maintain that he deals with a case of an animal originally blemished? Then why should there be the punishment of lashes, since it is merely a palm-tree? — He replied, There is nothing irreverential about a palm-tree [as] it is a kind of wood. But in dedicating an originally blemished animal, there is something irreverential [as regards consecrations], since he ignores unblemished animals and dedicates blemished ones, and therefore he is guilty.

Another version: He [R. Hiyya] said to him [Resh Lakish]: Even so the act is irreverential.³⁸ For the dedication of a palm-tree, as there is nothing in its class [fit for the altar] there is no punishment of lashes. But the case is otherwise with reference to a blemished animal, since there exists in the class of animals [those fit for the altar], and he is therefore punishable with lashes.³⁹

Said Raba: Now that you say that the reason why [one who dedicates] a blemished animal incurs the punishment [of lashes] is because the act is irreverential,⁴⁰ then even if one dedicates it [a blemished animal] for the value of its drink-offerings, one should incur the punishment [of lashes]. [Raba's⁴¹ is a point at issue among Tannaim.]

- (1) For breaking the prohibitory law of 'Ye shall not offer' if the scapegoat were dedicated in a blemished state.
 - (2) To include the case of a blemished scapegoat as infringing the prohibition of 'Ye shall not offer'.
 - (3) Lev. XXII, 24.
 - (4) Deduced from the repetition of the phrase, 'Ye shall not offer'
 - (5) R. Jose's disputant, who does not hold that there is an infringement of a prohibitory law in receiving the blood of a blemished dedicated animal.

- (21) 'Ye shall not offer' occurring in connection with the text 'Bruised or crushed etc.'
- (22) Who differ with R. Jose what need have they for this text?
- (23) For they are not forbidden to offer up a blemished sacrifice on their bamah.
- (24) To offer up on our altar.
- (25) For a Gentile's blemished animal is compared with our own. Just as in our case, we do not offer up a blemished animal on the altar, even without the loss of a limb, so we do not accept for sacrifice a permanently blemished animal from the Gentiles.
- (26) Referring to the Baraita above which says that one who dedicates blemished animals for the altar is guilty of transgressing five negative commands.
- (27) That the punishment of lashes is inflicted for transgressing the prohibition of 'Ye shall not offer'.
- (28) As one might be under the impression that since it was once holy, the fact that it subsequently became blemished should not disqualify it from being offered up on the altar.
- (29) He could not possibly have imagined that it would be fit for the altar except for its money value, and therefore one might think that there would not be any punishment of lashes.
- (30) Lev. XXII, 23.
- (31) Dealing with the various permanent blemishes which render an animal unfit.
- (32) Concerning which Scripture says, 'Ye shall not offer' which indicates as explained above, that one is guilty in dedicating these blemished animals.
- (33) Which says that there is a penalty for dedicating.
- (34) Where the substituted animal is blemished.
- (35) For this reason there is the penalty of lashes, but if he dedicated an animal originally blemished, there may perhaps be no penalty for the dedication, unless he later offered it up.
- (36) I.e., he breaks five negative commands.
- (37) 'Nor change it'.
- (38) Where one dedicates an animal which became blemished. There is therefore a degradation of holy things.
- (39) For dedicating something which is not fit.
- (40) To dedicate an animal which has become blemished.
- (41) So Sh. Mek. Cur. edd. It has been taught like Raba.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 7b

[Scripture says:] That mayest thou offer for a freewill-offering:¹ this refers to dedications for Temple repairs. Now I have here mentioned only the case² of a freewill-offering.³ Whence do we derive that the same applies to a vow?⁴ Scripture says: And for a vow.⁵ One might think [that the blemished animals vowed for offering are fit] even for the altar? The text, however, states: 'And for a vow it shall not be accepted', thus referring to dedications for the altar.⁶ I here mentioned only the case of a freewill-offering.⁷ Whence can we derive that it is the same with reference to a vow?⁸ The text states: A freewill-offering'.⁹

Rabbi said: [Scripture says:] 'It shall not be accepted', the text thus speaks of accepting its body [for sacrifice on the altar].¹⁰ But is not this opinion precisely that of the first Tanna? Must we not say that they differ¹¹ in this: The first Tanna holds that even if he dedicates the blemished animal for the value of drink-offerings, he also incurs the punishment of lashes, whereas Rabbi says: The punishment only applies to the acceptance of the body,¹² but not if the dedication is for the value of a drink-offering? It stands proved.¹³ But why then is the word 'that'¹⁴ inserted? — It is needed to intimate what has been taught: Scripture says, That mayest thou offer for a freewill-offering, thus intimating: that you may offer as a freewill-offering [for Temple repairs], but you may not offer unblemished animals as a freewill-offering [for Temple repairs]. Hence the Rabbis say: He who dedicates unblemished animals¹⁵ for Temple repairs is guilty of transgressing a positive command.¹⁶ And whence do we derive that one is guilty of transgressing a negative command? Because it says: 'And the Lord spake unto Moses saying',¹⁷ thus teaching us that the whole section is regarded as having the force of a prohibitory law. This is the teaching of R. Judah. Said Rabbi to Bar Kappara: How do you understand this?¹⁸ He replied to him: Because of the word 'saying',¹⁹ which indicates that a negative command has been said in connection with these statements.²⁰ The School of Rabbi says: The word 'saying' means, tell²¹ [the children of Israel] a negative command.²²

It is stated: If one burns on the altar the limb²³ of blemished animals, Raba says: He transgresses the prohibitory laws of burning the whole and burning a part.²⁴ Abaye says: There is no punishment of lashes for a comprehensive prohibition.²⁵

They raised an objection: He who dedicates blemished animals for the altar is guilty on five counts,²⁶ This refutes Abaye?²⁷ — Said R. Kahana:²⁸ It refers to different individuals.²⁹ But if it [the Baraitha] refers to different individuals, [why then does the Baraitha say,] 'He incurs etc.?' Is not 'they incur' required? Then obviously the Baraitha refers to one individual. Shall we say that this refutes Abaye? — Abaye can answer you: Exclude [from the Baraitha] the prohibition for burning part [of the blemished animal on the altar] and include [the prohibition for] receiving the blood [of the blemished animal]. [You say] the receiving of the blood; this prohibition is maintained only by R. Jose son of R. Judah,³⁰ but not by the Rabbis?³¹ — This is a difficulty.

Another version: Since the latter part [of the Baraitha]³² is the opinion of R. Jose son of R. Judah,³³ the first part will be the opinion of the Rabbis.³⁴ Shall we say this refutes Abaye? This is a final refutation. MISHNAH. PRIESTS HAVE POWER TO EXCHANGE [AN ANIMAL] BELONGING TO THEMSELVES³⁵ AND ISRAELITES ALSO HAVE POWER TO EXCHANGE AN ANIMAL BELONGING TO THEMSELVES. PRIESTS HAVE NOT THE POWER TO EXCHANGE A SIN-OFFERING,³⁶ A GUILT-OFFERING³⁶ OR A FIRSTLING.³⁷ SAID R. JOHANAN B. NURI: WHAT IS THE REASON WHY [PRIESTS] HAVE NOT THE POWER TO EXCHANGE A FIRSTLING?³⁸ R. AKIBA SAID TO HIM: A SIN-OFFERING AND A GUILT-OFFERING ARE PRIESTLY GIFTS AND A FIRSTLING IS ALSO A PRIESTLY GIFT. JUST AS IN THE CASE OF A SIN-OFFERING AND GUILT-OFFERING [PRIESTS] HAVE NO POWER TO EXCHANGE THEM,³⁹ SO IN THE CASE OF A FIRSTLING [PRIESTS] HAVE NO POWER TO EXCHANGE IT. SAID R. JOHANAN B. NURI: IT IS RIGHT THAT PRIESTS SHOULD HAVE NO POWER TO EXCHANGE A SIN-OFFERING AND A GUILT-OFFERING BECAUSE THEY HAVE NO CLAIM ON THESE [OFFERINGS] WHILE THESE ARE ALIVE. WILL YOU, HOWEVER, SAY THAT THE SAME APPLIES TO A FIRSTLING ON WHICH [THE PRIESTS] HAVE A CLAIM WHEN IT IS ALIVE?⁴⁰ R. AKIBA THEREUPON REPLIED TO HIM: HAS NOT SCRIPTURE ALREADY SAID: THEN IT AND THE EXCHANGE THEREOF SHALL BE HOLY?⁴¹ NOW WHERE DOES THE HOLINESS ARISE?⁴² IN THE HOUSE OF THE OWNERS.⁴³ SIMILARLY EXCHANGE IS NOT EFFECTED EXCEPT IN THE HOUSE OF

THE OWNERS.⁴⁴ GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere: An unblemished firstling may be sold alive,⁴⁵ but a blemished firstling whether alive or slaughtered; and [the priest] may also betroth a woman with it.⁴⁶ Said R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This⁴⁷ was taught only for nowadays,⁴⁸ since a priest has a claim upon it.⁴⁹ But in Temple times, since an unblemished firstling is destined to be offered up, we may not sell it alive unblemished.⁵⁰ Raba raised an objection to R. Nahman: An unblemished firstling may be sold alive. [It says,] ‘alive’, implying, but not slaughtered. Now to what period does this refer? Shall I say that this refers to nowadays?⁵¹ Is there an unblemished animal that may be slaughtered [nowadays]?⁵² Then obviously you must say that the term ‘alive’ refers to Temple times⁵³ and yet it says: An unblemished firstling may be sold alive.⁵⁴ — No! One can still maintain that it refers to nowadays, for does it state: One may sell it unblemished alive, but not slaughtered?⁵⁵ It wishes to inform us of this very thing, that a firstling [nowadays] may be sold unblemished alive.⁵⁶

- (1) Lev. XXII, 23; referring to a blemished animal.
 - (2) That a blemished animal can become holy for Temple repairs.
 - (3) E.g., where he says: ‘Behold this animal shall be dedicated for Temple repairs’.
 - (4) If one says: ‘I vow to dedicate an animal for Temple repairs’, that it is a duty to set aside the animal even if blemished.
 - (5) And we interpret the text thus: That mayest thou offer for a freewill-offering and also for a vow.
 - (6) For the term ‘accepted’ can only mean for the purpose of offering up on the altar.
 - (7) If one said, ‘I vow to dedicate this blemished burnt-offering’, such dedication is not fit for the altar, as being not ‘accepted’, for this kind of dedication is mentioned next to the text, ‘It can not be accepted’.
 - (8) That one cannot say in connection with a blemished animal: ‘Behold, this is for the altar’.
 - (9) The meaning of the text will therefore be as follows: The freewill-offering which you may dedicate for Temple repairs and the blemished animal vowed for Temple repairs are not acceptable for the altar.
 - (10) That it must not be offered up.
 - (11) Between the first Tanna and Rabbi.
 - (12) I.e., sacrifice on the altar.
 - (13) That Raba's ruling above is a matter of dispute between Tannaim.
 - (14) That (u, ut) mayest thou etc. Since you say that the words ‘vow’ and ‘freewill-offering’ are linked together as meaning that a blemished animal either as vow or freewill-offering is not acceptable for the altar, the word ‘that’ which possesses a restrictive meaning, is not needed (Wilna Gaon).
 - (15) Which are fit for sacrifice on the altar.
 - (16) The prohibition derived by implication from the positive command that mayest thou, and which has the force only of a positive command.
 - (17) Lev. XXII, 17.
 - (18) How do you gather that the section has the force of a prohibitory law?
 - (19) rntk
 - (20) The word rntk is split into rnt tk ‘he said, not’.
 - (21) rnt .
 - (22) tk which with the previous word forms rntk .
 - (23) The pieces, in accordance with the law of a burnt-offering.
 - (24) Derived from the text, ‘Nor make an offering by fire’, for when we burn the whole, this also includes a portion of it.
 - (25) The prohibition comprises both the burning of the whole and a part, and in such a case there is only punishment on one count only (v. Rashi).

(26) I.e., he breaks five prohibitory laws, the Baraitha enumerating as two prohibitions the burning of the whole, and a part of the burnt-offering.

(27) Who holds that there is only one prohibitory law for burning the whole on the altar.

(28) V. Sh. Mek.

(29) In the case where one person burns the whole of an animal and another burns a part of an animal, each is separately liable to one count of lashes for his own particular transgression. Where, however, one person is the offender he would not be liable on the count of burning a part.

(30) Who adds in the Baraitha the case of receiving the blood as yet another prohibitory law.

(31) Who do not agree with R. Jose, and there would thus not be five prohibitions.

(32) Which speaks of the receiving of the blood.

(33) V. supra 6b.

(34) Who hold that there is no prohibitory law against receiving the blood of a blemished dedicated animal. We cannot therefore include in the Baraitha receiving the blood as a prohibitory law. In order therefore to make up the five prohibitions, we must include burning a part of the burnt-offering as a prohibitory law, which will be at variance with the view of Abaye.

(35) Which they set aside for themselves, and if they substituted an unconsecrated animal for them, then the animal and the substitute become sacred.

(36) Which an Israelite gave to a priest for a sacrifice. If a priest exchanged this the exchange is not valid, since he has no share in the animal except from the time it is burnt and onwards, and we learn later in this chapter that a man cannot cause a substitution of a thing which is not his.

(37) Which an Israelite gave to him.

(38) Since the whole belongs to the priest and the firstling is given to him while alive, the Israelite not being atoned for therewith.

(39) For we are sure that they do not legally acquire possession of them until the time of the burning of the sacrifices.

(40) The case of a firstling is different and there should therefore be power to exchange it, the priest having a claim on it while it is alive.

(41) Lev. XXVII, 10; thus comparing the substitute with dedication itself.

(42) In connection with things dedicated.

(43) But it does not take place at all in the house of a priest and therefore a priest has not the power to exchange a firstling.

(44) I.e., in the house of an Israelite in whose possession the holiness of a firstling arises and therefore if an Israelite exchanged a firstling, the substitute is sacred, but not if a priest made the exchange.

(45) Ma'as. Sh. I, 2; B.K. 12b.

(46) For it is considered his money.

(47) That a priest can sell it alive.

(48) When the Temple is no longer in existence, and the firstling is consequently not destined for the altar.

(49) Alive, for even nowadays a firstling belongs to the priest.

(50) For a priest has no claim on it except from the time when the parts of the sacrifice are burnt on the altar.

(51) The buyer waiting till a blemish occurs to the animal in order to be able to eat it.

(52) For it would be slaughtering sacrifices outside the Temple wall.

(53) When, however, it may not be sold slaughtered, for it is an abuse of holy things to make an ordinary transaction with its flesh.

(54) We therefore see that one may sell an unblemished firstling alive in Temple times, contrary to the opinion of

R. Nahman.

(55) For us to infer that we are not dealing with the present time, since nowadays there can be no unblemished slaughtered firstling.

(56) For it might have occurred to you to think that the priest has no claim on it until the firstling is blemished. It is not, however, the object of the Mishnah that we should deduce therefrom that we may not sell a slaughtered firstling, as we are dealing with the present time and nowadays there is no unblemished slaughtered firstling.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 8a

He raised [a further] objection: With reference to a firstling it is said: Thou shalt not redeem¹ implying but it may be sold.² Now with what case are we dealing? Shall I say that [the Baraita] refers to nowadays? Read the second part [of the text]: Thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar!³ Now is there in existence an altar nowadays [for sacrifice]? Then obviously [it] refers to Temple times. Of what then does it speak? Shall I say of a blemished firstling? Read the second part [of the text]: Thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar and shalt burn their fat.³ Now if we are dealing with a blemished firstling, is it fit for sacrifice? Then we must be dealing with an unblemished firstling, and it says, 'but it may be sold'!⁴ — But is this an argument?⁵ The first part [of the text]⁶ refers to a blemished [animal]⁷ and the latter part of the text⁸ refers to an unblemished [firstling]!

R. Mesharsheya raised an objection: If the child of a priestess became mixed up with a child of her slave,⁹ when the children grow up they free one another;¹⁰ both may eat terumah;¹¹ they take their share simultaneously at the threshing floor;¹² their firstling¹³ is left to pasture until blemished¹⁴ and it is eaten blemished by their owners. Now with what case¹⁵ are we here dealing? Shall I say that we are dealing with a firstling of nowadays? For then what is the difference between [a firstling] belonging to ourselves¹⁶ and [a firstling] belonging to them,¹⁷ since [a firstling] belonging to ourselves also requires a blemish to be eaten?¹⁸ Then you must admit that we are dealing with a firstling in Temple times.¹⁹ Now if you say that the priest has a claim on a firstling [alive],²⁰ there will be no difficulty.²¹ But if you say that he has no claim on a firstling alive, then let the Temple treasurer come and take it?²² — One can still say that we are dealing with a firstling of nowadays.²³ And as regards the difficulty you raise as to why [a firstling] belonging to ourselves is different from [a firstling] belonging to them, [the answer is] we give ours to the priest in its blemished condition,²⁴ but with [a firstling] belonging to them, since there is an element of priesthood,²⁵ priests are excluded from claiming [this firstling].²⁶

Another version: [Now if we are dealing with a firstling of] nowadays, why mention firstlings belonging [to persons] of uncertain priesthood?²⁷ Even firstlings belonging to ourselves also are left to pasture [until blemished]? Then obviously we are dealing with a firstling of Temple times. Now if we are referring to a blemished firstling, why do we say, let them be left to pasture until blemished? Are they not already blemished? Then obviously we are dealing with unblemished firstlings; and only these²⁸ may not sell;²⁹ [but persons who are certainly priests may sell]?³⁰ — It may still be that we are dealing with firstlings of nowadays. What is your difficulty? That even [firstlings] belonging to ourselves should also be left to pasture! [The answer is:] We cannot disregard the priest,³¹ for there exists no uncertainty of the priesthood, but these persons of uncertain [priesthood] can put off the priest, each one saying to the priest. 'I am a priest', 'I am a priest'.³²

An objection was raised. R. Simeon said: [Scripture says:] And the cattle thereof.³³ This excludes a firstling animal and an animal tithed³⁴ in it [the city]. 'The spoil of it'; this excludes the money of the second tithes.³⁵ Now with what case are we dealing? Shall I say that we are dealing with nowadays? For is the law of an apostate city in force [nowadays]? Have we not learnt: We do not practise the law of an apostate city except where there is in existence a Beth din of seventy-one?³⁶ Then obviously we are dealing with Temple times. And in what condition [was the firstling]?³⁷ If it was blemished, is this not the same as the text, 'The cattle thereof'?³⁸ Then obviously we are dealing with an unblemished firstling. Now there will be no difficulty if you say that the priest has a claim on the firstling alive.³⁹ But if you say the priest has no claim on a firstling alive, what need is there for the text 'The cattle thereof'?⁴⁰ Why not derive this from the text, 'The spoil of it', from which we can deduce, But not the spoil of heaven?⁴¹ — One can still maintain that we are dealing with a blemished animal,⁴² and as regards the difficulty you raise that this is the case covered by the text, 'The cattle thereof',⁴³ [the answer is] this implies, Whatever is eaten in the manner of 'The cattle thereof',⁴⁴ excluding the cases of the firstling and animals tithed, for they are not covered by the words, The cattle thereof'. For we have learnt in a Mishnah: All dedications rendered unfit for sacrifice may be sold in the market and by the pound,⁴⁵ with the exception of a firstling and an animal tithed, for their benefit belongs to the owners.⁴⁶

An objection was raised. [Scripture says:] And committed a trespass against the Lord.⁴⁷ This includes sacrifices of minor grades of holiness,⁴⁸ which are considered the money of the owners.⁴⁹ These are the words of R. Jose the Galilean. Ben Azzai says: [This text comes] to include peace-offerings.⁵⁰ Abba Jose the son of Dosai says: R. Jose the Galilean only refers to a firstling.⁵¹ Now what period are we dealing with? Shall I say that of nowadays? Surely the case [of the firstling referred to by Abba Jose] is compared with peace-offerings?⁵² Then obviously we are dealing with Temple times. Now what are the circumstances? Shall I say that we are dealing with a case of a blemished firstling? Surely the case [of a firstling referred to by Abba Jose] is compared with peace-offerings?⁵³ Then you must say that you are dealing with the case of an unblemished firstling.⁵⁴ Deduce therefore from here that a priest has a claim on a firstling [alive].⁵⁵

(1) Num. XVIII, 17; that the redemption money should become holy and the firstling become hullin.

(2) And it is eaten in a sacred condition, i.e., must not be killed to be sold in a market or weighed by the pound; v. supra 5b, B.K. 13a, Bek. 32a.

(3) Num. XVIII, 17.

(4) We therefore see that an unblemished firstling in Temple times may be sold, contrary to the opinion of R. Nahman.

(5) That the two parts of the text must necessarily deal with an unblemished firstling.

(6) 'Thou shalt not redeem'.

(7) And we may therefore deduce therefrom that a firstling may be sold.

(8) 'Thou shalt sprinkle etc.'.

(9) And it is not known which is the child of the priestess and which is the child of her slave.

(10) Each one writes: 'If I am the master and you are the slave: Behold you are a free man', and both may marry a daughter of an Israelite.

(11) So long as they had not freed one another, for in any case each can say: 'If I am a priest then I eat terumah in my own right, and if I am a slave, then give me terumah as the slave of a priest', for the slave of a priest is permitted to partake of terumah.

(12) When they are both together they are given terumah, but one of them by himself does not receive terumah without the other present, in case the recipient is the slave, and this Tanna holds that we do not give terumah to the slave of a priest unless the master be present, for fear lest the slave might eventually claim a higher pedigree for himself, i.e., that of being a priest.

(13) Animal born in the pen of the mixed-up offspring.

(14) And are rendered unfit for sacrifice.

(15) Of their firstling required to pasture until blemished.

(16) To persons who are certainly priests.

(17) To the mixed-up offspring, as mentioned in the Baraitha above.

(18) For even in our case, even a person who is certainly a priest cannot eat a firstling nowadays unless it is blemished.

(19) A firstling therefore which belongs to us, i.e., to a genuine priest, is given to the priest for sacrifice, whereas theirs i.e., a firstling belonging to the mixed-up offspring must pasture until blemished. For although even a priest is required to carry out the law of a firstling, here the firstling must be left to pasture, because in the case of any other priest who set aside a firstling, there is no loss, as he himself offers it up and eats the flesh, but in the case mentioned by the Baraitha above, if the firstling is offered up, then no-one can eat it, since one of the offspring is not a priest but a slave and only a priest can eat a firstling unblemished in Temple times. Therefore the Baraitha above says a firstling must be left to pasture until blemished, for each one can say to the priest who claims, 'I am a priest and shall eat the firstling'.

(20) I.e., that he may sell it alive in its unblemished state even in Temple times.

(21) Therefore he can retain the firstling, saying, 'perhaps I am a priest and I have therefore a prior claim, and do not wish to give it to another priest, but shall wait till I am able to eat it'.

(22) And give it to a genuine priest, since the priest has no claim on the firstling till it is brought to the altar. This shows that even in Temple times the priest has a claim on the unblemished firstling, for we are undoubtedly dealing here with an unblemished animal, since the Baraitha says it is left to pasture, etc., which contradicts R. Abbuha.

(23) And therefore the firstling is left to pasture, for it is unfit for sacrifice and the priest has a claim upon it while it is alive.

(24) For although blemished and permissible to be eaten by non-priests, it must be given to the priests, otherwise it would be stealing the priestly due.

(25) In the case mentioned in the Baraitha above, where one of them is certainly a priest.

(26) And it is not stealing what is due to the priest, for each one of the mixed-up persons can claim, 'I am a priest' and since there is a doubt concerning money, the claimant must bring the necessary evidence to prove his case.

(27) As in the case in the Baraitha above, where there was a mixing-up between the offspring of a priestess and her slave.

(28) Persons of uncertain priesthood, as mentioned in the Baraitha above.

(29) The firstling.

(30) We therefore see that a priest may sell an unblemished firstling alive in Temple times, contrary to the opinion of R. Nahman in the name of R. Abbuha above.

(31) We have no option but to surrender a Firstling even blemished, otherwise it would be robbing the priestly due.

(32) And therefore they retain the firstling.

- (33) Deut. XIII, 16; in connection with an apostate city which is totally destroyed on account of its inhabitants worshipping idols.
- (34) The text 'And the cattle etc.' implies that one's own cattle is destroyed where there is no part which belongs to heaven (the Sanctuary), unlike the case of a firstling and tithes.
- (35) This will represent the view of the teacher who maintains that the second tithe is money which belongs to heaven; v. Sanh. 112b.
- (36) And as there is no Beth din of such a character in existence to-day, the law of an apostate city is inoperative.
- (37) Or the tithed animal.
- (38) Where the animal belongs entirely to a person and heaven has no share in it. Here, too, where a priest eats the firstling and an Israelite his tithe, there is no element which belongs to heaven.
- (39) Therefore the exclusion of a firstling is derived from the text 'The cattle thereof' and not from the text 'The spoil of it', since it is not altogether the spoil of heaven, as the priest has a claim upon it.
- (40) To exclude the case of a firstling and tithes from the law of an apostate city.
- (41) Since therefore we exclude the case of a firstling and an animal tithed from the text 'The cattle thereof', this proves that the priest has a claim on the firstling. This will therefore raise a difficulty for the ruling of R. Nahman in the name of R. Abbuha, for we see here that an unblemished firstling may be sold in Temple times.
- (42) In which there is no share for heaven and which therefore should be burnt in fire.
- (43) Why therefore do we exclude the case of a firstling and an animal tithed?
- (44) Where the animal belongs entirely to the owner.
- (45) In order to fetch more money and we do not consider this degrading holy things.
- (46) Therefore for the extra benefit in favour of the owners, we do not allow selling in the market and by the pound of a firstling, v. Bek. 32a, Bez. 28a. Hence a firstling and tithed animal are spared in an apostate city.
- (47) Lev. V, 21.
- (48) That if one deposited dedications of a minor grade of holiness with his neighbour, and the latter denied the deposit, took a false oath and subsequently confessed, he has to pay the principal plus a fifth as a fine, also to bring an offering on account of the false oath.
- (49) And we can therefore apply the text mentioned in this connection: 'And lie unto his neighbour'.
- (50) Which are certainly considered his money, but the case is not the same with regard to an animal tithed, for one cannot sell it either alive, slaughtered, unblemished or blemished.
- (51) Where a priest deposited his firstling with another, the latter denying the deposit, taking an oath and then confessing. He pays the principal together with the fine of a fifth and brings a trespass-offering, the reason being because a priest can sell a firstling alive unblemished and it is therefore considered his money (R. Gershom).
- (52) And the peace-offering cannot be brought nowadays.
- (53) For as regards a firstling and a priest, we can make a distinction between an unblemished and a blemished animal, as in the former case one might say that the priest has no claim on it until the time of offering it up on the altar, whereas in the latter case the priest might claim it immediately, as the animal is unfit for sacrifice. But with reference to a peace-offering, one cannot say that the owner has a claim on the animal from the time of its burning and therefore there is no distinction between an unblemished and a blemished peace-offering, in each case the owner having a claim on it alive.
- (54) And we impose a trespass-offering for one who denied a deposit of the firstling with a false oath. We see therefore that it is regarded as the priest's money.
- (55) And therefore we can apply the text, 'And lie unto his neighbour', the firstling being considered his own money. Hence we see that an unblemished live firstling may be sold in Temple times, contrary to the opinion of R. Abbuha reported by R. Nahman above.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 8b

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 8b

Said [Rabina]:¹ One may still say that we are dealing with an unblemished firstling² and we are alluding here to a firstling outside the Holy Land,³ and [the Tanna of this Baraitha] is R. Simeon who Says: If unblemished firstlings came from outside Palestine they may be offered up.⁴

An objection was raised: R. JOHANAN B. NURI SAID TO HIM: GRANTED THAT ONE HAS NO POWER TO EXCHANGE A SIN-OFFERING AND A GUILT-OFFERING SINCE [PRIESTS] HAVE NO CLAIM ON THEM WHILE [THE ANIMALS] ARE ALIVE, CAN WE SAY THAT THE SAME APPLIES TO A FIRSTLING WHERE [THE PRIEST] HAS A CLAIM ON IT WHILE IT IS ALIVE? Now what case is here referred to? Shall I say it is the case of a blemished animal? But [the Mishnah] compares a firstling with a sin-offering and a guilt-offering?⁵ Then you must say that the case is that of an unblemished animal, and it states: THEY HAVE A CLAIM ON THE FIRSTLING ALIVE!⁶ — Said Rabina: Here too⁷ the case is of a firstling outside Palestine,⁸ and [the Tanna of this Mishnah] is R. Simeon who says: If they came unblemished, they are offered up.

Shall we say that Tannaim differ on that point?⁹ [For it was taught:] ‘With a firstling in the house of the owners there can be effected an exchange, but there can be no exchange effected when in the house of a priest. R. Simeon b. Eleazar Says: Since it comes into the house of a priest, there can be no exchange effected’. But is not this¹⁰ the identical opinion of the first Tanna? Then must you not say that the first Tanna means this: In the house of a priest the priest alone can effect the exchange but not the owner, and consequently we see that the priest has a claim on the firstling?¹¹ — No. The difference of opinion here is the same as the difference of opinion between R. Johanan b. Nuri and R. Akiba. The first Tanna will hold the view of R. Johanan b. Nuri¹² whereas R. Simeon will hold the view of R. Akiba.¹³

Said R. Hisda: They have taught this¹⁴ only with regard to a case of a priest selling to a priest, but a priest is forbidden [to sell] to an Israelite. What is the reason? Lest an Israelite should go and cast a blemish on it [the firstling] and bring it to a [Sage] and say: ‘A priest gave me this firstling with its blemish’.¹⁵ But can a Sage permit it in such circumstances?¹⁶ Has not Rab said:¹⁷ One may not sell a firstling belonging to an Israelite unless the priest be present with him?¹⁸ — Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: The reason why it is forbidden [for a priest to sell] to an Israelite¹⁹ is because this appears similar to the case of a priest who assists in the threshing-floor.²⁰

Mar Zutra once visited R. Ashi. They²¹ said to him: ‘Let the Master partake of something’. They set meat before him. They said to him: ‘Let the Master eat it because it is healthy²² for it comes from a firstling’. He [Mar Zutra] asked them: ‘How did you get this?’²³ They answered him: ‘A certain priest sold it to us with its blemish’. He said to them: ‘Do you not hold with what R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: ‘Because²⁴ this appears similar to the case of a priest who assists in the threshing-floor’? — They replied to him: ‘We do not hold this opinion, since we have indeed bought [the firstling]’.²⁵ He said to them: And do you not hold what we have learnt: How long is an Israelite required to look after a firstling?²⁶ In the case of small cattle, thirty days and in the case of large cattle, fifty days. If the priest said to the Israelite, ‘Give it to me within this period', the Israelite must not give it to him. And R. Shesheth said:²⁷ Now what is the reason?²⁸ Because it appears similar to the case of a priest who assists in the threshing floor!²⁹ — They replied to him: 'There,³⁰ the thing is obvious,³¹ whereas here, we do indeed buy it'.

Another version: They replied to him [Mar Zutra]: There,³² he does not give any money but here,³³ money was paid. Perhaps you will still say that the priest lowers the price to him,³⁴ thinking to himself, 'When the Israelite has another firstling, he will give it to me'. No,³⁵ for he will rather reflect

(1) So Sh. Mek.; cur. edd. Abaye.

(2) And there is no difficulty as regards R. Nahman's opinion, for the reason why the priest has a claim on the firstling alive is as follows.

(3) Which usually is not destined for sacrifice even in Temple times. It is however compared with a peace-offering, since if one desires, it is fit to be offered up.

(4) I.e., only if they are brought, but they are not to be brought directly. Now since we must not directly bring these unblemished animals to be offered up, therefore they are considered his own money and he can sell them alive, but a firstling of a priest which is destined for sacrifice may not be sold according to R. Abbuha, as the priest has no claim on it alive.

(5) And the sin-offering etc. referred to are unblemished animals, for the Mishnah states that the priest has no claim on them while alive, but has a claim after they are slaughtered. Hence we see that we are dealing with animals which are fit for sacrifice.

(6) Contrary to the view of R. Abbuha reported by R. Nahman above.

(7) In the Mishnah just quoted.

(8) Therefore the firstling is considered his own money and he has the power to make a substitute, but with a firstling of the Holy Land which is destined for sacrifice you cannot make a substitute, since he has no claim on it alive, as R. Abbuha holds.

(9) Whether a priest has a claim on an unblemished live firstling in Temple times or not.

(10) That no exchange can be effected with a firstling in a priest's possession.

(11) And since the priest has the power to effect an exchange he can also sell it, unlike the opinion of R. Abbuha. R. Simeon, however, says that the priest cannot effect an exchange with a firstling in his possession and therefore he may not sell it, the reason being because he has no claim on it alive, which is the opinion of R. Abbuha. We see therefore that these two Tannaim differ as regards R. Abbuha's ruling reported above.

(12) Who says that a priest can effect an exchange with a firstling because he has a claim on it alive, since as we have explained above, the Mishnah deals with a firstling outside Palestine, which is usually not destined for sacrifice.

(13) That although the priest has a claim on the firstling alive, he cannot effect an exchange, as we infer from an analogy (v. Rashi, first version).

(14) That an unblemished firstling alive may be sold even in Temple times.

(15) Whereas in the case of a priest selling to a priest one cannot say this, since a priest who brings a firstling to show it to an expert is required to bring witnesses that a blemish befell it of itself, as priests are suspected of maiming firstlings in order to eat them.

(16) Even if there is a permanent blemish, can the expert permit the use of the firstling without the priest being in attendance?

(17) Bek. 36a: 'Rab Judah'.

(18) For fear lest if the Israelite learnt from the expert that the blemish was a permanent one and that there was thus no fear of holy things being eaten without the Temple walls, he will eat it and will disregard the fact that he would be robbing the priest of his due. Therefore a priest is required to be present with the Israelite and the latter cannot then say, 'A priest gave me this firstling with its blemish', for we say to him, 'Produce the priest who gave it to you', and so long as he does not do so, we do not allow the use of the firstling. Another explanation (R. Gershom): If you permit a priest to sell a firstling to an Israelite, the Israelite might detain the firstling among the herd till a blemish occurs to it and he then say: 'A priest has sold me this firstling with its blemish', thus evading his duty to the priest.

(19) An unblemished firstling; for all the authorities concerned agree that a blemished firstling may be sold (Wilna Gaon). Now a firstling of nowadays is usually sold at a lower price, for the purchaser is compelled to wait till the animal is blemished before he can eat it.

(20) To winnow or bind the sheaves. Now this is forbidden, for it looks as if the priest is helping in order to receive the reward of terumah. Similarly, if a priest sells an unblemished firstling to an Israelite at a lower price (and still more if he makes him a present of it), it appears as if he does so in order to receive all the future firstlings born in the herd of the Israelite.

(21) Those waiting on him.

(22) More fat than other flesh (R. Gershom).

(23) Seeing you are not priests.

(24) That the reason why a priest may not sell an unblemished firstling to an Israelite is because etc.

(25) And have not received it as a gift. Consequently we do not consider that it is on a par with the case of a priest who assists in the threshing-floor.

(26) To rear it before giving it to the priest.

(27) V. Bek. 26b.

(28) Why cannot an Israelite give the firstling to the priest within the period specified above.

(29) It might appear that the reason why the priest is taking the firstling from the Israelite before the time of its tending expires, thus relieving the Israelite of further trouble with the animal, is because the priest expects him to give him future firstlings. We see therefore that there is a Mishnah holding this reason in the case of assisting in the threshing-floor.

(30) In the case of a priest who asks for the firstling from the Israelite before the time for its tending has terminated.

(31) That it is in consideration for letting him have future firstlings.

(32) In the case of the priest who relieves the Israelite of the firstling, before the specified period mentioned above.

(33) In the case of the firstling whose flesh was placed before Mar Zutra to eat.

(34) In order that the Israelite might give future firstlings to this priest and not to any other.

(35) He will not do so.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 9a

that a young pumpkin [now] is better than a full-grown pumpkin [to-morrow].¹

MISHNAH. ONE CAN EFFECT AN EXCHANGE WITH SMALL CATTLE FOR OXEN AND WITH OXEN FOR SMALL CATTLE; WITH SHEEP FOR GOATS AND WITH GOATS FOR SHEEP; WITH MALE [ANIMALS] FOR FEMALE [ANIMALS] AND WITH FEMALE [ANIMALS] FOR MALE [ANIMALS]; WITH UNBLEMISHED ANIMALS FOR BLEMISHED ANIMALS AND WITH BLEMISHED [ANIMALS] FOR UNBLEMISHED [ANIMALS], SINCE SCRIPTURE SAYS:² HE SHALL NOT ALTER IT NOR CHANGE IT, A

GOOD³ FOR A BAD⁴ OR A BAD⁵ FOR A GOOD. WHAT KIND IS MEANT BY ‘A GOOD FOR A BAD’?⁶ BLEMISHED ANIMALS WHOSE DEDICATION WAS PRIOR TO THEIR BLEMISH.

GEMARA. Whence is this proved?⁷ — Our Rabbis have taught: Scripture says, ‘Beast for beast’; ‘hence⁸ we infer that one can effect an exchange with small cattle for oxen and with oxen for small cattle; with sheep for goats and with goats for sheep; with male [animals] for female [animals] and with female [animals] for male [animals]; with blemished [animals] for unblemished [animals] and with unblemished [animals] for blemished [animals]. One might think that this is so even if they had a permanent blemish prior to their dedication? The text therefore States: ‘He shall not alter it nor change it, a good for a bad or a bad for a good’. What kind is meant by ‘a good for a bad’? Blemished animals whose dedication was prior to their blemish [but⁹ not where the blemish was prior to their dedication]. How is this implied [in the Scriptural text]?¹⁰ — Said Abaye: Let Scripture say, ‘He shall not alter it nor change it, a good for a bad or a bad for it’.¹¹ What need is there for the second text, ‘a good’? Deduce therefore from here that only if the animal is originally ‘good’¹² the exchange takes effect.¹³ , but the exchange takes no effect in respect of an animal originally ‘bad’.¹⁴ Raba says: Both the expressions ‘a good’ are indeed superfluous.¹⁵ [Scripture] might simply have written: ‘He shall not alter it nor change it’¹⁶ for a bad or a bad for it’?¹⁷ What need is there then for both the expressions ‘a good’? One ‘a good’ teaches us that even if one exchanges a good [animal] for a good [one], there is the punishment of lashes for substituting, and the other ‘a good’ teaches us that exchange takes effect only when the animal was ‘good’ originally, but where it was originally ‘bad’, exchange takes no effect. And whence will Abaye [derive¹⁸ that it is forbidden to exchange a good for a good]?¹⁹ — He holds that it is derived a minori. If where ‘a good’ [an unblemished hullin] is exchanged for ‘a bad’ [a blemished animal], in which case an improve is effected,²⁰ the punishment of lashes is inflicted, how much more so should there be the punishment of lashes if one exchanges ‘a good’ for ‘a good’, which are alike [in holiness]! And Raba?²¹ — An offence established by inference [from minor to major] is not punishable.²² And Abaye? — He can answer you thus: This²³ is no conclusion from [minor to major, but²⁴ is merely an intimation of a thing];²⁵ for is the case of ‘a good’ [an unblemished consecrated animal] worse than the case of ‘a bad’ [blemished animal]?²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: ‘He shall not alter it’²⁷ [for hullin]²⁸ belonging to others.²⁹ ‘Nor change it’ [for hullin] belonging to himself. But let it write [simply]: ‘He shall not alter it’ and there will then be no need for the expression ‘nor change it’? If it had written so, I might have said that where [the intention is for the original animal] to lose its holiness and the [substituted one] to acquire holiness,³⁰ there is the punishment of lashes, but in the case of exchanging [the consecrated animal for his own hullin], where [if he wishes] he can consecrate both,³¹ I might have thought there is no punishment of lashes. [Scripture] therefore informs us [that it is not so].³²

As to the expression, ‘[for hullin] belonging to others’, how is this to be understood? Shall we say [that it means] his own consecrated animal and hullin belonging to another? But can he consecrate [hullin in such circumstances]?³³ The Divine Law says: When a man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the Lord.³⁴ Just as his house is his own possession, so everything³⁵ must be in his possession! Again if the case then is of a consecration belonging to another and his own hullin,³⁶ can one cause the substitution³⁷ of a thing which is not his? — One can still maintain that the case is of a consecrated animal belonging to another person and his own hullin and when e.g., the owner of the consecrated animals says: ‘Whoever wishes to exchange with this animal may come and do so’.³⁸ MISHNAH. ONE CAN EFFECT AN EXCHANGE WITH ONE [HULLIN] FOR TWO [CONSECRATED ANIMALS],³⁹ AND WITH TWO [HULLIN] FOR ONE [CONSECRATED ANIMAL]; WITH ONE [HULLIN] FOR A HUNDRED [CONSECRATED ANIMALS] AND WITH A HUNDRED [HULLIN] FOR ONE [CONSECRATED ANIMAL]; R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, SAYS: NO EXCHANGE CAN BE EFFECTED EXCEPT WITH ONE [HULLIN] FOR ONE [CONSECRATED ANIMAL], FOR IT SAYS: ‘THEN IT AND THE EXCHANGE THEREOF SHALL BE HOLY’, THUS TEACHING US THAT JUST AS ‘IT’ [THE CONSECRATED ANIMAL] IS ONLY ONE,⁴⁰ SO [ITS SUBSTITUTE] ALSO MUST BE ONLY ONE.

GEMARA. Whence is this proved? — Our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says:] ‘Beast for beast’. Hence we infer⁴¹ that one can effect an exchange with one [hullin] for two [consecrated animals] and with two [hullin] for one [consecrated animal]; with one [hullin] for a hundred [consecrated animals] and with a hundred [hullin] for one [consecrated animal]. R. Simeon, however, says: One cannot effect exchange except with one [hullin] for one [consecrated animal], since it Says: ‘Beast for beast’, [implying] but not beast for beasts or beasts for beast. They⁴² said to him: We find [in the Scriptures] that beasts are also called behemah,⁴³ since it says: And also much cattle [behemah].⁴⁴ And what does R. Simeon say to this? — Many animals are described as behemah rabah [much], but not simply as behemah.⁴⁵

But is R. Simeon's reason⁴⁶ because of the expression ‘beast’? Is not the reason of R. Simeon because of the expression ‘it’, [his reasoning being] just as ‘it’ is only one, so its [substitute] must be only one?⁴⁷ — At first, R. Simeon said to them that his reason was based on the text, ‘Then it and the exchange thereof’. When he saw, however, that the Rabbis interpreted the text ‘beast for beast’, he said to them, ‘I also can derive the reason for my ruling from the same source

Said Resh Lakish: R. Simeon agrees⁴⁸ that one can effect an exchange repeatedly.⁴⁹ What is the reason? — For where has the holiness of the first dedicated animal gone?⁵⁰ But R. Johanan says: Just as one cannot effect an exchange with two hullin for one [consecration], so one cannot effect an exchange repeatedly [with the same animal].

There is a teaching in agreement with R. Johanan; there is a teaching in agreement with Resh Lakish. ‘There is a teaching in agreement with R. Johanan’: Just as one cannot effect an exchange with one hullin for two [consecrations], so one cannot effect an exchange repeatedly. There is a teaching in accordance with the opinion of Resh Lakish: One might have thought that just as R. Simeon holds that one cannot effect an exchange with two [hullin] for one [consecrated animal], so one cannot effect an exchange repeatedly. The text therefore states: ‘Then it and the exchange thereof’, implying, even for a hundred [animals of hullin].⁵¹

R. Abin asked: How is it according to the authority who says⁵² that one cannot effect an exchange repeatedly, if he set aside a guilt-offering with which to obtain atonement and made an exchange for it,

- (1) The priest would rather sell the firstling for its equivalent value, for fear that if he were to reduce its price, he may after all not gain anything by it, as he may not receive the future firstlings. The additional gain of the moment will appeal to him more than the uncertain prospects of future gain.
- (2) Lev. XXVII, 10.
- (3) An unblemished animal of hullin (unconsecrated) must not be substituted.
- (4) A blemished consecrated animal. We therefore see that the law of substitute applies to consecrated blemished animals.
- (5) Thus 'a bad' i.e., a blemished hullin may be exchanged for 'a good' i.e., an unblemished consecrated animal. This shows that substitution has effect on a blemished animal.
- (6) Which are subject to the law of substitute.
- (7) The various rulings mentioned in the Mishnah.
- (8) From the repetition of the word 'beast'.
- (9) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
- (10) That there is a difference as regards the law of exchange where the blemish occurs before dedication.
- (11) And we could infer: Or a bad hullin could not be exchanged either for 'a good' or for 'a bad' consecrated animal.
- (12) Unblemished when consecrated, a blemish occurring to it subsequently.
- (13) The substitute becoming sacred.
- (14) I.e., blemished when consecrated.
- (15) For the purpose of deducing that a permanent blemish prior to consecration does not permit of an exchange taking effect.
- (16) Which would have implied 'a good' i.e., an unblemished animal, since the text later on says 'for a bad' i.e., a blemished one.
- (17) 'A bad' (unconsecrated blemished animal) must not be exchanged for it i.e., 'a good' (unblemished) or a bad (blemished) consecrated animal.
- (18) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
- (19) Since according to him there is only one superfluous 'a good'.
- (20) As a better animal is being substituted for the dedicated blemished animal.
- (21) Since there is an a minori conclusion, what need is there for an extra 'a good'?
- (22) But it must be stated positively and therefore the text is required to derive the case of one exchanging 'a good' for 'a good'.
- (23) The ruling that it is forbidden to exchange 'a good' for 'a good'.
- (24) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
- (25) It is naturally implied and there is no need for a specific interpretation.
- (26) If it is forbidden to substitute an unblemished animal for a blemished one it is obvious that the same applies if the animal for which substitution is made is 'a good' (unblemished one), for Scripture is only concerned that no exchange should be made with something which is holy.
- (27) ubphkj h tk
- (28) So R. Gershom.
- (29) The word ;ukhj indicates that the exchange concerns two people.
- (30) Although the exchange does not succeed in removing holiness from the unblemished consecrated animal, he is nevertheless punished with lashes, for his intention was to release it from its sanctity.
- (31) So R. Gershom. The passage about 'others' is subsequently explained in the Gemara.
- (32) That even if the substitution was for his own animal of hullin, he incurs the punishment of lashes.
- (33) Where it does not belong to him.

- (34) Lev. XXVII, 14.
- (35) In order to receive holiness.
- (36) And he said: This hullin of mine shall be a substitute for that man's dedication.
- (37) Lit., 'cause to seize'.
- (38) In such circumstances the Biblical text informs us that the substitute is sacred although there is a prohibitory law against the act.
- (39) By saying: This animal shall be exchanged for these two dedications.
- (40) Since the text says: 'It', thus alluding to only one.
- (41) Because the word behemah (beast) is repeated (Sh. Mck.).
- (42) The disputants of R. Simeon.
- (43) The term used in the text denoting beast.
- (44) Jonah IV, 11.
- (45) The word behemah therefore by itself denotes only one animal.
- (46) Why he holds in the Mishnah that exchange can only be effected with one hullin for one consecrated animal.
- (47) As stated in the Mishnah.
- (48) Although he holds in the Mishnah that exchange cannot be effected except with one hullin for one consecrated animal.
- (49) The same dedicated animal can be exchanged again and again with different animals. Lit., 'one has power to exchange and again to exchange'.
- (50) So that another animal should be able to receive holiness, even up to a thousand, since Scripture declares: 'Then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy'.
- (51) The substitutions are sacred.
- (52) V. infra 13b.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 9b

and it became blemished and he redeemed it for another¹ [which became lost], and he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering, and [the lost animal was then found] and it was [automatically] transformed into a burnt-offering?² What is the ruling as regards making an exchange for it?³

Said Abaye: What is [R. Abin's] inquiry? If it [the inquiry] is concerning two bodies and one kind of holiness,⁴ why not put the question without stating that he obtains atonement?⁵ If the inquiry is concerning two kinds of holiness and one body,⁶ why not put the question without stating that the first animal became blemished?⁷ — And R. Abin?⁸ — His question is really in the form of one inquiry arising out of another [as follows]: And if you will adopt the opinion that there can be no [exchange] in a case of two bodies and one kind of holiness, since [an animal] has already been once exchanged in that holiness, what of two bodies and two kinds of holiness?⁹ — Let it stand undecided.

Another version: R. Abin inquired, According to the opinion of R. Johanan who holds that one has no power to exchange repeatedly [the same dedicated animal], if he set aside a guilt-offering with which to obtain atonement and exchanged it, and after [the first animal] became blemished he redeemed it for another, what is the ruling as regards exchanging again [this second guilt-offering]?¹⁰ Or,¹¹ if he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering¹² and the [first guilt-offering] was transformed into a burnt-offering,¹³ what is the ruling as regards changing it again?¹⁴

Said Abaye: What is [R. Abin's main inquiry]? If as regards [the exchange] of another kind of holiness but in the same body, then there is no need to mention that he redeemed it [for another].¹⁵ If as regards [the exchange] of another body in the same kind of holiness,¹⁶ then there is no need to mention the atonement through another guilt-offering. And R. Abin? — His [question] is really one inquiry arising out of another: If [the guilt-offering] became blemished and he exchanged it and redeemed it for another, what is the ruling as regards exchanging it again? Do we say that there is no further exchange only with regard to the first guilt-offering but with a separate body [animal], though it remains in the same kind of holiness [of a guilt-offering], there can again be an exchange? Or, perhaps, all animals in the same kind of holiness cannot be exchanged again? And if you will adopt the opinion, that since this other body remains in the same holiness, there can be no further exchange, then if he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering and the first guilt-offering was transformed into a burnt-offering, what is the ruling as regards exchanging it again? Do we say that we hold that one cannot exchange again only with reference to the same body [animal] in the same kind of holiness,¹⁷ but the same body possessing another kind of holiness can be changed again? Or, perhaps, although there is another kind of holiness, since it is the same body, there can be no exchange again? — Let it remain undecided.

Said R. Joshua b. Levi.¹⁸ One adds a fifth¹⁹ for the first dedication but not for the second dedication.²⁰ Said R. Papa: What is the reason of R. Joshua b. Levi? Scripture says: And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house then he shall add the fifth part of the money,²¹ the text saying, 'he that sanctified', implying, but not one who causes holiness [to an animal through another dedicated animal].²² R. Abin inquired: If one set aside a guilt-offering to obtain atonement and [after] it became blemished [he redeemed it for another animal], added a fifth and obtained atonement through another guilt-offering,²³ and [the first guilt-offering] was transformed into a burnt-offering,²⁴ what of adding a fifth to it?²⁵ — Said Abaye: What is [R. Abin's] main inquiry?²⁶ If the inquiry is [as regards adding a fifth for the redemption] of two bodies and one kind of holiness, then why not make the inquiry without mentioning that he obtained atonement?²⁷ And if the inquiry is [as regards] two kinds of holiness and one body, then why not formulate an inquiry without mentioning that [the first animal] became blemished?²⁸ And R. Abin? — His inquiry is really one question arising out of another. If you will adopt the opinion that there is no fifth added [when redeeming] in the case of two bodies and one kind of holiness, since a fifth has already been once added in that holiness, what is the ruling as regards two bodies and two kinds of holiness? — Let it stand undecided.

Another version: R. Abin inquired: If one set aside a guilt-offering to obtain atonement through it and after it became blemished, he redeemed it for another, [what²⁹ is the ruling as regards] adding a fifth?³⁰ [Or,]³¹ if he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering, and [the first animal being found] was transformed into a burnt-offering,³² what is the ruling as regards adding a fifth?³³ — Said Abaye: Which is the main inquiry [of R. Abin]? If his inquiry relates to another kind of holiness but in the same body, then what need is there to mention that the [first] guilt-offering became blemished [and he redeemed it for another]? If it relates to [another] body in the same holiness, [then³⁴ what need is there to mention that he was atoned for through another guilt-offering]? And R. Abin? — His inquiry is really one question arising out of another question [as follows]: If it became blemished and he redeemed it for another, what is the ruling as regards adding a fifth?³⁵ Is it only in redeeming the first guilt-offering that one does not add a fifth but in the case of [another]³⁶ body, although it remains in the same kind of holiness, one adds³⁷ a fifth [in redeeming it, if blemished]?

- (1) Which in turn became the second guilt-offering.
 - (2) For the law is that an animal dedicated for a guilt-offering whose owner has otherwise obtained atonement, is usually destined to be used as a communal burnt-offering.
 - (3) Do we say that as an exchange took place for the first guilt-offering, there cannot be another exchange made for the second guilt-offering now found, for it would be like making a number of exchanges for the same animal, which according to the view of the authority on whose behalf we are propounding this question, is not permissible; or, since the second guilt-offering is another animal altogether and it receives a different kind of holiness, do we say that there can therefore be an exchange made, for in the case of the first animal it was a guilt-offering which was exchanged and we are considering now the exchange of a burnt-offering.
 - (4) And the question will then be: Shall we say that since there is another body i.e., a different animal, therefore it can be exchanged or, perhaps, since there is the same holiness, there can be no further exchange.
 - (5) Let R. Abin state his inquiry as follows: One separated his guilt-offering and exchanged it and the first animal became blemished and was redeemed for another. What of exchanging this last animal? Shall we say since it is a different body, i.e., a different animal, there can therefore be a second exchange, or perhaps since the last animal comes in place of the first and has the same kind of holiness, both being a guilt-offering, there can be no exchange again.
 - (6) I.e., where one set aside a guilt-offering and exchanged it, and the first animal was lost and he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering, and the first guilt-offering was then found and is now regarded as a burnt-offering. Here we have, with reference to the first animal, one body with two kinds of holiness, and the question is, since there is here only one body, can exchange be effected again.
 - (7) And was subsequently redeemed, for the inquiry can be formulated without these conditions.
 - (8) What exactly is the nature of his inquiry which calls for all the circumstances which he enumerates.
 - (9) When e.g., the second guilt-offering was lost and he obtained atonement through a different animal, the second guilt-offering becoming a burnt-offering after being found. What of the second guilt-offering as regards exchanging? Do we say since it was brought in virtue of the first, there can therefore be no exchange, or, as it is a different animal with a different kind of holiness, there can be exchange?
 - (10) Do we say that as it was brought in the place of the first guilt-offering, as the first animal has once been exchanged, there can be no further exchange, or else, as it is a different animal, there can be a further exchange?
 - (11) V. Sh. Mek.
 - (12) Where the first animal did not become blemished and was not redeemed but was lost and the owner brought a second guilt-offering.
 - (13) According to the law.
 - (14) This burnt-offering. Now according to this version there will not be any reference to two kinds of holiness and two bodies, and there will really be here two inquiries (Rashi.)
 - (15) It would be sufficient to formulate the inquiry as follows: He set aside a guilt-offering which he exchanged, the first animal became lost and he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering. The first guilt-offering was then found and automatically became a burnt-offering, and the question was as regards making exchange again with the same animal which has now received another kind of holiness.
 - (16) Whether there can be a further exchange of the second animal possessing the same kind of holiness as the first, i.e., when the guilt-offering was exchanged, became blemished and was redeemed for another.

(17) The same animal all the time, without a change to a different kind of holiness.

(18) B.M. 54b.

(19) When redeeming a dedication.

(20) When e.g., the first animal became maimed and he redeemed it for another, this second animal being described as a second dedication. A substitute animal would be a second dedication.

(21) Lev. XXVII, 15.

(22) As in the case of a substitution, where the animal exchanged is not itself dedicated and only becomes holy by reason of exchange.

(23) The first guilt-offering was then found.

(24) In accordance with the rule that if an animal has been dedicated for a guilt-offering and the owner has obtained atonement through another, the original animal is changed into a burnt-offering.

(25) Would it be regarded as a second dedication, although it is the same animal, so that if it became blemished, there would be no need to add a fifth.

(26) For the present, R. Abin's words have no reference to the case of two bodies and two kinds of holiness, but he divides his inquiry into two parts, the first part being where there are two bodies and one kind of holiness, and the other, where he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering, i.e. where the first guilt-offering was not maimed but was lost and the owner obtained atonement through another guilt-offering. The first guilt-offering was then transformed into a burnt-offering and we have, as a result, two kinds of holiness but in one body (Rashi). Therefore Abaye's query is: What is etc.

(27) Through another guilt-offering. He need only state that the first guilt-offering became blemished, he redeemed it for another and added a fifth in redeeming, since there can be no redemption of an unblemished animal which is fit for the altar. The second animal in turn became blemished and the inquiry will therefore be as follows: Do we say that since the second animal possesses the same kind of holiness as the first, there cannot be the addition of the second fifth in redeeming, as it is a second dedication? Or, perhaps, since they are two separate bodies (animals) he adds a fifth when he redeems the second blemished guilt-offering? R. Joshua's dictum will therefore only apply in the case where one dedicated a blemished animal for Temple repairs and redeemed it for another blemished animal, no change being brought about, as both are blemished. In redeeming therefore the second animal, we say it is a second dedication and therefore a fifth is not added when redeeming. But in our case, where we redeem a blemished guilt-offering for an unblemished one which is fit for the altar, we consider this second animal a first consecration, since the first guilt-offering was only useful for its value alone, whereas the second animal is suitable for the altar. It is therefore a fresh consecration, requiring the addition of a fifth should it become blemished and be redeemed (Rashi).

(28) Before it became lost, and the case here is where the guilt-offering became lost, and he set aside another guilt-offering and obtained atonement through it. The first animal then becomes a burnt-offering. What is then the ruling? Do we say it is a second dedication, since the owner obtained atonement through another and this first animal is considered as subsidiary to it and, consequently, if it became blemished, there will be no need for the adding of a fifth in redeeming, or not?

(29) V. Wilna Gaon Glosses.

(30) If the second animal became blemished and was redeemed.

(32) In accordance with the law.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 10a

Or perhaps, all [dedications] of the same holiness do not require the addition of a fifth?¹ And if you will say that since this [other] body [animal] remains in the same holiness, there is no addition of a fifth, then if [the owner] obtained atonement through [a guilt-offering] and the first [automatically] was transformed into a burnt-offering,² what is the ruling? [Do we say that] one does not add a fifth only in the case of the same body possessing the same holiness, but where there is another holiness,³ it is not so? Or, perhaps, since it is the same body,⁴ one is not required to add a fifth? — Let it remain undecided.

Rami b. Hama inquired: Is the consecrator required to add a fifth [when redeeming], or is the one who is atoned for required to add a fifth?⁵ — Said Raba: Scripture says, And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house:⁶ 'He that sanctified', but not the person who is atoned for.

Rami b. Hama inquired: Can a consecrator effect an exchange, or the one for whom atonement is obtained? — Said Raba: [Obviously the person for whom atonement is made has power of effecting exchange, for if only the consecrator has power of effecting exchange],⁷ then we find that a congregation or partners have power of effecting exchange when, e.g., they charge an agent to dedicate?⁸ And moreover R. Nahman reported: Huna informed me: It has been taught, Scripture says: And of his offering unto the Lord for his separation, beside that his hand shall get.⁹ Now is the offering of a nazirite according to his pecuniary means?¹⁰ How then are we to explain this? The words, 'His offering unto the Lord for his separation' refer to where he is able to set aside [the prescribed offering] from his own [means]. The words, 'Beside that his hand shall get' refer to where others set aside [the prescribed offering].¹¹ For what practical ruling?¹² Shall I say with reference to atonement?¹³ Surely it is obvious that he obtains atonement [with another sacrifice] seeing that they give it to him as a gift! Then must you not say that it is with reference to making exchange, and [the Baraita above] means this: [Just as when he set aside an offering from his own means only he alone has power of effecting exchange],¹⁴ so if others set aside [an offering] on his behalf he alone can effect exchange?¹⁵ Deduce therefore from here that we go by the person for whom atonement is made!¹⁶ — No. One can still maintain that [the Baraita above] refers to atonement, and as to your difficulty, do not [the others who set aside the offering] give it to him as a present? Had the Divine Law not included this in the text 'beside that his hand shall get', I might have thought that it is a Divine decree that [the nazirite] can obtain atonement only with an offering brought from his own means but not from that [set apart] by others, [although it is given to him as a gift]. The text ['beside that etc.'] therefore informs us [that it is not so]. What is the decision in the matter? — Come and hear: For R. Abbuha reported in the name of R. Johanan: He who dedicates [and wishes to redeem his dedication] must add a fifth. The exchange of one for whose atonement [an animal is dedicated] is sacred. If one separates [the priestly due] from his own [grain] for [the untithed grain] of his neighbour the right of disposal belongs to him [who separates].¹⁷ What is the reason? Scripture says: All the tithes of thine increase . . . and hast given it, etc.¹⁸ MISHNAH. WITH LIMBS [OF HULLIN] NO EXCHANGE CAN BE EFFECTED FOR [DEDICATED] EMBRYOS,¹⁹ NOR WITH EMBRYOS [OF HULLIN] FOR [DEDICATED] LIMBS;²⁰ NOR WITH EMBRYOS AND LIMBS [OF HULLIN] FOR WHOLE [DEDICATED ANIMALS];²¹ NOR WITH WHOLE [ANIMALS OF HULLIN] FOR THEM. R. JOSE SAYS: WITH LIMBS [OF HULLIN] EXCHANGE CAN BE EFFECTED FOR WHOLE [DEDICATED ANIMALS],²² BUT NOT WITH WHOLE [ANIMALS OF HULLIN] FOR THEM.²³ SAID R. JOSE: IS IT NOT THE CASE IN RESPECT OF DEDICATIONS,²⁴ THAT IF ONE SAYS: 'THIS FOOT SHALL BE A BURNT-OFFERING, THE WHOLE [ANIMAL] BECOMES A BURNT-OFFERING? SIMILARLY, IF ONE SAYS, 'THIS FOOT SHALL BE INSTEAD OF THIS [WHOLE DEDICATED ANIMAL]', THE WHOLE [ANIMAL] SHOULD BECOME A SUBSTITUTE IN ITS PLACE.

GEMARA. It was stated: Bar Padda says, Dedication has no effect on embryos,²⁵ whereas R. Johanan says: Dedication has effect on embryos. And R. Johanan²⁶ follows the opinion he expressed elsewhere. For R. Johanan said: If one dedicates a pregnant sin-offering and it gave birth, if he wishes, he may obtain atonement through it [the mother], and if he wishes, he may obtain atonement through its offspring.²⁷ [And both statements of R. Johanan] are necessary. For if he had made only the first statement,²⁸ [I might have said] that here, where he dedicated

(1) Although the second guilt-offering is a different animal.

(2) V. Sh. Mek.

(3) Where, as here, the animal becomes a burnt-offering.

(4) The same animal, although now possessing a different holiness.

(5) For the rule is that only the owner adds a fifth in redeeming but not a stranger. Now if one set aside an offering on behalf of one's neighbour and it became blemished, who is considered the owner in respect of adding a fifth? Is the consecrator considered the owner and therefore the person for whom atonement is made does not require to add a fifth, as he is regarded as a stranger, or is the person for whom atonement is made considered the owner?

(6) Lev. XXVII, 15.

(7) V. Sh. Mek.

(8) For then it becomes a private offering to which exchange is applicable, and we have learnt that a congregation or partners are not competent to effect an exchange. Hence we can deduce from this that we go by the person for whom atonement is made, and in the case of a congregation or partners it is the congregation or partners who are making the exchange and consequently in this case no exchange will be effected.

(9) Num. VI, 21.

(10) Like the case of the sacrifice of higher or lower value, for the sacrifice of a nazirite is fixed and specified.

(11) Where he is unable at the moment to bring a sacrifice and meanwhile others separate one on his behalf.

(12) Is there need for the text to inform us concerning others setting aside an offering on his behalf.

(13) To teach us that one can obtain atonement by means of an offering which others have set aside.

(14) But not another.

(15) He can effect exchange but not the others.

(16) For we see that although others have set aside the offering, only the owner, for whose benefit it was, can effect exchange.

(17) V. supra 2b notes.

(18) Deut. XXVI, 12. Thus a person who gives and separates the tithes has the right to give them to the priest he chooses, and the privilege is not in the hands of the person on whose behalf the grain is tithed. We see, however, from R. Abbuha that the person for whom atonement is made can effect exchange and this is the answer to Rami b. Hama's query above.

- (19) If a person said: 'Let the foot of this animal be exchanged for a dedicated embryo inside this animal', dedication has no effect on the limb.
- (20) If one said: 'Let the embryo in the inside of this hullin be exchanged for the foot of this dedicated animal', the embryo is not holy.
- (21) If, for example, one said: 'Let this embryo or limb be exchanged for this whole dedicated animal', there is no exchange.
- (22) If one says: 'Let the foot of this animal of hullin be exchanged for this dedicated animal', the exchange takes effect in regard to the limb and it spreads to the entire animal. Thus the whole animal becomes sacred and is offered up.
- (23) For a limb of a dedicated animal has not the power to effect exchange.
- (24) At the beginning when one dedicates.
- (25) If one dedicates an embryo inside an animal, it is not holy to be offered up, and if he offered it up when it was born without a special dedication from its birth, he brings hullin to the Temple court. If, therefore, he separates a pregnant sin-offering, we do not consider it as a case of two sin-offerings set aside for security, for the embryo is sanctified by virtue of its mother and not on its own account, and therefore is regarded as the offspring of a sin-offering which is left to die. Similarly, as regards the matter of dedication, the embryo is regarded as the offspring of a dedication and not as a separate dedication.
- (26) Who holds that dedication has effect on embryos.
- (27) For we say that the offspring of sin-offerings is left to die only in the case where one set apart a sin-offering which became pregnant and gave birth, it being a Sinaitic law that the offspring in such circumstances is condemned to die (v. infra 21b). But where he set apart a pregnant sin-offering, the embryo is regarded as a different animal and therefore holiness attaches to it independently of its mother. We regard this as a case of one who sets apart two sin-offerings for security in which case he can obtain pardon with whichever one he chooses, the other being left to pasture. We thus see that holiness attaches to an embryo and no special dedication is required after its birth.
- (28) That dedication has effect on an embryo.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 10b

the embryo by itself, a dedication has effect on it, but there, where he dedicated the mother, it [the embryo] is included [in the dedication of the mother], and therefore it [the embryo] is not holy on its own account. And if he made only the second statement,¹ [I might have said] that there he dedicated it [the mother] and all connected with it [the embryo], but here where he dedicated it [the embryo], since it is not [emerged] outside, it is not holy.² [Both statements of R. Johanan] are therefore necessary.

Another version: What does [R. Johanan] inform us?³ That if one left over [the embryo]⁴, his act is valid⁵, and that an embryo is not considered as the thigh of its mother.⁶ But what need is there for the two statements [of R. Johanan]?⁷ — [Both] are necessary. For if the statement had been made in connection with this case only,⁸ [I might have said] that there, where the mother herself is fit [for dedication], since holiness attached to it [the mother], it also attached to the embryo. But in the other case,⁹ [I might have said] that it was not so. [R. Johanan] therefore informs us [otherwise].¹⁰ And if R. Johanan had stated the law only in this case,¹¹ [I might have said] that there the reason was because he expressly dedicated the embryo, but here¹² the case is otherwise. [Both statements of R. Johanan are therefore] necessary.

R. Zera was once sitting and repeating this tradition [of Bar [Padda]. R. Jeremiah raised an objection to R. Zera.¹³ What device does one adopt¹⁴ in connection with a firstling? If a pregnant animal was giving birth for the first time, one can say: 'Whatever is in the inside of this animal shall become a burnt-offering'. If now the animal gives birth to a male it is a burnt-offering.¹⁵ Consequently we see that an embryo is holy on its own account!¹⁶ — He [R. Zera] replied to him: This was taught with reference to a consecration for its value.¹⁷ But is a consecration for its value strong enough to release from the holiness of a firstling? — Yes. And we have learnt likewise: All dedications which have received a permanent blemish prior to their dedication and were redeemed, are subject to the law of the firstling¹⁸ and the priestly gifts.¹⁹ Now the reason why they are subject to the law of the firstling is because they were redeemed, but if they were not redeemed, they would be exempt from the law of the firstling. Consequently we see that a consecration for its value is strong enough to release the holiness of a firstling.²⁰

He raised an objection: If one says, 'Whatever is in the inside of this animal shall be a burnt-offering', [the mother] may be shorn for its wool but must not be worked, because the embryo within is thereby weakened!²¹ — He said to him: Here²² too it is a case of consecration for its value. But is a consecration for its value strong enough to forbid [shearing and work of an animal]? — He replied to him: Yes. And we have learnt likewise: They²³ become hullin as regards shearing and working.²⁴ Now the reason is because they were redeemed, but before they were redeemed they must not be worked. Consequently we see that a consecration for its value makes it forbidden to work [the animal].

He [R. Jeremiah] raised an objection to him [R. Zera]. Our Mishnah says: WITH LIMBS [OF HULLIN] NO EXCHANGE CAN BE EFFECTED FOR [DEDICATED] EMBRYOS, NOR WITH EMBRYOS FOR LIMBS.²⁵ Now it says that one has no power to exchange with them [the embryos],²⁶ but they [the embryos] can indeed become holy!²⁷ — He [R. Zera] replied to him: [Our Mishnah] is dealing with dedicated offspring which are already holy. If we are dealing with dedicated offspring, it is only in the inside of their mother that they do not effect exchange. We infer then that outside [their mother] they do effect exchange. But have we not learnt: One cannot effect exchange with the offspring of a dedicated animal?²⁸ — [The Mishnah above] will represent the opinion of R. Judah who holds²⁹ that an animal's offspring effects exchange. If [the first part of our Mishnah above] is the opinion of R. Judah, it is only exchange which cannot be effected [with limbs],³⁰ but they [limbs] are indeed dedicated.³¹ But has not R. Judah stated: Limbs do not become holy?³² — The case here³³ is where he dedicated a limb the removal of which results in death.³⁴

He [R. Jeremiah] raised an objection to him [R. Zera]: One can dedicate limbs and embryos but one has no power to exchange [them].³⁵ — Here³⁶ also we are dealing with offspring of dedications. If the case is that of offspring of dedications, why does the Baraitha say above: 'one can dedicate', for are they not already holy? —

(1) If one set apart a pregnant sin-offering etc. as stated above.

(2) Requiring a special dedication when it emerges from the inside of its mother.

(3) In the case where one dedicates a sin-offering etc.

- (4) For another kind of holiness, v. infra 19a.
- (5) E.g., if one says: 'This shall be a sin-offering and its embryo a burnt-offering', his words are valid. Or, if he says: 'The mother shall be a sin-offering and its embryo hullin', it is hullin. Lit., 'it is left over'.
- (6) According to Bar Padda, however, an embryo is not considered something apart, and where one dedicated the mother and left over the embryo for another kind of holiness, it does not receive holiness and is regarded as an offspring from a sin-offering which is left to die. And if one says that the embryo should be hullin his words are nugatory. According to the authority who holds that an embryo inside a dedicated animal is holy, holiness attaches immediately, while according to the other authority, holiness only commences when the embryo is born.
- (7) Can we not infer this from the other case mentioned by R. Johanan, when he says that dedication has an effect on an embryo, thus teaching us that the animal and its embryo are considered as independent on one another in respect of dedication?
- (8) Where one separates a sin-offering.
- (9) Where one dedicates an embryo.
- (10) That holiness rests on an embryo.
- (11) Concerning where one dedicates an embryo.
- (12) Where one separates a sin-offering.
- (13) Infra 24b.
- (14) To evade the duty of giving a firstling to the priest, so as thus to derive the benefit for himself.
- (15) He carries out his obligation if he is required to bring a burnt-offering, for the holiness of a firstling only commences when it leaves the womb of its mother. Consequently the dedication for a burnt-offering preceded the holiness of a firstling.
- (16) Unlike the opinion of Bar Padda who says that an embryo possesses no holiness on its own account.
- (17) Where he sells it and buys a burnt-offering for the money. But the embryo itself is not consecrated as such and is sold unblemished.
- (18) If they are female animals and gave birth for the first time after their redemption.
- (19) V. infra 33a.
- (20) For since a permanent blemish was prior to the consecration, the consecration at the outset was only for the value.
- (21) For working with the mother enfeebles the embryo, Tosef. III. Consequently we see that holiness has effect on an embryo, unlike the view of Bar Padda above.
- (22) In the passage just cited.
- (23) This passage is the second clause of the Mishnah cited above: All dedications where a permanent blemish, etc., the latter clause therefore says that they i.e., these blemished dedications etc.
- (24) So that it is permitted to shear and work them.
- (25) And the Mishnah goes on to say: NOR WITH WHOLE ANIMALS [OF HULLIN] FOR DEDICATED EMBRYOS.
- (26) For in connection with exchanging, Scripture says 'beast' but not an embryo.
- (27) For if embryos cannot become holy, it is obvious that one has no power to exchange whole animals of holy with them, since they are hullin.
- (28) Born after its mother's dedication, and the status of one exchanged with the young is not altered. We must then be dealing with a case where one consecrated directly an embryo, which is regarded as a first dedication. Hence we see that dedication has effect on an embryo, unlike the opinion of Bar Padda.
- (29) Infra 11a, 12a, 14a.
- (30) Of hullin for whole dedicated animals, so that holiness should spread to the entire animal the limbs of which are being substituted.

(31) One can dedicate limbs, so that if one consecrated a limb of an animal, holiness spreads to the entire animal. For the first Tanna of the Mishnah must share this opinion, since R. Jose, his disputant in the Mishnah, retorts: IS IT NOT THE CASE WITH REFERENCE TO DEDICATIONS etc., thus implying that the first Tanna agrees with him that if one dedicated a limb the whole animal becomes holy, and it is R. Simeon who opposes R. Jose later in the Baraitha, saying that at the beginning the consecration of one limb makes the whole animal a burnt-offering, but the case of exchanging is different, as it has no effect on limbs.

(32) Later in the Baraitha, R. Judah says that holiness does not spread to the whole animal where their limbs are dedicated.

(33) Where we deduce from the Mishnah that the entire animal becomes holy if one limb is dedicated.

(34) Lit., 'on which the soul depends'; e.g., if he dedicated a foot from the joint upwards, the removal of which would render the animal trefah (v. Glos.). Here, even R. Judah, the Baraitha says later, agrees that in such circumstances the whole animal becomes sacred.

(35) Infra 15a. We therefore see that dedication has an effect upon embryos, unlike the opinion of Bar Padda.

(36) In the case of the Mishnah just quoted.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 11a

What is meant is this:¹ One can dedicate limbs,² and can effect exchange for them,³ but one can effect no exchange with limbs for them [dedicated animals].⁴ And embryos which were dedicated while they were inside their mother cannot be exchanged.⁵

Now if the case [in the Mishnah just quoted] refers to offsprings of dedications, it is only in the inside of their mothers that they do not effect an exchange, but outside [their mother]⁶ they do effect exchange. But have we not learnt: Offspring [of dedicated animals] do not effect an exchange? — This⁷ is the opinion of R. Judah.⁸ If it is the opinion of R. Judah, then how can limbs become holy,⁹ for R. Judah does not hold that if one says: 'The foot of this animal shall be a burnt-offering' the whole becomes a burnt-offering? — He replied to him: Here¹⁰ also the case¹¹ is one of the dedication of a limb [the loss of] which renders the animal trefah.

Must it be said that Tannaim differ [on that point]?¹² [For it was taught:] If one¹³ slaughtered a sin-offering and found a four months' old¹⁴ [embryo] alive inside, one [Baraitha] states: It is only eaten by the males of the priesthood,¹⁵ within the hangings of the court, and for one day [and a night];¹⁶ while another [Baraitha] taught: It is eaten by all people, it is eaten everywhere [in the Temple court] and [is eaten at all times].¹⁷ What [does this mean]? Is it not that there is a difference of opinion among Tannaim, one Master holding that dedication has effect on embryos,¹⁸ and the other Master holding that dedication has no effect on embryos?¹⁹ — No.²⁰ These Tannaim [of the Baraitha above] differ on this point, one Tanna²¹ holding that the offspring of dedications are holy at birth,²² while the other Tanna²³ holds that [the offspring of dedications] are holy even in the inside of their mother. Or if you prefer [another solution] I may say: Both [Baraithas quoted above] are the teaching of one Tanna.²⁴ One of these Baraithas²⁵ deals with a case where one dedicates an animal and then it becomes pregnant,²⁶ and the other,²⁷ where he dedicates it in a pregnant condition.²⁸

We have learnt:²⁹ R. Eliezer says, Kil'ayim,³⁰ trefah³¹ and a foetus extracted by means of the caesarean section, a tumtum³² and a hermaphrodite do not themselves become holy nor cause holiness.³³ And Samuel said: The expression, 'Do not themselves become holy' means as regards becoming a substitute,³⁴ and the expression, 'Nor cause holiness' means to effect an exchange.³⁵ And it has been taught: Said R. Meir:³⁶ Since they³⁷ do not become holy, how can they cause holiness? You cannot find a case³⁸ except where one dedicated an animal and then it became trefah,³⁹ or where one dedicated an embryo⁴⁰ and it was then extracted through the caesarean section. Consequently we see that an embryo can become holy [contrary to the opinion of Bar Padda above]! — To this the answer was given: As regards an unblemished [embryo] in the inside of an unblemished animal, even Bar Padda also agrees that it becomes hullin.⁴¹ They⁴² only differ as regards an unblemished [embryo] in the inside of a blemished animal. Bar Padda holds since the mother is not holy as such,⁴³ it [the embryo] is also not holy, whereas R. Johanan holds: These⁴⁴ are two independent animals; the mother is indeed not holy but the embryo is.

Another version: But the cases of kil'ayim, tumtum and a hermaphrodite you can only explain with reference to the offspring of dedication and in accordance with the opinion of R. Judah who used to say that one can effect an exchange with an offspring [of dedications]. Now only these are not consecrated as such, but other embryos become holy, [unlike the opinion of Bar Padda]! — Said Abaye: Regarding an unblemished [embryo] in the inside of an unblemished animal, all the authorities agree that it [the embryo] is holy as such. The point at issue is with reference to an embryo in the inside of a blemished animal, Bar padda, holding that since the mother is not holy as such, except for its value, the embryo also is not holy as such [except for its value], whereas R. Johanan says: An embryo is not considered the thigh of its mother, and although its mother is not holy as such, the embryo nevertheless is holy as such.

SAID R. JOSE: IS IT NOT THE CASE WITH REFERENCE TO DEDICATIONS THAT IF ONE SAYS: 'THIS FOOT SHALL BE etc.

(1) The words 'One can dedicate' of the Mishnah just quoted do not refer at all to embryos.

(2) Separate limbs and parts of the animal.

(3) The limbs of the same animal permit of exchange with another animal, for the consecration of one limb renders the whole animal holy, since one cannot effect exchange for one consecrated limb. For even R. Jose in our Mishnah above only says that one has power to exchange limbs of hullin for whole dedicated animals but not the whole animal for a dedicated limb and certainly not limbs of hullin for dedicated limbs.

(4) And the latter part of the Mishnah quoted which says: 'But one has no power to effect exchange' informs us that one has no power to exchange limbs for whole animals, so that if e.g., one says: 'Let the limb of this animal be a substitute for this whole dedicated animal' it is not holy. This is a restriction which applies to dedications, for if one dedicated a limb, the whole animal becomes holy, whereas if one says: 'Let this limb be a substitute for this whole animal' there is no substitute.

(5) E.g., the offspring of a dedicated animal, although they are holy, cannot be exchanged for an animal so long as they are inside the animal. This will be in accordance with the opinion of R. Judah who holds that an offspring can effect an exchange, for according to the Rabbis, even if the offspring were outside their mother's body, they could not effect an exchange.

(6) After their birth.

(7) The Mishnah just explained.

(8) Who holds that the offspring of a dedicated animal can effect exchange.

(9) For the first clause in the Mishnah just explained above says that one can consecrate limbs and effect exchange with them, thus implying that holiness spreads to the entire animal, otherwise there could be no substitution for limbs.

(10) In the Mishnah just quoted.

(11) Sh. Mek. The case here is where he dedicated a limb, the loss of which results in death, v. p. 71, n. 7.

(12) Whether dedication has effect on embryos.

(13) Infra 25b.

(14) For if it is five months old, it has finished its months of pregnancy in the case of small cattle and is not rendered permissible through the slaughtering of its mother, according to R. Meir, who holds that if an animal has concluded its normal months of pregnancy it requires a separate shechitah.

(15) According to the law of a sin-offering. At present we interpret the Baraitha as dealing with a case where one separates a pregnant animal. For if pregnancy followed dedication, all the authorities concerned will agree that since the consecration of the embryo was through its mother, it is regarded as hullin, as the offspring of dedications are only holy at their birth and not while inside the animal.

(16) So Sh. Mek.

(17) So Sh. Mek. For any length of time.

(18) In their own right. When the animal is dedicated while pregnant it becomes holy immediately and is not subject to the law of the offspring of dedication.

(19) Except by virtue of the mother and is subject to the law of other offspring of dedications which are holy at birth.

(20) The Baraitha above is not a case at all of setting apart a pregnant animal but of dedicating an animal which subsequently became pregnant.

(21) The last one, mentioned above in the difference of opinion.

(22) But not while inside the animal.

(23) The first Tanna, mentioned above in the Baraitha.

(24) And all the authorities concerned agree that dedication has effect on embryos immediately, in accordance with the opinion of R. Johanan.

(25) Which says that the embryo is not holy as a sin-offering.

(26) It is therefore like an offspring of dedications which is sacred at birth.

(27) Which says that the embryo has the law of a sin-offering.

(28) It therefore becomes holy immediately and has not the law of the offspring of dedications.

(29) Yeb. 83b, Bek. 42a, etc.

(30) A hybrid.

(31) An animal afflicted with an organic disease, v. Glos.

(32) An animal whose genitals are hidden or undeveloped.

(33) This passage is explained subsequently.

(34) So that if they are hullin and were substituted for a dedicated animal, they do not become sacred; and though the law of exchange has effect on permanent blemished animals, it has no effect on these cases. This is certainly the case, that they are not holy, if one actually consecrated them.

(35) If they are holy, there can be no exchange effected with them so as to cause holiness to another animal of hullin.

(36) Sh. Mek., 'Rabbi'.

(37) Kil'ayim, etc.

(38) That they should be holy.

(39) The animal is holy, for its consecration was prior to its defect.

(40) Holiness attaching to it immediately.

(41) Agreeing with R. Johanan, the case of consecrating an embryo and then extracting it through the caesarean section being the same as the case of an unblemished embryo in the inside of an unblemished animal.

(42) Bar Padda and R. Johanan.

(43) Because it is blemished.

(44) The mother and its embryo.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 11b

Our Rabbis have taught: Are we to suppose that if one says: 'This foot shall be a burnt-offering' the whole animal becomes a burnt-offering? The text states: All that any man giveth of it unto the Lord shall be holy:¹ 'Of it² unto the Lord', but not the whole of it [the animal] 'unto the Lord'. I might think that it [the animal] becomes hullin, therefore the text states: 'It shall be holy'.³ How is one to act?⁴ It must be sold for the requirements of burnt-offerings, and its money is hullin except for the value of its limb. This is the teaching of R. Meir and R. Judah. R. Jose and R. Simeon, however, say: Whence do we derive that if one says, 'The foot of this animal shall be a burnt-offering', the whole animal becomes a burnt-offering? Because [Scripture] says, 'All that any man giveth of it [shall be] unto the Lord',⁵ when it further says, 'It shall be holy' this includes the whole of it [the animal].⁶

The Master said: 'It shall be sold for requirements of a burnt-offering'. But does not he [the purchaser] bring an animal [for a burnt-offering] with the loss [of limb]?⁷ — Said 'Raba: It is a case where he [the purchaser] says: 'I undertake to bring a burnt-offering which can live'.⁸

Said R. Hisda: R. Judah⁹ agrees where [he dedicated] a part [of the animal the removal of which] renders the animal trefah.¹⁰ Raba says: A part [the removal of which] renders the animal nebelah.¹¹ And R. Shesheth says: A part [the removal of which] kills the animal. What is the practical difference between R. Hisda and Raba? — The difference is whether a trefah can live. R. Hisda holds according to the one who says that a trefah cannot live,¹² whereas Raba will hold according to the one who says that a trefah can live.¹³ And what is the practical difference between Raba and R. Shesheth? — The difference between them is as regards the ruling of R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar says: If the thigh of an animal was removed and the hollow [thereof], it [the animal] is nebelah.¹⁴ Raba will agree with R. Eleazar,¹⁵ whereas R. Shesheth will not agree with R. Eleazar.¹⁶

They raised an objection. 'Said Rabbi: I favour the opinion of R. Judah!¹⁷ where [the dedication] is a part of the animal [the removal of which] will not result in death, and the opinion of R. Jose¹⁸ where the dedication is of a part [of the animal the removal of which] results in death'. Now can we not infer from this that [R. Jose differs] with R. Judah [even in connection with the removal of a vital limb]? — There is no difficulty as regards the words: 'I favour the opinion of R. Judah¹⁹ where [the dedication] is of a part [of the animal] the removal of which will not result in death,'²⁰ since R. Jose does differ in this.²¹ But from the words: 'And the opinion of R. Jose where the dedication is of a part [of the animal the removal of which] will result in death', cannot we infer from this that²² R. Judah differs?²³ Shall we say this refutes all?²⁴ — No. The statement is defective²⁵ and must be read thus: The teaching of R. Jose is acceptable to R. Judah regarding a part [of the animal the removal of which] results in death, for even R. Judah does not differ with R. Jose save in regard to the dedication of a part [of the animal the removal of which] does not result in death, but in regard to the [dedication of] a part [the removal of which] results in death, he agrees with him.²⁶

Raba inquired: What of the bird?²⁷ [Shall we say,] Scripture says ‘beast,’²⁸ and this is not a ‘beast’? Or perhaps shall we note that Scripture says korban [‘offering’]²⁸ and a bird is also an offering?²⁹ Let it remain undecided.

Raba inquired: If one dedicated a limb for its value,³⁰ what of holiness as such³¹ resting on it? Does one say, since one limb is dedicated the whole becomes holy for value,³² and since there rests upon the animal the holiness for its value, there also rests on it dedication as such?³³ Or perhaps we use a single miggo³⁴ but not a double miggo! — But why cannot Raba solve [the inquiry] from his own teaching?³⁵ For Raba said: If one dedicated a male³⁶ [a ram] for its value,³⁷ it is dedicated as such?³⁸ — There,³⁹ he dedicated the whole animal,⁴⁰ but here,⁴¹ he only dedicated one limb. What therefore is the ruling? — Let it stand undecided.

[Abaye⁴² inquired of Rabbah:] If one dedicated a limb, what of the shearing?⁴³ — Why not solve it from what has been taught: [Scripture said:] Nor shear the firstling of thy sheep,⁴⁴ thus implying that you may shear where the firstling belongs to thee and to others [gentiles]?⁴⁵ — There,⁴⁶ no holiness rested on it at all,⁴⁷ but here, holiness rested on it [the limb].

Another version: There,⁴⁸ he has not the power to dedicate it,⁴⁹ whereas here,⁵⁰ he has the power to dedicate [the rest of the animal].

Abaye inquired of Rabbah: If one dedicated the skin of an animal, what of working [the animal]?⁵¹ — Come and hear: If one says, ‘Whatever is in the inside of this animal shall be a burnt-offering’, shearing is permitted, but work [with it] is forbidden on account of the weakening of the embryo within!⁵² — He replied to him: When [the Baraita just quoted] states ‘but work with it is forbidden’, it means Rabbinically.⁵³ If so, the shearing too should be forbidden?⁵⁴ — He said to him: Work [with the embryo] which weakens it, the Rabbis prohibited, but shearing, the Rabbis did not prohibit.

Abaye inquired of R. Joseph: If it [the mother] is a peace-offering and its embryo is hullin⁵⁵ and he slaughtered [the mother] within [the Temple court], what is the ruling?⁵⁶ According to the one who holds that offspring of dedications are holy at birth and not before, have we here a case of [slaughtering] hullin in the Temple court⁵⁷ or not?

(1) Lev. XXVII, 9.

(2) Taken in the partitive sense.

(3) That limb, and since that limb is holy, he can no longer kill the animal as hullin.

(4) Since there is a blending of hullin and dedication in the animal.

(5) This is how the verse is rendered by R. Jose and R. Simeon.

(6) As being holy, because the holiness spreads to the entire animal.

(7) The limb belongs to the seller who dedicated it. Therefore it is found that the purchaser is not offering up a whole burnt-offering while he vowed to offer up a whole animal.

- (8) And even if there was a loss of that limb which had already been dedicated, since even without the limb the animal can live, his vow was fulfilled. But if the dedication was of a limb the removal of which would kill the animal, then holiness spreads to the whole animal, even according to R. Judah.
- (9) Who holds elsewhere that only the limb which is dedicated is holy.
- (10) That in such circumstances holiness spreads to the whole animal.
- (11) An animal that has died a natural death without shechitah.
- (12) The difference of opinion is mentioned in Hul. 42b. Consequently since the animal cannot live, then he dedicated something the removal of which results in the death of the animal, and therefore he holds that R. Judah will agree in such a case.
- (13) It is not therefore something the removal of which will result in the death of the animal. And R. Judah will maintain his opinion in the case of a trefah.
- (14) Although it is still alive it causes ritual uncleanness like nebelah, for it is considered as already dead.
- (15) And therefore if one dedicated the thigh and the region around, it is something the removal of which results in death, and the holiness spreads to the whole animal.
- (16) And therefore he says: With the part that kills at once, and not with a thing the removal of which will not kill the animal outright, but will leave it struggling for a while.
- (17) Who says above that the dedication of one limb does not render the whole animal holy.
- (18) Who says above that the dedication of one limb makes the entire animal holy.
- (19) Implying but not that of R. Jose.
- (20) V. Sh. Mek.
- (21) Where the loss of a limb does not result in death.
- (22) V. Sh. Mek.
- (23) And holds that even in such a case the dedication of one limb does not make the whole animal holy.
- (24) I.e., R. Hisda, Raba, and R. Shesheth.
- (25) There is a clause missing in the passage cited in the name of Rabbi.
- (26) R. Jose, that the dedication of one vital limb makes the entire animal holy.
- (27) According to R. Jose who holds that the consecration of a limb spreads to the whole animal, what if one consecrated a limb, e.g., a leg of a bird; does holiness spread to the whole bird or not?
- (28) In the cited verse, 'if it be a beast whereof men bring on offering (korban) unto the Lord' (Lev. XXVII, 9).
- (29) Like a turtle-dove, pigeon, etc.
- (30) But not for dedication as such.
- (31) Does the animal eventually become holy itself, and offered as a burnt-offering?
- (32) The dedication in value for one limb having spread to the dedication in value for the whole animal.
- (33) We go further and say, since the whole animal is dedicated for its value we extend it so that we consider it dedicated as such. For since the animal is unblemished and is fit for a burnt-offering, what is the difference whether we sell it and for the money purchase a burnt-offering or we use the animal directly as a burnt-offering?
- (34) Lit., 'since' i.e., we have to argue thus: 'Since' one limb is dedicated for its value, therefore we regard the whole animal as dedicated for its value, and 'since' the animal is dedicated for its value, we consider it also as dedicated as such.
- (35) That holiness as such certainly rested on it.
- (36) The reason why Raba mentioned a male is because we are dealing with a burnt-offering, which cannot be other than a male.
- (37) In order to purchase a burnt-offering for the money.
- (38) It became dedicated as such and cannot be sold, for since the animal itself is fit for a burnt-offering, we use it as a burnt-offering.

- (39) With reference to Raba's ruling.
- (40) And therefore there is one miggo. i.e., since it is dedicated for its value, we say that holiness spreads to the body itself.
- (41) With reference to Raba's inquiry.
- (42) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
- (43) There is no question about working it, for it is certainly forbidden, since work weakens the limb.
- (44) Deut. XV, 19.
- (45) So here too in the case of Abaye's inquiry, since there is hullin and dedication in the animal, the shearing should be permitted.
- (46) In connection with a firstling, in which a Jew and a non-Jew were partners.
- (47) The law of a firstling not applying in this instance.
- (48) With reference to the firstling.
- (49) Since the gentile has a share in the firstling.
- (50) Where he dedicates a limb of an animal.
- (51) There is no question about shearing, as the skin is not weakened thereby, whereas working the animal does weaken the skin. The inquiry can be even according to R. Jose, for although if one dedicated a foot the whole animal becomes holy, the reason may be because a foot can be offered up, unlike the skin (sh. Mek).
- (52) And here too there is a weakening of the skin and therefore work should be forbidden.
- (53) Whereas our inquiry here as regards the dedication of the skin is whether it is forbidden Scripturally, so as to incur the penalty of lashes.
- (54) Rabbinically, in the case of the embryo.
- (55) If one dedicated a pregnant animal without its embryo, when according to all the authorities concerned, the embryo is not holy.
- (56) Is the embryo forbidden because he slaughtered hullin in the Temple court. Tosaf. suggests that this inquiry can be solved from the Baraitha, supra 11a, where it says: 'If one slaughtered a sin-offering and found a four months' old embryo alive', implying that there is no prohibition here of slaughtering hullin in the Temple court. Sh. Mek. however, comments in this connection that there may be a difference between an embryo which has not completed its months of pregnancy, as in the case of the Baraitha, and an embryo which has completed its months of pregnancy, which is the case of our inquiry here.
- (57) Since he did not dedicate the embryo, for he dedicated the animal before its pregnancy and therefore the embryo remains hullin until its birth.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 12a

He [R. Joseph] said to him [Abaye]:¹ Can we apply here the text: If the place be too far for thee, then thou shalt kill?²

Abaye inquired of R. Joseph: If it [the mother] is hullin and its embryo is a peace-offering³ and one slaughtered it [the mother] without [the Temple court], does he incur the penalty for slaughtering dedicated animals without [the Temple court] or not? — He replied to him: Can we apply here the text: Even that they may bring them unto the Lord?⁴

Another version: He [R. Joseph] replied to him: [If the animal] is fit for the tent of meeting,⁵ one incurs a penalty for slaughtering it outside [the Temple court, but⁶ for an animal which is not fit for the tent of meeting,⁷ there is no penalty incurred for slaughtering without the Temple court].

MISHNAH. [ANYTHING WHICH HAS BECOME SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF TERUMAH THROUGH] AN ADMIXTURE CAN AFFECT A [SECOND] MIXTURE ONLY IN PROPORTION.⁸ [DOUGH] LEAVENED [THROUGH TERUMAH] CAN AFFECT [ANOTHER DOUGH] ONLY IN PROPORTION.⁹ DRAWN WATER CAN DISQUALIFY A MIKWEH¹⁰ ONLY IN PROPORTION. WATER OF PURIFICATION BECOMES RITUALLY FIT¹¹ ONLY WITH THE PUTTING OF ASHES [IN THE WATER].¹² A GRAVE AREA¹³ CANNOT CREATE A GRAVE AREA.¹⁴ [THE SEPARATION OF] TERUMAH CANNOT BE REPEATED.¹⁵ AN EXCHANGE CANNOT BE USED TO EFFECT ANOTHER EXCHANGE.¹⁶ THE OFFSPRING OF A DEDICATED ANIMAL CANNOT EFFECT AN EXCHANGE. R. JUDAH SAYS: THE OFFSPRING OF A DEDICATED ANIMAL CAN EFFECT AN EXCHANGE.¹⁷ THEY SAID TO HIM: A DEDICATED ANIMAL CAN EFFECT EXCHANGE, BUT NEITHER THE OFFSPRING OF A DEDICATED ANIMAL [NOR¹⁸ AN EXCHANGE] CAN EFFECT EXCHANGE.

GEMARA. Whose opinion is here¹⁹ represented? R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: It will not be that of R. Eliezer. For we have learnt: If a se'ah of terumah has fallen into less than a hundred se'ah of hullin,²⁰ [the admixture becoming forbidden to non-priests], and something fell from the mixture into another place [of hullin] , R. Eliezer says: The mixture is considered certain terumah,²¹ whereas the Sages say: The [first] mixture can affect the [second] only in proportion.²²

[DOUGH] LEAVENED [THROUGH TERUMAH] CAN AFFECT [OTHER DOUGH] ONLY IN PROPORTION. R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: The Mishnah will not be the opinion of R. Eliezer.²³ For we have learnt: If leaven of hullin and of terumah fell into dough and there was in neither a sufficient quantity to leaven [the dough] but both were capable of leavening when combined, R. Eliezer says: We go by the last [leaven],²⁴ whereas the Sages say: Whether the forbidden thing [terumah] fell first [into the dough] or last, a quantity capable of leavening is always required [in order that the dough should] become forbidden.

DRAWN WATER CAN DISQUALIFY A MIKWEH ONLY IN PROPORTION. Whose opinion is here represented? — R. Hiyya b. Aba reported in the name of R. Johanan: It is that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. For it has been taught:²⁵ R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: If a mikweh contains twenty-one se'ah of rain-water, one can bring²⁶ nineteen se'ah²⁷ and open a sluice [near it],²⁸

(1) One does not incur the penalty for slaughtering hullin in the Temple court.

(2) Deut. XII, 21; from which text we derive in Kid. 57b that it is forbidden to slaughter hullin in the Temple court, for we interpret the text as follows: You may kill hullin away from the Temple court, but you may not kill hullin near the Temple court. Here you cannot apply the text, for you cannot kill the animal except in the Temple court, for it is a peace-offering and therefore the embryo is not regarded as hullin in the Temple court.

(3) And according to the authority who says that dedication has effect on an embryo, is there excision on account of the embryo, its mother having been slaughtered without the Temple court?

(4) Lev. XVII, 5, stated in connection with the prohibition of bringing dedications without the Temple court. For one is guilty of bringing dedications without the Temple court only with regard to an animal fit for an offering, but not an embryo which is not fit at present for an offering.

(5) And one offers it without the Temple court.

(6) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(7) And here it is hullin and can only be brought outside the tent of meeting. Therefore the text is not applicable.

(8) If, for example, a se'ah of terumah fell into a se'ah of hullin so that the mixture became subject to terumah and if subsequently one se'ah of this mixture fell into hullin, the second mixture is subject to the law of terumah only in proportion of the terumah contained in the first mixture.

(9) If, for example, terumah the size of an egg has leavened hullin also the size of an egg and then there fell from the mixture the size of an egg into some other dough, if half an egg is capable of leavening the dough, then the latter is forbidden, but if not, it is permitted, for we say that in the egg that fell into the dough there was only half an egg of terumah.

(10) Ritual bath.

(11) Lit., 'become waters of purification'.

(12) Which was there already, but if he first put the ashes in the vessel and then the water, the water is disqualified because, when he put in the ashes, there was no water in the vessel.

(13) Beth ha-Peras, a field in which a grave has been ploughed up; v. Keth. (Sonc. ed.) p. 154, n. 6.

(14) If the plough passes over and beyond it.

(15) I.e., once terumah has been separated from the heap, it cannot be separated again. Lit., 'there is no terumah after terumah'.

(16) A substitute which is sacred cannot itself be exchanged for another animal, so as to cause holiness to the latter.

(17) One can exchange an animal for the offspring and the substitute becomes holy.

(18) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(19) In the Mishnah which says that anything which has become subject to the law of terumah etc.

(20) For if it fell into one hundred se'ah of hullin, the terumah would be neutralized.

(21) So that if a se'ah from the admixture fell into other hullin there must be a hundred se'ah beside it in order to neutralize the terumah.

(22) We require a hundred times the proportion of terumah in the se'ah which fell into the second mixture and not more. If e.g., in the beginning there fell one se'ah of terumah into twenty-four se'ah of hullin, each se'ah of the mixture contains one twenty-fourth of terumah, i.e., one log. Now if a se'ah of this mixture fell into other hullin, seventy-seven log of hullin combine with the twenty-three log of hullin contained in the se'ah which fell in order to neutralize the terumah (Rashi).

(23) For according to R. Eliezer there is no need that the forbidden thing should be capable of leavening, and the forbidden thing, i.e., terumah, together with what is permissible, i.e., hullin, both combine in order to render the dough forbidden.

(24) Which causes the leavening, and if the forbidden thing fell last, the admixture is prohibited. And according to our Mishnah too, although from the first dough leavened exclusively by terumah, there fell into the second dough only a sufficient quantity to leaven the second dough, and hence the greater part of the leaven came from hullin, the second dough is still forbidden, because R. Eliezer holds that the product of combined causes i.e., of terumah and hullin joined together is forbidden (Rashi). Rashi adds that even if the terumah fell first but it was not removed, and both the terumah and the hullin leavened the dough, the latter is forbidden, because it is a product of combined causes. Tosaf. however, explains that the case dealt with by the Mishnah is where the leaven of terumah the size of an olive and hullin the size of an olive fell separately into a dough of hullin and leavened the latter, there being neither in the hullin by itself nor in the terumah by itself a sufficient quantity to leaven.

(25) Tosef. Mik. IV.

(26) Lit., 'fill with the shoulder'.

(27) Of drawn water to make up the minimum required of forty se'ah.

(28) Since to pour from a bucket directly into a mikweh which contains less than forty se'ah of rain water would disqualify the water, even if only three log, but he makes a cavity into which he pours water from the bucket and the water flows from this cavity into the mikweh.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 12b

and [the collected waters] are clean ritually,¹ for collected drawn waters are rendered clean by the greater part [in the mikweh being rain-water] and by being conducted through a channel.² We can infer from this that according to the opinion of the Rabbis [drawn waters are not rendered clean] by the greater part [of rain-water] and by being conducted through a channel.³ Then the ruling which when Rabin came he reported in the name of R. Johanan: Collected water which has been drawn entirely through a channel is ritually clean, will represent neither the opinion of the Rabbis nor that of R. Eliezer? — Rather said R. Papa: [The words IN PROPORTION] mean according to the number of the vessels, and it [the Mishnah] is the opinion of Joseph b. Honi. For it has been taught: If three⁴ log of collected water fell into a mikweh,⁵ if [the waters] came from two or three vessels or even from four or five vessels, they disqualify the mikweh. Joseph b. Honi says: If the waters came from two or three vessels,⁶ they disqualify the mikweh, but if from four or five vessels,⁷ they do not disqualify the mikweh.

THE WATERS OF PURIFICATION BECOME RITUALLY FIT etc. Whose opinion is here represented? — R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: It is not the opinion of R. Simeon.⁸ For it has been taught: If one puts the ashes [into the vessel] first before the water, it [the water of purification] is disqualified, whereas R. Simeon says: It is fit. What is the reason of R. Simeon? — Since it is written: And for the unclean they shall take the ashes ['afar] of the burning of the purification from sin [and the running water shall be put thereto].⁹ And it has been taught: R. Simeon says, Now is it 'afar [dust]?¹⁰ Is it not efer [ashes]?¹¹ The text departs from the natural expression¹² in the matter in order to permit of a gezerah shawah.¹³ We read here 'afar¹⁴ and we read there 'afar.¹⁵ Just as there¹⁶ the 'afar is placed upon the water, so here¹⁷ also the 'afar is placed upon the water. And just as here¹⁸ if the dust¹⁹ is placed in the vessel before the water the ritual is fit, so there²⁰ if he placed the dust before the water, it [the water] is ritually fit.²¹ And whence do we derive this [in connection with waters of purification]?²² — There are two Scriptural texts. It first says: And [running water] shall be put thereto,²³ from which we see that ashes are put first in the vessel, and then the text continues: Running water . . . in a vessel.²⁴ How [do we reconcile these texts]? If he wishes [he puts] 'afar²⁵ at the bottom [of the vessel],²⁶ and if he wishes, he puts 'afar on top [of the water].²⁷ And what is the reason of our Tanna?²⁸ — He can answer you: The latter part of the verse²⁹ is to be strictly interpreted,³⁰ and [the text]: 'And [running water] shall be put thereto teaches us that one must mix [the ashes and the water together].³¹ But why do you see fit to say that the latter part of the verse is to be strictly interpreted? perhaps the first part of the text is to be strictly interpreted,³² [and the text, 'in a vessel' teaches us that³³ the waters must be fresh in the vessel]?³⁴ — You cannot interpret the text in this way: Just as we find with regard to all other cases³⁵ that which makes [the water] ritually fit³⁶ is placed on top,³⁷ so here³⁸ that which makes [the water of purification] ritually fit is put on top.³⁹

A GRAVE AREA CANNOT CREATE A GRAVE AREA etc. Our Mishnah will not represent the opinion of R. Eliezer. For we have learnt: R. Eliezer says: A grave area creates a grave area,⁴⁰ [whereas⁴¹ the Sages say: A grave area does not create a grave area].⁴² According to the Rabbis, up to how much?⁴³ — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of Resh Lakish who reported in the name of R. Simeon b. Abba:

- (1) Fit to immerse therein.
 - (2) This is therefore what the Mishnah means by the expression in this connection of ONLY IN PROPORTION, since collected drawn water does not disqualify a mikweh when it is conducted through a channel, unless there is twenty se'ah of this in the mikweh.
 - (3) Since you say that the Mishnah is the view of R. Eliezer and not that of the Rabbis, and since the Mishnah gives a lenient ruling in this connection for the very language DRAWN WATER ONLY IN PROPORTION proves that the object of the Mishnah is to be lenient in the matter — we can conclude that the Rabbis, in differing with R. Eliezer, adopt a stricter view.
 - (4) Tosef. Mik. III.
 - (5) Not by being conducted through a channel.
 - (6) So that a whole log of drawn water fell at once into the mikweh.
 - (7) So that there was no whole log of drawn water which fell at once into the mikweh.
 - (8) For according to R. Simeon, if one puts the ashes first into the vessel before the water, the water is ritually permitted.
 - (9) Num. XIX, 17. In connection with the waters of purification.
 - (10) Which is mixed with the waters of purification.
 - (11) rpt .
 - (12) I.e., the word 'ashes'.
 - (13) An analogy established on the basis of verbal congruities in the text, v. Glos. s.v.
 - (14) With reference to the waters of purification.
 - (15) With reference to the waters of jealousy given to a woman suspected of faithlessness.
 - (16) In connection with the waters of jealousy, since Scripture says: And of the dust . . . and put it into water (Num. V, 17).
 - (17) With reference to the waters of purification. This procedure is at the outset the proper performance of the ritual.
 - (18) In connection with the waters of purification.
 - (19) Really the ashes.
 - (20) With reference to the waters of jealousy.
 - (21) we thus see that according to the opinion of R. Simeon in connection with the waters of purification, if one puts first the ashes into the vessel before the water, the water is ritually fit.
 - (22) That the putting of ashes before the water into the vessel does not disqualify the water.
 - (23) Ibid. XIX, 17. Implying that the ashes are already in the vessel and the water was then added.
 - (24) Implying that the water was poured directly into the vessel and not on the ashes, and that if the ashes were put first in the vessel prior to the water, the water would not be ritually fit for the purpose.
 - (25) The word here really means 'ashes'.
 - (26) And then the water is poured on the ashes.
 - (27) It is permissible either way.
 - (28) I.e., the first Tanna who disputes with R. Simeon. This Tanna holds that if one should put the ashes first and then the water into the vessel, the water is not ritually fit. Now what may be his reason?

(29) 'Running water . . . in a vessel'.

(30) As implying that the water must be put direct into the vessel, and if he put the ashes first, then the water does not cleanse ritually.

(31) The object of the text is not to teach us that if he first put ashes in the vessel and then the water, the water cleanses, but to warn us that after putting the ashes in the water he must mix them well with his finger so that the water below may come on top.

(32) The text: 'And (running water) shall be put thereto', thus implying that the ashes were put first in the vessel.

(33) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(34) That he draws the water in the vessel direct and fresh from a fountain and the water is not poured into it from another vessel.

(35) E.g., with reference to the waters of jealousy.

(36) I.e., the ashes.

(37) For all the authorities concerned agree that it is the proper performance of the ritual to put the water first into the vessel.

(38) In connection with the waters of purification.

(39) Therefore inevitably the latter part of the text 'running water in a vessel' is interpreted in the exact sense, and the first part of the text refers to the need for effective mixing of the water and the ashes.

(40) All the four fields surrounding a grave area if ploughed become unclean, for the dust of the grave area causes uncleanness (Rashi). Tosaf, however, explains R. Eliezer's teaching as follows: If one ploughs a grave area and beyond it to another field, the latter becomes a grave area. If this second field in turn was ploughed and beyond it, the latter field becomes a grave area. Similarly from the third to the fourth, all making each other a grave area.

(41) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(42) Oh. VII, 2.

(43) According to the Sages, how far does uncleanness extend to other fields.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 13a

Three fields¹ and two furrows' length.² How much is a furrow's length? A hundred cubits, as it has been taught:³ He who ploughs a grave creates a beth ha-peras⁴ the length of a furrow. And how much is the length of a furrow? A hundred cubits.

[THE SEPARATION OF] TERUMAH CANNOT BE REPEATED etc. Our Mishnah is the opinion of R. Akiba. For we have learnt: If partners separated terumah one after the other, R. Eliezer says: The terumah of both of them is valid;⁵ whereas R. Akiba says: The terumah of both of them is not valid.⁶ The Sages however say: If the first of the partners separated terumah according to the right quantity,⁷ then the terumah of the second one is not valid. But if the first one did not separate terumah according to the right quantity,⁸ then the terumah of the second [partner] is valid.⁹

AN EXCHANGE CANNOT BE USED TO EFFECT ANOTHER EXCHANGE etc. What is the reason? Since Scripture says: 'And the exchange thereof',¹⁰ implying, but not the exchange of an exchange.

THE OFFSPRING OF A DEDICATED ANIMAL CANNOT EFFECT AN EXCHANGE.

Since Scripture says: 'It'¹⁰ implying, it can effect exchange but not the offspring of a dedicated animal.

R. JUDAH SAYS: THE OFFSPRING OF A DEDICATED ANIMAL EFFECTS AN EXCHANGE. For Scripture says: Shall be,¹⁰ thus including the offspring of a dedicated animal. And the Rabbis?¹¹ [The object of the text is] to include [an exchange] in error as [possessing the same validity as a] deliberate [exchange].¹²

MISHNAH. BIRDS AND MEAL-OFFERINGS DO NOT EFFECT EXCHANGE,¹³ SINCE [THE LAW OF] EXCHANGE ONLY APPLIES TO AN ANIMAL.¹⁴ A CONGREGATION OR PARTNERS CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE, SINCE IT SAYS: HE SHALL NOT ALTER IT NOR CHANGE IT,¹⁵ THUS IMPLYING¹⁶ THAT AN INDIVIDUAL CAN EFFECT EXCHANGE BUT A CONGREGATION OR PARTNERS CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE. ONE CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE WITH [OBJECTS]¹⁷ DEDICATED FOR TEMPLE REPAIRS.¹⁸ SAID R. SIMEON:¹⁹ NOW IS NOT TITHE²⁰ [ALREADY] IMPLIED?²¹ FOR WHAT PURPOSE THEN IS TITHE SPECIALLY MENTIONED?²² IT IS IN ORDER TO MAKE A COMPARISON WITH IT AND TO TEACH US THAT JUST AS TITHE IS A PRIVATE OFFERING, [SO ALL EXCHANGE OF DEDICATIONS MUST BE A PRIVATE OFFERING] THUS EXCLUDING CONGREGATIONAL OFFERINGS.²³ AND JUST AS TITHE IS A DEDICATION FOR THE ALTAR, [SO EXCHANGES CAN BE EFFECTED ONLY WITH DEDICATIONS FOR THE ALTAR] THUS EXCLUDING OFFERINGS DEDICATED FOR TEMPLE REPAIRS.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis have taught: One might think that one can effect exchange with dedications for Temple repairs? The text however says: Korban²⁴ [offering] implying that [exchange only applies] to what is called korban, thus excluding dedications for Temple repairs which are not called korban. And are not [dedications for Temple repairs called korban]? Has it not been taught:²⁵ If²⁶ you interpret the word korban, I can understand it as including even dedications for Temple repairs²⁷ which are called korban, since it says: And we have brought the Lord's offering etc.²⁸ The text however states: And bringeth it not unto the door of the tent of meeting.²⁹ [We therefore say as follows:] In respect of anything which comes to the door of the tent of meeting, one is guilty [of the transgression] of slaughtering dedicated animals without the Temple court, but in respect of anything which does not come to the door of the tent of meeting, one is not guilty [of the transgression] of slaughtering dedicated animals without the Temple court.³⁰ Consequently we see that [dedications for Temple repairs], are called korban!³¹ — Said R. Hanina: This offers no difficulty. This³² is the opinion of R. Simeon and that³³ is the opinion of the [Rabbis].³⁴ According to R. Simeon, dedications for Temple repairs are called korban and according to the Rabbis they are not called korban. And are not [dedications for Temple repairs called it korban]? Surely it is written: And we have brought the Lord's korban [offering]?³⁵ — [Dedications for Temple repairs] are called the Lord's offering, but they are not called an offering for the Lord.³⁶

Our Rabbis have taught: He shall not search whether it be good or bad.³⁷ Now why is this mentioned?³⁸ Has not Scripture already said: He shall not alter it nor change it, a good for a bad or a bad for a good, etc.³⁹ Because it says: 'He shall not alter it nor change it', implying either a private offering or a congregational offering, either a dedication for the altar or a dedication for Temple repairs, and [that which is brought obligatorily].⁴⁰ [In order to avoid this interpretation] Scripture says: 'He shall not search'.⁴¹ Said R. Simeon: Now was not tithe implied? And for what purpose was tithe specially mentioned? In order to teach you that just as tithe⁴² is a private offering, a dedication for the altar, something which comes obligatorily and something which does not come through a partnership, so all [animals exchanged] must be a private offering, a dedication for the altar, something which comes obligatorily

- (1) The field actually containing the grave which was ploughed and the field on the one side of the grave area and on the other side, i.e., either east and west or north and south, as it is not customary to plough on all the four sides of a field but only east and west or north and south.
 - (2) I.e., the field containing the grave is entirely unclean but the other two fields, either on the east and west or north and south are only unclean to the extent of two furrows' length. For the Rabbis have estimated that this is the distance the plough in the field is capable of moving the bones into another field.
 - (3) Tosef. Oh. XVII.
 - (4) A grave area.
 - (5) For both have a share in it. Lit., 'the terumah of both is terumah'.
 - (6) Even of the first one, for since the second proceeded to tithe again, he shows thereby that he was not satisfied with the tithing of his partner. Therefore the tithing of the first partner was not with the consent and approval of the second partner. The same applies to the tithing of the second.
 - (7) One in fifty.
 - (8) E.g., if he was niggardly in his tithing, giving less than one in fifty, i.e., one in sixty.
 - (9) Whereas according to R. Akiba in either case the terumah is not valid, and our Mishnah too, as it does not specify whether the terumah was given generously by the first partner or otherwise, must be the view of R. Akiba.
 - (10) Lev. XXVII, 10.
 - (11) What will they do with the text 'shall be'?
 - (12) If one intends to effect an exchange for a black animal and he exchanged the dedicated animal in error for a white one, the exchange is valid, unlike the case of dedication, where if one intended to dedicate a black animal and he dedicated in error a white one, the dedication is not valid.
 - (13) One cannot make an exchange for a dedicated bird or meal-offering.
 - (14) Since Scripture says: And if he shall at all exchange beast for beast.
 - (15) Ibid.
 - (16) The word 'he' etc.
 - (17) Supra 31a. Another version is: Dedications for Temple repairs.
 - (18) Since in connection with 'exchange' Scripture says korban ('offering') and dedications for Temple repairs are not described as korban.
 - (19) R. Simeon holds that a dedication for Temple repairs is called korban and therefore there is need for a text to exclude dedications for Temple repairs from the law of exchange.
 - (20) Animals tithed.
 - (21) In the word 'beast' used in connection with the law of exchange.
 - (22) As being capable of effecting exchange.
 - (23) Partners are also excluded, since partners are exempt from the law of tithing animals.
 - (24) And if it be a beast whereof men bring an offering (korban), Lev. XXVII, 9.
 - (25) Supra 6b.
 - (26) In connection with slaughtering and offering without the Temple court, the word korban is expounded as meaning that there is no penalty of excision incurred for slaughtering hullin in the Temple court. The passage then continues: If you etc.

(27) Usually blemished animals unfit for the altar, which yet are described as korban.

(28) Num. XXXI, 50.

(29) Lev. XVII, 4.

(30) And dedications for Temple repairs are usually such animals which are unfit for the door of the tent of meeting.

(31) Unlike the view in the Mishnah.

(32) The Baraitha just quoted.

(33) The Mishnah.

(34) Another version has here the name of Rabbi, who will hold that the name of korban does not apply to dedications for Temple repairs. Our Mishnah will therefore be entirely the opinion of R. Simeon and the reason why dedications for Temple repairs do not effect exchange will not be because of the word korban but as R. Simeon explains subsequently in the Mishnah.

(35) Num. XXXI, 50. We see therefore that the word korban applies also to objects other than dedications for the altar.

(36) This would have implied an offering in the ordinary sense, i.e., a sacrifice for the altar.

(37) Lev: XXVII, 33.

(38) The passage refers to animal tithe.

(39) Lev. XXVII, 10, in connection with the law of exchange, thus implying that all dedications including animal tithe effect exchange.

(40) All these effect exchange. Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(41) The reason therefore why the text again mentions the law of exchange in connection with animal tithe is in order to compare all other exchanges to animal tithe, as R. Simeon explains.

(42) For which exchange is effected.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 13b

and something which does not come through a partnership.¹ Rabbi says: And for what purpose now is tithe specially mentioned?² In order to infer the cases of [one which became tithe through] a change of name³ and the exchange of actual tithe.⁴ [And further] to teach you that that which becomes tithe through a change of name is offered up,⁵ whereas the exchange of actual tithe is not offered up;⁶ that which becomes tithe through a change of name is redeemed,⁷ whereas the exchange of actual tithe is not redeemed;⁸ an exchange of actual tithe has effect both on what is fit [unblemished], and what is not fit [blemished],⁹ whereas a change of name [of tithe] has effect only on what is fit.¹⁰ The question was asked:¹¹ Because the Divine Law includes the case of that which became tithe through a change of name, should it therefore be inferior [in holiness]?¹² — Yes, for we say what [the Law] has included is included, but what it has not included, is not included. And whence do you derive this?¹³ — Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: Because it¹⁴ is made the subject of a fresh statement, and therefore we do not go beyond the anomalous feature.¹⁵

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to Raba: According to R. Simeon who says: [Exchange is effected with] something which comes obligatorily, is it only an obligatory burnt-offering that can effect exchange but not a freewill burnt-offering? — He answered him: A freewill burnt-offering also; since he took upon himself [to offer it up],¹⁶ it can effect exchange, and [R. Simeon's teaching]¹⁷ is necessary only for the case of a burnt-offering which comes from surpluses [of sacrificial appropriations].¹⁸ Now what is his view? If he holds with the authority who says that the surpluses go for freewill gifts of the congregation, then actually exchange cannot be effected, since a congregation cannot effect exchange! — Then R. Simeon will hold with the authority who says that the surpluses go for freewill gifts of individuals.¹⁹ Now from whom have we heard this opinion? From R. Eliezer.²⁰ But have we not heard him explicitly [state] that exchange is effected?²¹ For it has been taught: A burnt-offering which came from the surpluses can effect exchange. This is the teaching of R. Eliezer! — R. Simeon agrees with him on one point and differs from him on another. [He²² agrees with him on one point, that surpluses are applied to gifts for individuals],²³ and differs from him on another point, for R. Eliezer holds: A burnt-offering brought from surpluses can effect exchange, whereas R. Simeon holds it cannot effect exchange. If so,²⁴ as regards the inquiry of R. Abin:²⁵ If he set apart a guilt-offering with which to obtain atonement and made an exchange for it, and [the²⁶ first animal then became blemished and he redeemed it for another which became lost], and he obtained atonement through another guilt-offering, and the lost animal was then found and was [automatically] transformed into a burnt-offering, what is the ruling as regards making an exchange with it [the burnt-offering]? Whose opinion does this inquiry presuppose? It can hardly be that of R. Simeon, for you say that R. Simeon holds that a burnt-offering which comes from surpluses cannot effect exchange! — R. Abin's inquiry is thus: If you can find a Tanna who holds R. Simeon's opinion who says that one cannot exchange repeatedly and holds also R. Eliezer's opinion who says that a burnt-offering which comes from the surpluses can effect exchange, what of exchanging it again? With reference to two bodies [different animals] and one kind of holiness,²⁷ what is the ruling? And if you adopt the opinion that one kind of holiness cannot²⁸ [effect exchange again], what is the ruling in the case of two kinds of holiness and one body?²⁹ Let this question remain.³⁰

MISHNAH

- (1) Since Scripture says 'shall be to thee', thus excluding partners.
 - (2) Subject to the law of exchange, since all dedications are included in the law of exchange. For Rabbi holds that for declaring a private offering subject to the law of exchange there is no need for a special mention of tithe, since Scripture says, 'he shall etc.' in the singular. That the dedication must be one for the altar is also inferred from the word korban mentioned in connection with the law of exchange. We therefore see that Rabbi holds that dedications for the Temple repairs are not called korban. Also as regards R. Simeon's exception from the law of exchange of the case of a burnt-offering brought from the surpluses of sacrificial appropriations because dedications must be something which come obligatorily, Rabbi will maintain that surpluses can go for communal offerings. The ruling also concerning partners and congregations not being able to effect exchange can be inferred from the text, He shall not alter, etc., since it is couched in the singular number (Rashi).
 - (3) Where e.g., one called the tenth animal the ninth and the eleventh the tenth, the law being that both are holy and are offered up as peace-offerings. We derive this from the text: 'And all the tithe'. The animal is therefore not actually tithe but has been named tithe in error.
 - (4) Where one put a hullin alongside tithe and said that the first shall be exchanged for the latter, the exchange in this case having effect. There is need for the special mention of tithe, for otherwise I might have said that there is no exchange in this case, as the rendering of an animal tithe by a change of name is itself an anomaly and therefore one cannot go beyond it (Rashi).

(5) V. Bek. 61a.

(6) V. supra 5b.

(7) For it is a peace-offering and a peace-offering is redeemed when blemished.

(8) Since Scripture says: 'Then both it and the change thereof shall be holy, it shall not be redeemed'.

(9) Like tithe which has effect on blemished animals so far as to restrict the killing of them in the market place and weighing the flesh by the pound.

(10) To receive holiness, like other dedications which do not receive holiness where the blemish was prior to the dedication.

(11) Lit., 'they said'.

(12) Why then does not holiness have effect on a blemished animal in this connection? There is all the more reason that the case of tithe through change of name should be more strict and take effect even when the animal is blemished.

(13) That we do not include anything beyond what the Torah actually includes.

(14) The tithe through change of name.

(15) And therefore we do not go any further to include any other case.

(16) Although he said 'Let this, etc.'.

(17) That exchange must be something which comes obligatorily.

(18) Where e.g., one separated money for a sin-offering or a guilt-offering and some of it was left over and with this money we purchased a burnt-offering.

(19) The owners themselves bring a burnt-offering as a gift but not to carry out an obligation.

(20) Who holds that surpluses are applied to gifts for individuals.

(21) What case therefore does R. Simeon exclude in respect of the law of exchange?

(22) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(23) The text therefore is required to exclude this case from the law of exchange.

(24) That according to R. Simeon a burnt-offering coming from surpluses cannot effect exchange.

(25) V. supra 9a and notes.

(26) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(27) I.e., if one separated a guilt-offering in order to obtain atonement and exchanged it and then it became blemished and was redeemed for another. The second animal, although another body, possesses the same kind of holiness as the first, i.e., the holiness of a guilt-offering.

(28) Inserted with Sh. Mek.

(29) I.e., if one were atoned for through another guilt-offering and the first lost guilt-offering was then found and transformed into a burnt-offering. Thus here there are two kinds of holiness with the same body.

(30) hgch, is the term of the Jerusalem Talmud and has the same meaning as ueh, in the Babylonian Talmud.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 14a

. THERE ARE [LAWS RELATING] TO THE SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL WHICH DO NOT APPLY TO CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES AND [LAWS RELATING] TO CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES WHICH DO NOT APPLY TO THE SACRIFICES OF INDIVIDUALS. FOR SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL CAN EFFECT EXCHANGE WHEREAS CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE;

SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL CAN BE BOTH MALES AND FEMALES, WHEREAS CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES CAN BE ONLY MALES;¹ RESPONSIBILITY REMAINS² FOR THE SACRIFICES OF INDIVIDUALS³ AND⁴ THEIR DRINK-OFFERINGS, WHEREAS RESPONSIBILITY DOES NOT REMAIN FOR CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES NOR FOR THEIR DRINK-OFFERINGS, ALTHOUGH RESPONSIBILITY REMAINS FOR THEIR DRINK-OFFERINGS WHEN THE SACRIFICE IS OFFERED UP.⁵ THERE ARE [LAWS RELATING] TO CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES WHICH DO NOT APPLY TO THE SACRIFICES OF INDIVIDUALS, FOR CONGREGATIONAL SACRIFICES SUPERSEDE THE SABBATH AND [THE LAWS] OF RITUAL UNCLEANNESS⁶ WHEREAS SACRIFICES OF INDIVIDUALS DO NOT SUPERSEDE EITHER THE SABBATH OR [THE LAWS] OF RITUAL UNCLEANNESS. SAID R. MEIR: BUT ARE THERE NOT THE CASES OF THE OFFERING OF THE BAKED CAKES OF A HIGH PRIEST⁷ AND THE BULLOCK FOR THE DAY OF ATONEMENT⁸ WHICH ARE SACRIFICES OF INDIVIDUALS AND YET SUPERSEDE THE SABBATH AND [THE LAWS] OF RITUAL UNCLEANNESS? THE MATTER THEREFORE DEPENDS ON [WHETHER] THE TIME [FOR THE OFFERING UP] IS FIXED.⁹

GEMARA. SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL CAN EFFECT EXCHANGE etc. But is this a general rule? Is there not the case of birds which are a sacrifice of an individual and yet they do not effect exchange? — [The Mishnah]¹⁰ speaks only of animals. But is there not the case of the offspring of a dedicated animal which is a sacrifice of an individual and yet does not effect exchange? — This view represents the opinion of R. Judah who says: The offspring of a dedicated animal effects exchange. But is there not the case of a substitute itself which is a sacrifice of an individual and a substitute cannot effect an exchange?¹¹ — [The Mishnah] only refers to the principal sacrifice.¹² And now that you have arrived at this explanation,¹³ you can even say that [the Mishnah] will be in agreement with the opinion of the Rabbis,¹⁴ for [the Mishnah] only refers to the principal sacrifice.¹⁵

SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL CAN BE BOTH MALES AND FEMALES. But is this a general rule?¹⁶ Is there not the case of a burnt-offering which is a sacrifice of an individual and can only be a male and not a female? — There is the case of the burnt-offering of a bird,¹⁷ for it has been taught: Unblemished condition and male sex [for purposes of sacrifice] are required only of cattle but unblemished condition and male sex are not required of birds. But is there not the case of a sin-offering which is a sacrifice of an individual and is a female-and not a male? — There is the goat offered by a prince, which is a male. But is there not the case of a guilt-offering which is a sacrifice of an individual and is a male and not a female?¹⁸ — We¹⁹ mean [in the Mishnah]²⁰ a sacrifice which can be brought equally by an individual and a congregation,²¹ whereas a guilt-offering can be brought only by an individual but not by a congregation. And if you prefer [another solution] I may say: Does the Mishnah say [there are laws which relate] to all sacrifices? It says [there are laws which relate] to sacrifices.²² And what are these? peace-offerings; and [it tells us] that if one wishes to bring a female [animal] one may do so and if one wishes to bring a male [animal] one may do so.

RESPONSIBILITY REMAINS FOR SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL etc. Whence is this proved?²³ — For our Rabbis have taught: [Scripture says:] Everything upon his day.²⁴ this teaches us that the additional offerings may be [offered up] all day.²⁵ The text, ‘upon his day’ teaches us that if the day passed and he did not offer them, he is not responsible for them.²⁶ One might think that one is not responsible for their drink-offerings although he offered up the sacrifice? The text, however, states: And their meal-offering and their drink-offerings,²⁷ [their meal-offerings and drink-offerings]²⁸ even by night and their meal-offerings and drink-offerings even on the morrow.²⁹ Resh Lakish says: [We derive this] from here: Scripture says, Beside the Sabbaths of the Lord.³⁰ And both [texts]³¹ are necessary. For if the Divine Law had Only written: ‘Besides the Sabbaths of the Lord’, I might have thought that the drink-offerings may be only offered by day³² but not by night. Therefore Scripture says: ‘And their meal-offering and their drink-offerings’ — And if the Divine Law had written only. ‘Their meal-offering and their drink-offerings’ and had not written. ‘Besides the Sabbaths of the Lord’, I might have thought that the drink-offerings are only offered by night³³ and not by day.³⁴ But wherein lies the difference?³⁵ — Because in respect of dedication, the night follows the day.³⁶ Therefore [both texts] are necessary. But are drink-offerings offered by night? Surely it has been taught: I can only infer from the text³⁷ that such things as it is customary to offer up by night, e.g., limbs, fat-pieces, are [brought to the altar, burnt]³⁸ with the setting of the sun and consumed all through the night. Things, however, which it is customary to offer by day, e.g., the fistful of the meal-offering, frankincense and drink-offerings, whence do I know that he may bring them to the altar and burn them with the setting of the sun. ‘With the setting of the sun’ say you? Did you not just say things which it is customary to offer by day?³⁹ — Say therefore: Before the setting of the sun. — Whence do we derive that these can be consumed all through the night? The text states: This is the law of the burnt-offering;⁴⁰ this implies something additional.⁴¹ Now in any case the above passage mentions ‘the drink-offerings’ as something which is offered by day?⁴² — Said Rami b. Hama: There is no difficulty; here,⁴³ the reference is to dedication,⁴⁴ and there,⁴⁵ to offering.⁴⁶ Said Raba to him: If [the drink-offerings] indeed can become dedicated⁴⁷ [by night] they can be offered [by night]. For it has been taught: ‘This is the general rule: Whatsoever is offered by day is rendered holy only by day; whatsoever is offered by night is rendered holy only by night; whatsoever is offered both by day and night is rendered holy by day and night’! Rather said R. Joseph: Delete ‘drink-offerings’ [from the Baraitha above].⁴⁸ When R. Dimi went up [from Babylon to Palestine] he found R. Jeremiah sitting and lecturing in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: Whence do we deduce that drink-offerings which accompany a sacrifice⁴⁹ can only be offered by day? The text states: And for your drink-offerings and for your peace-offerings;⁵⁰ and we say: Just as peace-offerings [are offered] by day, so drink-offerings [are offered] by day. He [R. Dimi] said: If I could have found [a messenger]⁵¹ I would have written a letter and sent it to R. Joseph [in Babylon]

(1) For the majority of such sacrifices are burnt-offerings and a burnt-offering must be a male animal. A congregation also do not bring peace-offerings, save lambs on Pentecost and these are males. Also their sin-offerings are he-goats.

(2) Lit., ‘one is responsible’, for the whole time until they are offered.

(3) Some of these offerings have a fixed time for their sacrifice and even if their time is passed the offering is not void, e.g., the sacrifice of a leper after the eighth day from his cleanliness, or that of a woman after childbirth. In the case, however, of congregational sacrifices which have appointed times, if their time has passed the sacrifices are void.

(4) Lit., ‘and one is responsible for’.

- (5) If the sacrifice was offered up at the correct time and the drink-offerings did not accompany the sacrifice, they can be brought within a period of ten days.
- (6) They can be brought even in a state of ritual uncleanness.
- (7) V. Lev. VI, 13. These have the law of the daily sacrifice which supersedes the Sabbath and ritual uncleanness; v. Men. 50b.
- (8) Brought by Aaron, v. Lev. XVI, 3.
- (9) The superseding of the Sabbath and ritual uncleanness is determined not by whether a sacrifice is of an individual or congregation, but whether there exists a set time for the particular sacrifice.
- (10) which states that a sacrifice of an individual effects exchange.
- (11) One cannot say: 'Let that animal be in place of this exchange' in order to acquire holiness.
- (12) The first animal dedicated and not to one consecrated as a result of this dedication.
- (13) That the Mishnah refers to the principal sacrifice.
- (14) Who differ from R. Judah and hold that the offspring of a dedicated animal cannot effect exchange.
- (15) And the offspring of a dedication, not being the principal dedication, is not included in the rule mentioned in the Mishnah.
- (16) For the moment the Mishnah's statement is understood as meaning that all sacrifices of individuals can be males as well as females.
- (17) We have here an example of a burnt-offering which can even be a female.
- (18) For in connection with it Scripture says a sheep or a ram but not a ewe.
- (19) V. Sh. Mek.
- (20) By the statement SACRIFICES OF AN INDIVIDUAL CAN BE BOTH MALES AND FEMALES.
- (21) Then we say that such a type of sacrifice which can be brought by the individual as well as by the congregation; when however an individual brings it, it can come both from males and females.
- (22) Implying that there are some sacrifices which do come from females and males.
- (23) That there is no compensation for the bringing of congregational sacrifices, should there be a postponement for some reason.
- (24) Lev. XXIII, 37. The text refers to the additional offerings of the festivals.
- (25) Provided that they are offered up before the daily sacrifice of the evening.
- (26) There is no compensation.
- (27) Num. XXIX, 18.
- (28) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
- (29) If he offered up the sacrifice in its time, he can bring the drink-offerings within a period of ten days, because Scripture uses the plural 'their drink-offerings', thus intimating that drink-offerings may be offered at other times as well (R. Gershom).
- (30) Lev. XXIII, 38. Scripture says: To offer an offering made by fire, a burnt-offering and a meal-offering, a sacrifice and drink-offerings everything upon his day, 'and this is followed by the words, Beside the Sabbaths etc. And we adopt here the interpretation based on textual proximity as follows: Drink-offerings etc. everything upon his day, besides etc., i.e., besides those Sabbaths followed by a Festival where it was forgotten to offer the drink-offerings on the Sabbath, for then they can be offered on the following day on the Festival.
- (31) Besides the Sabbaths of the Lord and Their meal-offering and their drink-offerings.
- (32) Since Scripture says: Everything upon his day followed by the text, Besides the Sabbaths of the Lord, i.e., that the drink-offerings of the Sabbath can be offered up on the following day on the Festival.
- (33) But the drink-offerings of the day may be brought at night.
- (34) Which follows the night, i.e., the morrow.
- (35) Why should we have said that Scripture implies that the drink-offering can only be brought by night and not on the following day, seeing that Scripture makes no distinction?

(36) For Scripture says: Shall be eaten on the same day that it is offered. He shall not leave any of it until the morning (Lev. VII, 15). We therefore see that all the night is still called 'day' in respect of dedication.

(37) Viz., It is the burnt-offering because of the burning upon the altar all the night, (Lev. VI, 2), from which we infer one can place it on the altar with the setting of the sun and it goes on burning all the night.

(38) Inserted with Sk. Mek.

(39) How then can we speak of them as being offered with the setting of the sun?

(40) Lev. VI, 2.

(41) Since Scripture in this text makes no distinction and includes all things which go up on the altar to be burnt.

(42) Unlike what is stated in the text that drink-offerings are offered even by night.

(43) The text above 'their drink-offerings', from which we infer that drink-offerings may be offered by night.

(44) Implying that if one placed drink-offerings in a sacred vessel at night they are sanctified and cannot become hullin again.

(45) The Baraitha above.

(46) Which can only take place by day.

(47) As the result of placing them in sacred vessels.

(48) Which included drink-offerings as being offered by day.

(49) And which became hallowed with the killing of the sacrifice, thus becoming part of the sacrifice.

(50) Num. XXIX, 39.

(51) V. Rashi and Sh. Mek.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 14b

to say that he should not delete the case of drink-offerings [from the above Baraitha],¹ and yet there is no contradiction.² Here,³ we are dealing with drink-offerings which accompany a sacrifice,⁴ while there⁵ we are dealing with drink-offerings which are brought by themselves.⁶ And if he had found [someone] could he have written the letter? Did not R. Abba the son of R. Hiyya b. Abba report in the name of R. Johanan: Those who write the traditional teachings⁷ [are punished]⁸ like those who burn the Torah,⁹ and he who learns from them [the writings] receives no reward. And R. Judah b. Nahman the Meturgeman¹⁰ of Resh Lakish gave the following [as exposition]: The verse says: Write thou these words¹¹ and then says: For after the tenor of these words,¹¹ thus teaching you that matters received as oral traditions you are not permitted to recite from writing and that written things [Biblical passages] you are not permitted to recite from memory.¹² And the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Scripture says, 'Write thou these words', implying that 'these' words you may write but you may not write traditional laws!¹³ — The answer was given: Perhaps the case is different in regard to a new interpretation.¹⁴ For R. Johanan and Resh Lakish used to peruse the book of Aggadah¹⁵ on Sabbaths¹⁶ and explained [their attitude] in this manner: [Scripture says:] It is time for the Lord to work, they have made void thy law,¹⁷ explaining this as follows: It is better that one letter of the Torah¹⁸ should be uprooted than that the whole Torah should be forgotten.

Said R. Papa: Now that you say that drink-offerings which are brought by themselves¹⁹ are offered even by night, if drink-offerings happen to be at hand by night, we can dedicate them by night²⁰ and offer them [by night]. Said R. Joseph the son of R. Shema'ia to R. Papa: There is a Baraitha which supports [your dictum]: 'This is the general rule, Whatsoever is offered by day is only dedicated by day, and whatsoever is offered by night is dedicated by night’.

Said R. Adda b. Ahaba:²¹ And the rise of the morning dawn disqualifies drink-offerings like²² the limbs [of the daily evening sacrifice].²³

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported that R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: [Scripture says:] These things ye shall do unto the Lord in your set feasts:²⁴ this refers to the obligatory sacrifices which are brought on holy days;²⁵ beside your vows and your freewill-offerings²⁴ teach concerning vows and freewill-offerings that they are offered on the Intermediate Days²⁶ of the Festival; for your burnt-offerings:²⁴ now of what kind of burnt-offering does the verse speak? If of a freewill burnt-offering, is it not already written, ‘your freewill-offerings’? And if of a burnt-offering which was vowed, is it not already written, ‘your vows’? [The text]²⁷ therefore can only refer to the burnt-offerings of a woman brought after childbirth and the burnt-offering of a leper.²⁸ And for your meal-offerings:²⁴ now of what kind of meal-offering does the verse speak? If of a freewill meal-offering, is not this already written?²⁹ And if of a meal-offering which was vowed, is not this already written?³⁰ [The text] therefore can only refer to a sinner's meal-offering and a meal-offering of jealousy.³¹ And for your drink-offerings and for your peace-offerings²⁴ implies an analogy between drink-offerings and peace-offerings [as follows]: Just as peace-offerings are offered by day so drink-offerings [which accompany a sacrifice] are offered by day. ‘And for your peace-offerings’ includes peace-offerings of a Nazirite.³²

Said Abaye to him: And why not say that the text³³ includes peace-offerings of the Passover,³⁴ for if the text includes peace-offerings of a Nazirite, they are sacrifices which are the subject of a vow or a freewill dedication,³⁵ and we have learnt: ‘This is the general rule, Whatsoever is the subject of a vow or a freewill dedication, may be offered on a private bamah³⁶ and whatsoever is not the subject of a vow or a freewill dedication must not be offered on a private bamah’.³⁷ And it has been taught: ‘Meal-offerings and offerings in connection with a Nazirite may be offered on a private bamah’.³⁸ This is the teaching of R. Meir. — Delete³⁹ from here⁴⁰ the case of a Nazirite.⁴¹ But is there an authority who holds that a Nazirite is not the subject of a vow or a freewill-offering? Lo, it is written: And it came to pass after forty years that Absalom said to the King, [pray thee let me go and pay my vow which I vowed unto the Lord in Hebron. For thy servant vowed a vow, etc.⁴² Now does this not refer to the sacrifice?⁴³ — No, it refers to the vow itself.⁴⁴ ‘The vow itself’ — was it made in Hebron? Was it not made in Geshur?⁴⁵ Said R. Aha, some say Rabbah son of R. Hanan: Absalom only went in order to bring sheep from Hebron.⁴⁶ So indeed it stands to reason. For if you say that he went to Hebron to offer up, would he leave Jerusalem and go to offer up in Hebron? — Then what do you say? That he went to bring sheep from Hebron? Then why does it say: ‘Which I vowed unto the Lord in Hebron’? It ought to say ‘from Hebron’! — One can still say that he went to offer in Hebron,⁴⁷ and as regards your difficulty as to why he left Jerusalem and came to offer in Hebron, why not raise this same difficulty with reference to Gibeon which was a holy place?⁴⁸ This however is the explanation: Once it has become permissible to offer on the bamahs, he can offer wherever he wishes.⁴⁹

It says: ‘After forty years’. Forty years from what? — R. Nehorai reported in the name of R. Joshua: Forty years from when [the Israelites] asked for a king. For it has been taught: The year in which the Israelites asked for a king was the tenth year of Samuel's leadership.

- (1) That drink-offerings are indeed offered by day.
 - (2) With the text cited above: 'Their meal-offering and drink-offering, which was explained above as meaning that drink-offerings may be offered by night.
 - (3) In the Baraitha above which includes the case of drink-offerings as being offered by day.
 - (4) The offering up of a sacrifice rendered the drink-offerings sacred so that they cannot be offered by night, like the sacrifice itself.
 - (5) The text, 'Their meal-offering etc.'
 - (6) Which were not hallowed by the killing of the sacrifice but were dedicated after the sacrifice had been offered up. In such a case, drink-offerings may be offered for ten days, including the nights.
 - (7) Halachahs, v. Glos.
 - (8) V. R. Gershom.
 - (9) For it is forbidden to retain oral traditions which have been committed to writing, since they belong to the Oral Law (Rashi). Another explanation of Rashi: These writings are not saved on Sabbath in case of fire.
 - (10) Lit., 'interpreter'; his Amora who expounded his lectures, v. Glos. s.v. Amora.
 - (11) Ex. XXXIV, 27.
 - (12) Tosaf. asks how then do we recite psalms, and answers that we are only particular as regards the Pentateuch. Furthermore the restriction only applies when we are desirous of acting on behalf of others.
 - (13) How therefore could R. Dimi have written down the oral tradition with reference to drink-offerings?
 - (14) The analogy quoted above: 'And just as peace-offerings are offered by day etc.' (R. Gershom). Another explanation (Rashi): Any new interpretation which reconciles conflicting Baraithas. Sh. Mek. adds: Another version: The answer was given. The Rabbis rely on what they learn, but since there is forgetfulness, they reduce to writing and when the occasion arises they look into the book.
 - (15) Homiletic literature.
 - (16) In order that the Aggadahs might not be forgotten.
 - (17) Ps. CXIX, 126. When a thing is done in the name of God it is sometimes necessary to nullify the Law. The reason for the prohibition of reducing to writing oral tradition has so far not been satisfactorily explained. For a full discussion of the problem, as well as an attempt to explain the term halachahs mentioned in this connection, v. Kaplan, J. The Redaction of the Talmud, pp. 261ff.
 - (18) I.e., the passage: 'For after the tenor of these words' which prohibits the committing to writing of oral traditions.
 - (19) Even though dedicated in connection with a sacrifice, they were not offered at the same time as a sacrifice.
 - (20) By placing them in a sacred vessel.
 - (21) Referring to R. Papa's ruling above that drink-offerings dedicated by night must be offered by night.
 - (22) So Rashi.
 - (23) Which is disqualified at the approach of dawn. Another explanation of R. Adda's ruling (R. Gershom) is as follows: Referring to the Baraitha above which says the limbs and joints go on being consumed all night, R. Adda says: The approach of the time for the bringing of the daily morning sacrifice disqualifies the limbs if they are not consumed by then. But only the actual offering up of the morning sacrifice disqualifies, as then it is already day, but not the mere preparations on the altar for the morning sacrifice.
 - (24) Num. XXIX, 39.
 - (25) E.g., the festive sacrifice, the offering of appearance before God and the additional festival offerings.
 - (26) But not on the Festival itself, as vows and freewill-offerings cannot be brought on a festival.
 - (27) 'For your burnt-offerings'.

- (28) Which are also offered on the Intermediate Days of the Festival (R. Gershom).
- (29) In the words, 'your freewill-offerings'.
- (30) In the words, 'your vows'.
- (31) Brought in connection with a woman suspected of infidelity.
- (32) These also are offered on the Intermediate Days of the Festival (R. Gershom). Scripture cannot here mean to include freewill peace-offerings, since the text has already said 'your vows'. And if the text is for the purposes of analogy, let Scripture say 'and for peace-offerings'. Why 'and for your peace-offerings?' (Rashi).
- (33) 'And for your peace-offerings'.
- (34) If there was a large company for the paschal lamb so that it would not suffice for all present, peace-offerings were brought with it; and Abaye would learn that if these were set aside for that purpose on the fourteenth of Nisan but were not offered up, they could be offered on the Intermediate Days. For, according to Abaye, there is no need for Scripture to include the case of peace-offerings of a Nazirite, as this can be inferred from the text, 'for your freewill-offerings and your vows', for Naziriteship is the subject of a vow and freewill dedication, whereas peace-offerings in connection with the passover are obligatory sacrifices.
- (35) For a man can vow to be a Nazirite and after completing the period of Naziriteship he brings his peace-offering.
- (36) A temporary and improvised altar.
- (37) Meg. 9b.
- (38) Zeb. 117b. We consequently see that a Nazirite is the subject of a vow etc. Otherwise one could not offer sacrifices of a Nazirite on a private bamah.
- (39) Var. lec. insert: Said R. Joseph (v. Sh. Mek.).
- (40) From the cited Baraitha.
- (41) So that although a Nazirite is the subject of a vow and a freewill dedication, this does not apply to the sacrifices which a Nazirite has to bring later on, these being obligatory, for the vow of a Nazirite at the outset only has reference to wine and the sacrifices come later automatically.
- (42) II Sam. XV, 7.
- (43) Implying that he will go to Hebron and pay his vows there. Now Absalom was a life Nazirite and every year he shaved himself and brought the appropriate sacrifice. Since he went to offer his sacrifice in Hebron where there were private bamahs, we can infer that a Nazirite is the subject of vows and freewill-offerings.
- (44) The word Hebron in the text means this: I will go to the place of a large bamah i.e., Gibeon and there pay my vows which I made at Hebron. But the text does not mean that Absalom actually fulfilled his vows in Hebron.
- (45) Since Scripture says: 'For thy servant vowed a vow while I abode at Geshur'.
- (46) The sheep there being large and fat and his intention being subsequently to offer them in Gideon on a large bamah. The text therefore does not mean that the vow was made in Hebron, only that he obtained the sheep at Hebron.
- (47) For a Nazirite can offer his sacrifice on a private bamah.
- (48) For in that place there was an altar which Moses made. Why not go there?
- (49) Absalom therefore went to Hebron and saw the sheep, and being there, he decided to offer in the same place (Wilna Gaon). The Rabbis who differ from R. Meir, however, hold that a Nazirite is not the subject of vows and therefore Absalom went to Hebron for the sheep but the actual offering was in Gibeon, on a large bamah (Tosaf). R. Dimi therefore who includes peace-offerings in connection with a Nazirite, agrees with the Rabbis who hold that a Nazirite is not the subject of vows and the Baraitha quoted above is the opinion of R. Meir.

Samuel himself¹ ruled ten years,² there was one year in which both Saul and Samuel ruled³ and two years in which Saul himself ruled⁴ and thirty-six⁵ years in which David reigned.⁶

MISHNAH. A SIN-OFFERING OF AN INDIVIDUAL WHOSE OWNERS HAVE PROCURED ATONEMENT⁷ IS LEFT TO DIE,⁸ WHEREAS THAT OF A CONGREGATION⁹ IS NOT LEFT TO DIE.¹⁰ R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, SAYS: [IT IS] LEFT TO DIE.¹¹ R. SIMEON SAID: WHAT DO WE FIND WITH REGARD TO THE OFFSPRING OF A DEDICATED ANIMAL, THE SUBSTITUTE OF A SIN-OFFERING AND A SIN-OFFERING WHOSE OWNERS DIED?¹² [THAT THE RULES CONCERNING] THESE APPLY ONLY TO AN INDIVIDUAL BUT NOT A CONGREGATION. SIMILARLY [THE RULES CONCERNING] THE SIN-OFFERING WHOSE OWNERS HAVE PROCURED ATONEMENT AND [A SIN-OFFERING] WHOSE YEAR HAS PASSED¹³ APPLIES ONLY TO AN INDIVIDUAL BUT NOT A CONGREGATION.¹⁴

GEMARA. Our Rabbis have taught: Why does [Scripture] say: And if he bring [a lamb] for a sin-offering?¹⁵ Whence do we derive that if one dedicated a sin-offering and it became lost and he separated another animal in its place and the first animal was then found, and both are standing before us, whence do we derive that he may bring whichever one he chooses?¹⁶ The text states: 'And if he bring a sin-offering'. One might think that he may bring both of them. The text however states: 'He shall bring it',¹⁷ implying one¹⁸ but not two. And what becomes of the second sin-offering? — Said R. Hamnuna: It has been taught: R. Judah says, It is left to pasture, whereas R. Simeon says: It is left to die.¹⁹ But does indeed R. Judah hold that it is left to pasture? Have we not heard R. Judah to hold that IT IS LEFT TO DIE?²⁰ — Reverse [the names in the above Baraita] as follows: R. Judah says: It is left to die, whereas R. Simeon says: It is left to pasture. But does indeed R. Simeon hold that it is left to pasture? Did not R. Simeon say: Five sin-offerings are left to die?²¹ — Rather you need not at all reverse [the names of the Baraita above] and there is no difficulty.²² There,²³ [we are dealing] with a case where [the first sin-offering] was lost when the second animal was separated [for a sin-offering],²⁴ and here,²⁵ we are dealing with a case where [the first sin-offering] was lost at the time of the atonement [by means of the second animal].²⁶ And if you prefer [another solution] I may say, In both cases we suppose [the first sin-offering] was lost at the time of the separating [of the second animal]²⁷ and yet there is no difficulty.²⁸ This²⁹ is the opinion of R. Judah according to Rabbi,³⁰ and that³¹ is the opinion of R. Judah according to the Rabbis.³² But³³ is there an authority who holds that a congregational sin-offering whose owners procured atonement is left to die?

(1) Without Saul after the death of Eli.

(2) In the tenth year of Samuel's ruling they asked for a king (Rashi).

(3) Saul following Samuel's advice.

(4) Without Samuel's guidance, although he was still alive, for Samuel died only four months before Saul.

(5) So Rashi. The text has thirty-seven.

(6) We have therefore thirteen years for Samuel and Saul after the death of Eli until David, and David reigned thirty-six years, up to the rebellion of Absalom. We have thus forty-nine years. Deduct from this nine years for Samuel's leadership before the Israelites asked for a king, and we find that when Absalom revolted it was forty years since the Israelites had asked for a king; v. Nazir 5a.

(7) If the animal became lost and atonement was obtained by means of another animal.

- (8) For it is a Sinaitic tradition that there are five sin-offerings, of which this is one, which are left to die.
- (9) Who were atoned for with another sin-offering.
- (10) As according to the view of the first Tanna this tradition only refers to the sin-offerings of an individual but not to that of a congregation.
- (11) Since the tradition applies even to a congregational sin-offering.
- (12) Of the five sin-offerings which are condemned to die, three cannot belong to a congregation, namely, the offspring of a sin-offering, for a congregation cannot bring a female animal; the substitute of a sin-offering, since a congregation cannot effect an exchange; and finally the case where the owners of a sin-offering die, this law not applying to a congregation, as explained later in the Gemara.
- (13) Which is older than one year, the period assigned for a sin-offering.
- (14) Although it is possible to have a congregation bringing these two kinds of sin-offerings.
- (15) Lev. IV, 32. What need is there for the words: 'And if he bring'? Scripture could have said: If a lamb be his offering.
- (16) For a sin-offering.
- (17) The latter part of the verse: 'And if he bring a lamb for a sin-offering'.
- (18) Animal to be brought as a sin-offering.
- (19) Since it is a case of a sin-offering of an individual whose owners have already procured atonement.
- (20) Even in the case of a congregational sin-offering, and how much more so then in the case of a sin-offering of an individual.
- (21) V. our Mishnah; and R. Simeon states there distinctly that all the five cases affect only individuals and one of them is the case of the sin-offerings whose owners have procured atonement.
- (22) As regards the conflicting views of R. Judah in the Mishnah and in the Baraitha.
- (23) In the Baraitha where he says that the sin-offering is condemned to pasture.
- (24) Before its offering. Since then he can bring either, the second animal is only condemned to pasture.
- (25) In the Mishnah.
- (26) Since therefore the owners have procured atonement through the second animal, the first animal is left to die.
- (27) The first animal was found, however, before atonement was procured by means of the second animal.
- (28) V. p. 104, n. 10.
- (29) In the Mishnah which says that it is left to die.
- (30) Who holds (infra 22b) that if the first offering is lost at the time of the separation of the second animal, although it is found before atonement is obtained by means of the second animal, the latter is left to die.
- (31) The Baraitha which says that the sin-offering is left only to pasture.
- (32) Who differ from Rabbi and hold that the law of a sin-offering being left to die only applies after the owners had procured atonement by means of the second animal.
- (33) The question refers to the Mishnah where R. Judah says that even a congregational sin-offering is condemned to die.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 15b

Has it not been taught: Likewise,¹ R. Jose said: The children of the captivity that were come out of the exile offered burnt-offerings, twelve bullocks, ninety-six rams, seventy-seven lambs, twelve he-goats, for a sin-offering, all this was a burnt-offering unto the Lord.² But can a sin-offering be brought as a burnt-offering?³ — Said Raba: [It means] like a burnt-offering [in this respect]. Just as a burnt-offering must not be eaten, so that sin-offering was not to be eaten. For R. Jose used to say: They brought the twelve he-goats⁴ for the sin of idolatry. And Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel: On account of the idolatry which they committed in the time of Zedekiah. Now, assuming that the one⁵ who holds that a congregational sin-offering whose owners procured atonement is left to die, also holds that a sin-offering whose owners have died is left to die, is there not here⁶ a case where the owners have died⁷ and yet the sin-offering is offered!⁸ — Said R. Papa: Even according to the one who holds that a congregational sin-offering whose owners have procured atonement is left to die, a congregational sin-offering whose owners have died is not left to die, for ‘a congregation does not die’.⁹

Whence does R. Papa derive this? Shall we say because Scripture says: Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children?¹⁰ If this be so, the same should apply to [the sacrifice] of an individual?¹¹ — Rather this is the reason why [the law of] the owners of [a sin-offering] who died does not apply to a congregation, because [we make an inference] from the case of the goats brought on Festivals and New Moons, since the Divine Law says: Bring them from the offerings of the Temple Treasury. Now perhaps the owners of this money have died?¹² Must you therefore not admit that a congregation does not die? And if you prefer [another solution] I may say: When these sin-offerings [goats] were offered¹³ they were offered on behalf of those still alive,¹⁴ since Scripture says: But many of the priests and Levites and chiefs of the fathers who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice and many shouted aloud for joy.¹⁵ Perhaps [the survivors] were only a minority?¹⁶ — You cannot say this, since [the text continues]: So that the people could not discern the noise of the shouting from the noise of the weeping of the people.¹⁷ But how could they bring [a sacrifice for idolatry]? Were they not wilful [sinners of idolatry in the days of Zedekiah]? — Said R. Johanan: It was a special decision.¹⁸ So indeed it stands to reason.¹⁹ For should you not say so, there is no difficulty as regards [the twelve] bullocks and [the twelve] goats, for this corresponds with the twelve tribes.²⁰ But as regards [rams]²¹ and lambs, with reference to whom [were they brought]? You must say therefore that this was a special decision [and here, too, it was a special decision].²²

We have learnt elsewhere: When Joseph b. Jo'ezer of Zereda and Joseph b. Johanan of Jerusalem died the grape-clusters [the scholars] came to an end.²³ What is the meaning of eshkoloth [grapeclusters]?²⁴ — A man in whom all is contained.²⁵ R. Judah reported in the name of Samuel: All the ‘grape-clusters’ who arose from the days of Moses until Joseph b. Jo'ezer learnt Torah like Moses our Teacher.²⁶ From that time onward, they did not learn Torah like Moses our Teacher. But did not Rab Judah report in the name of Samuel: Three thousand halachoth were forgotten during the period of mourning for Moses? — Those laws which were forgotten were forgotten, but those which were learnt²⁷ they learnt like Moses our Teacher. But has it not been taught: After the death of Moses, if those who pronounced unclean were in the majority,²⁸ they [the Rabbis] declared [the object] unclean, and if those who pronounced clean were in the majority, they [the Rabbis] declared [it] clean?²⁹ — Their acumen³⁰ diminished, but what they had learnt³¹ they learnt like Moses our Teacher.³²

It has been taught: All the ‘grape-clusters’ who arose in Israel from the days of Moses until the death of Joseph b. Jo'ezer of Zereda were free from all dofi [taint].³³ From that time onward some matter of taint was found in them.³⁴ But has it not been taught: There is the story of a certain hasid³⁵ who groaned [from a pain] in his heart, and when the doctors were consulted they said that there was no remedy for him unless he sucked hot milk from [a goat³⁶ every morning]. They brought a goat and bound it to the feet of his bed and he used to suck milk from it. Next day his friends came to visit him. When they saw the goat they exclaimed: 'A robber in arms is in the house³⁷ and shall we go in to visit him?' [They³⁸ left him immediately. When he died] they sat down and made investigation and found no other sin in him except that of [the keeping of] the goat. He [the hasid] too at his death said: 'I myself know that I have not sinned except in the keeping of this goat, having thus transgressed the teaching of my colleagues'. For the Sages taught: One must not rear small cattle in the Land of Israel. And it is also an established fact with us that wherever the Talmud speaks of a certain hasid it refers either to R. Judah b. Baba or R. Judah b. Ila'i. Now [these] Rabbis³⁹ lived many generations after Joseph b. Jo'ezer of Zereda.⁴⁰

(1) Tosaf. explains that the Baraitha cited here is with reference to Lev. V, 10 where it says: And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering. The Baraitha states that just as a burnt-offering must not be eaten, so this sin-offering must not be eaten. Thereupon the Baraitha proceeds: Likewise, etc.

(2) Ezra VIII, 35.

(3) Since the text says here that twelve sin-offerings were all brought as a burnt-offering.

(4) Corresponding to the twelve tribes. A goat for a sin-offering is brought for the sin of idolatry of which a congregation has been guilty and it is burnt outside the camp.

(5) R. Judah in the Mishnah.

(6) In the text just quoted.

(7) The owners having died during the seventy years of captivity in Babylon.

(8) In spite of the fact that the owners were dead.

(9) I.e., the relevant law does not apply to a congregation,

(10) Ps. XLV, 17. I.e., that the children take the place of the fathers and the sin-offering is offered up, for it is not considered as being ownerless.

(11) Where a man dies, his son in his place should be considered the owner of the sin-offering.

(12) And therefore the sin-offerings have no owners and should be condemned to die.

(13) For the sin of idolatry in the days of Ezra.

(14) From those who worshipped idolatry in the days of Zedekiah.

(15) Ezra III, 22. I.e., those who had not seen the first Temple, rejoiced now aloud.

(16) A minority of the Israelites, and for a minority we do not offer the same sacrifice as for a majority but as for individuals. Since then twelve goats were offered on behalf of the twelve tribes, these must have been meant for the first people mentioned in the text who had died, and we can therefore infer that the law of a sin-offering whose owner died does not apply to a congregation.

(17) We therefore see that those who wept were in a majority over those who rejoiced and the weepers belonged to the first people mentioned in the text who had died (Rashi).

(18) And not to be taken as a precedent.

(19) That it is a special decision.

(20) Since the congregational offering for idolatry is a bullock for a burnt-offering and a goat for a sin-offering.

(26) Scrupulous and exact in the knowledge of the laws and regulations.

(27) Lit., 'those they had on tradition'.

(28) R. Gershom explains that this refers to the laws which were forgotten during the period of mourning for Moses.

(29) We therefore see that there were differences of opinion with reference to many laws soon after the death of Moses.

(30) Lit., 'heart', and they could not recall the laws by means of discussion. Therefore there were differences of opinion with reference to them and the laws were settled by going according to the decision of the majority.

(32) Scrupulously and correctly.

(33) For the moment the word hipus is understood as meaning 'taint' of sin.

(39) I.e., R. Judah b. Ila'i and R. Judah b. Baba, and it says here that no sin was found in them.

(40) Consequently there was no taint of sin found among the leaders, even after the period of Joseph b. Jo'ezer.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 16a

Said R. Joseph: [The word dofi here means] dispute, [e.g., the dispute] relating to 'laying on of hands'.¹ But does not Joseph b. Jo'ezer himself differ with reference to the law of laying on of hands?² — When he differed it was in his latter years, when his mental powers³ declined.

The [above] text [stated]: 'Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel: Three thousand traditional laws were forgotten during the period of mourning for Moses'. They said to Joshua: 'Ask';⁴ he replied: It is not in heaven.⁵ They [the Israelites] said to Samuel: 'Ask'; he replied: [Scripture says:] These are the commandments,⁶ implying [that since the promulgation of these commandments] no prophet has now the right to introduce anything new.

Said R. Isaac the Smith: Also the law relating to a sin-offering whose owners have died⁷ was forgotten⁸ during the period of mourning for Moses. They [the Israelites] said to Phinehas: 'Ask'; he replied to them: 'It is not in heaven'.⁹ They said to Eleazar: 'Ask'. He replied: 'These are the commandments', implying [that since the promulgation of these commandments] no prophet has now the right to introduce anything new.

Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: When Moses departed [this world] for the Garden of Eden he said to Joshua: 'Ask me concerning all the doubts you have'.¹⁰ He replied to him: 'My Master, have I ever left you for one hour and gone elsewhere?'¹¹ Did you not write concerning me in the Torah: But his servant Joshua the son of Nun departed not out of the tabernacle?¹² Immediately the strength [of Moses] weakened¹³ and [Joshua] forgot¹⁴ three hundred laws and there arose [in his mind] seven hundred doubts [concerning laws]. Then all the Israelites rose up to kill him.¹⁵ The Holy One, blessed be He, then said to him [Joshua]: ‘It is not possible to tell you.¹⁶ Go and occupy their attention in war, as it says: Now after the death of Moses the servant of the Lord, it came to pass that the Lord spake;¹⁷ and it further says; [Prepare you victuals for within three days, etc.].¹⁸

It has been taught: A thousand and seven hundred kal wahomer¹⁹ and gezerah shawah²⁰ and specifications of the Scribes²¹ were forgotten during the period of mourning for Moses. Said R. Abbuha: Nevertheless Othniel the son of Kenaz restored [these forgotten teachings] as a result of his dialectics, as it says: And Othniel the son of Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, took it;²² and he gave him Achsah his daughter to wife.²³ And why was her name called Achsah? — Said²⁴ R. Johanan: Because whosoever saw her was angry with his wife.²⁵ And it came to pass as she came unto him that she moved him to ask of her father a field. And she alighted [watiznah] off her ass.²⁶ What does the word wa-tiznah mean? Raba reported in the name of R. Isaac: She said to him: Just as an ass when it has no food in its trough immediately cries out,²⁷ so a woman when she has no wheat in her house cries out immediately, [as it says: And Caleb said unto her: What wouldst thou?].²⁴ And she answered, Give me a blessing for thou hast given me a south land,²⁸ implying a house dry²⁹ [devoid] of all goodness [money]; give me also springs of water,³⁰ meaning a man in whom is Only Torah.³¹ And he gave her the upper springs [gulloth] and the nether springs.³⁰ He said to her: ‘One to whom all the secrets of the upper and nether worlds are revealed,³² need one ask food from him?’³³ But was Caleb the son of Kenaz?³⁴ Was he not the son of Jephunneh?³⁵ — The meaning of the word Jephunneh is that he turned³⁶ from the counsel of the spies. But still was he [Caleb] the son of Kenaz? Was he not the son of Hezron, since it says: And Caleb the son of Hezron begat Azubah?³⁷ — Said Raba: He [Caleb] was a stepson of Kenaz.³⁸ [This can also be proved,³⁹ since it says: Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite,⁴⁰ but does not say the son of Kenaz.]⁴¹ A Tanna taught: Othniel is the same as Jabez.⁴² He⁴³ was called Othniel because God answered him,⁴⁴ and Jabez because he counselled⁴⁵ and fostered Torah in Israel. And what was his [real] name? Judah the brother of Simeon. And whence do we derive that God answered him? — Since it says: And Jabez called on the God of Israel saying, Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed and enlarge my border, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldst keep me from evil that it may not grieve me! And God granted him that which he requested.⁴⁶ ‘Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed’ with Torah; ‘and enlarge my border’ with pupils; ‘that thine hand might be with me’, that my studies may not be forgotten from my heart; ‘and that thou wouldst keep me from evil’, that I may meet friends like myself; ‘that it may not grieve me’, that the evil inclination may not have power over me so as to prevent me from studying: If thou doest so it is well, but if not, I shall go with my ‘grief’ to the grave. Immediately, ‘God granted him that which he requested’.⁴⁷ You find a similar example: The poor man and the man of medium wealth meet together,⁴⁸ the Lord lighteneth both their eyes.⁴⁹ When the pupil questions his teacher and says to him: ‘Teach me Torah’, if he teaches him, the Lord enlightens the eyes of both of them,⁵⁰ and if not, ‘the rich and poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all:⁵¹ He who made this one wise can make him a fool, and He who has made this one a fool can make him wise.⁵² This is the teaching of R. Nathan. R. Judah the Prince says: ‘If thou wouldst bless me indeed’, by multiplying and increasing; ‘and enlarge my border’, with sons and daughters; ‘and that thine hand might be with me’, in business; ‘and thou wouldst keep me from evil’, that I have no head-ache, ear-ache nor eye-ache; ‘that it may not grieve me’, that the evil inclination may not have power over me so as to prevent me from studying: If thou doest so, it is well, but if not, I will go with my ‘grief’ to the grave. 'And God granted him that which he requested'.

Likewise⁵³ you say: The poor man and the man of medium wealth have met together, the Lord lighteneth both their eyes;⁵⁴ when the poor man goes to the donor and says, 'Assist me', if he assists him it is well, but if not, 'the rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all': He who made this one rich can make him poor, and He who made this one poor can make him rich.

SAID R. SIMEON: WHAT DO WE FIND AS REGARDS etc. Our Rabbis taught: R. Simeon says, Five sin-offerings are left to die — an offspring of a dedicated animal, the substitute of a sin-offering, a sin-offering whose owner has died, a sin-offering whose owner has procured atonement, and a sin-offering whose year is passed. Now you cannot apply [the law of] the offspring of a dedicated animal to a congregation because a congregation does not bring a female animal [for an offering]. You cannot also apply [the law of] the substitute of a sin-offering to a congregation because a congregation cannot effect exchange. You cannot also apply [the law of] a sin-offering whose owner has died to a congregation because 'a congregation does not die'. With regard to the cases of a sin-offering whose owner has procured atonement or whose year is passed, we do not as yet know.⁵⁵ Shall we say then that these have the same rule in the case both of a congregation and an individual? I will tell you. Let the cases which are not explicitly stated⁵⁶ be derived [by analogy] from the cases explicitly stated⁵⁷ [as follows]: Just as the cases explicitly stated apply to an individual and not to a congregation, so the cases regarding the owners of a sin-offering who have procured atonement and a sin-offering whose year has passed only apply to an individual and not to a congregation.

(1) The laying of hands on the animal previous to a sacrifice on a Festival, which was the very first subject over which there was a difference of opinion, the School of Shammai holding that it was permissible and the School of Hillel that it was not permissible. This controversy took place after the time of Joseph b. Jo'ezer.

(2) Hag. 16a. V. (Sonc. ed.) p. 105, n. 1. We therefore see that even in Joseph b. Jo'ezer's time there were already differences of opinion relating to certain laws.

- (34) For the Gemara above cites the text which says that Othniel the brother of Caleb was the son of Kenaz, thus implying that Kenaz was the father of Caleb.
- (35) Since Scripture says (Josh. XIV, 13) Caleb the son of Jephunneh and does not say the son of Kenaz.
- (36) vbuph and vbp 'turn from' having verbal similarity.
- (37) I Chron. II, 18. This is explained in Sot. 12a to mean that he married Miriam who was forsaken on account of an illness. Since he therefore married her for heaven's sake, Scripture accounts it as if he had begotten her.
- (38) And Othniel was his brother on the maternal side.
- (39) That Caleb was not the son of Kenaz, his father being Hezron.
- (40) Josh. ibid.
- (41) Now if Caleb's father was Kenaz, why does not the text say, 'the son of Kenaz'? This therefore proves that Kenaz only brought him up but did not beget him. The bracketed passage is inserted with Rashi and Sh. Mek; V. Wilna Gaon Glosses.
- (42) In I Chron. II, 55 it says: And the families of the Scribes which dwelt at Jabez, these are the Kenites, and in Judg. - (47) Showing that if one devotes himself to the study of the Torah all his petitions are fulfilled.
- (48) 'Poor' is interpreted in the sense of one who is devoid of the knowledge of Torah and the expression, 'A man of medium wealth' is interpreted as one who only possesses a moderate knowledge of the Torah. When therefore the poor man asks the other to teach him, it is incumbent on the latter to do so just as God carried out the wish of Othniel (R. Gershom).
- (49) Prov. XXIX, 13.
- (50) For even the teacher requires enlightenment from God.
- (51) Prov. XXII, 2.

(52) God now starts to make them afresh, a fool or a wise man.

(53) This Tanna explains the text with reference to money and the need for assisting a person in want, as God did with Othniel (R. Gershom). Rashi explains 'likewise' as meaning that if one seeks and petitions for sustenance, heaven will fulfil his wishes.

(54) Both will become rich (R. Gershom).

(55) Lit., 'we have not learnt', whether they apply to a congregation.

(56) As to whether they apply to a congregation, the cases being a sin-offering whose owners procured atonement and a sin-offering whose year is passed.

(57) I.e., in the cases of offspring of a dedicated animal, a sin-offering whose owners died, and a substitute of a sin-offering.

Talmud - Mas. T'murah 16b

But can we form an analogy between a case where there is an alternative and a case where there is none?¹ — Said Resh Lakish: Four sin-offerings were specified to the Israelites [on Sinai to be left to die]² and the rule was extended to five.³ Now if you suppose that these were congregational sin-offerings, are three of them⁴ ever brought by a congregation?⁵ Then you must admit that we form an analogy between the cases not explicitly stated and those explicitly stated.

R. Nathan says: Only one sin-offering was specified to the [Israelites on Mount Sinai]⁶ and the rule was extended to all the five sin-offerings.⁷ But⁸ [if that is so] let us see in what class they learnt it,⁹ whether in that of the sin-offerings of an individual or of a congregation?¹⁰ — There were two forgettings.¹¹ And consequently they¹² were in a difficulty. If¹³ you should think that the rule¹⁴ applies to the sin-offering of a congregation, can these¹⁵ be brought by a congregation?¹⁶ Then it is proved from here that we form an analogy between the cases not explicitly stated¹⁷ and the cases explicitly stated: Just as in the cases explicitly stated the sin-offering is brought by an individual and not by a congregation, so in the cases not explicitly stated the sin-offering is brought by an individual and not by a congregation.¹⁸

MISHNAH. IN SOME WAYS [THE LAW RELATING TO] DEDICATIONS CARRIES GREATER WEIGHT THAN [THAT RELATING TO] EXCHANGE, AND IN SOME WAYS [THAT RELATING TO] EXCHANGE CARRIES GREATER WEIGHT THAN [THAT RELATING TO] DEDICATIONS. IN SOME WAYS [THE LAW RELATING TO] DEDICATIONS CARRIES GREATER WEIGHT THAN [THAT RELATING TO] EXCHANGE, FOR DEDICATED ANIMALS CAN EFFECT EXCHANGE WHEREAS ONE SUBSTITUTED CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE.¹⁹ A CONGREGATION OR PARTNERS CAN DEDICATE BUT CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE. WE CAN DEDICATE EMBRYOS AND LIMBS,²⁰ BUT WE CANNOT EFFECT EXCHANGE WITH THEM. [THE LAW RELATING TO] EXCHANGE CARRIES GREATER WEIGHT THAN [THAT RELATING TO] DEDICATIONS, SINCE EXCHANGE²¹ HAS EFFECT ON A PERMANENTLY BLEMISHED ANIMAL²² AND IT DOES NOT BECOME HULLIN

(1) The reason why in the three first cases the sinofferings are not left to die in the case of a congregation is because there cannot be an offering in such circumstances, for they can never occur in connection with a congregation. There is therefore no alternative, whereas in the other two cases the offering can be brought both by an individual and a congregation.

(2) The fifth was to be left to pasture.

(3) Because they forgot during the period of mourning for Moses which one was to be left to pasture.

(4) For the cases of a sin-offering being left to die apply either all to a congregation or all to an individual.

(5) Viz., an offspring of a dedicated animal, a substitute of a sin-offering, and a sin-offering whose owners died.

(6) To be left to die, and the other four cases of sin-offerings were only to be left to pasture. It was, however, forgotten which were meant to die and which to pasture.

(7) I.e., all five were to be left to die.

(8) Before R. Nathan can complete his observation, he is interrupted with a question why it was necessary to condemn the four to die out of doubt.

(9) Viz., the sin-offering which was to be left to die.

(10) Let us see to what class this sin-offering which was to be left to die was remembered as belonging. If it was remembered as being the sin-offering both of a congregation and an individual, then let us say that a sin-offering whose owners procured atonement and a sin-offering whose year is passed are left to die because of doubt, whereas in the other three cases, which are entirely different, as they could not occur in connection with a congregation, there could be no doubt that there is no death for the sin-offerings. And if the case of a sin-offering being left to die was remembered only in connection with the offering of an individual, then let us say that these three sin-offerings, substitute and offspring of a dedicated animal etc., since they can be brought only by an individual, are left to die, but about the other two sin-offerings there can be no doubt, for they are entirely different (Rashi).

(11) The class in which the sin-offering that was to die was placed at Sinai (viz., congregational or individual) and also which of the five sin-offerings was to die.

(12) Those who lived in the days of Joshua and forgot those laws regarding sin-offerings.

(13) R. Nathan now continues to explain R. Simeon's teaching in the Mishnah.

(14) Of the sin-offering left to die.

(15) The four sin-offerings which are left to pasture.

(16) For this can never happen. Since therefore it is remembered that there were five sin-offerings which were either to be left to pasture or die, they were stated as regards an individual, in which circumstances all the five sin-offerings can occur.

(17) A sin-offering whose owners procured atonement and whose year had passed.

(18) This then is the reason for R. Simeon's opinion. The Rabbis however hold that four cases of sin-offerings were imparted from Sinai to be left to die. Therefore wherever we find that a sin-offering applies to an individual and a congregation, then it applies, and where not, it does not apply.

(19) So that if one says concerning an animal consecrated through being a substitute that it should in turn confer holiness on another animal by means of exchange, a further exchange does not take place.

(20) This is the view of R. Judah (supra 10a).

(21) So with Sh. Mek.

(22) So that if one substitutes a blemished animal for an unblemished dedicated animal, holiness attaches to the former to the extent that it does not become hullin.

SO AS TO BE SHEARED [OF ITS WOOL] AND WORKED.¹ R. JOSE SON OF R. JUDAH SAYS: AN EXCHANGE IN ERROR IS PUT ON A LEVEL WITH AN INTENTIONAL [EXCHANGE], BUT A DEDICATION IN ERROR IS NOT PUT ON A LEVEL WITH AN INTENTIONAL [DEDICATION]. R. ELEAZAR² SAYS: KIL'AYIM,³ TREFAH, A FOETUS

MISHNAH. THERE ARE IN THE TORAH THIRTY-SIX [TRANSGRESSIONS WHICH ARE PUNISHABLE¹ WITH] EXTINCTION:² WHEN ONE HAS INTERCOURSE WITH HIS MOTHER,³ HIS FATHER'S WIFE OR HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW; WHEN A MAN HAS CONNECTION WITH A MALE, OR COVERS A BEAST, OR WHEN A WOMAN ALLOWS HERSELF TO BE COVERED BY A BEAST; WHEN ONE HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER,⁴ WITH A MARRIED WOMAN, WITH HIS SISTER, WITH HIS FATHER'S SISTER, HIS MOTHER'S SISTER, HIS WIFE'S SISTER,⁵ HIS BROTHER'S WIFE,⁶ THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER,⁷ OR WITH A MENSTRUOUS WOMAN; WHEN ONE BLASPHEMES [THE LORD].⁸ SERVES IDOLS,⁹ DEDICATES OF HIS CHILDREN TO MOLECH¹⁰ OR HAS A FAMILIAR SPIRIT,¹¹ OR DESECRATES THE SABBATH;¹² . WHEN AN UNCLEAN PERSON EATS OF SACRIFICIAL FOOD,¹³ OR WHEN ONE ENTERS THE PRECINCTS OF THE TEMPLE IN AN UNCLEAN STATE;¹⁴ WHEN ONE EATS HELEB,¹⁵ BLOOD,¹⁶ NOTHAR¹⁷ OR PIGGUL;¹⁸ WHEN ONE SLAUGHTERS OR OFFERS UP¹⁹ [A CONSECRATED ANIMAL] OUTSIDE [THE TEMPLE PRECINCTS]; WHEN ONE EATS ANYTHING LEAVENED ON PASSOVER;²⁰ WHEN ONE EATS OR WORKS ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT;²¹ WHEN ONE COMPOUNDS OIL [OF ANOINTING]²² OR COMPOUNDS INCENSE,²³ OR USES [UNLAWFULLY] OIL OF ANOINTING;²⁴ AND [WHEN ONE TRANSGRESSES THE LAWS OF] THE PASCHAL OFFERING²⁵ , AND CIRCUMCISION²⁶ — FROM AMONG POSITIVE COMMANDMENTS. FOR THESE [TRANSGRESSIONS] ONE IS LIABLE TO EXTINCTION IF COMMITTED WILFULLY,²⁷ AND IF IN ERROR TO A SIN-OFFERING,²⁸ AND IF THERE IS A DOUBT WHETHER HE HAD COMMITTED THE TRANSGRESSION TO A SUSPENSIVE GUILT-OFFERING, EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO DEFILED THE TEMPLE OR ITS CONSECRATED THINGS,²⁹ SINCE ONE IS LIABLE IN THIS CASE TO A SLIDING-SCALE SACRIFICE.³⁰ THUS R. MEIR, WHILE THE SAGES SAY: ALSO THE BLASPHEMER [IS AN EXCEPTION],³¹ FOR IT SAYS: YE SHALL HAVE ONE LAW FOR HIM THAT DOETH AUGHT IN ERROR,³² THIS IS TO EXCLUDE THE BLASPHEMER³³ WHO PERFORMS NO ACTION.³⁴ [

(1) If committed wilfully, but without due warning by two witnesses of the punishments they involve. If committed after such warning, the penalties vary between flagellation and the death sentence.

(2) Heb. kareth, 'cutting off'; i.e., the perpetrator's life is cut short by Providence (v. Glos.): M.K. 28a.

(3) This law as well as the other laws in the Mishnah relating to incestuous or other immoral connections are enumerated in Lev. XVIII. A notable omission from the list of incestuous relations is a daughter, both legitimate and illegitimate. The prohibition relating to her is taken to be self-evident from the explicit prohibition of intercourse with a woman and her daughter, or implied in the law regarding a grand-daughter. Cf. Yeb. 3a; Rashi ad loc.

(4) Or for that purpose also a grand-daughter.

(5) This prohibition holds good only while his wife is alive even though divorced.

(6) An exception is the case of levirate marriage, Deut. XXV, 5f.

- (7) In some edd. 'the wife of his mother's brother' is added here.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 2b

GEMARA. Why has a number been mentioned [in the Mishnah]? — Said R. Johanan: [To tell you] that if one commits all [these transgressions] in one spell of unawareness he is liable [to a sacrifice] for each of them.¹ Again, as to that which we have learnt: 'There are thirty-nine principal categories of work prohibited on the Sabbath',² why has a number been mentioned there? [To tell you] that if one does them all in one spell of unawareness he is liable to a sacrifice for each of them. Again, as to that which we have learnt: 'There are four who require an act of atonement',³ — why has a number been mentioned there? — To exclude the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, who holds that there are five, as we have learnt: 'R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: A proselyte [too] requires atonement [and may not eat of sacred things] until the blood [of the sacrifice] has been sprinkled'. This is why the number 'four' has been mentioned. Again, as to that which we have learnt: 'In four instances one brings the same sacrifice for wilful transgression as for transgression in error',⁴ — why has a number been mentioned there? — To exclude the view of R. Simeon. For it has been taught: 'R. Simeon holds, that in the case of a false oath concerning a deposit⁵ wilful transgression is not expiable by a sacrifice'.⁶ This is why the number 'four' has been mentioned there. Again, as to that which we have learnt: 'There are five Instances where one sacrifice is brought for several transgressions',⁷ — why has a number been mentioned? — Because it wishes to state in the sequel, 'And a nazirite who became unclean several times'. Now this is rendered possible if he became defiled on the seventh [clean] day⁸ and then again on the seventh day,⁹ and in accordance with the view of R. Jose son of R. Judah, who maintains that the 'Naziritship of Cleanness'¹⁰ begins to operate from the seventh day.¹¹ For according to Rabbi, who holds that the 'Naziritship of Cleanness' does not become operative before the eighth day, how is this rendered possible? If he was defiled on the seventh day and then again on the seventh, the whole is one protracted period of uncleanness;¹² and if he was defiled on the eighth day and then again on the eighth, since he had passed the time when the sacrifice became due, he should be liable to a separate offering for each defilement? It is thus proved that that [Mishnah] is in accordance with R. Jose son of R. Judah.¹³ Where is the dispute between Rabbi and R. Jose son of R. Judah? — As it has been taught: 'And he shall hallow his head the same day'¹⁴ refers to the day of the bringing of the sacrifice, says Rabbi; R. Jose son of R. Judah says: To the day of the cutting of his hair',¹⁵ Again, as to that which we have learnt: 'Five must bring a sliding-scale offering' — why has a number been mentioned there?¹⁶ — Because it says in the sequel:¹⁷ 'The same applies to the ruler'.¹⁸ He thus mentions the number 'five' to exclude the view of R. Eliezer who holds¹⁹ that a ruler brings a goat as an offering.²⁰ Again, as to that which we have learnt: 'There are four principal categories of damage',²¹ — why has a number been mentioned there? — To exclude the view of R. Oshaia, who holds there are thirteen such categories.²² But then why has R. Oshaia mentioned a number? — To exclude the view of R. Hiyya, who holds that there are twenty-four such categories.²³ But then why has R. Hiyya mentioned a number? — To exclude an informer and one who renders a sacrifice piggul.²⁴

The Master said: 'If one commits all these transgressions in one spell of unawareness, one is liable [to a sacrifice] for each of them'. It is well that you could not declare him exempted altogether, for it is written: For whosoever shall do any of these abominations [even the souls that do them] shall be cut off.²⁵ But why not say, if he commits one transgression of these he is liable to one sacrifice, if he transgresses them all in one spell of unawareness he is still liable only to one offering? — Replied R. Johanan: It is for this reason that [the penalty of] kareth has been specially mentioned in connection with 'his sister',²⁶ to intimate that each of them requires a separate atonement.²⁷ R. Bibi b. Abaye demurred to this: Why not say, in the case of 'his sister', which Scripture has singled out, a separate offering is required, but as to the other transgressions there should be but one sacrifice [for them all] since they have been committed under one spell of unawareness?²⁸ But as to R. Bibi b. Abaye, does he not accept [the general principle] which has been taught: 'If a law has been included in a class and has then been singled out for some specification, this specification applies not only to that law but to the whole class',²⁹ for instance [Scripture reads]: And the soul that eateth of the flesh [of the sacrifice of peace-offering. . .].³⁰ Now, was not the peace-offering included in the general class of consecrated things,³¹ why has it been singled out? To make [consecrated things]³² analogous [for the purpose of this law] to the peace-offerings: As the peace-offerings are dedications to the altar, and for this reason one is liable on their account to kareth, so also whatever are dedications to the altar, one is liable on account thereof to kareth; this excludes dedications for the Temple Repair [Fund].³³ — R. Bibi might reply: From this very [Baraita one can prove the contrary]. Did you not say that dedications for the Temple Repair [Fund] were to be excluded? Likewise here [argue in a similar manner]: Just as ‘his sister’ is distinguished in that it is a relation which can never be permitted in the lifetime of the man who renders her forbidden,³⁴ so must the others³⁵ be such relatives as cannot be permitted in the lifetime of those who render them forbidden; this excludes the married woman, who can be permitted during the lifetime of him who renders her forbidden!³⁶ — Said R. Jonah, or as some say, R. Huna the son of R. Joshua, Scripture says: For whosoever shall do any of these abominations etc.,³⁷ all other forbidden relations are thus made analogous to ‘his sister’: Just as in the case of ‘his sister’ one is liable on her account to a separate offering, so also in all other cases one is liable to a separate offering for each [transgression]. But according to R. Isaac who holds,³⁸ All transgressions³⁹ liable to kareth have been comprised in a general statement,⁴⁰ and the reason that kareth has been singled out in the case of ‘his sister’ is to render [the offence] subject to the penalty of kareth and not lashes,⁴¹ — wherefrom does he then derive that separate offerings have to be brought for each transgression? — He derives it from: And thou shalt not approach unto a woman while she is a niddah⁴² by her uncleanness;⁴³ a separate offering is brought for each woman.⁴⁴ But as to the Rabbis,⁴⁵ let them derive the law [relating to separate offerings] from: ‘Unto a woman while she is a niddah by her uncleanness’? — Indeed they do. And for which purpose then has the penalty of kareth been mentioned in the case of ‘his sister’? — [To teach] that separate sacrifices be brought for intercourse with ‘his sister’, ‘his father's sister’ and ‘his mother's sister’. But is [a text] necessary to separate these [various offences],⁴⁶ are these [transgressions] not of different denominations and [committed with] different persons? — Rather, say that [three] separate sacrifices be required in the case of intercourse with ‘his sister’ who is at the same time his father's sister and his mother's sister.⁴⁷ And whence will R. Isaac derive this? — He will derive it from the latter part of the verse: He hath uncovered his sister's nakedness.⁴⁸ And for which purpose do the Rabbis apply ‘his sister’ in the latter part of the verse? — They apply it

- (1) The mention of the number indicates that each transgression preserves its identity even if committed in conjunction with other transgressions.
 - (2) Shab. VII, 2.
 - (3) Before they may partake of sacred things.
 - (4) V. infra 9a where no number is mentioned.
 - (5) Which is one of the four instances mentioned in that Mishnah. According to him there are, then, only three such instances.
 - (6) Sheb. 34b.
 - (7) V. infra 9a.
 - (8) A nazirite who is defiled during the period of his naziriteship has to count seven clean days and bring an offering on the eighth day. He has then to observe again his vow of naziriteship for the period stipulated, v. Num. VI, 9f. If he is defiled on the seventh of the clean days, he has to start again this period of cleanness, etc.
 - (9) Viz., after the new defilement which interrupted the resumed count of naziriteship.
 - (10) I.e., the new count of naziriteship.
 - (11) His new defilement on the seventh day is therefore to be considered independent of that which preceded it.

- (12) Its inclusion as a case where one is liable to one offering for several transgressions is then not justified.
- (13) The number has thus been mentioned to include the nazirite and thus to teach that the Mishnah is in accordance with R. Jose and not Rabbi.
- (14) Num. VI, 11. The continuation of this text prescribes the resumption of his naziriteship.
- (15) I.e., the seventh day (ibid. g); v. infra 9b.
- (16) V. infra 9a.
- (17) Viz., of the Mishnah in Hor. 8b.
- (18) I.e., he too is exempted altogether from any sacrifice in all cases where an ordinary person would have to bring a sliding-scale offering.
- (19) Ibid. 9a.
- (20) I.e., the number has been mentioned to stress that in the instances of these five transgressions enumerated in the Mishnah, infra 9a, none but a sliding-scale sacrifice can be brought and consequently a ruler brings in such cases no offering at all, in accordance with the general rule that a ruler is altogether exempt whenever the prescribed offering is not fixed.
- (21) B.K. 2a.
- (22) B. K 4b.
- (23) Ibid.
- (24) V. Glos. I.e., these two are exempted from paying indemnity; v. B.K. 5a.
- (25) Lev. XVIII, 29.
- (26) Ibid. XX, 17; although this penalty is already implied in the collective statement in Lev. XVIII, 29. The superfluous mention of kareth in a single instance is to indicate that this penalty is prescribed for each transgression separately even when committed in conjunction with others.
- (27) Lit., 'to divide'.
- (28) I.e., one sacrifice should be offered for incestuous relations with a sister and one for the rest of transgressions collectively.
- (29) One of the famous thirteen hermeneutic rules of R. Ishmael.
- (30) Ibid. VII, 20 dealing with the prohibition for an unclean person to eat sacred food.
- (31) Ibid. XXII, 3.
- (32) To which the statement in Lev. XXII, 3 is meant to apply.
- (33) And here likewise all cases of incestuous relationships ought to be derived from 'his sister'.
- (34) I.e., she always remains forbidden to the brother.
- (35) For the purpose of liability to a separate offering.
- (36) I.e., she may remarry on divorce even in the lifetime of him who had hitherto rendered her forbidden, i.e., her husband. One might thus argue that one should not be liable to a separate offering for having relations with a married woman, if the transgression was committed together with other transgressions relating to forbidden relations, in one spell of unawareness.
- (37) Lev. XVIII, 29.
- (38) V. Mak. 13b, 23b. R. Isaac employs the previously mentioned analogy for a different purpose.
- (39) Referring to forbidden marriages.
- (40) Lev. ibid.
- (41) I.e., his sin is not expiated by the infliction of lashes upon him.
- (42) I.e., a menstruant woman.
- (43) Lev. XVIII, 19.
- (44) The word 'woman' is considered superfluous; it should read, 'not approach a niddah'.
- (45) I.e., the opponents of R. Isaac, who hold that lashes effect expiation where kareth is predicated. The law referring to separate offerings seems according to them to be derived from 'his sister'.

(46) To teach that each must be atoned for separately.

(47) V. infra 25a.

(48) Ibid. XX, 17. The word 'sister' is considered superfluous. It should read 'her nakedness'.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 3a

to 'his sister' who is his father's daughter and his mother's daughter,¹ and to teach you that the trespass of a law deduced ad majus is not punishable. R. Isaac on the other hand holds that it is punishable. Or, if you will, I can say he will derive [the inclusion of the full sister in the pronouncement of] punishment from [its inclusion in the pronouncement of] prohibition.²

Said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshai: Wherever two negative commands are combined in one [collective pronouncement of the penalty of] kareth, separate sin-offerings are to be brought for each of them.³ Where is this exemplified? — In the instances of one who compounds or uses the sacred oil of anointment, for it is written: Upon the flesh of man shall it not be poured [neither shall ye make any like it], according to the composition thereof;⁴ whilst as to the one [pronouncement of] kareth, it is written: Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, he shall be cut off from his people.⁵ Now, [according to this rule] since there is a separate negative command for each of the forbidden relations, why was it necessary [to single out in the Torah the] kareth [penalty] in the case of 'his sister'?⁶ — According to R. Isaac it is as we have explained above; whilst as to the Rabbis, [they employ the text] to let us know that a law derived by the conclusion ad majus is not punishable.⁷ Said R. Nahman son of Isaac: We have also learnt to this effect: WHEN ONE COMPOUNDS OIL [OF ANOINTING] OR COMPOUNDS INCENSE, OR USES OIL OF ANOINTING. Why has [the law concerning] one who compounds incense been placed between [the other two laws]⁸ if not to let us know: As [the law concerning] incense is a separate prohibition and one is liable on account thereof to a separate sin-offering, so also where one compounds oil of anointing and uses it, since they are the subject of separate prohibitions, one is liable on account of them to separate sin-offerings.³ And if you argue [that the reason of this order in the Mishnah is] because the instances concerning compounding had to be stated together, [then I would argue] that [the Tanna] should have reversed the order and stated as follows: When one compounds incense, or compounds the oil, or uses the oil [of anointing]; wherefore has he separated [the laws relating to] oil one from the other, if not to let us know that separate sin-offerings are to be brought for them? This proves it.

WHEN A MAN HAS CONNECTION WITH A MALE. Whom has the Tanna in mind?⁹ If a male, then you must omit the instance of the woman that is covered by a beast, and you are one short;¹⁰ if a woman, you must omit the instances of the man who has connection with a male or covers a beast, and you are short of two. — Said R. Johanan: Indeed the Tanna refers to a male, but read thus: When a male has connection with a male or causes a male to have connection with him; and [the Mishnah] is in accordance with R. Ishmael, who holds¹¹ that one is liable to two sin-offerings.¹² But since the case of the blasphemer is stated in the latter clause of the Mishnah and has been explained in accordance with R. Akiba,¹³ have we not to assume that also the earlier clause is in accordance with R. Akiba? And if you should argue that [the Mishnah] is indeed according to R. Akiba, but that he himself agrees with R. Ishmael's view in the case dealt with in the earlier clause, [I would retort,] did not R. Abbahu say: If a man has connection with a man or causes a man to have connection with him, on the view of R. Ishmael, who derives these [prohibitions] from two different texts, viz., Thou shalt not lie with mankind,¹⁴ and Neither shall there be a sodomite of the sons of Israel,¹⁵ he is liable to two sin-offerings; but according to R. Akiba he is liable to one sin-offering, since he derives both [prohibitions] from one and the same text, viz., 'Thou shalt not lie with mankind', Interpreting this: Thou shalt not cause [mankind] to lie [with thee]?¹⁶ Rather [you must say]: The first clause is according to R. Ishmael, but in the case of the blasphemer he agrees with R. Akiba. If so, the Mishnah should have also stated: When a man covers a beast or causes a beast to cover him? — Surely Abaye said: If a man covers a beast and causes a beast to cover him, even according to R. Ishmael, he is liable to one offering only, because the Scriptural text refers to human males only! R. Eleazar in the name of Rab said:¹⁷ The Tanna of our Mishnah meant to imply the possibility of one person¹⁸ bringing thirty-three sin-offerings,¹⁹ and he mentions the other three instances²⁰ in order to complete the list of sins punishable with kareth. For it reads in the concluding clause: [WHEN ONE TRANSGRESSES THE LAWS OF] THE PASCHAL OFFERING AND CIRCUMCISION — FROM AMONG POSITIVE COMMANDMENTS. Now, wherefore have [the laws concerning the] paschal lamb and circumcision been enumerated? Should you say to intimate that one has to offer a sacrifice on their account?²¹ But does one bring a sacrifice on their account? Has it not been taught: All the laws of the Torah have been brought into analogy with idolatry,²² viz., Ye shall have one law for him that doeth ought in error,²³ and But the person that doeth aught with a high hand:²⁴ Just as the law concerning idolatry is the subject of a prohibition, so have all other transgressions to be the subjects of a prohibition?²⁵ This, therefore, proves that the Tanna speaks of thirty-three transgressions committed in error, and that the other three cases have been mentioned only for the purpose of completing the list of sins punishable with kareth. This proves it.

WHEN ONE DESECRATES THE SABBATH. It was remarked: Are there not thirty-nine different classes of work on Sabbath?²⁶ — Said R. Johanan: Our Tanna speaks of the case [where one was] in error in respect of the Sabbath, but aware of [the prohibition of the various kinds] of work [thereon],²⁷ in which case one is liable to one sacrifice only. For it has been taught:²⁸ How is 'these' resulting in 'one':²⁹ If one is in error in respect of the Sabbath but aware of the prohibition of [various kinds of] work! But why does not the Tanna speak of the case where one was aware of the Sabbath and in error in respect to the prohibition of the various kinds of labour, making him then liable to thirty-nine [sin-offerings]? For has it not been taught:³⁰ . . . and shall do any one of these [transgressions]? Sometimes one is liable to one offering for all transgressions and sometimes to an offering for each of them? [How is] 'one' resulting in 'these': If he was aware of the Sabbath and in error in respect of the work? — Our Tanna prefers to state the instance of the error in respect of the Sabbath and awareness [of the prohibition] of the various kinds of work to let us know that one is not altogether exempted from a sin-offering in such a case.³¹ And you must likewise explain the instance of idolatry of which our Mishnah speaks as referring to an error in respect of the idol but with an awareness of the prohibition of the forms of [idolatrous] worship. How is error in respect of the idol' to be understood? Shall I say that he stood in a house of idolatry and, thinking it was a synagogue, prostrated himself? But then his heart was directed towards Heaven. Again, if he saw a statue and prostrated himself to it, then if he accepted it as a deity, he is subject to stoning; on the other hand, if he did not acknowledge it as a deity, what has he done? Rather he served idols out of love or fear [of a fellow-man].³² That is right according to Abaye who holds³³ one is liable [in such a case!], but according to Raba who says that one is exempted, how is it to be understood?

(1) The text, Lev. XVIII, 9, mentions his father's daughter or his mother's daughter. The full sister, though not explicitly stated, can be derived by the conclusion ad majus. On the basis of this conclusion, however, no penalty is imposed according to the Rabbis. In Lev. XX, 17, however, the full sister is taken to be implied because sister is mentioned there without qualification.

(2) For the latter part she is assumed to be implied in the general term, 'she is thy sister' of Lev. XVIII, 11. Cf. Mak. 5b.

(3) Viz., in case of their transgression in one spell of unawareness.

(4) Ex. XXX, 32.

(5) Ibid. 33.

(6) V. the preceding discussion. R. Isaac employs this special mention of kareth for the derivation of the rule that separate offerings are to be brought for each transgression, whilst the Rabbis derive this rule from another text. According to the Rabbis, the question here will similarly be that that other text is now superfluous.

(7) In cur. edd. the following text is inserted here: 'According to R. Isaac, he derives from this that one is liable in the case of "his sister" who is at the same time his father's sister and his mother's sister. The Rabbis, however, will derive this from "his sister" of the former text; while R. Isaac holds that "his sister" in the former text is essential in the context and derives the rule of separate offerings from the word "his sister" in the latter text: that separate offerings be brought in the case of "his sister" who is at the same time his father's sister and his mother's sister'. This insertion is struck out by Rashi and others.

(8) Which refer to oil and should therefore be stated together.

(9) Viz., with his implication expounded above by R. Johanan that if a person transgresses them all in one spell of unawareness, he is liable to an offering for each trespass.

(10) Of the full total of thirty-four sin-offerings involved for all the transgressions enumerated in the Mishnah. The transgressions relating to the paschal lamb and circumcision involve no sin-offering.

(11) V. Sanh. 54b.

(12) If committing these two offences in one spell of unawareness.

(13) V. infra 7a.

(14) Lev. XVIII, 22.

(15) Deut. XXIII, 18. This refers to the passive agent.

(16) The kal cfa, is read as the hipil chfa, .

(17) In answer to the original query as to whether the Tanna refers to a man or woman.

(18) Viz., a male.

(19) And not thirty-four as hitherto assumed.

(20) I.e., the one which does not apply equally to man and woman and those transgressions relating to the paschal lamb and circumcision.

(21) I.e., that they be included in the statement of the Mishnah regarding the bringing of a sin-offering in the case of transgression in error.

(22) Mak. 13b.

(23) Num. XV, 29.

(24) Ibid. 30. The latter text refers to idolatry. The juxtaposition of the texts effects the analogy.

(25) In order to involve a sin-offering.

(26) V. Shab. VII, 1. Our Mishnah should therefore, on the view of R. Johanan, have enumerated seventy-four transgressions for the commission of which one would be liable to many sin-offerings.

(27) I.e., he did not know that the day was Sabbath, though he knew that work was prohibited on the Sabbath Day.

(28) Shab. 70b.

(29) The twofold partitive prefix in vbvn , j tn, Lev. IV, 2 is an unusual construction. Both prefixes are regarded as significant, to be used separately: firstly as , j t vbvn 'one out of these', indicating that several prohibited acts may be counted as one transgression, namely when they result from one error; secondly as vbv , j tn 'these out of one', implying that one law e.g., Sabbath, may lead to several transgressions, namely when the various acts originate in different errors. The former implication is expressed in the Gemara in the terms that 'these' results in 'one', and the latter that 'one' results in 'these'.

(30) Sanh. 62a.

(31) Contrary to the possible assumption that since he was aware that the work was prohibited he is to be regarded as having sinned with presumption.

(32) Thinking that with this motive worship was not forbidden.

(33) V. Sanh. 61b.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 3b

— Rather [it is to be understood] where he thought that the worship of idols was permitted. For Raba's question to R. Nahman¹ was whether one is liable to one offering or to two;² that one should be exempted altogether was never suggested by him.³ R. Papa said: It is possible⁴ where one had been captured as a child by heathens, he would know that idolatry was forbidden,⁵ but not that these particular idols were forbidden. Or if you wish, I may say that they can occur also with an adult,⁶ where e.g., he erred in the interpretation of the verse, Ye shall not make with the gods of silver or gods of gold, etc.⁷ and assumed that only the prostration before idols of gold or silver was forbidden, but not of any other material. This would then be a case of error in respect of the idol and awareness of the prohibition of the forms of worship. R. Aha the son of R. Ika said in the name of R. Bibi:⁸ Our Tanna enumerates Sabbath as a class and idolatry as a class.⁹ Whence [do we know this]? — It says, WITH A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER, OR WITH A MARRIED WOMAN. Now there is still the case of his daughter from a woman outraged by him, which is not mentioned in the Mishnah.¹⁰ [But] I might retort [the reason of this omission is that] the laws written in the Torah are mentioned, the laws not written in the Torah are not mentioned!¹¹ — Surely there are still the instances of his wife's daughter, her daughter's daughter and her son's daughter, which are written in the Torah¹² and yet not mentioned in our Mishnah. You are thus obliged to say that the whole class of woman and daughter is meant to be implied in the Mishnah; similarly interpret the Mishnah as referring to the class of Sabbath and the class of idolatry. R. Aha the son of R. Ika found that he [R. Bibi] contradicted himself. For how could R. Bibi b. Abaye say here, 'Our Tanna enumerates the Sabbath as a class and idolatry as a class'; was it not stated: 'If one offered up [the sacrificial] limbs [of an offering] slaughtered inside the Temple precincts outside the Temple court, one is liable; similarly, if he offered up outside limbs [of an offering that was slaughtered] outside [the Temple precincts] he is liable'?'¹³ And in connection with this R. Bibi b. Abaye himself raised the difficulty: If so, how does the Mishnah state, THERE ARE IN THE TORAH THIRTY-SIX TRANSGRESSIONS PUNISHABLE WITH EXTINCTION? Are there not thirty-seven such transgressions, since there are the two cases of one offering up [outside] sacrificial portions. Now, what is his difficulty, since one can retort that the Tanna states the offering up as a class? What comparison is there? The laws of Sabbath and of idolatry are stated [elsewhere] in their proper place [in a Mishnah];¹⁴ when being mentioned here again in connection with kareth, it suffices to enumerate Sabbath and idolatry as types. But as to the laws of offering up, where is the place [in a Mishnah] that they have been stated,¹⁵ that you could reply in the same manner?

R. Jeremiah put the following query before R. Zera: What is the ruling when two separate pronouncements of kareth are attended by only one negative command?¹⁶ — He replied: You refer, I suppose, to ‘slaughtering’ and ‘offering up’ [outside the Temple precincts],¹⁷ but are there not in this case two negative commands?¹⁸ For according to him who derives ‘slaughtering’ from a gezerah shawah¹⁹ based upon the common term haba’ah²⁰ mentioned [in connection with ‘slaughtering’ and ‘offering up’], just as in the latter [the text] did not pronounce punishment without having expressed a warning,²¹ so also in the former it has not pronounced punishment without an attended [implicit] warning; and according to him who derives it from a hekkesh,¹⁹ the verse says: There thou shalt offer [thy burnt-offerings] and there thou shalt do [all that I command thee],²² Scripture has thus compared ‘slaughtering’ and ‘offering up’, just as in the case of ‘offering up’ it has not pronounced punishment without having expressed a warning, so also with ‘slaughtering’ it did not pronounce punishment without an attended [implicit] warning. Your query is, perhaps, in regard to two separate pronouncements of the death penalty attended by only one negative command, as is the case with the ob and yidde'oni.²³ — He replied: On this there is a dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish. For among the transgressions punishable by stoning we find enumerated²⁴ both the ba'al ob and yidde'oni, and the question was raised: Why was yidde'oni mentioned in connection with ‘stoning’ but omitted in connection with kareth? Whereupon R. Johanan replied: Because they were both under one negative command,²⁵ and the reason why ba'al ob and not yidde'oni was chosen, is that in Scripture ba'al ob is mentioned first; while Resh Lakish said that it is because [the offence of] yidde'oni involves no action.²⁶ Why did not Resh Lakish say as R. Johanan — Said R. Papa: Because he holds these two laws are after all stated separately in respect of the pronouncement of the death penalty,²⁷ while R. Johanan maintains that only where there are separate negative commands are there separate offerings, but separate pronouncements in respect of the death penalty do not involve separate offerings. And why does not R. Johanan say as Resh Lakish? — Because he holds that the Mishnah relating to kareth is according to R. Akiba,²⁸ who holds that action is not essential [for the liability to a sin-offering]. And Resh Lakish? [He maintains that] although R. Akiba does not require a weighty action, he still considers it essential that some slight action be performed. What action is there in connection with ob? — The clapping of the arms²⁹ is regarded as an action. What action is performed by the blasphemer? — The curving of the lips³⁰ is considered an action.

On the assumption that the clapping of the arms is considered a slight action even according to the Rabbis,³¹ the following objection was raised: It was taught: In the case of idolatry one is liable only for an action such as sacrificing, the offering of incense or libation, or prostration,³² and when the difficulty was pointed out that prostration was not an action, Resh Lakish replied that this ruling was in accordance with R. Akiba who held that [weighty] action was not essential; while R. Johanan said: The ruling might conform even to the view of the Rabbis, for the bending of stature³³ was to be considered as an action. It thus appears that in the opinion of Resh Lakish³⁴ the Rabbis do not consider the ‘bending of stature’ an action. How then can the clapping of the arms³⁵ be regarded as an action? — What, then, will you maintain that when Resh Lakish stated that the clapping of the arms is considered an action it was made on the view of R. Akiba, but that according to the Rabbis it was not to be considered an action;³⁶ why in this case [does the Mishnah] state, THIS IS TO EXCLUDE THE BLASPHEMER WHO PERFORMS NO ACTION? It should have stated, This is to exclude the blasphemer and the ba'al ob! — [The Mishnah mentions] one of two [as an example].³⁷ But then let it mention ba'al ob³⁸ instead of the blasphemer? — [The explicit exclusion of] the blasphemer was necessary, for I might otherwise have thought that, since the pronouncement of kareth in his case is in juxtaposition to laws relating to offerings,³⁹ the Rabbis agreed with R. Akiba with regard to the blasphemer. Therefore [the Mishnah] teaches us that this is not so. 'Ulla said: Ba'al ob mentioned in the Mishnah means the offering of incense⁴⁰ to the Prince of the Demons.⁴¹ Raba demurred to this: If this is so, is not this idolatry?⁴² Rather Raba explained: [It means,] He offers incense to a demon in order to exorcise him.⁴³ Abaye demurred to this: If so, is this not identical with 'one who charms'?⁴⁴ — He replied: The Torah has said that one who charms after this manner [is liable to death] by stoning. And what kind of charm, then, is subject to a mere negative command?⁴⁵ — He replied: As has been taught:⁴⁶ And one who indeed charms,⁴⁷ implies both the charmer of large and of small animals; even the charmer of a snake or scorpion is guilty.

Said Abaye: It is prohibited to cast a spell over a wasp and a scorpion,⁴⁸ but if they follow him, it is permitted. According to R. Johanan, who holds that the bending of stature is regarded as an action, why should not also the curving

The disjunctive particle 'or' in Lev. XX, 27 in connection with the death penalty serves to attach the death penalty to each of these two offences and it is regarded as if two separate pronouncements of the death penalty were made, whereas the negative command ibid. XIX, 31 is general in its implication, serving as a single warning for all the offences enumerated there, and thus the query is whether the fact that there are two pronouncements of death, although there is only one attendant warning, makes one liable to two sin-offerings for committing these two offences in one spell of unawareness?

of the lips be considered an action?¹ — Said Raba: Different it is with the blasphemer, for it is the disposition of his heart² [that effects the sin]. But elsewhere the curving of the lips would be considered an action. R. Zera demurred to this: [We have learnt:] Zomemim³ witnesses are exempt [from an offering] because they have done no action,⁴ Why is this so? Is it not written in connection with them: By the mouth of two witnesses?⁵ — Said Raba: Zomemim witness, too, are an exception, because the basis of evidence is seeing.⁶

WHEN ONE EATS HELEB. Our Rabbis taught: The text, Ye shall eat no heleb of ox, or sheep or goat,⁷ [intimates] that one is liable [to a separate flagellation] for each kind [of heleb].⁸ Thus R. Ishmael. But the Sages say: One is liable only once. Shall we say that this difference of opinion is based on the following principle: R. Ishmael holds one is liable to [a separate] flagellation for [each specification of] a collective prohibition,⁹ while the Rabbis hold that one is not liable to [a separate] flagellation? — No, R. Ishmael indeed holds that one is ordinarily not liable [separately] for [each specification of] a collective prohibition, but our case is an exception, because the text is superfluous; for it should read, 'Ye shall not eat any heleb', why specify 'of ox, or sheep or goat', if not for the purpose of establishing a separate [prohibition for each of them]? And the Rabbis? — [They argue,] If 'ox, or sheep or goat' were not mentioned, I might have said that also the heleb of a beast of chase is included. It is for this reason that 'ox, or sheep or goat' was written, to tell us that only the heleb of ox, sheep or goat is forbidden, but that of the beast of chase is permitted. The Rabbis thus argue well, do they not? — Rather, this is the reason of R. Ishmael: He holds that if it were [as the Rabbis say] Scripture should have written: 'Ye shall eat no heleb of an ox', why have 'sheep' and 'goat' been mentioned, if not for the purpose of establishing a separate prohibition [for each of them]? The Rabbis, on the other hand, argue that if the Divine Law wrote, 'no heleb of an ox', I might have thought that the term 'ox' here was to be analogous to ox mentioned in connection with Sabbath:¹⁰ As in the case of Sabbath the beast of chase and the fowl were included, so also in connection with the eating of heleb the beast of chase and fowl are included. It is for this reason that 'ox, or sheep or goat' were enumerated, to teach us that only the heleb of these is forbidden, but that of the beast of chase and the fowl is permitted. The Rabbis thus argue well? Rather, this is the reason [of R. Ishmael]: He holds [Scripture] should have written: 'Ye shall eat no heleb of sheep' or 'Ye shall eat no heleb of goat'; why enumerate 'ox, or sheep or goat', if not in order to establish a separate [prohibition for each of them]. The Rabbis, on the other hand, argue: Had [Scripture] mentioned only 'no heleb of sheep',¹¹ might have assumed that only the heleb of sheep was forbidden, but that of ox and goat was permitted. And if you were to ask, why should sheep be an exception, [the retort would be] because it was singled out in that its fat-tail is offered upon the altar, even as R. Hanania taught:¹¹ Why has [Scripture] enumerated separately the emurim¹² of the ox, and the emurim of the sheep and the emurim of the goat, as it is written:¹³ But the firstling of an ox, etc.¹⁴ It is necessary; for if 'ox' alone was written, I would not have derived 'sheep' and 'goat' from it, for I might object that 'ox' was an exception, since it is singled out with regard to libations.¹⁵ Had the Divine Law written only 'sheep', so that 'ox' and 'goat' should be derived from it, I might object that 'sheep' was an exception, since it was singled out in that its fat-tail [is offered upon the altar].¹⁶ Had the Divine Law written only 'goat', so that 'ox' and 'sheep' should be derived from it, I might object that 'goat' was an exception, since it was singled out [as the offering] for idolatry.¹⁷ We thus cannot derive from any single one the other two. But why did not Scripture mention two and we might have derived the third from them? — Which one? Shall we derive 'ox' from 'sheep' and 'goat'? I might object that 'sheep' and 'goat' were an exception, since they were both singled out to be offered as a paschal sacrifice.¹⁸ If [Scripture] would not have written 'sheep', leaving us to derive it from 'ox' and 'goat', [I would have objected] that 'ox' and 'goat' were an exception, since they were both singled out as offerings for idolatry.¹⁹ If it would not have written 'goat', leaving us to derive it from 'ox' and 'sheep' [I would have objected] that 'ox' and 'sheep' were exceptions in that they were both singled out in some aspect [regarding the altar].²⁰ Hence they cannot be derived one from the other. Did not then the Rabbis argue well? — Rather, the reason of R. Ishmael is indeed as has been said at the outset: [viz.,] that if it were so [Scripture] should have written: '[Ye shall eat] no heleb', and no more; and as to your objection that the mention of 'ox', 'sheep' and 'goat' was necessary to teach that the heleb of the beast of chase was permitted, surely the text [in question] occurs in connection with a similar text which relates to consecrated animals,²¹ and a law is always illuminated by its context.²² This implies [does it not] that the Rabbis do not hold that a law is illuminated by its context?²³ — No, all agree that a law is illuminated by its context but here they differ in the following: R. Ishmael holds that such [a law which is the subject of] a mere negative command is illuminated [by its context] whether [the latter is likewise the subject] of a mere negative command or of one involving kareth;²⁴ while the Rabbis hold that [a law which is the subject of] a mere negative command is illuminated [by its context] which is [the subject of a mere] negative command, but a law which is [the subject of] a mere negative command is not illuminated by [a context which is] the subject of [a negative command involving] kareth.²⁵ Or, if you wish, I can say that the reason of the Rabbis is [that the enumeration of the various kinds of fat was necessary to teach] that which is intimated in a question of R. Mari to R. Zebid: 'If so, why should not the fat-tail of non-consecrated animals be altogether forbidden?'²⁶ He replied: 'It is to provide against an argument such as yours that Scripture specifies, All heleb of ox, sheep or goat, to teach us that only those portions of fat which these three animals have in common are forbidden, to the exclusion [of the fat-tail].'²⁷ The enumeration of 'ox', 'sheep' and 'goat' is thus for the purpose of permitting for use the fat-tail of unconsecrated animals. R. Ishmael, on the other hand, will argue: If for this reason, Scripture should have said: 'No heleb of ox and sheep'. Therefore when 'goat' was added, it was for the purpose of establishing a separate prohibition for each of them.

Said R. Hanina: R. Ishmael, however, agrees that with regard to offerings only one sin-offering is brought [for the several kinds of heleb]. What is the reason? Because this prohibition is not like that relating to incestuous relations.²⁸

Our Sages have taught: [It is written:] And [he] shall do any one [sin], and also, And shall do these;²⁹ this is to render one liable for each transgression separately, so that if one ate [e.g.,] two portions of heleb of the same designation under two separate spells of unawareness, he is liable to two offerings; [similarly] if the portions were of two different designations,³⁰ though they were consumed under one spell of unawareness, one is liable to two offerings. Said Rami son of Hama to R. Hisda: It is right that where the portions were of one designation but consumed under two spells of unawareness one should be liable to two offerings, because [the break in] the spell of unawareness effected a division [between the two meals], but why should one be liable to two offerings in the case where the portions were of different designations and consumed under one spell of unawareness? Surely we need a break in the spell of unawareness to effect a division, which is not the case here? — He replied: Here we deal with the case where he ate heleb of nothar,³¹ when he is liable on account of nothar and on account of heleb. Said he to him: If so, he should be liable also on account of the consecrated flesh?³² — Rather, said R. Shesheth: It refers to one who ate the heleb of a consecrated animal and it is in accordance with R. Judah.³³ For it has been taught: If one eats heleb of nebelah,³⁴ or heleb of consecrated animals, one is liable on two counts. R. Judah holds, in the case of heleb of a consecrated animal, one is liable on three counts.³⁵ In Palestine³⁶ this answer was ridiculed; [for they argued] why did we not explain it as referring to portions of heleb from an ox, sheep and goat, and in accordance with R. Ishmael who maintained that one was then liable on three counts?

Firstly, a prohibition which is not explicit but implied in the text, such as in Num. VI, 4 as expounded in Pes. 41b; secondly, as it is used here, a law which is joined in the text with others in one prohibitory commandment. In the first instance the question is whether one is liable to flagellation at all, in the second whether one is liable separately for each specification, if several of them were perpetrated together.

- (24) In cur. edd. the following text, which is obviously out of place here and is also considered by Rashi as a faulty version, is inserted here: (For the negative command,) any heleb of ox, sheep or goat, you shall not eat, (Lev. VII, 23) is illuminated by the negative command, It shall be a statute throughout your generations in all your dwellings that ye shall eat neither heleb nor blood (Lev. III, 17) which is written in connection with consecrated animals; and since the beast of chase is excluded from the category of consecrated animals, there would be no doubt as to the exclusion of beasts of chase, even if heleb unqualified was mentioned in the text. The enumeration of 'ox', 'sheep' and 'goat' is thus for the purpose of establishing a separate offering for each of them. Then, the mere negative command, 'Ye shall eat no heleb' and the one contained in the verse of 'it shall be a perpetual statute' may be derived from one to which kareth is attached, in the text, For whosoever eateth the heleb of the beast of which men present an offering (Lev. Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 4b

Why then was it not explained in accordance with R. Ishmael? Obviously because R. Hanina said that R. Ishmael admitted that in so far as offerings were concerned one was liable only to one¹ — for the same reason you cannot explain it in accordance with R. Judah; for R. Eleazar said: R. Judah, too, agreed that with regard to offerings one is liable only to one. Therefore, said Resh Lakish on behalf of Bar Tutani: It deals with one who ate two portions of heleb in two different dishes, and is in accordance with R. Joshua, who holds that the separation of dishes effects a division with regard to offerings.

[Stated] the text [above]: ‘If one eats heleb of nebelah, one is liable on two counts, [similarly] if one eats heleb of consecrated animals one is liable on two counts. R. Judah holds, in the case of heleb of consecrated animals, one is liable on three counts’. Said R. Shizbi to Raba: It is well on the view of R. Judah; for this reason are written three verses: It shall be a perpetual statute etc., Ye shall eat no heleb of an ox, or sheep or goat, and There shall no common man eat of the holy things;² constituting three negative commands. But what is the reason of the Rabbis? — They hold, The negative command, ‘It shall be a perpetual statute [etc.]’ deals with consecrated animals, and the negative command, ‘[No] heleb of an ox . . .’ deals with unconsecrated animals. And both texts were necessary, for if the Divine Law had written only that of consecrated animals, I might have said that only the heleb of consecrated animals was forbidden by reason of their stringency, but that of unconsecrated animals was not [included in the prohibition]. Therefore the Divine Law wrote: ‘No heleb of an ox . . .’. And if only ‘no heleb of an ox’ was written, I might have thought that only the heleb of unconsecrated animals was forbidden, because it has not been excluded from the general prohibition; but as to the heleb of consecrated animals, since it has been excluded from the general prohibition,³ I might have thought that since it is thus excluded, their fat is permitted;⁴ therefore both texts are necessary. R. Judah, on the other hand, holds that when ‘no heleb of an ox’ is written⁵ it relates also to consecrated animals.⁶ This implies [does it not] that the Rabbis hold that a law is not illuminated by its context? — No, all agree that a law is illuminated by its context, but they differ in the following: R. Judah holds that a law which is the subject of a mere negative command is illuminated by its context, whether the latter is likewise the subject of a mere negative command or of one involving kareth; while the Rabbis hold that a law which is the subject of a mere negative command is illuminated by its context which is also the subject of a mere negative command, but a law which is the subject of a mere negative command is not illuminated by its context which is the subject of a native command involving kareth.⁷

It has been taught: [From the text,] ‘Ye shall eat neither heleb nor blood’, [we learn:] Just as for heleb one is liable to a twofold flagellation’ so also for blood. Thus the view of R. Judah; while the Sages say: There is only one prohibition.⁸ But why is heleb different in that one is liable for it to a twofold flagellation, even though there is no hekkesh⁹ [to support it]? Obviously because there is written in Scripture concerning it two texts: ‘Ye shall eat neither heleb nor blood’, and ‘[Ye shall eat no] heleb of an ox or sheep’; then similarly in the case of blood even without the hekkesh,¹⁰ one should be liable to a twofold flagellation,¹¹ since Scripture has written in connection therewith two texts: ‘Ye shall eat neither heleb nor blood’ and ‘Ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings’?¹² — Rather read thus: Just as for heleb¹³ one is liable to a threefold flagellation, so also for blood¹³ one is liable to a threefold flagellation. But why is heleb different in that one is liable for it to a threefold flagellation? Obviously because there is written in connection therewith the two negative commands mentioned above, and because of the negative command [relating to the eating of holy things by] a non-priest,¹⁴ making altogether three; then the same applies to blood!¹⁵ — [The hekkesh] is necessary, for I might otherwise have thought, since blood is excluded from the law of sacrilege,¹⁶ it is also excluded from the law concerning the [eating of holy things by a] non-priest. It is for this reason that the hekkesh is necessary. And as to the Rabbis,¹⁷ what is the purpose of the hekkesh? — It is required for what has been taught: ‘Ye shall eat neither heleb nor blood’; just as heleb is singled out in that it is distinct from its flesh,¹⁸ and thus does not combine with the latter,¹⁹ so also with blood, [it does not combine with the flesh] whenever it is distinct from its flesh,²⁰ to the exclusion of the blood of a reptile.²¹ since the blood of the reptile is not distinct from its flesh, the two combine.²² But is this law²³ derived from here, is it not rather derived from the following: The text, And these are they which are unclean unto you,²⁴ teaches that the blood of a reptile and its flesh combine with one another?²⁵ — If it were not for the hekkesh I might have thought [the law referred] to defilement,²⁶ but not to eating; the hekkesh therefore informs us that [the law refers] also to eating. Said Rabina: Consequently the blood of a snake²⁷ and its flesh²⁸ combine one with the other. Is this not obvious; it is just [the conclusion drawn from] the hekkesh? I might have thought that with the case of other reptiles,²⁹ since the law applies in respect of uncleanness, it applies also in respect of eating; but in the case of a snake, since it does not apply in respect of defilement, it does not apply also in respect of eating; therefore he³⁰ lets us know that the hekkesh is to comprise everything in which the blood is not distinct from its flesh.

Said Raba: Wherefore has kareth been pronounced three times³¹ in connection with blood? One [pronouncement] refers to blood of unconsecrated animals, the other to blood of consecrated animals, and the third to the dripping blood.³² This is right according to R. Judah, for it has been taught: The dripping blood is the subject of a mere prohibition; R. Judah says it involves kareth. But according to the Rabbis,³³ what is the purpose [of the third pronouncement]? And even according to R. Judah, is not the application of kareth³⁴ rather derived from the term ‘all blood’? For it has been taught: ‘R. Judah said, [The word] ‘blood’ [would suffice in the text],³⁵ why does it read ‘all blood’? I might have thought that only the blood of consecrated animals, and that only with which life departs, was meant, because this blood brings about atonement;³⁶ whence do we know then blood of unconsecrated animals and dripping blood? It is for this reason that ‘all blood’ was written’! — Rather say thus: One [pronouncement] refers to blood of unconsecrated animals, the other to blood of consecrated animals, and the third to blood that has been covered.³⁷

Raba also said, Wherefore have five negative commandments been mentioned in connection with blood?³⁸ One for blood of unconsecrated animals, the other for blood of consecrated animals, the third for covered blood, the fourth for blood left in the limbs and the fifth for the dripping blood.

R. Ela said: If one eats³⁹ of the [second] tithe of corn, of wine and of oil, one is liable to a threefold flagellation. But are [separate] lashes administered for [each specification of] a collective prohibition? This case is an exception for the text is redundant. Consider: The Divine Law states, And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God [in the place which He shall choose to cause His name to dwell there], the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine and of thine oil,⁴⁰ [from which we may infer that these shall be consumed] within [the precincts of Jerusalem] and not without; wherefore does the Divine Law repeat: Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine and of thine oil,⁴¹ if not for the purpose of establishing separate [prohibitions for each specification]? But [it may be retorted], if [I had] the first text [only to go by], I would say it is the subject only of a positive command, but not of a negative command.⁴² It was thus essential

(1) I.e., though several negative commandments are transgressed, and the administration of lashes is therefore accordingly repeated, with reference to expiation by sacrifice they are regarded as one.

- (2) Lev. III, 17; VII, 23 and XXII, 10.
- (3) It is permissible to the altar.
- (4) V. Sh. Mek. for this reading.
- (5) V. Lev. VII, 23-25.
- (6) So that there are two negative commands concerning heleb of consecrated animals.
- (7) For notes v. supra 4a. In cur. edd. the following faulty text (v. Rashi) is inserted here: 'But according to R. Judah for what purpose does Scripture mention the passage, Ye shall eat neither heleb nor blood (Lev. III, 17)? — To establish an analogy'.
- (8) And consequently there can be only one administration of lashes.
- (9) v. Glos.
- (10) The textual analogy comparing blood to heleb.
- (11) I.e., the mere repetition of the negative command is sufficient to establish a twofold flagellation. The fact of the juxtaposition of heleb and blood in the text is thus unaccounted for.
- (12) Lev. VII, 26.
- (13) Viz., of a consecrated animal.
- (14) Ibid. XXII, 10. comprising apparently heleb as well as blood.
- (15) What need is there then for the analogy.
- (16) Thus the version of Rashi. Cur. edd. read 'uncleanness'. Cf. Hul. 117a.
- (17) According to whom blood of a consecrated animal is excluded from the law concerning the non-priest.
- (18) The law of heleb singles out a certain portion of the animal and forbids it for use, while the rest of the body is permitted.
- (19) Viz., to make up the requisite quantity sc. of an olive-size. I.e., if one eats a fraction of an olive of heleb and the supplementary fraction of flesh, one is not liable to lashes, for the flesh is not forbidden.
- (20) Whereas the penalty of kareth attaches to the blood, the flesh of an unclean animal does not carry such a penalty, and consequently blood and flesh do not combine not even with regard to uncleanness.
- (21) Which is not prohibited as blood but as part of the reptile, cf. infra 21b.
- (22) Viz., with reference to uncleanness and eating.
- (23) Viz., the one relating to reptiles.
- (24) Lev. XI, 29.
- (25) V. Me'il. 17a.
- (26) I.e., the combination of blood and flesh is adopted only with reference to defilement which is more stringent, in so far as the standard quantity is a lentil, while for eating an olive-size is required.
- (27) Which does not cause defilement, but is forbidden for eating.
- (28) I.e., now that we know that the rule concerning the combination of flesh and blood applies also to eating.
- (29) Viz., the eight reptiles that are unclean.
- (30) Viz., Rabina.
- (31) Lev. VII, 27; XVII, 10 and 14.
- (32) I.e., the blood which, after a while, flows gently from the cut artery, in opposition to the blood which gushes forth immediately after the cut has been made, and with which life is considered to depart; cf. infra 22a.
- (33) Those who dispute with R. Judah.
- (34) Viz., to dripping blood.
- (35) Lev. XVII, 10, which deals with the prohibition of blood.
- (36) This gushing blood alone may be used for sprinkling, cf. Pes. 65a. This restriction of the law to blood suitable for atonement might have found a support in the following passage: And I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls (ibid. 11).

(37) The blood of fowls and beasts has to be covered, cf. Lev. XVII, 13. This blood is prohibited even though it has been mixed with dust. This answer complies with the view of the Rabbis, for according to R. Judah blood of unconsecrated animals is derived by implication from 'all blood'.

(38) Viz., Ibid. III, 17; VII, 26; XVII, 14; Deut. XII, 16 and 23.

(39) Viz., outside Jerusalem. Second tithe or its equivalent has to be consumed in Jerusalem; cf. Deut. XIV, 22f. In v. 23 corn, wine and oil are enumerated as specifications of the general law.

(40) Deut. XIV, 23.

(41) Ibid. XII, 17.

(42) Lashes are inflicted only for the transgression of a prohibitory law and not for the omission of a positive injunction. The prohibition derived by implication from a positive commandment bears in this respect the status of a positive commandment.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 5a

that the Divine Law should write, 'Thou mayest not [eat] . . .' in order to make it the subject of a negative command. [The question thus] still [stands]. Is it not a collective prohibition? — If it were so, Scripture should have said, 'Thou mayest not eat them within thy gates', why specify, 'the tithe of thy corn, thy wine and thine oil', if not in order to establish separate prohibitions for each of them?

Said R. Isaac: if one eats of the bread, of the parched corn and of the fresh ears,¹ one is liable to a threefold flagellation. But are [separate] lashes administered for [each specification of] a collective prohibition? — This is an exception, as the text is redundant; for Scripture should have stated only 'bread', and 'parched corn' and 'fresh ears' would have been derived therefrom. But one might in this case have objected: 'Bread' is different because it is subject to hallah?² — Then 'parched corn' alone should have been written omitting 'bread',³ and we would derive the others therefrom! — But 'bread' could not be derived from 'parched corn', because 'parched corn' is a produce in its natural state, while 'bread' is not in its natural state; similarly 'fresh ears' could not be derived from 'parched corn', because 'parched corn' is distinguished in that it is fit for meal-offerings,⁴ while 'fresh ears' are not fit for meal-offerings? — Then 'fresh ears' alone should have been written, and we could derive 'bread' and 'parched corn' therefrom! But, then, I would object, 'fresh ears' were different in that they retain their original character. It is thus established that from any single one the other two cannot be derived; but let us derive one from two? — Now, if 'bread' was not written, leaving it to be derived from 'parched corn' and 'fresh ears', I might object, these two were distinguished in that they are in their natural form. If 'fresh ears' was not written, leaving them to be derived from 'bread' and 'parched corn', I might object that these two were distinguished in that they are included in the law of meal-offering?⁵ — R. Isaac will tell you: [Scripture] should not have written 'parched corn', leaving it to be derived from 'bread' and 'fresh ears. For what objection could then be raised? If you argued: 'Bread' was exceptional in that it is subject to hallah, 'fresh ears' will prove the contrary; and if that 'fresh ears' were exceptional because they retain their original character, 'bread' will prove the contrary. It is from this superfluous text that we learn that separate lashes are inflicted [for each specification]. But why not say then, that 'parched corn', the mention of which is superfluous, is singled out for flagellation,⁶ but if one eats them all, one is still liable only once to flagellation? — If this were so, Scripture should read in this order: 'Bread!', 'fresh ears' and 'parched corn', or 'parched corn',

'bread' and 'fresh ears'; why is 'parched corn' placed between the other two, apparently that we may understand it thus: For 'bread' just as for 'parched corn' one is liable [to a separate flagellation], and for 'fresh ears' just as for 'parched corn' one is liable [to a separate flagellation].

Said R. Jannai: Never treat a *gezerah shawah*⁷ lightly, for behold the law of piggul,⁷ which is one of the essential precepts of the Torah,⁸ has been derived through a gezerah shawah; even as R. Johanan said: Zabda son of Levi taught: Elsewhere we read, Everyone that eateth it shall bear his iniquity,⁹ and here we read, And the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity;¹⁰ as there¹¹ the penalty prescribed is kareth, so also here it is kareth.

Said R. Simai: Never treat a gezerah shawah lightly, for behold the law concerning nothar,¹² which is one of the essential precepts of the Torah,¹³ has only been derived through a gezerah shawah. What is [the gezerah shawah]? — The derivation of kodesh [holy] from kodesh [in the following texts]: Everyone that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the holy thing of the Lord,¹⁴ and Thou shalt burn the nothar with fire, [it shall not be eaten] because it is holy.¹⁵

Said Abaye: Never treat a gezerah shawah lightly, for behold the law concerning a man's daughter from an outraged woman is one of the essential precepts¹⁶ of the Torah, and yet it has been derived only through a gezerah shawah, as Raba said: R. Isaac son of Abdimi told me: As to the prohibition, this law is derived from the similarity of the expression hennah,¹⁷ and with regard to the penalty of burning from the similarity of the expression zimmah.¹⁸

Said R. Ashi: Never treat a gezerah shawah lightly, for death by stoning [as a penalty for many transgressions] is an essential regulation of the Torah, and yet [in several cases] it has been derived only through a gezerah shawah, as it has been taught:¹⁹ We find here²⁰ the expression *demehem bam*²¹ and we find the same expression in connection with ob and yidde'oni:²² As in the latter case the penalty prescribed is stoning, so also in the former case it is stoning.

WHEN ONE COMPOUNDS OIL [OF ANOINTING] . . . Our Rabbis have taught: If one compounds oil [of anointing] for experimenting or with the intention to hand it over to the community, he is not culpable; if for anointment he is culpable, though the person that anoints himself therewith is exempt, because the transgression concerning the use of the oil is limited to the oil of anointment which Moses himself compounded.²³ The Master said: 'If for experimenting or with the intention to hand it over to the community, he is not culpable'. Whence do we know this? — It is derived by means of the common expression *mathkunto*²⁴ mentioned here and in connection with incense. And with reference to incense it is written, Ye shall not make unto yourselves,²⁵ which implies that one is culpable only if compounded for oneself, but not with the intention to hand it over to the community; similarly with regard to the oil, if it is compounded with the intention to hand it over to the community, one is exempted. But why not then again derive incense from the oil: Just as in the case of the oil one is exempted if one compounded half the prescribed quantity, so also with incense, he should be exempted if he compounded half the prescribed quantity; why then did Raba say:²⁶ If one compounds incense in half the quantity prescribed, he is culpable, but if one compounds oil in half the quantity, he is exempt? — Raba will reply: In connection with oil it is written, Ye shall not make any like it according to the composition thereof 'Like it' it is prohibited, but in half the prescribed quantity it is permitted; but in connection with incense, it is written, And the incense which thou shalt make:²⁷ All compounding of incense [is forbidden], for one can offer up half the quantity in the morning and half in the evening.²⁸

Our Rabbis have taught: [The composition of the] oil of anointment is [as follows]: Five hundred shekels of flowing myrrh, five hundred of cassia, five hundred of sweet cinnamon and two hundred and fifty of sweet calamus, together one thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels. Was it necessary for the Tanna to state the sum total? — To obviate the following assumption,²⁹ for one might say, Sweet calamus was like sweet cinnamon: as with sweet cinnamon the figure two hundred and fifty [mentioned in the text] is half the prescribed quantity, so also with reference to sweet calamus,³⁰ in which case the total weight would be two thousand. And indeed why not say so? Then it should have written: 'Sweet cinnamon and sweet calamus, half so much of each, even two hundred and fifty shekels'.

R. Papa asked Abaye: When one weighs [the incense],³¹ does one weigh it with' overweight or exactly? — He replied: The Divine Law has written, 'Of each shall there be a like weight',³² and you say that there shall be an overweight. But did not Rab Judah say, The Holy One, blessed be He, takes note of overweight [in incense],³³ which obviously implies that it had an overweight? — Rather, said R. Judah: Why are the five hundred shekels of sweet cinnamon taken in two portions of two hundred and fifty each? Since the total quantity is five hundred, why not bring the whole at a time?³⁴ From the fact that sweet cinnamon is brought in two portions we may infer that there was an overweight each time,³⁵ and [to be sure] the Holy One, blessed be He, takes note of overweight. And what is the meaning of, 'Of each shall there be a like weight'? — Said Rabina: That one should not weigh first with the weight and use afterwards the weighed amount as a weight for the others.

The Rabbis have taught: The oil [of anointment] which Moses compounded in the wilderness was boiled with the roots [of the spices],³⁶ thus the view of R. Judah. Said to him R. Jose: Surely the oil³⁷ would not suffice even for smearing the roots;³⁸ what then did he do? He boiled³⁹ the roots in water,⁴⁰ poured over them the oil, which thus absorbed the scent, and wiped off [the oil from the roots].⁴¹ R. Judah said to him:

(1) Viz., of the new crop, prior to the offering of the 'Omer sacrifice, Lev. XXIII, 10f.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) As well as 'fresh ears'.

(4) Viz., the 'Omer meal-offering, cf. Lev. II, 14 and Men. 66b. Rashi indeed reads here: 'the meal-offering of the 'Omer'.

(5) Bread is offered on Pentecost. Since then all the three specifications are necessary, whence does R. Isaac derive his ruling?

(6) I.e., that one is liable to lashes if one has eaten parched corn alone. The redundant text is to teach us that the flagellation is not conditional in every case upon the eating of the three enumerated products together.

(7) V. Glos.

(8) Viz., the fact that kareth is attached to it. Although the penalty of kareth is mentioned in the text relating to piggul, Lev. XIX, 8, the Gemara's exposition in Zeb. 28a of this passage is that the pronouncement of kareth refers XVIII, 17 dealing with the prohibition of intercourse with a woman and her daughter, both married unto him or not; and then in v. 10 relating to the prohibition of intercourse with one's grand-daughter. The latter text is interpreted in Yeb. 97a as referring to the grand-daughter from an outraged woman, and not of one legally married to him. We thus find explicitly that one's grand-daughter from an outraged woman is forbidden. The daughter of an outraged woman is not explicitly mentioned, but the gezerah shawah establishes an analogy between a married woman (v. 17) and an outraged woman (v. 20): as in the first instance daughter and grand-daughter are on the same footing, so also in the latter.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 5b

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 5b

Is this the only miracle that occurred in connection with the oil of anointment? Was it not attended by many miracles from beginning to end! There were only twelve logs of oil and yet with it were anointed the Tabernacle and its vessels, Aaron and his sons throughout the seven days of the consecration, and the high priest and kings, and yet it remained whole for the days to come, as it is written: This shall be a holy anointing oil unto Me throughout your generations.¹ [The numerical value of] Zeh [this] is twelve, meaning that this quantity was preserved.

Our Rabbis taught: And Moses took the anointing oil and anointed the tabernacle.² R. Judah said: Many miracles attended from the beginning to the end the anointing oil which Moses made in the wilderness. There were originally only twelve logs; [consider] how much of it must have been absorbed in the boiler, how much in the roots of the spices, and how much of it was burnt by the fire, and yet with it were anointed the Tabernacle and its vessels, Aaron and his sons throughout the seven days of the consecration, and the high priests and kings. Even a high priest who is the son of a high priest requires anointing, though a king who is the son of a king does not require anointing. And if you ask, Why then was Solomon anointed?³ Because Adoniah disputed his right of succession; similarly Jehoshaphat [was anointed]⁴ by reason of Athaliah's [claim to the throne], and Jehoahaz⁵ by reason [of the claim to the throne] of his brother Jehoiakim who was two years⁶ his senior.⁷

The Master said: 'Even the high priest who is the son of a high priest requires anointing'. Whence do we know this? — It is written: And the anointed priest that shall be in his stead from among his sons.⁸ The text should have stated: 'And the priest that shall be in his stead from among his sons', why [add] 'anointed', if not to let us know that even from among his sons only the one that is anointed can be high priest, but he who is not anointed cannot be high priest.

The Master said: 'A king who is the son of a king does not require anointing'. Whence do we know this? — Said R. Abba b. Jacob: It is written, That he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he and his children, for all days;⁹ it is an inheritance.

'Why then was Solomon anointed? Because Adoniah disputed his right of succession'. 'Whence do we know that in a case of dispute anointing is required, and that it does not suffice that the king entrusts his kingdom to whomsoever he chooses? — Said R. Papa: It is written there, In the midst of Israel; only if there is peace in Israel [is it an inheritance].¹⁰

A Tanna taught: Also Jehu son of Nimshi was anointed only by reason of the claim to the throne by Joram son of Ahab. Was it indeed for this reason? 'Was he not the first king of the dynasty? — The text is incomplete and should read thus: Kings from the House of David were anointed but not the kings of Israel. And if you ask: 'Why then was Jehu son of Nimshi anointed? Because of the dispute of Joram son of Ahab.

The Master said: 'Kings from the House of David were anointed, but not the kings of Israel'. 'Whence do we know this? — It is written: Arise, about him, for this is he:¹¹ This one¹² requires anointing but not others.

The Master said: 'By reason of the claim to the throne by Joram'. Were we indeed justified to commit sacrilege¹³ with the oil of anointing solely by reason of the claim to the throne by Joram son of Ahab? — As R. Papa replied elsewhere: It was done with pure balm; so here too: It was done with pure balm.¹⁴

'And Jehoahaz by reason of the claim to the throne by his brother Jehoiakim who was two years his senior'. 'Was he indeed older, is it not written: And the sons of Josiah: the first-born Johanan, the second Johoiakim, the third Zedekiah and the fourth Shallum;¹⁵ upon which R. Johanan remarked that Johanan was identical with Jehoahaz and Zedekiah with Shallum!¹⁶ — Jehoiakim was indeed older, and [the other] was called first-born, because he was first in succession. But is it permitted to install the younger son in preference to the older? Is it not written: And the kingdom he gave to Jehoram for he was the first-born?¹⁷ — That one followed in his forefather's footsteps.¹⁸

The Master said: 'Shallum is identical with Zedekiah'. But are not the sons enumerated in numerical order?¹⁹ — He [Zedekiah] is called 'the third', because he was the third among the sons, and he is called 'the fourth', because he was the fourth to reign, for Jeconiah reigned before him: Jehoahaz was the first successor, then followed Jehoiakim, then Jeconiah and then Zedekiah.

Our Rabbis taught: Shallum is identical with Zedekiah; and why was he called Shallum? Because he was perfect ['shalem'] in his deeds; or according to another explanation, because the kingdom of the House of David ended [shalem]²⁰ in his days. 'What was his real name? — Mattaniah, as it is written, And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his father's brother king in his stead, and changed his name to Zedekiah,²¹ for the king [Nebuchadnezzar] said to him, God may deal severely²² with thee, if thou wilt rebel against me, as it is written, And he brought him to Babylon,²³ and also, And He also rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar who had made him swear by the Lord.²⁴ But was there any oil of anointing at that time?²⁵ Has it not been taught: 'When the holy ark was hidden there disappeared with it the jar of manna,²⁶ the flask of the oil of anointing, the rod of Aaron together with its almonds and blossoms,²⁷ and the coffer which the Philistines had sent as a present to the God of Israel, as it is written: And put the jewels of gold, which ye return Him for a guilt-offering, in a coffer by the side thereof.²⁸ 'Who hid it? Josiah, king of Judah, hid it, as it is written: And he said, put the holy ark [in the house which Solomon the son of David did build: there shall no more be a burden upon your shoulders].²⁹ [As to the other articles:] R. Eleazar said: [Their disappearance is] inferred by the common expressions of sham, doroth and mishmereth.³⁰ Replied R. Papa: It was done with pure balm.

Our Rabbis have taught: In anointing kings one draws the figure of a crown,³¹ and with priests in the shape of the letter chi. Said R. Menashia: The Greek-[letter] chi is meant. One [Tanna] teaches: The oil was first poured over the head and then smeared between the eye-lids; whereas another [Tanna] teaches: The oil was first smeared between the eye-lids and then poured over the head.³² [On this point there is] a dispute of Tannaim: One holds that the anointing³³ has preference; the other holds that the pouring has preference. What is the reason of him who holds that the pouring has preference? He derives it from: And he poured from the anointing oil upon Aaron's head [and anointed him to sanctify him].³⁴ And he who maintains anointing has preference holds [his view] because this was the method employed in connection with the vessels of ministry.³⁵ But is it not written first: ‘And he poured’, and then, ‘and anointed’? — This is what it means: ‘Wherefore did he pour the oil, because he had already anointed him to sanctify him.

Our Rabbis have taught: It is like the precious oil upon the head [coming down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard].³⁶ Two drops of the oil were hanging down like pearls from Aaron's beard. Said R. Kahana; It was taught, ‘When he [Aaron] spoke, the drops moved upwards and rested by the roots of his beard. This caused anxiety to Moses. Perhaps, Heaven forbid, [he said] I have committed sacrilege with the oil of anointing!’³⁷ But a heavenly voice was heard, saying: Like the dew of the Hermon, that cometh down upon the mountains of Zion;³⁸ as the dew is not subject to sacrilege, so the oil that cometh down upon the beard of Aaron is not subject to sacrilege. Yet Aaron was still worried: ‘Although Moses did not commit sacrilege, I myself am guilty of sacrilege’. Thereupon the heavenly voice pronounced: Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity:³⁹ As Moses is not guilty of sacrilege, so thou too art not guilty of sacrilege.

Our Rabbis have taught: Kings are anointed only by the side of a spring, so that their rule be prolonged,⁴⁰ as it is written: And the king said unto them . . . and bring him down to Gihon . . . and anoint him there.⁴¹ Said R. Ammi: ‘When one wishes to know whether he will survive the coming year or not, let him take a burning lamp during the ten days between New Year and the Day of Atonement and place it in a house where there is no draught; if the lamp burns out to the end, he will know that he will survive the year. And if one is about to engage in business and wishes to know whether he will succeed or not, let him get a cock and feed it; if it grows fat and handsome, he will know that he will succeed. When one is about to go on a journey and wishes to know whether he will return home, let him enter a darkened room;⁴² if he can perceive the reflection of his shadow, he will know that he will return home. But it is not the proper thing [to make these tests], for one might be discouraged and mar his fortune. Said Abaye: Since you hold that symbols are meaningful, every man should make it a habit to eat on New Year pumpkin, fenugreek, leek, beet and dates.¹

R. Mesharsheya said to his sons: 'When you wish to come before your teacher to learn, revise at first your Mishnah and then go to your teacher; and when you are sitting before your teacher look at the mouth of your teacher, as it is written: But thine eyes shall see thy teacher;² and when you study any teaching, do so by the side of water, for as the water is drawn out, so your learning may be prolonged. Be on the dustheaps of Matha Mehasia rather than in the palaces of Pumpeditha.³ Eat a stinking fish rather than cutha⁴ that breaks rocks.

And Hannah prayed and said: my heart exulteth in the Lord, my horn is exalted.⁵ It says, 'my horn is exalted', but not 'my jar is exalted'. David and Solomon were anointed from a horn,⁶ and therefore their rule was prolonged; Saul and Jehu, however, were anointed from a jar,⁷ and their rule⁸ was not prolonged.

WHEN ONE COMPOUNDS INCENSE. Our Rabbis have taught: 'When one compounds incense for experimenting or in order to hand it over to the community, he is culpable; if in order to smell of it, he is guilty. He who smells it⁹ is not culpable,¹⁰ but he is guilty of sacrilege.¹¹ But is smelling subject to the law of sacrilege? Has not R. Simeon son of Pazzi stated in the name of R. Joshua son of Levi on behalf of Bar Kappara: Hearing, seeing and smelling¹² are not subject to the law of sacrilege?¹³ — The reference to smelling means, after the pillar of the [incense] smoke has ascended,¹⁴ in which case it is not subject to the law of sacrilege, for nothing is subject to the law of sacrilege, after the prescribed command has been performed therewith. Is this indeed so? Behold the separation of the ashes¹⁵ is subject to the law of sacrilege, although the prescribed, command has been performed therewith. — The law concerning the separation of the ashes and that of the garments of the High Priest¹⁶ are two texts teaching the same thing, and where two texts teach the same thing no inference may be made [from them].¹⁷ This is right according to the Rabbis, but what is to be said according to R. Dosa? For it has been taught: And he shall place them [the garments] there,¹⁸ [means] that they have to be hidden.¹⁹ R. Dosa holds: They may be used by an ordinary priest, and 'he shall place them there' means that he [the high priest] shall not use it again on another Day of Atonement.²⁰ — The law concerning the separation of the ashes and that of the heifer whose neck is broken are two texts teaching the same thing, and where two texts teach the same thing no inference may be made [from them for other instances]. 'What is the case of the separation of the ashes? — It has been taught: He shall place it by the side of the altar;²¹ this teaches that it has to be hidden. 'What is the case of the heifer whose neck is broken? — It has been taught: And shall break the heifer's neck there in the valley,²² this teaches that it has to be buried. And even according to him who holds, one may infer for other instances where two texts teach the same thing, here indeed no inference can be made because there are two limitations. In connection with the separation of the ashes, it is written: 'He shall place it': It, and not anything else; in connection with the heifer whose neck is broken, it is written: Whose neck is broken;²³ only the one whose neck is broken and not anything else.

Our Rabbis have taught: The compound of incense consisted of balm, onycha, galbanum and frankincense, each in the quantity of seventy manehs;²⁴ of myrrh, cassia, spikenard and saffron, each sixteen manehs by weight; of costus twelve, of aromatic rind three, and of cinnamon nine manehs; of lye obtained from leek nine kabs;²⁴ of Cyprus wine three se'ahs²⁴ and three kabs, though if Cyprus wine is not available, old white wine may be used instead; of salt of Sodom²⁵ the fourth of a kab, and of ma'aleh 'ashan²⁶ a minute quantity. R. Nathan says: Also of Jordan resin a minute quantity. If, however, honey is added, the incense is rendered unfit; while if one omits one of the ingredients,²⁷ he is liable to the penalty of death.²⁸ R. Simeon son of Gamaliel said: Balm is nothing but a resin which exudes from the wood of the balsam-tree; the lye obtained from leek was rubbed over the onycha in order to render it beautiful, and in the Cyprus wine the onycha was steeped that its odour might be intensified. In fact urine might well serve this purpose, but urine may not be brought within the precincts of the Temple. This²⁹ supports R. Jose son of R. Hanina, who says: It is holy and it shall be holy unto you,³⁰ implies that all work in connection therewith must be performed within the sacred precincts.

An objection was raised: If one dedicates his possessions to the Temple³¹ and there are among them things fit for communal offerings, they shall be given to the [Temple] craftsmen as wages.³² Now what is meant by 'things fit [for communal offerings]'? If cattle or beast,³³ this has already been taught;³⁴ if wine, oil or fine flour, this has already been taught; hence It must refer to incense.³⁵ — Said R. Oshaia: [It refers to] that which is given to the craftsmen as their wages,³⁶ for we learnt: 'What was done with the remnant of the frankincense? They set apart [an amount equivalent to the craftsmen's] wages [from the Temple Treasury], the remnant was then exchanged against this money, handed over to the craftsmen as their wages and then bought back again from them with the money of the new levy.'³⁷ To this R. Joseph demurred: Surely in connection with all remnants it teaches: 'And then it is bought back again from the new levy'; whereas in connection with this teaching,³⁸ this is not stated.³⁹ — Rather, said R. Joseph: It refers to one of the ingredients of the frankincense.⁴⁰

Our Rabbis have taught: The frankincense consisted of three hundred and sixty-eight manehs,⁴¹ three hundred and sixty-five⁴² corresponding to the days of the solar year, and of the three remaining manehs the high priest took his hands full [into the holy of holies] on the Day of Atonement,⁴³ while the remnant was given to the craftsmen for their wages, as we have learnt: What was done with the remnant of the frankincense? They set apart an amount equivalent to the craftsmen's wages [from the Temple Treasury], the remnant was then exchanged against this money, handed over to the craftsmen as their wages and then bought back again from then, with the money of the Temple Chamber.⁴⁴

Our Rabbis have taught: [By reason of] the remnants of frankincense once in sixty or seventy years only half the quantity was manufactured.¹ Therefore, if a stranger compounds half the quantity, he is culpable.² Thus the view of Rabban Simeon son of Gamaliel, who said this in the name of the Segan;³ while there is no tradition that a third or a fourth of the quantity was ever compounded.⁴ The Sages hold: He prepared frankincense each day⁵ according to its composition and offered it up. This supports Raba; for Raba said: If one compounds half the quantity of frankincense,⁶ he is capable, for it is written: And the incense which thou shalt make etc.⁷ ; whatever [quantity] you make, and it is possible for one to prepare half [a maneh] in the morning and half in the evening.

Our Rabbis have taught: Twice in the course of the year is the incense put back into the mortar.⁸ During the summer it is scattered, so that it does not rot away; during the winter it is heaped together, so that its fragrance may not escape. While it is being beaten, he⁹ calls out: 'Pound well, well pound'. These are the words of Abba Jose b. Johanan. The three remaining manehs of which the high priest on the Day of Atonement separates his handfuls, are put back in the mortar on the eve of the Day of Atonement and pounded very thoroughly, so that the incense is of the very finest, as it has been taught:¹⁰ 'Wherefore is beaten small'¹¹ stated, since it is written already: And thou shalt beat some of it very small?¹² That it has to be the very finest.

The Master said: "While it is being beaten, he calls out: "Pound well, well pound".' This supports R. Johanan; for R. Johanan said: Just as speech¹³ is harmful to wine, so it is beneficial to spices.

Said R. Johanan: Eleven kinds of spices¹⁴ were named to Moses at Sinai. Said R. Huna: 'Where is the text? Take unto thee sweet spices, at least two; stacte, and onycha, and galbanum, that makes together five; 'sweet spices' means another five, that makes together ten; 'with pure frankincense', which is one, that is together eleven. 'Why not say, 'sweet spices' [at the beginning] is a general statement, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum' a specification, and 'sweet spices' [at the end] is again a general statement! ['We have thus, a generalization followed by a specification and then by a generalisation, [in which case] only things sharing the qualities of the specification may be derived. Just as the [items of the] specification are things whose smoke ascends upwards and whose fragrance spreads, so include all things whose smoke ascends upwards and whose fragrance spreads. And should you say in this case only one [item of] specification should have been mentioned, [I would answer] No, all are necessary; for if 'stacte' alone was written, I might have said: Only things from the tree [are to be taken], but not things growing on the ground. It was thus necessary to state 'onycha'. And if 'onycha' alone was written, I might have said: Only things from the ground, but not from the tree. It was thus necessary to state 'stacte'. As to 'galbanum', its mention is necessary for its own sake, for its odour is unpleasant¹⁵ if so,¹⁶ it could have been derived from: Take unto thee.¹⁷ But perhaps say: 'The sweet spices' in the latter part [of the verse] mean two, as 'the sweet spices' in the former part?¹⁸ Then it should have written the two expressions 'sweet spices' next to one another, and then write 'stacte, and onycha, and galbanum'. In the School of R. Ishmael it was taught thus: 'Sweet spices' is a generalisation, 'stacte, and onycha, and galbanum' is a specification, sweet spices' again is a generalisation, and from a generalisation followed by a specification and then by another generalisation one can derive only things sharing the qualities of the specification. As the [items in the] specification are things whose smoke ascends upwards and whose fragrance spreads, so all things whose smoke ascends upwards and whose fragrance spreads.¹⁹ Perhaps this is not so; but take the generalisation with the first generalisation, the specification with the first specification?²⁰ — Say: This cannot be; hence you must not expound according to the latter version but according to the former.

The Master said: ‘Perhaps this is not so, but take the generalisation with the first generalisation and the specification with the first specification? — Say: This cannot be, hence you cannot expound . . . ‘What is the question? — This is his difficulty: Let the sweet spices’ in the latter part [of the verse] mean two like ‘sweet spices’ in the former.²¹ ‘Whereupon he replied as was answered before: Then it should have written, ‘Sweet spices, sweet spices, stacte, onycha and galbanum’. What is the meaning of ‘and the specification with the first specification’? — This is his difficulty: Things of the tree are derived from ‘stacte’, and things of the ground from ‘onycha’; why not then derive from ‘pure frankincense’ all things which have one quality in common with it [viz.,] that their fragrance spreads, though their smoke does not ascend upwards?²² Whereupon he replied: If this was so, ‘pure frankincense’ should have been written among the others,²³ so that you could derive therefrom. But if ‘pure frankincense’ was written among the others, we would have twelve spices.²⁴ — ‘Pure frankincense’ should have been written among the others and ‘galbanum’ at the end. Resh Lakish says: From the word itself it can be inferred; for ketoreth²⁵ [frankincense] means something whose smoke ascends upwards.

Said R. Hana b. Bizna in the name of R. Hisda the pious: A fast in which none of the sinners of Israel participate is no fast;²⁶ for behold the odour of galbanum is unpleasant and yet it was included among the spices for the incense. Abaye says: ‘We learn this from the text: And hath founded his vault upon the earth.’²⁷

OR USES OIL OF ANOINTING. Our Rabbis have taught: He who pours the oil of anointing over cattle or vessels is not guilty; if over heathens or the dead, he is not guilty. The law relating to cattle and vessels is right, for it is written: Upon the flesh of man [adam] shall it not be poured;²⁸ and cattle and vessels are not man. Also with regard to the dead, [it is plausible] that he is exempt, since after death one is called corpse and not man. But why is one exempt in the case of heathens; are they not in the category of adam? — No, it is written: And ye my sheep, the sheep of my pasture, are adam [man]:²⁹ Ye are called adam but heathens are not called ‘adam. But is it not written: And the persons [adam] were sixteen thousand?³⁰ — Because it is used in opposition to cattle.³¹ But is it not written: And should I not have pity on Nineveh [that great city, wherein are more than six score thousand persons [adam]]?³² — This too is used in opposition to cattle.³³ Or, if you wish, I might explain it in the light of what a Tanna recited before R. Eleazar: Whosoever is subject to the prohibition ‘he shall not pour’ is subject to [the law] ‘it shall not be poured [over him]’; but he who is not subject to ‘he shall not pour’ is not subject to ‘it shall not be poured [over him]’.³⁴

Another [Baraita] taught: If one anoints with the oil of anointing cattle, vessels, heathens and the dead, he is not culpable; if kings and priests, R. Meir holds he is culpable and R. Judah that he is exempt. How much has one to put in order to be culpable? R. Meir says: Any quantity; R. Judah says: As much as that of the bulk of an olive. But did not R. Judah say that one is exempt? — R. Judah exempts only in the case of kings and priests,³⁵ but in the case of laymen he declares one culpable. What is the ground of dispute between R. Meir and R. Judah? — Said R. Joseph:

They dispute in this: R. Meir holds, It is written: Upon the flesh of man shall it not be poured;³⁶ and it is also written: Or whosoever putteth of it upon a stranger:³⁷ As the [prohibition of] anointing applies to any quantity,³⁸ so also the [prohibition of] putting [upon a stranger];³⁹ while R. Judah holds, The [implication of] 'putting upon a stranger' is derived from 'giving' elsewhere: as 'giving' implies at least an olive size,⁴⁰ so also the 'putting upon a stranger at least an olive size; but with regard to the pouring for the anointing of kings and priests both agree that any quantity suffices. Then said R. Joseph: 'Whereupon rests the dispute between R. Meir and R. Judah with reference to kings and priests?'⁴¹ R. Meir holds: It is written: 'Or whosoever putteth of it upon a stranger', and king and priest are now to be regarded as strangers;⁴² while R. Judah maintains [to involve culpability] it is essential that one is a 'stranger' from beginning to end; but kings and priests were not considered [always] strangers.⁴³ Said R. Ika the son of R. Ammi: They⁴⁴ follow their own reasoning elsewhere; for we have learnt:⁴⁵

- (1) As the handfuls of the high priest on the Day of Atonement amounted approximately to half a maneh, the remnant each year was about two and a half manehs. During a period of between sixty and seventy years the remnants accumulated to half the yearly quantity. When this was reached only a supplementary half was newly manufactured.
 - (2) This transgression applies only to quantities otherwise manufactured for the Temple.
 - (3) The deputy high priest.
 - (4) I.e., that two-thirds or three-quarters were allowed to be accumulated.
 - (5) Viz., one maneh. A stranger is accordingly guilty for the manufacture of one maneh.
 - (6) Or even less, as is proved from the text. In cur. edd. oil of anointing stands in place of frankincense, but in supra 5a whence this quotation is taken, frankincense is the version.
 - (7) Ex. XXX, 37.
 - (8) To induce fragrance.
 - (9) The superintendent calls to him who pounds the incense.
 - (10) Yoma 45a.
 - (11) Lev. XVI, 12 referring to the handfuls on the Day of Atonement.
 - (12) Ex. XXX, 36.
 - (13) I.e., speaking while it is being prepared.
 - (14) Only four are mentioned in Ex. XXX, 34.
 - (15) Had it not been explicitly mentioned, I would not have included it.
 - (16) If the purpose of the numeration of the items is for the sake of expounding the verse by the principle of generalisation and specification etc. and not to indicate the precise number.
 - (17) Which would have served as a generalisation without the addition of 'spices'.
 - (18) And not five.
 - (19) R. Ishmael's School resorts both to the principle of generalisation etc. and to the exposition of R. Huna, the former teaching that it must be of a kind whose smoke ascends and fragrance spreads, and the latter indicating the number.
 - (20) This last question and the answer are obscure, and will be explained immediately.
 - (21) This then is the meaning: perhaps the second generalisation (sweet spices) has the same connotation as the first and implies no more than 'two'; whence then is the number eleven derived?
 - (22) And thus the question is, perhaps the last specification is to be taken in conjunction with the first and the others that precede the second generalisation?
 - (23) I.e., among the specifications enclosed by the two generalisations, 'sweet spices'.

- (24) For the latter expression 'sweet spices' doubles the number of spices enumerated before, which in this case would be six.
- (25) The root rye means 'to rise in circles'.
- (26) The sinners should not be excluded as unworthy of joining their fellow-Jews in prayer.
- (27) Amos IX, 6. The root sdt of u, sudtu 'his vault' means to bind together. Only when all his creatures are bound together is this creation on earth founded.
- (28) Ex. XXX, 32.
- (29) Ezek. XXXIV, 31. The passage continues: And I am your God, saith the Lord God. It is thus clear that the term ost in this sentence does not denote 'man' but Israelite. The term adam is used to denote man made in the image of God (v. Gen. IX, 6, for in the image of God He made adam) and heathens by their idolatry and idolatrous conduct mar this divine image and forfeit the designation adam (v. B.M. Sonc. ed. p. 651, n. 7). There is therefore a possibility that also oil used in Ex. XXX, 32 is to be understood in this restrictive sense, particularly as the distinction between holy and profane made in the text (it reads there, 'it is holy and it shall be holy unto you') is meaningful only to one who believes in the ideal of the holy.
- (30) Num. XXXI, 40 referring to the heathen Midianites.
- (31) V. the context.
- (32) Jonah IV, 11.
- (33) V. the end of the passage.
- (34) The prohibition of using sacred oil for profane purposes is thus binding for the Israelites only.
- (35) After they had been anointed. Rashi reads, high priests.
- (36) Ex. XXX, 32.
- (37) Ibid. v. 33. Lit., 'whosoever giveth'. The analogy later between putting and giving is based upon this literal translation.
- (38) Since there the term 'anointing' implies any quantity however small.
- (39) Although elsewhere 'putting' (lit., 'giving') implies at least the bulk of an olive.
- (40) Cf. Pes. 32b where this fact is derived from Lev. XXII, 14.
- (41) Viz., when unlawfully anointed.
- (42) For anointing after their first anointment is no longer prescribed for them.
- (43) For there was a time when they were required to be anointed, and were not strangers.
- (44) I.e., R. Meir and R. Judah.
- (45) Ter. VII, 2.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 7a

If the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite has eaten terumah,¹ she has to pay the principal but not the additional fifth, and her punishment² is death by burning. If she is married to one of those disqualified [for priesthood], she has to pay the principal as well as the additional fifth, and her punishment is death by strangulation.³ Thus the view of R. Meir; but the Sages hold: In either case she has to pay the principal but not the fifth, and is punished by burning.⁴

Said R. Joseph: The dispute [between R. Meir and R. Judah] is only with reference to the putting of the oil of anointing, and as we have explained above;⁵ but elsewhere⁶ all agree that 'giving' implies at least an olive size.

[To turn to] the main text: A Tanna recited before R. Eleazar: Whosoever is subject to [the prohibition] ‘he shall not pour’ is subject to [the law] ‘it shall not be poured [over him]’; but he who is not subject to ‘he shall not pour’ is not subject to ‘it shall not be poured [over him]’. The latter said to him: You speak well: it is written, ‘It shall not be poured’ [yisak], read ‘he shall not pour’ [yasik].⁷

R. Hananiah recited before Raba: If a high priest has taken from the oil of anointing that is upon his head and rubbed it upon his stomach, whence do we know that he is culpable? It says: Upon the flesh of man shall it not be poured’.⁸ Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: ‘Why is this different from that which has been taught:⁹ A priest who is anointed with oil of terumah may without scruple allow [e.g.,] his Israelite grandson¹⁰ to roll against him?¹¹ — He replied: In that connection it is written: And die therein, if they profane it;¹² once it is profaned¹³ it remains profane; but in connection with the oil of anointing it says: For the consecration of the anointing oil of his God is upon him;¹⁴ the Divine Law [still] calls it oil of anointing, so that even when it is ‘upon him’ it does not become profane.

FOR THESE [TRANSGRESSIONS] ONE IS LIABLE TO EXTINCTION IF COMMITTED WILFULLY etc. It states EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO DEFILED THE TEMPLE OR ITS CONSECRATED THINGS. Excluded from what? — Read thus: Excluded is he who defiles the sanctuary or sacred things in that he does not bring a suspensive guilt-offering.¹⁵ Why not also state: Excluded is one from a suspensive guilt-offering where the Day of Atonement has passed by in the meantime?¹⁶ — Replied Resh Lakish: He mentions only cases where a sin-offering is [prescribed],¹⁷ but the Divine Law has pronounced exemption [from a suspensive guilt-offering in case of a doubt]; but where the Day of Atonement had passed by, there is no sin-offering prescribed, for [the sin] had already been atoned. R. Johanan said: [The Mishnah] refers to a rebellious person,¹⁸ [that is] who says that the Day of Atonement brings no forgiveness; if then he repents after the Day of Atonement, he is liable to a suspensive guilt-offering.¹⁹ But Resh Lakish holds that the Day of Atonement effects forgiveness even to a rebellious person. Their dispute is similar to the following: If one says, My sin-offering shall effect no atonement for me, Abaye says: It does not effect atonement; Raba says: It does effect atonement. If he said, It shall not be offered, all agree that it does not effect atonement, for it is written: He shall bring it with the consent;²⁰ where they differ is when he said: It should be offered but should not effect atonement. Abaye holds that it does not effect atonement, for he said: It should not atone. Raba holds that it does effect atonement, since he ordered that it should be offered, atonement comes as a matter of course. Raba, however, has retracted his view, as it has been taught: I might assume that the Day of Atonement atones alike for them who repent and them who do not repent.²¹ But is there not an argument [to the contrary]: Sin- and guilt-offerings effect atonement, and the Day of Atonement effects atonement. Just as sin- and guilt-offerings atone only for them that repent, so shall also the Day of Atonement atone only for them that repent? No, [this is not conclusive]. You can rightly say that such is the case of sin- and guilt-offerings, since they do not atone for wilful sins as they do for those in error; will you apply the same to the Day of Atonement which atones alike for wilful sins as well as for those in error? I might therefore have thought since the Day of Atonement atones for wilful sins as well as those in error, so it would atone for them that repent as well as them that do not repent, therefore it is written, ‘howbeit’,²² to establish a distinction [between them that repent and them that do not repent]. ‘What is meant by ‘them that repent’ and ‘them that do not repent’?²³ Does ‘them that repent' mean that the sin has been committed in error, and 'them that do not repent' that the sin has been committed wilfully? But then, does it not state: No, you can rightly say that such is the case of sin- and guilt-offerings, since they do not atone for wilful sins, etc.²⁴ — Rather [explain in the light of] what 'Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan:²⁵ If a man ate heleb²⁶ and separated a sacrifice, and then he apostatized but retracted afterwards, [the sacrifice may not be offered] for since it has once been rejected it remains rejected.²⁷ But although this [particular] sacrifice is rejected, the person, however, is fit for atonement?²⁸ — Hence [you must say] that 'them that repent' refers to one who says: My sin-offering shall effect atonement for me; and 'them that do not repent' to one who says: My sin-offering shall effect no atonement for me. This proves it.²⁹

The following contradiction was raised: I might think that the Day of Atonement atoned only for him who afflicted himself and did no work on it, and called it a holy convocation;³⁰ but if one did not afflict himself or did work on it or did not call it a holy convocation, I might think that the Day of Atonement does not atone for him; therefore it is stated: It is the Day of Atonement:³¹ in all circumstances [does it atone]. Now, these two statements³² are both given anonymously³³ in the Sifra³⁴ and so they contradict each other! — Replied Abaye: There is no difficulty; the former teaching is that of Rabbi on the view of R. Judah, the latter that of Rabbi himself; as it has been taught: Rabbi says, For all the sins of the Torah, whether one has repented or not, the Day of Atonement atones, except for throwing off the yoke,³⁵ interpreting the Torah in opposition to the halachah,³⁶ and making void the covenant of the flesh,³⁷ where if one has repented the Day of Atonement effects atonement, but if not, the Day of Atonement effects no atonement.

Raba said: Both teachings represent Rabbi's own view, but Rabbi agrees that the transgressions against the sanctity of the Day of Atonement itself are not atoned for.³⁸ For if this was not so, how could, according to Rabbi, the penalty of kareth for offending against the laws of the Day of Atonement ever take effect, since there is on that day continuous atonement. This would offer no difficulty; [it might take effect] when one did work during the night and died at dawn, so that he had no day³⁹ to atone for him. This is right only as far as sins committed by night are concerned, how can kareth take effect for sins committed by day?⁴⁰ — This is no difficulty. [It might take effect] when one while partaking of a meal⁴¹ was choked by a lump of meat and died, so that there was no time during the day for the atonement to atone for him;⁴² or when he was working just before sunset; or when while working he cut off his thigh with the axe and died, so that there was no time during the day to atone for him.

THE SAGES SAY: ALSO ONE WHO BLASPHEMES etc. What is the meaning of 'also one who blasphemes'?⁴³ — The Rabbis heard that R. Akiba⁴⁴ included⁴⁵ ob but not yidde'oni;⁴⁶ so they said to him: The reason why there is no offering in the latter instance is because it involves no action;⁴⁶ the blasphemer, too, performs no action.

Our Rabbis have taught: He who blasphemes is liable to an offering, for kareth is written in connection with him; thus the view of R. Akiba. And it further says: He will bear his iniquity.⁴⁷ But is it a rule that wherever kareth is written, one has to bring an offering [in case of error]? Surely there are the cases of Passover and circumcision in connection with which kareth is written, and yet these Involve no offerings? —

- (3) Like any other unfaithful wife. By this marriage she herself has become disqualified for priesthood. Even after her husband's death she is not fit to eat terumah.
- (4) R. Meir does not take into consideration the fact that she was once fit for priesthood; while the Sages, identified with R. Judah, hold she has still the status of a priest's daughter by reason of her former inclusion in the tribe. The arguments are thus similar to those underlying the previous dispute.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 7b

This is the meaning: One who blasphemes brings an offering,¹ because [the penalty of] kareth stands in this case in conjunction with offerings.² This is the view of R. Akiba. He holds that since kareth in this instance could have been mentioned independently, but is in fact mentioned in conjunction with offerings, this proves that [he who blasphemes] brings an offering. And it further says, 'he shall bear his iniquity'; this is quoted on the view of the Sages. And thus did the Rabbis say to R. Akiba: You maintain that the blasphemer [megaddef] is liable to an offering because kareth in this instance is mentioned in conjunction with offerings. You thus assume that the term 'megaddef' of the Holy Writ³ denotes one who blasphemes the Name of the Lord. [This is not so;] 'Megaddef' denotes one who worships idols.⁴ And as to the text of the Mishnah: AND THE SAGES SAY, ALSO ONE WHO BLASPHEMES [megaddef],⁵ it is to be understood thus: Also he who blasphemes the Name which you designate as megaddef⁶ etc. . . And whence do you know that kareth applies to one who blasphemes the Name?⁷ — In connection with blasphemy we read: 'He shall bear his iniquity',⁸ and also in connection with the second Passover we read: 'He shall bear his iniquity'.⁹ As in the latter instance kareth is the penalty, so also in the former the penalty is kareth.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: The same blasphemeth [megaddef] the Lord;¹¹ Issi b. Judah explains [the term gadaf] in the sense of a man who says to his neighbour: Thou hast scraped [garef]¹² the dish and impaired it;¹³ he holds 'megaddef' denotes one who blasphemes the Name. R. Eleazar b. Azariah explains it in the sense of a man who says to his neighbour: Thou hast scraped the dish but hast not impaired it; he holds 'megaddef' denotes one who worships idols. Another [Baraitha] teaches: 'The same blasphemeth the Lord': R. Eleazar b. Azariah says: The text speaks of one who worships idols; while the Sages say: The text intends only to pronounce kareth for him who blasphemes the Name.¹⁴

MISHNAH. SOME [WOMEN AFTER CONFINEMENT] BRING AN OFFERING¹⁵ WHICH IS EATEN; SOME BRING ONE WHICH IS NOT EATEN, AND SOME BRING NO OFFERING AT ALL. SOME BRING AN OFFERING WHICH IS EATEN: IF A WOMAN BEARS AN ABORTION WHICH IS IN THE SHAPE OF CATTLE, OR A BEAST OF CHASE OR A BIRD — [THUS THE VIEW OF R. MEIR; WHILE THE SAGES HOLD: ONLY IF IT HAS A HUMAN SHAPE], OR IF A WOMAN DISCHARGES A SANDAL-LIKE FOETUS OR A PLACENTA OR A DEVELOPED FOETUS,¹⁶ OR A YOUNG THAT CAME OUT IN PIECES; SIMILARLY, IF A WOMAN-SLAVE¹⁷ MISCARRIES, SHE BRINGS AN OFFERING WHICH IS EATEN. THE FOLLOWING BRING AN OFFERING WHICH IS NOT EATEN: A WOMAN WHO BEARS AN ABORTION BUT DOES NOT KNOW WHAT THE ABORTION WAS,¹⁸ OR IF OF TWO WOMEN THE ONE HAD AN ABORTION OF A KIND WHICH DID NOT RENDER HER LIABLE [TO AN OFFERING], AND THE OTHER OF A KIND TO MAKE HER LIABLE [TO AN OFFERING].¹⁹ R. JOSE SAID: THIS APPLIES ONLY IF THE ONE WENT TOWARDS THE EAST AND THE OTHER TOWARDS THE WEST,²⁰ BUT IF BOTH REMAINED TOGETHER THEY BRING [TOGETHER] ONE OFFERING WHICH IS EATEN. THE FOLLOWING BRING NO OFFERING AT ALL: THE WOMAN WHO DISCHARGES A FOETUS FILLED WITH WATER OR WITH BLOOD OR WITH A MANY-COLOURED SUBSTANCE; OR IF THE ABORTION WAS IN THE SHAPE OF FISH, LOCUST, UNCLEAN ANIMALS OR REPTILES; OR IF THE MISCARRIAGE TOOK PLACE ON THE FORTIETH DAY [AFTER THE CONCEPTION],²¹ OR IF IT WAS EXTRACTED BY MEANS OF A CAESAREAN SECTION. R. SIMEON DECLARES HER LIABLE [TO AN OFFERING] IN THE CASE OF A CAESAREAN SECTION. GEMARA. 'Whence do we know [the law concerning] the woman-slave? — For our Rabbis taught: [Speak unto] the children of Israel;²² from this I only know that [the law] applies to the children of Israel, whence do we know [its application to] a woman-proselyte and to a woman-slave? The text therefore states: [If] a woman.²³ Why state, SIMILARLY IF A WOMAN-SLAVE?²⁴ — I might have thought that the rule that all commandments which are binding upon a woman apply also to a slave holds good only in respect of laws which are applicable both to men and woman; but as to the laws concerning the woman after confinement, which are applicable to women only and not to men, I might have thought that the woman-slave is not included. Therefore a woman-slave is mentioned [in the Mishnah].

THE FOLLOWING BRING AN OFFERING etc. How shall they proceed?²⁵ They bring [each] a certain [burnt-]offering and [together] a doubtful sin-offering of a bird and stipulate.²⁶ But does R. Jose indeed admit that one can stipulate? Have we not learnt: R. Simeon holds, They together bring one sin-offering; R. Jose holds, Two persons cannot bring one sin-offering?²⁷ Does this not prove that R. Jose does not agree with the principle of making a stipulation?²⁸ — Said Raba: R. Jose agrees in the case of one who requires atonement.²⁹ Also when Rabin came [from Palestine], he said in the name of R. Johanan: R. Jose agrees in the case of one who requires atonement. 'What is the difference? — There,³⁰ it is essential that the offender be conscious of his sin, as it is written: If his sin be known to him;³¹ therefore the offering cannot be brought conditionally. But here, the women bring offerings only in order to be permitted to partake of holy things, even as we have learnt in the concluding clause of that [same Mishnah], R. Jose says: No sin-offering that is brought for the expiation of sin can be offered by two persons.

THE FOLLOWING BRING NO OFFERING . . . R. SIMEON DECLARES HER LIABLE IN THE CASE OF A CAESAREAN SECTION. What is the reason of R. Simeon? — Said Resh Lakish: It is written, And if she bear a maid-child,³² to include another kind of bearing, namely by means of a caesarean section. And what is the reason of the Rabbis? — Said R. Mani b. Pattish: It is written, If a woman conceive seed and bear,³³ only when the birth takes place through the seat of conception.³⁴

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN BRINGS FORTH AN ABORTION ON THE EVE OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY,³⁵ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: SHE IS EXEMPTED FROM AN OFFERING,³⁶ WHILE BETH HILLEL SAY: SHE IS LIABLE. SAID BETH HILLEL TO BETH SHAMMAI: WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE EVE OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY AND THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY ITSELF? SINCE THESE ARE CONSIDERED EQUAL WITH REGARD TO UNCLEANNESS,³⁷ WHY SHOULD THEY NOT BE CONSIDERED EQUAL ALSO WITH REFERENCE TO THE OFFERINGS? ANSWERED BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: NO; IF YOU WILL MAINTAIN THIS³⁸ IN THE CASE WHERE SHE BEARS AN ABORTION ON THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY WHERE IT³⁹ OCCURRED AT A TIME WHEN SHE WAS FIT TO BRING AN OFFERING, CAN YOU MAINTAIN THIS WHERE SHE BEARS AN ABORTION ON THE EVE OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY, SEEING THAT IT DID NOT OCCUR AT A TIME WHEN SHE WAS FIT TO BRING AN OFFERING?⁴⁰ SAID BETH HILLEL AGAIN TO THEM: THE CASE OF AN ABORTION ON THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY WHICH FELL ON A SABBATH SHALL PROVE IT, WHERE THE ABORTION TOOK PLACE AT A TIME WHEN SHE WAS UNFIT TO BRING AN OFFERING AND YET SHE IS LIABLE TO BRING A [NEW] OFFERING. REPLIED BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: NO; IF YOU WILL MAINTAIN THIS OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY WHICH FELL ON A SABBATH WHICH, THOUGH INDEED NOT FIT FOR OFFERINGS OF AN INDIVIDUAL, IS AT LEAST FIT FOR COMMUNAL OFFERINGS, WOULD YOU MAINTAIN THIS OF AN ABORTION ON THE EVE OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST DAY, SEEING THAT THE NIGHT IS FIT NEITHER FOR OFFERINGS OF THE INDIVIDUAL NOR FOR COMMUNAL OFFERINGS? AS TO [YOUR ARGUMENT OF THE UNCLEANNESS OF] THE BLOOD,⁴¹ IT PROVES NOTHING, FOR ALSO WHEN THE ABORTION TOOK PLACE WITHIN THE PERIOD OF CLEANNESS IS THE BLOOD⁴² UNCLEAN, AND YET SHE IS EXEMPTED FROM AN OFFERING.⁴³

(1) Although he performs no action.

(2) Cf. Num. XV, 30 and the context.

(3) Viz., of Num. XV, 30.

(4) So that blasphemy which is accordingly mentioned only in Lev. XXIV, 15-16 does not stand in conjunction with offerings. R. Akiba's view is thus robbed of its foundation.

(5) Thus admitting that 'megaddef' denotes the blasphemer.

(6) I.e., the Sages use here the term 'megaddef' in the language of R. Akiba to whom they address themselves.

(7) Since the text in Num. XV, 30 where kareth is mentioned refers to idolatry.

(8) Lev. XXIV, 15.

(9) Num. IX, 13.

(10) Thus Rashi's version. Cur. edd., whose text is not quite clear, read thus: . . . on the view of the Rabbis. R. Akiba argues thus with the Rabbis: You maintain the blasphemer (megaddef) performs no action; but in fact 'megaddef' is one who blasphemes the Name. And for what purpose has kareth been mentioned? They said to him: He who curses the Lord is liable to kareth, for it is written in connection with cursing, 'That man shall bear his iniquity' and it is written in conjunction with the second passover, 'He shall bear his iniquity': as in the latter instance there is kareth, so also in the former there is kareth.

(11) Num. XV, 30.

(12) ; sdn is thus turned into ; rdn by reason of the similarity of the two letters S and R .

(13) I.e., not only hast thou robbed the vessel of its contents, thou hast also damaged the vessel itself. The allusion is as follows: Though worshipping idols, the work of God's creation, one may still believe and recognise the supremacy of the Creator Himself, however unsound this attitude may be. With blasphemy one turns against the Creator Himself.

(14) In Lev. XXIV, 14 the death penalty is pronounced for the blasphemer of the Name. This text of Num. XV, 30 pronounces the penalty of kareth in case of wilful transgression in the absence of two witnesses or without due warning.

(15) Or rather offerings, cf. Lev. XII, 6-8.

(16) I.e., with the articulate parts of the body.

(17) Viz., an heathen bondwoman.

(18) I.e., she is in doubt whether it was of a human shape making her liable to offerings, or not. Of the two offerings she has to bring (viz., the burnt-offering and the sin-offering) the first is brought with the stipulation that should she be exempted from offerings, it should be regarded as a freewill burnt-offering. With the latter this stipulation cannot be made, since there is no freewill sin-offering.

(19) It is not known which of the two is liable and which is exempted, therefore each of them brings a set of offerings.

(20) I.e., they have separated one from the other so that they cannot make the stipulation expounded in the Gemara.

(21) The development of the embryo begins to take shape after the fortieth day.

(22) Lev. XII, 2f., where the offerings of a woman after confinement are mentioned.

(23) Ibid. implying any woman.

(24) Is it not obvious, since slaves are subject to all laws to which women are subject?

(25) The question refers to R. Jose who holds that both women bring together one offering.

(26) The law prescribes two offerings, a burnt-offering and a sin-offering. A burnt-offering can also be brought in a doubtful case with the stipulation that the offering should be a freewill burnt-offering should the person in fact be exempted from the offerings. In this instance of the two women, each of them brings therefore a burnt-offering and stipulates that her burnt-offering should be a freewill sacrifice should the other woman be the one that is liable to the offering by law. This method cannot be used in connection with the sin-offering, for there is no freewill sin-offering. The women are therefore asked to bring together one sin-offering and each stipulates that her portion of the offering should belong to her friend, should the latter be the one that is liable by law to the offering.

(27) Infra 23a. The case in question is that two pieces of fat, one forbidden and the other permitted, were eaten by two people, and it is not known who ate the forbidden and who the permitted fat.

(28) Or else he would suggest a solution similar to that of our Mishnah.

(29) I.e., the instance of our Mishnah where the object of the offerings is to complete the atonement; v. infra 8b.

(30) In the Mishnah infra 23a.

(31) Lev. IV, 28. The offering is to expiate a certain sin of a certain person.

(32) Lev. XII, 5. It sufficed to state, 'and if it be a maid-child'.

(33) Ibid. 2.

(34) . I.e., only in the case of a normal birth are offerings prescribed.

(35) After the birth of a girl, cf. Lev. XII, 5. These eighty days are a period of cleanness, during which the woman does not become unclean through the discharge of blood. On the eighty-first day special offerings are to be offered. If another birth takes place before the expiration of this period, no new offerings are required; if on or after the eighty-first day, she is liable. The query arises, if the second birth was on the eve of the eighty-first day. Although the night is generally reckoned as part of the following day, as the sacrifices may not be offered until day-time of the eighty-first day, it is doubtful whether the abortion is to be covered by these sacrifices or not.

(36) For the second birth.

(37) The period of cleanness undoubtedly ends with sunset. It is assumed by Beth Hillel that the exemption from new offerings in the case of abortion within the period of cleanness is based upon the fact that the blood discharged thereby is clean. If accordingly the abortion took place after this period has passed, new offerings are required.

(38) Viz., the law that if the second birth takes place on or after the eighty-first day, a new set of offerings is required.

(39) Viz., the abortion.

(40) Sacrifices may not be offered during the night. Although the period of cleanness is over, since the sacrifices may not be offered until the following morning, the birth on the eve of the eighty-first day is to be covered by these offerings.

(41) Viz., the first objection of Beth Hillel: 'SINCE THESE ARE CONSIDERED EQUAL WITH REGARD TO UNCLEANNESSE etc.'

(42) Discharged at the abortion.

(43) I.e., according to Beth Shammai the exemption from offering in the case of abortion within the period of cleanness is not the outcome of the fact that the blood discharged thereby is clean, which in fact it is not, but because it is covered by the first set of offerings.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 8a

GEMARA. It has been taught: Beth Hillel said to Beth Shammai: Lo, it says, 'or for a daughter',¹ to include the eve of the eighty-first day.

R. Hoshaiia was a frequent visitor to Bar Kappara; he then left him and joined R. Hiyya. One day he met [Bar Kappara] and asked him: If a zab had three [new] issues during the night of the eighth day,² what would be the view of Beth Hillel in this case?³ Is the reason of Beth Hillel in the case of an abortion on the night [of the eighty-first day] because it is written, 'or for a daughter', but in the case of a zab there will be no sacrifice, since there is no superfluous text in connection therewith; or perhaps there is no difference [between these two cases]? — Replied to him Bar Kappara: What did the Babylonian⁴ say in this matter? R. Hoshaiia was silent and said nothing. Then Bar Kappara said to him: 'We have still to depend upon the words of Iyya!⁵

Let us return to that which has been said before. 'Lo, it says, or for a daughter, to include the eve of the eighty-first day'. Are we to say that this is a point of dispute between Tannaim? If a zab had three issues in the night of the eighth day, one [Baraita] teaches, He has to bring an offering, whereas another [Baraita] teaches, He is exempted. Now, do they not differ in the following: The one which teaches that he is liable holds that the night does not render a period wanting in time;⁶ and the one which teaches that he is exempt holds that the night renders a period wanting in time!⁷ — Said R. Huna b. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: These Tannaim [indeed] hold that the night renders a period wanting in time, but the one which teaches that he is liable, deals with a zab of two issues,⁸ and the one which teaches that he is exempt deals with a zab of three issues.⁹ But need the case of a zab of two issues be stated?¹⁰ — This is what we are informed: Only when he perceives [three issues] on the night of the eighth day; but if on the day of the seventh, he is not liable; for he holds that an issue which disturbs [the period of cleanness]¹¹ does not render one liable to an offering.

Said Raba: You have explained the teaching that one is exempted from an offering as referring to a zab of three issues; why then has this law not been stated in conjunction with the [Mishnah]: ‘Five who bring one sacrifice for many transgressions’?¹² — Because this law is not absolute;¹³ for R. Johanan said: If he perceived one issue in the night¹⁴ and two during the day,¹⁵ he is liable; two in the night and one during the day, he is not liable. Said R. Joseph: You can prove that one is liable if one [was perceived] by night and two during the day, for the first issue is regarded as a mere discharge of semen,¹⁶ and yet if two more issues are perceived, they combine one with the other. [Against this] said R. Shesheth son of R. Idi: What argument is this? The first issue of a zab took place at a time fit for offerings, but in the instance of ‘one by night’, where the issue was at a time not fit for offerings, had not R. Johanan taught us that they combine with one another, I would have thought that they do not combine. But does R. Johanan hold that the night renders a period wanting in time?¹⁷ Did not Hezekiah say:¹⁸ If he [the nazirite] became unclean during the eighth day,¹⁹ he has to bring a [second] offering; if on the night [of the eighth day], he does not bring [an offering]; while R. Johanan holds, Even on the night [of the eighth day] he has to bring?²⁰ — When R. Johanan said if [he perceived] two by night and one during the day he has to bring [an offering], it was according to him who holds [that the night] renders a period wanting in time. But according to him is not this obvious? — [The case] of one by night and two during the day was necessary [to be mentioned]; for I might have thought, since the one issue was not at a time fit for offerings, there is no combination. Therefore we are told [that this is not so].

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN HAD FIVE DOUBTFUL BIRTHS²¹ OR FIVE DOUBTFUL ISSUES,²² SHE NEED BRING BUT ONE OFFERING,²³ AND MAY THEN PARTAKE OF SACRIFICIAL FLESH, AND SHE IS NOT BOUND TO BRING THE OTHER [OFFERINGS]. IF SHE HAD FIVE CERTAIN ISSUES, OR FIVE CERTAIN BIRTHS, SHE BRINGS ONE OFFERING AND MAY THEN PARTAKE OF SACRIFICIAL FLESH; BUT IT IS STILL HER DUTY TO BRING THE OTHER OFFERINGS. IT ONCE HAPPENED IN JERUSALEM THAT THE PRICE OF A PAIR OF DOVES²⁴ ROSE TO A GOLDEN DENAR. SAID R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL, BY THIS SANCTUARY, I SHALL NOT GO TO SLEEP TO-NIGHT BEFORE THEY COST BUT A [SILVER] DENAR! THEN HE ENTERED THE BETH DIN AND TAUGHT: IF A WOMAN HAD FIVE CERTAIN BIRTHS OR FIVE CERTAIN ISSUES SHE NEED BRING BUT ONE OFFERING, AND MAY THEN PARTAKE OF SACRIFICIAL FLESH, AND SHE IS NOT BOUND TO BRING THE OTHER [OFFERINGS]. THEREUPON THE PRICE OF A PAIR OF BIRDS STOOD AT A QUARTER OF A [SILVER] DENAR EACH.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If she had five certain births and five doubtful ones, or five certain issues and five doubtful ones, she brings two pairs of birds, one for the certain and one for the doubtful cases. The one offered for the certain cases may be eaten, and it is still incumbent upon her to bring the remaining offerings; that offered for the doubtful cases is not eaten,²⁵ and the woman is not bound to bring any more offerings. R. Johanan b. Nuri said: For the certain cases she shall say, The offering is for the last occurrence,²⁶ and she will be exempted; but for the doubtful cases, if there is a certain one among them,²⁷ she shall say that the offering is for the one that is not in doubt, and she is exempted; if not, she says that the offering is for any one of the occurrences and she is exempted. R. Akiba said: Both in the instance of the certain cases and in that of the doubtful ones she shall say that the offering is for any one of the occurrences and she is exempted. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to R. Papa: I shall tell you in the name of Raba in which point these Tannaim differ: R. Johanan b. Nuri compares these instances to those of sin-offerings: Just as when one is liable to five sin-offerings, he is not atoned for before all have been offered, the same is the ruling in our case. R. Akiba on the other hand compares them to immersions;²⁸ for if one requires five immersions, as soon as he has immersed once he is clean; the same is the ruling in our case. Said R. Papa to him: If it was to be assumed that R. Johanan b. Nuri compared our instances to those of sin-offerings, why does he maintain that for doubtful cases she shall say the offering is for any one of them, and she is exempted? Suppose one was liable

(1) Lev. XII, 6. The whole phrase 'for a son or for a daughter' is superfluous.

(2) Cf. Lev. XV, 14. After three issues he is unclean so as to require seven clean days, and an offering on the eighth.

(3) I.e., is he liable to another offering for the second set of issues?

(4) Viz., R. Hiyya, cf. Suk. 20a.

(5) Derisive pronunciation of Hiyya, who as a Babylonian could not utter gutturals; v. M.K. 16a. The text, however, is not clear.

(6) I.e., whenever a certain period has been fixed after the elapse of which one is liable to a certain duty, e.g., the offering of a sacrifice, and there is only a night intervening, the period may be regarded as accomplished. The new issues therefore involve a new offering.

(7) The new issues are regarded as falling within the period of seven days resulting from the former uncleanness. No new offering is therefore required. Yet in the case of the abortions dealt with in our Mishnah there is liability in the view of Beth Hillel to a new set of offerings, on account of the text, 'or for a daughter'.

(8) Such a person is unclean and must count seven days, but is not liable to a sacrifice. If on the night of the eighth day he perceives three issues, these render him liable to an offering.

(9) For which he was already liable to a sacrifice; and the subsequent issues do not render him liable to bring a second offering.

(10) It is self-evident that he is liable to an offering.

(11) The issue on the seventh day destroys the period of cleanness of seven days, and they must be started again.

(12) Infra 9a. Here, too, one is liable to one offering although more than three issues were perceived.

(13) I.e., there are instances when one is liable even for issues on the night of the eighth day. viz., if two issues were perceived on the eighth day, the issue of the previous night combines with these, and he is liable to a new offering.

(14) Viz., the night of the eighth day.

(15) Viz., the eighth day.

(16) Rendering one unclean only for one day, and not liable to an offering.

(17) For he holds, for two issues during the night and one during the day, he is exempted.

(18) Hag. 9b.

(19) A nazirite who becomes unclean has to count seven clean days, bring an offering on the eighth day and begin to count again his period of naziriteship.

(20) Obviously this opinion cannot agree with the principle that the night renders the period wanting in time.

(21) Such as enumerated in the last but one Mishnah.

(22) I.e., it was doubtful whether the issues took place during the period of menstruation, in which case the uncleanness does not require offerings, or outside that period; v. Lev. XV, 25.

(23) For all the five cases. The sacrifice is offered out of doubt in order to enable the woman to partake afterwards of sacrificial flesh.

(24) A pair of pigeons or a pair of doves was the prescribed offering in the instances of the Mishnah. Rashi: two pairs, i.e. four birds, cost two golden denars, thus one golden denar (i.e. twenty-five silver denars) the pair.

(25) It is brought only in order to enable her to partake of sacrificial flesh.

(26) For if it was offered for one of the previous occurrences, those following would appear unatoned for, and this could lead to misunderstanding in that on future similar occasions the woman would assume that offerings were not essential.

(27) V. Rashi.

(28) E.g., if one contracted uncleanness five times.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 8b

to five suspensive guilt-offerings, would he indeed be exempted if he offered only one? Has it not been taught: This is the general rule: Whenever there is a division¹ with regard to sin-offerings, there is also a division with reference to guilt-offerings?² — In fact, both compare our instances to that of immersion, and they differ as to whether we apprehend negligence. R. Johanan b. Nuri holds, It might lead to negligence;³ R. Akiba holds, We do not apprehend negligence.

C H A P T E R I I

MISHNAH. THERE ARE FOUR PERSONS WHO REQUIRE A CEREMONY OF ATONEMENT,⁴ AND FOUR WHO BRING A SACRIFICE FOR WILFUL AS WELL AS FOR INADVERTENT TRANSGRESSION.⁵ THE FOLLOWING ARE THOSE WHO REQUIRE A CEREMONY OF ATONEMENT: THE ZAB,⁶ THE ZABAH,⁶ THE WOMAN AFTER CONFINEMENT⁷ AND THE LEPER.⁸ R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAID, ALSO A PROSELYTE IS REGARDED AS A PERSON WHO STILL REQUIRES A CEREMONY OF ATONEMENT UNTIL THE BLOOD HAS BEEN SPRINKLED FOR HIM;⁹ THE SAME APPLIES TO THE NAZIRITE WITH REFERENCE TO WINE, HAIRCUTTING AND UNCLEANNESS.¹⁰

GEMARA. Why are zab and zabah enumerated as two separate instances? Apparently because they differ as to their uncleanness: for the zab is not unclean through discharge by accident,¹¹ and the zabah is not rendered unclean through issues but through days;¹² for it has been taught: Out of his flesh,¹³ but not by accident. A man is also unclean through issues as well as through days, as it has been taught: The text¹⁴ has made the uncleanness of the male dependent upon discharge and that of the female upon days. A zabah on the other hand is unclean through issue by accident and is not unclean through issue as through days. Now are not the leprous man and the leprous woman also different with regard to their uncleanness? For the leprous man is required to rend his clothes and to let his hair grow loose, as it is written: His clothes shall be rent and the hair of his head shall go loose,¹⁵ and he is forbidden marital intercourse; while the leprous woman is not required to rend her clothes and to let her hair grow loose, as it has been taught: I know only the law concerning a man,¹⁶ whence do I know its application to a woman? When the text reads, and the leper,¹⁷ both are included. Wherefore then is 'man' mentioned? The Writ removed him from the [application of the] earlier passage to the latter one,¹⁸ to teach us that only a man is required to rend his clothes and to let his hair grow loose, but not a woman. Also the woman is permitted marital intercourse, as it is written: And he shall dwell outside his tent seven days,¹⁹ but not [she] outside her tent. Why then have they²⁰ not been enumerated as two separate instances? — The zab and the zabah are essentially different with regard to the source of uncleanness;²¹ whereas the leprous man and the leprous woman are not essentially different in their source of uncleanness, for the standard size of both is a bean.

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAID, ALSO A PROSELYTE IS REGARDED AS A PERSON WHO STILL REQUIRES etc. And why has the first Tanna not mentioned the proselyte? — He mentions only instances where the offering is to effect the permission of eating consecrated things, while in the case of the proselyte the offering is brought in order to qualify him to enter the congregation.²² And why has he not mentioned the nazirite? After all, when the nazirite brings an offering it is in order that he may be permitted to drink unconsecrated wine.²³ And R. Eliezer, who has mentioned the nazirite in reference to his qualification,²⁴ why has he not stated also the instance of the unclean nazirite?²⁵ — The latter offers his sacrifice only to qualify for naziriteship in cleanness.

Our Rabbis have taught: A proselyte is prevented from partaking of consecrated things before he has offered his sacrificial birds. If he has offered one single pigeon in the morning, he is permitted to partake of consecrated things in the evening.²⁶ All sacrifices of birds consist of one sin-offering and one burnt-offering; in this case²⁷ both are burnt-offerings. If he has offered his obligatory sacrifice²⁸ from the cattle, he has done his duty; if he has offered a burnt-offering and a peace-offering, he has done his duty; if a meal — and a peace-offering he has not fulfilled his duty. The prescription of birds as sacrifices is, as it were, to be regarded only as a rule towards greater leniency.²⁹ Now, why do not a meal- and a peace-offering exempt him from his duty? Apparently because it is written: As ye do, so he shall do;³⁰ As ye [Israelites] offer a burnt-offering and a peace-offering, so shall also the proselyte offer a burnt-offering and a peace-offering. Similarly then it should not suffice for him to offer his obligatory sacrifice from the cattle, because it is written: 'As ye do, so he shall do'? — Said R. papa. Argue thus: As he is included regarding the offering of a bird,³¹ should he not the more so be included regarding the burnt-offering of the cattle? If so, a meal-offering should also exempt him! — The text has excluded it by the word 'so'.³² And whence do we know that he is included regarding the offering of a bird? — For our Rabbis taught: [It is written.] 'As ye do, so shall he do': As ye offer a burnt- and a peace-offering, so shall also he offer a burnt- and a peace-offering, as it is indeed confirmed in the text, As ye are, so shall the stranger be.³³ Whence do we know that he is included concerning the offering of a bird? It is written, An offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord,³⁴ which is the offering that is wholly unto the Lord? You must say, This is the burnt-offering of the bird.³⁵

(1) I.e., that separate sacrifices are to be offered.

(2) Infra 15b.

(3) The stipulation that the sacrifice is for the last of the occurrences is essential in order to make it clear that all the occurrences are to be covered by this one offering. Were this stipulation omitted so that the sacrifice might be assumed to refer to one of the early occurrences, it would lead to the misunderstanding that it is not necessary to bring a sacrifice for every birth or issue. The sacrifice might then be omitted altogether on future occasions.

(4) I.e., a sacrifice. This sacrifice is not offered for the expiation of a sin, but in order to enable its owner to partake of consecrated things.

(5) These are exceptions, for the rule is that offerings are brought only for inadvertent transgression. The enumeration is found in the following Mishnah.

(6) Lev. XV, 2-33; v. Glos.

(7) Ibid XII, 2-8.

(8) Ibid XIV, 2-32.

(9) The first, anonymous Tanna holds that a proselyte may partake of sacred things even before the offering has been brought.

(10) I.e., he may not drink wine, cut his hair and render himself unclean by contact with the dead before the requisite offerings have been brought. The first Tanna also agrees on this point, but has omitted it because he has confined himself to the instances referring to the eating of sacred things.

(11) He is unclean only if the discharge was natural.

(12) Only when the three discharges were on three consecutive days is she unclean so as to require an offering.

(13) Lev. XV, 2. I.e., by reason of his flesh's lust.

(14) Cf. Lev. XV, 2-3 dealing with a man, and XV, 25 which deals with a woman.

(15) Lev. XIII, 45.

(16) It refers to Lev. XIII, 44 where it says that the priest shall declare the leprous man unclean.

(17) Lev. XIII, 45. 'The lever' is taken to include the woman though the word gurmvi is in the masculine, because it is altogether superfluous.

(18) I.e., from verse 44 to 45.

(19) Lev. XIV, 8. 'Tent' is a symbolic expression of matrimonial life.

(20) Viz., the leprous man and the leprous woman.

(21) In that in the case of a woman uncleanness is effected only through three issues on three consecutive days.

(22) I.e., to permit his marriage to a Jewess.

(23) And his offering is not particularly for the purpose of partaking of consecrated things.

(24) Viz., for secular things.

(25) I.e., a nazirite whose naziriteship has been interrupted by defilement. He is then required to bring an offering and to commence anew the period of naziriteship he originally vowed.

(26) Although it is still incumbent upon him to bring the other.

(27) I.e., in the instance of the proselyte.

(28) I.e., one burnt-offering of the cattle can take the place of two birds.

(29) I.e., as a concession to the poor who cannot afford a sacrifice of cattle, which of course is permissible.

(30) Num. XV, 14. Of the Israelites it reads (Ex. XXIV, 5) that when they consecrated themselves to the service of God they offered burnt- and peace-offerings.

(31) I.e., since we have learnt that sacrifices of the bird suffice for the proselyte as for the Israelite (as is soon shown), is it not logical that a sacrifice of the cattle should the more so suffice?

(32) Num. XV, 14. So and not otherwise.

(33) Ibid. XV, 15.

(34) Ibid v. 13.

(35) Of the burnt-offerings of the cattle the skin is left for the priests; while the burnt-offering of the bird is wholly burnt.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 9a

I might then include also the meal-offering; therefore it reads 'so'.

Another [Baraita] teaches: [From the text,] 'and will offer an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord', I might derive everything that is offered up by fire, including a meal-offering; therefore it is written, 'As ye do, so shall he do': As ye offer blood sacrifices, so they¹ too blood sacrifices. I might then conclude: As ye offer a burnt- and a peace-offering, so shall they also offer a burnt-offering and a peace-offering;² it is therefore written, 'As ye are, so shall the stranger be': He is compared to you, but not wholly concerning your offerings.³ Rabbi says: 'As ye' means as your forefathers: As your forefathers entered into the covenant only by circumcision, immersion and the sprinkling of the blood,⁴ so shall they enter the Covenant only by circumcision, immersion and the sprinkling of the blood.

The offering of one pigeon does not suffice, for we do not find anywhere in the Torah [such an offering]; and the prescription of birds as sacrifices is only a rule towards greater leniency. Is this indeed so?⁵ Has it not been taught: What is the meaning of, and he shall offer it?⁶ It reads concerning turtle-doves, 'he shall offer',⁷ and I might argue therefrom that if a man vows to offer a burnt-offering of a bird he shall offer no less than two pigeons,⁸ therefore it is written, 'and he shall offer it'.⁹ Even one pigeon! — After all, we do not find an obligatory offering of this kind. But is there not the case of the woman after confinement who offers one young pigeon or one turtle-dove as a sin-offering? There a lamb is offered in addition. The Master said: 'As your forefathers entered into the Covenant only etc.'. It is right concerning circumcision, for it is written, For all the people that came out were circumcised,¹⁰ alternatively. And when I passed by thee, and saw thee wallowing in thy blood, I said unto thee: In thy blood, live, etc.;¹¹ as to the sprinkling of the blood, it is mentioned in the text, And he sent the young men of the children of Israel [who offered burnt-offerings and sacrificed peace offerings];¹² but whence do we know the immersion? — It is written, And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people,¹³ and there can be no sprinkling without immersion.¹⁴ If so, we should nowadays not receive any proselytes, since there are no sacrifices to-day? — Said R. Aha son of Jacob: It is written, And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever may be among you, etc.¹⁵

Our Rabbis taught: A proselyte in these days has to put aside a fourth [of a denar]¹⁶ for his sacrifice of birds.¹⁷ Said R. Simeon: R. Johanan b. Zakkai held a vote on this rule and abolished it for fear of misuse.¹⁸ Said R. Idi b. Gershom in the name of R. Adda son of Ahaba, The decision is according to R. Simeon. Some report the latter statement with reference to that which has been taught: A resident alien¹⁹ may do work for himself on the Sabbath in the same measure as an Israelite may do on the intermediate days of the festivals.²⁰ R. Akiba says as an Israelite on the festival.²¹ R. Jose says: A resident alien may do work for himself on the Sabbath in the same measure as an Israelite on week-days.²² R. Simeon says: Both a resident alien and a male or female sojourning heathen slave may do work for themselves in the same measure as an Israelite may do on week-days.

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING OFFER A SACRIFICE FOR WILFUL AS WELL AS FOR INADVERTENT TRANSGRESSION: ONE WHO HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A HANDMAID,²³ A NAZIRITE WHO HAS BECOME UNCLEAN,²⁴ [ONE WHO SWORE FALSELY] THE OATH CONCERNING EVIDENCE²⁵ OR THE OATH CONCERNING A DEPOSIT.²⁶ THERE ARE FIVE PERSONS WHO BRING ONE SACRIFICE FOR SEVERAL TRANSGRESSIONS, AND FIVE WHO BRING A SACRIFICE OF HIGHER OR LESSER VALUE.²⁷ THE FOLLOWING BRING ONE SACRIFICE FOR SEVERAL TRANSGRESSIONS: ONE WHO HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A HANDMAID²³ SEVERAL TIMES, AND A NAZIRITE WHO BECAME UNCLEAN SEVERAL TIMES.²⁸

GEMARA. Whence do we know the law concerning the handmaid? — Our Rabbis taught: And the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt-offering for his sin which he hath sinned;²⁹ this teaches that one may bring one offering for several sins; and he shall be forgiven for his sin which he hath sinned.³⁰ that wilful transgression is equal to transgression in error. A NAZIRITE WHO HAS BECOME UNCLEAN. Whence do we know this? — It is written, And if any man die in sudden [be-fetha'] unawareness [pithe'om] beside him:³¹ fetha' means unintentionally, for thus it is written: But if he thrust him unintentionally [be-fetha'] without enmity;³² pithe'om means unexpectedly, and thus it is written: And the Lord spoke suddenly [pithe'om] unto Moses.³³ Another [Baraitha] taught: Pithe'om means intentionally, and thus it is written: A prudent man seeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple [petha'im] pass on, and are punished.³⁴ Why has the text not written just pithe'om, which denotes error, intention and accident at the same time: intention and accident as has been explained before; it denotes, however, also error, as it is written: The thoughtless [pethi] believeth every word?³⁵ Why then mention befetha'? — If pithe'om alone was mentioned, which denotes both error and intention and accident, I might have thought that an offering nevertheless was brought only for transgression in error, as is the case with all the laws of the Torah, but not in the case of accidental or wilful transgression; therefore the Divine Law mentions also befetha', which denotes error only, to indicate that pithe'om shall denote accident and wilfulness, so that also in these circumstances the Divine Law enjoins an offering.

THE OATH CONCERNING EVIDENCE. Whence do we know this? — Our Rabbis have taught:³⁶ In connection with the other laws³⁷ the term it being hidden [from him] is used;³⁸ in connection with this law³⁹ this term is not used, to indicate that he is liable to an offering for wilful as well as for inadvertent transgression.

THE OATH CONCERNING A DEPOSIT. Whence do we know this? — It is derived from the oath concerning evidence through the common term sinneth [teheta].⁴⁰

THERE ARE FIVE PERSONS WHO BRING ONE SACRIFICE FOR SEVERAL TRANSGRESSIONS. It is stated ONE WHO HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A HANDMAID SEVERAL TIMES; whence do we know this? — Our Rabbis have taught: And the priest shall make atonement for him with the ram of the guilt-offering for his sin which he hath sinned':⁴¹ this teaches that one may bring one offering for several sins; 'and he shall be forgiven for his sin which he hath sinned': that wilful transgression is equal to transgression in error. But does not the text deal with the wilful transgression? — Rather say: that transgression in error be equal to wilful transgression.

R. Hanina of Tirna'ah⁴² put the following query to R. Johanan: If one had intercourse with five designated handmaids⁴³ in one spell of unawareness,⁴⁴ is he liable to a sacrifice for each of them or altogether only to one sacrifice? — The latter replied: He is guilty for each of them. And why, the former asked, is this case different from one who had intercourse five times with one handmaid in different spells of unawareness? — He replied: In the case of one handmaid one cannot argue that there were different bodies; in the instance of the five handmaids there were different bodies.⁴⁵ And whence do we know that the argument of different bodies holds good in the case of the handmaid? — He replied: Did you not say⁴⁶ with reference to forbidden relations that the word 'and a woman'⁴⁷ implies that one is guilty for each woman? Also in connection with the handmaid it is written: And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman

- (1) Should be, 'he too'.

that is a bondmaid, etc.,¹ to enjoin separate offerings for each handmaid.

A NAZIRITE WHO BECAME UNCLEAN SEVERAL TIMES. Whose view does this represent? — Said R. Hisda, That of R. Jose son of R. Judah who holds that the naziriteship of cleanness counts from the seventh day,² and the instance of our Mishnah is realised if he became unclean on the seventh day and then again on the seventh; since the time for the offering was not reached, he is liable only to one sacrifice. [How can the instance of the Mishnah be realised] according to Rabbi who holds that the naziriteship of cleanness does not count before the eighth day? If he became unclean on the seventh day and again on the [following] seventh day, is this not one long period of uncleanness?³ If he became unclean on the eighth day and again on the [following] eighth day, since the time of the offering has been reached,⁴ he should be liable to an offering for each uncleanness? It is thus proved that the Mishnah is in accordance with R. Jose son of R. Judah. And where do we find R. Jose's view? — It has been taught: And he shall hallow his head that same day,⁵ refers to the day on which the sacrifices are offered,⁶ thus the words of Rabbi. R. Jose son of R. Judah says, On the day of the cutting of his hair.⁷

MISHNAH. ONE⁸ WHO WARNS HIS WIFE⁹ IN REGARD TO SEVERAL MEN,¹⁰ AND A LEPER WHO HAS CONTRACTED A LEP ROUS DISEASE SEVERAL TIMES.¹¹ IF HE HAS OFFERED THE BIRDS AND THEN BECOMES LEPROUS AGAIN, THEY DO NOT COUNT FOR HIM UNTIL HE HAS OFFERED HIS SIN-OFFERING.¹² R. JUDAH SAYS,

UNTIL HE HAS OFFERED HIS GUILT-OFFERING.

GEMARA. Whence do we know the law concerning this?¹³ — It is written: This is the law concerning jealousies:¹⁴ One law for several warnings.

A LEPER WHO HAS CONTRACTED A LEPROUS DISEASE SEVERAL TIMES. Whence do we know this? — It is written: This is the law of the leper:¹⁵ one law for several cases of leprosy.

IF HE HAS OFFERED THE BIRDS AND THEN BECOMES LEPROUS AGAIN, THEY DO NOT COUNT FOR HIM UNTIL HE HAS OFFERED HIS SIN-OFFERING. R. JUDAH SAYS: UNTIL HE HAS OFFERED HIS GUILT-OFFERING. But did you not say he offers only one sacrifice?¹⁶ — The text is incomplete, and should read thus: If he has offered the birds and then becomes leprous again, he offers but one set of sacrifices. The decision whether the sacrifices be those of the poor person or of the rich person¹⁷ is not taken until the sin-offering is brought.¹⁸ R. Judah says: Until the guilt-offering is brought.

We have learnt there:¹⁹ If a leper became rich after he had offered his guilt-offering, you go by his pecuniary status at the time of the offering of the sin-offering.²⁰ Thus R. Simeon. R. Judah says: At the time of the offering of the guilt-offering.²¹ It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, At the time of the offering of the birds. Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: All the three [Rabbis] derive their respective views from the same passage, Whose means suffice not for that which pertaineth to his cleansing.²² R. Simeon holds: The offering that effects atonement [is decisive]; R. Judah holds: That which effects his qualification²³ [to partake of holy things]; R. Eliezer b. Jacob holds: That which effects cleanness, namely, the birds.

MISHNAH. A WOMAN²⁴ WHO HAS UNDERGONE SEVERAL CONFINEMENTS, E.G., IF SHE PRODUCED A FEMALE ABORTION WITHIN EIGHTY DAYS OF THE BIRTH OF A GIRL,²⁵ AND THEN SHE PRODUCED AGAIN A FEMALE ABORTION WITHIN EIGHTY DAYS OF THE FIRST; OR IF SHE PRODUCED A MULTIPLE OF ABORTIONS.²⁶ R. JUDAH SAYS: SHE BRINGS AN OFFERING FOR THE FIRST BIRTH AND NOT FOR THE SECOND, FOR THE THIRD AGAIN BUT NOT FOR THE FOURTH.²⁷ GEMARA. Whence do we know this? — A Tanna recited before R. Shesheth: This is the law for her that beareth, whether a male or a female,²⁸ teaches that she offers but one offering for several births. I might perhaps assume then that also for a birth and a discharge of gonorrhoea²⁹ only one offering is brought, therefore it is written, 'this'.³⁰ It states, 'I might perhaps assume then that also for a birth and a discharge of gonorrhoea only one offering is brought'. If so,³¹ she should also bring but one offering if she ate blood and gave birth to a child? — Read thus: I might assume that she also brings but one offering [for two births if] one was before the period of cleanness had expired and the other after it had expired;³² therefore it is written, 'this'.

IF SHE PRODUCED WITHIN EIGHTY DAYS etc. If you will assume that according to R. Judah the first birth causes the offering, and the period of uncleanness is counted from the first birth,³³ then according to the Rabbis³⁴ the second birth causes the offering and the second, because there is no period of cleanness attached to the latter, since it fell within the period of cleanness of the first. An offering has therefore to be brought for the third birth which covers also the fourth that took place within the former's period of cleanness. period of uncleanness is counted from the second birth. You say, 'If you will assume'; is it not obvious?³⁵ — It has to be stated for the sake of its inclusion of the instance of the 'multiple of abortions'. I might have thought that in the case of the multiple of abortions R. Judah agrees with the Rabbis; therefore we are informed [that it is not so].

The following query was put forward:

(1) Lev. XIX, 20.

(2) A nazirite who becomes unclean has to count seven clean days and bring an offering on the eighth day. He has then to observe again his vow of naziriteship for the period stipulated, which is called the naziriteship of cleanness. According to R. Jose the new period commences on the seventh day. If the nazirite becomes unclean again on this day, it is considered a new state of uncleanness and yet he is liable only to one sacrifice because the offering is due only on the eighth. At the end of another spell of seven days he will then bring one sacrifice for two different occurrences of uncleanness.

(3) The Mishnah would then not be justified in regarding this as a case where one offering is brought for several separate transgressions or occurrences.

(4) I.e., the offering became due for the first uncleanness and thus designated for it.

(5) Num. VI, 11. I.e., he shall commence the new period of naziriteship, as the text continues, And he shall consecrate unto the Lord the days of his naziriteship.

(6) I.e., the eighth day; v. Num. VI, 10.

(7) I.e., the seventh day; v. ibid v. 9.

(8) This is a continuation of the enumeration in the previous Mishnah of laws where one is liable to one sacrifice for several transgressions.

(9) Not to have any relations with certain men; cf. Sot. 2a.

(10) Cf. Num. V, 15f. The jealous husband brings a meal-offering of barley.

(11) A leper when declared healed and clean by the priest, offers two birds, cf. Lev. XIV, 4-7, and after seven days other offerings, cf. v. 10ff. If before the offering of the latter sacrifices he contracts again a leprous disease, he is not liable to new sacrifices.

(12) After the seven days he offers three sacrifices: a sin-, a guilt- and a burnt-offering. For the explanation of this passage v. infra Gemara.

(13) With reference to the first instance in the Mishnah.

(14) Num. V, 29. The use of the plural implies this law.

(15) Lev. XIV, 2. The article is regarded as superfluous, and is taken to have been used for the sake of this implication.

(16) While the text of the Mishnah seems to imply that he has to offer birds again.

(17) The rich person brings three lambs as his sacrifices; the poor person offers a lamb as a guilt-offering and then two pigeons or turtle-doves, one for a sin-offering and one for a burnt-offering.

(18) I.e., it is the pecuniary position of the leper at the time of the offering of the sin-offering that is decisive, and not at the time of the offering of the birds.

(19) Neg. XIV, 11.

(20) The sin- and burnt-offering are offered after the guilt-offering.

(21) I.e., in spite of the fact that he is rich now, he offers but pigeons for the sin- and burnt-offerings, since he was poor at the moment when the guilt-offering was brought.

(22) Lev. XIV, 32. 'To his cleansing' is taken to indicate that the moment of cleansing is decisive, and the three scholars differ as to what is meant by this cleansing: cleansing of sins, cleansing of the impediment to partake of holy things, or that which introduces the ceremony of purification.

(23) Viz., the smearing of the blood of the guilt-offering upon the thumb.

(24) This, too, is a continuation of the enumeration in the second Mishnah of this chapter of laws where one is liable to one sacrifice for several transgressions.

(25) Cf. Lev. XII, 5. After the birth of a girl the woman counts eighty days of cleanness and offers then a sacrifice. The abortion within this period is thus covered by the sacrifice for the first birth.

(26) Lit. 'twins'. Each abortion was brought forth before the period of cleanness for the previous abortion had expired.

(27) An abortion involves a sacrifice only if it takes place at least forty days after the conception. The first abortion took place within eighty days of the proper birth, but the second must of necessity have taken place after that period. It is therefore not covered by the offering brought for the proper birth. The third birth, i.e., the second abortion, cannot be regarded as exempted on account of the fact that it took place within eighty days of the

(28) Lev. XII, 7. The text is taken to suggest that there is one law, i.e., one offering, for several instances.

(29) Which preceded the birth.

(30) 'This' is restrictive: only in the instance of births is the allowance regarding the offering made.

(31) Viz., that according to your assumption, one offering should suffice for two instances that are not connected one with the other. The argument is then led ad absurdum.

(32) Or rather, if the second birth took place after the period of cleanness of the first.

(33) I.e., whenever a birth takes place within the period of cleanness of another, in which case one sacrifice is offered for both, it is the first for which the offering is brought and the second is merely covered by it. The period of cleanness is counted from the first birth, so that there is no such period provided for the second; v. p. 73. n. 8.

(34) I.e., the anonymous view of the Mishnah which maintains that she is liable only to one sacrifice for all the four births, holding that whenever a birth takes place within the period of cleanness of another, it is the second for which the offering is brought while the first becomes exempted owing to the fact that its period of cleanness was interrupted. In the instance of the Mishnah, therefore, the second birth takes the place of the first, the third the place of the second, etc. ad infinitum, and the offering is brought for the last of the sequence of births. cf. also Mishnah 7b.

(35) And therefore superfluous.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 10a

What is R. Judah's view with reference to uncleanness?¹ Shall we say, R. Judah holds that the second birth is not taken into account only with regard to offerings, because it took place before the offering for the first birth was due, and consequently the second birth is not taken into account; but with reference to cleanness and uncleanness, I might say that the second birth is taken into account in that the period of impurity² thereof interrupts [the period of cleanness of the first], and that the latter period is afterwards completed and the period of cleanness of the second birth commences thereafter? Or does R. Judah uphold his view only if it leads to greater stringency;³ but here,⁴ since it leads to greater leniency,⁵ he does not uphold his view? — Said R. Huna of Sura, Come and hear: For a woman after confinement, one may slaughter the Paschal Lamb and sprinkle the blood on the fortieth day after the birth of a male, and on the eightieth day after the birth of a girl?⁶ [Whereon it was asked,] Is she not still unclean?⁷ and R. Hisda answered: This is in accordance with R. Judah, who holds that the second birth is not taken into account.⁸

Now, if you assume that with reference to uncleanness R. Judah agrees that the second birth is taken into account, how can the Paschal Sacrifice be slaughtered for her on the fortieth day, seeing that even in the evening she will not be permitted to partake of it? You must, therefore, conclude that also with reference to cleanness and uncleanness does R. Judah hold that the second birth is not taken into account! — No, I may still maintain that with reference to cleanness and uncleanness R. Judah agrees that the second birth is taken into account, but that law refers to a Paschal Lamb that is offered in uncleanness.⁹ But is she then permitted to partake of it, have we not learnt: A Paschal Lamb that is offered in uncleanness may not be eaten by a :zab or a zabah, or by menstruant women or by a woman after confinement?¹⁰ — These may not eat if they have not immersed; the law, however, which states that one may slaughter and sprinkle for her refers to a woman who has immersed.¹¹ If so,¹² she is fit for the Paschal Lamb from the eighth day onward!¹³ — She is not fit from the eighth day onward, for it is held that a zab who immersed by day has still the status of a zab.¹⁴ If so, she is unfit even on the fortieth day! — No, on the fortieth day she is regarded fit, for it is held that a zab who lacks but offerings¹⁵ is not considered a zab. But what will be your answer according to Raba who holds that a zab who lacks but offerings is still considered a zab? — Said R. Ashi: Raba will interpret the law as referring to the fortieth day of the conception of a male and the eightieth day of the conception of a female,¹⁶ and as being in accordance with R. Ishmael who holds¹⁷ the limit for a male to be forty-one days and for a female eighty-one days.¹⁸ But is she not, after all, unclean as a menstruant woman?¹⁹ — It deals with a dry birth.²⁰ If so, is the law not obvious? — I might have thought that the opening of the uterus cannot take place without discharge of blood;²¹ therefore he lets us know that the uterus can open without a discharge of blood.

R. Shema'iah said, Come and hear: 'Sixty'²² may convey both a connected and a disconnected²³ spell of time; therefore it is written 'days':²⁴ as the day is a connected spell of time, so also the sixty days. With whom does this conform? Shall I say with the Rabbis? Surely, according to them, a disconnected spell of time is an impossibility!²⁵ It must thus be in accordance with R. Judah; and since it is stated that the time must be connected, we are led to decide that he upholds his view only if it leads to greater stringency but not if it leads to greater leniency!²⁶ — No, it may conform with the view of the Rabbis, but it refers to a woman who brought forth a male abortion within the eighty days of a female birth.²⁷ But, then, after all, is it not so that the days of the first birth finish before those of the second²⁸ and the Rabbis hold that the second birth is taken into account?²⁹ According to the Rabbis the law can be realised in the case of a birth of twins, a female first and a male afterwards, and where the male was, e.g., born after twenty days of the period of cleanness had passed,³⁰ so that she must keep of the days relating to the female birth seven days of impurity. The discussion, then, is thus: I might think that when twins are born, the female first and the male afterwards, the days of impurity of the latter cause an interruption³¹ so that the sixty-six days are counted disjointedly; therefore it is written 'days': as the day is a connected spell of time, so also the sixty days must be connected.³² Abaye said: Come and hear, 'Thirty'³³ may convey both a connected and a disconnected spell of time,³⁴ therefore it is written, 'days':³⁵ as the day is a connected spell of time, so also the thirty days. With whom does this conform? Shall I say with the Rabbis? Surely, according to the Rabbis

(1) I.e., whether a period of cleanness, during which the discharge of blood does not render unclean, is provided for the second birth or not.

- (2) I.e., the first seven days after the birth of a male and fourteen days after the birth of a female, during which she is regarded as unclean; cf. Lev. XII, 2 and 5.
- (3) As in the Mishnah where two offerings are imposed.
- (4) I.e., with reference to uncleanness.
- (5) In that the period of cleanness is extended.
- (6) Tosef. Pes. VII, 4.
- (7) The offering is not brought until the forty-first or eighty-first day.
- (8) I.e., this law refers to a woman who gave birth to twins on two consecutive days. The fortieth day of the second birth is thus the forty-first day of the first. On this day she may join the Passover celebration, because the time is due for the offerings which will effect her purification, although they have not been offered yet. The Paschal Lamb is consumed in the evening and the offerings of purification may still be offered. This holds good only according to R. Judah, who says the second birth is not taken into account, for according to the Sages it being the fortieth day of the second birth she would still be unfit for the Paschal Lamb.
- (9) When the majority of the community are unclean the Paschal Lamb may, contrary to the general rule, be offered also for the unclean people. With this reply we depart from R. Hisda's interpretation.
- (10) Pes. 95b.
- (11) For the immersion takes place after the seven days of impurity that follow the birth.
- (12) That the immersion is decisive and not the completion of the period.
- (13) Why state 'the fortieth day'?
- (14) In order to achieve complete cleanness he must immerse and wait till sunset. If the immersion has taken place, but the required spell of time has not passed, he is, according to this view, still unclean. Similarly, if the woman has immersed after the eighth day and has to wait for the completion of the forty days in order to offer the sacrifice, she is still regarded as unfit for sacred things.
- (15) I.e., one who has even completed the requisite time but has not offered his sacrifices. Similarly, the woman is considered fit for the Paschal Lamb on the fortieth day.
- (16) The law does not refer, as hitherto assumed, to the forty days of the period of cleanness, but to an abortion which took place forty or eighty days respectively after the conception. She is permitted to join the Passover celebration because the embryo is considered too immature to cause uncleanness.
- (17) Nid. 30a.
- (18) I.e., the formation of a male embryo lasts forty-one days and that of a female eighty-one days.
- (19) The blood discharged at birth renders her a menstruant woman. How then is she permitted to be counted for a Paschal Lamb?
- (20) Without any discharge of blood.
- (21) So that the woman is unclean even if nobody has actually perceived any blood, for it is assumed that the blood is hidden.
- (22) Lev. XII, 5. It refers to the sixty-six days of cleanness which follow the fourteen days of uncleanness after the birth of a female.
- (23) Viz., by another birth within the eighty days.
- (24) The text reads, sixty days and six days; the repetition of the word 'days' and the fact that the first time it is actually used in the singular implies that the period is to be like one day.
- (25) For the Rabbis hold that in the case of an abortion within eighty days of a birth the period of cleanness of the birth is regarded as annulled and a new period is to start. According to R. Judah on the other hand the period of the first birth still holds good.
- (26) For according to the first alternative of the query above there is a case of a disconnected spell of time, as described in the query.

(27) So that the forty days of the male, namely seven days of impurity and thirty-three days of cleanness, finish before the eighty days of the female. In this case even the Rabbis admit that the second, shorter period of cleanness does not abolish the first, longer one, which is to be resumed. The text conveys that the seven days of impurity caused by the abortion are not to be made up after the eighty days have passed.

(28) Intercourse could not have taken place before the first fourteen days of impurity have passed, during which she is not allowed to her husband. As the embryo must be at least forty days old, the abortion cannot have taken place before the fifty-fourth day after the birth of the female, so that the forty days of the second birth must of necessity end after the eighty days of the first.

(29) The period of cleanness will continue beyond the eighty days of the first birth. This instance can therefore no longer be regarded as an example of a disjointed period of eighty days, mentioned in the statement quoted.

(30) Even the Rabbis who hold the second birth is decisive agree here that the period of cleanness of the first birth is not abolished by that of the second, since the latter finishes before the former.

(31) I.e., the seven days of impurity caused by the second of the twins were to be made up after the eighty days of the first birth

(32) I.e., the seven days of impurity do not cause an interruption of the period of cleanness of the first birth, though the woman is indeed unclean during these seven days.

(33) Lev. XII, 5. It refers to the thirty-three days of cleanness which follow the seven days of impurity after the birth of a male.

(34) I.e., if two male twins were born one, say, thirty days after the other, so that the seven days of impurity of the second supersede seven of the days of cleanness of the first birth. If we said that these seven days are to be made up, we should find the period of cleanness of the first birth disconnected. The text lets us know that the seven days are not to be made up.

(35) V. p. 77, n.9.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 10b

a disconnected spell of time is an impossibility, for they hold that it is the second birth that is of avail.¹ It must, therefore, be in accordance with the view of R. Judah; and it proves that he upholds his view only if it leads to greater stringency, but not if it leads to greater leniency.² R. Ashi, too, said: Come and hear: 'Six days' may mean both a connected and disconnected spell of time;³ therefore it is written 'sixty': as the sixty days are connected, so also the six. With whom does this conform? Shall I say with the Rabbis? Surely, according to the Rabbis a disconnected spell of time is an impossibility, for they hold it is the second birth that is of avail. It must therefore be according to R. Judah, and this proves that he upholds his view only if it leads to greater stringency but not if it leads to greater leniency. This is indeed proved.

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING PERSONS BRING AN OFFERING OF HIGHER OR LESSER VALUE:⁴ ONE WHO REFUSES TO GIVE EVIDENCE,⁵ ONE WHO HAS BROKEN THE WORD OF HIS LIPS [SUPPORTED BY AN OATH],⁶ ONE WHO WHILE UNCLEAN HAS ENTERED THE SANCTUARY OR HAS PARTAKEN OF HOLY THINGS,⁷ A WOMAN AFTER CONFINEMENT⁸ AND A LEPER.⁹

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Some bring the offering of the poor and of the rich, some of the poor, and some of the poorest. A woman after confinement brings the offering of the poor and of the rich,¹⁰ a leper that of the poor,¹¹ while one who refuses to give evidence, or breaks his word, or defiles the Sanctuary or holy things offers the offering of the poor and of the poorest.¹²

Another [Baraita] taught: Sometimes one offering replaces¹³ one, sometimes two replace two, sometimes two replace one and sometimes one replaces two; this teaches that the tenth of an ephah¹⁴ is worth a perutah.¹⁵ The woman after confinement offers one instead of one, namely a single bird in the place of the lamb¹⁶; a leper offers two birds in the place of two lambs; one who refuses to give evidence or one who breaks his word or one who defiles the Sanctuary or holy things offers two birds instead of one lamb, and in the case of direst poverty one tenth of an ephah in the place of two birds.

It says, 'This teaches that the tenth of an ephah is worth a perutah'. Whence do we know this? — Our Rabbis have taught: If one says, I vow an offering for the altar worth a sela', he offers a lamb, for no offering can be offered for a sela' but a lamb. Whence do we know this? — Since the Divine Law stated that the ram of the guilt-offering is valued at two shekels,¹⁷ from this we learn that a one-year old lamb is valued at one sela',¹⁸ for it is said, A lamb of the first year,¹⁹ [from which follows that] a ram is of the second year.²⁰ Then we have learnt:²¹ 'The pair of sacrificial birds on that day stood at a quarter [of a denar]'.²² We thus see that the Divine Law has spared the poor and has fixed their sacrifice at the sixteenth part of that of the rich; we may then assume that the sacrifice of the poorest is to be the sixteenth part of that of the poor. Consequently the offering of the poor is worth a quarter of a denar. Since a quarter of a denar has forty-eight perutahs, a sixteenth thereof would be three perutahs, while it has been stated: 'This teaches that the tenth of an ephah is worth a perutah'. Why a perutah? Did you not say the tenth of an ephah is the offering of the poorest and that this offering is worth one sixteenth part of that of the poor, which we found was three perutahs? — The Tanna derives his proportions from the instance of the woman after confinement, who offers in the place of a lamb one bird, the value of which²³ is one thirty-second part of that of a lamb. But is not the offering of the poorest still the sixteenth part of the poor,²⁴ as it is inferred from the comparison of the lamb and the ram?²⁵ The ephah should then be valued at a perutah and a half!²⁶ — Said Raba, All is derived from the instance of the woman after confinement in the following manner: Since the Divine Law has spared the poor and has fixed their sacrifice at one thirty-second part of that of the rich, as we find in the instance of the woman after confinement, so we assume that the Divine Law has spared the poorest in fixing their sacrifice at the thirty-second part of that of the poor. If so, the ephah should be valued at three-quarters of a perutah! — Indeed, so it is, except that it is not becoming to offer to the Lord less than a perutah.

MISHNAH. WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE HANDMAID²⁷ AND THE FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS²⁸ FROM WHOM SHE DEVIATES BOTH IN REGARD TO THE PENALTY AND THE OFFERING? IN THE CASE OF ALL OTHER FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS A SIN-OFFERING IS BROUGHT, IN THAT OF A HANDMAID A GUILT-OFFERING; IN THE CASE OF THE OTHER FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS A FEMALE ANIMAL IS OFFERED, IN THAT OF THE HANDMAID A MALE; IN THE CASE OF THE OTHER FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS MAN AND WOMAN ARE ALIKE IN RESPECT OF LASHES AND THE SACRIFICE,²⁹ IN THAT OF THE HANDMAID THE MAN IS UNLIKE THE WOMAN REGARDING THE LASHES, AND THE WOMAN IS UNLIKE THE MAN REGARDING THE SACRIFICE;³⁰ IN THE CASE OF ALL OTHER

FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS SEXUAL CONTACT³¹ IS PUNISHABLE AS WELL AS CONSUMMATED CONNECTION, AND ONE IS GUILTY FOR EACH CONNECTION SEPARATELY;³² FINALLY THE CASE OF THE HANDMAID IS MORE STRINGENT

- (1) She will thus have to count the forty days from the second birth and the period of cleanness of the first is completely abolished.
- (2) V. p. 77, n. 11.
- (3) I.e., if an abortion took place e.g., on the seventy-seventh day of the birth of a female, so that the days of impurity of the second birth supersede three of the days of the period of cleanness of the first birth. The question is again whether these three days are to be made up or not. The rest of the discussion is similar to that of the two previous ones.
- (4) I.e., one which varies according to the pecuniary position of the owners; a rich person offers a lamb or goat, a poor person pigeons or turtle-doves, and a very poor person a meal-offering.
- (5) Lit. 'one who heard the call (of an oath).' A person who refuses to give evidence, though called upon to do so by oath, or swearing falsely himself that he does not know the facts; Lev. V, 1.
- (6) Lit., 'utterance of lips'; viz., a promise with reference to his own person, such as to fast, or an assurance of facts of the past, also with reference to his own person, e.g., that he fasted; Lev. V, 4.
- (7) Ibid. vv. 2-3. The transgression was committed in error. That an offering of higher or lesser value is offered in these three instances is stated in the text, v. 6ff. A rich person offers one lamb, a poor person two doves, a very poor person a meal-offering.
- (8) Lev. XII, 6-8. A rich person offers one lamb and one dove, a poor person two doves.
- (9) Lev. XIV, 10ff. A rich person offers three lambs, a poor person one lamb and two doves.
- (10) Viz., one lamb and one dove.
- (11) Viz., two birds, prior to the other sacrifices.
- (12) In these three cases the provision is made that the poorest offer but a meal-offering
- (13) In case of poverty.
- (14) Ephah is a measure. A tenth thereof is the quantity of the meal-offering offered by the poorest; Lev. V, 11.
- (15) V. Glos. V. infra.
- (16) For her burnt-offering. As for her sin-offering a woman after confinement always brought a dove or a pigeon.
- (17) Lev. V, 15. The text uses shekels, plural; i.e., at least two.
- (18) A Biblical shekel is identical with a sela'.
- (19) Num. VI, 12.
- (20) A ram is more mature. It is assumed that the price has doubled with the doubling of the age.
- (21) V. supra 8a.
- (22) One denar is the fourth of a sela'.
- (23) Viz., the eighth of a denar.
- (24) The offering of the poorest is not provided in the instance of the woman after confinement but only in the cases of refused evidence, broken promise and defilement of the Sanctuary and holy things. In these instances two birds replace one lamb. The proportion of the offering of the rich and that of the poor is sixteen to one. The same proportion must then hold good with reference to the offering of the poorest towards that of the poor.
- (25) From which we learn that a lamb is valued at a sela'.
- (26) The offering of the poor being the thirty-second part of that of the rich and sixteen times the value of that of the poorest, is thus worth one and a half perutahs.
- (27) A bondwoman who is designated to a man chosen by her master; cf. Lev. XIX, 20.
- (28) Enumerated in Lev. XVIII.

(29) I.e., both partners are liable to lashes in the case of wilful transgression and to an offering in the case of transgression in error.

(30) I.e., the man is liable to a guilt-offering and the handmaid to lashes.

(31) I.e., the mere contact of the sexual organs is punishable, even though the connection was not consummated.

(32) While in the case of the handmaid only a consummated connection is subject to the law, and one is not liable for each connection separately.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 11a

IN THAT WILFUL TRANSGRESSION¹ IS OF THE SAME STATUS AS TRANSGRESSION IN ERROR. TO WHICH HANDMAID DOES THIS REFER? TO ONE WHO IS HALF A SLAVE AND HALF A FREE PERSON,² AS IT IS WRITTEN: AND NOT AT ALL REDEEMED.³ THUS THE VIEW OF R. AKIBA. R. ISHMAEL SAYS: TO A SLAVE PROPER. R. ELIEZER B. JACOB⁴ SAYS: OF ALL OTHER FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS IT IS EXPLICITLY STATED [THAT THEY ARE WHOLLY FREE PEOPLE], THERE IS THUS LEFT THE INSTANCE OF ONE WHO IS HALF A SLAVE AND HALF A FREE PERSON.⁵

GEMARA. Whence do we know that she is liable to lashes but not he? — Our Rabbis taught: There shall be inquisition [bikkoreth],⁶ conveys that she is liable to lashes. I might still think that both are liable to lashes, therefore it is written 'shall be';⁷ she is liable but not he. And whence do we know that the term bikkoreth implies lashes? — Said R. Isaac: It denotes, it shall be read for her,⁸ as it has been taught: The head of the judges reads, the second counts and the third says, beat him. R. Ashi says: It denotes, she shall be examined,⁹ as we have learnt: They do not estimate the number of lashes he can bear except in a multiple of three.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: Whenever the woman is subject to lashes the man is liable to a sacrifice, and when she is free from lashes,¹¹ he is exempted from a sacrifice. Whence do we know this? — Said Raba: It is written, And if a man lieth carnally with a woman, that is a bondmaid, designated for a man, and not at all redeemed, nor was freedom given her.¹² Now consider: the text deals hitherto with the man, it should therefore have proceeded immediately with the words, And he shall bring his guilt-offering unto the Lord, and then continue, There shall be inquisition.¹³ Why has the text stated first, 'There shall be inquisition' and only afterwards 'And he shall bring his guilt-offering unto the Lord'? This then is meant: If there is an inquisition regarding the woman, he shall bring a guilt-offering unto the Lord, and if there is no inquisition he shall not bring his guilt-offering. But perhaps he has been exempted [from lashes], she however is liable to lashes as well as to a sacrifice?¹⁴ — It reads: And he shall bring his guilt-offering unto the Lord.¹⁵

R. Isaac said: One is liable only in the case of a possessed handmaid, as it is written, 'That is a bondmaid, designated for a man'. And where do we find that the term 'designated' [neherefeth] implies that a change has taken place?¹⁶ — It is written, And strewed groats [harifoth] thereon.¹⁷ Or as it is written, Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar with a pestle among groats [harifoth].¹⁸

And they gave their hand that they would put away their wives; and being guilty, they offered a ram of the flock for their guilt;¹⁹ said R. Hisda: This teaches that they had all had intercourse with designated handmaids.²⁰

TO WHICH HANDMAID DOES THIS REFER etc. Our Rabbis taught: 'Redeemed' might convey altogether free, therefore it continues, 'she is not [redeemed]'. This on the other hand might convey not at all redeemed, therefore it reads 'redeemed'. How is this possible? She is redeemed yet not wholly redeemed, viz., one who is half a slave and half a free person and is betrothed to a Hebrew slave. Thus the view of R. Akiba. R. Ishmael says: The text refers to a heathen bondmaid who is betrothed unto a Hebrew slave; while the phrase 'redeemed, she is not [redeemed]' is used in accordance with the language of men.²¹ R. Eleazar b. Azariah says: Of all for bidden connections it is explicitly stated [that they are free people], there is thus left the instance of one who is half a slave and half a free person and is betrothed unto a Hebrew slave. Others²² say, 'They shall not be put to death, because she was not free', indicates that the text refers to a heathen bondmaid who is betrothed unto a heathen slave. As to R. Ishmael, it is plausible that 'redeemed, she is not [redeemed]' may be interpreted as a common parlance, but whence do we learn that she was betrothed to a Hebrew slave? — It is written, For she was not free; he, however, was free.²³ Is not the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah identical with that of R. Akiba? — He [R. Eleazar] retorts to R. Ishmael: I agree with you in general that the Torah uses the language of men, but this case is different, for the text states, 'for she was not free', why add 'redeemed, she is not [redeemed]'? To learn therefrom that it refers to one who is half a slave and half a free person. As to others, it is plausible that 'redeemed, she is not [redeemed]' may be interpreted as a common parlance, but whence do we learn that she was betrothed to a heathen slave? — The text reads, 'for she was not free'; since this is superfluous with reference to her,²⁴ it is taken to refer to him.

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE OF ALL FORBIDDEN CONNECTIONS, IF ONE PARTNER WAS A MAJOR AND THE OTHER A MINOR, THE LATTER IS EXEMPTED; IF ONE IS AWAKE AND THE OTHER ASLEEP, THE LATTER IS EXEMPTED; FINALLY, IF ONE IS AN INADVERTENT AND THE OTHER A WILFUL TRANSGRESSOR, THE FORMER IS LIABLE TO A SIN-OFFERING, THE LATTER TO KARETH.²⁵

GEMARA. Is indeed in our instance²⁶ a minor guilty? — Said Rab Judah: This is meant: In the case of all forbidden connections, if one was a major and the other a minor, the latter is exempted and the former guilty; In our instance also the major is exempted, because both partners depend upon one another.²⁷

IF ONE IS AWAKE AND THE OTHER ASLEEP, THE LATTER IS EXEMPTED. Is indeed In our instance a sleeping person guilty? Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: This is meant: In the case of all forbidden connections, if one is awake and the other asleep, the latter is exempted and the former guilty, in our instance even the one awake is exempted, because they depend upon one another.

A Tanna recited before R. Shesheth: They have placed on an equal footing a consummated connection with a mere sexual contact, an intentional connection with an unintentional, a natural connection with a perverse one, and one performed while awake with one performed in sleep. He retorted: How is this meant? If it refers to a designated bondmaid, how does a consummated connection equal a mere sexual contact? In fact, a consummated connection is in the case of a designated bondmaid subject to the law, but a mere sexual contact is not. Similarly the statement that intentional connection equals unintentional [is wrong], for one is guilty only in the case of intentional connection but not otherwise. Similarly the statement that natural connection equals perverse [is wrong], for with the designated bondmaid one is guilty only in the case of natural connection but not in the case of perverse connection, because it is written 'carnally'. And then what is the meaning of the statement that a wakeful person equals a sleeping person? If on the other hand this dictum refers to other forbidden connections, how does it state consummated connection equals a mere sexual contact

 - (19) Ezra X, 19.
 - (20) For which a guilt-offering is brought, as mentioned in the text.
 - (21) I.e., as a common parlance. The repetition of the verb 'redeem' is only an emphasis, and is not to imply any law.
 - (22) R. Meir is quoted under this name; cf. Hor. 13b.
 - (23) The Hebrew was not the perpetual possession of his master; he is to be freed after six years.
 - (24) For it is already stated that she was not redeemed.
 - (25) The Gemara enlarges upon it and states what the law would be in the case of a bondmaid.
 - (26) I.e., in the case of the bondmaid.
 - (27) As stated supra; whenever she is exempted from lashes he is also free from a guilt-offering.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 11b

; the comparison, should be in the reverse direction! Said the former: Shall I cancel the dictum? —

He replied: No, this is meant: A consummated perverse connection with a designated bondmaid equals a natural sexual contact, when one is exempted because it is written, 'carnally'; intentional perverse connection with a bondmaid equals unintentional connection, when one is exempted, because it is written, 'carnally'; perverse connection with a bondmaid while awake equals connection while asleep, when one is exempted because it is written, 'carnally'. We thus find that intentional sexual contact in the case of a bondmaid equals unintentional connection in the case of other forbidden relations; that natural contact in sleep in the case of the bondmaid equals connection in sleep in the case of other forbidden relations; that perverse connection with the bondmaid while awake¹ equals connection in sleep in the case of other forbidden relations.

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. IF THEY² SAY TO A PERSON, THOU HAST EATEN³ HELEB,⁴ HE IS LIABLE TO A SIN-OFFERING;⁵ IF ONE WITNESS SAYS, HE HAS EATEN, AND ANOTHER SAYS, HE HAS NOT EATEN, OR IF ONE WOMAN⁶ SAYS, HE HAS EATEN, AND ANOTHER SAYS, HE HAS NOT EATEN, HE IS LIABLE TO A SUSPENSIVE GUILT-OFFERING; IF ONE WITNESS SAYS, HE HAS EATEN, AND HE HIMSELF SAYS, I HAVE NOT EATEN, HE IS EXEMPTED; IF TWO [WITNESSES] SAY, HE HAS EATEN, AND HE HIMSELF SAYS, I HAVE NOT EATEN, R. MEIR DECLARES HIM LIABLE [TO AN OFFERING]. SAID R. MEIR: IF TWO WITNESSES ARE CAPABLE OF INFLICTING THE SEVERE PENALTY OF DEATH,⁷ SHOULD THEY NOT IMPOSE THE LESS SEVERE PUNISHMENT OF A SACRIFICE? THEY⁸ REPLIED: SUPPOSE HE SAID, I WAS A WILFUL TRANSGRESSOR, WOULD HE NOT BE EXEMPTED?⁹ IF ONE ATE TWICE HELEB IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, HE IS LIABLE TO BUT ONE OFFERING; IF ONE ATE HELEB, BLOOD, PIGGUL⁴ AND NOTHAR⁴ IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH KIND OF FOOD. THIS IS AN INSTANCE WHERE DIFFERENT KINDS [OF FOOD] ARE MORE STRINGENT THAN ONE KIND; IN THE FOLLOWING INSTANCE, HOWEVER, ONE KIND [OF FOOD] IS MORE STRINGENT THAN SEVERAL KINDS: IF ONE ATE HALF AN OLIVE-SIZE¹⁰ AND THEN AGAIN HALF AN OLIVE-SIZE, BOTH IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, IF OF ONE KIND HE IS LIABLE, IF OF TWO KINDS, HE IS EXEMPTED.

GEMARA. It is stated, IF THEY SAY TO A PERSON, THOU HAST EATEN HELEB, HE IS LIABLE TO A SIN-OFFERING. 'THEY SAY' implies [at least] two; and what does he maintain? If you assume that he was silent and did not contradict them, it would then follow that only silence in response to two witnesses evokes a sin-offering, but not in response to one. Now read the middle clause: IF ONE WITNESS SAYS, HE HAS EATEN AND HE HIMSELF SAYS, I HAVE NOT EATEN [HE IS EXEMPTED]. Now the reason [that he is exempted] is because he contradicts them, but if he did not deny the charge he would be guilty; and how much more so if there were two witnesses! Rather you must assume that he contradicts the witness, and the law is in accordance with R. Meir, who holds a contradiction of two witnesses is of no avail; but according to the Rabbis, he would indeed be exempted. But, then, why has this clause at all been mentioned, we know the law from the concluding clause?¹¹ — This is what he lets us know, that this is a point of dispute between R. Meir and the Rabbis.¹² Some there are who say: 'THEY SAY' may well refer to a single person, as we have learnt: If a man has gone overseas and they come and tell his wife that he is dead, whereupon she marries again. if the husband returns alive she has to leave both men.¹³ And it has been established that this law refers also to one witness. Whence do we infer this? From that which has been stated in the latter clause: If she has married again without authority, she may return to her husband. Now, what does ‘without authority’ mean? Without the authority of the court but upon the evidence of witnesses;¹⁴ from this we infer that in the former clause it was done with the authority of the court, but upon the evidence of one witness. We thus find that ‘they say’ is used of one witness; similarly, when it states ‘THEY SAY’ it refers to one witness. And what does he [the offender] say? If he contradicts, he should be exempted; for we have learnt in the middle clause: IF ONE WITNESS SAYS, HE HAS EATEN AND HE HIMSELF SAYS, I HAVE NOT EATEN, HE IS EXEMPTED! Again if you say, he is silent; surely we know this law already from the middle clause, IF ONE WITNESS SAYS etc., from which is inferred that he is exempted only when he contradicts, but when he is silent he is indeed liable to an offering! Indeed, he does not contradict, and understand the Mishnah thus: IF THEY SAY TO A PERSON, THOU HAST EATEN HELEB. HE IS LIABLE TO A SIN-OFFERING, namely if he is silent, but . . . when HE HIMSELF SAYS, I HAVE NOT EATEN, HE IS EXEMPTED.¹⁵

Where do we find in the Torah that a person is liable to an offering if he does not contradict the evidence of others? — Our Rabbis taught: If his sin be known to him . . . he shall bring his offering];¹⁶ but not if others make it known to him.¹⁷ I might then think he is exempted even if he does not contradict, it is therefore written, ‘if it be known to him’: in whatever manner.¹⁸ Now to which case does this refer? Shall I say to one in which two witnesses gave evidence? Do we in such a case need a text?¹⁹

(1) no note.

(2) Viz., two witnesses, v. infra Gemara.

(3) Viz., without being conscious of the transgression.

(4) V. Glos.

(5) Provided the person does not deny the charge. Also one witness would suffice in this case.

(6) A woman is as a rule not qualified to act as a witness.

(7) E.g., if they testify to murder.

(8) Viz., the Sages who hold there is no sacrifice in any case of denial by the perpetrator.

(9) V. infra Gemara as to the interpretation of this passage.

(10) An olive is the standard size of these prohibited foods.

(11) Viz., the one wherein R. Meir and the Rabbis differ.

(12) The latter clause explains the former, that the anonymous view of the former clause declaring him liable to a sin-offering is in fact the opinion of R. Meir only, while the Rabbis disagree.

(13) I.e., she has to be divorced from both her husbands; v. Yeb. 87b.

(14) Since her second marriage was founded upon the evidence of two qualified witnesses, although the court did not give their consent, she is not to be penalised and may therefore return to her first husband. The former clause, where it states that she is punished and has to leave both men, must therefore refer to a case where there were not two witnesses but one only. The court has accepted the evidence of the one witness but with the understanding that she continues her inquiries as to her husband's fate. The fact that her husband has returned alive proves that her inquiries were not satisfactory, and she is therefore penalised.

(15) I.e., the middle clause is the counterpart of the first clause.

(16) Lev. IV, 23.

(17) I.e., if the facts are established by outside evidence.

(18) It should read, 'if he remembers'. The text thus suggests that he is guilty, even if his 'knowledge' for silence is taken as consent — is provoked from outside.

(19) That he is then liable to an offering is obvious.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 12a

It must thus refer to one witness giving evidence; and yet it says that if there is no contradiction his evidence is valid.¹ We have thus proved it.

SAID R. MEIR, etc. The question was asked: What is the reason of the Rabbis? Is it that they hold that regarding oneself² a man is believed more than a hundred witnesses, or perhaps that we adopt the argument of miggo:³ for if he said, I transgressed willfully, he would certainly have been exempted, so if he says, I did not eat at all, he is to be believed, and is therefore exempted? And in which way is this question of avail? With reference to the application of the law to uncleanness.⁴ If you say the reason of the Rabbis is that regarding oneself a man is believed more than a hundred witnesses, there will be no difference between the old and fresh uncleanness;⁵ but if you say the reason of the Rabbis is that we adopt the argument of miggo, they would exempt him in the case of old uncleanness but declare him liable in the case of new uncleanness.⁶ For what reason? For in the case of old uncleanness, if he wanted, he could have said, I have already immersed, and be exempt; he is therefore exempt also when he says, I have not become unclean,⁷ since it can be said that what he meant [when he said,] 'I have not become unclean' is 'I did not remain unclean, for I have immersed'. In the case of fresh uncleanness, however, he is liable. For what reason? For even if he asserted, I have immersed, he would be guilty,⁸ since the witnesses maintain that he has just become unclean. How is it? — Come and hear: If one witness says to a person. Thou art unclean, and he himself says, I am not unclean, he is exempted.⁹ I might assume [this holds good] also in the case of two witnesses, but, says R. Meir, against this there is an a fortiori argument: since two witnesses are capable of inflicting the severe penalty of death, how much more can they impose the less severe punishment of a sacrifice! The Rabbis say: Regarding oneself a man is believed more than a hundred witnesses. It thus seems that the argument of the Rabbis is that regarding oneself a man is believed more than a hundred witnesses! — Said R. Ammi: Indeed the argument of the Rabbis is the conclusion of miggo; and understand their reasoning thus: As he could, if he wanted, have said, I did not remain unclean,¹⁰ and would then be exempted, therefore regarding himself he is to be believed more than a hundred witnesses. If so, is not this instance identical with that concerning heleb?¹¹ — I might have thought, in the case of heleb I may assume that he explains his words:¹² I did not eat in error, but wilfully. But [when he is told], Thou art unclean, and he replies, I am not unclean, I might think his words are not capable of explanation; therefore he lets us know that also in this instance we interpret his words as conveying, I have not remained unclean for I have immersed.

Come and hear: And he shall confess,¹³ [implies that] if he confesses he is liable to an offering, if he does not confess he is exempted. If, therefore, a witness says to him, Thou art unclean, and he says, I am not unclean, he is exempted. I might think this holds good even in the case where he contradicts two witnesses, but says R. Meir, since two witnesses are capable of inflicting the severe penalty of death, how much more can they impose the less severe punishment of a sacrifice! R. Judah says: Regarding oneself a man is believed more than a hundred witnesses. The Rabbis, however, agree with R. Judah in regard to heleb and the entering of the Temple precincts.¹⁴ but not in regard to uncleanness.¹⁵ Now, to which [uncleanness] does this refer? Shall I say

(1) So that he has to bring an offering.

(2) I.e., in matters relating to the salvation of his soul, for the sacrifice is to bring about his propitiation and conciliation with the Lord.

(3) I.e., a logical rule that a man's statement is to be accepted as true whenever another credible and more advantageous assertion could have been made; for it is argued, that had he intended to lie he would have invented the more advantageous statement.

(4) I.e., if two people say e.g., you have entered the Temple precincts while unclean.

(5) Fresh uncleanness is one contracted on the same day; old uncleanness one contracted on previous days. In the first instance the witnesses say the contraction of the uncleanness and the entering of the Temple precincts were both on the same day, in the latter on different days.

(6) In the case of fresh uncleanness there has not yet been an opportunity of becoming clean again, for immersion alone is not sufficient; one has to wait till sunset to be clean. In the instance of old uncleanness one may well assert one's cleanness by saying, I have immersed.

(7) The actual statement is capable of an interpretation similar in sense to the assertion that might have been made.

(8) If he enters the precincts of the Temple before sunset, even after immersion, he is guilty.

(9) Toh. V, 9.

(10) I.e., I immersed.

(11) And therefore superfluous.

(12) I.e., he may give you a wider meaning to his words, so that the assertion he actually makes harmonises with the one he could have made.

(13) Lev. V, 5.

(14) I.e., when the question is whether he has eaten heleb, or whether he has entered the Temple while unclean, for in these two instances the argument is that he might have said the transgression was wilful, and the assertions actually made, viz., 'I did not eat heleb' and 'I did not enter the Temple', may be interpreted as being in harmony with the assertion he could have made thus: 'I did not eat heleb and I did not enter the Temple in a manner which would make me liable to an offering'.

(15) I.e., when the question is whether he has at all become unclean. The miggo that he might have said, I did it wilfully, is no longer valid.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 12b

[it refers] to old uncleanness, why do the Rabbis agree with R. Judah only with regard to heleb and the entering of the Temple precincts because he might have said, I did it wilfully? Also in the instance of old uncleanness he could have interpreted his words and say, if he wanted, I did not remain unclean but immersed!¹ — Said Rabina: It refers in fact to old uncleanness,² but to a case where the witnesses said to him, Thou hast eaten sacred food while thy body was unclean,³ and his reply was, I was not unclean; his words are then not open to an explanation, for we cannot say he meant, I did not remain unclean but immersed, for this would convey, I immersed and indeed did eat, which statement would contradict the first assertion⁴ at least in respect of the uncleanness through contact.⁵

Said R. Nahman: The halachah is according to R. Judah. Said R. Joseph: He holds [that he is clean] only in private⁶ and when appertaining to himself.⁷

Said Resh Lakish: R. Meir agrees with the Rabbis that if two witnesses say to a person, Thou hast had intercourse with a designated bondmaid,⁸ and he maintains that he has had no intercourse, he is to be trusted, for he could, if he wishes, have answered them, I did not complete the act of cohabitation.⁹

Said R. Shesheth: R. Meir agrees with the Rabbis with regard to the uncleanness of a nazirite, that if two witnesses say to him, Thou art unclean, and he replies, I am not unclean, he is exempted,¹⁰ because he could, if he wanted, have replied, I am absolved from the vow of naziriteship.¹¹

Said Abaye: R. Meir agrees with the Rabbis that if two witnesses say to a person, Thou knowest evidence against a certain man,¹² and he says, I do not know, he is exempted, because he could, if he wanted, have said, I was not intent upon giving evidence.

IF ONE ATE TWICE HELEB IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS etc. To this R. Zera demurred: Why is he liable to only one sin-offering? Has he not eaten two olive-sizes of heleb? — Replied to him Abaye: It is the different spells of unawareness that effect separate offerings, but in our instance there was but one spell of unawareness. Some raise the difficulty in the following version: The reason [that he is liable only to one offering], is that there was only one spell of unawareness; if, however, there were two spells of unawareness he would indeed be liable to two offerings; but why? Were not both meals of the same denomination of heleb? — Replied to him Abaye: Different spells of unawareness effect separate offerings.

IF ONE ATE HELEB, BLOOD, PIGGUL AND NOTHAR etc. [It is stated,] IF OF ONE KIND HE IS LIABLE; is this not obvious? — Said Resh Lakish in the name of Bar Tutini:¹³ We suppose it was eaten in two different dishes, and this law is in conformity with the view of R. Joshua who [generally] holds that different dishes do not combine with one another.¹⁴ Now I might have thought that R. Joshua upholds his opinion no matter whether greater leniency or greater stringency result from it; therefore we are taught that he is liable [to an offering], implying that he upholds his view only when it leads to greater stringency, but not when it leads to greater leniency. Some refer the discussion to the latter part of the passage: IF OF TWO KINDS, HE IS EXEMPTED; is this not obvious? — Said Resh Lakish in the name of Bar Tutini: We suppose they were eaten in two different dishes and this law is in accordance with R. Joshua who holds different dishes do not combine with one another. Now I might have thought that R. Joshua upholds his rule only if it leads to greater stringency but not if greater leniency results from it; therefore we are taught: IF OF TWO KINDS, HE IS EXEMPTED: ‘Two kinds’ means in fact ‘one kind’;¹⁵ it is called ‘two kinds’ because the eating was in two different dishes; and as it is stated that he is then exempted, hence we may conclude that R. Joshua upholds his rule both if it leads to greater leniency and if it results in greater stringency. Now, since the latter part of the passage¹⁶ deals with one kind consumed in two dishes, the former part must, as its contrast, refer to one kind consumed in one dish. Is not the law then obvious? — Said Rabina: It refers to a case where he became aware [of his sin] in between,¹⁷ and the law is in accordance with Rabban Gamaliel, who holds awareness is of no avail with regard to half-sizes;¹⁸ as we have learnt.¹⁹ If one writes two letters in two different spells of unawareness, one in the morning and the other in the evening, Rabban Gamaliel holds he is guilty, but the Rabbis exempt him. Rabban Gamaliel holds awareness is of no avail with regard to half-sizes, whereas the Rabbis maintain it is of avail.

MISHNAH. WITHIN WHAT TIME MUST HE EAT THEM;²⁰ [THE TIME HE WOULD NEED] IF HE ATE A LIKE BULK OF PARCHED GRAINS OF CORN.²¹ THUS THE VIEW OF R. MEIR; BUT THE RABBIS SAY, HE MUST TAKE FROM THE BEGINNING TO THE END NO MORE TIME THAN IS REQUIRED FOR THE EATING OF A PERAS,²² TO BECOME LIABLE. IF ONE EATS UNCLEAN EDIBLES OR DRINKS UNCLEAN DRINKS,²³ OR IF [A PRIEST] DRINKS A QUARTER [OF A LOG] OF WINE AND THEN ENTERS THE TEMPLE,²⁴ IF NO MORE TIME HAS ELAPSED THAN IS REQUIRED FOR THE EATING OF A PERAS, HE IS LIABLE. R. ELEAZAR SAYS: IF THE DRINKING WAS INTERRUPTED OR THE WINE DILUTED WITH WATER OF THE SMALLEST QUANTITY, HE IS EXEMPTED.²⁵ GEMARA. They asked: Is R. Meir's statement in the direction of stringency or of leniency? Is it in the direction of stringency, and this is what he means: [THE TIME HE WOULD NEED] IF HE ATE OF PARCHED GRAINS OF CORN, though lasting the whole day.²⁶ Thus even though the time that elapsed between the beginning and the end of the meal was longer than is required for the eating of a peras, yet since it was one protracted meal, he is liable; while the Rabbis retorted: If no more time has elapsed than is required for the eating of a peras, he is guilty, if more he is exempted? Or is it in the direction of leniency, and this is what he means: [THE TIME HE WOULD NEED] IF HE ATE OF PARCHED GRAINS OF CORN, provided it was without interruption,²⁷ but if with interruption he is exempted even though the time that elapsed between the beginning and the end of the meal is within that required for the eating of a peras; while the Rabbis retorted: Since the time elapsed between the beginning and the end of the meal was within that required for the eating of a peras, he is guilty? — Come and hear: BUT THE SAGES SAY, HE MUST TAKE FROM THE BEGINNING TO THE END NO MORE TIME THAN IS REQUIRED FOR THE EATING OF A PERAS.

(1) We must therefore assume that the Baraita refers to fresh uncleanness, in which case there is no miggo. It seems at all events to be implicitly accepted that the reason of the Sages' view is based upon the conclusion of miggo, while R. Judah who holds that even in the case of fresh uncleanness he is exempted, bases his view obviously upon the rule that regarding oneself a man is at all events believed more than a hundred witnesses. The query set forth at the outset of the discussion is thus resolved: R. Judah, who as the opponent of R. Meir is often quoted anonymously, bases his view upon the first argument of the query, the Sages upon the second.

(2) And both R. Judah and the Sages may base their arguments in the instance of heleb upon the rule of miggo, but this case is such that the Sages hold miggo is not applicable to it.

(3) This statement contains a twofold assertion: That he was unclean and that he ate sacred things. Were his contradiction, I did not eat, we might have understood it in the sense, I did not transgress for I had immersed before. His reply, I am not unclean, is taken to imply, I did not come into contact with an unclean object, and this is in open contradiction to the evidence of the witnesses, wherefore his statement is not accepted and he is liable to an offering.

- (4) I.e., the assertion of the witnesses.
- (5) For his words imply, he did not come into contact with an unclean object.
- (6) He is not permitted to partake of sacred food in the presence of others, for this might be interpreted as neglectful treatment of the laws of purity.
- (7) He is not believed with reference to other people. If he has come into contact with sacred things they are regarded as unclean for others. The trust put in him when he says he is not unclean is subjective, because we believe him in matters appertaining to his own conscience and salvation.
- (8) I.e., a maidservant designated by her master for marriage to one chosen by him; Lev. XIX, 20.
- (9) V. 11b, where the completion of the act is an essential condition of the transgression.
- (10) From an offering at the end of seven days; v. Num. VI, 9f.
- (11) Absolution can be granted from a vow by a scholar if there are good reasons to assume that the consequences of the vow were not foreseen.
- (12) The refusal to give evidence if adjured to do so is punishable with an offering; v. Lev. V, 1.
- (13) Supra 4b quoted as Bar Tutani.
- (14) Viz., to make up the requisite standard size of an olive. The non-combination of the two half-olives brings about his exemption from an offering. If on the other hand one has, e.g., eaten two full quantities in two dishes the non-combination leads to greater stringency of the law, for he is then liable to two offerings.
- (15) I.e., two pieces of heleb, e.g., each of the size of half an olive, eaten in two meals.
- (16) Viz., IF OF TWO KINDS etc.
- (17) Between the two meals he learnt, e.g., that the first piece of fat was heleb.
- (18) I.e., half-sizes may be combined one with the other even if eaten in two spells of unawareness.
- (19) Shab. 105a. Only when one writes two letters is a sacrifice prescribed.
- (20) We have learnt in the previous Mishnah that if one eats two half-sizes of prohibited food, he is guilty because the two meals combine to make up the requisite size. What time may pass between the two meals to be still considered as one?
- (21) I.e., the time it takes to eat an olive-size of food crumbled into small pieces of the size of parched ears, eaten one after the other.
- (22) Lit., 'portion' or 'half'; viz., half a loaf; v. also 'Er. 83a.
- (23) If one eats unclean food of the size of half a peras, or drinks of an unclean drink the quantity of a fourth of a log, he is regarded as unfit to eat sacred food until he has taken an immersion.
- (24) To perform his service.
- (25) R. Eliezer refers to the last instance.
- (26) The criterion of R. Meir is then to indicate that the meal may be interrupted.
- (27) The time required for the eating of an olive-size of parched corn without interruption is less than that required for the eating of a peras.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 13a

Now, if you say that R. Meir's view is in the direction of stringency,¹ it is right that it reads: HE MUST TAKE . . . NO MORE, meaning that he is not liable unless he takes no more time than is required for the eating of a peras; but if you say R. Meir's view is in the direction of leniency, it should have read 'But the Rabbis say: If he has taken as much time as is required . . .'. It is thus proved that R. Meir's view is in the direction of stringency. It is indeed proved.

Said Rabanai in the name of Samuel: For heleb and nebelah² he must take from the beginning to the end [of the meal]³ no more time than is required for the eating of a peras; for unclean food, reptiles and unclean drinks,⁴ he may take even the whole day, as much as is required for the eating of a peras. What does this mean? — Said R. Papa, thus: Even the whole day so long as he ate an olive-size within the time required for the eating of a peras.⁵

An objection was raised: All kinds of food combine one with the other to half a peras to render the body unfit.⁶ Now does this not mean that he has to eat the half-peras within the time required for the eating of a peras? — No, he has to eat an olive-size within the time required for a peras.

An objection was raised: All kinds of food combine one with the other to a half-peras, consumed within the time required for a peras, in order to render the body unfit. How is this? If he ate and then ate again, if from the beginning of the first meal to the end of the last no more time has passed than is required for the eating of a peras, they combine with one another; if more they do not combine. It is not permitted to one who ate less than the requisite quantity to immerse;⁷ if he did immerse and then ate the complementary quantity to the standard size, the meals combine one with the other. A pregnant woman is permitted to eat a quantity⁸ smaller than the standard size, because of her serious position. All kinds of beverage combine one with the other to a quarter [of a log], consumed within the time required for the eating of a peras, in order to render the body unfit. How is this? If he drank and then drank again, if from the beginning of the first drink to the end of the last no more time has passed than is required for the eating of a peras, they combine with one another; if more they do not. [She] who has been in contact with one unclean by a dead body is permitted to nurse her baby, and the baby remains clean. It states at all events, 'If from the beginning of the first meal to the end of the last no more time has passed than is required for the eating of a peras, they combine with one another'. Is this not in contradiction to Rabanai's statement? — Indeed it is.⁹

The Master says: 'It is not permitted to one who ate less than the requisite quantity to immerse'. What does this mean?¹⁰ — Said Rab Judah: This is what it means: If one ate less than the requisite quantity, he is not permitted to immerse, for if he should eat afterwards the complementary quantity, which combines with the first, he might assume that the preceding immersion is of avail, not knowing that an immersion is valid only at the end.

It is stated, 'A pregnant woman is permitted to eat a quantity smaller than the standard size, because of her serious position'. If by reason of her serious position, she should be permitted to eat even more!¹¹ — Said R. Papa: Read thus, A pregnant woman is permitted to eat even more, yet in quantities smaller than the standard size, because of her serious position.

It says, '[She] who has been in contact with one unclean by a dead body is permitted to nurse her baby, and the baby remains clean.' Why is it clean? Since it has sucked in milk it should be unclean through the milk.¹² And should you say it was not prepared,¹³ [I would reply,] It is prepared by the drop which moistens the nipple!¹⁴ — Answered R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: It sucked with great pull so that no drop was formed to moisten the nipple. Said Raba: I have two objections to raise: firstly we see that a child's mouth is filled with milk,¹⁵ and then, the milk-source has the status of a 'well',¹⁶ as we have learnt: The milk of a woman renders things unclean whether [it was drawn] purposely or unintentionally, while the milk of a cow renders things unclean only when brought forth intentionally.¹⁷ Now does not 'unintentionally' mean that the child has no pleasure in it; and yet it says that it renders things unclean!¹⁸ — Rather said Raba: The reason why the child remains clean is that it is doubtful whether it has sucked in the requisite quantity or not; and even if it did, it is still doubtful whether it was done within the time required for the eating of a peras or during a longer period. But how can Raba maintain that the milk-source has the status of a 'well'? Have we not learnt: If milk drips from the breast of a [menstruant] woman and falls upon an oven, the oven is unclean?¹⁹ Whereupon it was asked, wherewith has the milk become 'prepared' for uncleanness? and R. Johanan replied: By the drop with which the nipple is moistened.²⁰ And if you say that Raba disagrees with R. Johanan, has it not been taught: 'It is thus found that there are nine kinds of liquids of a gonorrhoea-ridden person: sweat, ill-smelling discharge²¹ and secretion, are altogether clean;²² the tears of his eyes, the blood of his wound

(1) I.e., the time-limit suggested by R. Meir is less than that laid down by the Rabbis, so that the Rabbis in their retort to R. Meir demand a prolongation of the time-limit.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) E.g., if he ate two half olive-sizes of heleb.

(4) Half a peras or a quarter of a log respectively renders him who ate it unfit to eat sacred food.

(5) I.e., each olive-size of the standard quantity of half a peras has been eaten within the time required for a peras.

(6) Me'il. 17b.

(7) This is soon explained.

(8) I.e., unclean food; v. Tosaf.

(9) Rabanai's view is thus refuted.

(10) Why should he not be permitted to immerse, even though the immersion is in vain?

(11) For it is permitted to break the law of the Torah in the case of danger to life.

(12) The milk is unclean of the second degree; it is therefore not capable of rendering persons unclean through contact, but he who drinks thereof a half-peras is unfit to partake of sacred food.

(13) All foodstuffs must be 'prepared', i.e., rendered fit for uncleanness, by being moistened with certain liquids. The milk coming from the body is considered foodstuff, and in the absence of such preparation should be clean.

(14) The drop with which the nipple is moistened is not regarded as food, since it is not destined to be consumed, and can therefore act as a liquid to 'prepare' the rest of the milk for uncleanness.

(15) One drop at least must have adhered to the nipple.

(16) The milk has not the status of ordinary food or drink, but that of a secretion from the body, and forms part thereof. When the body is unclean, the milk is ipso facto unclean too. No 'preparation' is thus necessary. 'Well' means here a secreting organ.

(17) Maksh. VI, 8. Things are regarded as 'prepared' for uncleanness by being moistened with a liquid only if the moistening was to the satisfaction of the owner or worker.

(18) As we learn here that the milk of a woman is unclean and conveys its uncleanness to other things even if it came forth not to the satisfaction of the owner or worker (here the child), it cannot bear the status of ordinary food that requires 'preparation'. It must thus possess the character of a secretion from the body.

(19) Kel. VIII, 11.

(20) We thus see that in contradiction to Raba 'preparation' is needed.

(21) Such as pus.

(22) They do not cause uncleanness through contact.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 13b

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 13b

and the milk of a woman, in the quantity of a fourth of a log contract uncleanness as a liquid;¹ saliva, flux and urine contract the more severe uncleanness² in the smallest quantity? Now, if it was true, as you say, that the milk-source has the status of a 'well', milk too should contract the more severe uncleanness in the smallest quantity, like flux and saliva. It is thus proved that the milk-source of a woman has not the status of a 'well'. But, then, what of the contradiction between this Baraitha and [the Mishnah quoted by] Raba [that the milk of a woman] 'renders things unclean whether drawn purposely or unintentionally'?³ — Do you indeed think, as has hitherto been assumed, that 'unintentionally' means that the child had no pleasure in it? No, 'unintentionally' means 'generally', for it is accepted that the child has its mind upon the milk; but if the child indicates that he has no pleasure in it, it is indeed clean.

IF ONE EATS UNCLEAN EDIBLES etc. Why is it conditional upon the elapse of a certain time,⁴ as it reads, IF . . . TIME HAS ELAPSED? — Said Rab Judah: Thus it is to be understood: If one eats unclean edibles or drinks unclean drinks, or if [a priest] drinks a quarter of a log of wine, spending thereon the time required for the eating of a peras, and then enters the Temple precincts, he is guilty.

R. ELEAZAR SAYS etc. Our Rabbis taught: Drink no wine nor strong drink;⁵ I might think any quantity, and even if taken from the vat,⁶ therefore the text states 'strong drink'; he is guilty only if the quantity suffices to make him drunk.⁷ Which is the quantity capable of causing intoxication? A fourth of a log of wine of forty days' standing. Why then has 'wine' been mentioned? To tell you that one is cautioned in regard to the smallest quantity, and one is cautioned also in regard to [wine] drawn from the vat.⁸ R. Judah says: It reads 'wine'; from here we know only 'wine', whence do we know other intoxicating drinks? It therefore reads 'and strong drink'. If so, why has 'wine' been stated? Wine involves the death penalty, other drinks involve only [the disregard of] a warning. R. Eleazar says: Drink no wine and [drink no] strong drink: Drink it not in the manner which causes intoxication; if, however, he interrupts or dilutes it with any quantity of water, he is not guilty. Wherein do they differ? — The first Tanna holds: We draw an inference from the nazirite by the common expression 'strong drink';⁹ R. Judah does not hold this inference; while R. Eleazar holds that what 'strong drink' implies is something intoxicating. With whom does the following dictum comply: 'If one eats pressed figs from Keilah,¹⁰ or drinks honey or milk, and then enters the Sanctuary and performs the Temple service, he is liable to lashes'? With R. Judah.¹¹ Said R. Judah son of Ahotai: The halachah is in accordance with R. Eleazar. Also Rab spoke of R. Eleazar as the most distinguished of the Sages.

R. Aha of Huzal had a vow in regard to his wife.¹² He came before R. Ashi.¹³ Said the latter to him: Go now and come back to-morrow, for Rab appointed no interpreter¹⁴ from the commencement of the festival till the end of the following day,¹⁵ on account of intoxication. Replied the former: But did not Rab say, The halachah is according to R. Eleazar,¹⁶ while you dilute your wine with water? — Said he, There is no difficulty: his saying refers to a fourth of a log exactly, while I had more than a fourth.

Our Rabbis have taught: And that ye may put difference between the holy and the common,¹⁷ refers to vows of worth, or vows of valuation,¹⁸ or to things devoted¹⁹ or consecrated,²⁰ between the unclean and the clean¹⁷ refers to the laws of uncleanness and purity; that ye may teach²¹ refers to decisions [concerning forbidden things]; all the statutes²¹ refers to the expositions of the Law; which the Lord hath spoken²¹ refers to traditions passed on [from Sinai]; by the hand of Moses²¹ refers to the Gemara. I might include also the Mishnah, therefore it reads ‘that ye may teach’.²² R. Jose b. Judah says: I might include also the Gemara,²³ therefore it reads, ‘that ye may teach’. According to whom is that which has been taught: ‘Excluded is the decision that a [dead] reptile is unclean and a [dead] frog clean,²⁴ which may be given also by one who is intoxicated with wine’? May we assume that it conforms with R. Jose b. Judah's view and not with that of the Rabbis? — No, it may conform also with the view of the Rabbis, but this problem is so simple that one may say, go read it at school.²⁵ Said Rab: The halachah is in accordance with R. Jose b. Judah.²⁶ But surely Rab did not appoint an interpreter from the commencement of a festival to the end of the following day on account of intoxication?²⁷ — Different it is with Rab who gave also decisions: But then why not appoint the interpreter and lay down the rule that no decisions be given? — Where Rab sat it was impossible to avoid giving decisions.²⁸ MISHNAH. ONE MAY BY ONE ACT OF EATING BECOME LIABLE TO FOUR SIN-OFFERINGS AND ONE GUILT-OFFERING; VIZ., IF ANY UNCLEAN PERSON EATS HELEB WHICH WAS AT THE SAME TIME THE NOTHAR OF AN OFFERING, AND [IT WAS ON] THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.²⁹ R. MEIR SAYS: IF IT WAS THE SABBATH AND HE CARRIED IT OUT³⁰ [OF PRIVATE POSSESSION], HE IS LIABLE [TO YET ANOTHER SIN-OFFERING].³¹ BUT THEY SAID TO HIM: THIS IS OF A DIFFERENT DENOMINATION.³²

(1) I.e., to convey uncleanness only to food and liquids.

(2) I.e., to defile human beings and vessels.

(3) If we say that the milk is unclean even when brought forth against the child's interest in contradiction to the laws ruling the ‘preparation’ for uncleanness of liquids, we are obliged to infer therefrom that the milk has the status of a ‘well’ and not of a liquid. The right interpretation is, however, that even when the child does not express its pleasure at the bringing forth of the milk, it is unclean, for it is assumed that it is nevertheless done to its satisfaction.

(4) The condition concerning the time is mentioned in the Mishnah text after the entering of the Sanctuary. It is therefore assumed that it implies that it is necessary for the priest to stay in the Temple precincts for a time required for the eating of a peras. This is, of course, against the accepted law.

(5) Lev. X, 9 with reference to priests.

(6) I.e., before the fermentation is completed.

(7) The literal translation of rfa ‘strong drink’ is ‘intoxicating drink’.

(8) But not punishable with death. ‘Death’ here denotes death at the hands of Heaven.

(9) A textual analogy is drawn on the basis of the word ‘strong drink’ which occurs in connection with the priest, Lev. X, 9 and the nazirite, Num. VI, 3, where the produce of the vine only is prohibited.

(10) In Judea; v. I Sam. XXIII, 1.

(11) In Naz. 4a this dictum is explicitly mentioned in the name of R. Judah.

(12) He vowed not to derive any benefit from her.

(13) To ask for the absolution of the vow.

(14) The interpreter's task was to expound at length that which the Tanna taught in brief; v. Glos. s.v. Amora.

(15) I.e., from the termination of the first meal on the eve of the festival to the end of the following day. His meals on holy days were accompanied by wine, and Rab therefore refused to give any legal decision. R. Aha appeared before R. Ashi on a festival.

(16) Who holds only pure wine is prohibited.

(17) Lev. X, 10. This passage follows immediately upon the prohibition for the priest to drink wine. It is therefore assumed to imply that to give a decision in a state of intoxication is forbidden.

(18) V. 'Ar. 2a.

(19) Lit., excommunicated'; i.e., a form of renouncing one's rights upon property and assigning it for the use of the Temple or the priests.

(20) I.e., all the valuations in connection therewith must not be undertaken in a state of intoxication.

(21) Ibid. 11.

(22) Or, that ye may decide. As the Mishnah does not always contain the last word of the law, decisions are based upon the discussions in the Gemara rather than the Mishnah.

(23) Viz., the study of the Talmud. Only the actual giving of judgment in a state of intoxication is punishable, but not the mere preoccupation with the law.

(24) These decisions are so obvious, being explicitly mentioned in the Torah, that an error is not feared.

(25) I.e., even youngsters who study only the Pentateuch should know it; v. Sanh. 33b.

(26) Viz., that to study in a state of intoxication is permitted.

(27) This proves that even to lecture on the law is forbidden.

(28) Rab was an authority recognised everywhere, and questions came before him at all times.

(29) He is liable to a sin-offering each for eating sacred food in a state of uncleanness, for eating keleb, for eating nothar and for partaking of food on the Day of Atonement. The guilt-offering is to atone for the sacrilegious use of Temple property. Nothar is the portion of a sacrifice left over beyond the prescribed time, which has to be burnt.

(30) Viz. , in his mouth.

(31) To carry on the Sabbath from private property to the public thoroughfare or vice versa is subject to an offering.

(32) The transgression is not caused by eating.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 14a

GEMARA. May we infer that R. Meir holds that a prohibition may take hold of something already prohibited?¹ — [No,] although he may hold that a prohibition cannot take hold where another prohibition exists, he holds that a prohibition that is more comprehensive² or more extensive³ can take hold [of an already existing prohibition]. To a clean person only heleb is prohibited; when he becomes unclean, since the other parts [of the animal] become forbidden to him, this more comprehensive prohibition embraces also heleb. Then heleb is forbidden for consumption only; when consecrated, since it becomes prohibited for all use, this more extensive prohibition takes hold of heleb. It is still, then, forbidden to laymen only but not for the altar;⁴ when it becomes nothar, since it becomes forbidden also for the altar, this more extensive prohibition applies also in respect of laymen. Again, if it occurred on the Day of Atonement, since there is added an injunction which is more comprehensive in that it applies also to common food, it applies also to the things dedicated to the altar. But then why not instance five sin-offerings, namely when he ate an olive-size of piggul?⁵ — He speaks of one animal and not of two, and the meat of one and the same animal cannot be nothar and piggul at the same time.⁶ But why not? Is it not possible where, e.g., a limb of piggul was [wrongly] offered upon the altar, in which case its disqualification of piggul is lifted,⁷ and it can thus become nothar, as 'Ulla said: If the fistful of an offering, rendered piggul, has been offered upon the altar its piggul disqualification ceases, and it may then become nothar?⁸ — He speaks of one limb and not of two limbs, and one and the same limb cannot be nothar and piggul at the same time. But why not? Is it not possible where, e.g., a limb of piggul was offered upon the altar, partly resting upon the altar and partly protruding,⁹ so that the portion [which rested] upon the altar loses its piggul disqualification and may become nothar, in accordance with 'Ulla, who said: 'If the fistful of an offering, rendered piggul, has been offered upon the altar its disqualification ceases, and it may become nothar?' — He replied: It is not possible, for if the major portion rests upon the altar, the whole is reckoned as being on the altar; if the major portion is protruding, the whole is reckoned as being outside. But then you could decide therefrom¹⁰ the query of Rami son of Hama as to whether one goes by the majority in regard to sacrificial limbs or not!¹¹ — He speaks of one olive-size and not of two.¹² But is this indeed so? Does he not deal with the Day of Atonement, where the requisite standard quantity is the size of a date, and a date corresponds to two olive-sizes? — Said R. Zera: He ate of a kidney together with the heleb attached thereto.¹³ R. Papa said: He supplemented the heleb with dates.¹⁴ R. Adda son of Aha indeed reads [in the Mishnah] 'five sin-offerings' and explains it [as dealing with the case] where he ate an olive-size of piggul,¹⁵ rejecting the other explanations given. But then why not state six sin-offerings', and explain it [as dealing with the case] where he ate in addition an olive-size of blood? — [The Mishnah] speaks of one act of eating and not of two, and the Rabbis have calculated that the gullet cannot hold more than two olive-sizes at a time.

R. MEIR SAYS, etc. Why did he not simply state, 'If he carried it out [of private possession], he is liable¹⁶ . . .'; wherefore does he state, IF IT WAS THE SABBATH'? — Said Rafram: This proves that the laws concerning 'erub¹⁷ and transport¹⁸ apply to the Sabbath and do not apply to the Day of Atonement.¹⁹ How is this proved? Maybe the laws concerning 'erub and transport apply also to the Day of Atonement, and the Mishnah text is to be understood thus: If it was the Sabbath and he carried it out [of private possession], he is liable by reason of the Sabbath as well as the Day of Atonement!²⁰ — Rather say, If the statement of Rafram was made, it was with reference to the following: It has been taught, And he shall send him away by the hand of an appointed man;²¹ 'man' implies that also a non-priest is qualified; 'appointed' implies even if he is unclean and even on the Sabbath;²² 'appointed' means designated for it. Now it is here stated: "Appointed" implies even on the Sabbath', whereupon Rafram remarked, This proves that the laws concerning 'erub and transport apply to the Sabbath and do not apply to the Day of Atonement. How is this proved? Maybe the scapegoat is an exception, for its whole validity is bound up with the Day of Atonement!²³ — The dictum of Rafram is indeed void.²⁴

MISHNAH. ONE MAY BY ONE ACT OF INCESTUOUS CONNECTION BECOME LIABLE TO SIX SIN-OFFERINGS: VIZ., IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS DAUGHTER.²⁵ HE IS GUILTY OF INCEST WITH HIS DAUGHTER, HIS SISTER, HIS BROTHER'S WIFE, THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER, AND OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN AND A MENSTRUOUS WOMAN.

(1) I.e., that a prohibition can apply to something which is forbidden already by reason of another injunction, as exemplified in R. Meir's statement where the law of Sabbath takes hold of prohibited food.

(2) I.e., the range of application of the new prohibition is wider than that of the original. The new prohibition is thus at all events effective with regard to those objects not covered by the original; it is therefore considered of avail also in respect of those articles already prohibited by the original injunction, and an additional offering is prescribed.

- (3) I.e., the additional prohibition is more stringent than the original one; e.g., if according to the original law only the eating of the prohibited food is punishable while the superadded prohibition law forbids also any benefit to be derived therefrom. The new prohibition is thus at all events effective where use is made of the food other than eating it; it is therefore regarded of avail also in case of eating, and evokes an additional offering. The following discussion expounds the instance of the Mishnah proving that each additional prohibition thereof is either more comprehensive or more extensive than those already existing.
- (4) Or, for that matter, the priests.
- (5) V. Gos. I.e., where the meat was, in addition, piggul which, too' is subject to a sin-offering.
- (6) The sacrifice is rendered piggul at the beginning of the service, namely during the preparation and performance of the sprinkling of the blood. Once piggul it is disqualified for altar and priest alike and cannot come within the range of nothar.
- (7) Even if the limb is removed from the altar, before it is completely burnt, it retains the sanctity re-gained through contact with the altar and may become nothar. If one eats therefore a piece of the limb that has become nothar, under the conditions enumerated in the Mishnah and in addition thereto an olive-size of meat of the rest of the same sacrifice, which has remained piggul, one is liable to five sin-offerings.
- (8) V. Zeb. 43a.
- (9) And he ate from both portions of the limb.
- (10) Viz., from the fact that the instance of five sin-offerings has not been stated for the reasons mentioned.
- (11) V. Hul. 70a where this query is put forward by Raba and left unanswered.
- (12) And with one olive-size one cannot evoke more than four sin-offerings, as enumerated in the Mishnah.
- (13) I.e., he ate one olive-size of the kidney and another olive-size of the heleb. For the latter he is, under the conditions mentioned in the Mishnah, liable to three sin-offerings and a guilt-offering; when followed by an olive-size of the kidney he complements the date-size required for the transgression of the Day of Atonement, which provokes the fourth sin-offering. R. Zera's view is that the Tanna of the Mishnah wishes to confine himself to the eating of one olive-size of heleb, while in the combination of piggul and nothar it would be necessary to assume that two olive-sizes of heleb have been consumed (Rashi).
- (14) I.e., his meal consisted of one olive-size of heleb and small dates to make up the requisite standard of a date. There was at any rate but one olive-size of meat.
- (15) From a different sacrifice in addition to the olive-size of heleb as instanced in the Mishnah.
- (16) For carrying it out on the Day of Atonement.
- (17) V. Gos.
- (18) I.e., the transport from private property to a public thoroughfare and vice versa.
- (19) Although the Day of Atonement bears otherwise all the stringency of the Sabbath, these two laws may be characteristic of the Sabbath only.
- (20) I.e., he is liable twice for the transport: for the transgression of the Sabbath and for the transgression of the Day of Atonement.
- (21) Lev. XVI, 21, relating to the scapegoat.
- (22) I.e., also on the Sabbath may the scapegoat be transported to its place of offering, thus trespassing the laws regarding 'erub and transport.
- (23) I.e., the Torah has explicitly permitted work essential for the service of the day.
- (24) V. Yoma 66b.
- (25) The multitude of interrelationships between father and daughter is established thus: the daughter was born from his incestuous contact with his own mother. She then married his brother and after the latter's death, his father's brother. She was in addition menstruant at the time of the intercourse. This monstrous and complicated combination has been chosen to exemplify various prohibitions each of which is more comprehensive than the previous.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 14b

GEMARA. But does not R. Meir hold, a prohibition cannot take hold of something already forbidden?¹ — Although he generally holds that a prohibition cannot take hold where another prohibition exists, he admits that a prohibition which is more comprehensive or more extensive can take hold [of an already existing prohibition].² [Our instance is then to be understood thus:] He had intercourse with his mother who bore him a daughter, so that the latter becomes prohibited to him simultaneously as his daughter and his sister. When she marries his brother, since she becomes prohibited also to his other brothers,³ this comprehensive prohibition becomes operative also with reference to himself. When she then⁴ marries his father's brother, since she becomes prohibited to the other brothers of his father, this comprehensive prohibition becomes operative also with reference to himself. In her capacity now as a married woman, since she becomes prohibited to the whole world, this comprehensive prohibition becomes operative also with regard to himself. Finally as a menstruant woman, since she becomes forbidden even to her own husband, this comprehensive prohibition become operative also with reference to himself.

MISHNAH. IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER HE MAY THEREBY BECOME GUILTY FOR OFFENDING WITH HIS DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER, HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW, HIS BROTHER'S WIFE, THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER, HIS WIFE'S SISTER, A MARRIED WOMAN, AND FINALLY A MENSTRUANT WOMAN.⁵ R. JOSE REMARKED: IF THE GRANDFATHER HAD COMMITTED TRANSGRESSION AND MARRIED HER FIRST, HE MAY THEREBY BECOME GUILTY FOR OFFENDING WITH HIS FATHER'S WIFE. SO TOO, IF ONE HAD CONNECTION WITH HIS WIFE'S DAUGHTER OR HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER.

GEMARA. It is stated: HE MAY THEREBY BECOME GUILTY FOR OFFENDING WITH HIS FATHER'S WIFE. Was she then permitted to him?⁶ — Replied R. Johanan: The case is met if she fell unto him in levirate marriage.⁷ If so, what means: HAD COMMITTED TRANSGRESSION? — He committed transgression in that she was his son's daughter-in-law, which is a forbidden relation in the second degree,⁸ as has been taught:⁹ A daughter-in-law is an incestuous relation [by law of the Torah], the daughter-in-law of a son is forbidden [as a relation] in the second degree. The same distinction is made between the daughter of a son and the daughter of a son's son etc. to the end of all generations.¹⁰

But does R. Jose indeed hold that a prohibition can take hold of something already forbidden, have we not learnt:¹¹ If one has committed a sin which involves two death penalties,¹² he is condemned to the more stringent [of the two forms of execution]. R. Jose, however, maintains he is sentenced for the sin that took hold first. And it was taught: How is R. Jose's ruling, that he is sentenced for the sin that took hold first, to be understood? If, e.g., she was forbidden to him first as his mother-in-law and then as a married woman,¹³ he is sentenced for intercourse with a mother-in-law; if she was forbidden to him first as a married woman and then as a mother-in-law, he is sentenced for connection with a married woman! — Answered R. Abbahu: R. Jose admits [an exception to the rule] when the new prohibition is more comprehensive.¹⁴ Also when Rabin came¹⁵ he said in the name of R. Johanan: R. Jose admitted when the new prohibition was more comprehensive. But in which respect is it more comprehensive here?¹⁶ — When the grandfather had another son;¹⁷ as the new prohibition comprises also the other son, it becomes operative with regard to [the offender] himself.

MISHNAH. IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW HE MAY THEREBY BECOME GUILTY FOR OFFENDING WITH HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW, HIS BROTHER'S WIFE, THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER, HIS WIFE'S SISTER, A MARRIED WOMAN, AND FINALLY A MENSTRUANT WOMAN.¹⁸ AND SO TOO, IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW OR OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW. R. JOHANAN B. NURI REMARKED: IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW HE MAY THEREBY BECOME GUILTY FOR OFFENDING WITH HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, THE MOTHER OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, AND THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW.¹⁹ THEY SAID TO HIM: ALL THESE THREE ARE OF ONE DENOMINATION.²⁰

GEMARA. Said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaia: R. Johanan b. Nuri and Symmachus adhere to the same rule.²¹ R. Johanan b. Nuri as stated above.²² As to Symmachus, we have learnt:²³

(1) V. supra 14a. I.e., the latter five prohibitions should not become operative and only one sacrifice should be offered. Although the Mishnah is anonymous, it is, according to a general rule, assumed that R. Meir's view is represented therein.

(2) V. p. 104, nn. 6 and 7.

(3) Viz., his half-brothers of a common father. Before her marriage to one of them she was permitted to all of them, except her own father.

(4) I.e., after the brother's death.

(5) The inter-relationships between the man and his grand-daughter were manifold so that seven prohibitions were simultaneously broken in one act, viz., the grand-daughter, now a married woman, had previously wedded one of his sons and after his death the offender's brother and later, after the latter's death, the brother of the offender's father. The offender was at the same time married to his grand-daughter's half-sister, i.e., another daughter of his granddaugther's husband from another wife. The grand-daughter was, in addition, menstruant at the time of contact.

(6) As she was forbidden to the father as his brother's wife the marriage was invalid and she cannot be regarded as 'his father's wife'.

(7) When the offender's uncle died, he left no children behind, so that his father was permitted and even obliged to marry her according to the law of levirate marriage, Deut. XXV, 5f.

(8) I.e., one enacted by rabbinical law.

(9) Yeb. 21b.

(10) I.e., ad infinitum. The daughter of any of his male descendants that stands at the end of a chain of male offsprings is forbidden to him by rabbinical enactment.

(11) Sanh. 81a.

(12) I.e., if the woman was forbidden to him because of their twofold inter-relation. As to the scale of the various forms of execution, cf. Sanh. 49b.

(13) E.g., if she was a widow or divorced at the time he married her daughter and then married again. The sentence in the case of a married woman is death by strangulation and in that of a mother-in-law death by burning. We learn herefrom, at any rate, that R. Jose holds a new prohibition cannot take hold where another exists.

(14) V. p. 104, nn. 6 and 7. If the new prohibition is more comprehensive it supersedes the first one. The reason why R. Jose, in the quoted Mishnah, nevertheless holds that only the prohibition which is first established is of avail, (although in the first of the examples the second prohibition, viz., the one concerning a married woman, which applied to all men, is more comprehensive than the first) is because the penalty of the first transgression is more stringent than that of the second (Rashi).

(15) I.e., when he arrived from Palestine to Babylonia.

(16) I.e., the case mentioned by R. Jose in our Mishnah, and with reference to the prohibition concerning the father's wife. This prohibition does not add to those already in existence.

(17) Before the transgressor's father married the grand-daughter she was permitted to his son. Now she is forbidden also to him as his father's wife.

(18) This case is met by the following inter-relations between the transgressor and his mother-in-law: The mother-in-law, now a married woman, had previously married his son and after the latter's death his brother, and then his father's brother. The offender himself had also been married to his mother-in-law's sister. If the mother-in-law was menstruant at the time of the union, we find that in one act he transgressed the seven prohibitions enumerated in the Mishnah.

(19) Viz., if in addition to the above inter-relations he had also been married to her daughter's daughter and her son's daughter, so that she was also his mother-in-law's mother and his father-in-law's mother.

(20) I.e., they are of the same class and intimated in the text (Lev. XVIII, 17) in one single prohibition, so that no separate offering is to be brought for each offence.

(21) Viz., that if a manifold prohibition of the same denomination has been transgressed, several offerings are required.

(22) Viz., in our Mishnah, where he requires a separate offering for the mother-in-law and her mother although both come under the same designation.

(23) Hul. 82b.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 15a

If one slaughtered an animal together with its young's calf, and then the young itself,¹ he is liable to forty lashes. Symmachus said in the name of R. Meir: To eighty.² Said Raba: There is, perhaps, no comparison. Maybe R. Johanan b. Nuri maintains his view only in the instance of our Mishnah, because the prohibitions are at least of different designations; for she may be described as his mother-in-law and also as the mother of his mother-in-law and the mother of his father-in-law. In the instance, however, concerning the killing of a mother-animal and its young, where there is only one designation, and all such cases are known by the one name, maybe his ruling will not hold good. R. Nahman b. Isaac raised his doubt [in the opposite direction]. Maybe Symmachus maintains his view only in the case of the law concerning the killing of mother and young, because the objects are different;³ in the instance of our Mishnah, however, where there is only one object,⁴ I might perhaps argue that he [Symmachus] held with the ruling of R. Abbahu delivered in the name of R. Johanan. For R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: In the expression, They are near kinswomen; it is wickedness,⁵ Scripture indicates that they are all one kind of wickedness.

MISHNAH. SAID R. AKIBA: I ASKED RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R. JOSHUA AT THE

MEAT-MARKET OF EMMAUS, WHITHER THEY WENT TO BUY A BEAST FOR THE WEDDING FEAST OF RABBAN GAMALIEL'S SON, WHAT [IS THE LAW] IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE [INADVERTENTLY] WITH HIS SISTER, HIS FATHER'S SISTER AND HIS MOTHER'S SISTER;⁶ IS HE LIABLE TO ONE OFFERING FOR ALL THE TRESPASSES, OR TO ONE [SEPARATE OFFERING] FOR EACH OF THEM? THEY REPLIED: WE HAVE HEARD NOTHING [ABOUT THIS], BUT WE HAVE HEARD THAT IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS FIVE WIVES, WHILE THEY WERE MENSTRUANT, IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, HE IS LIABLE TO A SACRIFICE FOR EACH [ACT], AND IT SEEMS TO US THAT THE CASE [YOU STATE] MAY BE DERIVED THEREFROM BY AN A FORTIORI CONCLUSION.⁷

GEMARA. How is the query to be understood? If as is stated,⁸ what question is there, seeing that the prohibitions as well as the persons involved are distinct!⁹ — This is rather what it means to state: What [is the law] if one had intercourse with a sister who is at the same time his father's sister and his mother's sister; is he liable to one sacrifice for all the trespasses, or to one [separate] sacrifice for each of them? Do we argue that here are diverse prohibitions,¹⁰ or do we argue [from the fact] that the persons are not diverse?¹¹ They replied: We have heard nothing about this, but we have heard that if one had intercourse together¹² with his five wives, while they were menstruant, whereby only one prohibition has been transgressed, he is liable to a sacrifice for each act of transgressing the law concerning menstruant women; and it seems to us that the case [you state] may be derived therefrom by an a fortiori conclusion [thus]: If one is liable to separate offerings in the case of intercourse together with his five menstruant wives, whereby only one prohibition has been transgressed, how much more should one be liable to separate offerings in the case of the sister who is at the same time his father's sister and his mother's sister, whereby three different prohibitions have been transgressed! But [against this conclusion] one may object: the case of the five menstruant women [is rightly more stringent] because several persons [are involved]? [The ruling¹³ must] rather be derived from the Scriptural verse which says, He has uncovered the nakedness of his sister,¹⁴ indicating that one is liable [to separate offerings] in the case of a sister who is at the same time his father's sister and his mother's sister. Said R. Adda b. Ahaba: This¹⁵ can arise in the case of a wicked man the son of a wicked man;¹⁶ [viz.] if a man had connection with his mother who bore him two daughters, and then had connection with one of these [daughters] who bore him a son; this son¹⁷ then had connection with his mother's sister who is at the same time his sister and his father's sister. He is indeed a wicked man the son of a wicked man.

Our Rabbis taught: If one had intercourse [inadvertently with one of the incestuous relations] and then again and then again,¹⁸ he is liable [to an offering] for each act. These are the words of R. Eliezer. But the Sages say, He is liable only once. The Sages, however, agree with R. Eliezer that if a man had intercourse at the same time¹⁹ with his five menstruant wives, that he is liable for each act, since he caused them liability to separate offerings.²⁰ Raba said to R. Nahman: Do we say [as an argument] since he caused them [liability to separate offerings]; surely it has been taught: 'If the man [committed several acts]²¹ in one spell of unawareness, and she in five separate spells of unawareness,²² he is liable to one offering only and she to one for each act'²³ — Say rather: Since the persons²⁴ were different.

The query was raised: If one cut plants²⁵ [on the Sabbath] and then cut again, what would be the law according to R. Eliezer?²⁶ Is R. Eliezer's reason in the previous case because two acts were committed, and that was why he ruled that he was liable for each act, so here also since he committed two acts [he is liable for each act]; or perhaps R. Eliezer's reason in the previous case is because the acts could not be united,²⁷ and therefore R. Eliezer said that he was liable for each act; in the instance, however, of a man cutting a plant of the size of a dried fig²⁸ and then cutting again a plant of the size of a dried fig, both in one spell of unawareness, since the two dried fig-sizes could have been united in one act of cutting, he should be liable to one sacrifice only? How is it? — Rabbah answered: R. Eliezer's reason is because two acts were performed, and here also two acts were performed. R. Joseph said: R. Eliezer's reason is because the acts could not be united, but whenever the acts could have been united one is liable to one offering only.

Abaye raised an objection against Rabbah: [It has been taught:] R. Eliezer declares one culpable for derivatives²⁹ even when performed together with their respective principal acts [of work]. [From this we infer that if,] however, the same principal act was performed twice in one spell of unawareness, he is exempt.³⁰ Now, should you be right in saying that R. Eliezer's reason is because two acts were performed, why should he be exempt here! — Said Mar the son of Rabana: I and Rab Nihumi b. Zechariah have explained this: Here³¹ we deal with a branch of a vine which was overhanging a fig-tree, and he cut off both [branches] at one time.³² R. Eliezer therefore declares him culpable, since both the denominations³³ and the objects³⁴ were different. In what circumstances, then, would a man be exempt [according to R. Eliezer] when cutting a plant twice? — Only if he cut off two plants of a dried fig's size in one stroke. But if he cut off one plant of a dried fig's size and then another of a dried fig's size, he is indeed liable [to two offerings].³⁵

MISHNAH. R. AKIBA FURTHER ASKED: IF A LIMB HANGS LOOSE FROM THE BODY OF A LIVING BEAST, WHAT IS THE LAW?³⁶ THEY REPLIED: WE HAVE HEARD NOTHING ABOUT THIS, BUT WE HAVE HEARD ABOUT A LIMB HANGING LOOSE FROM THE BODY OF A MAN THAT IT IS CLEAN. AND THUS

(1) This refers to the law concerning the killing on the same day of a young together with its mother, Lev. XXII, 28. By killing a beast after its mother as well as its own young had previously been slaughtered on the same day, an act not yet punishable, he committed a double sin, or rather he transgressed the prohibition twice in one act.

(2) Forty lashes means actually one set of thirty-nine strokes. 'Forty' is a term adopted from the text (Deut. XXV, 3). Eighty lashes means twofold flagellation.

(3) The twofold flagellation was caused by the mother of the last-killed animal as well as by its young.

(4) There is only one person who happens to be inter-related with him in several ways.

(5) Lev. XVIII, 17. varta is in the singular, to indicate that even if several inter-relations are combined in one woman she is still a kinswoman singly, and subject to one sacrifice only.

(6) Here in some versions is added: 'in one spell of unawareness', suggesting that the query referred to three different women; v. Gemara.

(7) Since in the latter instance the sin is each time the same.

(8) Viz., that it referred to three different women, each falling under a different prohibition, though the three sins were committed in one spell of unawareness.

(9) Lit. 'the names are distinct and the bodies are distinct'.

- (10) Consequently three offerings are to be brought.
- (11) And therefore only one offering must be brought.
- (12) I.e. in one spell of unawareness.
- (13) On R. Akiba's query.
- (14) Lev. XX, 17. The phrase is regarded as superfluous. V. also supra 2b.
- (15) Viz., that a sister should be at the same time the father's sister and the mother's sister.
- (16) I.e. this case can be construed only if the father of the offender had committed incest on two occasions, from which connections this woman as well as the man resulted.
- (17) Sc. the offender referred to in the Mishnah.
- (18) Without being conscious in the meantime of his sin.
- (19) I.e. under one spell of unawareness. Rashi omits: 'at the same time'.
- (20) I.e. the women who have also transgressed the same prohibition, have each to bring a separate sacrifice. A division has thus been established between the acts.
- (21) Viz., with the same incestuous relation. Rashi mentions also the version that it refers to five different women.
- (22) I.e. after each connection the woman became aware of her transgression.
- (23) We thus see that although the woman is liable to separate offerings, this is no reason why the man should be similarly liable.
- (24) I.e. in the case relating to the menstruant women different persons were involved and for this reason he is liable to five separate offerings.
- (25) Lit. 'reaps'.
- (26) Viz., in one spell of unawareness. Cutting plants or reaping corn is one of the principal acts of work prohibited on the Sabbath; Shab. VII, 2.
- (27) The various sexual connections are of necessity separate performances.
- (28) The legal minimum involving the desecration of the Sabbath is the size of a dried fig.
- (29) There are altogether thirty-nine principal acts of work prohibited on the Sabbath. Each of them is the head of a series of acts of work similar to it and derived from it — the derivatives. If a principal act has been performed together with some of its derivatives in one spell of unawareness, he is liable, according to R. Eliezer, for each act. From the fact that R. Eliezer did not go a step further in stating that even if the same principal act had been performed several times he is liable for each act, we derive that in the latter case he is only liable to one sacrifice.
- (30) He is liable to bring only one offering and is exempt from the second.
- (31) Viz., the statement of R. Eliezer that one is guilty for a derivative when performed with its principal act.
- (32) With one movement he cut off the vine branch, which he needed for fuel, as well as a twig of the fig-tree, which he wanted for its fruit. The first act is a derivative, since it was not done for the sake of its fruit; the second is a principal act. R. Eliezer holds that he is liable to two offerings even though one action only was performed. The inference made above, that R. Eliezer would not declare him guilty twice if the same principal act of work was performed twice on separate occasions but under one spell of unawareness, is no longer logical, for in this instance two different actions were done.
- (33) I.e. the one was a principal act, the other its derivative.
- (34) I.e. the trees.
- (35) In accordance with Rabbah's interpretation of R. Eliezer's opinion.
- (36) The question is whether it is unclean. The limb of a living animal completely detached from the body has the status of nebelah (see Glos.) and is unclean. In our instance it was not wholly detached from the body, but its connections were mainly severed.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 15b

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 15b

THOSE THAT WERE AFFLICTED WITH BOILS USED TO DO IN JERUSALEM:¹ THE AFFLICTED PERSON WOULD GO ON THE EVE OF PASSOVER TO THE PHYSICIAN, AND HE WOULD CUT THE LIMB UNTIL ONLY CONTACT OF A HAIRBREADTH WAS LEFT;² HE THEN STUCK IT ON A THORN AND THEN TORE HIMSELF AWAY FROM IT.³ IN THIS MANNER BOTH THAT MAN AND THE PHYSICIAN COULD PARTICIPATE IN THE PASSOVER OFFERING. AND IT SEEMS TO US THAT YOUR CASE MAY BE DERIVED FROM THIS BY AN A FORTIORI CONCLUSION.⁴

GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere:⁵ If one scrapes liquid from off a leek, or wrings his hair [with a cloth],⁶ the liquid which remained within does not render foodstuffs susceptible to uncleanness; that which came forth does render them susceptible.⁷ Remarked Samuel: The leek itself is now susceptible to uncleanness,⁸ because when its liquid emerged the leek became susceptible. But surely we have learnt: THE AFFLICTED PERSON WOULD GO ON THE EVE OF PASSOVER etc. Now, if you are to assert that 'when its liquid emerged the leek became susceptible', why should not the same apply to the loosened limb; at the moment of severance it should render the man unclean? — [It is] as Rab Joseph stated elsewhere that 'it was removed with great force', so say also here that the afflicted person tore himself away with great force.⁹

And where was that statement of Rab Joseph made? — In connection with the following: 'If a zab¹⁰ or one rendered unclean through contact with a dead body was walking while the rain fell upon him, though the water was squeezed by him from the upper towards the lower part [of his clothes], it is regarded as clean, for it is of no consequence so long as it is not wholly removed from the clothes.¹¹ If, however, it is wholly removed from the clothes, it renders foodstuffs susceptible to uncleanness, for it is of consequence only after its complete removal from the body',¹² [In connection with this] Rab Joseph said: It had been removed with great force.¹³

MISHNAH. FURTHERMORE R. AKIBA ASKED: IF A MAN SLAUGHTERED IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS FIVE SACRIFICES OUTSIDE [THE TEMPLE PRECINCTS], WHAT IS THE LAW? IS HE LIABLE TO A SEPARATE OFFERING FOR EACH ACT OR ONLY TO ONE FOR THEM ALL? THEY REPLIED: WE HAVE HEARD NOTHING ABOUT THIS. SAID R. JOSHUA: I HAVE HEARD THAT IF ONE EATS OF AN OFFERING¹⁴ FROM FIVE DIFFERENT DISHES IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, HE IS GUILTY OF THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAW OF SACRILEGE FOR EACH OF THEM; AND IT SEEMS TO ME THAT THE CASE IN QUESTION MAY BE INFERRED FROM THIS BY AN A FORTIORI CONCLUSION.¹⁵ SAID R. SIMEON, NOT OF SUCH A CASE DID R. AKIBA ASK, BUT OF ONE WHO ATE OF THE NOTHAR¹⁶ OF FIVE SACRIFICES IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS — WHAT IS THE LAW? IS HE LIABLE ONLY TO ONE [OFFERING] FOR ALL OF THEM, OR IS HE LIABLE TO A SEPARATE ONE FOR EACH OF THEM? THEY REPLIED: WE HAVE HEARD NOTHING ABOUT THIS. SAID R. JOSHUA: I HAVE HEARD THAT IF ONE ATE, IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, OF ONE SACRIFICE FROM FIVE DIFFERENT DISHES, HE IS GUILTY OF THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAW OF SACRILEGE FOR EACH OF THEM; AND IT SEEMS TO ME THAT THE CASE IN QUESTION MAY BE DERIVED THEREFROM BY AN A FORTIORI CONCLUSION.¹⁷ RETORTED TO HIM R. AKIBA: IF THIS¹⁸ IS AN AUTHENTIC TRADITION WE SHALL ACCEPT IT; BUT IF IT IS ONLY A LOGICAL DEDUCTION, THERE IS A REBUTTAL. SAID [R. ELIEZER]: REBUT IT. HE REPLIED: IT CANNOT BE. YOU MAY HOLD THE [STRICT] VIEW IN THE LAW OF SACRILEGE,¹⁹ SINCE IN CONNECTION WITH IT THE PERSON WHO GIVES OTHERS TO EAT [OF HOLY THINGS] IS AS GUILTY AS THE CONSUMER HIMSELF,²⁰ AND THE PERSON WHO CAUSES OTHERS TO DERIVE A BENEFIT FROM THEM IS AS GUILTY AS THE PERSON WHO HIMSELF MADE USE OF THEM; FURTHERMORE, [SMALL QUANTITIES ARE] RECKONED TOGETHER IN THE CASE OF SACRILEGE EVEN AFTER THE LAPSE OF A LONG PERIOD.²¹ WHILST NOT ONE OF THESE RULINGS APPLIES TO THE CASE OF NOTHAR.

GEMARA. What objection had R. Simeon?²² — This was his objection: How can you prove the case of slaughtering from that of eating?²³ Maybe the ruling holds good only in the case of eating, since the offender derived enjoyment! Therefore, what he asked them was this: If one ate of the nothar of five sacrifices in one spell of unawareness, what is the law? Is he liable [to a separate offering] for each of them, or only to one [offering] for all of them? They replied: We have heard nothing about this. Said R. Joshua: I have heard that if one ate, in one spell of unawareness, of a sacrifice from five different dishes, he is guilty of the transgression of the law of sacrilege for each of them; and it seems to me that the case in question may be derived therefrom by an a fortiori conclusion. Thus, if [when one eats five different dishes] from one sacrifice, where there are not distinct bodies, he is liable for each [dish] because there were separate dishes, how much more would one be liable for each [eating] in the case of the five sacrifices where there are distinct bodies! (SAID R. SIMEON: NOT OF SUCH A CASE DID R. AKIBA ASK, BUT OF ONE WHO ATE OF THE NOTHAR OF FIVE SACRIFICES IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS; WHAT IS THE LAW? IS HE LIABLE ONLY TO ONE [OFFERING] FOR ALL OF THEM, OR IS HE LIABLE TO A SEPARATE [OFFERING] FOR EACH OF THEM? THEY REPLIED: WE HAVE HEARD NOTHING ABOUT THIS. SAID R. JOSHUA: I HAVE HEARD THAT IF ONE ATE, IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, OF ONE SACRIFICE FROM FIVE DIFFERENT DISHES, HE IS GUILTY OF THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAW OF SACRILEGE FOR EACH OF THEM; AND IT SEEMS TO ME THAT THE CASE IN QUESTION MAY BE DERIVED THEREFROM BY AN A FORTIORI CONCLUSION.)²⁴

RETORTED TO HIM R. AKIBA: IF THIS IS AN AUTHENTIC TRADITION WE SHALL ACCEPT IT etc. Did R. Joshua give way to R. Akiba's objection, or not?²⁵ — Come and hear: It has been taught, 'If one ate five portions of the nothar of one sacrifice from five dishes but in one spell of unawareness, he is liable to but one sin-offering, and in case of doubt,²⁶ to but one suspensive guilt-offering; if from five dishes and in five different spells of unawareness,²⁷ he is liable to a sin-offering for each portion, and in case of doubt, to a suspensive guilt-offering for each portion; if the portions were from five sacrifices, though consumed in one spell of unawareness, he is liable for each of them. R. Jose son of R. Judah holds: Even if he ate, in one spell of unawareness, five portions from five different sacrifices, he brings but one sin-offering, and in case of doubt, but one suspensive guilt-offering. The general rule is: whenever there is a plurality of sin-offerings,²⁸ there is also correspondingly a plurality of suspensive guilt-offerings. If he ate five portions, from five dishes, of the meat of one sacrifice prior to the sprinkling of its blood,²⁹ even if [he did it] in one spell of unawareness, he is guilty of the trespass of the law of sacrilege for each of them’.

- (1) An unclean person cannot participate in the Passover Feast. If the afflicted person had to have one of his limbs amputated on the eve of Passover and wished that both he and the physician should not become unclean by handling the amputated limb which is unclean, he adopted the method described in the Mishnah.
- (2) So long as the limb is not completely detached from the body it is clean.
- (3) None came thus into contact with the unclean limb.
- (4) Viz., since the limb is considered clean in the case of a man who is susceptible to uncleanness even while still alive, then surely it is so in the case of an animal which is not subject to uncleanness while alive.
- (5) Maksh. I, 5. V. ad loc.
- (6) Thus the version in the Mishnah and in Rashi and Maim. Cur. edd. read here: ‘wings his hair or his cloth’.
- (7) Lit. ‘behold if water be put on (v. Lev. XI, 38) applies’. Foodstuffs are susceptible to uncleanness only after contact with liquid, but this contact must be with the desire, explicit or assumed, of the owner. The juice left in the leek which afterwards emerges of its own and comes into contact with foodstuffs does not, therefore, render them susceptible to uncleanness.
- (8) Even though there was no new contact after the separation of the juice from the leek.
- (9) So that there was no contact between the man and the limb for one moment, either during or after the severance of the limb. In the case of the leek, however, the juice emerges slowly.
- (10) V. Glos.
- (11) The water running down the clothes gathers in the hem and evaporates. It is therefore regarded as unsubstantial to be the carrier of defilement, unless it had been purposely removed from the clothes.
- (12) Thus in Tosef. Maksh. I, 3. Rashi strikes out the last clause. We learn, in any case, that though the liquid, is able to qualify foodstuffs for defilement, it is not unclean itself though it touched the unclean clothes.
- (13) Sc. that there was no contact with the clothes.
- (14) Before the sprinkling of the blood of the offering.
- (15) V. Gemara.
- (16) V. Glos.
- (17) V. Gemara.
- (18) Viz., the ruling that he is liable to five offerings in the instance relating to nothar.
- (19) But one cannot derive other cases from it.
- (20) By giving of holy things to others he alienates them from Temple property. Similarly it is forbidden to cause other people to derive a benefit from sacred objects.
- (21) Viz., in order to make up the requisite value of a perutah (see Glos.).
- (22) Viz., to the first version of R. Akiba's query.
- (23) Viz., the dictum of R. Joshua.
- (24) The text in brackets is simply a superfluous repetition of the previous. Its inclusion seems to be a copyist's error. It is omitted in MSS.
- (25) I.e., does R. Joshua still maintain that different dishes involve separate sacrifices not only in the case of sacrilege but also in the case of nothar?
- (26) A sin-offering is brought for the expiation of a transgression of the sinfulness of which the perpetrator was not conscious at the time of action, but which is definitely established. If there is doubt as to the transgression, then a suspensive guilt-offering is brought.
- (27) I.e., between the various meals he became each time conscious of the transgression perpetrated.
- (28) Lit. ‘wherever they are divided in regard to sin-offerings’. I.e. that separate sin-offerings are required for each act.

(29) Sacrificial meat is subject to the law of sacrilege only until the sprinkling of the blood, v. Men. 47b.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 16a

Now [in the last instance] it does not continue, 'And in case of doubt, he is liable to a suspensive guilt-offering'! Now whose view does this statement¹ follow? Shall I say R. Akiba's? Then it should have stated in the latter clause, 'And in case of doubt, he is liable to a suspensive guilt-offering'; for we have learnt: 'R. Akiba prescribes a suspensive guilt-offering in the case of doubtful sacrilege'.² It must therefore follow R. Joshua's view, and yet we read, 'If . . . in five different spells of unawareness, he is liable to five sin-offerings'.³ We thus learn that R. Joshua gave way to his [R. Akiba's] objection. But cannot the opposite also be proved from one of the latter clauses which reads, 'If the portions were from five offerings,⁴ though consumed in one spell of unawareness, he is liable for each of them'; thus proving that he did not accept his objection? Hence you are compelled [to assume] that we have [here the views of two different] Tannaim:⁵ according to one Tanna, he [R. Joshua] gave way; according to another he did not give way [to R. Akiba's objection]; then you might also answer that R. Akiba's view is followed,⁶ but that the [anonymous] Tanna accepts his one opinion and rejects the other; thus, he agrees with him [R. Akiba] in the rules relating to unawareness of sin, but disagrees with regard to sacrilege.

How is one guilty fivefold of the law of sacrilege?⁷ — Said Samuel: As we have learnt,⁸ 'Five things in a burnt-offering can combine one with the other:⁹ the meat, the fat, the wine, the fine flour and the oil'.¹⁰ Hezekiah said, If he ate of five different limbs. Resh Lakish said, You may even say [that he ate] of one limb, yet [the fivefold sacrilege] can arise in the case of the fore-limb.¹¹ R. Isaac the Smith said, If he ate it with five different dishes.¹² R. Johanan said, If he ate it in five different preparations.¹³

MISHNAH. SAID R. AKIBA: I ASKED R. ELIEZER, IF ONE PERFORMED MANY ACTS OF WORK OF THE SAME CATEGORY¹⁴ ON DIFFERENT SABBATHS¹⁵ BUT IN ONE SPELL OF UNAWARENESS, WHAT IS THE LAW? IS HE LIABLE TO ONE [OFFERING] ONLY FOR ALL OF THEM, OR TO A SEPARATE ONE FOR EACH OF THEM? HE REPLIED TO ME: HE IS LIABLE FOR EACH OF THEM; AND THIS CAN BE DERIVED BY AN A FORTIORI CONCLUSION: IF FOR INTERCOURSE WITH MENSTRUANT WOMEN,¹⁶ IN WHICH PROHIBITION THERE ARE NEITHER MANY CATEGORIES NOR MANY WAYS OF SINNING,¹⁷ ONE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ACT, HOW MUCH MORE MUST ONE BE LIABLE TO SEPARATE OFFERINGS IN THE CASE OF THE SABBATH, IN CONNECTION WITH WHICH THERE ARE MANY CATEGORIES [OF WORK] AND MANY WAYS OF SINNING!¹⁸ I RETORTED TO HIM: NO, YOU MAY HOLD THIS VIEW¹⁹ IN THE CASE OF THE MENSTRUANT WOMEN, SINCE THEREIN THERE IS A TWOFOLD PROHIBITION: THE MAN IS CAUTIONED AGAINST CONNECTION WITH A MENSTRUANT WOMAN, AND THE MENSTRUANT WOMAN IS CAUTIONED AGAINST CONNECTION WITH A MAN;²⁰ BUT CAN YOU HOLD THE SAME IN THE CASE OF THE SABBATH WHERE THERE IS ONLY ONE PROHIBITION? HE SAID TO ME: LET THEN THE CASE OF INTERCOURSE WITH [MENSTRUANT] MINORS SERVE AS YOUR PREMISE, WHERE THERE IS BUT ONE PROHIBITION,²¹ AND YET ONE IS LIABLE FOR EACH ACT. I RETORTED TO HIM: YOU MAY HOLD THIS VIEW IN THE

CASE OF MINORS BECAUSE, ALTHOUGH NO PROHIBITION NOW APPLIES, IT WILL APPLY AFTER A TIME;²² BUT CAN YOU HOLD THE SAME OF THE SABBATH WHERE NEITHER NOW NOR AFTER A TIME [IS THE PROHIBITION WAIVED]? HE SAID TO ME: THEN LET THE LAW CONCERNING COPULATION WITH A BEAST SERVE AS YOUR PREMISE.²³ I REPLIED TO HIM: THE LAW CONCERNING COPULATION WITH A BEAST IS INDEED COMPARABLE TO [THAT CONCERNING] SABBATH.²⁴

GEMARA. What was hi²⁵ query? If his query was whether separate Sabbaths were comparable to separate objects,²⁶ then he should have put the question thus: [What is the law] if one performed the same act of work on different Sabbaths?²⁷ And if his query was whether secondary acts of work were on a par with principal acts of work,²⁸ then he should have put the question thus: [What is the law] if one performed on one Sabbath several [secondary] acts of the same [principal] class? — Replied Raba: In the school of Rab they explained that the two questions were put. He asked whether [different] Sabbaths were comparable to different objects, and he also asked whether secondary acts of work were on a par with principal acts of work.

Now as to the Sabbaths what was his query?²⁹ [Are we to say that, where a man performed an act of work on several Sabbaths] in ignorance of the Sabbath, though knowing full well that that act was prohibited, [Rabbi Akiba] had no doubt at all that the intervening week-days effected a knowledge to separate [the occasions];³⁰ and his question was only where [he performed the act] knowing full well [on each occasion] that it was Sabbath but not knowing that it was a prohibited act, [the query being] whether different Sabbaths were comparable to different objects or not?³¹ Or [rather that, where a man performed an act of work on several Sabbaths] with knowledge of the Sabbath [on each occasion] but in ignorance of its prohibition, [R. Akiba] had no doubt at all that the different Sabbaths were comparable to different objects; and his question was only where [he performed the act] in ignorance of the Sabbaths, though knowing full well that that act was prohibited, [his query being] whether the intervening week-days effected a knowledge to separate the occasions or not? — Said Rabbah:

(1) I.e., the group of rules quoted anonymously in the Baraita.

(2) Infra 22a.

(3) Lit., 'he is liable to a sin-offering for each portion'. From this we infer that only awareness in between the acts involves separate offerings. We thus learn that R. Joshua, whose view is represented and accepted in the Baraita, agrees that the multiplicity of dishes does not involve separate sacrifices in the instance of nothar.

(4) It is assumed that the law would be the same if the meat was taken from five dishes, thus intimating that R. Joshua maintains his view regarding nothar.

(5) I.e., the statement is not uniform; the second and the third clauses of the above statement, from which contradictory conclusions have just been derived, follow different teachers.

(6) The only difficulty that presents itself then is the omission in the last clause of the reference to suspensive guilt-offerings for doubtful sins, which, according to an utterance from R. Akiba elsewhere, should have been added.

(7) When eating five separate dishes.

(8) Me'il. 15b.

(9) To make up an olive's bulk so that the prohibition of offering outside the Temple might apply; or to make up the requisite value of a perutah in the case of sacrilege.

- (10) The last three ingredients are of the meal-offering accompanying the burnt-offering.
- (11) Which has several distinct sections.
- (12) E.g. he ate the meal once with cabbage, again with onions and then with leeks etc. (Rashi).
- (13) Lit. 'tastes'. E.g. roasted, cooked, grilled etc. So Rashi but see Tosaf.
- (14) I.e., several secondary acts forbidden on the Sabbath, all being the derivatives of one principal work.
- (15) I.e., the same labours were performed on various Sabbaths.
- (16) V. R. Eliezer's statement supra 15a.
- (17) I.e., there is no variety of transgression in connection therewith, such as principal acts and derivatives, and the sin-offering is brought always for the same act, viz., sexual intercourse.
- (18) Thus the version in the Mishnah edd. and in MSS; cur. edd. read instead, 'death penalties'.
- (19) That one is liable for each act.
- (20) V. Lev. XX, 18, where for the woman too kareth is the penalty. In the instance of Sabbath, however, there is but one transgressor.
- (21) The minor herself is not subject to any penalty, for she does not come within the prohibition.
- (22) I.e., when she grows up.
- (23) Though the beast is killed (v. ibid. 15) no prohibition can, of course, be said to apply to it. Its stoning is due to the fact that it was the cause of a man's downfall and would be pointed at by people. cf. Sanh. 54a.
- (24) What applies to the one applies to the other. This answer still leaves the matter in doubt.
- (25) R. Akiba's.
- (26) Lit. 'bodies'. I.e., if the same act of work was committed several times on different Sabbaths, is he liable to several offerings, just as though he had committed different acts on the Sabbath or not?
- (27) This would be a simple case expressing unmistakably the point of his query. The expression in the Mishnah 'MANY ACTS OF WORK', involving principal and secondary acts is thus an unnecessary complication.
- (28) I.e., whether one is liable to several offerings for performing several secondary labours of one and the same category.
- (29) I.e., under what conditions was the Sabbath law unwittingly transgressed on the various Sabbath days. The question whether separate Sabbaths render one liable to separate offerings may, as it were, be conceived in two ways: firstly with reference to the error that caused the transgression and secondly with regard to the forbidden act: i.e., the question may be whether the fact that the error was made on different Sabbaths causes us to regard it as if several errors were made, or whether the fact that the work was done on separate Sabbaths causes us to consider it as if different kinds of work were performed. In the first instance the error must necessarily lie in unawareness of the Sabbath, though the fact that the labours were forbidden was known to the transgressor; in the second instance the mistake lies in his ignorance that the works he did were forbidden on the Sabbath, but knowing that that day was Sabbath.
- (30) The six week-days are a long period during which the trespasser ought to have learnt when Sabbath was. His repeated unawareness of the Sabbath is, therefore, to be regarded each time as a new error involving a separate offering.
- (31) Sins committed on different days but in one spell of unawareness are generally regarded as one protracted transgression in error and involve but one sacrifice; but in the case of Sabbath it may be said that each day is a separate entity, and therefore acts of work done on different Sabbaths are not regarded as one protracted transgression.

Talmud - Mas. K'rithoth 16b

It is reasonable to assume that in the case of the act being performed in ignorance of the Sabbaths and with knowledge of its prohibition he had no doubt at all that the intervening week-days effected separateness, and that his question was only when the act was performed with the knowledge of the Sabbaths but in ignorance of its prohibition, [the point in doubt being] whether different Sabbaths are like different objects or not. His¹ reply was that in the case of the act being done with knowledge of the Sabbaths but in ignorance of its prohibition the different Sabbaths were like different objects. This reply, however, he [R. Akiba] did not accept. He then proved that secondary acts of work were on a par with principal acts of work, but this too he rejected.

Said Rabbah: Whence do I derive this?² From that which we have learnt:³ ‘A great general rule has been laid down with regard to Sabbath: He who was altogether oblivious of the principle of Sabbath and performed many acts of work on many Sabbaths, is liable to one offering only. If he knew the principle of Sabbath⁴ and did many acts of work on many Sabbaths, he is liable for each Sabbath. If he knew each time that the day was Sabbath,⁵ and did many acts of work on many Sabbaths, he is liable for each principal act of work’. Now, it does not say,⁶ ‘he is liable for each principal act of work and for each Sabbath’.⁷ Whom does [the Mishnah] follow? Shall I say R. Eliezer? Read then the latter clause:⁸ ‘If he did many [secondary] acts of work of the same [principal] class, he is liable only to one offering’; but according to R. Eliezer he should be liable for each of the secondary acts of work as if they were principal acts of work! Hence it is clear [that this Mishnah, then, represents] R. Akiba's view, and it is hereby proved that he had no doubt at all that in the case of an act being done in ignorance of the Sabbath and with knowledge of its prohibition the intervening week-days effected separateness, and that his question was only when the act was performed with knowledge of the Sabbath but in ignorance of its prohibition, the point being whether different Sabbaths are like different objects or not. The other's solution⁹ was that they were like different objects, and that secondary acts were on a par with principal acts of work; but both answers were rejected by him. Said Abaye to him:¹⁰ Indeed I maintain that R. Akiba had no doubt that different Sabbaths were not comparable to different objects in the case where an act was done with knowledge of the Sabbath but in ignorance of its prohibition;¹¹ and his question was only in the case where an act was done in ignorance of the Sabbath but with knowledge of its prohibition, [the query being] whether the intervening week-days effected separateness or not. The solution offered was that the intervening week-days effected separateness, and this was accepted by him;¹² he also ruled that secondary acts of work were on a par with principal acts of work, but this was rejected by him.

Rab Hisda said:¹³ In the case of an act being done with knowledge of the Sabbath but in ignorance of its prohibition even R. Akiba agrees that the different Sabbath days are like different objects; but his query was whether the intervening week-days effected separateness in the case where an act was done in ignorance of the Sabbath but with knowledge of its prohibition. The other's solution was that the intervening week-days effected separateness; and this was accepted by him. He also ruled that secondary acts of work were on a par with principal acts of work, but this was rejected by him.

Said Rab Hisda: Whence do I derive this? From that which has been taught:¹⁴ ‘If one wrote [on Sabbath] two letters¹⁵ in one spell of unawareness, he is liable [to an offering]; if in separate spells of unawareness,¹⁶ Rabban Gamaliel says: He is liable; and the Sages say: He is not. Rabban Gamaliel, however, admits that if he wrote one letter on one Sabbath and the other on another, he is exempt'.¹⁷ Whereas in another [Baraita] it has been taught: 'If one wrote two letters on two different Sabbaths, one on one Sabbath and the other on another, Rabban Gamaliel declares him liable, and the Sages declare him not liable'.¹⁸ On the assumption that Rabban Gamaliel followed R. Akiba's opinion, [Rab Hisda argued thus:] According to me, who hold that in the case of an act being performed with knowledge of the Sabbath but in ignorance of its prohibition even R. Akiba agrees that the different Sabbath days are like different objects, there is no contradiction, for that which taught that he is exempt¹⁹ refers to a case where the letters were written with knowledge of the Sabbath but in ignorance of the prohibition,²⁰ in which case the different Sabbaths are like different objects²¹

(1) Viz., R. Eliezer's reply in the Mishnah.

(2) Viz., that R. Akiba's query is to be understood in the first alternative as Rabbah suggested above.

(3) Shab. 67b.

(4) But was unconscious that that day was Sabbath.

(5) But not that those works were forbidden.

(6) Viz., in the third instance.

(7) The fact that he is not declared liable in this instance for each Sabbath separately proves that this Mishnah, which, it is argued, follows R. Akiba's view, maintains either that work repeatedly performed on different Sabbaths in uninterrupted unawareness is not to be regarded as if several acts of work of different classes were performed, and therefore involving several offerings; or at least that there is doubt on this point. The second alternative is assumed by Rabbah to be the case; this being the very point of R. Akiba's query. The second clause of the quoted Mishnah, on the other hand, unmistakably states that if the error has been caused by the ignorance of the Sabbath, he is liable for each Sabbath, presumably because the intervening week-days effect a division. We thus see that Rabbah's interpretation of R. Akiba's query is borne out by that Mishnah.

(8) This is the very last clause of that Mishnah, not quoted above.

(9) I.e., R. Eliezer's answer.

(10) I.e., to Rabbah.

(11) As is indeed proved by the third clause of the Mishnah, where he is not liable for each Sabbath, which Abaye considers an absolute statement and not one about which there is doubt.

(12) The second clause of that Mishnah from Sabbath indicates the acceptance by R. Akiba of R. Eliezer's reply.

(13) Rab Hisda differs from Abaye and Rabbah in that he maintains that in the end R. Akiba decided that different Sabbath days were comparable to different objects. The third clause of the quoted Mishnah, which seemingly contradicts him in that it does not state that the transgressor is also liable for each Sabbath, is indeed interpreted by him as implying that there is liability for each Sabbath.

(14) This quotation is a combination from two Mishnahs, Shab 104b and 105a.

(15) The writing of a word of two characters is one of the principal labours.

(16) E.g., one character in the morning, the other in the afternoon of the same Sabbath day.

(17) The latter sentence seems to be an inference rather than a quotation, for it is not found in connection with the quoted Mishnahs.

(18) There is thus a seeming contradiction in the two Baraitas with regard to R. Gamaliel's opinion.

(19) According to R. Gamaliel.

(20) That writing is forbidden on the Sabbath.

(21) I.e., the two letters can therefore not combine. It is as if one did on two different Sabbaths each time a portion of a different act.

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. IF THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES¹ WERE SLAUGHTERED ON THE SOUTH SIDE [OF THE ALTAR].² THE LAW OF SACRILEGE³ [STILL] APPLIES TO THEM. IF THEY WERE SLAUGHTERED ON THE SOUTH SIDE AND THEIR BLOOD RECEIVED ON THE NORTH OR [SLAUGHTERED] ON THE NORTH SIDE AND THEIR BLOOD RECEIVED ON THE SOUTH, OR IF THEY WERE SLAUGHTERED BY DAY AND [THEIR BLOOD] SPRINKLED DURING THE NIGHT⁴ OR [SLAUGHTERED] DURING THE NIGHT AND [THEIR BLOOD] SPRINKLED BY DAY,⁵ OR IF THEY WERE SLAUGHTERED [WITH THE INTENTION OF EATING THE FLESH] BEYOND ITS PROPER TIME OR OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE,⁶ THE LAW OF SACRILEGE STILL APPLIES TO THEM. R. JOSHUA LAID DOWN THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER HAS AT SOME TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS DOES NOT COME UNDER THE LAW OF SACRILEGE,⁷ AND WHATEVER HAS AT NO TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS DOES COME UNDER THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. WHICH IS THAT WHICH HAS AT SOME TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS? [SACRIFICES] WHICH REMAINED OVERNIGHT⁸ OR BECAME DEFILED OR WERE TAKEN OUT [OF THE TEMPLE COURT].⁹ WHICH IS THAT WHICH HAS AT NO TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS? [SACRIFICES] THAT WERE SLAUGHTERED [WHILE PURPOSING AN ACT] BEYOND ITS PROPER TIME OR OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE, OR THE BLOOD OF WHICH WAS RECEIVED BY THE UNFIT¹⁰ AND THEY SPRINKLED IT.¹¹ GEMARA. It is stated: IF THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES WERE SLAUGHTERED ON THE SOUTH SIDE, THE LAW OF SACRILEGE [STILL] APPLIES TO THEM. Is this not obvious? Should the Law of Sacrilege cease to apply to them merely because they were slaughtered on the south side?¹² — It need be stated, for it might otherwise have entered your mind to say: Since 'Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan¹³ that 'sacrifices which died were, as far as the law of the Torah rules,¹⁴ excluded from the Law of Sacrilege', so were also Most Holy sacrifices when slaughtered on the south side considered as if they were strangled. It is therefore made known to us [that the instance of the Mishnah is different, for] sacrifices which died are in no case of any avail,¹⁵ while the south side, though it is not the proper place for Most Holy sacrifices, is, however, the proper place for sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness.¹⁶ Why was it necessary to enumerate [in the Mishnah all those cases]? — It was necessary, for if only SLAUGHTERED ON THE SOUTH SIDE AND THEIR BLOOD RECEIVED ON THE NORTH were stated, [I would argue:] The law of Sacrilege still applies to [the sacrifices in] this case, because the receiving [of the blood]¹⁷ was after all on the north side, but in the case where they were SLAUGHTERED ON THE NORTH SIDE AND THEIR BLOOD RECEIVED ON THE SOUTH, since [the blood] was received on the south side, [I Would say that] the Law of Sacrilege no longer applies to them. And if only these [first two instances] were stated, I would argue: [The law of Sacrilege still applies to them, because in these cases the sacrifices were at least offered during the day and] the day is the proper time for offering; in the case, however, where they were SLAUGHTERED BY NIGHT AND [THEIR BLOOD] SPRINKLED DURING THE DAY, since night is not the proper time for offering and the sacrifices were slaughtered by night, I might have thought that the Law of Sacrilege would no longer apply to them. And if SLAUGHTERED BY NIGHT [AND THEIR BLOOD SPRINKLED DURING THE DAY] were stated¹⁸ I would argue: The Law of Sacrilege still applies to them, because the blood was received during the day. In the case, however, where they were SLAUGHTERED DURING THE DAY AND THEIR BLOOD SPRINKLED BY NIGHT,¹⁹ since it is not the proper time for offering,²⁰ the sacrifices are to be considered as if strangled, and the Law of Sacrilege would accordingly not apply to them; therefore [also this instance] has been made known to us. IF SLAUGHTERED [WITH THE INTENTION OF EATING THE FLESH] BEYOND ITS PROPER TIME OR OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE. Of what avail are such sacrifices?²¹ — [The Law of Sacrilege still applies to them] because [the performance of] the other acts of offering²² [is yet necessary]²³ for rendering the sacrifices piggul.²⁴

- (1) Viz., burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, guilt-offerings and communal peace offerings. They are considered wholly the 'possession of God' until their blood is sprinkled (Tosaf.).
 - (2) And not on the north side as required, v. Zeb. 47a.
 - (3) Lit., 'trespass', or malappropriation of the property of the Temple.
 - (4) Night is not the time for sacrificial rites.
 - (5) Tosaf. reverse the order of the last two instances, which is more in accord with the discussion in the Gemara below.
 - (6) Zeb. V. 3 and 5.
 - (7) Because it has, so to speak, become the private possession of the priests.

 - (13) Infra 12a.
 - (14) Not, however, by rabbinical enactment.
 - (15) The prescribed manner of slaughtering allows no exception. It is & more rigid rule than that which prescribes the south side, and its non-fulfillment deprives the sacrifice of its sacred character.
 - (16) Zeb. 55a.
 - (17) Which is a holier act of offering than slaughtering, as it must be performed by a priest.

 - (22) Lit., 'rites' that make acceptable', Sc. receiving the blood, carrying it to the altar and the sprinkling thereof.
 - (23) With regard to the penalty of kareth (v. Glos) cf. Lev. XIX, 7.
 - (24) kudhip lit., 'abomination'; sacrificial flesh which has lost its sacred character in consequence of an improper intention in the mind of the officiating priest. v. Zeb. 28b.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 2b

The following was queried: If they¹ were already laid² [upon the altar], must they be brought down? Rabbah said, even if laid [upon the altar] they must be brought down. R. Joseph said, If laid [upon the altar] they need not be brought down. According to the view of R. Judah³ there can be no question that all agree that even if laid [upon the altar], they must be brought down. The dispute arises according to the view of R. Simeon.⁴ R. Joseph conforms [also here] to the view of R. Simeon; while Rabbah argues: R. Simeon maintained his view only in regard to offerings [the blood of which] should be applied below [the red line] and was applied above, or should be applied above [the red line] and was applied below; [since] they were at any rate slaughtered and their blood was received on the north side. In our case, however, since they were slaughtered⁵ on the south side they are to be considered as if they were strangled. We have learnt: IF THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES WERE SLAUGHTERED ON THE SOUTH SIDE, THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THEM. This is in order on the view of R. Joseph; but on the view of Rabbah it presents, however, difficulties.⁶ — [Rabbah would reply]: THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES . . . is [to be understood as enacted] by the Rabbis only. What is the actual difference between [its application] by law of the Torah and that by [enactment of] the Rabbis? — When by law of the Torah a fifth [of the value misappropriated] must be paid,⁷ when by enactment of the Rabbis it is not paid.⁸ But is there a Law of Sacrilege as a Rabbinical enactment? — Yes, there is. For ‘Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan⁹ that ‘sacrifices which died were, as far as the law of the Torah rules, excluded from the Law of Sacrilege’, from which we may infer that by rule of the Torah only they are excluded from the Law of Sacrilege, by [enactment of] the Rabbis, however, the Law of Sacrilege still applies to them. In the same way [in our Mishnah it is to be interpreted as applying] by enactment of the Rabbis. May we then infer¹⁰ that the statement of ‘Ulla in the name of R. Johanan has already been learnt [in our Mishnah]?¹¹ — Although it has been learnt, ‘Ulla's statement is still necessary, for it might otherwise have entered your mind to say: [In the instance of our Mishnah the Rabbis have enacted the application of the Law of Sacrilege, because] people do not keep away from those sacrifices;¹² but in the case of sacrifices which died, since people do keep away from them,¹³ I might have thought that even as a Rabbinical enactment Sacrilege does not apply to them. Therefore [‘Ulla has made his view] known to us. But has not also [the case of sacrifices which] died been learnt already? [For we have learnt]: If one enjoyed of a sin-offering,¹⁴ if it was still alive he is not guilty of Sacrilege until he has diminished its substance, but if it was dead he is guilty of Sacrilege. as soon as he had benefitted from it.¹⁵ — [‘Ulla's statement is still necessary. for] it might otherwise have entered your mind

(1) Viz., the disqualified sacrifices as instanced in the Mishnah.

(2) Lit., ‘gone up’.

(3) Zeb. 84a.

(4) With reference to sacrifices the blood of which was sprinkled irregularly either above or below the red line surrounding the altar. In such a case R. Judah holds that if they had gone up they must come down again, whereas R. Simeon holds they need not, v. ibid.

(5) Similarly in regard to other acts of offering.

(6) Since he holds that they must come down again these sacrifices have lost their sacred character, and the Law of Sacrilege should not apply to them.

(7) Lev. V, 16.

(8) Just as the trespass guilt-offering is not brought.

(9) Supra.

(10) According to Rabbah's interpretation of the Mishnah.

(11) Since on the view of Rabbah sacrifices slaughtered on the south are treated as if they were strangled, their case is on a par with that of sacrifices which died, the ruling of R. Johanan can be derived from the Mishnah and hence is superfluous.

(12) And are, therefore, likely to make unlawful use of them.

(13) As they are repulsive.

(14) E.g., by plucking of its wool.

(15) This is interpreted to the extent of the value of a Perutah, v. infra 18a. Thus the case of animals which died has already been taught, wherefore then 'Ulla's ruling in the name of R. Johanan?

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 3a

to say that in the case of the sin-offering, since it comes for atonement people do not keep away from it; but other sacrifices, however, since they come for atonement, people will keep away from them and there was, therefore, no [necessity for the Rabbis to enact in regard to them the] Law of Sacrilege. Therefore ['Ulla has made his view] known to us.¹ But is it indeed so that the Law of Sacrilege applies to a sin-offering which died? Has it not been taught: Sin-offerings that are to be left to die² and money that is to be thrown into the Dead Sea³ must not be enjoyed, yet the Law of Sacrilege does not apply to them? — You might reply: In the case of sin-offerings that are to be left to die people keep away from them even while they are still alive;⁴ which is not so [with ordinary sin-offerings] from which people do not keep away while they are alive.⁵ R. Joseph raised an objection to Rabbah [by way of inference] from one [Mishnah] to another and again from this to a third. [We have learnt]: And all of them⁶ do not defile the garments worn by him that swallows them, and the Law of Sacrilege still applies to them all except the sin-offering of a bird, which was offered below [the red line], after the manner of a sin-offering of a bird and under the name of a sin-offering. And then in connection therewith we have learnt [the general rule]:⁷ Whenever it⁸ became disqualified in the Sanctuary⁹ it does not defile the garments worn by him that swallows it, and whenever it became disqualified while not in the Sanctuary it defiles the garments worn by him that swallows it.¹⁰ And we have furthermore learnt: Whatever became disqualified in the Sanctuary need not be removed, if already laid upon the altar, need not be brought down.¹¹ Is this not a refutation of Rabbah's view?¹² — It is indeed a refutation. Now the point which had been disputed by Rabbah and R. Joseph was a matter of course to R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said:¹³ If a burnt-offering which was dedicated to a private High Place¹⁴ was brought [to be offered] inside [the Sanctuary]

(1) [The meaning is obscure and the text seems to be in disorder. Bah reads: It might have entered your mind since a sin-offering comes for atonement people keep away from it and therefore no Law of Sacrilege applies to it, therefore (the Mishnah) has made known to us (that even here the Law of Sacrilege applies); consequently no question can be raised against 'Ulla from this Mishnah which by specifying a sin-offering was taken on the view of the questioner to exclude other sacrifices, v. Sh. Mek.,.]

(2) V. Tem. 21.

(3) Ibid. 22b.

(4) And are not likely to touch them after they have died.

(5) And therefore the Law of Sacrilege applies to them by Rabbinic enactment.

(6) I.e., those enumerated in the Mishnah Zeb. 66a.

(7) Zeb. 66b Mishnah.

(8) Refers to the sin-offering of a bird the 'wringing' of which (melikah. v. Glos.) was performed in the wrong place.

(9) Through some irregularity in the prescribed method of slaughtering, melikah.

(10) B. cause the wringing off of the head, which is prescribed for a valid sin-offering of a bird, renders it in this case nebelah (v. Glos.); v. Zeb. 68b.

(11) Zeb. 84a.

(12) From the first Mishnah we learn that the sin-offerings of a bird whose melikah was performed in the wrong place a case which corresponds to the instances of our Mishnah — do not defile the garments worn by him that swallows them; thus we infer that when the second Mishnah speaks of disqualification that occurred in the Sanctuary, the reference is likewise to a melikah performed in the wrong place, and similarly the third Mishnah which states that whatever becomes disqualified in the Sanctuary need not be brought down when already laid upon the altar includes such a disqualification as melikah performed in the wrong place, and similarly a slaughtering in the wrong place which refutes Rabbah.

(13) Zeb. 1 19b.

(14) At a time when these were permitted. In such places the offerings need not necessarily be slaughtered on the north side of the altar. Cf. Zeb. 112b.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 3b

the [sacred] precincts exercise on it their retaining power in every respect.¹ R. Eleazar then submitted the following query:² 'If a burnt-offering, which was dedicated to a private High Place and brought inside the Sanctuary, became disqualified,³ if laid [upon the altar] must it be brought down?' May we not infer from the fact that R. Eleazar queried only this [special] case, that the other case⁴ was a matter of course to him, either confirming to the view of Rabbah or to the view of R. Joseph? — [No, R. Eleazar was doubtful even in regard to instances of our Mishnah and] he queries the one case as a further step⁵ of the other. [For I could argue on the one hand]: Rabbah maintained that even when laid upon the altar they must be brought down only [when the sacrifices were brought inside] the precincts of the Temple in conformity with their original provision,⁶ [in which case the departure from the prescribed method of offering rightly]⁷ disqualified them; but where [the sacrifices were brought inside] the precincts of the Temple against their original provision⁸ [a departure from the right method of offering]⁹ [he might hold] does not disqualify them!¹⁰ Or I could, perhaps, [argue on the other hand]: R. Joseph maintained that when laid upon the altar they need not be brought down only when the retaining power of the sacred precincts was exercised in conformity with the Original provision [of the sacrifices]; but [if the sacrifices were brought inside] the sacred precincts against their original provision the retaining power of the Temple [he might hold] is not [fully] effective!¹¹ Let this query¹² remain undecided. Said R. Giddal in the name of Rab: The sprinkling of [the blood of an offering which was rendered] piggul¹³ [at the slaughtering]¹⁴ neither effects exemption from the Law of Sacrilege in the case of Most Holy sacrifices,¹⁵ nor inclusion within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege in the case of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness.¹⁶ Abaye was sitting and quoting this ruling, when R. Papa raised an objection to him: If the thank-offering¹⁷ was slaughtered inside [the Temple Court] while the bread thereof remained outside the wall, the bread has not become sacred. If it was slaughtered before the loaves in the oven had formed a crust — even if all the loaves but one had formed a crust — the bread has not become sacred. [But] if it was slaughtered¹⁸ [while purposing an act] beyond the proper time or outside the proper place, the bread has become sacred?¹⁹ Does this not prove that [the performance of the acts of offering of a sacrifice rendered] piggul brings [sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness] within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege? — Thereupon he [Abaye] was silent. When he came before R. Abba the latter replied: It is through the sprinkling²⁰ [that the bread has become sacred].²¹ Said R. Ashi to Raba: But has not ‘Ulla ruled²² that if the handful of [a meal-offering, which was rendered] piggul,²³ was laid upon the altar the disqualification ceased?²⁴ Now, the separation of a handful [of a meal-offering] corresponds to the slaughtering [of an animal-offering].²⁵ He thereupon replied: [‘Ulla's statement is to be understood in the following manner: The taking of the handful with disqualifying intention] is a prohibited act that leads to the offering becoming piggul.²⁶

- (1) Sacrifices must then be offered in accordance with all the prescriptions relating to those originally dedicated to the Sanctuary
 - (2) Zeb. 119b has a different version of the text.
 - (3) By an error which causes no disqualification on a private High Place, e.g., he slaughtered it on the south side, cf. n. 2.
 - (4) Relating to the instances of our Mishnah.
 - (5) Lit., ‘out of the other’.
 - (6) I.e., when originally dedicated to the Temple.
 - (7) Because originally attached to them.
 - (8) Which was to offer them on a private High Place.
 - (9) Prescribed primarily for offerings dedicated to the Temple.
 - (10) And they need not be removed when laid upon the altar.
 - (11) And the sacrifices must be brought down from the altar.
 - (12) Of R. Eleazar.
 - (13) V. Glos.
 - (14) According to pseudo-Rashi the sprinkling, too, was performed with disqualifying intention, while Tosaf. hold that its performance was unqualified. The explanation that follows is according to the first view.
 - (15) Cf. infra 7b.
 - (16) [The principle is that the application of the Law of Sacrilege ceases from the moment the blood is sprinkled on the altar in the case of Most Holy sacrifices and in regard to sacrifices of a lesser degree of holiness it becomes operative only between the moment of the sprinkling of the blood and the burning of the portions — and that only as far as the sacrificial portions are concerned.]
 - (17) Which is a sacrifice of a minor degree of holiness.
 - (18) R. Papa assumed that the other acts of offering, too, were performed with this disqualifying intention,
 - (19) And the Law of Sacrilege applies to it, v. Men. 78b.
 - (20) Which, we should assume, was performed unqualified.
 - (21) While R. Giddal's ruling refers to a case where all the acts were performed with disqualifying intention.
 - (22) Zeb. 43a.
 - (23) Through the handful having been taken with disqualifying intention.
 - (24) Even to the extent that it must be placed upon the altar if it happened to spring off, and consequently the Law of Sacrilege applies to it.
 - (25) Both are respectively the first acts of offering. ‘Ulla's statement proves then that the first act alone can render an offering piggul, contrary to R. Abba's reply. And still it states that the bread is made sacred which shows that sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness are brought within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege by acts of offering performed subsequently to a slaughtering that rendered them piggul contra R. Giddal.

(26) Viz., when the other acts, too, will be performed with disqualifying intention, but the taking of the handful itself does not render completely piggul. nor the act of slaughtering in itself unless followed by other acts, such as sprinkling with the same disqualifying intention, which is the case to which R. Giddal refers.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 4a

But does it not say:¹ since it [[the handful] renders others piggul, how much more so should it itself [become piggul]?² — Here, too, [you must understand it as meaning] a prohibited act that leads to the offering becoming piggul. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: But did not Ilfa say:³ The dispute⁴ is only in regard to two acts of offering,⁵ namely when he [that officiated] said: I am cutting the first organ⁶ [while purposing an act] beyond the proper time, and the second [while purposing an act] outside the proper place;⁷ but in regard to one act,⁸ they all agree that there is here an admixture of unlawful intentions?⁹ — Here, too, [you must understand that] when the sprinkling takes place it will [retrospectively] prove whether [there was unlawful intention] in one act or in two acts of offering. If this be so,¹⁰ why not say with the thankoffering, too, [that its disqualification becomes effective] with the sprinkling?¹¹ — '[The bread has become] sacred' means indeed only in so far as it has to be burnt by reason of its disqualification.¹² May not the following be cited in support [of R. Giddal]:¹³ 'The Law of Sacrilege applies to piggul always'. [Does this not imply] even though the blood has been sprinkled. and will then offer a support [of R. Giddal]? — [No, [that is] where the blood has not been sprinkled.¹⁴ But if the blood has not been sprinkled need it be stated? — It deals, in fact, with a case where the blood has been sprinkled, but when this has been taught, it was in reference to a burnt-offering.¹⁵ If it refers to a burnt-offering, is it not obvious, since this offering is wholly dedicated to the Lord?

(1) In 'Ulla's argument. MS.M.: 'Did not 'Ulla state'.

(2) V. Zeb. 43G where this is explained thus: If the disqualification rendered by the taking of the handful with the unlawful intention is not irrevocable in that if it is subsequently laid upon the altar it need not be brought down, now should it render the rest of the handful liable to the Law of Sacrilege. This proves that on the view of 'Ulla unlawful intention at the taking of the handful only renders the piggul complete and irrevocable.

(3) Zeb. 29b.

(4) Of R. Judah and the Sages, v. ibid.

(5) More exactly, two separable parts of an act.

(6) The windpipe and the gullet are the two organs the cutting of which effects the ritual slaughtering.

(7) The former intention renders the sacrifice piggul, the eating of which involves the penalty of kareth, the second renders it only invalid.

(8) Viz., one organ. e.g., if the first half of the organ is cut with the thought of executing an act beyond the proper time and the second with the thought of executing an act outside the proper place.

(9) And he that eats of the flesh is not liable to the penalty of kareih. This statement at any rate indicates that the disqualification is assumed to be effective and complete with the mere act of unlawful slaughtering, and yet in the case of the thank-offering we learnt that the bread has become sacred, which refutes R. Giddal.

(10) I.e., that the disqualification of the offering becomes effective with the sprinkling.

(11) Why then should, according to R. Giddal's view, the bread become sacred and thus come under the Law of Sacrilege.

(12) But not in regard to the Law of Sacrilege.

(13) Viz., of the first part of his statement with reference to the Most Holy sacrifices.

(14) With disqualifying thought.

(15) In which-unlike sin- and guiltofferings-the priests have no share, there then being no flesh rendered permissible by the sprinkling of the blood.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 4b

And moreover it says in the concluding clause: 'If the blood remained overnight, although it was still sprinkled, the Law of Sacrilege still applies [to the offering].¹ This would be right if it related [for instance] to a sin-offering, but if it referred to a burnt-offering, need it at all be stated?² — The concluding clause obviously supports [R. Giddal's view], but what about the opening clause? As the concluding clause offers a support so will also the opening one?³ But even the concluding clause need not necessarily support [R. Giddal's view].⁴ — And what would be the difference? — [The disqualification of] leaving the blood overnight is caused by action⁵ and [the transgressor is therefore penalized in that] the sprinkling has not the effect of exempting the offering from the Law of Sacrilege, but the thought [of piggul] is not an action and the sprinkling has the effect of exempting the offering from the Law of Sacrilege. But may we not say that the following supports [R. Giddal]? [It was taught]: 'The Law of Sacrilege applies to Most Holy sacrifices that were rendered piggul'. Now, does this not imply even though the blood was sprinkled,⁶ and will then offer a support [of R. Giddal]? — No, [it speaks of a case] where the blood was not sprinkled. But what would be the case if [the blood was] sprinkled? Would the Law of Sacrilege indeed not apply to it? Why then state in the concluding clause: 'The Law of Sacrilege does not apply to sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness [which were rendered piggul]'? Could the distinction not be made in the opening clause itself [in the following manner]: The Law of Sacrilege applies [to the offering] before the blood has been sprinkled, but is not applicable after it has been sprinkled? — [The concluding clause] undoubtedly supports [R. Giddal's view].⁷ Shall we say: Since the concluding clause supports [R. Giddal], so will also the opening one?⁸ — [No, the latter refers indeed to a case where the blood has not been sprinkled, and the reason why the distinction is not made within the opening clause itself is]: The statement [in the concluding clause] on sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness is absolute, the [distinction] in the opening clause would be, in form, conditional.⁹ R. JOSHUA LAID DOWN THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER HAS AT SOME TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS DOES NOT COME UNDER THE LAW OF SACRILEGE, AND WHATEVER HAS AT NO TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS DOES COME UNDER THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. WHICH IS THAT WHICH HAS AT SOME TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS? THAT WHICH REMAINED OVERNIGHT OR BECAME DEFILED OR WAS TAKEN OUT [OF THE TEMPLE COURT]. WHICH IS THAT WHICH HAS AT NO TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS? THAT WHICH WAS SLAUGHTERED [WHILE PURPOSING AN ACT] BEYOND ITS PROPER TIME OR OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE, OR THE BLOOD OF WHICH WAS RECEIVED BY THE UNFIT AND THEY SPRINKLED IT. Said Bar Kappara to Bar Pada:¹⁰ O, thou son of my sister, keep in mind what to ask me to-morrow at the School House:¹¹ Does PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS mean 'permitted through slaughtering'¹²

(1) And it is assumed that the same applies in the case of piggul.

(2) It is now assumed that this ruling applies to other disqualifications as well.

- (3) I.e., does the opening clause necessarily refer to sin-offerings because the concluding one does?
- (4) As it might apply only to the case where the blood was left overnight but not to other piggul. MS.M.: 'And does the concluding clause indeed offer a support? — He said: What is the difference? — He replied: The disqualification of leaving the bread . . . '.
- (5) Or rather by omission of action,
- (6) With disqualifying thought.
- (7) The concluding clause undoubtedly applies also to the case where the blood has been sprinkled, as a disqualified offering can never assume a sacred character. It therefore supports directly the second part of R. Giddal's statement with reference to sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness.
- (8) In that we assume that the blood has been sprinkled.
- (9) Lit., 'not cut'.
- (10) Cur. edd. Pedath, but cf. Tosaf. Tem. 10d s.v. rn, ht.
- (11) To provoke a discussion on this matter. Thus Tosaf. According to pseudorashi the query which follows was put forward by Bar-Pada.
- (12) I.e., once it was properly slaughtered it is regarded as having become permissible to the priests and hence the Law of Sacrilege no longer applies to the flesh.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 5a

or 'permitted for sprinkling',¹ or 'permitted for consumption'?² Hezekiah said: It means 'permitted at the time of slaughtering'. R. Johanan said: It means 'permitted for consumption'. Said R. Zera: Our Mishnah cannot be made to correspond either with the view of Hezekiah or that of R. Johanan. For we have learnt: THAT WHICH REMAINED OVERNIGHT OR BECAME DEFILED OR WAS TAKEN OUT [OF THE TEMPLE COURT]. Now, does this not mean that the blood remained overnight,³ and yet it states that the Law of Sacrilege does not apply, [a statement which] proves that 'permitted for sprinkling' is meant? — No, it means that the flesh remained overnight, but the blood had been sprinkled, and for this reason it states that the Law of Sacrilege does not apply. We have learnt: WHICH IS THAT WHICH HAS AT NO TIME BEEN PERMITTED TO THE PRIESTS? THAT WHICH WAS SLAUGHTERED WHILE PURPOSING AN ACT BEYOND ITS PROPER TIME OR OUTSIDE ITS PROPER PLACE, OR THE BLOOD OF WHICH WAS RECEIVED BY THE UNFIT AND THEY SPRINKLED IT. How is [the last instance] to be understood? Shall I say that the blood was received by unfit [priests] and sprinkled by unfit [priests]? Why is it necessary to have this twofold [disqualification]?⁴ You must then understand it that the blood was received by the unfit and sprinkled by the fit,⁵ and it states that [in this case] the Law of Sacrilege applies.⁶ This would prove that 'permitted for sprinkling' is meant. To this R. Joseph demurred: Should you say that a distinction of this character can be made. how [would you explain] that which we have learnt elsewhere:⁷ 'The blood of a disqualified sin-offering need not be washed off⁸ [if splashed upon a cloth], no matter whether the offering had at one time been fit for use and then became disqualified. or had at no time [been fit for use]. Which is that which had at one time been fit for use, but became disqualified? That⁹ which remained overnight or became defiled or was brought outside the Temple Court. Which is that which had at no time been fit for use? That which was slaughtered [while purposing an act] beyond the proper time or outside the proper place, or the blood of which was received by the unfit and they sprinkled it'. Now, how is this to be understood? Shall I say that [the blood] was received by the unfit, and was sprinkled by the unfit

[and thus infer that only in this case] need the blood not be washed off; if, however, it was received and sprinkled by the fit, the blood has to be washed off? [But this could not be!] Apply here the verse: And when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof . . . ,¹⁰ but not of that which has already been sprinkled. You must then say [that the text of the Mishnah there] is not meant to be taken precisely [so as to exclude other instances]

- (1) I.e., the receiving of the blood must have been in order.
 - (2) I.e., also the sprinkling must have been in order.
 - (3) After the receiving was properly performed.
 - (4) The mere fact that the blood had been received by the unfit prevented the flesh from becoming permissible to the priests.
 - (5) The receiving was undoubtedly by unfit according to the text.
 - (6) But not if the receiving was by fit and the sprinkling by unfit, in which case the flesh would have been rendered at a time permissible to the priests.
 - (7) Zeb. 92.
 - (8) V. Lev. VI, 20.
 - (9) I.e., the blood.
 - (10) Lev. VI, 20. The verb is used in the future tense indicating that the blood has yet to be sprinkled.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 5b

, and likewise here, [that the text is] not to be taken precisely [so as to exclude other instances].¹ Said R. Assi: If so, why has this [loose phrasing] been used twice?² You must therefore indeed say that used in connection with the Law of Sacrilege is to be taken precisely [as excluding other instances],³ [yet your objection that to state this twofold disqualification was unnecessary does not hold good as] it is to let us know that an unfit person [through his sprinkling] renders [the blood]⁴ a residue,⁵ so that although after the unfit received and sprinkled [the blood] a fit priest received and sprinkled it again, the action of the latter is of no avail. Why? Because the blood⁶ is considered a residue. But did not Resh Lakish put this forward as a query to R. Johanan:⁷ 'Does [the act of] an unfit person render the blood a residue'? Whereupon the latter replied: 'Nothing makes [the blood] a residue save [the sprinkling while purposing an act] beyond its proper time or outside its proper place, because such a sprinkling [is in so far of effect as to] render [the sacrifice] 'acceptable' in respect of piggul.⁸ Now, does this not exclude [the sprinkling by] an unfit person? — No, also the [sprinkling] by the unfit [is included]. But does it not say: 'Nothing . . . save'? — This is to be understood in the following manner: There is no [disqualification] such as to render [an offering] nonacceptable in the case of a congregation [sacrifice]⁹ and yet to make the blood a residue save that caused by [the thought of executing an act] beyond the proper time or outside the proper place; but a defiled [priest],¹⁰ since he is considered fit in the case of the congregation,¹¹ makes the blood a residue, whilst other unfit [priests]¹² who are not considered fit in the case of the congregation, do not make the blood a residue. Come and hear: 'The Law of Sacrilege applies to piggul¹³ always',¹⁴ Does this not refer to a case where the blood has not been sprinkled, and would then prove¹⁵ that 'permitted for sprinkling' is meant? — No, it [refers to a case where the blood] has been sprinkled. And what is the meaning of 'always'? — It is to confirm the statement of R. Giddal.¹⁶ For R. Giddal said in the name of Rab: 'The sprinkling of [the blood of a sacrifice rendered] piggul [with slaughtering] effects neither exemption from nor inclusion in the Law of Sacrilege'.¹⁷

- (1) E.g., where it was received by the fit and sprinkled by the unfit, for even in such a case the Law of Sacrilege applies since the slaughtering has been properly performed. The inference that 'permitted for sprinkling' is meant would then be invalid.
 - (2) Both here and in Zeb. 92a.
 - (3) Viz., that it refers to a case where both receiving and sprinkling were performed by the unfit, though the phrasing in Zeb. is not to be taken precisely, as proved by the verse Lev. VI. 20; v. n. 1.
 - (4) Also that life-blood which remained in the body of the beast.
 - (5) Which must not be used again and poured out into the duct, v. Zeb. 34b. Had the sprinkling not been performed by the unfit, receiving as well as sprinkling could have been executed again by a fit person from the life-blood that remained in the body of the beast. Cf. Zeb. 32a.
 - (6) Left over after the receiving and sprinkling performed by the unfit.
 - (7) Zeb. 34b.
 - (8) So that he who eats thereof is liable to the penalty of kareth. Cf. Zeb. 28b.
 - (9) E.g., piggul, nothar and 'taking out of the Temple Court'.
 - (10) The unfit to whom R. Assi in his explanation of our Mishnah is meant to refer.
 - (11) If the majority of the congregation are unclean, v. Pes. 66b. 77a.
 - (12) E.g., those with a blemish.
 - (13) Viz., of Most Holy sacrifices.
 - (14) No matter whether the disqualification was accomplished with the slaughtering or the receiving.
 - (15) By the conclusion that if, however, both slaughtering and receiving were in order the Law of Sacrilege would no longer apply.
 - (16) V. supra 3b.
 - (17) 'Always' means thus 'for ever'.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 6a

Come and hear: R. Simeon said:¹ 'There is a kind of nothar² that is subject to the Law of Sacrilege and there is a kind of nothar that is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege. How is this? If [the blood was] left overnight before sprinkling it is subject to the Law of Sacrilege, if after the sprinkling it is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege'. Now it states, at all events: 'Is subject to the Law of Sacrilege'. Does this not refer to a case where there was still time [during the day] to sprinkle³ it, so that if he wished, he could have performed the sprinkling?⁴ This would then prove that 'permitted for consumption' is meant? — No, it refers to a case where the blood was received near sunset, so that there was no time for sprinkling. But what would be the case if there was time [during the day to sprinkle it]? Would the Law of Sacrilege indeed not apply? Why then was it necessary to instance 'before the sprinkling'?⁵ Let [the distinction] be made between 'before sunset' and 'after sunset'⁶ — This indeed is the way in which [the distinction] is to be understood, viz., 'Before it was ready⁷ for sprinkling' and 'after it was ready for sprinkling'. Come and hear: R. Simeon said, 'There is piggul that is subject to the Law of Sacrilege. and there is piggul that is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege. How is this? If [enjoyed] before the sprinkling it is subject to the Law of Sacrilege, if after it is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege'. It states, at all events: 'If before the sprinkling it is subject to the Law of Sacrilege'. Now does this not refer to a case where there was still time [during the day] to sprinkle it, so that if he wished he could have performed the sprinkling, yet it states that it comes under the Law of Sacrilege, which would prove that 'permitted for consumption' is meant? — No, there was no time during the day to sprinkle it. But what would be the case if there was time during the day to sprinkle it? Would it indeed cease to be subject to the Law of Sacrilege? Why then was it necessary to instance 'after sprinkling'? Let [the distinction] be made between 'before sunset' and 'after sunset'?⁸ — This indeed is the way in which [the distinction] is to be understood, viz., 'Before it was ready⁹ for sprinkling' and 'after it was ready for sprinkling'. Come and hear: 'The Law of Sacrilege applies to Most Holy sacrifices that were rendered piggul'. Now, does this not refer to a case where the blood has been sprinkled. and would then prove that 'permitted for consumption' is meant?¹⁰ — No, it was not sprinkled. But what would be the case if sprinkled? Would the Law of Sacrilege indeed not apply to it? Why then was it necessary to state:¹¹ 'But if the sacrifices were of a minor degree of holiness they are exempted from the Law of Sacrilege'? Let [the distinction] be made between 'before sprinkling' and 'after sprinkling'? — [The distinction made is to be preferred] to let know the rule: Whatsoever has to be brought within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege¹² can achieve this status only if the sprinkling was according to proper procedure, but whatsoever has to cease to be subject to the Law of Sacrilege¹³ can achieve this also by a sprinkling that was not in accordance with the proper procedure.

(1) Tosef. I, 1.

(2) Portions left over from sacrifices. Lev. VII, 17.

(3) I.e., it was received in the vessel on the same day but not sprinkled till the following.

(4) It was thus 'fit for sprinkling' and is yet subject to the Law of Sacrilege.

(5) I.e., to distinguish between 'before sprinkling' and 'after sprinkling'.

(6) I.e., 'there being time before sunset' and 'there being no time before sunset'.

(7) During the day.

(8) I.e., 'there being time before sunset' and 'there being no time before sunset'.

(9) During the day.

(10) By the inference that if, however, it was not piggul the law of Sacrilege would not apply to it.

(11) In the concluding clause.

(12) E.g., the sacrificial portions, emurim, of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness, v. supra p. 8. n. 6.

(13) Such as the flesh of Most Holy sacrifices. R. Giddal's statement is thus refuted, v. ibid.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 6b

MISHNAH. IF THE FLESH OF THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES WAS TAKEN OUT [OF THE TEMPLE COURT] BEFORE THE BLOOD WAS SPRINKLED,¹ R. ELIEZER SAYS: IT IS STILL SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE² AND ONE DOES NOT BECOME GUILTY IN REGARD TO IT OF [TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR,³ PIGGUL⁴ AND DEFILEMENT.⁵ R. AKIBA SAYS: IT IS EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AND ONE CAN BECOME GUILTY OF [TRANSGRESSING IN REGARD TO IT THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR, PIGGUL AND DEFILEMENT. SAID R. AKIBA: IF ONE SET ASIDE HIS SIN-OFFERING AND IT WAS LOST AND HE SET ASIDE ANOTHER IN ITS STEAD AND AFTERWARDS THE FIRST WAS FOUND SO THAT BOTH WERE DESIGNATED [FOR SLAUGHTERING].⁶ [DO YOU NOT AGREE] THAT LIKE AS [THE SPRINKLING OF] THE BLOOD [OF THE ONE BEAST] EXEMPTS ITS OWN FLESH

[FROM THE LAW OF SACRILEGE] SO IT EXEMPTS THE FLESH OF THE OTHER BEAST? NOW, IF THE SPRINKLING OF ITS BLOOD CAN EXEMPT THE FLESH OF OTHER BEASTS⁷ FROM THE LAW OF SACRILEGE, HOW MUCH MORE MUST IT EXEMPT ITS OWN FLESH. IF THE EMURIM⁸ OF SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS WERE TAKEN OUT [OF THE TEMPLE COURT] BEFORE THE BLOOD WAS SPRINKLED, R. ELIEZER SAYS: THEY ARE EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AND ONE DOES NOT BECOME GUILTY IN REGARD TO THEM OF [TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR, PIGGUL AND DEFILEMENT. R. AKIBA SAYS: THEY ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AND ONE DOES BECOME GUILTY [OF TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR, PIGGUL AND DEFILEMENT.⁹ GEMARA. Why was it necessary to state both these instances? — It was necessary. for if [the instance of] the Most Holy sacrifices alone was stated, I might have said: In this case ruled R. Eliezer that it is still subject to the Law of Sacrilege, because [he held that] sprinkling executed according to the proper procedure effects exemption from the Law of Sacrilege, but [a sprinkling] not according to the proper procedure does not effect exemption. But as to effecting the inclusion within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege,¹⁰ he might concede to R. Akiba that also [sprinkling that was] not performed in accordance with the proper procedure effects the inclusion within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege. And if the instance of a sacrifice of a minor degree of holiness alone was stated, I might have said: In regard to sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness only did R. Akiba rule that the Law of Sacrilege applies. because [he held that] even sprinkling that was not performed in accordance with the proper procedure [has the power of] including [the flesh] within the scope of the Law of Sacrilege; but in regard to Most Holy sacrifices in which case [the sprinkling] is to effect the exemption from the Law of Sacrilege. [I might say that] if not performed in accordance with the proper procedure it does not possess the power of exempting from the Law of Sacrilege. Therefore he informs us [regarding both instances]. It was stated, R. Johanan said: R. Akiba held his view that the sprinkling is of effect in the case of an offering that was taken out, only if it was partly taken out [of the Temple Court],¹¹ but if it was wholly taken out [R. Akiba did] not [hold this view]. Said R. Assi to R. Johanan:¹² My friends in the Diaspora [Babylon] have already taught me:

- (1) And brought in again, and then the blood was sprinkled.
 - (2) The sprinkling does not effect an exemption from the Law of Sacrilege since the offering is invalid.
 - (3) Lit., 'left over'. Lev. VII, 17.
 - (4) V. Glos. Lev. VII, 18; Zeb. II, 3 and 28a.
 - (5) Lev. VII, 21. For only a valid sprinkling can bring the sacrifices within the scope of these laws.
 - (6) And he slaughtered both and after receiving the blood of each in two separate vessels he sprinkled the blood of only one of them.
 - (7) Though it be invalid, as the remnant of a sin-offering.
 - (8) I.e., the portions that are to be offered upon the altar.
 - (9) The sprinkling does not effect the application of the Law of Sacrilege, since the offering is invalid.
 - (10) Which is in the direction of greater stringency.
 - (11) Because the sprinkling is then of effect for the portions that remained inside.
 - (12) Tosaf. do not read 'to R. Johanan'. The following discussion is then independent of R. Johanan's statement.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 7a

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 7a

'The disqualifying thought¹ in respect of lost or burnt [portions of an offering] is of effect'.² Now, the lost and the burnt no longer exist, yet it was taught that a disqualifying thought [relating to them] is effective.³ But does R. Assi indeed hold this view? Did not R. Assi ask R. Johanan: 'What is the case if one purposed [to sprinkle on the] following day blood which has to be poured'?⁴ Whereupon R. Zera replied: 'Did you not teach us⁵ [the Mishnah] about allal?'⁶ Now, this allal, because it has no substantial value, an unlawful thought relating to it is of no effect.⁷ The same applies to the blood that is to be poured; because it is destined for destruction an unlawful thought relating to it must be of no effect'. At all events, that which was stated concerning the lost and the burnt⁸ offers a difficulty!⁹ — Said Raba: Say, ['The disqualifying thought in respect of portions] that were about to be lost or burnt . . .'.¹⁰ Said R. Papa: R. Akiba held that sprinkling is effective in respect of [offerings that] were taken out only if the flesh was taken out, but if the blood was taken out¹¹ the sprinkling is of no effect. It was also taught likewise: 'If the slaughtering was performed undefined, and the blood was taken out, although it was afterwards sprinkled [the sprinkling] is of no effect: Most Holy sacrifices remain subject to the Law of Sacrilege, and sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness remain exempted from the Law of Sacrilege'. SAID R. AKIBA: TO WHAT CAN THIS BE COMPARED . . .'.¹² Said R. Eleazar: R. Akiba held his view¹³ only if [both sin-offerings were slaughtered] simultaneously.¹⁴ but if successively R. Akiba did not hold his view.¹⁵ It has been taught:¹⁶ Said R. Simeon, When I went to Kefar Pagi¹⁷ an old man¹⁸ met me and asked me: Does R. Akiba indeed hold that sprinkling is of effect in the case of an offering that was taken out? I said to him: Yes, he does. When I came and quoted these words before my colleagues in Galilee they said unto me: But is it not disqualified? How can [the sprinkling] be of effect¹⁹ with a disqualified offering? When I left and brought up these words before R. Akiba himself, he said unto me: My son, do you not hold the same view? Behold, if one set aside his sin-offering and it was lost and he set aside another in its stead and afterwards the first was found, so that both were designated [to be slaughtered], both are still subject to the Law of Sacrilege; if they were slaughtered and their [respective] blood was placed in two [separate] receptacles, the Law of Sacrilege still applies to both.

(1) During sprinkling. Lit., 'one can think (with effect)'.

(2) To render the flesh piggul.

(3) In the same way should, in the case where the whole offering was taken out, the sprinkling be of effect in regard to the Law of Sacrilege.

(4) Over the base of the altar, cf. Zeb. 47a.

(5) Zeb. 35a.

(6) 'Offal of meat' which is uneatable. Cf. Hul. 121a as to what kind of offal is meant.

(7) Thus the version of Tosaf. and MS.M. Cur. edd.: 'is not susceptible of defilement'. The quotation concerning allal would then be from Hul. 121a, thus also pseudo-Rashi.

(8) I.e., the statement reported by R. Assi in the name of his colleagues in the Diaspora.

(9) Viz., to R. Assi's teaching concerning allal.

(10) I.e., they had still been in existence at the time of the sprinkling. But if already lost or burnt an unlawful thought would indeed be of no effect.

(11) Though brought in again and then sprinkled.

(12) Cur. edd. and MS.M. do not contain this phrase in the Mishnah.

(13) That the sprinkling of the blood of the one exempts the flesh of the other beast from the Law of Sacrilege.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 7b

If the blood of one of them was sprinkled, do you not agree that like as the [sprinkling of the] blood exempts its flesh from the Law of Sacrilege so it exempts also the flesh of the other beast from the Law of Sacrilege? Now, if it can save the flesh of another offering from the Law of Sacrilege, though it is disqualified, how much more must it save its own flesh. Said Resh Lakish in the name of R. Oshaia: Inexact¹ was the reply that R. Akiba gave to that disciple, [as it² suggests that his instance holds good] only if they were slaughtered simultaneously but not if successively. Now, since [the other offering³ is, at all events] disqualified,⁴ what is the difference between 'simultaneously' and 'successively'? Said R. Johanan to Resh Lakish: And you, do you not make this distinction? Suppose one set apart two guilt-offerings for surety⁵ [one against the other], and he had them both slaughtered and had the emurim⁶ of one of them placed upon the altar before sprinkling.⁷ Would you not agree that although [those emurim were] already placed upon the altar they have to be brought down? Now, if your assumption was right that they are considered in such a case as one offering, why have they to be brought down? Did not 'Ulla rule: 'If the emurim of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness⁸ were laid upon the altar before the sprinkling they must not be brought down, as they have become the food of the altar!?' Thereupon he gave no reply. Said R. Johanan: I have cut off the legs of that child.⁹ MISHNAH. THE ACT OF [SPRINKLING THE] BLOOD OF MOST HOLY SACRIFICES MAY HAVE EITHER A LENIENT OR A STRINGENT EFFECT, BUT WITH SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS IT HAS ONLY A STRINGENT EFFECT. HOW SO? WITH MOST HOLY SACRIFICES, BEFORE THE SPRINKLING THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES BOTH TO THE EMURIM AND TO THE FLESH; AFTER THE SPRINKLING IT APPLIES TO THE EMURIM BUT NOT TO THE FLESH;¹⁰ IN RESPECT OF BOTH ONE IS GUILTY¹¹ OF [TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR. PIGGUL AND DEFILEMENT.¹² IT IS THUS FOUND THAT WITH MOST HOLY SACRIFICES THE ACT OF SPRINKLING HAS A LENIENT AS WELL AS A STRINGENT EFFECT. WITH SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS IT HAS ONLY A STRINGENT EFFECT', HOW SO? WITH SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS, BEFORE THE SPRINKLING THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES NEITHER TO THE EMURIM NOR TO THE FLESH; AFTER THE SPRINKLING IT APPLIES TO THE EMURIM BUT NOT TO THE FLESH; IN RESPECT OF BOTH ONE IS GUILTY OF TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF NOTHAR, PIGGUL AND DEFILEMENT. IT IS THUS FOUND THAT WITH SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS IT HAS ONLY A STRINGENT EFFECT. GEMARA. It teaches:¹³ 'THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES . . . NOT TO THE FLESH' which implies that the penalty of Sacrilege is not inflicted, but the prohibition still remains.¹⁴ But why? Is it not the possession of the priest?¹⁵ — This is no difficulty, since in the opening clause he had to use [the phrase] 'THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES' he uses also in the concluding clause¹⁶ [the phrase] ‘THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES NOT’.¹⁷ But read then the second section of the Mishnah: ‘WITH SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS IT HAS ONLY A STRINGENT EFFECT’, HOW SO? WITH FLESH OF SACRIFICES OF A MINOR DEGREE OF HOLINESS, BEFORE THE SPRINKLING THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES NEITHER TO THE EMURIM NOR TO THE FLESH; AFTER THE SPRINKLING IT APPLIES TO THE EMURIM BUT NOT TO THE FLESH. This implies: The penalty of sacrilege is not inflicted but the prohibition still remains.¹⁸ Why? Is it not the possession of the owner?¹⁹ — Said R. Hanina: [It refers] to an offering that was taken out [of the Temple Court] and the Mishnah stands in accordance with R. Akiba’s view.²⁰ For R. Akiba held that ‘sprinkling is of effect in the case of an offering that was taken out [of the Temple Court]’ only in regard to its burning,²¹ but

MISHNAH. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE SIN-OFFERING OF A BIRD FROM THE MOMENT OF ITS DEDICATION. WITH THE PINCHING OF ITS NECK¹ IT BECOMES SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM² OR ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT³, OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. ONCE ITS BLOOD HAS BEEN SPRINKLED IT IS SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR⁴ AND DEFILEMENT, BUT THE LAW OF SACRILEGE NO LONGER APPLIES TO IT.⁵ GEMARA. It is stated: IT BECOMES SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. [That is, it becomes] 'susceptible for unfitness' but not for defilement.⁶ With whom then will our Mishnah agree? — With the Sages, for it has been taught:⁷ 'Abba Saul says. A tebul yom [

(1) This is the prescribed form of slaughter, v. Lev. I, 25.

(2) The immersion of an unclean person does not effect _immediate purification. In order to be able to partake of a sacred meal he has to wait until sunset. A tebul yom, lit., 'a person immersed by day'. is one who took his immersion in day-time and is waiting for sunset.

(3) In four instances of uncleanness an offering is required in addition to immersion, v. Ker. 8b. As long as this 'ceremony of atonement is not performed one is not permitted to partake of a sacred meal.

(4) V. supra p. 17, n. 9.

(5) For it has become the possession of the priests.

(6) The term 'unfit' kuxp through contact with an unclean person or thing denotes that the uncleanness contracted is not of such a degree as to be transmitted to another object. 'Defiled' or 'unclean' tny, on the other hand, denotes the capacity of transmitting further the uncleanness contracted.

(7) Tosef. Toh. I, 3. There is a scale of degrees of uncleanness: the 'source of sources'; the 'source' of uncleanness; the first, second, third and fourth degree of uncleanness. The degree of uncleanness of the defiled object is (in general) one degree lower than that of the object from which it derived its defilement. The susceptibility to uncleanness is not uniform. The holier a thing the more susceptible it is to uncleanness. Holy things ohase, e.g. are susceptible to 'uncleanness' in the third degree and to 'unfitness' in the fourth, and terumah to 'uncleanness' in the second degree and to 'unfitness' in the third.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 8b

is unclean of the first degree in regard to holy things.¹ R. Meir says: He renders holy things "unclean" and terumah² "unfit".³ The Sages say, Just as he renders "unfit" liquids and edibles of terumah, so he renders "unfit"⁴ sacred liquids and edibles'! — Said Raba, on the view of Abba Saul, A higher standard has been set with holy things in that the Rabbis declared the tebul yom to be [in regard to them unclean in] the first degree. And on the view of R. Meir, [he possesses by Rabbinic enactment the same measure of uncleanness] as food which is unclean in the second degree;⁵ while on the view of the Sages, since he has immersed, his uncleanness has weakened, and he renders things 'unfit' but not 'unclean'.⁶ ONCE ITS BLOOD HAS BEEN SPRINKLED . . . THE LAW OF SACRILEGE NO LONGER APPLIES TO IT. This implies that the Law of Sacrilege no longer applies though the prohibition still remains.⁷ But why? Is it not now the possession of the priests? — Said R. Hanina, [The Mishnah refers to an offering] which was taken out [of the Temple Court] so that [the flesh] is indeed not fit for consumption⁸ and is in accordance With the view of R. Akiba⁹ Who holds that the sprinkling of the blood is of avail¹⁰ with an offering that was taken out [of the Temple precincts]. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: The draining out of the blood¹¹ of the sin-offering of a bird is not indispensable,¹² for Rab learnt [in our Mishnah]: ‘When its blood has been sprinkled’.¹³ R. Adda son of Ahabah in the name of Rab said: The draining out of the blood of the sin-offering of a bird is indispensable, and Rab, in fact, learnt [in our Mishnah]: ‘When its blood has been drained out’. Come and hear: It is said, and the rest of the blood shall be drained at the base of the altar; it is a sin-offering.¹⁴ Now on the view of R. Adda son of Ahabah it is right when it is written, ‘and the rest of the blood shall be drained . . . it is a sin-offering’,¹⁵ but according to R. Huna, what is the meaning of ‘the ‘est etc.’? — As it has been taught in the School of R. Ishmael: ‘If there remained . . .’.¹⁶ But then what of the phrase, ‘it is a sin-offering’?¹⁷ — It refers to the preceding text.¹⁸ Said R. Aha son of Raba to R. Ashi: If so, with the meal-offering where it is written ‘and the remainder’¹⁹ does it also mean ‘if there remained’? And should you say: Indeed, so it is, surely it has been taught:

- (1) This means, the sacred thing touched by a tebul yom is ‘unclean’ of the second degree. It can thus transmit the uncleanness two stages further. It ‘defiles’ other holy things and ‘renders unfit’ terumah.
 - (2) I.e., the priests’ share of the produce of the land, v. Num. XVIII, 11f, v. Glos.
 - (3) As the tebul yom is considered unclean of the second degree.
 - (4) But not ‘unclean’ so as to defile other things, as in our Mishnah.
 - (5) Which renders a holy thing unclean in the third degree.
 - (6) According to Raba's explanation our Mishnah may well agree with the views of Abba Saul and R. Meir, for their rulings result from the enactment of the Rabbis, whilst the ‘Mishnah refers to the original law of the Torah.
 - (7) Its use is still forbidden although the attached penalty does not apply. It is thus considered the property of the Temple. This inference is made from the fact that the term ‘permitted’ would otherwise have been used in our Mishnah.
 - (8) But has to be burnt.
 - (9) V. supra 7b.
 - (10) To exempt it from the Law of Sacrilege.
 - (11) A ceremony performed after the sprinkling of the blood, v. Lev. V, 9.
 - (12) If omitted or if there is not sufficient blood in the organs of the animal for this act, the sprinkling remains valid in regard to the laws of Sacrilege, piggul, etc. as ruled in our Mishnah.
 - (13) No mention has been made of the draining out an indication that it is not indispensable.
 - (14) Ibid.
 - (15) Suggesting there has to be a rest and that the rest which is to be drained is a sin-offering, hence indispensable.
 - (16) Then it has to be drained out. But if there is no rest the service is still valid without it.
 - (17) Which might suggest that it is the draining out which makes it a valid sin-offering.
 - (18) Viz., the sprinkling of the blood, without which the offering is indeed invalid.
 - (19) Lev. II, 3.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 9a

[The verse], and he shall take thereout his handful of the fine flour thereof, and of the oil thereof with all the frankincense thereof,¹ is to exclude the case where there was not the full quantity of fine flour, oil and frankincense?² — I will tell you. There it is written [again] ‘and the remainder’ which is superfluous.³ The father of Samuel raised an objection to R. Huna: Both in the case of the sin-offering of a bird and in that of the burnt offering of a bird if the neck was pinched or the blood drained out while purposing an act outside the proper place, the offering is invalid but one is not liable to the penalty of extinction; if while purposing an act beyond its proper time, it is piggul, and one is liable to extinction.⁴ It states at all events, 'the blood drained out'.⁵ — He raised this objection and he himself answered it: It is to be understood in a disjunctive sense.⁶ [To revert to] the [above] text: The School of R. Ishmael taught: 'If there remained of the blood'.⁷ But has not the School of R. Ishmael taught elsewhere:⁸ 'The remnant is indispensable'. and R. Papa explained that they⁹ differed as to whether the draining out of the blood of a sin-offering of a bird was indispensable? — There are two [contradictory traditions of] Tannaim as to what was the view of R. Ishmael. MISHNAH. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE BURNT-OFFERING OF A BIRD FROM THE MOMENT OF ITS DEDICATION. WITH THE PINCHING OF ITS NECK IT BECOMES SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM, OR ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. ONCE ITS BLOOD HAS BEEN DRAINED OUT,¹⁰ IT IS SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT, AND THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO IT UNTIL [THE ASHES HAVE BEEN] REMOVED [FROM THE ALTAR] TO THE PLACE OF THE ASHES.¹¹ THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE BULLOCKS WHICH ARE TO BE BURNT AND THE HEGOATS WHICH ARE TO BE BURNT¹² FROM THE MOMENT OF THEIR DEDICATION. ONCE SLAUGHTERED THEY BECOME SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. ONCE THEIR BLOOD HAS BEEN SPRINKLED THEY ARE SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT, AND THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THEM EVEN WHILE THEY ARE AT THE PLACE OF THE ASHES SO LONG AS THE FLESH HAS NOT BEEN CHARRED TO CINDERS. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO A BURNT-OFFERING FROM THE MOMENT OF ITS DEDICATION. ONCE SLAUGHTERED IT BECOMES SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. ONCE ITS BLOOD HAS BEEN SPRINKLED IT IS SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO THE SKIN,¹³ BUT IT APPLIES TO THE FLESH UNTIL [THE ASHES] HAVE BEEN REMOVED TO THE PLACE OF THE ASHES. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO BURNT- AND SIN-OFFERINGS AND TO PEACE-OFFERINGS OF THE CONGREGATION FROM THE MOMENT OF THEIR DEDICATION. ONCE SLAUGHTERED THEY BECOME SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT, OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. ONCE THEIR BLOOD HAS BEEN SPRINKLED THEY ARE SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE THEN NO LONGER APPLIES TO THE FLESH,¹³ BUT APPLIES TO THE EMURIM UNTIL THE ASHES ARE REMOVED TO THE PLACE OF THE ASHES. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE TWO LOAVES OF BREAD¹⁴ FROM THE MOMENT OF THEIR DEDICATION. ONCE THEY HAVE FORMED A CRUST IN THE OVEN THEY ARE SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL

REQUIRES ATONEMENT', AND THE [FESTIVAL] OFFERINGS¹⁵ CAN THEN BE OFFERED. ONCE THE BLOOD OF THE LAMBS HAS BEEN SPRINKLED THEY [THE LOAVES] ARE SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT, AND THE LAW OF SACRILEGE NO LONGER APPLIES TO THEM. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE SHEWBREAD¹⁶ FROM THE MOMENT OF ITS DEDICATION. ONCE IT HAS FORMED A CRUST IT BECOMES SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', AND MAY BE ARRANGED UPON THE TABLE [OF THE SANCTUARY]. ONCE THE CENSERS OF INCENSE¹⁷ WERE OFFERED IT IS SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT, AND THE LAW OF SACRILEGE NO LONGER APPLIES TO IT.¹⁸ THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO MEAL-OFFERINGS FROM THE MOMENT OF THEIR DEDICATION. ONCE THEY HAVE BECOME SACRED BY BEING PUT IN THE VESSEL [OF MINISTRY] THEY BECOME SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT. ONCE THE HANDFUL¹⁹ HAS BEEN OFFERED THEY ARE SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAW OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT, AND THE LAW OF SACRILEGE NO LONGER APPLIES TO THE REMNANT,²⁰ BUT IT APPLIES TO THE HANDFUL UNTIL ITS ASHES HAVE BEEN REMOVED TO THE PLACE OF THE ASHES. GEMARA. It was stated: If one has made use of the ashes of the tappuah²¹ which was on the altar, Rab says he has not transgressed the Law of Sacrilege, and R. Johanan says he has transgressed. Both agree that before the separation of the ashes²² the Law of Sacrilege still applies to them, they differ as to what is the case after the separation of the ashes. Rab says the Law of Sacrilege no longer applies to them, since the prescribed ceremony²³ has already been performed with them; but R. Johanan holds, since it is written: And the priest shall put on his linen garments . . .²⁴ as priestly garments are necessary, it proves that they [the ashes] still maintained their sacredness. We have learnt: THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES²⁵ UNTIL THE ASHES HAVE BEEN REMOVED TO THE PLACE OF THE ASHES. This presents a difficulty on the view of Rab. — Rab would tell you: [The meaning is]: Until it is fit for removal to the place of the Ashes.²⁶

(1) Ibid. II, 2.

(2) I.e., even after the handful, which is only a portion of the prescribed quantity, has been taken, the ingredients of the offering must be whole. In other words, the remainder is indispensable.

(3) The phrase occurs twice II, 3 and 10. The indispensable nature of the offering of the 'remainder' in the case of the meal-offering is thus an exception and based on a special text.

(4) Zeb. 64b.

(5) Were it dispensable, it would not render the offering piggul.

(6) Viz., the pinching of the neck refers both to the sin- and to the burnt-offering, while the draining out refers to the burnt-offering only, in which case the blood is not sprinkled upon the altar and the draining takes the place of the sprinkling and is therefore rightly indispensable.

(7) This interpretation implies that the draining out of the blood is not indispensable.

(8) Ibid. 52a, where R. Akiba and R. Ishmael differ in general terms on the question whether the remnant of an offering is indispensable or not

(9) Viz., R. Akiba and R. Ishmael.

- (10) The draining out of the blood takes here the place of the sprinkling of the blood prescribed of other offerings.
- (11) V. Lev. VI. 4.
- (12) These have to be burnt outside Jerusalem, at the Place of the Ashes. To this category belong the sacrifices brought by the High Priest for communal transgression and for idolatry, and those offered on the Day of Atonement.
- (13) Which becomes the possession of the priests.
- (14) To be offered on the Feast of Weeks. V. Lev. XXIII, 17.
- (15) I.e., the two lambs appertaining to the bread, v. ibid. v. 19.
- (16) Cf. Lev. XXIV, 5f.
- (17) The censers of incense were offered before the bread was distributed among the priests. This act stands therefore in place of the sprinkling of the blood prescribed for animal sacrifices. Cf. Men. XI.
- (18) It can then be eaten by the priests.
- (19) A handful was separated from the meal-offering and burnt upon the altar.
- (20) Which becomes the possession of the priests.
- (21) Lit., 'apple', 'pile'. I.e., the place upon the altar where the ashes were piled up.
- (22) Cf. Lev. VI, 3 and Yoma 22a.
- (23) Viz., the separation of the ashes. These were then deposited outside Jerusalem.
- (24) Ibid. The proof is actually from the following verse: And he shall put off his garments and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the camp unto a clean place. This is taken to prove that the depositing of the ashes is: part of the ceremony. The ashes are still sacred before this is done.
- (25) Apparently even after the separation of the ashes was performed they are subject to the Law of Sacrilege.
- (26) I.e., until the separation of the ashes has been performed.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 9b

The following objection was raised: [We have learnt]: 'And if any of them¹ burst off from the altar, they need not be replaced; similarly, if a coal burst off from the altar it need not be replaced'.² [It appears that if] however [the coal] burst off [from the fire but still remained] on the altar, it has to be replaced [upon the fire].³ This is right according to the view of R. Johanan, but presents a difficulty on the view of Rab. — Rab would reply: It is different with coal, as it is still substance.⁴ Some there are who say the objection was raised in the other direction: [It appears that coal only has to be replaced]⁵ because it is of substance, but ashes that are not of substance, though still upon the altar, are not subject to the law of Sacrilege. This would be right according to Rab, but presents a difficulty on the view of R. Johanan! — R. Johanan would reply: This ruling⁶ applies to ashes as well, and the reason why coal has been instanced is to let us know even in the case of coal, that is of substance, if it burst off from the altar it must not be replaced. It was stated: If one enjoyed of the flesh of Most Holy sacrifices⁷ before the sprinkling of the blood, or of the emurim of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness after the sprinkling of the blood, Rab says: The [value⁸ of that] which he enjoyed must be restored to the nedabah⁹ fund. Levi says: He shall buy something which is wholly for the altar.¹⁰ It was taught in confirmation of Levi's view: To which fund goes this repayment for this sacrilege? Those that were permitted to argue before the Sages¹¹ say: He shall buy something which is wholly for the altar. Which is it? Incense'. It was taught in confirmation of Rab's view: 'If one has enjoyed of the money destined for his sin- or guilt-offering, if¹² his sin-offering has not been offered yet, he shall add [a fifth] and offer [for the whole sum] his sin-offering; similarly if his guilt offering has not been offered, the money is to be taken to the Dead Sea;¹³ similarly if his guilt-offering has already been offered, it shall be restored to the nedabah fund. If one had enjoyed of Most Holy sacrifices before the sprinkling of the blood, or of the emurim of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness after the sprinkling of the blood, [the value of] that which he has enjoyed goes to the nedabah fund.¹⁴ [If one has enjoyed of] any kind of offerings dedicated to the altar, [the money is refunded] for the altar, if of objects dedicated to the Temple Repair Fund [it is employed] for the Temple Repair Fund, if of sacrifices of the congregation, it is employed for freewill-offerings of the congregation'. Now, does this not contain a contradiction in itself? [For it states]: 'If his sin-offering has not been offered yet, he shall add [a fifth] and offer for the whole sum his sin-offering; and if his sin-offering has been offered already, the money is to be taken to the Dead Sea'. And then it states: 'If one has enjoyed any kind of offerings dedicated to the altar, it is employed for the altar', and there is apparently no distinction made as to whether the owner has been atoned or not! — The former clause is in accordance with the view of R. Simeon who holds,¹⁵ 'Every sin-offering whose owner has already been atoned¹⁶ is left to die',

(1) Viz., those disqualified offerings that need not be removed when already laid upon the altar, Zeb. IX, 2.

(2) Zeb. 86a.

(3) As 'coal' here is unqualified it is assumed to include also coals which have already been removed from the fire place of the altar to the tappuah, i.e., coals with which the 'separation' has already been performed; and yet it says that only if it has burst off from the altar it need not be replaced, but if it was shifted to some other place upon the altar it has to be replaced upon the fire, which implies that even after the 'separation' it is still considered sacred; the Law of Sacrilege should then still apply.

(4) While ashes are considered of no substance.

(5) If still upon the altar. This version of the objection is also based upon the implication that if the coal was shifted from its place but remained upon the altar, it has to be replaced. It is thus still considered sacred.

(6) Viz., that the sacredness of things burnt upon the altar continues even after their separation.

(7) The flesh of Most Holy sacrifices is subject to sacrilege only prior to the sprinkling, while the 'sacrificial portions' of sacrifices of a lesser degree of holiness come under the Law of Sacrilege with the sprinkling of the blood, v. Mishnah 7b.

(8) Or rather, the value plus a fifth, v. Lev. V, 16.

(9) Lit., 'freewill'; i.e., freewill burnt-offerings to be offered at a time when the altar was employed (Tosaf.).

(10) I.e., incense as distinct from the freewill burnt-offerings, the skin of which belongs to the priests.

(11) V. Sanh. 17b, that this paraphrases 'Levi before R. Judah the Prince', but Tosaf. rejects here this assumption. V. Men. 80b.

(12) At the moment of repayment. Tosaf.

(13) I.e., destroyed.

(14) This supports the view of Rab.

(15) Tem. 15a.

(16) I.e., he has brought in the meantime another offering for the sin which this sin-offering was to expiate.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 10a

while the latter clause¹ is in accordance with the Sages.² Said R. Gebiha of Be Kathil³ to R. Ashi: [Indeed] thus said Abaye: 'The former clause reflects R. Simeon's view and the latter that of the Sages'.⁴ Said Raba: All⁵ agree that if he enjoyed of the flesh of Most Holy sacrifices which was defiled,⁶ or of the emurim of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness after they had been placed upon the altar,⁷ he is free [from the payment of indemnity]. Is this not obvious? For what loss did he cause?⁸ — I might have thought that since the flesh of most holy sacrifices became defiled there is still attached to it the duty of being burnt by the priests,⁹ and with the emurim of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness [placed on the altar fire] the duty of turning it over by the poker.¹⁰ We are therefore informed [that he is free]. Said Raba: The statement, 'If the sin-offering has already been offered the money is to be taken to the Dead Sea', holds good only in the case where he became aware of his transgression [of the Law of Sacrilege] before this atonement, but if after his atonement, it goes to the nedabah fund.¹¹ Why? Because one may not at the outset set aside [holy things] for destruction. MISHNAH. THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE HANDFUL [OF A MEAL-OFFERING], THE FRANKINCENSE, THE INCENSE, THE MEAL-OFFERING OF A PRIEST,¹² THE MEAL-OFFERING OF THE ANOINTED HIGH PRIEST¹³ AND THE MEALOFFERING THAT IS ACCOMPANIED BY A LIBATION¹⁴ FROM THE MOMENT OF THEIR DEDICATION. ONCE THEY HAVE BECOME SACRED BY BEING PUT IN THE VESSEL [OF MINISTRY], THEY BECOME SUSCEPTIBLE FOR UNFITNESS THROUGH CONTACT WITH A TEBUL YOM OR 'ONE WHO STILL REQUIRES ATONEMENT', OR BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT, AND THEY ARE SUBJECT TO [THE TRANSGRESSION OF THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT, BUT [THE LAW OF] PIGGUL DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATSOEVER HAS THAT WHICH RENDERS IT PERMISSIBLE [FOR THE ALTAR OR FOR THE USE OF THE PRlests]¹⁵ IS NOT SUBJECT TO [THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT UNTIL THAT ACT HAS BEEN PERFORMED. AND WHATSOEVER HAS NOT THAT WHICH RENDERS IT PERMISSIBLE¹⁶ BECOMES SUBJECT [TO THE LAWS OF] NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT AS SOON AS IT HAS BECOME SACRED BY BEING PUT IN THE VESSEL [OF MINISTRY], BUT [THE LAW OF] PIGGUL DOES NOT APPLY TO IT.

(1) Which makes no distinction whether or not the owners had been atoned for.

(2) Who dispute with R. Simeon, v. Tem. 15a.

(3) On the Tigris N. of Bagdad.

(4) This tradition in the name of Abaye is quoted as a confirmation of the anonymous answer given before.

(5) Rab as well as R. Johanan, whose dispute is mentioned supra 9a, v. Tosaf.

(6) Even if it was defiled before the sprinkling of the blood. The flesh is not fit to be offered upon the altar but has to be burnt by the priests.

(7) And charred, so that sacrilege is no longer applicable to it, since the ceremony of offering may be considered as completed.

(8) This means he has in the first case made use of something which cannot be used by the priests and in the second case of something which is no longer within the scope of the service of the Temple.

(9) I.e., it is still sacred; the religious procedure has not finished yet.

(10) Lit., 'hook'.

(11) If he became aware of his sacrilegious use of a part of the money designated for his sin-offering prior to the offering of this sacrifice, we may consider the indemnity he has to pay as forming part of the sum to be used for the sin-offering. Consequently if before the indemnity was paid a sacrifice was bought for the remainder of the amount originally set aside for the offering, the indemnity is to be regarded as money designated for a sin-offering which can no longer be used for this purpose, as its owner has already been atoned for. It has then to be destroyed in accordance with our general rule. But if at the time of the offering he had no knowledge of his trespass against the Law of Sacrilege, his indemnity cannot be considered as set aside for his sin-offering, and when paid it need not be destroyed.

(14) I.e., one that is offered with a freewill peace-offering.

(15) So as to make it 'acceptable' (v. Lev. XIX, 7). E.g., the flesh of sin-offerings and sacrificial portions of peace-offerings where the sprinkling of the blood renders these permissible respectively to the priest or for the altar.

(16) E.g., the handful and frankincense and other offerings enumerated in our Mishnah, which require no other things to make the offering fit for the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 10b

GEMARA. Whence do we know this?¹ — For our Rabbis taught:² I might have thought that only for things that have that which renders them permissible is one culpable for [transgressing] the Law of Defilement; for this would be the logical deduction: Since piggul, which requires only one awareness of transgression,³ whose sacrifice of atonement is fixed⁴ and allows of no exception for the congregation,⁵ yet it applies to things only that have that which renders them permissible, the much more so must uncleanness, which requires a twofold awareness of transgression,⁶ whose sacrifice of atonement can be of a higher or lesser value⁷ and allows of an exception for the congregation,⁸ apply only to things that have that which renders them permissible. The text therefore states: Say unto them: Whosoever he be of all your seed throughout your generations, that approaches [unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the Lord, having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off from before Me].⁹ Scripture deals with all kinds of holy things.¹⁰ But I might have thought that [in the case of things that have other things that render them permissible, the Law of Defilement] would apply at once;¹¹ therefore It states: 'Who approaches' [which is to be expounded after the way of] R. Eliezer [who] said: Is it possible that one is liable [to the Law of Defilement] merely by touching [the flesh]? You must then understand it in the following manner: Whatsoever has that which renders it permissible is not subject [to the laws of piggul, nothar and defilement] until that which renders it permissible has been performed; and whatsoever has not that which renders it permissible is liable [to those laws] only when they have become sacred by being put in the vessel [of ministry].¹²

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. THE YOUNG OF A SIN-OFFERING,¹³ THE SUBSTITUTE¹⁴ OF A SIN-OFFERING AND A SIN-OFFERING WHOSE OWNER HAS DIED¹⁵ ARE LEFT TO DIE. THAT WHICH PASSED [THE AGE-LIMIT OF] ONE YEAR¹⁶ OR WAS LOST¹⁷ AND THEN FOUND WITH A BLEMISH, IF AFTER THE OWNER HAS BEEN ATONED,¹⁸ IT IS LEFT TO DIE; IT CANNOT EFFECT A SUBSTITUTE¹⁹ AND THOUGH ONE MAY NOT DERIVE ANY BENEFIT FROM IT, IT IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE;²⁰

(1) I.e., that also things that do not require some other object to render them permissible are subject to the laws of nothar and defilement.

- (2) Zeb. 45b.
- (3) I.e., it is not necessary for the transgressor to have known that the food he enjoyed was piggul.
- (4) I.e., does not vary according to the pecuniary situation of the transgressor, as in the case of uncleanness. V. Lev. V, 2ff.
- (5) I.e., even if the whole congregation ate piggul, everyone would be guilty.
- (6) An unclean person that has entered the Temple precincts or has eaten holy things is guilty only if at one time he knew of his uncleanness, v. Shebu. 2a. He thus is aware twice of his uncleanness; before and after his transgression.
- (7) Shebu. 2a.
- (8) E.g., in the case of the Passover lamb, v. Pes. 66b, which can be offered and consumed in the case of the whole congregation being unclean.
- (9) Lev. XXII, 3.
- (10) Including things that do not require the act of another object to render them permissible.
- (11) Even before that act had been performed.
- (12) The word chreh, (rendered 'who approaches') is expounded as creh, 'fit to be offered', thus indicating that the law applies only if the flesh was ready to be offered, i.e., that the act that renders it permissible was performed already.
- (13) The young, born after its mother's dedication, is considered holy, yet it cannot be offered upon the altar, since it was not explicitly dedicated for this purpose.
- (14) It is forbidden to change an animal dedicated as an offering against a profane animal; if such an exchange takes place, both the animal originally dedicated and the animal exchanged for it are equally holy, except in the case where the latter animal, although it too becomes holy, must not be offered 'upon the altar', v. Lev. XXVII, 10 and Tem. 22b.
- (15) 'There is no atonement for the dead; death has atoned for them' is a general ruling of the Sages. The offering can therefore no longer be employed for the purpose for which it was originally designated.
- (16) Num. XV, 27.
- (17) In Tem. 22b this is expounded as follows: 'That which passed one year and was lost, or that which was lost and found with a blemish'.
- (18) With another animal.
- (19) As it is destined to be killed.
- (20) By law of the Torah, but by enactment of the Sages it is sacrilegious to use it. The Fifth is then not to be paid.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 11a

IF BEFORE THE OWNER HAD BEEN ATONED, IT SHALL GO TO PASTURE UNTIL IT BECOMES UNFIT [FOR SACRIFICE].¹ THEN IT SHALL BE SOLD AND FOR THE EQUIVALENT ANOTHER [SACRIFICE] SHALL BE BOUGHT; IT CAN EFFECT A SUBSTITUTE AND IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. GEMARA. Why this difference in that no distinction is made² in the first clause while in the concluding a distinction is made? — In the first clause the ruling is absolute,³ in the concluding it is not. But has not this [Mishnah] been taught already in connection with exchanges?⁴ — There it has been taught for the sake of its reference to the law of exchanges, here by reason of its reference to the Law of Sacrilege. MISHNAH. IF ONE HAS SET ASIDE MONEY FOR HIS NAZIRITE OFFERINGS,⁵ IT MAY NOT BE USED, BUT THE LAW OF SACRILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO IT, AS IT MAY ALL⁶ BE USED FOR THE PEACE-OFFERING.⁷ IF HE DIED

AND LEFT MONEY [FOR HIS NAZrite OFFERINGS]. IF UNSPECIFIED IT SHALL GO TO THE NEDABAH⁸ FUND; IF SPECIFIED, THE MONEY DESIGNATED FOR THE SIN-OFFERINGS SHALL BE TAKEN TO THE SALT [DEAD] SEA,⁹ IT MAY NOT BE USED, THOUGH THE LAW OF SACRILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO IT. WITH THE MONEY DESIGNATED FOR A BURNT-OFFERING THEY SHALL BRING A BURNT-OFFERING;¹⁰ THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO IT. WITH THE MONEY DESIGNATED FOR THE PEACE-OFFERING THEY SHALL BRING A PEACE-OFFERING, AND IT HAS TO BE CONSUMED WITHIN A DAY,¹¹ BUT REQUIRES NO BREAD OFFERING.¹² GEMARA. Resh Lakish demurred: Why does not [the Mishnah] teach also the following case: If one has set aside monies for bird-offerings,¹³ they may not be used but the Law of Sacrilege does not apply to them because he might buy with them turtledoves which have not reached the prescribed age or pigeons which have passed the prescribed age?¹⁴ — Said Raba: [In our case] the Torah rules that for the unspecified money [also] a peace offering shall be purchased; but does the Torah ever rule that turtle-doves which have not reached the right age shall be offered? Are they not indeed unfit for the altar? MISHNAH. R. SIMEON¹⁵ SAYS: [THE LAW RELATING TO] BLOOD IS LENIENT AT THE BEGINNING [OF THE OFFERING CEREMONY] AND STRINGENT AT THE END; [THAT RELATING TO] LIBATIONS IS STRINGENT AT THE BEGINNING AND LENIENT AT THE END; BLOOD IS EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AT THE BEGINNING, BUT IS SUBJECT TO IT AFTER IT HAS FLOWED AWAY TO THE BROOK KIDRON;¹⁶ LIBATIONS ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AT THE BEGINNING, BUT ARE EXEMPTED FROM IT AFTER THEY FLOWED DOWN INTO THE SHITTLIN.¹⁷ GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught:¹⁸ ‘The Law of Sacrilege applies to blood. These are the words of R. Meir and R. Simeon; but the Sages say. It does not apply’. What is the reason of them Who hold that it does not apply?¹⁹ — Said ‘Ulla: Scripture says. And I have given it to you,²⁰ [suggesting] it shall be yours.²¹ The School of R. Ishmael taught: [It reads there] to make atonement²⁰ [meaning], I have given it for atonement, but not [to make it subject] to the Law of Sacrilege. R. Johanan says: Scripture Says. For it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life.²² [The blood] before [the act of]²³ atonement is to be compared to its status after the act of atonement.²⁴ Just as after the act of atonement it is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege, so before the act of atonement it is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege. But why not infer [in the other direction]: Just as before the act of atonement the Law of Sacrilege applies to it, so also after the act of atonement the Law of Sacrilege applies to it? — Is there at all a thing to which the Law of Sacrilege applies after the Prescribed ceremony had been performed therewith! — But why not?

(1) I.e., until it contracts a blemish. This phrase refers, of course, only to the one which has passed the age-limit. for in the other instance the animal is found with a blemish.

(2) Whether the owner has been atoned for or not.

(3) There is no object in making this distinction, for in all the three instances of the first clause the position is final; the young and the exchange are themselves not considered offerings, and in the case of the owners' death the sin for which the offering was brought is already expiated.

(4) Tem. IV, 1; why repeat it?

(5) Without specifying what portion of the sum is designated for each of the required offerings, viz., a sin-offering, a burnt-offering and a peace-offering. V. Num. VI, 14f.

(6) Of each coin one may say, perhaps this is designated for the peace-offering (Rashi). Tosaf.: The whole sum may be used for the peace offering, and the other offerings bought with other money.

(7) Which as a sacrifice of a minor degree of holiness does not come under the Law of Sacrilege; v. supra 7b.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) I.e., it shall be destroyed.

(10) A burnt offering is not brought for atonement. It can therefore be offered even after its owner's death. The same applies to the peace-offering.

(11) As in the case of the peace-offering of a Nazirite and not as in the instance of an ordinary peace-offering whose flesh may be consumed during two days and the night in between.

(12) As it cannot be placed upon the hands of the Nazirite as required in Num. VI. 19.

(13) To be offered e.g., by him who recovered from gonorrhoea; v. Lev. XV. 1ff.

(14) Turtle-doves are fit for offerings only after they have reached a certain age, pigeons only under that age. cf. Hul. 22b. The argument is: As he might buy with the money something which is not subject to sacrilege. the money, too, should not be subject to the Law of Sacrilege, as in the instance of the Mishnah.

(15) Some edd. read: R. Ishmael.

(16) Cf. Yoma 58b.

(17) I.e., pits at the side of the altar into which the remainder of libations was poured. V. Tosef. Suk. III, 3.

(18) Yoma 592.

(19) Yoma 59b has the version: The dispute refers only to the application of the law by enactment of the Rabbis. All agree, however, that by law of the Torah Sacrilege does not apply; wherefrom do we know this? Tosaf. corrects here accordingly.

(20) Lev. XVII, 11.

(21) I.e., it is not the 'possession of God', but that of man.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 11b

What of the ashes removed [from the altar] which are subject to the Law of Sacrilege although the prescribed ceremony had been performed therewith!¹ — The [law concerning the] removed ashes and that concerning the limbs of the scapegoat² constitute two texts of Scripture which teach the same thing, and wherever two texts teach the same thing no general rule can be derived from them.³ This would be right according to the view that one may make no use of the limbs of the scapegoat, but what would be your argument according to him who holds that one may use them? — The [law concerning the] removed ashes and that concerning the garments of the High priest⁴ constitute two texts of Scripture which teach the same thing, and wherever two texts teach the same thing no general rule can be derived from them. This would be right according to the Rabbis Who hold [that the text]. And he shall place them there⁵ teaches that they have to be hidden,⁶ but what would be your argument according to R. Dosa who holds that a common priest may wear them? — The [law concerning the] removed ashes and that concerning the heifer whose neck has been broken⁷ constitute two texts of Scripture which teach the same thing [and from such texts no general rule can be derived]. But this [reply] would be right [only] according to him who [indeed] holds that one cannot derive a general rule [from such laws]; but what would be your argument according to the view that one can derive a general rule [from such laws]? — [In this case] there are written two limitations [excluding other instances]: Here it is written. The heifer whose neck has been broken,⁸ and there it is written, And he shall place it by the side of the altar,⁹ implying that only in these [instances does the Law of Sacrilege apply even after the prescribed ceremony has been performed], but not in others. LIBATIONS ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AT THE BEGINNING etc. May we assume that our Mishnah is not in agreement with the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok? For ‘it has been taught:¹⁰ ‘R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: There was a small passage between the ascent [of the altar] and the altar, on the west side of the altar. Once every seventy years young priests descended through it and brought up the [accumulated] congealed wine, which resembled a cake of figs. and burnt it in a sacred place, for Scripture says: In holiness shalt thou surely offer the libation to the Lord:¹¹ just as the libation thereof must be in a sacred place, so the burning thereof must be in a sacred place’. How is this implied? — Thereupon said Rabina: It is derived from [nothar¹² by textual analogy based on the word] ‘holy’ occurring in both texts. It says here ‘in holiness’¹³ and it says there, and thou shalt burn the remnant in fire, it may not be eaten for it is holy.¹⁴ Just as nothar is burnt in a sacred state,¹⁵ so also these [libations] are burnt in a sacred state.¹⁶ — [The Mishnah] may well agree with R. Eleazar, son of R. Zadok, as [it refers only to the case where the wine] was caught [before it reached the bottom of the Shittin].¹⁷ Some reported [the discussion in the following version]: Shall we say that our Mishnah is in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok?¹⁸ — [Not necessarily] as [it deals with a case where] the wine was caught [before it reached the ground]. I might say:¹⁹ It is not necessary [to limit the Mishnah to this case] for [it is considered holy only] by Rabbinical enactment. But does he not adduce the text? — [The Biblical text is a] mere exegetical support [of a Rabbinical enactment]. MISHNAH. THE ASHES OF THE INNER ALTAR²⁰ AND [OF THE WICKS OF] THE CANDLESTICK MAY NOT BE USED. AND ARE NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. IF ONE DEDICATES ASHES²¹ THEY ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. TURTLE-DOVES WHICH HAVE NOT REACHED THE RIGHT AGE AND PIGEONS WHICH HAVE EXCEEDED THE RIGHT AGE²² MAY NOT BE ENJOYED; THEY ARE, HOWEVER NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. GEMARA. This²³ is right

(1) Why not take this as an example for similar instances?

(2) Which, too, according to one view in Yoma 67a are subject to the Law of Sacrilege, although the prescribed ceremony has been performed therewith.

(3) For were it the intention of the Torah that these laws should serve as a model to similar cases one text would suffice.

(4) V. Hul. 117a.

(5) Lev. XVI, 23.

(6) So as not to be used again, i.e., they are subject to the Law of Sacrilege.

(7) V. Deut. XXI, 1ff, and Sot. IX. 1f.

(8) Deut. XXI, 6. The definite article is to exclude other cases.

(9) That the removed ashes are still holy and therefore subject to the Law of Sacrilege is learnt from the fact that we are commanded to place it ‘by the side of the altar’. In the text commanding this, Lev. VI, 3, the word ‘it’ is regarded as unnecessary and is taken to indicate that only the ashes are sacred even after the prescribed ceremony had been performed therewith, and not other things.

(10) Suk. 492’

(11) Num, XXVIII, 7. The verb is repeated in Hebrew as emphasis.

(12) V. Glos.

(13) Num. XXVIII, 7.

(14) Ex. XXIX, 34.

(15) Cf. Pes. 82b.

(16) They are still considered sacred at the time of burning. The Law of Sacrilege should accordingly apply to the wine libation even after it had been let down to the Shittin, which is contradictory to our Mishnah.

(17) In which case R. Eleazar too agrees that the Law of Sacrilege does not apply. though once it reaches the bottom of the Shittin the holy ground renders the wine again sacred.

(18) For according to the Sages. Suk. 49a, the pits were not pits where the wine accumulated, but rather canals through which it flowed. The instance of our Mishnah of the use of such wine should then be an impossibility.

(19) The text of the last paragraph is rather obscure; cf. Tosaf. Suk. 49b who states that this version is corrupt and that of Suk. correct, where this paragraph is wholly omitted. It can make sense as a continuation of the discussion according to the former tradition. There the Mishnah is restricted, according to R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok, to wine caught in the air, for if taken after it has reached the bottom of the Shittin, it is considered holy and should therefore be subject to the Law of Sacrilege. Now it is argued, perhaps this reservation is not necessary, for the sacred character attributed to the wine by R. Eleazar is only a Rabbinical enactment and the Law of Sacrilege need not therefore apply to it.

(20) Unlike the ashes of the outer altar these do not retain their sacred character after the removal from the inner altar, since there is no special text implying that they remain holy. as in the case of the outer altar (v. oupra p. 40, n. 5).

(21) I.e., if one collects these ashes after their removal from the inner altar to the heap of ashes, and dedicates them afresh to the Temple, they are sacred and therefore subject to the Law of Sacrilege (Tosaf.). Aliter: If someone had vowed to give their value to the Temple before they had been removed.

(22) These are not fit for offerings. v. Hul. I, 5.

(23) Viz., the fact that the ashes of the altar have to be put at the place of the ashes.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 12a

as far as the outer altar is concerned, for it is written: And he shall place it by the altar,¹ but wherefrom do we know this of the ashes of the inner altar? Said R. Eleazar, Scripture says: And he shall take away its crop with the feathers thereof [and cast it beside the altar on the east part, in the place of the ashes].² as this has no bearing on the outer altar,³ make it bear on the inner altar. But why not say that both passages bear upon the outer altar [and it has been repeated] in order to fix the precise side [for the ashes]?⁴ — If so, Scripture should [only] say, 'by the altar'; why [add, 'the place of] the ashes'? [To suggest] that [it was the place of the ashes] also for the inner altar.⁵ Wherefrom do we know [the place for the ashes of] the candlestick? — [The expression] 'the ashes' [is an amplification, for it sufficed to mention] 'ashes'. MISHNAH.⁶ R. SIMEON SAID: TURTLE-DOVES WHICH HAVE NOT YET REACHED THE RIGHT AGE ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE,⁷ WHILE PIGEONS WHICH HAVE EXCEEDED THE RIGHT AGE ARE NOT ALLOWED FOR USE, BUT ARE EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. GEMARA. It is right according to R. Simeon whose reason has been stated [in a Mishnah]:⁸ 'For R. Simeon used to say: [He who uses] that which will be fit [for offering] after a period and has been dedicated before that period has expired has transgressed a prohibitory law,⁹ though he is not liable to the penalty of kareth'.¹⁰ But according to the ruling of the Rabbis,¹¹ whereby is [our case] distinguished from that of [animal-sacrifices] which have not reached the required age [of eight days]?¹² — I might reply: [The sacrifice of a beast] that has not reached the required age is to be compared to one with a blemish which can be redeemed,¹³ but these bird-offerings, which a blemish¹⁴ does not disqualify them, cannot be redeemed. ‘Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: Dedicated [animals] which have died are according to the Torah exempted from the Law of Sacrilege. When ‘Ulla sat and recited this ruling. R. Hisda said to him: Who has ever heard this, your view and the view of R. Johanan. your teacher? Whither has the sanctity thereof gone? — He thereupon replied: Why not ask the same question with relation to our Mishnah, where it says: TURTLE-DOVES WHICH HAVE NOT YET REACHED THE RIGHT AGE, AND PIGEONS WHICH HAVE EXCEEDED THE RIGHT AGE MAY NOT BE ENJOYED; THEY ARE, HOWEVER, NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. Here, too. [ask] whither has the sanctity thereof gone?¹⁵ — Nevertheless¹⁶ [continued ‘Ulla], I admit that by Rabbinical enactment the Law of Sacrilege is applicable [in these instances],¹⁷ but I wish to raise the difficulty: Is there anything which has been exempted from the Law of Sacrilege¹⁸ from the beginning and is subject to it afterwards?¹⁹ — Why not? Is there not the instance of blood which was originally exempted from the Law of Sacrilege, but is subject to it at the end [of the offering ceremony]? For we have learnt: ‘Blood is exempted from the Law of Sacrilege at the beginning, but is subject to it after it has flowed away to the Brook Kidron’.²⁰ — I might reply: In that instance the Law of Sacrilege was applicable at the beginning

(1) Lev. VI, 3.

(2) Ibid. I, 16.

(3) Since this is mentioned in Lev. VI, 3.

(4) Viz., the east side.

(5) Ibid. The definite article is regarded as superfluous.

(6) In many editions this Mishnah is joined to the previous, of which it is a continuation, thus in Tosaf.

(7) For they may be offered when they grow older.

(8) Hul. 81a.

(9) Similarly, these turtle-doves since they will become fit after a certain period, are considered holy when dedicated even before the period is reached.

(10) V. Glos.

(11) I.e., the anonymous view of the previous Mishnah.

(12) Of which it says in Bek. 56a that they at once become sacred.

(13) In the instance of a sacrifice of cattle there is redemption in the case of disqualification by blemish; i.e., we find a precedent that even a disqualified only is holy, because a substitute can take its place. There is no such precedent in the case of a bird offering as this offering cannot be redeemed.

(14) Even in the case of such blemishes which disqualify even bird-offerings there is no redemption.

(15) The question is from pigeons which have passed the prescribed age after having been dedicated.

(16) So MS.M. cur. edd.: ‘He said to him’. I.e., although Mishnah proves that it is possible for the Law of Sacrilege to cease to operate.

(17) I.e., in my case and in that of the Mishnah. One is liable to compensation, though not to the payment of the additional Fifth.

(18) As in the instance of the turtle-doves according to the first view of the Mishnah.

(19) I.e., after they reach the prescribed age. although they had been dedicated when they were not yet of age.

(20) Supra 11a.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 12b

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 12b

for Rab said:¹ 'The blood let from a [living] consecrated animal may not be used and is subject to the Law of Sacrilege'. [The above] text states: R. Huna² said in the name of Rab: 'The blood let from a [living] consecrated animal may not be used and is subject to the Law of Sacrilege'. R. Hammuna raised an objection:³ 'The milk of consecrated cattle and the eggs of turtledoves may not be used, but the Law of Sacrilege does not apply to them'.⁴ — He replied: The ruling applies only to blood, for one cannot live without blood,⁵ but not to milk, as one can well live without it. R. Mesharsheya raised an objection: The manure and excrements⁶ that lie in the courtyard of the Temple may not be used, but are not subject to the Law of Sacrilege. The money thereof [paid in compensation] goes to the Temple Treasury. Now why is this so, since here too there is none who exists without some quantity of digested food [in its body]?⁷ — I might reply: How can you compare these two things with one another? Excrements come from outside [the body] and when the one [quantity of food] has been excluded [from the body] another will be consumed. Different it is with blood which is part of the body. It states: '. . . may not be used, but are subject to the Law of Sacrilege and the money [thereof paid in compensation] goes to the Temple Treasury'. This offers a support of the rule of R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: Wherever the Sages ruled [that a thing is] sacred yet not sacred [in every respect],⁸ the money thereof [paid in compensation] goes to the Temple Treasury. MISHNAH. THE MILK OF CONSECRATED ANIMALS AND THE EGGS OF [CONSECRATED] TURTLE-DOVES MAY NOT BE USED, BUT ARE NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. THIS HOLDS GOOD ONLY FOR THINGS DEDICATED FOR THE ALTAR, BUT AS TO THINGS DEDICATED FOR TEMPLE REPAIR, IF ONE CONSECRATED [E.G.] A CHICKEN BOTH IT AND ITS EGGS ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE, OR [IF ONE DEDICATED] A SHE-ASS, BOTH IT AND ITS MILK ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. GEMARA. Does [the restriction to things dedicated for Temple repair] imply that if dedicated [to the altar] for its value [the milk or eggs] will be exempted from the Law of Sacrilege? — Said R. Papa, a clause has been omitted [in the Mishnah] which should read as follows: 'This holds good only for things dedicated themselves for the altar; but if their value is dedicated for the altar, it is considered as if they have been dedicated for Temple repair. If one consecrated [e.g.], a chicken both it and its eggs are subject to the Law of Sacrilege, or [if one dedicated] a she-ass, both it and its milk are subject to the Law of Sacrilege'.⁹ MISHNAH. WHATSOEVER IS FIT FOR THE ALTAR

(1) Ber. 312.

(2) In the above quotation R. Huna's name is omitted.

(3) Infra.

(4) The same should apply to blood.

(5) It is therefore an integral part of the body.

(6) Of consecrated animals.

(7) I.e., it is essential for the life of the beast.

(8) I.e. it may not be used, yet is not subject to the Law of Sacrilege, in which case the mere actual value has to be repaid.

(9) Because the produce of the offering cannot be offered upon the altar, for which the animal itself is designated. It is therefore not included in the dedication. In the case of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness the produce is of the same degree of holiness as the animal itself.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 13a

AND NOT FOR TEMPLE REPAIR. FOR TEMPLE REPAIR AND NOT FOR THE ALTAR, NEITHER FOR THE ALTAR NOR FOR TEMPLE REPAIR. IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE, HOW IS THIS? IF ONE CONSECRATED A CISTERN FULL OF WATER,¹ A MIDDEN FULL OF MANURE,² A DOVE-COTE FULL OF PIGEONS,³ A TREE LADEN WITH FRUIT,⁴ A FIELD COVERED WITH HERBS,⁵ THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THEM AND TO THEIR CONTENTS. BUT IF ONE CONSECRATED A CISTERN AND IT WAS LATER FILLED WITH WATER, A MIDDEN AND IT WAS LATER FILLED WITH MANURE, A DOVE-COTE AND IT WAS LATER FILLED WITH PIGEONS, A TREE AND IT AFTERWARDS BORE FRUIT OR A FIELD AND IT AFTERWARDS PRODUCED HERBS, THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THE CONSECRATED OBJECTS THEMSELVES BUT NOT TO THEIR CONTENTS, R. JOSE SAID: IF ONE CONSECRATED A FIELD OR A TREE, THE LAW OF SACRILEGE APPLIES TO THEM AND TO THEIR PRODUCE.⁶ FOR IT IS THE GROWTH OF CONSECRATED PROPERTY. THE YOUNG⁷ OF [CATTLE SET ASIDE AS] TITHE MAY NOT SUCK FROM SUCH CATTLE.⁸ SOME PEOPLE USED TO DEDICATE ON SUCH A CONDITION.⁹ THE YOUNG¹⁰ OF CON SECRATED CATTLE MAY NOT SUCK FROM SUCH CATTLE. SOME PEOPLE USED TO DEDICATE ON SUCH A CONDITION. LABOURERS¹¹ MAY NOT ENJOY OF DRY FIGS DEDICATED TO THE TEMPLE,¹² NOR MAY A COW EAT OF THE VETCH BELONGING TO THE TEMPLE.¹³ GEMARA. It says: 'THE YOUNG OF CATTLE SET ASIDE AS TITHE MAY NOT SUCK FROM SUCH CATTLE'. Wherefrom do we know this? Said R. Ahadboi, son of Ammi, It is derived from the first-born by textual analogy based on the word 'passing'¹⁴ occurring in both texts]: As the first-born¹⁵ is subject to the Law of Sacrilege, so also the milk of cattle set aside as tithe is subject to the law of Sacrilege. As to milk of consecrated cattle, it is derived from the first-born [by textual analogy based on the words] 'his mother'¹⁶ [occurring in both texts]. LABOURERS MAY NOT ENJOY etc. What is the reason?¹⁷ — Said R. Ahadboi, son of Ammi, Scripture says: Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn;¹⁸ what he treadeth of your own,¹⁹ but not of Temple property. If one threshes [his] kela'ilin²⁰ in a field belonging to the Temple he is guilty of sacrilege.²¹ But has it not to be detached from the ground?²² — Said Rabina: This proves that the dust²³ is beneficial to it [kela'ilin]. [

(1) Fit for Temple repair only.

(2) Fit neither for the altar nor for Temple repair.

(3) Fit for the altar.

(4) Fit for the altar if it was a vine tree, whose wine may be used for libation offerings, otherwise unfit for both.

(5) Which bears a sacred character.

(6) R. Jose contends that in these two instances the produce has not come from without, but has grown naturally from the things dedicated. The produce is potentially present at the time of dedication.

(7) Which is itself not sacred, as it was born before the tithing.

(8) For the milk is sacred and may not be used by profane cattle.

(9) I.e., when cattle were taken to be tithed a condition was made to the effect that should the tithe be a female, its milk should not be consecrated, but permissible for its young.

- (10) Itself not sacred, if born before consecration.
- (11) Working in fields belonging to the Temple.
- (12) For the law that labourers may eat of fruits on which they work, Deut. XXIII, 25, applies to private property only, for the text speaks of 'the neighbour's vineyard'. v. B.M. 87a.

- (14) I.e., occurring in Ex. XIII, 12 and Lev. XXVII, 32.
- (15) The first-born is a male animal. Its sacredness appertains to the whole body, as also in the case of tithe the sanctity attaches to the whole body, including the milk.
- (16) I.e., occurring in Ex. XXII, 29 and Lev. XXII, 27.
- (17) That a cow may not eat the vetch belonging to the Temple.

MISHNAH. IF THE ROOTS OF A PRIVATELY OWNED TREE SPREAD INTO DEDICATED GROUND,¹ OR THOSE OF A TREE IN DEDICATED GROUND SPREAD TO PRIVATE GROUND,² THEY MAY NOT BE USED, BUT THE LAW OF SACRILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM.³ THE WATER OF A WELL⁴ WHICH COMES FORTH IN A DEDICATED FIELD MAY NOT BE ENJOYED THOUGH IT IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE; WHEN IT HAS LEFT THE FIELD IT MAY BE ENJOYED.⁵ THE WATER⁶ IN THE GOLDEN JAR⁷ MAY NOT BE USED, BUT THE LAW OF SACRILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO IT. WHEN IT HAS BEEN Poured INTO THE FLASK, IT BECOMES SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. THE WILLOW BRANCH⁸ MAY NOT BE USED, BUT IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. R. ELEAZAR, SON OF R. ZADOK SAYS: THE ELDERS WERE ACCUSTOMED TO USE IT WITH THEIR PALM TREE BRANCHES. GEMARA. Said Resh Lakish: 'The law of Sacrilege does not apply' to the whole of the contents [of the jar], but the Law of Sacrilege applies to the three logs.⁹ But does it not say in the second clause: WHEN IT HAS BEEN Poured INTO THE FLASK, IT BECOMES SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE, from which it follows that in the first clause the Law of Sacrilege does not apply. even with reference to the three logs? — Rather, if [Resh Lakish's statement] has been made, it has been made with reference to the second clause: IT BECOMES SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE. Said Resh Lakish: This holds good only [if the flask contained] exactly three logs,¹⁰ but R. Johanan said: It applies to the whole contents. Are we then to assume that Resh Lakish holds that a definite quantity has been prescribed for the water libation? But have we not learnt: R. Eleazar said, If one offered the water libation of Tabernacles during the Festival outside the Temple Court he is culpable;¹¹ and R. Johanan in the name of Menahem of Jotapata remarked thereupon: R. Eleazar follows R. Akiba's principle who expounds 'their libations'¹² denoting that the libation of water is analogous to the libation of wine;¹³ and Resh Lakish retorted: Would you then also say: As three logs are prescribed for wine, so also for water? Now does it not follow from this that Resh Lakish holds that no definite quantity has been prescribed for water? — No, his argument is on the view of Menahem of Jotapata!¹⁴ MISHNAH. GEMARA. It was stated:¹ If an idol broke to pieces by itself, R. Johanan says it is still prohibited [for use]; Resh Lakish says it is allowed. ‘R. Johanan holds it is prohibited’, because the idol worshipper has not annulled it.² ‘Resh Lakish holds it is allowed’, for [the idolator] surely thinks: If the idol did not save itself, how could it save me.³ Resh Lakish raised an objection to R. Johanan: ONE MAY NOT DERIVE ANY BENEFIT FROM A NEST WHICH IS BUILT ON THE TOP OF A DEDICATED TREE, BUT THE LAW OF SACRILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO IT. THAT WHICH IS ON THE TOP OF AN ASHERAH ONE FLICKS [IT] OFF WITH A REED. Now, does this not deal with a case where the twigs [with which the nest was built] were broken off [by the birds] from that tree itself, and yet it rules that he can flick them off with a reed?⁴ — No, the twigs were brought [by the birds] from elsewhere. If so,⁵ if [the tree was] dedicated one may not make use [of the nest] and the Law of Sacrilege does not apply to it.⁶ Hence it must deal with twigs that have however grown after [the dedication of the tree],⁷ and [our Mishnah] holds that the Law of Sacrilege does not apply to the growth of dedicated [trees]. This interpretation⁸ seems also logical, for should we say that the twigs were brought from elsewhere, why [has the nest] to be shaken off with a reed, let it be simply taken [by hand]!⁹ — Said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Johanan: It deals indeed with twigs brought from elsewhere and the expression ONE FLICKS OFF refers to the young birds.¹⁰ Said R. Jacob to R. Jeremiah: The young birds are permitted for use¹¹ in both instances,¹² and the eggs are prohibited¹³ for use in both instances. Said R. Ashi: If the birds are [so young that they] require [the care of] their mother, they are considered like eggs. MISHNAH. IF THE TREASURERS [OF THE TEMPLE] BOUGHT TREES,¹⁴ THE TIMBER IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE BUT NOT THE CHIPS AND THE FOLIAGE.¹⁵ GEMARA. Said Samuel: Temple buildings are built first with secular [money]. and then they are dedicated,¹⁶ (why? Because he who donates money [to the Temple Fund] declares it [forthwith] sacred)¹⁷ in that he [the Treasurer] says the sacredness of the money shall be transmitted to the building, so that the money may be paid out to the labourers as their wages.

(1) A.Z. 4b.

(2) It was not the heathen who broke the idol, it broke by itself.

(3) It is assumed that in their hearts the worshippers have abandoned this idol. It is no longer an object of worship.

(4) And, of course, used. This instance is parallel to the case in question. for the twigs were not broken by the heathen himself and thus annulled by him.

(5) Rashi has here a version similar to that of the same discussion in A.Z. 42a.

(6) Since the twigs are not from the tree belonging to Temple property, they should even be permitted for use (Tosaf).

(7) You are thus obliged to interpret the Mishnah as referring to twigs taken from the tree itself; but should you then object, in that case the difficulty would be why they were not subject to the Law of Sacrilege: It is because it deals with twigs grown after the dedication of the tree (exclusive of the ground upon which the tree grows) and such twigs are not subject to the Law of Sacrilege. The objection to R. Johanan again remains. The following passage is to be understood in parenthesis.

(8) Viz., that the twigs were from the tree itself.

(9) If the twigs are, in accordance with our interpretation. of the same tree the direct approach to the nest and its twigs may have been prohibited as a precautionary measure, lest people assume that the twigs still growing are also permitted;

(10) The twigs, however, are indeed prohibited in accordance with the view of R. Johanan.

(11) Because they can fly and are not considered as belonging to the tree.

(12) I.e., in the case of dedicated trees and an asherah.

(13) For they are considered attached to the tree.

(14) To have them prepared for building purpose for the Temple.

(15) For these are useless for building and the Treasurer, it is assumed, has not intended to impart to them the character of sacred property.

(16) The building material is bought with money belonging to private individuals or taken on credit. Also the wages for the workmen are paid from secular money or owed to them. When the building is finished it is exchanged. as a whole, against the money donated to the Temple Fund for this building. The money becomes again secular and can be used to satisfy the creditors and the labourers.

(17) If material was bought with this money, the seller of the material would be guilty of sacrilege in using the money. The same applies to the labourers.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 14b

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 14b

An objection was raised: What was done with the surplus of the frankincense?¹ Money equivalent to the craftsmen's but if the twigs are from elsewhere there is no ground for such an assumption. wages² was set aside [from the Temple Treasury],³ [the surplus was] then exchanged against this money of the craftsmen, handed over to the craftsmen⁴ and then purchased from them with money of the new levy.⁵ Now why was [this procedure necessary]? Why not exchange the surplus against a building?⁶ — [We deal with a case where] there was no building.⁷ But does it not speak of 'the craftsmen's wages'⁸ — There was no building equivalent to the value of the surplus. But does not Samuel hold:⁹ 'If consecrated property of the value of a maneh¹⁰ has even exchanged against a perutah,¹⁰ the exchange is valid'. — [He sanctions such a transaction] after it has been done, but not at the outset. R. Papa says, This is the reason why the building has to be built with secular [money]: The Torah has not been given to ministering angels;¹¹ he [the craftsman] might wish to lie down and would lie down on them,¹² and if it was built by consecrated [money] he would as a result be guilty of sacrilege. We have learnt: IF THE TREASURERS [OF THE TEMPLE] BOUGHT TREES, THE TIMBER IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE BUT NOT THE CHIPS AND THE FOLIAGE. But why should one trespass the law of Sacrilege? Let this too be prepared in a secular state¹³ lest one might wish to lie down on them, and would as a result be guilty of sacrilege! — Said R. Papa: If the wood is to be used at a later date it would be indeed so;¹⁴ our Mishnah refers to wood which is to be used on the same day.¹⁵ [

(1) Each year there was a surplus of frankincense. In the month of Nissn a new year began for the offering of incense. The surplus of the past year was not allowed to be used in the new year. The device mentioned here provides a method of using this surplus by repurchasing it with the money of the new levy.

(2) I.e., any wages that the Temple may owe to labourers for their work.

(3) From this money of the shekel chamber (the Lishkah) wages were permitted to be paid, but not from a donation declared holy for a special purpose.

(4) It is not essential actually to hand it over to the labourers. Somebody else may acquire it on their behalf. The incense then becomes secular property and may be re-purchased for the Temple to be used during the coming year.

(5) I.e., the newly paid shekels from which all public offerings for the coming year beginning with the first of Nisan are bought, v. Shek. IV, 5.

(6) Since, according to Samuel, the building is at first secular, why not exchange the frankincense against it and re.purchase it with the money of the new levy?

(7) No new building was erected then.

(8) Implying that some work has been done.

(9) B.M. 57b.

(10) V. Glos.

(11) I.e., we are only human beings.

(12) The bricks e.g.

(13) Let the preparation of the timber be done as non consecrated property and then purchased by the Temple Fund.

(14) As you suggest.

(15) In which case there is little likelihood that one will use it unwittingly.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. THINGS DEDICATED FOR THE ALTAR CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER¹ WITH REGARD TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE AND TO RENDER ONE CULPABLE FOR [TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL,² NOTHAR² AND DEFILEMENT.³ THINGS DEDICATED FOR TEMPLE REPAIR⁴ CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER.⁵ THINGS DEDICATED FOR THE ALTAR CAN COMBINE WITH THINGS DEDICATED FOR TEMPLE REPAIR WITH REGARD TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE.

GEMARA. Since things dedicated for the altar can combine with things dedicated for Temple repair, although the one is consecrated as such and the other only for its value, was it then necessary to mention at all that things dedicated for the altar can combine with others of the same nature? — Since he had to state the addition in this connection: ‘AND TO RENDER ONE CULPABLE FOR [TRANSGRESSING THE LAWS OF] PIGGUL, NOTHAR AND DEFILEMENT’, which is inapplicable to things dedicated for Temple repair, therefore he stated this separately. Said R. Jannai: It is clear that the Law of Sacrilege applies only to things dedicated for Temple repair and to burnt-offerings.⁶ What is the reason? — Scripture says: If anyone commits a trespass [and sin in error] in the holy things of the Lord.⁷ Holy things designated wholly for God⁸ are subject to the Law of Sacrilege; but as to [other] things⁹ dedicated for the altar, of them the priests have a share and the owners have a share. We have learnt: THINGS DEDICATED FOR THE ALTAR CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER WITH REGARD TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE?¹⁰ — [This applies only] by Rabbinical enactment. We have learnt: ‘The Law of Sacrilege applies to the Most Holy sacrifices which were slaughtered on the south side’.¹¹ — [It is] by Rabbinical enactment. We have learnt: ‘If one derived a benefit from a sin-offering, while it was alive he has not trespassed the Law of Sacrilege unless he has diminished its substance; if while it was dead he is liable even though his benefit was of the smallest value’.¹² — By Rabbinical enactment. And by Biblical law are they indeed exempted? Has it not been taught: Rabbi says. The expression all fat is the Lord's¹³ is to include the emurim¹⁴ of sacrifices of a minor degree of holiness with regard to the Law of Sacrilege!¹⁵ — By Rabbinical enactment. But does he adduce a Biblical text [as proof]? — It is a mere exegetical support [of a Rabbinical enactment]. But does not ‘Ulla say in the name of R. Johanan: ‘Consecrated animals which died are according to Biblical law exempted from the Law of Sacrilege’.¹⁶ Now, to what does this refer? Shall I say to things dedicated for Temple repair; then the Law of Sacrilege should apply to them even after they have died; for suppose a man would dedicate a midden for Temple repair, would the Law of Sacrilege not apply to it? It must then refer to things dedicated for the altar.¹⁷ But then they should not¹⁸ be subject to sacrilege by Biblical law! — Rather what the School of R. Jannai taught was that from that text¹⁹ you can only derive things dedicated for Temple repair; but things dedicated for the altar you cannot derive from it.²⁰ [

MISHNAH. FIVE THINGS IN A BURNT-OFFERING CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER: THE FLESH, THE FAT,¹ THE FINE FLOUR, THE WINE AND THE OIL;² AND SIX IN A THANKOFFERING: THE FLESH, THE FAT, THE FINE FLOUR, THE WINE, THE OIL AND THE BREAD. GEMARA. R. Huna recited to Raba: 'Five things in the world³ can combine with one another'. Said the latter: Did you say 'in the world'? Does not the Mishnah teach of a thank-offering: AND SIX IN A THANK-OFFERING: THE FLESH, THE FAT, THE FINE FLOUR, THE WINE, THE OIL AND THE BREAD? — The other replied: Read 'in a burnt-offering'.⁴ We have thus learnt here what our Rabbis have taught: '[The flesh of] a burnt-offering and the sacrificial portions thereof⁵ can combine to make up [the requisite size of] an olive [to render one liable] for offering them outside [the Temple Court] and to render one culpable for [transgressing the laws of] piggul, nothar and defilement'. It speaks of a burnt-offering and does apparently not apply to a peace-offering. This is right as far as offering outside the Temple Court is concerned, for with a burnt-offering which is wholly offered the emurim⁶ can be combined;⁷ but with [the flesh of] a peace-offering⁸ it can rightly not be combined. But with regard to [the transgression of the laws of] piggul nothar and defilement, why should one not be guilty in the case of a peace-offering?⁹ Have we not learnt: 'All kinds of piggul can combine with one another and all kinds of nothar can combine with one another'?¹⁰ — Read, therefore: The flesh of a burnt-offering and the emurim thereof can combine with one another to make up an olive-size so that the blood can be sprinkled on account of them,¹¹ and it represents the opinion of R. Joshua. For we have learnt:¹² R. Joshua said, With all other sacrifices of the Torah the blood can be sprinkled only if an olive-size of flesh or an olive-size of fat was left; if half an olive-size of flesh and half an olive-size of fat were left the blood cannot be sprinkled. With a burnt-offering, however, the blood can be sprinkled even if half an olive-size of flesh and half an olive size of fat were left, because it is all offered upon the altar. And with a meal-offering, even if it has wholly been preserved. the blood cannot be sprinkled. How does the meal-offering come in?¹³ — Said R. Papa: [It refers to] a meal-offering which accompanies a beast sacrifice.¹⁴ MISHNAH. TERUMAH,¹⁵ TERUMAH OF THE TITHE,¹⁶ TERUMAH OF THE TITHE SEPARATED FROM DEM'AI,¹⁷ HALLAH¹⁸ AND FIRST-FRUITS CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER TO MAKE UP THE SIZE REQUIRED TO RENDER OTHER THINGS¹⁹ FORBIDDEN AND TO BE LIABLE TO THE PAYMENT OF A Fifth.²⁰ ALL KINDS OF PIGGUL CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER AND ALL KINDS OF NOTHAR CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER. GEMARA. What is the reason that hallah and first-fruits can combine? — All these are called by the term 'terumah'. Of hallah it reads, of the first of your dough you shall set apart terumah.²¹ The first-fruits are also called terumah, for we have learnt: The expression, and the terumah of thy hand²² refers to first fruits.²³ While the other instances²⁴ of the Mishnah need no proof. MISHNAH. ALL KINDS OF NEBELAH²⁵ CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER,²⁶ AND ALL KINDS OF REPTILES CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER.²⁶ GEMARA. Said Rab:

- (1) The fat parts which were offered on the altar.
 - (2) The latter three are from the accompanying meal-offering
 - (3) Meaning there are in connection with all offerings only five things.
 - (4) vkugc instead of okugc 'in the world'.
 - (5) Thus the version of Zeb. 109a and of Rashi. Cur. edd. read: burnt-offerings and emurim, v. Glos.
 - (6) Which are always offered upon the altar.
 - (7) With the other parts of the flesh.
 - (8) The flesh is eaten by the owner and the priests. In this case they can, of course, not combine the emurim when offered outside the Temple.
 - (9) When the legal size was accomplished through a combination of the different parts thereof.
 - (10) V. infra.
 - (11) Thus the version of Tosaf. and Rashi. Cur. edd. add.: And since they can combine with regard to sprinkling, one is guilty . . . and whose view is this? If the flesh of a burnt-offering is lost, the blood can be sprinkled only if an olive-size of the offering is left. Now, this olive-size may be composed of flesh and emurim.
 - (12) Tosef. Zeb. IV, 3.
 - (13) I.e., how does the sprinkling come in connection with a meal-offering.
 - (14) Lit., 'a meal-offering of libation', because this is the only kind of meal-offering which requires wine for libation. V. Num. XV, 5f. I might have thought that the blood of the offering can be sprinkled if nothing but the accompanying meal-offering is preserved, hence we are told that it is not so.
 - (15) The priest's share of the ingathering of the field. v. Ter. IV, 3. v. Glos.
 - (16) The Levite's contribution to the priest.
 - (17) I.e., produce of the field about which there is a suspicion that they have not been tithed properly, v. Glos.
 - (18) The portion of the dough set aside for the priest. V. Num. XV, 20 and Glos.
 - (19) If common food is mixed with them in a proportion which is no less than a hundred to one (the required proportion of each of them), they are wholly forbidden to a non priest.
 - (20) If one has eaten unwittingly the value of at least a perutah, one is liable to the payment of an additional Fifth. V. Ter. I, 1.
 - (21) Num. XV, 20.
 - (22) Deut. XII, 17.
 - (23) Pes. 37b.

- (24) The first three mentioned in our Mishnah.
- (25) v. Glos.
- (26) To make up the required legal size of an olive.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 16a

This¹ has been taught only with reference to defilement,² but with regard to eating, clean animals³ form one group for themselves and unclean animals⁴ another. And Levi said: Also in regard to eating do they all combine with one another.⁵ And R. Assi said: Clean animals for themselves and unclean for themselves. Some say he differs from Rab,⁶ while others say he does not differ from him.⁷ An objection was raised: [The flesh of] a dead cow⁸ and a living camel⁹ cannot combine with one another, from which it follows that if both, however, were dead their flesh would combine. Does this not contradict R. Assi?¹⁰ — No, refer thus: But if both were alive they could combine; and this would be in agreement with R. Judah's view who holds¹¹ that the prohibition to eat a limb [cut off] from a living creature¹² applies also to unclean animals. But what would be the case if both were dead? Could they not combine? If so, why just instance¹³ 'the flesh of a dead cow and a living camel',¹⁴ surely even if both were dead they could not combine? And furthermore, have we not learnt: 'Half an olive size [of the flesh] of a living cow and half an olive-size of that of a dead camel cannot combine with one another, but half an olive size of the flesh of a cow and half an olive-size of that of a camel can combine with one another if both are alive or both dead'. There would be a contradiction between the opening clause¹⁵ and the concluding. You must therefore come to the conclusion that in the case of both animals being dead they can combine with one another!¹⁶ — R. Assi would reply: This Tanna holds that a prohibition can apply to something that has been prohibited already by reason of another prohibition.¹⁷

(1) Viz., the first clause.

(2) V. Lev. XI, 39. An olive's bulk conveys uncleanness.

(3) Which, if they died of themselves, or if slaughtered not according to ritual, are prohibited as nebelah, v. Deut. XIV, 21.

(4) Which even if not slaughtered according to ritual are prohibited only by reason of their uncleanness, v. Lev. XI, 8, but do not come under the category of nebelah, according to the principle that a prohibition cannot take hold of something which has already been forbidden.

(5) He holds that unclean animals not slaughtered according to ritual do come under the category of nebelah.

(6) I.e., he is assumed to relate also to defilement.

(7) But refers to eating only.

(8) I.e., the nebelah of a clean animal.

(9) Cut off while the camel was alive. A camel is an unclean animal.

(10) According to the first explanation of R. Assi's statement, Rashi: Rab is not contradicted as this statement might refer to defilement.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 16b

Said R. Judah in the name of Rab: As to the eating of unclean reptiles, one is liable to the penalty of lashes only when one has consumed an olive-size.¹ Why? Because the expression 'eating'² is used in that connection. But did not R. Jose son of R. Hanina recite before R. Johanan: [It is written]: Ye shall therefore separate between the clean beast and the unclean and between the unclean fowl and the clean and ye shall not make your souls³ detestable by beast or by fowl or by anything wherewith the ground teemeth, which I have set apart for you to hold unclean.⁴ Scripture speaks at the beginning of eating and ends with defilement, in order to indicate that as with reference to defilement the lentil is the standard size so also with regard to eating. Whereupon R. Johanan praised him. Now, does this not contradict Rab's ruling? — No, there is no difficulty, for the one⁵ deals with reptiles while they are dead⁶ the other while they are alive. But, said Abaye to him, does not Rab refer his statement to the Mishnah⁷ and our Mishnah speaks of ALL REPTILES, [apparently] even though they are dead? — Replied R. Joseph: This⁸ is your assumption. The fact is that Rab made an independent statement. [It said]: 'R. Johanan praised him'.⁹ To this an objection was raised. [We have learnt]: 'There is no standard size for entire limbs [of unclean animals]. Even less than an olive-size of nebelah and less than a lentil-size of a reptile effect defilement',¹⁰ And R. Johanan remarked: The penalty of lashes, however, is inflicted only for an olive-size!¹¹ — Said Raba: Scripture speaks only of those that are separated.¹² Said R. Adda son of Ahabah, to Raba: If so, why not draw a distinction also with reference to beasts between those that are separated¹³ and those that are not separated?¹⁴

(1) Unlike defilement where the lentil-size suffices.

(2) Viz., Ye shall not eat them, for they are a detestable thing, Lev. XI, 42. The rule is that wherever 'eating' is used the standard size is an olive.

(3) 'Make your souls detestable' is understood, through eating.

(4) Lev. XX, 25.

(5) Viz., R. Jose.

(6) And effect defilement in which case a comparison may be drawn between eating and defilement, making a lentil's bulk the standard quantity.

(7) Cur. edd. insert here in parenthesis the following text which pseudo-Rashi declares to be incomprehensible: 'and not a little from here and a little from there'.

(8) That Rab was referring to our Mishnah.

(9) Thus agreeing that a lentil is the standard size for the eating of reptiles, and that one is then liable to lashes.

(10) Oh. I, 7.

(11) R. Johanan thus contradicts himself, as this dictum is taken to refer to dead reptiles in analogy to nebelah, and yet an olive-size is required.

(12) The former dictum of R. Johanan according to which the standard size for the eating of reptiles is a lentil refers to the eight reptiles which have been singled out in Lev. XI, 29f for their uncleanness, and whose standard size with regard to defilement is a lentil; while the latter saying of R. Johanan relates to other reptiles which do not effect uncleanness, so that no analogy can be drawn between eating and defilement with regard to the legal size. This dictum of R. Johanan is not to be taken as comment on the Mishnah quoted from Oh. which explicitly mentions uncleanness in connection with reptiles and must therefore relate to the eight reptiles, but as a statement made independently by him.

(13) I.e., clean animals.

(14) I.e., the unclean. The fact that Lev. XX, 25 mentions beasts and reptiles side by side intimates an analogy between these two kinds. Also in the case of beasts, therefore, should some distinction be made as to the standard size between those that are separated and the standard quantity of those that are not separated, an olive-size being prescribed only with regard to the former; but as to the latter, a greater quantity should be required, e.g., that of an egg.

Talmud - Mas. Me'ilah 17a

— He replied to him: The Divine Law compares them with reference to the prohibition of 'you shall not make your souls detestable',¹ but not with regard to standard sizes.² MISHNAH. THE BLOOD OF A REPTILE AND THE FLESH [THEREOF] CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER.³ R. JOSHUA LAID DOWN THE GENERAL RULE: ALL THINGS THAT ARE ALIKE BOTH IN RESPECT OF [DURATION OF] UNCLEANNESS⁴ AND IN RESPECT OF THEIR STANDARD SIZE⁵ CAN COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER. THINGS, HOWEVER, THAT ARE ALIKE IN RESPECT [OF DURATION] OF UNCLEANNESS BUT NOT IN RESPECT OF SIZE, IN RESPECT OF SIZE BUT NOT IN RESPECT [OF DURATION] OF UNCLEANNESS, OR [IF THEY ARE ALIKE] NEITHER IN RESPECT [OF DURATION] OF UNCLEANNESS NOR IN RESPECT OF SIZE, CANNOT COMBINE WITH ONE ANOTHER. GEMARA. Said R. Hanin in the name of R. Zeira, and thus said also Rab Judah:⁶ Only the blood and the flesh of the same reptile [can combine with one another]. R. Jose son of R. Hanina demurred to this: The expression, they that are unclean,⁷ is to teach us that reptiles can combine one with the other: one reptile with another, reptile or [flesh of] reptile with blood, whether they are of one denomination or two denominations!⁸ — Said R. Joseph, There is no contradiction. The one ruling⁹ refers to a whole creature¹⁰ the other to a part thereof. Wherefrom do you know [to make such distinction]? — From what has been taught:¹¹ 'If [the blood]¹² was poured out on a pavement, which was a sloping place, and he overshadowed¹³ a portion he remains clean, if he overshadowed the whole thereof he is unclean'. Now, what does 'a portion' mean? Shall I say, a portion [of the standard quality of blood]?¹⁴ But did not R. Hanina¹⁵ say in the name of Rabbi: 'If one stirred¹⁶ the exact quantity of a fourth of a log of blood he remained clean'.¹⁷ You must therefore conclude [that a distinction has to be made in the following manner]: In the one instance the blood came from a whole body, in the other from a portion thereof.¹⁸ This indeed proves it. R. Mathia b. Heresh once asked R. Simeon b. Yohai, in Rome: Wherefrom do we know that the blood of reptiles is unclean? — He replied: Because it is written: And these are they that are unclean.¹⁹ His disciples then said to him: The son of Yohai has grown wise. Said he to them: This is a teaching prepared in the mouth of R. Eleazar son of R. Jose.²⁰ For the Government²¹ had once issued a decree that [Jews] might not keep the Sabbath, circumcise their children, and that they should have intercourse with menstruant women. Thereupon R. Reuben son of Istroboli cut his hair in the Roman fashion,²² and went and sat among them.²³ He said to them: If a man has an enemy, what does he wish him, to be poor or rich? They said: That he be poor. He said to them: If so, let them²⁴ do no work on the Sabbath so that they grow poor. They said: 'He speaketh rightly',²⁵ let this decree be annulled. It was indeed annulled. Then he continued: If one has an enemy, what does he wish him, to be weak or healthy? They answered:

MISHNAH .¹ IN THREE PLACES THE PRIESTS KEEP WATCH IN THE TEMPLE,² IN THE CHAMBER OF ABTINAS,³ IN THE CHAMBER OF THE SPARK,⁴ AND IN THE FIRE CHAMBER.⁵ IN THE CHAMBER OF ABTINAS AND IN THE CHAMBER OF THE SPARK THERE WERE UPPER CHAMBERS WHERE THE YOUTHS⁶ KEPT WATCH. (2) Not that the Temple or its contents needing guarding, according to the belief of the Sages. but as a mark of honour.

(3) Abtinah (= E) is mentioned elsewhere (Yoma, 38a) as the head of the family which had the secret of making the incense, and apparently it was made in this chamber, which was on the south-east of the Azarah, or altar court.

(4) The reason of this name is not known for certain. Asheri suggests that it was so called because it was open to the rays of the sun. Another suggestion is, because a glimpse of the altar fire could be caught from it.

(5) So called because a fire was kept burning in it for the benefit of the priests who had to minister barefooted on the stone floor and wearing only one linen garment. These two rooms were on the north-west of the Azarah.

(6) Who were not yet quite old enough to minister. They were, however, allowed to keep watch.

DOWN THE WINDING STAIR¹ WHICH WENT UNDER THE BIRAH,² AND WHICH WAS LIT BY LIGHTS ON EACH SIDE UNTIL HE REACHED THE BATHING PLACE. THERE

WAS A FIRE CLOSE BY AND A SUPERIOR PRIVY. ITS SUPERIORITY LAY IN THIS: IF HE FOUND IT LOCKED, HE KNEW THERE WAS SOMEONE THERE; IF IT WAS OPEN, HE KNEW THERE WAS NO ONE THERE. HE WOULD GO DOWN AND BATHE AND THEN COME UP AND DRY HIMSELF AND WARM HIMSELF IN FRONT OF THE FIRE, AND THEN GO AND TAKE HIS SEAT NEXT TO HIS BROTHER PRIESTS UNTIL THE GATES WERE OPENED, WHEN HE WOULD TAKE HIS DEPARTURE.³ ANYONE WHO DESIRED TO REMOVE THE ASHES FROM THE ALTAR USED TO RISE EARLY AND BATHE BEFORE THE SUPERINTENDENT⁴ CAME. AT WHAT TIME DID THE SUPERINTENDENT COME? HE DID NOT ALWAYS COME AT THE SAME TIME; SOMETIMES HE CAME JUST AT COCK-CROW, SOMETIMES A LITTLE BEFORE OR A LITTLE AFTER. THE SUPERINTENDENT WOULD COME AND KNOCK AND THEY WOULD OPEN FOR HIM, AND HE WOULD SAY TO THEM, LET ALL WHO HAVE BATHED COME AND DRAW LOTS. SO THEY DREW LOTS, AND ONE OR OTHER WAS SUCCESSFUL.⁵

GEMARA. Whence [in the Scripture] is this rule derived?⁶ — Abaye replied: Scripture says, And those that were to pitch before the tabernacle eastward, before the tent of meeting toward the sunrising, were Moses and Aaron and his sons, keeping the charge of the sanctuary, even the charge for the children of Israel.⁷ We say, Yes; we have found a basis for the rule of watching, and that it requires priests and Levites. But the Mishnah states:⁸ The priests keep watch in three places and the Levites in twenty-one; [furthermore] whereas Scripture places priests and Levites⁹ together the Mishnah places them separately. — We reply: What it means is this: ‘Those that were to pitch before the tabernacle eastward, before the tent of meeting toward the sunrising, were Moses’; and then, ‘Aaron and his sons keeping the charge of the sanctuary — Aaron in one place and his sons in two places.¹⁰ Whence do you learn [that priests and Levites are separate]? — Because it is written ‘those that were to pitch’ and it is written ‘keeping’ which implies, that those who pitched and those who kept were separate. But I may still say that all [of those who kept] were in one place? — Do not imagine such a thing. Just as Moses was in one place by himself, so Aaron and his sons were each in one place by themselves. R. Ashi said: This can be learnt from the latter part of the verse, [from the words] keeping the charge . . . even the charge.¹¹

Talmud - Mas. Tamid 26b

In regard to the Chamber of Abtinah and the Chamber of the Spark, the question was asked in the Academy. Were they actually upper chambers¹ or were they perhaps simply raised like upper chambers?² — Come and hear; for we have learnt:³ In the north was the Chamber of the Spark, built like a veranda,⁴ and there was an upper chamber on top of it, and the priests kept watch above and the Levites below,⁵ and it had a doorway to the non-sacred part. Whence is this rule⁶ derived? — Because our Rabbis have taught: That they [the Levites] may be joined unto thee [Aaron] and minister unto thee.⁷ The text speaks of thy [Aaron's] service.⁸ You say, The text speaks of thy service. May it not perhaps be of their service?⁹ When it says, And they shall be joined unto thee and keep the charge of the tent of meeting,¹⁰ this disposes of their service. What then do I make of That they may be joined unto thee and minister unto thee? The text must speak of thy service. How is this to be carried out? The priests watch above and the Levites below. THE FIRE CHAMBER WAS VAULTED AND IT WAS A LARGE ROOM. But was there only one watch kept in the Fire Chamber? This is opposed to [the following statement]: There were two gates in the Fire Chamber, one opening on to the Hel and one opening on to the Azarah. R. Judah said: In the doorway opening on to the Azarah there was a small wicket through which they used to go in to inspect the Azarah?¹¹ Abaye said: Since the gates were close to one another,¹² one watchman was sufficient, as he could glance from one to the other. [IT WAS] SURROUNDED WITH STONE PROJECTIONS. What were these projections? — They were the hewn slabs of the projections by which they used to climb up to the projections.¹³ But were there any hewn stones there, seeing that it is written, For the house when it was in building was built of stone made ready etc.¹⁴ — Abaye replied: They were brought ready prepared. smaller stones and larger stones, as it says, Stones of ten cubits and stones of eight cubits.¹⁵ THE ELDERS OF THE BETH AB SLEPT THERE. Why so? Why could they not take in beds? — Abaye replied: It would not be respectful to take beds into the Temple. THE PRIESTLY NOVITIATES PUT EACH HIS PILLOW¹⁶ ON THE GROUND. Why are they first called 'youths' and then

(1) This seems to show that the proper reading in the Mishnah is not, In the Chamber of Abtinah . . . were upper stories, but The Chamber . . . were upper stories; v. Sh. Mek. on the Mishnah.

novitiates'? — They replied: That is quite right. In the first passage, which speaks of those who have not yet become qualified to minister,¹ they are called 'youths'; in the second clause which speaks of those who have become qualified to minister, they are called 'novitiates'. We have learnt elsewhere:² In three places the priests keep watch in the Temple — in the Chamber of Abtinah, in the Chamber of the Spark, and in the Fire Chamber, and the Levites in twenty one places — five at the five gates of the Temple Mount, four at its four corners, on the inside, five at the five gates of the Azarah and four at its four corners on the outside, one in the Offering Chamber, one in the Chamber of the Veil, and one behind the place of the Mercy Seat. On what Scriptural text was this practice based? — Rab Judah from Sura replied — according to others, it is taught in a Baraita: Because it is written: Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and for the Storehouse [asuppim] two and two. For the Precinct [Parbar] westward four at the causeway and two at the Precinct.³ But, it was observed, that makes twenty-four? — Abaye replied: We must understand thus: For the two asuppim⁴ there were two. That still leaves twenty-two? — At the parbar there was properly only one watchman, and the other merely went and sat by him for company, because he was far outside.⁵ What is the meaning of parbar? — Rabbah, son of R. Shilah replied: It is as if one said, Towards the outside [clape bar]. If you like I can say that there were really twenty-four places, as stated in the text, three of them for priests and twenty-one for Levites. But the text says here 'Levites'? This is explained by R. Joshua b. Levi; for R. Joshua b. Levi said: In twenty-four places 'priests' are called Levites, and this is one of them,⁶ viz., But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok.⁷ 'Five at the five gates of the Temple Mount and four at its four corners on the inside, five at the five gates of the Azarah and four at its four corners on the outside'. Why in the case of the Temple Mount are they placed on the inside and in the case of the Azarah on the outside? — They replied: On the Temple Mount,⁸ if the watchman feels tired and wants to sit down, he may sit, and therefore he is placed on the inside, but in the Azarah, if he feels tired and wants to sit down he may not sit, since a Master has said that sitting is not allowed in the Azarah save only to kings of the House of David; therefore they are Placed on the outside. The Master said: 'Five at the five gates of the Azarah'. Were there then only five gates in the Azarah? This seems to contradict the following:⁹ There were seven gates in the Azarah, three on the north, three on the south, and one on the east! — Abaye said: Two of them did not require to be watched.¹⁰ Raba said: There is a difference of Tannaim on this point, as it has been taught:¹¹ There must not be less than thirteen treasurers [attached to the Azarah] and seven supervisors. R. Nathan said: There must be not less than thirteen treasurers corresponding to the thirteen gates. Subtract five for the Temple Mount, and eight are left for the Azarah. We see therefore that there is a Tanna who says there were eight, and one who says there were seven, and one who says there were five. THEY DID NOT SLEEP IN THEIR SACRED GARMENTS etc. It was sleeping which was forbidden, but they used to walk about in them. You may infer from this that the priestly garments could be made general¹² use of! — It was replied: In fact walking about in them was also forbidden, and the reason why the Mishnah says simply that they did not sleep in them was because it was going to say subsequently, BUT THEY TAKE THEM OFF AND FOLD THEM AND PLACE THEM UNDER THEIR HEADS. Therefore it says in the first clause also THEY DID NOT SLEEP IN THEM. But your explanation itself involves a difficulty. THEY PLACE THEM UNDER THEIR HEADS: this shows that general use may be made of the priestly garments? — Read, Opposite their heads. R. Papa said: We may infer from this that it is allowed to place tefillin at one's side [when sleeping] and we are not afraid that perhaps one will roll over and fall on them. It is reasonable to suppose that what is meant is opposite the head. For if you say 'under the head' even granting that they may be made general use of, it should still be forbidden on the ground of mixed kinds.¹³

. This argument is valid for one who says that the girdle of the high priest was not the same as the girdle of the ordinary priest.¹ But if one holds that the girdle of the ordinary priest is the same as that of the high priest, what is there to say? And should you allege that mixed kinds are forbidden only for putting over and putting on, but there is no objection to folding them under one, has it not been taught: Neither shall there come upon thee [a garment of two kinds of stuff];² you may, however, spread it under you. The Sages, however, said that it is forbidden to do this, for fear that a thread may wind itself round his body. And should you argue that there is something separating, behold, R. Simeon has said in the name of Joshua b. Levi who had it from R. Jose b. Saul in the name of the holy congregation in Jerusalem, that even if there are ten coverings one on top of another and mixed kinds under them, it is forbidden to sleep on them. We must then conclude that what is meant is opposite the head. Alternatively, I may say that the Mishnah speaks of those garments in which there are no mixed kinds. R. Ashi said: The priestly garments were hard;³ since R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: This hard fabric made in Naresh⁴ is permitted.⁵ (Come and hear: It is forbidden to go out into the town in priestly garments, but it is permissible to walk about in them in the Temple whether at the time of service or otherwise, since the priestly garments may be made general use of. This is conclusive. But not in the town? Has it not been taught: ‘On the twenty-first of this month is the day of Mount Gerizim on which it is forbidden to mourn, as we find in Yoma⁶ in the section ‘The High priest used to come’ etc. up to ‘If you like I can say they are fit for the priestly garments’.⁶ Or if you like I can say ‘When it is a time to act for the Lord they break Thy Law’).⁷ IF AN ACCIDENT HAPPENED TO ONE OF THEM etc. This supports the view of R. Johanan who said that the subterranean passage possessed no sanctity, and that a baal ker⁸ is sent out of two camps.⁹ WITH LIGHTS BURNING ON EACH SIDE etc. R. Safra was once sitting in a privy when R. Abba came and gave a cough,¹⁰ whereupon R. Safra said, pray, enter, Sir. When he came out, R. Abba said to him: Though you have not got as far as a he-goat¹¹ you have learnt the manners of a he-goat. Have we not learnt as follows: IF HE FOUND IT LOCKED, HE KNEW THAT THERE WAS SOMEONE INSIDE? This was to signify that he ought not to have gone in.¹² R. Safra, however, thought that perhaps it would be dangerous for him to wait, as it has been taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: To hold back faeces brings on dropsy; to hold back urine brings on jaundice. Rab said to his son Hiyya — and so also said R. Huna to his son Raba — attend to your needs at nightfall and before daybreak,¹³ so that you shall not need to go a long way.¹⁴ Sit first and then Uncover, and cover first and then rise. Wipe [the cup] before drinking and wipe again before putting it down; and when you drink water, pour out some before giving [the cup] to your disciple,¹⁵ as it has been taught: A man should not drink water and hand [the cup] to his disciple unless he first pours some out. It happened once that a man drank some water and without pouring any out gave [the cup] to his disciple. The disciple was squeamish and did not like to drink, and he died of thirst. There and then they laid down a rule that a man should not drink and give [the cup] to his disciple without pouring some out. R. Ashi said: Consequently if a disciple pours out in front of his teacher, this shows no disrespect. Do not spit anything out in front of your teacher except pumpkin and leek, for they are like molten lead.¹⁶ We have learnt elsewhere:¹⁷ The officer of the Temple Mount used to go round to every watch with torches burning before him, and if any watchman did not rise and say, Officer,

I greet you, it was a proof that he was asleep,¹ and he would beat him with his stick. He was also permitted to burn his clothes. The others would say, What noise is that in the Azarah? It is the cry of a Levite who is being beaten and whose garments are being burnt because he was asleep at his post. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: Once they found my mother's brother asleep and they burnt his clothes. R. Hiyya b. Abba said: When R. Johanan came to this Mishnah he used to say: Happy were the former generations who punished even for being overpowered by sleep; how much more then when there was no overpowering as of sleep!² It has been taught: Rabbi says: Which is a right way that a man should choose? Let him love reproof, since as long as there is reproof in the world ease of mind comes to the world, good and blessing come to the world, and evil departs from the world, as it says, But to them that are reprov'd shall come delight; and a good blessing shall come upon them.³ Some say: Let him have scrupulous honesty,⁴ as it says, Mine eyes are upon the faithful of the land that they may dwell with me,⁵ etc. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Whoever reproves his neighbour for a purely religious motive⁶ is deemed worthy to be in the portion of the Holy One, blessed be He,⁷ as it says, He that rebuketh a man is after Me.⁸ Not only so, but a thread of favour shall twine about him, as it says, He shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.⁹ IF HE FOUND IT LOCKED HE KNEW etc. . . . WHOEVER WANTED TO REMOVE THE ASHES FROM THE ALTAR etc. This statement contains a contradiction. You say first: WHOEVER WANTS TO REMOVE THE ASHES FROM THE ALTAR RISES EARLY AND BATHES BEFORE THE SUPERINTENDENT COMES, which would show that the matter does not depend on drawing of lots, and then it states, LET HIM COME AND DRAW LOTS, which shows that it does depend on the casting of lots?-Abaye replied: There is no contradiction. The first statement refers to the period before the regulation, the second to the period after the regulation, as we have learnt:¹⁰ At first whoever desired to remove the ashes from the altar used to do so. When there were several of them they used to run and go up the Ascent¹¹ and whoever was first in the last four cubits had the privilege. If two were level, the superintendent said to them, put your fingers out. They put out the one or two fingers, but they did not put out the thumb in the Temple. It happened once that two were running level up the Ascent and one of them pushed the other and he broke his leg, and when the Beth din saw that they were endangering themselves, they ordained that the task of removing the ashes should be assigned only by lot. Raba said: Both statements refer to the period after the regulation, and what it means is this: Whoever wanted to come and draw lots used to rise early and bathe before the superintendent came. MISHNAH. HE TOOK THE KEY¹² AND OPENED THE SMALL DOOR AND WENT FROM THE FIRE CHAMBER INTO THE AZARAH, AND THE PRIESTS WENT IN AFTER HIM CARRYING TWO LIGHTED TORCHES. THEY DIVIDED INTO TWO GROUPS, ONE OF WHICH WENT ALONG THE PORTICO¹³ TO THE EAST, WHILE THE OTHER WENT ALONG IT TO THE WEST. THEY WENT ALONG INSPECTING¹⁴ UNTIL THEY CAME TO THE PLACE WHERE THE GRIDDLE-CAKES¹⁵ WERE MADE.¹⁶ THERE THE TWO GROUPS MET AND SAID, IS IT WELL? ALL IS WELL.¹⁷ THEY THEN APPOINTED HIM THAT MADE THE

GRIDDLE-CAKES TO MAKE GRIDDLE-CAKES. THE ONE ON WHOM THE LOT HAD FALLEN TO CLEAR THE ASHES FROM THE ALTAR MADE READY TO DO SO. THEY SAID TO HIM: 'BE CAREFUL NOT TO TOUCH ANY VESSEL UNTIL YOU HAVE WASHED YOUR HANDS AND FEET FROM THE LAVER. SEE, THE FIREPAN IS IN THE CORNER BETWEEN THE ASCENT AND THE ALTAR ON THE WEST OF THE ASCENT'. NO ONE ENTERED WITH HIM,¹⁸ NOR DID HE CARRY ANY LIGHT¹⁹ BUT HE WALKED BY THE LIGHT OF THE ALTAR FIRE. HE WASHED HIS HANDS AND FEET FROM THE LAVER, THEN TOOK THE SILVER FIREPAN AND WENT UP TO THE TOP OF THE ALTAR AND CLEARED AWAY THE CINDERS² ON EITHER SIDE AND SCOOPED UP THE ASHES³ IN THE CENTRE. HE THEN DESCENDED AND WHEN HE REACHED THE PAVEMENT⁴ HE TURNED HIS FACE TO THE NORTH⁵ AND WENT ALONG THE EAST SIDE OF THE ASCENT FOR ABOUT TEN CUBITS, AND HE THEN MADE A HEAP OF THE CINDERS ON THE PAVEMENT THREE HANDBREADTHS AWAY FROM THE ASCENT, IN THE PLACE WHERE THEY USED TO PUT THE CROP OF THE BIRDS⁶ AND THE ASHES FROM THE INNER ALTAR⁷ AND THE ASH FROM THE CANDLESTICK. THE PRIEST WAS NEGLECTFUL¹ IN TAKING OUT THE ASHES.² THEY THEN BEGAN TO TAKE UP THE LOGS³ TO LAY THE FIRE. WERE ALL KINDS OF WOOD SUITABLE FOR THE FIRE? ALL KINDS OF WOOD WERE SUITABLE FOR THE FIRE EXCEPT VINE AND OLIVE WOOD. O WHAT THEY MOSTLY USED, HOWEVER, WERE BOUGHS OF FIG TREES AND OF NUT TREES AND OF OIL TREES: HE⁴ THEN ARRANGED THE GREAT PILE⁵ ON THE EAST SIDE OF THE ALTAR WITH ITS OPEN SIDE⁶ ON THE EAST,⁷ WHILE THE INNER ENDS OF THE [SELECTED] LOGS TOUCHED THE CENTRAL HEAP. SPACES WERE LEFT BETWEEN THE LOGS IN WHICH THEY KINDLED THE BRUSHWOOD.⁸ THEY PICKED OUT FROM THERE SOME SPECIALLY GOOD FIG-TREE BRANCHES AND WITH THESE HE LAID A SECOND FIRE FOR THE INCENSE⁹ NEAR THE SOUTH-WESTERN CORNER SOME FOUR CUBITS TO THE NORTH OF IT,¹⁰ USING AS MUCH WOOD AS HE JUDGED SUFFICIENT TO FORM FIVE SE'AH'S OF CINDERS, AND ON SABBATH AS MUCH AS HE THOUGHT WOULD MAKE EIGHT SE'AH'S OF CINDERS, BECAUSE FROM THERE THEY USED TO TAKE FIRE FOR THE TWO DISHES OF FRANKINCENSE FOR THE SHEW-BREAD. THE LIMBS AND THE PIECES OF FAT WHICH HAD NOT BEEN CONSUMED OVER NIGHT WERE PUT BACK ON THE WOOD WHICH HAD BEEN LAID.¹¹ THEY THEN KINDLED THE TWO FIRES AND DESCENDED AND WENT TO THE CHAMBER OF HEWN STONE.¹² GEMARA. Ammi said: The Torah used hyperbole, the prophets used hyperbole, the Sages used hyperbole. The Torah used hyperbole, as where it is written, The cities are great and fortified up to heaven.¹⁵ Up to heaven, think you? No; but it is an exaggeration. 'The Sages Used hyperbole', in the cases we have just mentioned — the heap and the giving the sacrifice beast to drink from a gold cup. 'The prophets used hyperbole', as it is written, And the people piped with pipes. . . . so that the earth rent with the sound of them.¹⁶ R. Jannai b. Nahmani said in the name of Samuel; In three places the Sages used the language of hyperbole, namely, in connection with the heap, the vine and the veil.¹⁷ This excludes the case cited by Raba, where we have learnt, 'They made the beast for the daily sacrifice drink from a gold cup', and Raba said, This is an exaggeration. This teaches us that this is true of the other cases, but not of this one, because in the abode of wealth no sign of poverty is allowed.¹⁸ [The exaggeration in the case of] the heap is as stated. In the case of the wine it is as has been taught:¹⁹ A gold vine used to stand at the door of the inner temple, trailed on poles, and anyone who offered a leaf

- (9) I.e., to obtain coals for kindling the incense. For this it was reckoned a mark of respect to have a special fire.
- (10) These five cubits of the altar faced the doorway of the Hekal, and could therefore be described as being ‘before the Lord’, and it was considered meritorious to obtain the coals for the incense from this space. The fifth cubit had to be used because four were taken up by the projections of the altar.
- (11) It is not clear if this was before or after the daily offering was kindled.
- (12) To cast further lots, half of this chamber being in unconsecrated ground. The Chamber of Hewn Stone was the Hall wherein the Great Sanhedrin used to sit. Schurer II, p. 264 identifies it with the Chamber ‘close to the Xystus’ on the western border of the Temple Mount, v. J. E. XII, 576.

or a single grape or a cluster used to bring it and hang it thereon. Said R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok: On one occasion three hundred priests were commissioned to clear it. The case of the veil as has been taught:¹ We have learnt: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The thickness of the veil² was a handbreadth. It was formed of seventy-two strands, and each was made up of twenty-four threads.³ Its length was forty cubits and its breadth was twenty cubits, and it was made by eighty-two young girls,⁴ and two were made every year,⁵ and it took three hundred priests to immerse it.⁶ THEY BEGAN TO TAKE UP THE LOGS TO LAY THE FIRE. . . . EXCEPT VINE AND OLIVE WOOD. Why were these excepted? — R. Papa said: Because they have knots:⁷ R. Aha b. Jacob said: Because of the amenities of the Land of Israel.⁸ The following was cited in objection [to R. papa]: upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar;⁹ this implies wood which rapidly becomes fire.¹⁰ Which kind is that? Thin boughs like spits which do not form knots, that is, that do not become knotted inwardly.¹¹ Are all kinds of wood suitable for the altar fire? All kinds are suitable excepts olive and vine, but what were mostly used were boughs of fig trees and nut trees and oil trees. R. Eleazar adds [as not suitable]: also wood from the matish¹² and the oak and the date tree and the carob and sycamore. There is no difficulty here for the one who says that it is because they are knotted. The difference according to him is that one authority holds that although they are not knotted on the inside, yet since they are knotted on the outside we do not use them,¹³ while the other holds that since they are not knotted on the inside, although they are knotted on the outside we still bring them. But to the one who says, it is because of the amenities of the Land of Israel, we can object, does not the date tree contribute to the amenities of the Land of Israel? — He can reply to you: By the same reasoning does not the fig tree contribute to the amenities of the Land of Israel? But what do you answer to this? That we speak of a fig tree which does not produce fruit. Similarly we speak of a date tree which does not produce fruit. But are there fig trees which do not produce fruit? Yes, as stated by Rahabah. For Rahabah said: They bring white fig trees and scrape them with a rope of date tree bark on which seed is smeared,¹ and they are then planted in alluvial soil, and they produce trunks but no fruit, and three branches of one will break down a bridge. HE THEN ARRANGED THE GREAT PILE etc. What is the reason [for the opening]? R. Huna and R. Hisda [gave different reasons]. One said, it was in order that a draught might blow on it, the other said it was in order that they might kindle the brushwood from there. The following was cited in objection [to the latter opinion]: SPACES WERE LEFT BETWEEN THE LOGS IN WHICH THEY KINDLED THE BRUSHWOOD. He can reply: [Brushwood] was put in several places.²

MISHNAH. THE SUPERINTENDENT THEN SAID TO THEM: COME AND CAST LOTS, TO SEE WHO IS TO SLAUGHTER THE ANIMAL,³ AND WHO IS TO SPRINKLE THE BLOOD, AND WHO IS TO CLEAR THE ASHES FROM THE INNER ALTAR,⁴ AND WHO IS TO CLEAR THE ASH FROM THE CANDLESTICK, AND WHO IS TO LIFT THE LIMBS ON TO THE ASCENT, [NAMELY] THE HEAD, THE RIGHT LEG, THE BREAST AND THE NECK AND THE TWO FLANKS WITH THE ENTRAILS, ALSO THE FINE FLOUR⁵ AND THE GRIDDLE CAKES⁶ AND THE WINE.⁷ THEY CAST LOTS AND ONE OR OTHER WAS SUCCESSFUL. HE THEN SAID TO THEM: GO OUT AND SEE IF IT IS YET TIME FOR THE SLAUGHTER. IF IT ACTUALLY WAS TIME, THE OBSERVER⁸ SAID, THERE ARE FLASHES.⁹ MATTITHIA B. SAMUEL SAYS: [HE USED TO SAY]¹⁰ THE WHOLE OF THE EAST [OF THE SKY] HAS LIT UP. [THEY WOULD ASK] AS FAR AS HEBRON? AND HE [THE OBSERVER] WOULD ANSWER YES. HE SAID TO THEM, GO OUT AND BRING A LAMB FROM THE LAMBS CHAMBER. NOW THE LAMBS CHAMBER WAS IN THE NORTH-WESTERN CORNER.¹¹ THERE WERE FOUR CHAMBERS THERE¹² — THE LAMBS' CHAMBER, THE CHAMBER OF THE SEALS,¹³ THE CHAMBER OF THE FIRE-ROOM¹⁴ AND THE CHAMBER WHERE THE SHEWBREAD WAS PREPARED. THEY WENT INTO THE CHAMBER OF THE VESSELS

AND BROUGHT OUT FROM THERE NINETY-THREE VESSELS OF SILVER AND GOLD. THEY GAVE THE ANIMAL FOR THE DAILY SACRIFICE A DRINK FROM A CUP

OF GOLD.¹ ALTHOUGH IT HAD BEEN EXAMINED ON THE PREVIOUS EVENING IT WAS NOW EXAMINED AGAIN BY TORCHLIGHT. THOSE ON WHOM THE LOT HAD FALLEN TO CLEAR THE ASH FROM THE INNER ALTAR AND FROM THE CANDLESTICK WENT ON IN FRONT WITH FOUR VESSELS IN THEIR HANDS — THE TENI² AND THE KUZ³ AND TWO KEYS. THE TENI RESEMBLED A TIRKAB⁴ OF GOLD AND HELD TWO KABS AND A HALF. THE KUZ RESEMBLED A LARGE GOLD PITCHER. WITH ONE OF THE TWO KEYS HE HAD TO REACH DOWN AS FAR AS HIS ARMPIT⁵ AND WITH THE OTHER HE OPENED IN FRONT OF HIM.⁶ HE THEN CAME TO THE SMALL DOOR ON THE NORTH. THE GREAT GATE HAD TWO SMALL WICKETS LET IN, ONE ON THE NORTH AND ONE ON THE SOUTH. NO ONE EVER WENT IN BY THE DOOR ON THE SOUTH, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE DISTINCT STATEMENT IN EZEKIEL, NAMELY, AND THE LORD SAID UNTO ME, THIS GATE SHALL BE CLOSED, IT SHALL NOT BE OPENED, AND NO MAN SHALL ENTER BY IT, FOR THE LORD GOD OF ISRAEL HAS ENTERED BY IT.⁷ HE TOOK THE KEY AND OPENED THE SMALL DOOR AND WENT IN TO THE APARTMENT⁸ AND FROM THE APARTMENT TO THE HEKAL, [WHICH HE TRAVERSED] UNTIL HE REACHED THE GREAT GATE. WHEN HE REACHED THE GREAT GATE HE DREW BACK THE BOLT AND THE LATCHES⁹ AND OPENED IT. THE SLAUGHTERER DID NOT KILL TILL HE HEARD THE SOUND OF THE GREAT GATE BEING OPENED. FROM JERICHO¹⁰ THEY HEARD THE SOUND OF THE GREAT GATE BEING OPENED. FROM JERICHO THEY HEARD THE SOUND OF THE 'SHOVEL'.¹¹ FROM JERICHO THEY HEARD THE SOUND

OF THE SINGING [OF THE LEVITES].¹² FROM JERICHO THEY USED TO HEAR THE SOUND OF BEN ARZA CLASHING THE CYMBALS. FROM JERICHO THEY USED TO HEAR THE SOUND OF THE PIPES. FROM JERICHO THEY COULD HEAR THE VOICE OF GABIN THE HERALD.¹³ FROM JERICHO THEY HEARD THE NOISE OF THE WOODEN PULLEY WHICH BEN KATIN MADE FOR THE LAVER.¹⁴ FROM JERICHO THEY HEARD THE SOUND OF THE SINGING [OF THE LEVITES]. FROM JERICHO THEY HEARD THE SOUND OF THE SHOFAR;¹⁵ SOME SAY ALSO OF THE HIGH PRIEST WHEN HE PRONOUNCED THE DIVINE NAME ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT. FROM JERICHO THEY COULD SMELL THE ODOUR OF THE COMPOUNDING OF INCENSE. R. ELEAZAR B. DIGLAI SAID: MY FATHER HAD SOME GOATS IN THE TOWNS OF MICHVAR,¹⁶ AND THEY USED TO SNEEZE FROM THE SMELL OF THE INCENSE. THE PRIEST WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN TO KILL THE DAILY OFFERING TOOK IT ALONG WITH HIM TO THE SLAUGHTER HOUSE, ACCOMPANIED BY THOSE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN TO HAND UP THE LIMBS. THE SLAUGHTER HOUSE WAS TO THE NORTH OF THE ALTAR.¹⁷ BY IT WERE EIGHT DWARF PILLARS ON TOP OF WHICH WERE BLOCKS OF CEDAR WOOD, IN WHICH WERE FIXED HOOKS OF IRON, THREE ROWS IN EACH.¹⁸ THE ANIMALS WERE HUNG ON THESE AND FLAYED OVER TABLES OF MARBLE BETWEEN THE PILLARS. THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN FOR CLEARING THE INNER ALTAR WENT IN CARRYING THE TENI WHICH HE SET DOWN IN FRONT OF IT, AND HE SCOOPED UP THE ASH IN HIS FISTS AND PUT IT INSIDE, AND IN THE END HE SWEEPED UP WHAT WAS LEFT INTO IT, AND THEN HE LEFT IT THERE AND WENT OUT. THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN TO CLEAR THE CANDLESTICK WENT IN, AND IF HE FOUND THE TWO WESTERN LIGHTS BURNING,¹⁹ HE CLEARED THE ASH FROM THE REST AND LEFT THESE TWO BURNING. IF HE²⁰ FOUND THAT THESE TWO HAD GONE OUT, HE CLEARED AWAY THEIR ASH AND KINDLED THEM FROM THOSE WHICH WERE STILL ALIGHT AND THEN HE CLEARED THE ASH FROM THE REST. THERE WAS A STONE IN FRONT OF THE CANDLESTICK²¹ WITH THREE STEPS ON WHICH THE PRIEST STOOD IN ORDER TO TRIM THE LIGHTS. HE LEFT THE KUZ ON THE SECOND STEP AND WENT OUT.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. THEY DID NOT USE TO TIE UP²² THE LAMB BUT THEY STRUNG ITS LEGS TOGETHER.²³ THOSE ON WHOM THE LOT FELL FOR THE LIMBS TOOK HOLD OF IT. IT WAS STRUNG UP IN SUCH A WAY THAT ITS HEAD WAS TO THE SOUTH WHILE ITS FACE WAS TURNED TO THE WEST,²⁴ AND THE SLAUGHTERER STOOD TO THE EAST OF IT WITH HIS FACE TURNED TO THE WEST. THE MORNING SACRIFICE WAS KILLED BY THE NORTH-WESTERN CORNER OF THE ALTAR AT THE SECOND RING,²⁵ WHILE THE EVENING SACRIFICE WAS KILLED BY THE NORTH-EASTERN CORNER AT THE SECOND RING. WHILE ONE SLAUGHTERED ANOTHER RECEIVED THE BLOOD. THE LATTER PROCEEDED TO THE NORTH-EASTERN CORNER²⁶ AND CAST THE BLOOD ON THE EASTERN AND NORTHERN SIDES; HE THEN PROCEEDED TO THE SOUTHWESTERN CORNER AND CAST THE BLOOD ON THE WESTERN AND SOUTHERN SIDES. THE REMNANT OF

THE BLOOD HE Poured OUT AT THE SOUTHERN BASE OF THE ALTAR.

. HE DID NOT USE TO BREAK THE LEG,¹ BUT HE MADE A HOLE IN IT² AT THE JOINT AND SUSPENDED IT FROM THERE. HE THEN BEGAN TO FLAY IT AND WENT ON UNTIL HE CAME TO THE BREAST.³ WHEN HE CAME TO THE BREAST HE CUT OFF THE HEAD AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN. HE THEN CUT OFF THE LEGS AND GAVE THEM TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT THEY HAD FALLEN. ON COMPLETING THE Flaying HE TORE OUT THE HEART AND SQUEEZED OUT THE BLOOD IN IT.⁴ HE THEN CUT OFF THE FORE LEGS AND GAVE THEM TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT THEY HAD FALLEN. HE THEN WENT BACK TO THE RIGHT LEG AND CUT IT OFF AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT

HAD FALLEN, AND THE TWO TESTICLES WITH IT. HE THEN TORE OPEN THE CARCASS SO THAT IT WAS ALL EXPOSED BEFORE HIM. HE TOOK THE FAT AND PUT IT ON TOP OF THE PLACE WHERE THE HEAD HAD BEEN SEVERED. HE TOOK THE INNARDS AND GAVE THEM TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT THEY HAD FALLEN TO WASH THEM. THE STOMACH WAS WASHED VERY THOROUGHLY IN THE WASHING CHAMBER, WHILE THE ENTRAILS WERE WASHED AT LEAST⁵ THREE TIMES ON MARBLE TABLES WHICH STOOD BETWEEN THE PILLARS.⁶ HE THEN TOOK A KNIFE AND SEPARATED THE LUNG FROM THE LIVER⁷ AND THE FINGER OF THE LIVER⁸ FROM THE LIVER,⁹ BUT WITHOUT REMOVING IT FROM ITS PLACE. HE HOLLOWED OUT THE BREAST¹⁰ AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN. HE CAME TO THE RIGHT FLANK AND CUT INTO IT AS FAR AS THE SPINE, WITHOUT HOWEVER TOUCHING THE SPINE, UNTIL HE CAME TO THE PLACE BETWEEN TWO SMALL RIBS. HE CUT IT OFF AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN, WITH THE LIVER ATTACHED TO IT. HE THEN CAME TO THE NECK, AND LEAVING TWO RIBS ON EACH SIDE OF IT¹¹ HE CUT IT OFF AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN, WITH THE WINDPIPE AND THE HEART AND THE LUNG ATTACHED TO IT. HE THEN CAME TO THE LEFT FLANK IN WHICH HE LEFT TWO THIN RIBS ABOVE AND TWO THIN RIBS BELOW;¹² AND HE HAD DONE SIMILARLY WITH THE OTHER FLANK. THUS HE LEFT TWO ON EACH SIDE ABOVE AND TWO ON EACH SIDE BELOW. HE CUT IT OFF AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN, AND THE SPINE WITH IT AND THE MILT ATTACHED TO IT. THIS WAS REALLY THE LARGEST PIECE, BUT THE RIGHT FLANK WAS CALLED THE LARGEST, BECAUSE THE LIVER WAS ATTACHED TO IT. HE THEN CAME TO THE TAIL BONE, WHICH HE CUT OFF AND GAVE TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN, ALONG WITH THE TAIL, THE FINGER OF THE LIVER AND THE TWO KIDNEYS. HE THEN TOOK THE LEFT LEG AND CUT IT OFF AND GAVE IT TO THE ONE TO WHOSE LOT IT HAD FALLEN. BY THIS TIME THEY WERE ALL STANDING IN A ROW WITH THE LIMBS IN THEIR HANDS

. THE FIRST HAD THE HEAD AND THE [RIGHT] HIND LEG. THE HEAD WAS IN HIS RIGHT HAND WITH ITS NOSE TOWARDS HIS ARM, ITS HORNS BETWEEN HIS FINGERS, AND THE PLACE WHERE IT WAS SEVERED TURNED UPWARDS WITH THE FAT COVERING IT. THE RIGHT LEG WAS IN HIS LEFT HAND WITH THE PLACE WHERE THE FLAYING COMMENCED AWAY FROM HIM.¹ THE SECOND HAD THE TWO FORE LEGS, THE RIGHT LEG IN HIS RIGHT HAND AND THE LEFT LEG IN HIS LEFT HAND, THE PLACE WHERE THE FLAYING COMMENCED BEING TURNED AWAY FROM HIM. THE THIRD HAD THE TAIL BONE AND THE OTHER HIND LEG, THE TAIL BONE IN HIS RIGHT HAND WITH THE TAIL HANGING BETWEEN HIS FINGERS AND THE FINGER OF THE LIVER AND THE TWO KIDNEYS WITH IT, AND THE LEFT HIND LEG IN HIS LEFT HAND WITH THE PLACE WHERE THE FLAYING COMMENCED AWAY FROM HIM. THE FOURTH HAD THE BREAST AND THE NECK, THE BREAST IN HIS RIGHT HAND AND THE NECK IN HIS LEFT HAND, ITS RIBS BEING BETWEEN TWO OF HIS FINGERS. THE FIFTH HAD THE TWO FLANKS, THE RIGHT ONE IN HIS RIGHT HAND, AND THE LEFT ONE IN HIS LEFT HAND, WITH THE PLACE WHERE THE FLAYING COMMENCED AWAY FROM HIM. THE SIXTH HAD THE INNARDS ON A PLATTER² WITH THE KNEES ON TOP OF THEM. THE SEVENTH HAD THE FINE FLOUR,³ THE EIGHTH THE GRIDDLE CAKES,⁴ THE NINTH THE WINE.⁵ THEY WENT AND PLACED THEM ON THE LOWER HALF OF THE ASCENT⁶ ON ITS WESTERN SIDE, AND SALTED THEM⁷ AND CAME DOWN AND WENT TO THE CHAMBER OF HEWN STONE TO RECITE THE SHEMA'.⁸ GEMARA. One taught: The fore leg and the hind leg [tied together] like the binding of Isaac the son of Abraham. THEY DID NOT TIE UP THE LAMB. What was the reason? — R. Huna and R. Hisda gave different answers. One said it was to avoid showing disrespect to holy things. while the other said it was to avoid walking in the statutes of the other peoples.⁹ What practical difference is there between them?¹⁰ — In the case where it was tied with silk or with gold thread.¹¹ We have learnt elsewhere:¹² There were thirteen tables in the Temple.¹³ There were eight of marble in the slaughter house on which they used to wash the innards; two to the west of the ascent, one of marble and one of silver — on the marble one they used to put the limbs and on the silver one vessels of service,¹⁴ two in the Porch on the inner side by the door of the Sanctuary, one of silver and one of gold — on the silver one they used to place the Shewbread when it was first brought in,¹⁵ and on the gold one when it was taken out, because with holy things we always go a step higher and not a step lower; and one of gold in the inner place on which the Shewbread always rested. Now let us see. There must be no sign of poverty in the abode of wealth.¹⁶ Why then was the table¹⁷ made of marble? It should have been made of silver or even of gold! R. Hinnena answered in the name of R. Assi, and R. Assi in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac: Because [the metal] would heat the flesh.¹⁸ THE MORNING SACRIFICE WAS KILLED BY THE NORTHWESTERN CORNER [etc.]. Whence is derived this rule? — R. Hisda replied: Because Scriptures says. Two to the day,¹⁹ implying [that they should be killed] towards the day[light].²⁰ It has been taught to the same effect: Two to the day: this means, towards the day [light]. You say it means, towards the day[light]. Or perhaps it is not so, but it means, the obligation of each day? When the text says. The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning and the other lamb shalt thou offer at dusk,²¹ this states the obligation of the day. What then do I make of the words Two to the day? This must mean, towards the day [light]. How is this effected? The morning daily sacrifice was killed by the north-western corner by the second ring, and the evening daily sacrifice by the north-eastern corner by the second ring.²² Alexander of Macedon put ten questions to the elders of the south country.²³ He asked:

- (1) I.e., exposed to the public, while the place where it was severed was in his hand.
 - (2) Being loose they could not be held in the hand.
 - (3) For the meal-offering.
 - (4) The daily offering of the High Priest, which was brought at the same time as the daily burnt-offering.
 - (5) For the drink-offering.
 - (6) The reason was apparently to make rather more ceremonious the actual bringing to the altar which took place later.
 - (7) In accordance with the injunction in Lev. II, 13.
 - (8) And pray for the acceptance of the sacrifice.
 - (9) Who used to bind their sacrifices in this way.
 - (10) Since each reason is in itself sufficient, why did not the later authority accept that given by the earlier?
 - (11) In this case there is no disrespect to holy things.
 - (12) Shek. 15b.
 - (13) Ten in the Azarah, and three others in the Sanctuary.
 - (14) The ninety-three vessels mentioned in our Mishnah.

 - (17) On which the limbs were put.
 - (18) Causing it to putrefy.
 - (19) Num. XXVIII, 3. E.V., 'two day by day'.
 - (20) I.e., towards the rise of the sun, hence in the west, facing east.
 - (21) Ibid. 4.
 - (22) V. supra at the beginning of the chapter and notes.
 - (23) This passage is inserted here because Alexander's first question had reference to the sun.

Talmud - Mas. Tamid 32a

Which is further, from heaven to earth or from east to west? They replied: From east to west. The proof is that when the sun is in the east all can look at it, and when it is in the west all can look at it, but when the sun is in the middle of the sky no — one can look at it.¹ The Sages, however, say: The distance in both cases is the same, as it says, For as the heaven is high above the earth [so great is His mercy towards them that fear Him]; as far as the east is from the west, [so far hath He removed our transgressions from us].² Now if one of these distances is greater, the text should not write both but only the one which is the greater. What then is the reason why no — one can look at the sun when it is in the middle of the sky? Because it is absolutely clear and nothing obstructs the view.³ He said to them: Were heavens created first or the earth? They replied: The heavens were created first, as it says. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.⁴ He said to them: Was light created first, or darkness? They replied: This question cannot be solved. Why did they not reply that darkness was created first, since it is written, Now the earth was unformed and void and darkness,⁵ and after that, And God said, Let there be light, and there was light?⁶ — They thought to themselves: perhaps he will go on to ask what is above and what is below, what is before and what is after.⁷ If that is the case, they should not have answered his question about the heaven either? — At first they thought that he just happened to ask that question, but when they saw that he pursued the same subject, they bethought themselves not to answer him lest he should go on to ask what was above and what was below what was before and what was after. He said to them: Who is called wise? They replied: Who is wise? He who discerns what is about to come to pass.⁸ He said to them: Who is called a mighty man? They replied: Who is a mighty man? He who subdues his evil passions. He said to them: Who is called a rich man? They replied: Who is rich? He who rejoices in his lot. He said to them: What shall a man do to live? They replied: Let him mortify himself.⁹ What should a man do to kill himself? They replied: Let him keep himself alive.¹⁰ He said to them: What should a man do to make himself popular? They replied: Let him hate sovereignty and authority. He said to them: I have a better answer than yours: let him love sovereignty and authority and confer favours on mankind. He said to them: Is it better to dwell on sea or on dry land? They replied, It is better to dwell on dry land, because those who set out to sea are never free from anxiety till they reach dry land again. He said to them: Which among you is the wisest? They replied: We are all equal, because we have all concurred in the same answers to your questions. He said to them: Why do you resist me?¹¹ They replied: The Satan is too powerful.¹² He said to them: Behold I will slay you by royal decree. They replied: power is in the hands of the king, but it beseems not a king to be false.¹³ Forthwith he clothed them with garments of purple and put chains of gold on their necks. He said to them: I want to go to the country of Africa. They said to him: You cannot get there, because the Mountains of Darkness are in the Way. He said to them: That will not stop me from going. Was it for that I asked you? But tell me what I am to do.¹⁴ They said to him: Take Libyan asses that can travel in the dark and take coils of rope and fix them at the side [of the road] so that when you return you can guide yourself by them and reach your destination. He did so and set forth. He came to a place where there were only women. He wanted to make war with them, but they said to him, If you slay us, people will say that he killed women, and if we slay you they will call you the king who was killed by women. He said to them: Bring me bread. They brought him gold bread on a gold table.

Talmud - Mas. Tamid 32b

. He said to them: Do people here eat gold bread? They replied: If you wanted bread, had you no bread in your own place to eat that you should have journeyed here? When he left the place he wrote on the gate of the city: 'I, Alexander of Macedon, was a fool until I came to the city of women in Africa and I learnt counsel from the women'. As he was journeying he sat by a well and began to eat. He had with him some salted fish, and as they were being washed they gave off a sweet odour. He said: This shows that this well comes from the Garden of Eden. Some say that he took some of the water and washed his face with it; others say that he went alongside of it until he came to the door of the Garden of Eden. He cried out, Open the door for me. They replied, This is the gate of the Lord, [the righteous shall enter into it].¹ He replied: I too am a king; I am also of some account, give me something. They gave him an eyeball. He went and weighed all his silver and gold against it, and it was not equal to it. He said to the Rabbis: How is this? They replied: It is the eyeball of a human being, which is never satisfied. He said to them: How can you prove that this is so? They took a little dust and covered it, and immediately it was weighed down; and so it is written, The nether world and Destruction are never satiated; [so the eyes of man are never satiated].² The Tanna de-be Eliyahu taught: Gehinnom is above the firmament; some, however, say that is behind the Mountains of Darkness. R. Hiyya taught: If one studies the Torah at night, the Divine presence faces him, as it says, Arise, cry out in the night, at the beginning of the watches; pour out thy heart like water before the face of the Lord.³ R. Eliezer b. Azariah said: The disciples of the wise increase peace in the world, as it says, And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children.⁴ Read not banayik, [thy children], but bonayik [thy builders].

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. THE SUPERINTENDENT SAID TO THEM, PRONOUNCE ONE BLESSING,⁵ AND THEY DID SO: THEY THEN RECITED THE TEN COMMANDMENTS,⁶ AND THE FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD SECTIONS OF THE SHEMA', AND THEY BLESSED THE PEOPLE WITH THREE BENEDICTIONS,⁷ NAMELY, TRUE AND FIRM,⁸ AND ABODAH,⁹ AND THE PRIESTLY BENEDICTION.¹⁰ ON SABBATH THEY ADDED A BENEDICTION TO BE SAID BY THE WATCH WHICH WAS LEAVING.¹¹

MISHNAH . HE SAID TO THEM, THOSE WHO ARE FRESH TO THE INCENSE COME AND DRAW LOTS,¹² AND ONE OR OTHER WAS SUCCESSFUL. HE THEN SAID, NEW AND OLD, COME AND DRAW LOTS TO SEE WHO SHALL TAKE UP THE LIMBS FROM THE ASCENT TO THE ALTAR.¹³ R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS, THE ONE WHO LIFTS THE LIMBS ON TO THE ASCENT ALSO TAKES THEM UP TO THE ALTAR.¹⁴

MISHNAH . HE THEN HANDED THEM OVER TO THE ATTENDANTS, WHO STRIPPED THEM OF THEIR GARMENTS,¹⁵ LEAVING ON THEM ONLY THE BREECHES.¹⁶ THERE WERE WINDOWS THERE¹⁷ ON WHICH WAS INSCRIBED THE NAME OF THE GARMENT TO WHICH EACH WAS ASSIGNED.¹⁸

MISHNAH. THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN SELECTED TO OFFER THE INCENSE TOOK

UP THE SPOON, WHICH WAS IN SHAPE LIKE A BIG TIRKAB¹⁹ OF GOLD. IT HELD THREE KABS, AND THE [SMALL] DISH²⁰ WAS IN THE MIDDLE OF IT,

(1) Ps. CXVIII, 20.

(2) Prov. XXVII, 20.

(3) Lam. II, 19.

(4) Isa. LIV, 13.

(5) There is a difference of opinion in Br. 11b as to whether this was 'Who fashionest light' or 'Great love' (P. B. p. 39). This and the succeeding prayers were said in the Chamber of Hewn Stone.

(6) V. Br. 12a.

(7) Since they had not time to say all the eighteen benedictions.

(8) The blessing following the Shema.

(9) The last but two of the eighteen benedictions.

(10) The last of the eighteen.

(11) They blessed the incoming watch. V. Ber. 12a.

(12) The incense was supposed to bring prosperity. and therefore a fresh priest was given the privilege of burning it every time.

(13) V. supra. p. 25.

(14) I.e., each one takes up to the altar the limb which he placed on the ascent.

(15) There is a difference of opinion in Yoma 24b, as to whether they cast lots in holy or in everyday garments. If the former, then those who were unsuccessful changed into everyday garments: if the latter, then those who were successful changed into holy garments.

(16) These they removed for themselves after changing into the other garments.

(17) In the wall of the Chamber of Hewn Stone.

(18) I.e., all garments of the same kind were kept in the same window space.

(19) A measure of capacity holding three kaba.

(20) Wherewith to scoop up the incense.

HEAPED UP WITH INCENSE;¹ THIS HAD A COVERING, OVER WHICH WAS SPREAD A KIND OF JACKET.²

MISHNAH . THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN ASSIGNED THE SHOVELLING,³ TOOK THE SILVER FIREPAN AND ASCENDED TO THE TOP OF THE ALTAR AND CLEARED AWAY THE LIVE COALS TO THIS SIDE AND THAT [AND SWEEP AWAY SOME OF THE ASH AT THE BOTTOM]⁴ AND THEN WENT DOWN AND EMPTIED THEM INTO A GOLD [FIREPAN]. ABOUT A KAB OF THE COALS WAS SPILT,⁵ AND THESE HE SWEEP INTO THE SEWER⁶ , ON SABBATH⁷ HE USED TO PUT AN OVERTURNED POT⁸ ON THEM. THIS POT WAS A LARGE VESSEL HOLDING A LETHEK.⁹ IT HAD TWO CHAINS; WITH ONE HE USED TO DRAW IT DOWN,¹⁰ AND WITH THE OTHER HE USED TO HOLD IT ABOVE SO THAT IT SHOULD NOT ROLL OVER.¹¹ IT WAS USED FOR THREE PURPOSES — FOR PLACING OVER LIVE COALS, AND OVER A [DEAD] CREEPING THING ON SABBATH,¹² AND FOR DRAWING DOWN THE ASHES FROM THE TOP OF THE ALTAR.

MISHNAH . WHEN THEY¹³ CAME BETWEEN THE PORCH AND THE ALTAR, ONE TOOK THE 'SHOVEL'¹⁴ AND THREW IT BETWEEN THE PORCH AND THE ALTAR. PEOPLE COULD NOT HEAR ONE ANOTHER SPEAK IN JERUSALEM FROM THE NOISE OF THE SHOVEL. IT SERVED THREE PURPOSES. WHEN A PRIEST HEARD THE SOUND OF IT HE KNEW THAT HIS BROTHER PRIESTS WERE GOING IN TO PROSTRATE THEMSELVES,¹⁵ AND HE WOULD RUN TO JOIN THEM. WHEN A LEVITE HEARD THE NOISE OF IT HE KNEW THAT HIS BROTHER LEVITES WERE GOING IN TO CHANT,¹⁶ AND HE WOULD RUN TO JOIN THEM. AND THE HEAD OF THE MA'AMAD¹⁷ USED TO MAKE THE UNCLEAN STAND IN THE EAST GATE.¹⁸

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH . THEY¹⁹ COMMENCED TO ASCEND THE STEPS OF THE PORCH.²⁰ THOSE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN TO CLEAR THE ASHES FROM THE INNER ALTAR²¹ AND FROM THE CANDLESTICK LED THE WAY.²² THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN TO CLEAR THE INNER ALTAR WENT IN AND TOOK THE TENI AND PROSTRATED HIMSELF AND WENT OUT AGAIN. THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN TO CLEAR THE CANDLESTICK WENT IN, AND IF HE FOUND THE TWO WESTERN LIGHTS²³ STILL BURNING HE CLEARED OUT THE EASTERN ONE²⁴ AND LEFT THE WESTERN ONE BURNING,²⁵ SINCE FROM IT HE LIT THE CANDLESTICK FOR THE EVENING. IF HE FOUND THAT THIS ONE HAD GONE OUT, HE CLEARED THE ASH AWAY AND LIT IT FROM THE ALTAR OF BURNT-OFFERING. HE THEN TOOK THE KUZ FROM THE SECOND STEP²⁶ AND PROSTRATED HIMSELF AND WENT OUT.

MISHNAH . THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN FOR THE FIREPAN MADE A HEAP OF THE CINDERS ON THE TOP OF THE ALTAR AND THEN SPREAD THEM ABOUT WITH THE END OF THE FIREPAN²⁷ AND PROSTRATED HIMSELF AND WENT OUT. MISHNAH. THE ONE WHO HAD BEEN CHOSEN FOR THE INCENSE TO OK THE DISH FROM THE MIDDLE OF THE SPOON AND GAVE IT²⁸ TO HIS FRIEND OR HIS RELATIVE. IF SOME OF IT WAS SPILT INTO THE SPOON, HE WOULD PUT IT INTO HIS HANDS. THEY USED TO INSTRUCT HIM²⁹ SAYING, BE CAREFUL NOT TO BEGIN IMMEDIATELY IN FRONT OF YOU OR ELSE YOU MAY BURN YOURSELF.³⁰ HE THEN COMMENCED TO SCATTER THE INCENSE AND [AFTER FINISHING] WENT OUT. THE ONE WHO BURNT THE INCENSE DID NOT DO SO UNTIL THE SUPERINTENDENT SAID TO HIM, BURN THE INCENSE. IF IT WAS THE HIGH PRIEST WHO BURNT, HE WOULD SAY TO HIM, SIR,³¹ PRAY BURN THE INCENSE. THE PEOPLE³² LEFT AND HE BURNT THE CENSE AND PROSTRATED HIMSELF AND WENT OUT.

- (1) And if any was spilt, it would fall into the spoon.
- (2) Made of cloth or leather, to prevent the fragrance from escaping.
- (3) Lit., 'the firepan'. Of the cinders from the altar.
- (4) These words are obviously a gloss inserted incorrectly from the Mishnah 28a dealing with the clearing away of the ashes.

- (14) Magrepah. V. supra p. 20, n. 2. Whether it is identical with the vessel mentioned there is difficult to say.
- (15) After the offering of the incense.
- (16) When the libation of wine was offered.
- (17) Here the word seems to mean the section of the priests on duty, elsewhere designated Mishmar. Maimonides, however, takes it in its usual sense (v. G]os. s.v.) and supposes that the unclean persons mentioned in the next sentence are lepers awaiting the sprinkling of the blood.
- (18) All the priests of the beth ab (v. supra p. I, n. 9) which was on duty had to turn up, whether clean or unclean. The reason is given in Pes. 82a.
- (19) Those who had been chosen for the incense and the firepan.

- (23) Those which he had left at the first clearance. V. Ch. III.
- (24) He removed the wick and the oil and cleared out the socket and put in a fresh wick and oil.
- (25) I.e., he poured in oil without putting it out first.
- (26) Where it had been left when he trimmed the lights. V. supra end of Ch. III.
- (27) So as to sprinkle the incense over them.
- (28) The spoon.
- (29) Since the burning of the incense was always assigned to a priest who had never had this privilege before. V. supra IV, 2.
- (30) Because he would have to put his hand over the smoke to reach the further cinders.
- (31) Lit., 'My sir, the High Priest'.
- (32) I.e., the priests between the court and the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Tamid 33b

WHEN THE HIGH PRIEST WENT IN¹ TO PROSTRATE HIMSELF,² THREE PRIESTS SUPPORTED HIM, ONE BY HIS RIGHT AND ONE BY HIS LEFT AND ONE BY THE PRECIOUS STONES.³ WHEN THE SUPERINTENDENT HEARD THE SOUND OF THE FOOTSTEPS OF THE HIGH PRIEST AS HE WAS ABOUT TO ISSUE [FROM THE HEKAL], HE RAISED THE CURTAIN FOR HIM. HE WENT IN, PROSTRATED HIMSELF

AND WENT OUT, AND THEN HIS BROTHER PRIESTS WENT IN AND PROSTRATED THEMSELVES AND WENT OUT.

MISHNAH . THEY⁴ WENT AND STOOD ON THE STEPS OF THE PORCH. THE FIRST SET⁵ STOOD AT THE SOUTH SIDE OF THEIR BROTHER PRIESTS HOLDING FIVE VESSELS; ONE HELD THE TENI, A SECOND THE KUZ, A THIRD THE FIREPAN, A FOURTH THE DISH, AND THE FIFTH THE SPOON AND ITS COVERING. THEY BLESSED THE PEOPLE WITH A SINGLE BENEDICTION;⁶ IN THE COUNTRY THEY RECITED IT AS THREE BLESSINGS,⁷ IN THE SANCTUARY AS ONE.⁸ IN THE TEMPLE THEY PRONOUNCED THE DIVINE NAME AS IT IS WRITTEN,⁹ BUT IN THE COUNTRY BY ITS SUBSTITUTE.¹⁰ IN THE COUNTRY THE PRIESTS RAISED THEIR HANDS AS HIGH AS THEIR SHOULDERS, BUT IN THE TEMPLE RIGHT ABOVE THEIR HEADS, ALL EXCEPT THE HIGH PRIEST, WHO DID NOT RAISE HIS HANDS ABOVE THE PLATE.¹¹ R. JUDAH SAYS THAT THE HIGH PRIEST ALSO RAISED HIS HANDS ABOVE THE PLATE, SINCE IT SAYS, AND AARON LIFTED UP HIS HANDS TOWARD THE PEOPLE AND BLESSED THEM.¹²

MISHNAH . WHEN THE HIGH PRIEST DESIRED TO BURN THE OFFERINGS,¹³ HE USED TO GO UP THE ASCENT WITH THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST¹⁴ AT HIS RIGHT HAND, AND WHEN HE REACHED THE MIDDLE OF THE ASCENT THE DEPUTY TOOK HOLD OF HIS RIGHT HAND AND HELPED HIM UP. THE FIRST [OF THE OFFICIATING PRIESTS] THEN HANDED TO HIM THE HEAD AND THE FOOT OF THE SACRIFICE AND HE LAID HIS HANDS ON THEM¹⁵ AND THREW THEM [ON THE ALTAR FIRE]. THE SECOND THEN HANDED TO THE FIRST THE TWO FORE LEGS. AND HE HANDED THEM TO THE HIGH PRIEST WHO LAID HIS HANDS ON THEM AND THREW THEM [ON TO THE ALTAR]. THE SECOND THEN SLIPPED AWAY. IN THE SAME WAY ALL THE OTHER LIMBS WERE HANDED TO HIM AND HE LAID HANDS ON THEM AND THREW THEM [ON TO THE ALTAR FIRE]. IF HE PREFERRED, HE COULD LAY ON HANDS AND LET OTHERS THROW ON THE FIRE. WHEN HE CAME TO GO ROUND THE ALTAR¹⁶ FROM WHERE DID HE COMMENCE? FROM THE SOUTH-EASTERN CORNER; FROM THERE HE WENT TO THE NORTH-EASTERN, THEN TO THE NORTH-WESTERN AND THEN TO THE SOUTH-WESTERN. THEY THERE HANDED TO HIM WINE FOR LIBATION. THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST STOOD ON THE HORN OF THE ALTAR¹⁷ WITH THE FLAGS IN HIS HAND, AND TWO PRIESTS ON THE TABLE OF THE FAT¹⁸ WITH TWO TRUMPETS IN THEIR HANDS. THEY BLEW A TEKI'AH, A TERU'AH AND A TEKI'AH,¹⁹ AND THEN WENT AND STOOD BY BEN ARZA,²⁰ ONE ON HIS RIGHT HAND AND ONE ON HIS LEFT. WHEN HE BENT DOWN TO MAKE THE LIBATION THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST WAVED THE FLAGS AND BEN ARZA STRUCK THE CYMBALS AND THE LEVITES CHANTED THE PSALM. WHEN THEY CAME TO A PAUSE²¹ A TERU'AH WAS BLOWN, AND THE PUBLIC PROSTRATED THEMSELVES; AT EVERY PAUSE THERE WAS A TEKI'AH AND AT EVERY TEKI'AH A PROSTRATION. THIS WAS THE ORDER OF THE REGULAR DAILY SACRIFICE FOR THE SERVICE OF THE HOUSE OF OUR GOD. MAY IT BE GOD'S WILL THAT IT BE BUILT SPEEDILY IN OUR DAYS, AMEN.

MISHNAH . THE FOLLOWING ARE THE PSALMS THAT WERE CHANTED IN THE TEMPLE. ON THE FIRST DAY THEY USED TO SAY, THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S AND THE FULNESS THEREOF, THE WORLD AND THEY THAT DWELL THEREIN.²² ON THE SECOND DAY THEY USED TO SAY, GREAT IS THE LORD AND HIGHLY TO BE PRAISED, IN THE CITY OF OUR GOD. HIS HOLY MOUNTAIN.²³ ON THE THIRD DAY THEY USED TO SAY, GOD STANDETH IN THE CONGREGATION OF GOD, IN THE MIDST OF THE JUDGES HE JUDGETH.²⁴ ON THE FOURTH DAY THEY USED TO SAY, O LORD, THOU GOD TO WHOM VENGEANCE BELONGETH, THOU GOD TO WHOM VENGEANCE BELONGETH, SHINE FORTH.²⁵ ON THE FIFTH DAY THEY USED TO SAY, SING ALOUD UNTO GOD OUR STRENGTH, SHOUT UNTO THE GOD OF JACOB.²⁶ ON THE SIXTH DAY THEY USED TO SAY, THE LORD REIGNETH, HE IS CLOTHED IN MAJESTY, THE LORD IS CLOTHED, HE HATH GIRDED HIMSELF WITH STRENGTH.²⁷ ON SABBATH THEY USED TO SAY, A PSALM, A SONG FOR THE SABBATH DAY:²⁸ A PSALM, A SONG FOR THE TIME TO COME, FOR THE DAY THAT WILL BE ALL SABBATH AND REST FOR EVERLASTING LIFE.

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. . SHAMMAI RULED: FOR ALL WOMEN¹ IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON] THEIR [PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM THE] TIME [OF THEIR DISCOVERING THE FLOW].² HILLEL RULED: [THEIR PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS IS TO BE RECKONED RETROSPECTIVELY] FROM THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION TO THE [LAST] EXAMINATION,³ EVEN [IF THE INTERVAL EXTENDED] FOR MANY DAYS. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: [THE LAW IS] NEITHER IN AGREEMENT WITH THE OPINION OF THE FORMER⁴ NOR IN AGREEMENT WITH THAT OF THE LATTER,⁵ BUT [THE WOMEN ARE DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN UNCLEAN] DURING [THE PRECEDING] TWENTY-FOUR HOURS⁶ WHEN THIS⁷ LESSENS THE PERIOD FROM THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION TO THE [LAST] EXAMINATION, AND DURING THE PERIOD FROM THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION TO THE [LAST] EXAMINATION WHEN THIS⁸ LESSENS THE PERIOD OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.

FOR ANY WOMAN WHO HAS A SETTLED PERIOD IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON HER PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME SHE DISCOVERS THE FLOW: AND IF A WOMAN USES TESTING-RAGS WHEN⁹ SHE HAS MARITAL INTERCOURSE, THIS IS INDEED¹⁰ LIKE AN EXAMINATION WHICH LESSENS EITHER THE PERIOD OF THE [PAST] TWENTY-FOUR HOURS OR THE PERIOD FROM THE [PREVIOUS] EXAMINATION TO THE [LAST] EXAMINATION. HOW [IS ONE TO UNDERSTAND THE RULING THAT]¹¹ IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON HER PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME SHE DISCOVERS THE FLOW? IF SHE WAS SITTING ON A BED AND WAS OCCUPIED WITH RITUALLY CLEAN OBJECTS¹² AND, HAVING LEFT THEM, OBSERVED A FLOW, SHE IS RITUALLY UNCLEAN WHILE THE OBJECTS¹³ REMAIN RITUALLY CLEAN.

ALTHOUGH THEY¹⁴ HAVE LAID DOWN THAT SHE¹⁵ CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS FOR A PERIOD OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS [RETROSPECTIVELY]¹⁶ SHE COUNTS [THE SEVEN DAYS OF HER MENSTRUATION]¹⁷ ONLY FROM THE TIME SHE OBSERVED THE FLOW.

GEMARA. What is Shammai's reason?¹⁸ — He is of the opinion that a woman¹⁹ should be presumed to enjoy²⁰ her usual status, and the status of the woman²¹ was one of cleanness.²² And Hillel?²³ — When is it said that an object is presumed to possess its usual status? Only when the unfavourable condition²⁴ is not internal,²⁵ but as regards a woman,

(1) In respect of menstrual uncleanness.

(2) It being assumed that up to that moment there was no vestige of blood even in the ante-chamber (cf. Mishnah infra 40a). Hence only objects that were touched by the woman after the discovery become ritually unclean. All objects touched prior to that moment remain clean.

(3) When she discovered the discharge. If the last, for instance, took place at 5 p.m. on a Thursday and the previous one at 8 a.m. on the preceding Sunday, all objects touched since the Sunday examination are deemed to be ritually unclean because it is assumed that some blood, prevented from leaving the body by the walls of the womb, may have made its way into the ante-chamber immediately after that examination.

- (4) Shammai, whose ruling is too lenient.
- (5) Hillel, who is too restrictive, since blood could not well be retained in the ante-chamber for a very long time.
- (6) Me'eth le'eth, lit., 'from time to time'.
- (7) An interval of more than twenty-four hours having intervened between the two examinations.
- (8) The two examinations having taken place within twenty-four hours.
- (9) Before and after.
- (10) Lit., 'behold this'.
- (11) In the case of 'ANY WOMAN WHO HAS A SETTLED PERIOD (supra).
- (12) In the preparation, for instance, of foodstuffs.
- (13) The bed, and the foodstuffs which she handled.
- (14) The Sages.
- (15) A woman who had no settled period.
- (16) From the time she observed the flow.
- (17) Prescribed in Lev. XV, 19.
- (18) For his ruling in the first clause of our Mishnah.
- (19) About whom it is uncertain when her flow began.
- (20) Lit., 'cause to stand . . . upon'.
- (21) Spoken of in our Mishnah.
- (22) Since she was occupied with ritually clean things.
- (23) How, in view of Shammai's reason, can he maintain his ruling.
- (24) Which might impair its status.
- (25) But is due to some external cause. MS.M. adds, 'as, for instance, when it is doubtful whether one did, or did not touch (an unclean object)'.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 2b

since what she observes [is a discharge] from her own body, it cannot be held that she is presumed to have her usual status.

Wherein, however, does this¹ essentially differ² from that of a ritual bath of which we learnt: If a ritual bath³ was measured and found lacking, all purifications that have heretofore been effected through it, whether it was in a public⁴ or in a private domain,⁵ are regarded⁶ as unclean?⁷ According to Shammai⁸ the difficulty arises from 'heretofore'; while according to Hillel the difficulty arises, does it not, from the certainty; for, whereas in the case of the twenty-four hours' period⁹ of the menstruant [any terumah¹⁰ she touched] is only held in suspense, it being neither eaten nor burned,¹¹ here¹² the uncleanness is regarded as a certainty?¹³ — The reason¹⁴ there¹⁵ is that it may be postulated that the unclean person shall be regarded as being in his presumptive status¹⁶ and assumed¹⁷ not to have performed proper immersion.¹⁸ On the contrary! Why not postulate that the ritual bath shall be regarded as being in its presumptive status of validity and assume that it was not lacking?¹⁹ — Surely a lacking [bath] is before you. But in this case also,²⁰ is not blood before you? — She has only just now observed it.²¹ In that case²² too, is it not²³ lacking only just now?²⁴ — What a comparison!²⁵ In that case²² it might well be presumed that the water was gradually diminishing,²⁶ but can it here also be presumed that she was gradually observing the flow?²⁷ — What an objection is this! Is it not possible that she observed the blood only when it was coming in profusion?²⁸ — In the former case²⁹ there are two unfavourable factors³⁰ while in the latter³¹ there is only one unfavourable factor.³² Wherein, however,³³ does this³¹ differ from the case of the jug concerning which we have learnt:³⁴ If one tested³⁵ a wine jug for the purpose of periodically taking from it terumah [for wine kept in other jugs]³⁶ and, subsequently,³⁷ it was found to contain vinegar,³⁸ all³⁹ three days it is certain,⁴⁰ and after that it is doubtful.⁴¹ Now does not this⁴² present an objection against Shammai?⁴³ — The reason there⁴⁴ is that it can be postulated that the tebel⁴⁵ shall be regarded as having its presumptive status, and then it may be presumed that it had not been ritually prepared.⁴⁶ On the contrary! Why not postulate that the wine be regarded as having its presumptive status⁴⁷ and then it might be assumed that it had not become sour? — Surely it stands sour before you. But in that case also⁴⁸ is there not blood before you? — She has only just now observed it. But in that case too⁴⁹ is it not sour only just now? — What a comparison! In the latter case⁴⁹ it might well be presumed that the wine turned sour by degrees,⁵⁰ but can it also be said in the former case⁴⁸ that she observed the flow by degrees?⁵¹ — What an objection is this! Is it not possible that she observed the blood only when it came in profusion? — In the former case⁴⁹ there are two unfavourable factors⁵² while in the latter⁴⁸ there is only one such factor.⁵³

An incongruity, however, was pointed out between the case of the jug⁵⁴ and that of the ritual bath:⁵⁵ Wherein lies the essential difference between the two⁵⁶ that in the latter case⁵⁷ [the retrospective uncleanness is regarded as] a certainty while in that of the former⁵⁸ [the uncleanness of the terumah is deemed] doubtful? — R. Hanina of Sura replied: Who is the author [of the ruling concerning the] jug? R. Simeon, who in respect of a ritual bath also regards [the retrospective uncleanness] as a matter of doubt; for it was taught:⁵⁹ If a ritual bath was measured and found lacking all purifications heretofore effected through it whether it was in a public or in a private domain, are regarded as unclean.⁶⁰ R. Simeon ruled: In a public domain they are regarded as clean but in a private domain they are regarded as being in suspense.⁶¹

- (1) The case of the menstruant.
 - (2) Both according to Shammai and Hillel.
 - (3) Which must contain a minimum of forty se'ah of water.
 - (4) Where a case of doubtful uncleanness is elsewhere regarded as clean.
 - (5) Where a doubtful case is regarded as unclean (cf. prev. n.).
 - (6) Since the bath is now ritually invalid.
 - (7) Mik. II, 2.
 - (8) Who ruled that the period of uncleanness of menstruant women begins FROM THE TIME OF THEIR DISCOVERY OF THE FLOW and not retrospectively.
 - (9) According to the Sages; or the interval between her last and previous examinations according to Hillel (v. our Mishnah).
 - (10) V. Glos.
 - (11) As explained infra 6a.
 - (12) In the case of the ritual bath, where it is categorically stated 'are retrospectively unclean'.
 - (13) And the terumah must be burned.
 - (14) For the restrictions.

- (15) The case of the ritual bath.
- (16) Of uncleanness, which before valid immersion is a certainty.
- (17) On account of the discovered invalidity of the ritual bath he used.
- (18) Since the invalidity may have begun at the time the immersion took place.
- (19) At the time of the immersion.
- (20) That of the menstruant.
- (21) Hence there is no need to assume that the flow began any earlier.
- (22) Ritual bath.
- (23) As far as is known.
- (24) Why then should it be assumed to have been lacking earlier?
- (25) Lit., 'thus, now'.
- (26) So that the presumptive state of validity has long ago been impaired. And since it is not known when the process began the restrictive ruling given is well justified.
- (27) Obviously not. Hence it may well be assumed that the flow began only at the moment when it was discovered.
- (28) While in fact a particle of it which is quite sufficient to cause uncleanness (cf. infra 40) may have been in the antechamber long before she was aware of any flow.
- (29) That of the ritual bath.
- (30) The assumption that the unclean person was in his confirmed status of uncleanness and the lacking condition of the bath.
- (31) The case of the menstruant.
- (32) The present observation of the blood. Since against this factor there is the favourable one of the woman's previous condition of confirmed cleanness it may well be assumed that the flow began not earlier than the moment when it was observed.
- (33) According to Shammai.
- (34) What follows is a Baraita (Tosef. Ter. IV) and is quoted here as Mishnah. This is not an isolated instance. V. Higger Ozar ha Beraitoth, pp. 37ff.
- (35) Either by tasting some of its contents (Rashi) the terumah and tithe having been duly taken from it (Rashb. B.B. 96a) or by smelling it (Tosaf. l.c.).
- (36) In order that he might be allowed to use the wine in the other jugs he keeps this one jug for the purpose of taking from it daily, or whenever required, the appropriate quantity of wine as terumah or tithe for the wine in the other jugs.
- (37) After a month or two, for instance.
- (38) A liquid which (according to Rabbi, B.B. 84b) may not be used as terumah for wine.
- (39) So MS.M. and Rashal. Cur. edd. in parenthesis insert 'the first'.
- (40) V. following note.
- (41) Tosef. Ter. IV. The meaning according to R. Johanan (B.B. 96a) is that during the first three days after the test the contents of the jug are regarded as 'certain' wine because in less than three days wine cannot turn into vinegar. Even if it be assumed that it began to turn sour immediately after the test it could not be called 'vinegar' until full three days had elapsed. The terumah given within these three days must inevitably have been wine and consequently have exempted the wine in the other jugs. After three days the contents are regarded as 'doubtful wine' since it is possible that the wine began to deteriorate only three days before it was found to be vinegar, into which it may have turned just at that moment. As the terumah is accordingly of a doubtful nature another portion must be set aside for the purpose. The meaning according to R. Joshua b. Levi (ibid.) is that during the last three days prior to the discovery that it had turned into vinegar, it is regarded as 'certain' vinegar because, in his opinion, the contents are deemed to be vinegar as soon as the wine begins to deteriorate in odour though its taste may still be that of wine. Since it is now proper vinegar the deterioration must have commenced at least three days earlier. Prior to the three days it is regarded as 'doubtful' because it is unknown when the deterioration had set in.

(42) The ruling in the Baraitha cited according to which where unfavourable factors exist restrictions are applied retrospectively.

(43) Who ruled in our Mishnah that menstruants are not deemed to have been unclean for any length of time retrospectively, but reckon their period of uncleanness only from the moment OF THEIR DISCOVERING THE FLOW.

(44) In the Baraitha cited.

(45) The untithed wine, v. Glos.

(46) Sc. that the priestly and levitical dues have not been duly set aside for it.

(47) Of being wine.

(48) That of the menstruant.

(49) That of the jug of wine.

(50) So that it lost its status long before it completely turned into vinegar.

(51) Of course not. Hence the assumption that the flow began the moment it was discovered.

(52) The confirmed status of the wine as tebel and its present sour condition.

(53) The present observation of the blood.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 3a

And both¹ deduced it² from no other law than that of sotah.³ The Rabbis⁴ hold [that the law of the ritual bath is the same] as that of sotah; as [the offence of] the sotah is a matter of doubt and is regarded as a certainty⁵ so here also⁶ [where the uncleanness is] a matter of doubt it is regarded as a certainty. If [the inference, however, is made] from the sotah might it not be argued: It is like the sotah in this respect, viz., that as the sotah is clean [if she is suspected of an offence] in a public domain⁷ so should [all the purifications effected in] this case also⁶ be regarded as clean [if the bath was] in a public domain? — What a comparison!⁸ There⁹ the cause¹⁰ is seclusion¹¹ but seclusion in a public domain is impossible,¹² but here,⁶ the cause¹³ being the deficiency,¹⁴ what matters it whether the deficiency takes place in a public, or in a private domain?¹⁵ And should you argue: Is not every doubtful case of ritual uncleanness in a public domain regarded as clean [it could be retorted:] Since [in the case of the bath] there are two unfavourable factors¹⁶ it is regarded as certain uncleanness. R. Simeon, however, holds [that the law of the ritual bath is the same as that of sotah [in this respect]: As the sotah is regarded as clean [where she is suspected of an offence] in a public domain so also here¹⁷ [are all the purifications effected regarded as] clean [if the bath was] in a public domain. If [the inference, however, is made] from the sotah, might it not be argued: It is like the sotah in this respect viz., that as the sotah [if suspected of the offence] in a private domain is regarded as definitely unclean so should also [all purifications effected in this case] be deemed to be definitely unclean [where the bath was] in a private domain? — What a comparison!¹⁸ In that case¹⁹ there is some basis for the suspicion,²⁰ seeing that he²¹ had warned her and she had secluded herself with the stranger; what basis for uncleanness,²⁰ however, is there here?²²

And if you prefer I might say that this is R. Simeon's reason.²³ He infers the law of the termination of uncleanness²⁴ from that of the inception of uncleanness;²⁵ as with the inception of uncleanness if it is doubtful whether an object has or has not touched an uncleanness in a public domain it is deemed to be clean, so also with the termination of uncleanness, if it is doubtful whether an object had been duly immersed or not, in a public domain it is deemed to be clean. And the Rabbis?²⁶ — What an inference!²⁷ There,²⁸ since the man is in the presumptive status of ritual cleanness, we cannot on account of a doubt transfer him to a state of uncleanness, but here,²⁹ seeing that the man is in the presumptive status of uncleanness, we cannot on account of a doubt release him from his uncleanness.

Wherein, however, does this³⁰ essentially differ³¹ from the case of an alley of which we learnt: If a dead creeping thing was found in an alley it causes ritual uncleanness retrospectively³² to such time as one can testify, 'I examined this alley and there was no creeping thing in it',³³ or to such time as it was last swept?³⁴ — There³⁵ also, since there are creeping things from the alley itself and also creeping things that make their way into it from the outside world, the case is the same as one that has two unfavourable factors. And if you prefer I might reply,³⁶ This is Shammai's reason:³⁷ Because a woman is herself conscious [when she suffers a flow].³⁸ And Hillel?³⁹ — She might have thought that the sensation⁴⁰ was that of urine. As to Shammai, is there not [the possibility of suffering a flow while] asleep?⁴¹ — A woman asleep too would⁴² awake on account of the pain,⁴³ as is the case where one feels a discharge of urine.⁴⁴ But is there not the case of an imbecile?⁴⁵ — Shammai agrees⁴⁶ in the case of an imbecile. But did he not state, ALL WOMEN?⁴⁷ — [He meant:] All sensible women. Then why did he not merely state WOMEN?⁴⁸ — He intended to indicate that the law is not in agreement with R. Eliezer; for R. Eliezer mentioned 'Four classes of women'⁴⁹ and no more, hence he⁵⁰ informed us [that the law applies to] ALL WOMEN. But is there not the case of stains?⁵¹ Must we then⁵² assume that we learnt the Mishnah about stains⁵³ in disagreement with Shammai? — Abaye replied: Shammai agrees⁵⁴ in the case of stains. What is the reason? — Since she was neither handling a slaughtered bird nor was she passing through the butchers' market, whence could that blood have come?⁵⁵ And⁵⁶ if you prefer I might reply, This is Shammai's reason: If in fact any blood were there⁵⁷ it would have flowed out earlier.⁵⁸ And Hillel?⁵⁹ — The walls of the womb may have held it back.⁶⁰ And Shammai?⁶¹ — The walls of the womb do not hold blood back. But what can be said for a woman⁶² who⁶³ uses an absorbent in her marital intercourse?⁶⁴ — Abaye replied: Shammai agrees⁶⁵ in the case of one who uses an absorbent,⁶⁶ Raba replied: An absorbent too [does not affect Shammai's ruling, since] perspiration causes it to shrink.⁶⁷ Raba, however, agrees⁶⁸ in the case of a tightly packed absorbent.⁶⁹

What, however, is the practical difference between the latter explanations⁷⁰ and the former explanation?⁷¹

(1) R. Simeon and the first Tanna.

- (2) Each his respective rulings in the Baraita just cited.
- (3) V. Glos., in connection with whom Scripture speaks of uncleanness or defilement (cf. Num. V, 13).
- (4) Sc. the first Tanna (cf. supra n. 7).
- (5) A sotah, until her innocence is proved by the test (cf. Num. V, 15-28), being definitely forbidden to her husband.
- (6) The case of the ritual bath under discussion.
- (7) Where no privacy is possible.
- (8) Lit., 'thus, now'.
- (9) Sotah.
- (10) Of the woman's uncleanness or prohibition to her husband.
- (11) Of the woman with the suspected stranger.
- (12) Hence the ruling that in such a case the woman is deemed clean.
- (13) Of uncleanness.
- (14) Of the water in the bath.
- (15) Nothing. Hence the Rabbis' ruling that all purifications effected, irrespective of domain, are deemed to be unclean.
- (16) As pointed out supra 2b.
- (17) The case of the ritual bath under discussion.
- (18) Lit., 'thus, now'.
- (19) Sotah.
- (20) Lit., 'there are feet for the thing'
- (21) Her husband.
- (22) In the case of the bath. As there is no basis whatever for the assumption that this deficiency occurred before the purifications had been effected it may well be assumed that it occurred afterwards immediately before the bath was measured. It has thus been shown, as R. Hanina replied supra, that according to R. Simeon all cases of doubtful uncleanness in a private domain where there is no basis for the affirmation of the uncleanness, are regarded as being in suspense.
- (23) For holding doubtful cases of uncleanness in a public domain to be clean.
- (24) Sc. ritual immersion which takes place when the period of uncleanness is concluded.
- (25) I.e., uncleanness contracted from coming in contact with an unclean object.
- (26) How, in view of R. Simeon's inference, could they maintain (v. supra 2b ad fin.) that 'all purifications . . . whether it was in a public or in a private domain, are unclean'?
- (27) Lit., 'thus, now'.
- (28) The case of the inception of uncleanness.
- (29) In a case of termination of uncleanness.
- (30) The case of the menstruant in our Mishnah.
- (31) According to Shammai.
- (32) To all clean objects that were in the alley prior to its discovery.
- (33) Sc. only clean objects that were in the alley prior to that examination are ritually clean since the examination has established that during that time there was no creeping thing in the alley.
- (34) Infra 56a; and no creeping thing was found. The sweeping, which is presumably accompanied by a search for any unclean things, has the same force as a direct examination. Hence (cf. prev. n.) only objects that were in the alley prior to the sweeping are clean while those that were there after the sweeping, since a creeping thing may have fallen into the alley immediately after the sweeping was over, are regarded as unclean. Now seeing that here uncleanness in a doubtful case is caused retrospectively, why does Shammai in our Mishnah restrict the period of uncleanness to the time of THEIR DISCOVERING only?

(35) The case of the alley in the Mishnah just cited.

(36) To the objection raised against Shammai.

(37) For his ruling that menstruants begin their period of uncleanness from the time OF THEIR DISCOVERING OF THE FLOW only and not, as in the case of the alley, retrospectively.

(38) As she did not feel any prior to her present discovery it may be safely assumed that previously there had not been any.

(39) How, in view of this argument, can he maintain that a menstruant's uncleanness is RECKONED RETROSPECTIVELY?

(40) Of the menstrual flow.

(41) When the woman is unconscious of it. As this is quite possible, why does not Shammai extend the period of uncleanness retrospectively?

(42) In Shammai's opinion.

(43) Of the flow.

(44) As she did not awake, it may well be presumed that the flow began just before its discovery.

(45) Who is incapable of distinguishing the first appearance of a flow.

(46) That the period of uncleanness extends retrospectively.

(47) Which presumably includes the imbecile also.

(48) Omitting 'ALL'.

(49) Infra 7a.

(50) Shammai.

(51) Of menstrual blood, which (v. infra 56a) cause uncleanness retrospectively, though prior to the moment of its discharge the woman was unaware of any flow.

(52) Since Shammai does not extend the unclean period retrospectively, maintaining that a woman is invariably aware when her flow first appears.

(53) Where it was ruled that a stain causes uncleanness even where the woman had felt no flow whatever.

(54) That the menstruant's uncleanness is extended retrospectively.

(55) Hence it must be assumed to have come from the woman's menstrual flow.

(56) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit 'and'.

(57) Sc. prior to its discovery.

(58) As none flowed out it may well be assumed that the flow began only just before it had been discovered.

(59) Sc. how can he maintain his ruling in view of the argument here advanced for Shammai?

(60) As, however, it might have made its way to the ante-chamber the period of uncleanness must extend from that time onwards.

(61) Cf. prev. n. but one mut. mut.

(62) Of the three classes enumerated infra 45a.

(63) To prevent conception.

(64) As the material used would also absorb any menstrual blood, there could be no proof that the discharge did not begin prior to the discovery. How then could Shammai rule that the menstrual uncleanness begins only at 'THE TIME OF THEIR DISCOVERING THE FLOW'?

(65) That menstrual uncleanness is reckoned retrospectively.

(66) Cf. prev. n. but one.

(67) Lit., 'on account of perspiration it inevitably shrinks' and consequently, enables the blood to pass out. As no blood appeared prior to the discovery Shammai may well maintain that the uncleanness does not begin prior to the DISCOVERING OF THE FLOW.

(68) With Abaye.

(69) Since the blood cannot pass through it.

(70) That (a) 'a woman feels' and (b) 'it would have flowed out earlier' (supra).

(71) Supra 2a, 'a woman should be presumed to enjoy her usual status'.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 3b

— The practical difference between them is the possibility of pointing out an incongruity [between the ruling in our Mishnah and the rulings concerning] the jug, the ritual bath and the alley:¹ According to the former explanation such an incongruity may justifiably be pointed out¹ while according to the latter explanations such an incongruity does not exist. But what practical difference is there [in the case of the latter] between the one and the other explanation? — According to Abaye² there is the case of the absorbent,³ and according to Raba² there is the case of the absorbent tightly packed.⁴ It was taught in agreement with that explanation that 'if in fact any blood were there it would have flowed out earlier': Hillel said to Shammai, 'Do you not agree that in the case of a basket one corner of which was used for levitically clean objects while in another corner was found⁵ a dead creeping thing, the objects that were formerly clean are regarded as unclean retrospectively?'⁶ — 'Indeed', the other replied. 'Then [Hillel rejoined] what is the difference between the one case and the other?'⁷ — 'The one⁸ [Shammai replied] has a bottom,⁹ the other¹⁰ has none.'¹¹ Raba stated: Shammai's reason¹² is to avoid¹³ neglect of marital life.¹⁴ So it was also taught: Shammai said to Hillel, 'If so,¹⁵ you cause the daughters of Israel the neglect of marital life'.¹⁶ Now according to him¹⁷ who taught this explanation¹⁸ [it may be objected:] Was it not taught,¹⁹ in agreement with the former explanation,¹⁸ that 'if in fact any blood were there it would have flowed out earlier'? — There¹⁹ it was Hillel who erred. He thought that Shammai's reason was that if any blood had been there it would have flowed out earlier and, therefore, he raised an objection against him from the case of the basket,²⁰ but Shammai answered him, 'My reason is the avoidance of the neglect of marital life; and as regards your erroneous assumption too, in consequence of which you raised an objection from the case of the basket, the latter has a bottom while the former has none.'²¹

But according to him who taught²² the first explanation²³ [it may be objected:] Was it not in fact taught, in agreement with the latter version, that the reason is to avoid the neglect of propagation? It is this that Hillel in fact said to Shammai, 'Even if you give as your reason that "if in fact any blood were there it would have flowed out earlier," you must nevertheless make a fence²⁴ for your ruling, for why should this law be different from all the Torah for which a fence is made?' To this the other replied, 'If so,²⁵ you would cause the daughters of Israel to neglect marital life'.²⁶ And Hillel?²⁷ — 'Do I [he can reply] speak of marital life?²⁸ I only speak of levitical cleanness'. And Shammai?²⁹ — [Restrictions, he holds, must] not [be imposed] even as regards levitical cleanness, since otherwise³⁰ the man might have scruples³¹ and keep away altogether.³²

(Mnemonic:³³ Bottom examined covered in a corner.)

It was stated: If one corner of a basket was used for levitically clean objects and a dead creeping thing was found in another corner, Hezekiah ruled that the objects that were formerly³⁴ clean remain clean. R. Johanan ruled: The objects that were formerly³⁵ clean are now regarded as retrospectively unclean. But do not Shammai³⁶ and Hillel in fact agree³⁷ in the case of a basket that the objects that were formerly clean are deemed to be retrospectively unclean?³⁸ — Shammai and Hillel agree³⁹ only in the case of a basket that had a bottom,⁴⁰ while Hezekiah and R. Johanan differ in that of a basket that had no bottom.⁴¹ But if the basket had no bottom what could be R. Johanan's reason?⁴² — It had no bottom, but it had⁴³ a rim.⁴⁴ But surely, it was taught:⁴⁵ 'If a man drew⁴⁶ ten buckets of water one after the other⁴⁷ and a creeping thing was found in one of them, this one⁴⁸ is unclean and all the others⁴⁹ remain clean',⁵⁰ and in connection with this Resh Lakish citing R. Jannai stated, 'This⁵¹ was taught only in a case where the bucket had no rim⁵² but if it had a rim⁵³ all the buckets of water are deemed to be unclean.' Now must it be assumed that Hezekiah⁵⁴ does not adopt the view of R. Jannai?⁵⁵ — [No, since] water⁵⁶ glides⁵⁷ while fruits⁵⁸ do not glide,⁵⁹ or else [it may be replied] one is not particular with water⁶⁰ but with fruit one is particular.⁶¹ And if you prefer I might reply: Shammai and Hillel agree⁶² only in respect of a basket that was not [previously]⁶³ examined⁶⁴

(1) Supra 2b and 3a.

(2) Supra 3a ad fin.

(3) If the explanation is that 'a woman feels' the period of menstrual uncleanness would begin at the time of the discovery of the blood even where a woman used an absorbent, while if the explanation is that 'it would have flowed out earlier' uncleanness would begin retrospectively since the discharge might have begun earlier but was soaked up by the absorbent.

(4) Cf. prev. note.

(5) After the clean objects had been removed from the basket.

(6) Lit., 'the former clean are unclean', because it is possible that the creeping thing was in the basket before the objects had been removed and that it consequently imparted uncleanness to the basket from which it was conveyed to the objects. If the creeping thing, it may be added, had been found in the same corner in which the objects were previously kept there could be no question that the latter remain clean, since it may be regarded as certain that they had been removed before the creeping thing had fallen into the basket. For if it had been there earlier it would have been discovered at the time the objects were being removed.

(7) Sc. why is the uncleanness deemed to be retrospective in the case of the basket and not in that of the menstruant?

(8) The basket.

(9) Where the creeping thing may well have rested quite unobserved by the person who removed the objects.

(10) The menstruant.

(11) Sc. had any blood found its way to the ante-chamber it would inevitably have flowed out.

(12) For his ruling in the first clause of our Mishnah that the uncleanness is not retrospective.

(13) Lit., 'on account of'.

(14) Lit., 'propagation'. Were it to be assumed that blood can make its way to the vagina even when the woman is unconscious of it, men would abstain from all marital intercourse in order to avoid possible complications of uncleanness.

(15) That menstrual uncleanness is to be retrospective (v. our Mishnah).

(16) Cf. note 10.

(17) Raba.

(18) Of Shammai's reason.

(19) Supra.

- (20) Where it is not assumed (on the analogy of the blood of the menstruant) that if a creeping thing had been there it would have come out together with the objects when the basket had been cleared.
- (21) Cf. notes supra.
- (22) Supra.
- (23) That Shammai's reason is that if any blood had been in the vagina it would have flowed out earlier.
- (24) I.e., add some restriction (retrospective uncleanness) in order to avoid possible transgression of the law itself.
- (25) That menstrual uncleanness is to be retrospective (v. our Mishnah).
- (26) V. supra p. 11 n. 10.
- (27) How, in view of this reply, could he maintain his ruling.
- (28) No. He did not say that any marital relations were to be affected.
- (29) Cf. note 8 mut. mut.
- (30) Lit., 'for if so', were retrospective uncleanness to be imposed.
- (31) Owing to the possibility of some flow of blood in the vagina.
- (32) Lit., 'his heart beats him and he separates (from his wife)'.
- (33) Containing striking words or phrases from each of the four following explanations of the points on which Shammai and Hillel on the one hand and Hezekiah and R. Johanan on the other differ.
- (34) Lit., 'the first'.
- (35) Lit., 'the first'.
- (36) So Bah and MS.M. Cur. edd. in parenthesis insert 'Beth'.
- (37) Supra. — MS.M. reads, 'Does not Shammai agree with Hillel'.
- (38) How then can Hezekiah differ from the unanimous ruling of both?
- (39) Var. lec. 'Shammai agrees with Hillel' (MS.M.).
- (40) And the objects were removed through the open top, so that it was quite possible for the creeping thing to be at the time of the removal at the bottom of the basket and thus to have escaped observation.
- (41) And that was used while it was lying on its side. In such circumstances the objects would be removed by inverting the basket in which case all its contents, including any creeping thing that might have been there, would fall out.
- (42) For treating the objects as unclean.
- (43) Near the position of the bottom.
- (44) Turning inwards, so that the creeping thing might have been caught by it and there remained unobserved.
- (45) Var. lec., 'we learnt' (Bah citing Toh. IV, 4, which, however, differs slightly from the version here cited).
- (46) With the same bucket.
- (47) All of which were poured into one large tank.
- (48) In which the creeping thing was found.
- (49) Since no creeping thing was observed to be in them when they were being emptied into the tank.
- (50) It being assumed that the creeping thing had not fallen into the bucket until it was filled for the last time.
- (51) That all the others remain clean.
- (52) Turning inwards so that the creeping thing could not possibly have remained in the bucket when it was tipped over the tank.
- (53) On which the creeping thing might have been caught and remained unobserved at the time.
- (54) Who, as explained supra in the case of the basket, holds the objects to be clean even where the basket had a rim.
- (55) Is it likely, however, that Hezekiah would differ from such an authority?
- (56) When the bucket is tipped.
- (57) Hence it is not necessary to incline the bucket at too great an angle when it is being emptied. The creeping thing might, therefore, well have remained within the bucket, held by the rim and unobserved.

(58) From a basket.

(59) If the basket is only slightly inclined. As it must consequently be turned upside down before all the fruit it contains can be emptied it is quite impossible for the creeping thing to have remained within. If, therefore, one was subsequently found in the basket it may be safely assumed that it fell in after the clean objects had been removed.

(60) And does not mind if some of it remains in the bucket. Hence one does not tip the bucket very much, and the creeping thing might consequently have remained within the bucket behind the rim.

(61) And turns the bucket upside down in order to get out even the last fruit (cf. prev. n. but one mut. mut.).

(62) Var. lec. 'Shammai agrees with Hillel' (MS.M.).

(63) Before the clean objects were put into it.

(64) Hence it cannot be regarded as having a presumptive state of cleanness.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 4a

while Hezekiah and R. Johanan differ in the case of a basket that had been examined. One Master¹ holds [the objects to be clean because the basket] surely had been examined,² and the other Master³ [holds them to be unclean, since] it might be assumed that the creeping thing fell in just when the man⁴ removed his hand.⁵ But [the case of the basket,]⁶ surely, was taught in the same manner as that of the woman,⁷ and is not a woman⁸ deemed to be duly examined?⁹ Since the flow of blood from her body is a regular occurrence she is regarded as unexamined.¹⁰ And if you prefer I might reply:¹¹ Shammai and Hillel agree¹² only in respect of a basket that¹³ is uncovered,¹⁴ while Hezekiah and R. Johanan differ in respect of a covered basket.¹⁵ 'Covered'! Then how [could the creeping thing]¹⁶ have fallen into it? — [This is possible when] for instance, the way of using it was by [opening and closing] its cover.¹⁷ But [the case of the basket] surely, was taught in the same manner as that of the woman,¹⁸ and is not a woman¹⁹ in the condition of being covered?²⁰ — Since the flow of blood from her body is a regular occurrence she is regarded as being in an uncovered condition.²¹ And if you prefer I might reply:²² Shammai and Hillel agree²³ only in respect of the corner of a basket, while Hezekiah and R. Johanan differ in that of the corner of a room.²⁴ But was not a 'basket' spoken of?²⁵ — It is this that was meant.²⁵ If a basket was used for clean objects in one corner of a room and, when it was moved into another corner,²⁶ a creeping thing was found [in it while it was] in that other corner, Hezekiah holds that we do not presume the uncleanness found in one place²⁷ to apply to another place,²⁸ while R. Johanan holds that we do presume.²⁹ But do we²⁹ apply the rule of presumptive uncleanness? Have we not learnt: 'If a man touched someone in the night and he did not know whether it [was a person who was] alive or [one that was] dead, and in the morning when he got up he found him to be dead, R. Meir declares [the man] clean, but the Sages declare [him] to be unclean because all questions of uncleanness are determined by [the condition of the objects at] the time they are found',³⁰ and in connection with this it was taught, 'As at the time they are found and in accordance with the place in which they are found'³¹ And should you reply that this³² holds good only³³ in respect of the law of burning³⁴ but that in respect of the law of suspense it is well applied,³⁵ have we not learnt, [it could be retorted,] If a needle³⁶ was found³⁷ full of rust or broken³⁸ it is regarded as clean³⁹ because all questions of uncleanness are determined by [the condition of the objects at] the time they are found?⁴⁰ Now why should this be so?⁴¹ Why should it not rather be assumed that this needle was formerly⁴² in a sound condition⁴³ and that it produced the rust just now?⁴⁴ Furthermore, have we not learnt: If a burnt creeping thing was found upon olives and so also if a tattered⁴⁵ rag⁴⁶ was found upon them it is clean,⁴⁷ because all [questions of] uncleanness are determined by [the conditions of the objects at] the time they are found?⁴⁸ And should you reply that [the uncleanness is determined] in accordance with [the condition of the objects at] the time they are found, irrespective of whether the result is a relaxation⁴⁹ or a restriction of the law,⁵⁰ only in the place where they⁵¹ are found, but [if the doubt arises] in regard to the place in which they⁵¹ were not found⁵² the objects⁵³ are not to be burned but are nevertheless to be held in suspense,⁵⁴ was it not in fact taught,⁵⁵ [it could be retorted,] If a loaf of bread was lying on a shelf under which⁵⁶ lay an object of a minor degree of uncleanness,⁵⁷ [the loaf,]⁵⁸ although if it had fallen down it would have been impossible for it not to touch the unclean object,⁵⁹ is clean, because it is assumed that a clean person entered there and removed it,⁶⁰ unless one can testify, 'I am certain that no one entered there',⁶¹ in connection with which R. Eleazar stated: This assumption⁶² was required only in the case of a sloping shelf?⁶³ — There⁶⁴ the reason⁶⁵ is as stated,⁶⁶

- (1) Hezekiah.
 - (2) And since at the time it contained no unclean objects a presumptive state of cleanness has been established.
 - (3) R. Johanan.
 - (4) Who conducted the examination.
 - (5) And the clean objects were still in the basket.
 - (6) On which Shammai and Hillel differ.
 - (7) Hillel having asked (supra 3b) 'what is the difference between the one case and the other?'
 - (8) Whose duty it is to examine herself every morning and evening.
 - (9) Apparently she is. Hence the basket also, which is in a similar condition (cf. prev. n. but one), must be deemed to be duly examined. Now since it was stated that the objects that were in the basket were regarded as retrospectively unclean an objection arises against Hezekiah.
 - (10) And so also the basket. Hence the justification for Hezekiah's ruling.
 - (11) To the difficulty raised supra 3b ad fin on the apparent contradiction between the joint ruling of Shammai and Hillel and the view of Hezekiah.
 - (12) MS.M. 'Shammai agrees with Hillel'.
 - (13) Though examined.
 - (14) So that the creeping thing might well have fallen in as soon as the examiner has removed his hand.
 - (15) Into which nothing could fall in by accident. Hence the justification for Hezekiah's ruling that the objects are clean.
 - (16) Which was actually found in it.
 - (17) Hezekiah is of the opinion that as long as clean objects are in the basket one is careful to keep it closed in order to prevent any unclean object from falling into it, but when the basket is empty care is no longer exercised and it is quite possible, therefore, for the creeping thing to have fallen in then. R. Johanan, however, holds that it is possible for the creeping thing to have fallen in unobserved, even while the clean objects were still in the basket, at a moment when the latter was opened in the ordinary course of use.
 - (18) Hillel having asked (supra 3b) 'what is the difference between the one case and the other?'
 - (19) Since no blood from the outside can flow into her body.
 - (20) Cf. supra p. 14, n. 19, mut. mut.
 - (21) And so also the basket. Hence the justification for Hezekiah's ruling.
 - (22) V. supra p. 14, n. 21.
 - (23) MS.M., 'Shammai agrees with Hillel'.

- (24) This is explained presently. Lit., 'house'.
- (25) In the statement, supra 3b ad fin, under discussion.
- (26) After the objects had been taken out.
- (27) If the unclean object was first discovered in the second place.
- (28) It is rather assumed that the creeping thing fell into the basket when it was already in the second place after the objects had been removed from it.
- (29) Even in such a case.
- (30) Lit., 'as the time of their finding', Toh. V, 7.
- (31) Sc. if in the morning the person was found dead in the place where he was touched in the night the man who touched him is unclean, but if he was found dead in a different place he remains clean. Thus it follows that we do not presume uncleanness found in one place to apply to another. How then could R. Johanan maintain that the rule is applied even in such a case?
- (32) That the rule that we do not presume uncleanness found in one place to apply to another.
- (33) Since the uncleanness is not a matter of certainty.
- (34) If it was terumah; sc. the terumah need not be burned on account of the doubtful nature (cf. prev. n.) of its uncleanness.
- (35) Lit., 'to suspend we suspend', i.e., the uncleanness of the objects thus affected is treated as a matter of doubt, and R. Johanan's ruling might be given the same interpretation and may thus be reconciled with that of the Mishnah just cited.
- (36) That was known to be unclean.
- (37) In contact with clean objects.
- (38) Conditions which render it useless as a 'vessel'. Only a proper vessel contracts and conveys uncleanness.
- (39) I.e., it (cf. prev. n.) conveys no uncleanness whatsoever to the objects with which it was found in contact.
- (40) Toh. III, 5. Hence it is assumed that the objects and the needle came in contact after the latter had lost the status of 'vessel' when it was no longer able to convey any uncleanness.
- (41) That the objects should be regarded as absolutely clean and their uncleanness should not be regarded even as doubtful.
- (42) When it first came in contact with the objects under discussion.
- (43) When it duly conveyed its uncleanness to the objects.
- (44) Since, however, the assumption is not made and the objects are not subjected either to a certain or to a suspended condition of uncleanness, even, presumably, where there was a change of place, how could R. Johanan maintain, even only in respect of a condition of suspense, that the rule of presumptive uncleanness is applied?
- (45) Aliter: scorched.
- (46) That was cut off from the unclean garment of a zab (v. Glos.).
- (47) Sc. it is assumed that the creeping thing or the rag did not come in contact with the olives until after it had lost its uncleanness (the former by the burning and the latter by becoming tattered or scorched) and was unable to convey any.
- (48) Toh. IX, 9. Now since the olives are not subjected even to the status of suspended uncleanness (as the categorical rule 'it is clean' implies) it follows that presumptive uncleanness does not apply when there was a change of time and so also, presumably, where there was a change of place. How then could R. Johanan maintain his ruling?
- (49) As in the case of the needle and the rag (cited from Toh. III, 5 and IX, 9) where the objects are declared clean.
- (50) Where a man touched some person in the night (cited from Toh. V, 7) in which case the man, according to the Sages, is decidedly unclean.
- (51) The objects about which the doubt had arisen.

(52) I.e., whence the objects have been removed, as is the case with the basket with which R. Johanan was concerned.

(53) Terumah, for instance.

(54) And the same interpretation might also be given to R. Johanan's ruling which would thus be reconciled with the one cited from Toh. IX, 9.

(55) V. marg. glos. Cur. edd. 'we learnt'.

(56) On the ground.

(57) Middaf. This is now assumed to be an object (a garment, for instance) which, though not subject to midras (v. Glos.) uncleanness (which could convey uncleanness to both man and vessels) conveys nevertheless uncleanness to foodstuffs and the like, Pentateuchally.

(58) Found on the ground away from the unclean object.

(59) Which would have conveyed uncleanness to it.

(60) From the shelf, and placed it on the ground where it was found.

(61) Tosef. Toh. IV.

(62) 'That a clean person entered etc.'

(63) From which the loaf is most likely to slide down and fall on the unclean object below. Now, since even in such a case it is not presumed that the loaf fell upon the unclean object and contracted uncleanness before it rolled away to its present position, it follows that the rule of presumptive uncleanness is not applied when two different places are involved. How then could R. Johanan rule supra (3b ad fin.) that presumptive uncleanness is applied even (as in the case of the basket and the creeping thing) where two places are involved?

(64) In the Baraitha just cited.

(65) Why the rule of presumptive uncleanness is not applied to the loaf.

(66) Lit. — 'as he learned the reason'.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 4b

'Because it is assumed that a clean person entered there and removed it'.¹ But why should it not be assumed here also² that a raven came and dropped [the creeping thing into the basket]?³ — In the case of a man who acts⁴ with intention such an assumption⁵ is made, but in that of a raven which⁶ does not act with intention such an assumption⁷ is not made. But consider: The loaf⁸ is a case of doubtful uncleanness in a private domain. Now is not any case of doubtful uncleanness in a private domain regarded as unclean?⁹ — [The loaf is deemed to be unclean] because it is a thing that possesses no intelligence to answer questions,¹⁰ and any thing that possesses no intelligence to answer questions, irrespective of whether it was in a public or in a private domain, is in any doubtful case of uncleanness regarded as clean.¹¹ And if you prefer I might reply: Here¹² we are dealing with a Rabbinical uncleanness.¹³ A deduction [from the wording]¹⁴ also supports this view, for the expression used is 'middaf'¹⁵ which is analogous to the Scriptural phrase, 'a driven [niddaf] leaf'.¹⁶

THE SAGES, HOWEVER, RULED: [THE LAW IS] NEITHER IN AGREEMENT WITH THE OPINION OF THE FORMER NOR IN AGREEMENT WITH THAT OF THE LATTER etc. Our Rabbis taught: And the Sages ruled, [The law is] neither in agreement with the opinion of the former nor in agreement with that of the latter, neither [that is] in agreement with the opinion of Shammai who¹⁷ provided no fence for his ruling¹⁸ nor in agreement with the opinion of Hillel who¹⁹ restricted far too much,²⁰ but [the women are deemed to be unclean] during the preceding

twenty-four hours when this lessens the period from the [previous] examination to the [last] examination, and during the period from the [previous] examination to the [last] examination when this lessens the period of twenty-four hours. '[The women are deemed to be unclean] during the preceding twenty-four hours when this lessens the period from the [previous] examination to the [last] examination'. How is this to be understood? If a woman examined her body on a Sunday²¹ and found herself to be clean and then she spent Monday and Tuesday without holding any examination while on Wednesday she examined herself and found that she was unclean, it is not ruled that she should be deemed to be unclean retrospectively from the previous examination to the last examination but only [that she should be deemed to be unclean] during the preceding twenty-four hours. 'And during the period from the [previous] examination to the [last] examination when this lessens the period of twenty-four hours'. How is this to be understood? If the woman examined her body during the first hour of the day and found herself to be clean and then she spent the second and the third hour without holding any examination while in the fourth hour she examined herself and found that she was unclean, it is not ruled that she should be deemed to be unclean retrospectively for a period of twenty-four hours but only during the period from the previous examination to the last examination. But is it not obvious that, since she has examined herself during the first hour and found that she was clean, she is not to be deemed unclean retrospectively for twenty-four hours?²² — As it was taught, 'during the preceding twenty-four hours when this lessens the period from the [previous] examination to the [last] examination'²³ it also stated,²⁴ 'during the period from the [previous] examination to the [last] examination when this lessens the period of twenty-four hours'.

Rabbah stated: What is the reason of the Rabbis?²⁵ Because a woman well feels herself.²⁶ Said Abaye to him: If so,²⁷ [a period of uncleanness from] the time of her observation of the flow should suffice!²⁸ And Rabbah?²⁹ — He only wished to exercise Abaye's wits.³⁰ What then is the reason of the Rabbis?³¹ — It is one such as that which Rab Judah gave in the name of Samuel: The Sages have ordained for the daughters of Israel that they should examine themselves in the morning and in the evening; 'in the morning', in order to verify the cleanness of objects they handled during the previous night,³² 'and in the evening' in order to verify the cleanness of objects they handled during the previous day;³³ but this woman,³⁴ since she did not [regularly] examine her body,³⁵ has³⁶ lost one 'onah.³⁷ But what could be meant by 'one 'onah'?³⁸ — One additional 'onah.³⁹ Said R. Papa to Raba: But would you not sometimes find that there are three 'onahs in twenty-four hours?⁴⁰ — The Sages have laid down a uniform limit⁴¹ in order that there shall be no variations in the twenty-four hours' period. And⁴² if you prefer I might reply:⁴³ [the period extends to three 'onahs] in order that the sinner⁴⁴ shall not⁴⁵ be at an advantage.⁴⁶ What is the practical difference between them?⁴⁷ — The practical difference between them is the case of a woman who was the victim of circumstances and in consequence of which she did not hold her examination.⁴⁸

FOR ANY WOMAN WHO HAS A SETTLED PERIOD etc. Must it be conceded that our Mishnah represents the view of R. Dosa and not that of the Rabbis seeing that it was taught:⁴⁹ R. Eliezer ruled, For four classes of women it suffices [to reckon the period of their uncleanness from the time they discovered the discharge,] viz., a virgin,⁵⁰ a pregnant woman, a woman that gives suck and an old woman; and R. Dosa ruled, For any woman who has a settled period it suffices [to reckon her period of uncleanness from] the time she discovered the discharge?⁵¹ — It may even be held [that our Mishnah represents the view of] the Rabbis, for the Rabbis differ from R. Dosa only [in respect of a flow] that did not occur at the woman's set time⁵² but [in the case of one that did occur] at her set time they might agree with him; and our Mishnah deals with a flow that occurred at the woman's set time and it, therefore, represents the view of both.⁵³ Thus⁵⁴ it follows that R. Dosa maintains his view even where a flow did not occur at the woman's set time. Who then is the author of the following which the Rabbis taught: Though a woman has a settled period her bloodstain⁵⁵ is deemed to be unclean retrospectively,⁵⁶ for were she to observe a flow when it is not her set time she would be unclean retrospectively for a period of twenty-four hours?⁵⁷ Must it be conceded⁵⁸ to be the Rabbis only and not R. Dosa?⁵⁹ — It may be said to be even R. Dosa; for R. Dosa may disagree with the Rabbis only in the case where the flow occurred at the woman's set time but where it occurred when it was not her set time he agrees with them,⁶⁰ and our Mishnah deals with one that occurred at her set time and it is, therefore, in agreement with the opinion of R. Dosa

- (1) This assumption cannot, of course, be made in the case of the basket, with which R. Johanan deals, since the unclean object (the dead creeping thing) was actually found in it, and when it was found it was still in its state of uncleanness.
 - (2) In the case of the basket and the creeping thing.
 - (3) After the clean objects had been removed from it and after it had been moved into its new position.
 - (4) When he removed the loaf from the sloping shelf.
 - (5) That the man entered and moved the loaf to its present safer place.
 - (6) Even if it were to drop the creeping thing into the basket.
 - (7) That the raven dropped the thing after the clean objects had been removed etc. (cf. supra n. 11).
 - (8) Since (a) it is uncertain whether it touched the unclean object or not and (b) it was found within a house.
 - (9) The answer being in the affirmative, the difficulty arises, why is the loaf deemed to be clean?
 - (10) Lit., 'to be asked', whether it came in contact with the unclean object or not.
 - (11) Because the rule that doubtful uncleanness in a private domain is deemed to be unclean is deduced from that of sotah (v. Glos.) and consequently only rational beings like the sotah herself (who is able to answer whether she was or was not defiled) are subject to the same restrictions.
 - (12) In the case of the loaf.
 - (13) One, for instance, of those enumerated in Hag. 18b and 20b. A doubtful case of Rabbinical uncleanness is regarded as clean even in a private domain.
 - (14) Of the Tosef. Toh. IV cited.
 - (15) Rendered (supra 4a) 'an object of a minor degree of uncleanness'.
 - (16) Lev. XXVI, 36; the rt. of niddaf, and so also that of middaf implying something 'light', 'of minor importance', hence a 'minor degree of or Rabbinical uncleanness'.
 - (17) Having laid down that the period of uncleanness begins only 'FROM THE TIME OF THEIR DISCOVERING OF THE FLOW'.
 - (18) I.e., made no restriction whatever against the possible infringement of the actual law.
 - (19) Laying down that the period of uncleanness 'IS TO BE RECKONED RETROSPECTIVELY FROM THE PREVIOUS EXAMINATION'.
 - (20) Lit., 'who broke through beyond his measures.
 - (21) Lit., 'on the first of the week'.
 - (22) Of course it is. Why then should such an obvious ruling have to be stated?
 - (23) A ruling that had to be enunciated, since otherwise it could have been argued that the flow began on the Sunday immediately after the examination.

(24) As a kind of antithesis.

(25) For fixing a twenty-four hours' period of uncleanness. The reason for Hillel's period, 'from examination to examination' (cf. our Mishnah), is quite intelligible since the flow may well have begun as soon as the previous examination was concluded, but the twenty-four hours' period appears to have no logical justification whatsoever.

(26) Any flow. Had it begun immediately after the conclusion of her previous examination she would have been aware of it.

(27) That a woman is aware of the flow as soon as it begins.

(28) It being obvious that the flow began only at that moment, for if it had begun earlier she (cf. prev. n.) would have been aware of the fact. Why then should her period of uncleanness extend backwards for twenty-four hours? An objection against Rabbah.

(29) Sc., why did he take up such an untenable position?

(30) Lit., 'to sharpen (the mind) of Abaye'. Rabbah advanced the reason merely to afford an opportunity for Abaye, whose guardian and teacher he was, to prove it to be wrong.

(31) Cf. p. 20. n. 5.

(32) If a woman finds herself on examination to be clean it is thereby verified that all clean objects she handled during the previous night are to be regarded as clean; and should she discover any flow later at the evening examination the doubtful uncleanness would extend only to objects she handled during the day.

(33) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.

(34) Spoken of in our Mishnah, and in the Baraita cited.

(35) In defiance of the ordinance of the Rabbis.

(36) As a penalty.

(37) Lit., 'a time' or 'a period' of one day or night, sc. her uncleanness begins retrospectively one 'onah earlier.

(38) Seeing that the uncleanness extends backwards for twenty-four hours which represent two 'onahs.

(39) I.e., in addition to the 'onah immediately preceding the one in which her last examination was held (during which she is in any case unclean owing to the doubt as to when the flow began), she must suffer the penalty of being treated as unclean retrospectively even during the 'onah that preceded that one.

(40) When, for instance, the first examination after a number of days without an examination took place at midday. If the uncleanness extended backwards for a period of twenty-four hours it would cover

(41) the 'onah of the day of the examination,

(42) the 'onah of the preceding night and

(43) the 'onah of the day preceding that night. Now since the penalty imposed was only one additional 'onah why should it in this case be increased to two 'onahs? (1) Lit., 'made their measures equal', i.e., the period of twenty-four hours has been fixed, irrespective of whether it covers two 'onahs or three. (2) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit.

(3) To the objection why in the case mentioned (cf. supra p. 21, n. 15) the uncleanness should extend over three 'onahs.

(44) The woman who, not only failed to examine her body regularly in accordance with the ordinance of the Sages but also delayed her last examination from the morning hour to noon.

(45) By having her period of uncleanness reduced to less than twenty-four hours.

(46) Over one in a similar position who held her examination in the early morning and whose period of uncleanness is extended retrospectively for a full period of twenty-four hours to the previous morning.

(47) The two replies offered.

(48) According to the first reply she would be subject to uncleanness for a full period of twenty-four hours, while according to the second reply, since in this case she is no sinner, the period would be reduced to two 'onahs and her uncleanness would be reckoned from the beginning of the previous evening only.

- (49) What follows, with the exception of R. Dosa's ruling occurs also in the Mishnah infra 7a.
- (50) I.e., one, whether married or unmarried, who suffered a flow for the first time in her life.
- (51) Now, since the Rabbis elsewhere differ from R. Dosa's ruling, must it be conceded that our Mishnah represents his view only?
- (52) As the appearance is obviously irregular it may well be suspected that one occurred earlier also.
- (53) Lit., 'and the words of all', those of the Rabbis as well those of R. Dosa.
- (54) Since the dispute between R. Dosa and the Rabbis has been limited to a flow that did not occur at the set time.
- (55) Sc. one on a garment of hers.
- (56) From the time it had been washed.
- (57) As in this case, despite the woman's settled period, the uncleanness is deemed to be retrospective so it is retrospective in the case of the stain also.
- (58) Since, from what has been said, it is only the Rabbis who impose retrospective uncleanness in the case of a woman who, though having a settled period, suffered a flow before or after that time.
- (59) Is it likely, however, that R. Dosa would differ from an anonymous Baraitha?
- (60) That the uncleanness is retrospective.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 5a

while the Baraitha¹ is in agreement with both.² But why should not the final assumption be³ reversed?⁴ — As it is possible to adopt an explanation that leads to a relaxation of the law⁵ and one that leads to a restriction of it⁶ we adopt the one that leads to the restriction.

Now it was just taught,⁷ 'For were she to observe a flow when it is not her set time she would be unclean retrospectively for a period of twenty-four hours' — [If this⁸ is] the reason⁹ [it follows] that only in the case of a woman who has a settled period do the Rabbis draw a distinction between her stain and her observation¹⁰ [of a flow],¹¹ but in the case of the other women¹² concerning whom the Sages ruled that it sufficed for them to reckon their uncleanness from the time they discovered the flow¹³ [the extent of the uncleanness of] their stains is like that of their observation of a flow.¹⁴ Now whose view is this? — It is that of R. Hanina b. Antigonus; for Rab Judah citing Samuel who had it from R. Hanina b. Antigonus stated, In the case of all women their stains cause uncleanness retrospectively but in that of the women¹² concerning whom the Sages ruled that it sufficed for them to reckon their uncleanness from the time they discovered the flow [the extent of the uncleanness of] their stains is like that of their observation of a flow,¹⁴ the exception being a child who has not yet attained the age of the suffering of a flow of whom, though her sheets are soiled with blood,¹⁵ no notice is to be taken.¹⁶ But does R. Hanina at all uphold¹⁷ the law of the uncleanness of a stain?¹⁸ Was it not taught: In the case of all women their stains are unclean and also in the case of the women concerning whom the Sages ruled that it sufficed for them to reckon their period of uncleanness from the time they discovered the flow their stains are unclean; while R. Hanina b. Antigonus ruled, The women concerning whom the Sages ruled that it sufficed for them to reckon their uncleanness from the time they discovered the flow are not subject to the law of uncleanness of the stain? Now does not this mean that they are not subject at all to the law of uncleanness of the stain?¹⁹ — No, it means that they are not subject to the law of the uncleanness of the stain retrospectively but they are well subject to it from now²⁰ onwards. Does this²¹ then imply that the first Tanna²² is of the opinion that their uncleanness is even retrospective? — Yes; it²³ being the view of R. Meir who restricts the law in respect of stains. For it was taught: In the case of all women their stains are unclean retrospectively and also in the case of the women concerning whom the Sages ruled that it sufficed for them to reckon their period of uncleanness from the time they discovered the flow their stains are unclean retrospectively; so R. Meir. R. Hanina b. Antigonus ruled, In the case of the women concerning whom the Sages ruled that it sufficed for them to reckon their period of uncleanness from the time they discovered the flow [the uncleanness of] their stains is like that of their observation [of their flow]; and a child who has attained the age of suffering a flow is subject to the law of the uncleanness of the stain while one who has not attained that age is not subject to the uncleanness of a stain, and when does she attain the age of suffering a flow? When she attains her maidenhood.²⁴

AND IF A WOMAN USES TESTING-RAGS WHEN SHE HAS MARITAL INTERCOURSE etc. Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: A testing-rag used before²⁵ marital intercourse does not reduce [the doubtful period²⁶ of retrospective uncleanness] as an examination. What is the reason? — R. Kattina replied: Because the woman is in a hurry to do her marital duty.²⁷ But what matters it even if she is in a hurry to do her marital duty? — Since she is in a hurry to do it she does not insert the testing-rag into depressions and folds.²⁸

We learnt: IF A WOMAN USES TESTING-RAGS WHEN SHE HAS MARITAL INTERCOURSE, THIS IS INDEED LIKE AN EXAMINATION. Does not this mean that she uses one before intercourse and one after it?²⁹ — No, the one as well as the other is used after intercourse but³⁰ one is for the man³¹ and the other is for her; as we learnt: It is the custom of the daughters of Israel when having marital intercourse to use two testing-rags, one for the man and the other for herself.³² What a comparison!³³ If you concede that one is used before intercourse and the other after it one can well understand the necessity for the ruling.³⁴ As it might have been presumed that on account of her being in a hurry to do her marital duty she does not properly perform her test we were informed that THIS IS INDEED LIKE AN EXAMINATION. If you maintain, however, that the one testing-rag as well as the other is used after marital intercourse, is not the ruling obvious?³⁵ — It might have been presumed [that the test should be ineffective]³⁶ on account of the possibility of the appearance of a drop of blood of the size of a mustard seed³⁷ which semen might cover up,³⁸ hence we were informed [that such a remote possibility need not be considered]. And if you prefer I might reply: The Rabbis required a woman to perform two tests, one before intercourse and one after it,³⁹ and in stating ‘THIS IS INDEED LIKE AN EXAMINATION’ the reference is to the one after the intercourse. But was it not stated, IF A WOMAN USES etc.⁴⁰ — Read: And a woman shall use.⁴¹

LESSENS EITHER THE PERIOD OF THE PAST TWENTY-FOUR HOURS. Now that you stated that it⁴² lessens THE PERIOD OF THE PAST TWENTY-FOUR HOURS⁴³

(1) Just cited, dealing with the bloodstain.

(2) Cf. supra n. 3.

(3) Lit., ‘and let him make it stand’.

(4) As has been suggested at first, that our Mishnah represents the view of the Rabbis as well as that of R. Dosa while the Baraita represents only that of the Rabbis.

(5) As has been previously suggested: That a flow at the set time causes no retrospective uncleanness in accordance with the general opinion, while one occurring at any other time is subject to retrospective uncleanness only in accordance with the view of the Rabbis.

(6) The one finally adopted: That a flow at the set time causes retrospective uncleanness according to the Rabbis at least, while one at any other time causes retrospective uncleanness even according to R. Dosa.

(7) In the Baraitha supra 4b ad fin.

(8) 'For were she to observe etc.'

(9) Why a stain causes retrospective uncleanness, sc. though a stain cannot be subject to greater restrictions than a discharge it causes uncleanness retrospectively, since a flow that occurred at any time other than the set time also causes retrospective uncleanness.

(10) At the set time.

(11) Sc. while in the latter case the uncleanness is not retrospective in the former, for the reason stated (cf. prev. n.) it is.

(12) The four classes, for instance, mentioned supra 4b and infra 7a.

(13) So that in their case the law of retrospective uncleanness never applies.

(14) Sc. both are not retrospective.

(15) It being unknown whether it came from her body or from elsewhere.

(16) It being assumed, though the assumption might be most unlikely, that she passed through a butcher's market and soiled her sheets there. In no case is it assumed that the blood came from her own body because the law of uncleanness, as far as stains are concerned, is merely Rabbinical, and in the case of a minor no Rabbinical measure was enacted.

(17) In the case of the four classes of women mentioned.

(18) Even after it had been discovered.

(19) How then could it be said supra that R. Hanina does uphold the law of the uncleanness of the stain?

(20) The time of discovery.

(21) The explanation according to which R. Hanina agrees with the first Tanna as regards the uncleanness of stains from the time they are discovered onwards, and that he only differs from him in rejecting their retrospective uncleanness.

(22) Whose opinion is stated in the first clause of the Baraitha cited.

(23) The first clause (cf. prev. n.).

(24) The age when she assumes the status of na'arah (v. Glos.), i.e., the age when she grows two pubic hairs or (she has no pubic hairs) when she is twelve years and one day old.

(25) I.e., only before but not after (cf. relevant note on our Mishnah).

(26) Either that of the twenty-four hours or the one between the previous and the last examination.

(27) Lit., 'she is in a state of excitement about her house'.

(28) The examination, therefore, is not a proper one.

(29) Which shows that the test before intercourse, despite R. Kattina's argument, is deemed to be a proper one.

(30) In reply to the objection, why two rags.

(31) For wiping.

(32) Infra 14a.

(33) Lit., 'that, what'.

(34) In our Mishnah, that the test is effective.

(35) And why should an obvious ruling be enunciated?

(36) Even though it took place after intercourse.

(37) That is sufficient to cause uncleanness.

(38) Thus rendering the test useless.

(39) Hence the mention of RAGS in the plural.

(40) Emphasis on IF which implies that there is no obligation. How then could it be maintained that ‘the Rabbis required her etc.’?

(41) Sc. the clause is to be divided into two separate rulings, (a) that a woman shall use two testing-rags, one before intercourse and the other after it and (b) the second test is indeed like an examination.

(42) The testing-rag examination.

(43) Though it is a comparatively long period extending as it does to the previous day.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 5b

was it also necessary to state that it lessens THE PERIOD FROM THE PREVIOUS EXAMINATION TO THE LAST EXAMINATION?¹ — As it might have been presumed that only in the case of the twenty-four hours’ period did the Rabbis² take into consideration the possible loss of clean things³ but not in that of the period from the previous examination to the last examination,⁴ we were informed [that both periods are equally reduced].

HOW [IS ONE TO UNDERSTAND THE RULING THAT] ‘IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON HER PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME SHE DISCOVERS THE FLOW’ etc. What need was there⁵ for stating, IF SHE WAS SITTING ON A BED AND WAS OCCUPIED WITH RITUALLY CLEAN OBJECTS, when it should rather have been stated,⁶ IF SHE WAS OCCUPIED⁷ WITH RITUALLY CLEAN OBJECTS AND HAVING LEFT THEM, OBSERVED A FLOW? — It is this that we were informed:⁸ The reason [why the bed is regarded as clean is] because [in the case of that woman]⁹ it suffices [for her to reckon] her [period of uncleanness from the] time [of her discovery of the flow] but¹⁰ [where the uncleanness extends backwards over] twenty-four hours the bed also is regarded as unclean.¹¹ This provides support for Ze’iri, for Ze’iri ruled: [A woman¹² during] the twenty-four hours preceding her discovery of a menstrual flow causes bed and seat¹³ to convey uncleanness to a man who in turn conveys it to his clothes.¹⁴ But consider: This bed is a thing that has no sense to answer questions,¹⁵ and is not doubtful uncleanness¹⁶ in the case of an object that has no sense to answer questions regarded as clean?¹⁷ Ze’iri explained: [This¹⁸ refers to a case] where her friends were carrying her in the bed so that the latter may be regarded as the hand of her friends.¹⁹ Now, however, that R. Johanan ruled that in the case of doubtful uncleanness conveyed through a human agency²⁰ the object in doubt,²¹ though lying on the ground, is deemed to be capable of answering questions as if it had been a human being who has the sense to answer questions²² [this²³ holds good] even though her friends were not carrying her in the bed.

[Reverting to] the [above] text, ‘R. Johanan ruled: In the case of doubtful uncleanness conveyed through a human agency the object in doubt, though lying on the ground, is deemed to be capable of answering questions as if it had been a human being who has the sense to answer questions’.²⁴ An objection was raised: If a man was wrapping himself in his cloak while clean or unclean objects were at his side²⁵ or above his head and it is doubtful whether there was contact²⁶ or not, they²⁷ are deemed to be clean,²⁸ but if it was impossible [for the cloak and the other objects] not to have come in contact they²⁹ are regarded as unclean. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: The man is told, ‘Do it again’³⁰ and he does it again.³¹ They,³² however, said to him: No repetition [test³³ is recognized] in questions of cleanness.³⁴ Now why [should they³⁵ be clean]³⁶ seeing that this is a case of uncleanness that is conveyed through a human agency?³⁷ — This is beside the point,³⁸ for R. Hoshaia learnt: In a private domain [such a case of] doubtful uncleanness³⁹ is regarded as unclean, and in a public domain it is regarded as clean.⁴⁰

[Reverting to] the [above] text, ‘Ze’iri ruled: [A woman during] the twenty-four hours preceding her discovery of a menstrual flow causes bed and seat to convey uncleanness to a man who in turn conveys it to his clothes’.⁴¹ But, surely, this cannot be correct.⁴² For did not Abimi from Be Hozai⁴³ when he came bring with him⁴⁴ a Baraitha which stated, ‘During the twenty-four hours preceding the discovery of her menstrual flow a woman's bed and seat are [as unclean] as the object she touches’, which means, does it not, that as an object she touches does not convey uncleanness to a human being⁴⁵ so also does not her bed convey uncleanness to a human being?⁴⁶ — Raba retorted: And do you understand this ruling⁴⁷ seeing that it [may be refuted by an inference] a minori ad majus: If an earthen vessel that was covered with a tight fitting lid, which is protected from uncleanness in a corpse's tent,⁴⁸ is yet not so protected [from the uncleanness] of the twenty-four hours preceding the discovery of a menstrual flow,⁴⁹ is it not logical that the beds and seats [of a menstruant], which are not protected from uncleanness in a corpse's tent, should not be protected from the uncleanness of the twenty-four hours preceding the discovery of a menstrual flow?⁵⁰ — But did not Abimi of Be Hozai quote a Baraitha?⁵¹ — Read:⁵² A woman's bed and seat⁵³

(1) Which is a much shorter one (cf. prev. n.) being confined to the limits of the same day.

(2) By enacting that the test is effective and reduces it.

(3) Which the woman may have handled during this comparatively long time.

(4) A shorter period (cf. supra n. 10) during which not many things could have been handled and a much lesser loss is consequently involved.

(5) Lit., ‘wherefore to me’.

(6) Lit., ‘let him teach’.

(7) Omitting the apparently superfluous ‘WAS SITTING ON A BED’.

(8) By the additional words (cf. prev. n.).

(9) Who has a settled period.

(10) In the case of a woman whose periods were not regular.

(11) As the bed of a confirmed menstruant (cf. Lev. XV, 21) which conveys uncleanness to the man that touches it as well as to the clothes he wears though the latter did not come in direct contact with it.

(12) Cf. prev. n. but one.

(13) On which she lay or sat.

(14) Cf. supra n. 6.

(15) Lit., ‘to be asked’.

(16) Such as that caused by the woman in question during the twenty-four hours preceding the time she observed the flow.

(17) Of course it is, since the law of treating doubtful uncleanness as unclean is deduced from that of the sotah (v. Glos.) who is able to answer questions.

(18) The ruling in our Mishnah, which does regard (by implication) the bed on which the woman sat as unclean.

(19) The hand, being part of a human being who is well able to answer questions, is justly compared to the sotah whose doubtful uncleanness is regarded as unclean. It is for a similar reason (that things handled by a human being are regarded as his hand), it may be added, that the things the woman handled when sitting on the bed are regarded as unclean even where the bed was resting on the ground, and this explains why the objection supra was raised in connection with the bed and not in connection with the things the woman has handled.

(20) As in that of the bed and the menstruant during the twenty-four hours preceding the observation of the flow or in that of a dead creeping thing that was carried by a man and a doubt arose as to whether it came in contact with a certain clean object.

(21) Since the uncleanness, if any, was brought to it by a human agency.

(22) And in a private domain is regarded as unclean. Only when the inanimate object in doubt was near an unclean one that was also inanimate, and 'no human agency was involved, is it regarded as clean.

(23) V. p. 28, n. 14.

(24) Supra q.v. notes.

(25) He being either unclean (in the former case) or clean (in the latter one).

(26) Between the cloak and the objects in its vicinity. If there was contact, the cloak that (in the former case) contracted uncleanness from its wearer would convey uncleanness to the clean objects, or the unclean objects (in the latter case) would convey uncleanness to the cloak.

(27) The objects in the vicinity (in the former case) and the cloak (in the latter case).

(28) Even, it is now assumed, in a private domain, because the cloak as well as the objects in its vicinity are incapable of answering questions.

(29) The objects in the vicinity (in the former case) and the cloak (in the latter case).

(30) Sc. to wrap himself again in his cloak in the same place and position in which he did it first.

(31) In this manner it is ascertained whether the cloak and the other objects have or have not come in contact.

(32) The Rabbis who disagreed with him.

(33) Since it may not exactly reproduce the former conditions.

(34) Tosef. Toh. IV which, however, has the following variation: 'R. Dosa ruled, He is told, "Do it again" ... They, however, said to him, No repetition . . . R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled, He sometimes does it again'.

(35) V. p. 29, n. 10.

(36) According to the first Tanna.

(37) Which according to R. Johanan is unclean.

(38) Lit., 'outside of that'.

(39) One involving conveyance through a human agency.

(40) No objection, therefore, may be raised from the Tosef. cited which may be explained to refer to a case in a public domain.

(41) Supra q.v. notes.

(42) Lit., 'I am not'.

(43) The Khuzistan.

(44) Lit., 'came and brought'.

(45) Only a primary uncleanness can do that. An object touched by a menstruant assumes only the status of a first grade of uncleanness which conveys uncleanness to objects but not to a human being.

(46) The answer apparently being in the affirmative, the difficulty arises: How could Ze'iri maintain that the woman causes bed and seat to convey uncleanness to a man who in turn etc.'?

(47) Which seems to reduce the uncleanness of the bed and seat of the menstruant in question to a lower degree than that of earthenware.

(48) Only when uncovered does it contract uncleanness (cf. Num. XIX, 15).

(49) If it was touched by the woman during the twenty-four hours (cf. infra 6a)

(50) As the soundness of this argument cannot be questioned Abimi's ruling is obviously untenable and may well be disregarded.

- (51) Which is an authoritative utterance.
- (52) The ruling in the Baraitha.
- (53) During the twenty-four hours preceding her discovery of a menstrual flow.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 6a

are [as unclean] as that which touches the body of the menstruant herself; just as the touching of her body causes the uncleanness of a human being who in turn causes the uncleanness of the clothes he wears¹ so does the touching of her bed or seat cause the uncleanness of a human being who in turn causes the uncleanness of the clothes he wears.

It was taught in agreement with Raba: A woman who observed a bloodstain² conveys uncleanness retrospectively.³ And what are the things to which she conveys the uncleanness?⁴ Foodstuffs and drinks,⁵ beds and seats,⁶ as well as any earthen vessel, even though it was covered with a tightly fitting lid,⁷ and her counting⁸ is⁹ disturbed,¹⁰ and she conveys¹¹ uncleanness to the man who cohabited with her retrospectively. R. Akiba¹² ruled: She conveys uncleanness to the man who cohabited with her but begins her counting¹³ from the time only of her observing a flow. If she observed a flow of blood,¹⁴ she conveys uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours.¹⁵ And what are the things to which she conveys uncleanness?¹⁶ Foodstuffs and drinks,¹⁷ beds and seats¹⁸ as well as any earthen vessel, though it was covered with a tightly fitting lid,¹⁹ her counting²⁰ is not²¹ disturbed and she does not convey²² uncleanness to the man who cohabited with her.²³ In either case, however,²⁴ the uncleanness²⁵ is held in suspense [and any consecrated foodstuffs touched] must neither be eaten nor burned.²⁶ As to Raba, however,²⁷ if he heard of the Baraitha,²⁸ why did he not say [that his ruling is derived from] a Baraitha? And if he did not hear of the Baraitha, whence did he [derive the law for his inference] a minori ad majus? — The fact is that he heard of the Baraitha, but²⁹ were he to derive his ruling from the Baraitha it could have been objected [that the uncleanness³⁰ is conveyed] either to the man or to his clothes³¹ but not to the man as well as to the clothes he wears,³² hence he had recourse to his inference a minori ad majus.³³

R. Huna ruled: [The retrospective uncleanness during] the twenty-four hours [preceding the observation] of a menstrual flow is conveyed only to hallowed things but not to terumah. But if so, should not this law have been mentioned together with those of the other grades [of sanctity]?³⁴ — Only cases that involve definite uncleanness are enumerated but any in which no definite uncleanness is involved³⁵ is not mentioned.

An objection was raised: What are the things to which she conveys uncleanness? Foodstuffs and drinks.³⁶ Does not this³⁷ mean those that are hallowed as well as those that are terumah? — No, only those that are hallowed.³⁸

Come and hear: R. Judah ruled [that priestly women must examine their bodies] even after they have concluded a meal³⁹ of terumah;⁴⁰ and the point raised, 'Is not the consumed meal a matter of the past?'⁴¹ [And to this] R. Hisda replied: This⁴² was necessary only for the sake of ensuring the fitness of the remnants before her?⁴³ — R. Huna reads:⁴⁴ 'To burn the remnants that were in her hands',⁴⁵ the examination being held immediately after⁴⁶ [the meal].⁴⁷

Come and hear: It once happened that Rabbi acted⁴⁸ in accordance with the ruling of R. Eliezer,⁴⁹ and after he reminded himself⁵⁰ he observed, 'R. Eliezer deserves to be relied upon

 - (7) Provided the woman shook the vessel and did not merely touch it.
 - (8) Of the 'eleven days' following the seven days of a menstrual period.
 - (9) Cur. edd. 'is not'.
 - (10) So MS.M and Rashi; because it is unknown when the flow actually appeared and the limits of the menstruation period cannot consequently be determined.
 - (11) Cur. edd. 'does not convey'.
 - (12) MS.M inserts R. Akiba's ruling infra before 'In either case, however'.
 - (13) Of the seven days of menstruation.
 - (14) So Bah and MS.M. Cur. edd., 'stain'.
 - (15) Bah and MS.M. Cur. edd. omit 'for twenty-four hours'.
 - (16) During the period mentioned.
 - (17) Which she touched.

 - (25) During the period mentioned.
 - (26) Thus it has been shown that, in agreement with Raba, the Baraita tacitly assumes that the beds and seats under discussion convey uncleanness not only to the man who came in contact with them but also to the clothes he wears (cf. Tosaf. Asheri a.l.).

 - (35) Such as that of the twenty-four hours' period under discussion where the uncleanness is merely a preventive measure.

(36) Supra, in the Baraita last cited.

(37) 'Foodstuffs and drinks'.

(38) The oil of a meal-offering, for instance, or the wine of libation.

(39) Lit., 'at the time of their passing away from eating'.

(40) Infra 11a.

(41) Lit., 'what has been, has been', sc. what is the use of an examination after the meal has been consumed when nothing can be done even if the woman were to be found unclean.

(42) The examination.

(43) Should a woman, for instance, discover a flow later in the day the examination after her morning meal would ensure the cleanness of the terumah that remained from that meal. Thus it follows that in the absence of an examination the terumah would be deemed to be unclean retrospectively. How, then, could R. Huna maintain that the uncleanness is conveyed to hallowed things only?

(44) In place of R. Hisda's version of R. Judah's meaning.

(45) Sc., if she finds herself on examination to be unclean the remnants of her meal, since she touched them, are deemed to be unclean and, as unclean terumah must be burned.

(46) Heb. Keshi'ur weseth (v. Rashi). Evthion (Tosaf. Asheri) , 'forthwith' (cf. Jast.).

(47) So that it may be taken for granted that the terumah she had just handled had come in contact with a confirmed menstruant. Where, however, the woman held no examination immediately after her meal, a subsequent discovery of a place causes no retrospective uncleanness to the terumah she handled.

(48) In the case of a young woman who did not suffer a flow during three consecutive periods (of thirty days each).

(49) That the period of uncleanness is to be reckoned from the discovery of the flow and not retrospectively. The Rabbis who differ from R. Eliezer hold this ruling to apply to an old woman only (whose senility might be assumed to be the cause of the irregularity) but not to a young one (cf. prev. n.).

(50) This is discussed presently.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 6b

in an emergency'.¹ And the point was raised, What could be the meaning of 'after he reminded himself'? If it be explained, 'After he remembered that the halachah was not in agreement with R. Eliezer but in agreement with the Rabbis', [the difficulty would arise:] How could he act according to the former's ruling² even in an emergency? Hence,³ [it means after he recalled] that it was not stated whether the law was in agreement with the one Master or with the other Master, and having recalled that it was not an individual that differed from him⁴ but that many differ from him he observed, 'R. Eliezer deserves to be relied upon in an emergency'.¹ Now if it is granted [that retrospective uncleanness applies also] to terumah⁵ one can well understand the incident⁶ since terumah was in existence in the days of Rabbi, but if it is maintained [that retrospective uncleanness is applicable only] to hallowed things⁷ [the objection would arise:] Were there hallowed things in the days of Rabbi?⁸ — [This may be explained] on the lines of a statement of 'Ullah. As 'Ulla stated, 'The Associates'⁹ in Galilee¹⁰ keep their things¹¹ in levitical cleanness',¹² so they may have done it in the days of Rabbi.

Come and hear: It once happened that R. Gamaliel's¹³ maid was baking bread loaves of terumah and after each¹⁴ she rinsed her hands with water and held an examination. After the last one when she held the examination she found herself to be unclean and she came and asked R.

Gamaliel who told her that they were all unclean.¹⁵ ‘Master’, she said to him, ‘did I not hold an examination after each one’?¹⁴ ‘If so’, he told her, ‘the last¹⁶ is unclean¹⁷ while all the others are clean’. At all events was it not here stated, ‘bread loaves of terumah’?¹⁸ — By terumah was meant¹⁹ the bread loaves²⁰ of a thanksgiving-offering.²¹ But how does it come about that the loaves of a thanksgiving-offering²² should require to be baked?²³ This is a case where they²⁴ were set aside²⁵ while they were being kneaded,²⁶ this being in line with what R. Tobi b. Kattina²⁷ ruled: ‘If a man baked the loaves of a thanksgiving-offering in four loaves²⁸ he has performed his duty’. [For when] the objection was raised, ‘Do we not require forty loaves’,²⁹ [the reply was that] this³⁰ is just a religious requirement.³¹ But, surely, [it was asked,] is it not necessary to separate terumah²⁵ from each?³² And should you reply that one might break off a piece from each³³ [it could be retorted that:] The All Merciful said, one³⁴ which implies that one must not break off a piece.²⁵ [To this] it was replied that ‘they were set aside while they were being kneaded’;³⁵ so here also³⁶ it may be explained that they were separated while they were being kneaded.³⁷

Come and hear: Another incident took place when R. Gamaliel's maid was sealing wine jars with clay that after each she rinsed her hands with water and held an examination. After the last one when she held the examination and found herself to be unclean she came and asked R. Gamaliel who told her that they were all unclean. ‘But, surely’, she said to him, ‘I held an examination after each one’. ‘If so’, he told her, ‘the last³⁸ is unclean while all the others are clean’. Now if it is conceded that one incident³⁹ concerned hallowed things and the other terumah, it can be well understood why she asked a second time, but if it is contended that the former as well as the latter concerned hallowed things, why should she have asked him a second time? — [Each] incident occurred with a different maid.⁴⁰

Another version: R. Huna ruled, [The retrospective uncleanness during] the twenty-four hours [preceding the observation] of a menstrual flow is conveyed both to hallowed things and to terumah. Whence is this⁴¹ inferred? From its omission in the enumeration of⁴² the various grades [of sanctity].⁴³ Said R. Nahman to him: Surely, a Tanna⁴⁴ recited [that the retrospective uncleanness]⁴⁵ applies only to hallowed things and not to terumah. R. Samuel son of R. Isaac accepted this [teaching]⁴⁶ from him [and explained it] as applying to common food that was prepared under conditions of hallowed things and not to common food that was prepared in conditions of terumah.⁴⁷ We learnt elsewhere: If a question of doubtful uncleanness has arisen about a dough⁴⁸ before it was rolled⁴⁹ it may be prepared in uncleanness,⁵⁰ [but if the doubt has arisen] after it had been rolled⁵¹ it must be prepared in cleanness.⁵² ‘Before it was rolled it may be prepared in uncleanness’, because it is common food and it is permitted to cause uncleanness to common food in Erez Israel. ‘After it had been rolled it must be prepared in cleanness’, because common food that is in a condition of *tebel*⁵³ in respect of the dough-offering is regarded as dough-offering, and it is forbidden to cause uncleanness to the dough-offering. A Tanna taught:

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 7a

Its dough-offering¹ is in a suspended condition² and it may neither be eaten nor burned. In respect of what doubt did they³ give this ruling?⁴ In respect of a doubt applicable to the dough-offering.⁵ What is meant by 'a doubt applicable to the dough-offering'? — Both Abaye and Raba explained: That one should not assume that the ruling⁶ applies only to⁷ a case of likely uncleanness⁸ such as that of the two paths,⁹ for in that case even mere common food contracts uncleanness;¹⁰ but that it applies also in the case actual terumah which is subject to the same restrictions as hallowed things where only 'leaning' might be assumed;¹¹ for we learnt: If a zab¹² and a clean person were unloading an ass or loading it, if the load was heavy¹³ [the latter] is unclean; if it was light¹⁴ he is clean and in either case¹⁵ he is regarded as clean¹⁶ [even if he is] of the members of the Synagogue¹⁷ but as unclean¹⁸ in respect of terumah,¹⁹ and 'unconsecrated food that is in a condition of tebel in respect of the dough-offering' is regarded as dough-offering.²⁰ But have we not learnt:²¹ A woman who is a tebulath yom²² may²³ knead her dough and cut off from it its dough-offering²⁴ and put it on an inverted basket of palm-twigs or on a board,²⁵ and then²⁶ bring it close [to the major portion of the dough] and designate it [as dough-offering;²⁷ this procedure being permitted] because the uncleanness of the dough²⁸ is only of the third grade,²⁹ and the third grade is regarded as clean in common food.³⁰ Now if you were to maintain that 'common food that is in a condition of tebel in respect of the dough-offering is regarded as dough-offering' [the objection would arise:] Did she not in fact convey uncleanness to it?³¹ — Said Abaye: In regard to any object,³² that conveys certain uncleanness to common food, uncleanness has been imposed as a preventive measure, even in a doubtful case, where common food that is in a condition of tebel in respect of the dough-offering is concerned,³³ but in regard to the woman who is a tebulath yom, since she does not convey certain uncleanness to common food,³⁴ no uncleanness has been imposed as a preventive measure in a doubtful case where common food that is in a condition of tebel in respect of the dough-offering is concerned.³³ But is there not the case of the retrospective uncleanness of the twenty-four hours [preceding the observation] of a menstrual flow which³⁵ conveys certain uncleanness to common food and in connection with which, nevertheless, no uncleanness has been imposed as a preventive measure in a case of doubt³⁶ where common food that is in a condition of tebel in respect of the dough-offering is concerned,³³ for has not the Master said, 'R. Samuel son of R. Isaac accepted from him this [teaching, and explained it] as applying to common food that was prepared under conditions of hallowed things and not to common food that was prepared in conditions of terumah?³⁷ — In the former case³⁸ no terumah is kneaded up with the common food³⁹ but in the latter case *terumah*⁴⁰ is kneaded up with the dough.⁴¹ And if you prefer I might reply: Leave out of the question the retrospective uncleanness of the twenty-four hours, since it is merely a Rabbinical measure.

MISHNAH. R. ELIEZER RULED: IN THE CASE OF FOUR CLASSES OF WOMEN IT SUFFICES [FOR THEM TO RECKON] THEIR [PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME [OF THEIR DISCOVERING OF THE FLOW]: A VIRGIN,⁴² A WOMAN IN PREGNANCY,⁴² A NURSING WOMAN,⁴² AND AN OLD WOMAN.⁴² R. JOSHUA SAID: I HAVE ONLY HEARD [THE RULING⁴³ APPLIED TO] A VIRGIN.⁴⁴

- (1) Though it was prepared in cleanness.
 - (2) On account of the doubt that had arisen earlier before the offering had been set aside.
 - (3) The Rabbis.
 - (4) That the dough-offering is in a suspended state of uncleanness.
 - (5) And not to common food, hullin (v. Glos.). This is explained presently.
 - (6) Concerning the uncleanness of the dough.
 - (7) Lit., 'we learnt'.
 - (8) Lit., 'evidences'.
 - (9) One of which was clean and the other unclean, and a person walked through one of them and it is unknown which one it was (Rashi). For a different interpretation cf. Tosaf.
 - (10) And is applicable to common food which is prepared under conditions of levitical purity. Much more then would this uncleanness apply to the common food from which dough-offering must be, set aside, and the ruling would be superfluous.
 - (11) Sc. (cf. next n. but one) where the likelihood of uncleanness is rather remote and not applicable to common food prepared under conditions of levitical purity.
 - (12) V. Glos.
 - (13) Since it is possible that on account of its heavy weight one of the men leaned on the other and was thus shaken by him, 'shaking' (hesset) being a means of conveying the uncleanness of a zab (cf. Rashi and Tosaf. Asheri).
 - (14) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
 - (15) Lit., 'and all of them', i.e., even in the case of a heavy load (Rashi); a light load (Tosaf.).
 - (16) Since (a) there might have been no shaking at all and (b) if there was it could not obviously have been a proper shaking.
 - (17) Who observe levitical cleanness in common food also.
 - (18) Rabbinically.
 - (19) Zabin III, 2. Similarly in the case of the dough-offering under discussion the expression 'a doubt applicable to the dough-offering' means a doubtful uncleanness that does not apply to members of the Synagogue in respect of common food but applies to common food from which the dough-offering has to be taken.
 - (20) Which is in the same category as terumah and consequently subject to uncleanness arising from doubtful leaning.
 - (21) So MS.M and marg. n. Cur. edd., 'it was taught'.
 - (22) Fem. of tebul yom (v. Glos.).
 - (23) Though she, as cleanness could not be completely attained before sunset, is still subject to an uncleanness of the second grade.

- (24) Without designating it as such, so that it still retains its status of common food.
- (25) Sc. on an object that is not susceptible to ritual uncleanness. Neither the board, nor the basket in its inverted position, has a receptacle, and it is only 'vessels' with proper receptacles that are susceptible to uncleanness.
- (26) Since the dough-offering when being set aside must be close to the dough for which it is offered.
- (27) By that time the uncleanness of the woman can no longer be imparted to it since the object on which it rests (cf. prev. n. but one) intervenes.
- (28) Lit., 'it'; that had been touched by the woman who (v. supra) is of the second grade of uncleanness.
- (29) A clean object touched by an unclean one being always (with some exceptions) subject to a grade of uncleanness that is by one grade lower than the latter.
- (30) T.Y. IV, 2; such as the dough is presumably before the dough-offering had been taken from it.
- (31) When she first touched it. What then was the use of the entire procedure and precaution after that?
- (32) Such, e.g., as the load carried by a zab.
- (33) Lit., 'on account of'.
- (34) A third grade of uncleanness, as stated supra, being regarded as clean.
- (35) During the actual period of the flow.
- (36) I.e., during the twenty-four hours preceding the observation of the flow when the uncleanness is only doubtful.
- (37) Supra 6b ad fin. 'Common food that was prepared in conditions of terumah' being presumably in an analogous position to 'common food that is in a condition of tebel in respect of the dough-offering' both should be subject to the same restrictions. Why then was the former exempted from the restriction while the latter was subjected to it?
- (38) Cf. prev. n. Lit., 'there'.
- (39) Lit., 'in them'.
- (40) Sc. the dough-offering.
- (41) The latter must consequently be subject to greater restrictions.
- (42) This is explained presently.
- (43) Of R. Eliezer that IT SUFFICES etc.
- (44) But not to the other three classes.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 7b

THE HALACHAH, HOWEVER, IS IN AGREEMENT WITH R. ELIEZER.

WHO IS REGARDED AS 'VIRGIN'? ANY WOMAN, EVEN THOUGH SHE IS MARRIED, WHO HAS NEVER YET OBSERVED A FLOW. 'A WOMAN IN PREGNANCY'? ONE WHOSE EMBRYO CAN BE DISCERNED. 'A NURSING WOMAN'? A WOMAN BEFORE SHE HAS WEANED HER CHILD. IF SHE GAVE HER CHILD TO A NURSING WOMAN, IF SHE WEANED IT, OR IF IT DIED, R. MEIR RULED: SHE CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS RETROSPECTIVELY FOR TWENTY-FOUR HOURS;¹ BUT THE SAGES RULED: IT SUFFICES FOR HER² [TO RECKON HER PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME OF HER [OBSERVATION OF THE FLOW]. WHO IS REGARDED AS 'AN OLD WOMAN'? ANY WOMAN OVER WHOM THREE 'ONAH'S³ HAVE PASSED⁴ NEAR THE TIME OF HER OLD AGE.⁵ R. ELIEZER⁶ RULED: FOR ANY WOMAN⁷ OVER WHOM HAVE PASSED⁴ THREE 'ONAH'S IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON HER PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME OF HER [OBSERVING OF A FLOW]. R. JOSE RULED: FOR A WOMAN IN PREGNANCY AND A NURSING WOMAN

OVER WHOM THREE ‘ONAHs HAVE PASSED⁸ IT SUFFICES [TO RECKON THEIR PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME OF THEIR [OBSERVATION OF THE FLOW].⁹

AND OF WHAT DID THEY¹⁰ SPEAK¹¹ WHEN THEY LAID DOWN¹² THAT ‘IT SUFFICES [FOR THEM TO RECKON] THEIR PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM THE TIME [OF THEIR DISCOVERING OF THE FLOW]’? OF A FIRST OBSERVATION,¹³ BUT AT A SUBSEQUENT OBSERVATION¹⁴ SHE CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS RETROSPECTIVELY FOR A PERIOD OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS. IF, HOWEVER, SHE SUFFERED THE FIRST FLOW ON ACCOUNT OF AN ACCIDENT¹⁵ IT SUFFICES FOR HER EVEN AT A SUBSEQUENT OBSERVATION [TO RECKON HER UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME OF HER [OBSERVING OF THE FLOW].

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Eliezer said to R. Joshua, ‘You have not heard¹⁶ but¹⁷ I have heard; you have only heard one tradition but I have heard many;¹⁸ people do not ask him who has not seen the new moon to come and tender evidence¹⁹ but only him who has seen it.’ Throughout the lifetime of²⁰ R. Eliezer the people acted in accordance with the ruling of R. Joshua, but after the passing away of R. Eliezer, R. Joshua re-introduced the earlier practice.²¹ Why did he²² not follow R. Eliezer during his lifetime? — Because R. Eliezer was a disciple of Shammai²³ and he²⁴ felt that if they²⁵ would act in agreement with his ruling in one matter²⁶ they²⁵ would act in agreement with his rulings in other matters also²⁷ and that out of respect for R. Eliezer no one could interfere²⁸ with them; but after the passing away of R. Eliezer, when the people²⁹ could well be interfered with, he²⁴ re-introduced the original practice.

Rab Judah citing Samuel ruled: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four cases. One is that which has just been mentioned.³⁰ The other is that about a woman who was in a hard travail³¹ [concerning whom it was stated:] For how long must she be relieved from pain³² so as to be regarded a zabah?³³ Twenty-four hours,³⁴ so R. Eliezer.³⁵ And the halachah is in agreement with his view.³⁶ And the third³⁷ is the following: If a zab and a zabah³⁸ examined themselves on the first day³⁹ and found themselves clean and on the seventh day also⁴⁰ and found themselves clean, but did not examine themselves during the other days,⁴¹ R. Eliezer ruled: Behold these⁴² are in a presumptive condition of cleanness,⁴³ and R. Joshua ruled: They are entitled [to reckon as clean] only the first day and the seventh day,⁴⁴ while R. Akiba ruled: They are entitled [to reckon as clean] the seventh day alone,⁴⁵ and it was taught: R. Simeon and R. Jose stated, ‘The view of R. Eliezer⁴⁶ is more feasible than that of R. Joshua,⁴⁷ while that of R. Akiba is more feasible than those of both,⁴⁸ but the halachah agrees with that of R. Eliezer’.⁴⁹ And the fourth is the following.⁵⁰ For we have learnt: If the outer sides⁵¹ of vessels were rendered unclean⁵² by liquids,⁵³ R. Eliezer ruled, they convey uncleanness⁵² to other liquids⁵⁴ but they⁵⁵ do not render foodstuffs unfit.⁵⁶ ‘They convey uncleanness to liquids’ even where the latter are common, but they ‘do not render foodstuffs unfit’, even where the latter are terumah. R. Joshua ruled: They convey uncleanness to liquids and also render foodstuffs unfit.⁵⁷ Said R. Joshua: This may be inferred a minori ad majus: If a tebul yom who⁵⁸ does not convey uncleanness to a common liquid,⁵⁹ nevertheless renders foodstuffs of terumah unfit how much more then should the outsides of vessels which do convey uncleanness to an unconsecrated liquid render foodstuffs of terumah unfit. And R. Eliezer?⁶⁰ — The uncleanness of the outsides of vessels⁶¹ is only Rabbinical⁶² while that of a tebul yom⁶³ is pentateuchal,⁶⁴ and, where it is a question of deducing a Rabbinical from a Pentateuchal law, no inference a minori ad majus can be applied.⁶⁵ For in accordance with Pentateuchal law no foodstuff conveys uncleanness to a vessel and no liquid conveys uncleanness to a vessel, and it is only the Rabbis that have ordained such uncleanness as a preventive measure against possible laxity in the case of the fluid⁶⁶ of a zab or a zabah;⁶⁷ hence it is only in the case of liquids, which are prone to contract uncleanness, that the Rabbis have enacted a preventive measure, but in that of foodstuffs, since they are not prone to contract uncleanness, the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure. What, however, is the reason for the mention of the outsides of vessels?⁶⁸ — Because their restrictions are lighter.⁶⁹ For we have learnt: If the outside of a vessel came in contact with unclean liquids,⁷⁰ its outside becomes unclean while its inside, its hanger,⁷¹ its rim and its handles remain clean, but if its inside has become unclean all of it is unclean.⁷²

But what does Samuel teach us,⁷³ seeing that in all these cases we learnt that the law [was in agreement with R. Eliezer]? And should you reply that he mainly informed us about the ‘outsides of vessels’ concerning which we did not learn [elsewhere what the law was], why [it could be retorted] did he not simply state, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in the case of the outsides of vessels’? — The fact is that it is this that he informed us:⁷⁴ That the halachah may not be derived from a theoretical statement.⁷⁵

But are there no more [than the four rulings]?⁷⁶ Is there not in fact another, since we have learnt: R. Eliezer ruled,

- (1) Preceding the time of her observation of the flow.
 - (2) During the twenty-four months after the child's birth throughout which she is expected to suckle it (v. Gemara infra).
 - (3) ‘Periods’. This is explained in the Gemara infra.
 - (4) Without her observing of a flow.
 - (5) This is explained in the Gemara infra.
 - (6) Var. lec., ‘Eleazar’.
 - (7) Even a young one.
 - (8) Without her observing of a flow.
 - (9) If three consecutive ‘onahs, however, have not passed, there applies the law of retrospective uncleanness, contrary to the view of R. Eliezer and the first Tanna supra.
 - (10) The Rabbis, supra.
 - (11) So Bah. Cur. edd. ‘he spoke’.
 - (12) Supra in the case of the CLASSES OF WOMEN. This is discussed in the Gemara infra.
 - (13) After the three ‘onahs have passed over the virgin, the woman in pregnancy or the old woman.
 - (14) Lit., ‘at the second’, since her natural proneness to the flow is re-established.
 - (15) So that it cannot be ascribed to the woman's natural disposition (cf. prev. n.).
 - (16) Cf. R. Joshua's statement in our Mishnah.
 - (17) Cf. Bah. Cur. edd. omit the waw.
 - (18) Reading harbeh. Var. lec. arba’ (‘four’) sc. women, cf. Bah.
 - (19) That he has seen it. Such evidence was essential to enable the Great Beth-din in Jerusalem (who regulated the lengths of the months and the fixation of the festival dates) to proclaim the beginning of a new month.
 - (20) Lit., ‘all his days’.

- (21) Lit., 'restored the thing to its old (state)', when the practice was in agreement with the view of R. Eliezer.
- (22) R. Joshua.
- (23) So R. Tam and Rashb. (contra Rashi who, referring to B.M. 59b, renders shamuthi 'one placed under the ban'). Wherever Beth Hillel differed from Beth Shammai the law (with a very few exceptions) is always in agreement with the former.
- (24) R. Joshua.
- (25) Lit., 'we'.
- (26) I.e., the one mentioned in our Mishnah where the law in fact is in agreement with his view.
- (27) Sc. even in those where the law is in agreement with Beth Hillel.
- (28) Lit., 'we are not able to prevent'.
- (29) If they were to follow R. Eliezer in other matters (cf. prev. n. but one) also.
- (30) Cf. supra n. 6.
- (31) For three days (during the 'eleven days' between the menstrual periods) on each of which there was a discharge of blood. If the discharge was not due to the travail she, having observed the blood on three consecutive days, would be subject to the restrictions of a zabah; but if it was due to travail she would be exempt from these restrictions. If a zabah she would have to count after childbirth seven days (as a zabah) in addition to the number of days prescribed for a woman after childbirth, and she would also have to bring two sacrifices one as a zabah and the other as one after childbirth.
- (32) After the three days mentioned (cf. prev. n.) and before the birth of the child.
- (33) Retrospectively, on account of the discharges on the three days. If the pain had continued until delivery it would have been obvious that the discharge on the three days mentioned was also due to the same cause, but if it ceased some considerable time before birth it may well be concluded that that discharge had no connection with the childbearing and the woman would consequently come within the category of zabah (cf. prev. n. but one).
- (34) If such a period has intervened it is obvious that the discharge mentioned was in no way due to travail.
- (35) Infra 36b.
- (36) Though R. Joshua differs from him.
- (37) Lit., 'and the other'.
- (38) Sc. the same law applies to either.
- (39) After the flux had ceased.
- (40) Cf. prev. n. Seven days without any discharge must pass before a zab or a zabah can attain cleanness.
- (41) The intermediate five.
- (42) Since on the first and the last day they were definitely clean.
- (43) And on performing immersion at the close of the seventh day they became clean.
- (44) Sc. two days only. As the cleanness of the intermediate days is a matter of doubt they must count another five days to make up the prescribed number of seven. In the case of a certain discharge on any of the days all the prescribed seven days must, of course, be counted all over again.
- (45) Infra 68b; since it is possible that there was a discharge on the sixth day, when there was no examination (cf. prev. n. last clause).
- (46) Who is consistent in disregarding completely the possibility of a discharge on any of the five days that intervened between the first and last clean ones. Cf. following n.
- (47) Who (cf. prev. n.) is inconsistent, seeing that he assumes the possibility of a discharge during the intermediate days and at the same time allows counting the first day as one of the seven clean days.
- (48) A possible, like a certain discharge (cf. supra n. 11, last clause) on the sixth day might quite reasonably be regarded as sufficient ground for cancelling all the previous days counted, including the first.
- (49) Infra 68b.

- (50) Lit., 'and the other'.
- (51) In a case where the insides are not affected (as explained infra) lit., 'backs'.
- (52) Rabbinically (cf. following two notes).
- (53) Through contracting uncleanness from a dead creeping thing. The latter being a primary uncleanness causes the liquids to be an uncleanness of the first grade which (though Pentateuchally, since their uncleanness is not a primary one, it cannot, as explained in Pes. 18a, convey uncleanness to vessels) renders the vessels unclean Rabbinically. As the uncleanness that is conveyed to vessels by liquids is merely Rabbinical, and as it was desired to make a distinction between Pentateuchal and Rabbinical uncleanness, it was enacted that, in such a case, only the outsides of vessels and not their insides shall contract the uncleanness.
- (54) Because liquids are prone to uncleanness. In consequence they contract from the vessels a first grade of uncleanness, the same grade as that of the outer sides of the vessels themselves.
- (55) Since Pentateuchally (cf. prev. n. but one) they are deemed to be clean.
- (56) Toh. VIII, 7; much less do they render them unclean. (This is explained presently.)
- (57) Toh. VIII, 7.
- (58) Being subject to a secondary grade of uncleanness only (v. following n.).
- (59) As explained in Pes. 14b.
- (60) How in view of this inference can he maintain his ruling?
- (61) Contracted from liquids.
- (62) Cf. supra n. 3.
- (63) In respect of conveying uncleanness to foodstuffs of terumah.
- (64) As deduced from Scripture in Yeb. 74b.
- (65) Since it is obvious that Pentateuchal uncleanness should be subject to greater restrictions.
- (66) E.g., spittle.
- (67) Which is a primary uncleanness Pentateuchally (cf. Lev. XV, 8).
- (68) Lit., 'wherein is the difference . . . that he took up', sc. why should not the Mishnah equally speak of the insides of vessels that similarly contracted from liquids Rabbinical uncleanness?
- (69) Than those that govern the insides of vessels. In the latter case R. Eliezer agrees that terumah is rendered invalid.
- (70) Lit., 'a vessel whose back became unclean by liquids'.
- (71) Lit., 'its ear'.
- (72) Kelim XXV, 6.
- (73) By stating supra that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four cases'.
- (74) By laying down the halachah (cf. prev. n.) in the case of rulings where a similar statement was actually embodied in the Mishnah.
- (75) Talmud, lit., 'learning'. All statements as to what is the halachah added by a Tanna to a ruling in a Mishnah or a Baraitha must be regarded as a mere opinion or theory which a disciple expressed with reference to a ruling of his master. It is only the carefully considered decisions of the later Amoras that, being based on a minute examination and thorough analysis of their predecessor's views that may be relied upon as authoritative in determining the halachah (cf. Rashi).
- (76) Referred to supra by Rab Judah in the name of Samuel, concerning which the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 8a

'A minor¹ is to be instructed² to exercise her right of mi'un against him'³ and in connection with this Rab Judah citing Samuel stated, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer'?⁴ — When Samuel stated 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four cases he referred to rulings in the Order of Toharoth,⁵ but in the other Orders there are many such rulings. This⁶ also stands to reason, for we learnt: R. Eliezer ruled, Also in the case of one who shovels out loaves of bread⁷ from an oven and puts them into a basket,⁸ the basket causes them to be combined in respect of their liability to the dough-offering',⁹ and in connection with this Rab Judah citing Samuel stated, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.'¹⁰ This is conclusive. But why is the latter¹¹ a more valid proof¹² than the former?¹³ — Because in the former case R. Eleazar takes up the same standpoint as he,¹⁴ for we learnt: R. Eleazar ruled, The minor is to be instructed¹⁵ to exercise her right of mi'un against him.¹⁶ But does he¹⁷ take up the same standpoint?¹⁸ Have we not in fact shown¹⁹ that both²⁰ were required because they are not like one another?²¹ — Rather say, Because R. Judah b. Baba takes up the same position as he,²² for we learnt,²³ 'R. Judah b. Baba testified concerning five things: That minors are urged to exercise their right of mi'un,²⁴ that a woman²⁵ is allowed to remarry on the evidence of one witness,²⁶ that a cock was stoned²⁷ in Jerusalem because it had killed a person,²⁸ that²⁹ wine which was only forty days old³⁰ was poured as a drink-offering upon the altar, and that²⁹ the continual morning sacrifice was offered³¹ [as late as] at the fourth hour [of the day]'.³² Now does not the expression 'minors',³³ imply³⁴ the one of which R. Eleazar and the one of which R. Eliezer spoke?³⁵ — No; by the expression³⁶ 'minors' minors in general³⁷ were meant.³⁸ If so,³⁹ should it not have been stated, in the case of the woman⁴⁰ also, 'women', meaning thereby⁴¹ women in general?⁴² As in the latter case,⁴³ however, it was stated 'woman',⁴⁴ and in the former 'minors'⁴⁵ it may be concluded that the expressions are to be taken literally.⁴⁶ This is conclusive.

R. Eleazar⁴⁷ also⁴⁸ stated, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four things'. But are there no more of such rulings?⁴⁹ Have we not in fact learnt, 'R. Eliezer ruled, The minor is to be instructed to exercise her right of mi'un against him'⁵⁰ and R. Eleazar stated, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer'?⁵¹ And were you to reply that when R. Eleazar stated, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four things' he referred to the rulings in the Order of Toharoth, but that in the other Orders there are many more such rulings⁴⁹ [it could be retorted:] But are there any such? Have we not in fact learnt, 'The rose, henna,⁵² lotus⁵³ and balsam as well as their proceeds are subject to the laws of the Sabbatical year⁵⁴ and they and their proceeds are also subject to the law of removal,⁵⁵ in connection with which R. Pedath⁵⁶ is observed, 'Who taught⁵⁷ that balsam is a fruit?⁵⁸ R. Eliezer'; and R. Zera replied, 'I see that between⁵⁹ you and your father you will cause balsam to be permitted to the world,⁶⁰ since you said, "Who taught that balsam is a fruit? R. Eliezer" and your father said, "The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four things".'⁶¹ Now, if it were so,⁶² why did he⁶³ not reply to him,⁶⁴ 'When my father said, "The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four things" he referred only to rulings in the Order of Toharoth but in other Orders there are many more'?⁶⁵ — But then,⁶⁶ does not the previous difficulty⁶⁷ arise? — [In the case of mi'un⁶⁸ the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer] because R. Eleazar [b. Shammua'] takes up the same standpoint as he; for we have learnt: R. Eleazar ruled, The minor is to be instructed to exercise her right of mi'un against him.⁶⁹ But does he⁷⁰ take up the same standpoint? Have we not in fact shown that both⁷¹ were required because they are not like one another?⁷² — Rather say: Because R. Judah b. Baba takes up the same standpoint as he.⁷⁰ But are there no more such rulings?⁷³

Have we not in fact learnt: 'R. Akiba ruled, One says it⁷⁴ as an independent benediction;⁷⁵ R. Eliezer ruled, One includes it in the benediction of thanksgiving';⁷⁶ and in connection with this R. Eleazar⁷⁷ stated,⁷⁸ 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer'? — R. Abba replied: [The halachah agrees with him] in that case because he [may have] said it in the name of R. Hanina b. Gamaliel, for it was taught: R. Akiba ruled, One says it⁷⁹ as an independent benediction;⁷⁵ R. Hanina b. Gamaliel ruled, One includes it in the benediction of thanksgiving.

- (1) Who was fatherless and was given in marriage by her mother or brothers (so that her marriage is only Rabbinically valid) and who had a sister that was of age and was married to the minor's husband's brother who died without issue. In accordance with the laws of the levirate marriage the surviving brother must marry the widow, but such marriage cannot take place in this case on account of the prohibition to marry a wife's sister. The minor, furthermore, is now forbidden to live with her husband (whose marriage with her is only Rabbinically valid) on account of the levirate bond between him and her sister (which is Pentateuchal). Rashi speaks here of two 'orphan' sisters, but the Mishnah in Yeb, speaks of 'deaf' sisters.
 - (2) In order to avoid (cf. prev. n.) the difficulties mentioned.
 - (3) Her husband. In virtue of mi'un (v. Glos.) she annuls her marriage and sets her husband free to perform the Pentateuchal law of the levirate marriage. Yeb. 109a.
 - (4) Yeb. 110a.
 - (5) The sixth, and last order of the Talmud in which the tractate of Niddah is included.
 - (6) That Samuel referred to the Order of Toharoth alone.
 - (7) That were made of quantities of dough each of which was never greater than five kab. Only when dough is no less than five kab in bulk is it subject to the dough-offering.
 - (8) And in their total they amounted to no less than five kab.
 - (9) Hal. II, 4.
 - (10) Which shows that outside the Order of Toharoth there are other rulings concerning which the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.
 - (11) Hal. II, 4.
 - (12) In support of the explanation given (cf. n. 10).
 - (13) The ruling cited from Yeb. Lit., 'and what is the strength of that from that?'
 - (14) R. Eliezer.
 - (15) In certain cases enumerated in Yeb. 111a.
 - (16) Yeb. 111a, a ruling that is analogous to that of R. Eliezer in Yeb. 109a, and it might have been assumed that only in this case, since R. Eliezer is supported by the authority of R. Eleazar, is the halachah in agreement with the former but not in other cases where he has no such support; hence the citation from Hal, where the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer even though his ruling has his own authority alone.
 - (17) R. Eleazar.
 - (18) As R. Eliezer.
 - (19) Yeb. 111b.
 - (20) Statements of Samuel, that the halachah is in agreement with (a) R. Eliezer and (b) R. Eleazar.
 - (21) How then could it be suggested here that R. Eleazar's ruling provides support for that of R. Eliezer?
 - (22) R. Eliezer.
 - (23) So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'it was taught'.
 - (24) Cf. notes on the similar ruling of R. Eliezer (cited from Yeb. 109a supra).
 - (25) Whose husband left for a country overseas.
 - (26) Who testifies that her husband was dead.

- (27) In accordance with Ex. XXI, 28 (as expounded in B.K. 54b), though the text speaks only of an ox.
- (28) It pecked out the brain of a child.
- (29) Lit., 'and about'.
- (30) One that is less than forty days old is invalid as 'wine from the vat', which is too new (cf. B.B. 97a, Sonc. ed. p. 405).
- (31) On one occasion, during the Syrian Greek siege of Jerusalem, when no sacrifice could be secured.
- (32) 'Ed. VI, 1.
- (33) Sc. the use of the plural form.
- (34) Lit., 'what minors? Not?' etc.
- (35) The answer being presumably in the affirmative it follows that R. Eliezer's ruling is supported by the authority of R. Judah b. Baba.
- (36) Lit., 'what'.
- (37) Of the class spoken of by R. Eleazar.
- (38) Excluding the one spoken of by R. Eliezer who, consequently, stands unsupported.
- (39) That the plural form in this context is used to indicate the class.
- (40) 'That a woman is allowed etc.'
- (41) Lit., 'and let us say'.
- (42) Obviously it should.
- (43) Lit., 'since here' (cf. supra p. 47, n. 25).
- (44) In the sing., though the whole class is included.
- (45) In the plural.
- (46) Lit., 'he learns exactly', sc. that 'minors' in the plural refers to the two classes of minor, the one dealt with by R. Eleazar and the one spoken of by R. Eliezer.
- (47) I.e., R. Eleazar b. Pedath who was an Amora. R. Eleazar who laid down the rule of mi'un is a Tanna and was b. Shammua'.
- (48) Like Rab Judah who cited Samuel supra 7b.
- (49) In regard to which the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.
- (50) Supra q.v. notes.
- (51) Yeb. 110a.
- (52) Or 'cyprus flower'.
- (53) Or 'gum-mastich'.
- (54) Shebi. VII, 6: sc. during that year they must be treated as hefker (v. Glos.) and no trade may be carried on with them.
- (55) Sc., as soon as none of these products respectively remained in the field the owner must remove from his house all that he had previously gathered in. The last quoted part, 'and they . . . removal' is wanting in the Mishnah.
- (56) The son of R. Eleazar b. Pedath.
- (57) In the Mishnah cited from Sheb.
- (58) Were it no fruit it would not have been subject to the laws of the Sabbatical Year.
- (59) Lit., 'from'.
- (60) During the Sabbatical Year, i.e., to be exempt from its restrictions.
- (61) But no more. R. Eliezer's restrictive law concerning balsam, since it is not included in the four, must consequently be against the halachah and must, therefore, be disregarded.
- (62) That outside the Order of Toharoth there are other rulings of R. Eliezer in agreement with the halachah.
- (63) R. Pedath.

- (64) R. Zera.
- (65) And R. Zera's objection would thus have been met. Since R. Pedath, however, gave no such reply it follows that R. Eleazar's statement that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer in four things' applies to all the Orders of the Talmud.
- (66) Cf. prev. n.
- (67) How is it that in the case of mi'un (which is not included in the four) the halachah is also in agreement with R. Eliezer?
- (68) Though it is not one of the four (cf. prev. n.).
- (69) Supra q.v. notes.
- (70) R. Eleazar [b. Shammua'].
- (71) The rulings of R. Eliezer and R. Eleazar respectively.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 8b

But was he¹ not much older than he?² — Rather say:³ Because R. Hanina b. Gamaliel took up⁴ the same line as he, But did he⁵ take it up? Was it not in fact taught: On the night of the Day of Atonement⁶ one recites in his prayers seven benedictions and makes confession; in the morning⁶ one recites seven benedictions and makes confession; during the additional prayer⁷ one recites seven benedictions and makes confession; in the afternoon prayer one recites seven benedictions and makes confession; In the concluding prayer⁸ one recites seven benedictions and makes confession, and in the evening⁹ one recites seven benedictions embodying the substance of the Eighteen;¹⁰ and R. Hanina b. Gamaliel in the name of his ancestors ruled: One must recite in his prayers¹¹ all the eighteen benedictions because it is necessary to include habdalah¹² in 'who favourest man with knowledge'?¹³ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: He cited it¹⁴ in the name of his ancestors but he himself¹⁵ does not uphold it.

Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zera:¹⁶ But do you not yourself hold that he who taught that balsam was a fruit is R. Eliezer, seeing that we have learnt: R. Eliezer ruled, Milk curdled with the sap of 'orlah is forbidden?¹⁷ — This¹⁸ might be said to agree even with the view of the Rabbis, since they differed from R. Eliezer only in respect of the sap of the tree but in the case of the sap of the fruit they agree with him, for we have learnt: R. Joshua stated, I have explicitly heard that milk curdled with the sap of the leaves or with the sap of the roots is permitted, but if it was curdled with the sap of unripe figs it is forbidden because the latter is regarded as a proper fruit.¹⁹ And if you prefer I might reply: The Rabbis differ from R. Eliezer only in respect of a fruit producing tree but in the case of a tree that does not produce fruit they agree that its sap is regarded as its fruit, for we have learnt: R. Simeon ruled, Balsam is not subject to the laws of the Sabbatical Year²⁰ and the Sages ruled, Balsam is subject to the laws of the Sabbatical Year because the sap of the tree is regarded as its fruit.²¹ Now who are the Sages? Are they not in fact the Rabbis who differ²² from R. Eliezer?²³ — Thus, a certain elder replied to him, said R. Johanan, ‘Who are the "Sages"? R. Eliezer who ruled that its balsam is its fruit’. But if by the ‘Sages’ R. Eliezer was meant what was the point in speaking of a tree that does not produce fruit seeing that even where a tree produces fruit its sap is regarded as its fruit? — He²⁴ spoke to them²⁵ according to the view of the Rabbis. ‘According to my view’ [he said in effect,] ‘even in the case of a fruit producing tree its sap is regarded as its fruit, but according to your view²⁶ agree with me at least in this case of a tree that produces no fruit that its sap is its fruit. But the Rabbis told him: No difference is made.’²⁷

WHO IS REGARDED AS A ‘VIRGIN’? ANY WOMAN WHO HAS NOT YET OBSERVED etc. Our Rabbis taught: [If a virgin] married and observed a discharge of blood that was due to the marriage, or if when she bore a child she observed a discharge of blood that was due to the birth, she is still called a ‘virgin’, because the virgin of whom the Rabbis spoke is one that is a virgin as regards menstrual blood but not one who is so in regard to the blood of virginity.²⁸ Can this, however, be correct?²⁹ Has not R. Kahana in fact stated, ‘A Tanna taught: There are three kinds of virgin, the human virgin, the soil virgin and the sycamore virgin. The "human virgin" is one that never³⁰ had any sexual intercourse, the practical issue³¹ being her eligibility to marry a High Priest³² or else her claim to a kethubah of two hundred zuz,³³ the "virgin soil" is one that had never³⁰ been cultivated, the practical issue³¹ being its designation as "a rough valley"³⁴ or else its legal status as regards purchase and sale,³⁵ the "virgin sycamore" is one that has never³⁶ been cut,³⁷ the practical issue³⁸ being its legal status as regards purchase and sale³⁹ or else the permissibility to cut it³⁷ in the Sabbatical Year, as we have learnt: A virgin sycamore may not be cut in the Sabbatical Year because such cutting is regarded as cultivation’.⁴⁰ Now if this⁴¹ were correct why did he⁴² not mention this one also? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: He only mentioned such as has no special⁴³ name⁴⁴ but one which bears a special⁴³ name⁴⁵ he does not mention. R. Shesheth son of R. Idi replied: He⁴⁶ only mentioned those, the loss of whose virginity⁴⁷ is dependent on an act⁴⁸ but one the loss of whose virginity⁴⁷ is not dependent on an act⁴⁹ he does not mention. R. Hanina son of R. Ika replied: He⁴⁶ only mentioned those⁴⁷ which do not change⁵⁰ into their original condition⁵¹ but one which does change to its original condition⁵² he does not mention. Rabina replied: He⁵³ only mentioned that to which a purchaser is likely to object⁵⁴ but that to which a purchaser is not likely to object⁵⁵ he does not mention. But do not people object?⁵⁶ Was it not in fact taught, ‘R. Hiyya stated: As leaven is wholesome for the dough so is menstrual blood wholesome for a woman’⁵⁷ and it was also taught in the name of R. Meir, ‘Every woman who has an abundance of menstrual blood has many children’?⁵⁷ — Rather say: He⁵³ only mentioned that which a purchaser is anxious to acquire⁵⁸ but that⁵⁹ which a purchaser is not anxious to acquire⁶⁰ he does not mention.

Our Rabbis taught: What is meant by a virgin soil? One which⁶¹ turns up clods⁶² and whose earth is not loose. If⁶¹ a potsherd is found in it, it may be known that it had once been cultivated;⁶³ if flint, it is undoubtedly⁶⁴ virgin soil.

‘A WOMAN IN PREGNANCY’? ONE WHOSE EMBRYO ‘CAN BE DISCERNED. At what stage⁶⁵ is the embryo discernible? — Symmachus citing R. Meir replied: Three months after conception. And though there is no actual proof for this statement there is an allusion⁶⁶ to it, for it is said in Scripture, And it came to pass about three months after⁶⁷ etc. ‘An allusion to it’ [you say], is not this a text of Scripture and a most reliable⁶⁸ proof? — [It can only be regarded as an allusion] because some women⁶⁹ give birth after nine months and others after seven months.⁷⁰

Our Rabbis taught: If a woman was⁷¹ in a condition of presumptive pregnancy and after observing a discharge of blood she miscarried an inflated object⁷² or any other object which had no vitality⁷³ she⁷⁴ is still deemed to be⁷⁵ in the condition of her presumptive pregnancy and it suffices for her to reckon her period of menstrual uncleanness from the time of her observation of the discharge.⁷⁶ And though there is no actual proof for this ruling⁷⁷ there is an allusion⁷⁸ to it, for it is said in Scripture, We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind.⁷⁹ But why only ‘an allusion to it’ seeing that the text provides actual⁸⁰ proof? — That text was in fact written about males.⁸¹

I would, however, point out an incongruity: If a woman was in hard labour⁸² for two days⁸³ and on the third day⁸⁴ she miscarried an inflated object or any thing that had no vitality, she⁸⁵ is regarded as bearing in the condition of a zabah.⁸⁶ Now if you maintain that such miscarriage is a proper birth

(9) That follows the solemn day.

(10) I.e., instead of all the ‘eighteen (now nineteen) benedictions’ that are to be recited at ordinary weekday services (cf. P.B., p. 44ff) one recites on this occasion only the first three and the last three benedictions, and inserts between a shortened prayer embracing the salient features of the intermediate ones (cf. P.B., p. 55).

(11) Even on the evening mentioned.

(12) The prayer added to the service at the conclusion of Sabbaths and festival days (cf. P.B., p. 46).

(13) Yoma 87b, Pes. 3a. Cf. P.B., i.e. In the shortened prayer, where this benediction is reduced to a few words, this cannot be done. Now, since R. Hanina here states that habdalah is to be included in the benediction ‘who favourest etc.’ how could it be said supra that he adopts the same line as R. Eliezer who requires it to be included in the benediction of thanksgiving?

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 9a

did not the All Merciful [it may be objected] ordain that [a flow of blood in] painful labour immediately before birth¹ is regarded as clean?² — R. Papi replied: Leave alone the question of the twenty-four hours retrospective uncleanness³ which only involves a Rabbinical enactment.⁴ R. Papa replied: The actual reason⁵ is that the woman⁶ feels a heaviness in her head and limbs;⁷ well then, here also⁸ she feels a heaviness in her head and in her limbs.⁹

R. Jeremiah enquired of R. Zera: What is the ruling¹⁰ where a woman observed a flow and immediately after her pregnancy was discerned? Is she retrospectively unclean because her pregnancy was not known at the time she observed the flow or is she not retrospectively unclean since she observed it immediately before she became aware of her pregnancy? — The other replied: The sole reason¹¹ is that she¹² feels a heaviness in her head and limbs¹³ but¹⁴ at the time she observed the flow she felt no heaviness either in her head or in her limbs.¹⁵

A certain old man asked R. Johanan: ‘What is the ruling if, when the time of her fixed period had come during the days of her pregnancy and she did not examine herself? I am raising this question on the view of the authority who laid down [that a woman's duty to hold an examination on the arrival of her] fixed periods is an ordinance of the Torah.¹⁶ What is the ruling [I ask]? Must she¹⁷ examine herself since [the duty of holding an examination on the arrival of] the fixed periods is an ordinance of the Torah¹⁶ or is it possible that since¹⁸ her menstrual blood is suspended,¹⁹ she requires no examination’?²⁰ — The other²¹ replied, You have learnt it: R. Meir ruled, If a woman was in a hiding-place²² when the time of her fixed period arrived and she did not examine herself she is nevertheless clean because fear suspends the menstrual flow.²³ Now the reason is²⁴ that there was fear, but if there had been no fear and the time of her fixed period had arrived and she did not examine herself she would have been deemed unclean. It is thus clear²⁵ [that a woman's duty to examine herself at the time of the arrival of her] fixed periods is an ordinance of the Torah and that, nevertheless, since there was fear, her menstrual blood is deemed to be suspended and she requires no exemption; so also here,²⁶ since her menstrual blood is suspended she requires no examination.

‘A NURSING WOMAN’? A WOMAN BEFORE SHE HAS WEANED etc. Our Rabbis taught: A nursing mother whose child died within twenty-four months²⁷ is in exactly the same position as all other women²⁸ and causes retrospective uncleanness for a period of twenty-four hours or from the previous to the last examination. If, therefore,²⁹ she continued to suck it for four or five years it suffices for her to reckon her period of uncleanness from the time she has observed the flow; so R. Meir. R. Judah, R. Jose and R. Simeon ruled: Only during the twenty-four months³⁰ does it suffice for women to reckon their uncleanness from the time they have observed a flow.³¹ Therefore,³² even if she suckled it for four or five years she causes uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from the previous to the last examination.³³ Now if you will carefully consider [the views just expressed] you will find that³⁴ according to the view of R. Meir the menstrual blood is decomposed and turns into milk while according to the view of R. Jose, R. Judah and R. Simeon the woman's limbs³⁵ are disjointed and her natural vigour³⁶ does not return before the lapse of twenty-four months. Why the necessity for the ‘therefore’³⁷ of R. Meir?³⁸ — On account of the ‘therefore’³⁹ of R. Jose. But why the necessity for the ‘therefore’ of R. Jose?⁴⁰ — It might have been assumed that R. Jose maintains that⁴¹ there are two [causes];⁴² hence we were informed⁴³ [that he upholds the one cause only].⁴⁴ So it was also taught: The menstrual blood⁴⁵ is decomposed and turns into milk; so R. Meir. R. Jose stated: Her limbs⁴⁶ are disjointed and her natural strength does not return before twenty-four months.⁴⁷ R. Elai explained: What is R. Meir's reason?⁴⁸ That it is written, Who can bring a clean thing⁴⁹ from out of an unclean?⁵⁰ Is it not the Only One?⁵¹ And the Rabbis?⁵² — R. Johanan replied: The reference⁵³ is to semen which is unclean, while the man who is created from it is clean; and R. Eleazar replied: The reference⁵³ is to the water of sprinkling⁵⁴ in the case of which the man who sprinkles it as well as the man upon whom it is sprinkled is clean while he who touches it is unclean. But is the man who sprinkles it clean? Is it not in fact written, And he that sprinkleth the water of sprinkling shall wash his clothes?⁵⁵ — What is meant by ‘He that sprinkleth’? He that touches it. But is it not actually written, ‘He that sprinkleth’⁵⁵ and also ‘He that toucheth’?⁵⁵ Furthermore, is not ‘He that sprinkleth’ required to wash his clothes⁵⁵ while ‘He that toucheth’ is not required to do so?⁵⁵ — Rather say: What is meant by ‘He that sprinkleth’? He that carries.⁵⁶ Then why was it not written, ‘He that carries’? — We were informed⁵⁷ that uncleanness is not contracted unless one carried the minimum quantity prescribed for sprinkling. This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who holds⁵⁸ that sprinkling must be performed with a prescribed minimum of the water⁵⁹. What, however, can be said according to him who holds that no prescribed minimum is required?⁵⁸ — Even according to him who holds that no prescribed quantity is required the ruling refers only to the quantity applied to the body of the man but as regards that which is in the vessel a prescribed quantity is required; as we have learnt: What must be the quantity of water⁵⁹ that it shall suffice for a sprinkling? As much as suffices for both the dipping therein of the tops of the stalks and for the sprinkling.⁶⁰ It is, in fact, in view of such laws⁶¹ that Solomon observed, I said: ‘I will get wisdom’; but it was far from me.⁶²

WHO IS REGARDED ‘AN OLD WOMAN’? ANY WOMAN OVER WHOM THREE ONAHS HAVE PASSED NEAR THE TIME OF HER OLD AGE. What is to be understood by NEAR THE TIME OF HER OLD AGE? — Rab Judah replied: The age when her women friends speak of her as an old woman; and R. Simeon⁶³ replied:

- (1) The woman having had no relief from her pain between the appearance of the flow and birth (cf. prev. n. but one).
 - (2) V. infra 37b. Why then should the woman here be treated as a zabah?
 - (3) With which the first of the apparently contradictory Baraithas deals.
 - (4) And could, therefore, be relaxed even in the case of a pregnancy that ended in a miscarriage. As regards the pentateuchal uncleanness of a zabah, however, a miscarriage of the nature spoken of in the last cited Baraitha cannot be regarded as a proper birth.
 - (5) Why a pregnant woman is to reckon her menstrual uncleanness from the very moment she has observed a discharge and not retrospectively.
 - (6) During her pregnancy.
 - (7) Sc. she is suffering from a malady which causes her menstrual flow to disappear.
 - (8) In the case of a pregnancy that ended in a miscarriage spoken of in the first of the Baraithas under discussion.
 - (9) It is obvious, therefore, that she also suffers from the same malady (cf. prev. n. but one) in consequence of which she is entitled to the same privileges (cf. supra n. 10).
 - (10) In respect of the twenty-four hours retrospective uncleanness.
 - (11) V. p. 55, n. 10.
 - (12) During her pregnancy.
 - (13) V. p. 55, n. 12.
 - (14) In the case about which R. Jeremiah enquired.
 - (15) She cannot, therefore, be regarded as a pregnant woman, and her uncleanness is retrospective.
 - (16) Sc. a traditional halachah handed down from the time of Moses (Rashi), so that since the flow may be expected to make its appearance on the regular day, a woman who did not examine herself at such a period, must be regarded as unclean (v. infra 16a).
 - (17) If she is to be regarded as clean.
 - (18) During pregnancy.

- (19) And the regular appearance of her menstrual blood need not be expected.
- (20) I.e., she is deemed to be clean even if she did not examine herself.
- (21) R. Johanan.
- (22) In fear of her life.
- (23) Infra 39a.
- (24) Why in this particular case the woman is regarded as clean.
- (25) Since in the absence of fear the woman is deemed to be unclean.
- (26) The case of the pregnant woman referred to in the old man's enquiry.
- (27) After birth. This is the normal period a mother is expected to suckle her child.
- (28) Who are not pregnant or nursing; because the menstrual flow is suspended only on account of its transformation into the mother's milk, but when the child dies and the milk is no longer used the blood changes into its original condition.
- (29) Since the cleanness of the woman is entirely due to her suckling (cf. prev. n.).
- (30) Irrespective of whether the child is suckled or not.
- (31) The suspension of the menstrual blood for twenty-four months being due in their opinion to the physical disturbance caused by the process of childbearing.
- (32) Since it is the process of bearing and not the suckling of the child (cf. prev. n.) that causes the suspension of the blood and since that suspension does not continue longer than twenty-four months.
- (33) Cf. Tosef. Nid. II where, however, 'R. Judah' is omitted.
- (34) Lit., 'as you will find to say'.
- (35) When she is in childbirth.
- (36) Manifested by her menstrual flow.
- (37) 'If, therefore, she continued etc.' supra.
- (38) Sc. since R. Meir ruled that the death of the child causes its mother to resume the status of an ordinary non-nursing woman it obviously follows that the main cause of her former exemption from retrospective uncleanness was her suckling of the child, what need then was there to specify an inference (cf. prev. n.) which is all too obvious?
- (39) 'Therefore, even if she suckled etc.', supra.
- (40) Cf. prev. n. but one mut. mut.
- (41) For the suspension of the menstrual flow.
- (42) (a) The blood turns into milk and (b) the woman's limbs are disjointed on account of (b) the woman is exempt from retrospective uncleanness during the twenty-four months following her childbearing, irrespective of whether the child is suckled or not, while on account of (a) she should be similarly exempt throughout the time she is suckling the child.
- (43) By the addition of 'Therefore' (cf. supra n. 14).
- (44) That 'the woman's limbs are disjointed'.
- (45) Of a nursing woman.
- (46) Those of a woman in childbirth.
- (47) Bek. 6b.
- (48) For holding that the menstrual blood turns into milk.
- (49) Milk.
- (50) Menstrual blood.
- (51) Job XIV, 4; E. V. 'not one'.
- (52) Sc. how do they, who differ from R. Meir, in maintaining that the blood does not turn into milk, explain the text cited?

- (53) In Job XIV, 4 cited.
- (54) Cf. Num. XIX, 9.
- (55) Ibid. 21.
- (56) The water of sprinkling.
- (57) By the expression, 'He that sprinkleth' instead of 'he that carries'.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 9b

when people call her mother in her presence¹ and she does not blush. R. Zera and R. Samuel b. Isaac differ:² One says, '[When she is called mother] and³ she does not mind,' and the other says, 'And³ she does not blush' — What is the practical difference between them? — The practical difference between them is the case of one who blushes but does not mind.

What is the length of an 'onah? — Resh Lakish citing R. Judah Nesi'ah⁴ replied: A normal 'onah is thirty days; but Raba, citing R. Hisda, replied: Twenty days. In fact, however, there is no difference of opinion between them. One Master⁵ reckons both the clean and the unclean days⁶ while the other Master⁷ does not reckon the unclean days.⁸

Our Rabbis taught: If over an old woman have passed three 'onahs⁹ and then she observed a flow, it suffices for her to reckon her period of uncleanness from the time she observed the flow; if another three 'onahs have passed⁹ and then she observed a flow, it again suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it. If, however, another three 'onahs have passed⁹ and then she observed a flow she is regarded¹⁰ as all other women and causes uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from the previous examination to the last examination. This¹¹ is the case not only¹² where she observed the flow at perfectly regular intervals¹³ but even where she observed it at successively decreasing intervals or¹⁴ increasing intervals.¹⁵ [You say,] 'Even¹⁶ where she observed it at successively decreasing intervals'. It thus follows¹⁷ that there is no need to mention that this law¹¹ applies where she observed the flow at perfectly regular ones. But should not the law be reversed, seeing that where she observes a flow at perfectly regular intervals she thereby establishes for herself a fixed period and it should, therefore, suffice for her to reckon her period of uncleanness from the time she observed the flow? And should you reply that this¹⁸ represents the view of the Rabbis who differ from R. Dosa in maintaining that even a woman who has a fixed period causes retrospective uncleanness for twenty-four hours,¹⁹ [it could be objected:] Should not the order²⁰ have been reversed to read as follows: Not only where she observed the flow at successively decreasing intervals or increasing intervals²¹ but even where she observed it at perfectly regular ones?²² — Read: Not only where she observed the flow at successively decreasing intervals or increasing intervals²¹ but even where she observed it at perfectly regular ones.²³ And if you prefer I might reply, It is this that was meant: This²⁴ does not apply where a woman observed the flow at perfectly regular intervals but only where she observed it at successively decreasing or increasing ones. Where, however, she observed it at perfectly regular intervals she thereby establishes for herself a fixed period and it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she has observed the flow. And whose view does this represent? That of R. Dosa.¹⁹

R. ELIEZER RULED: FOR ANY WOMAN OVER WHOM HAVE PASSED etc. It was taught: R. Eliezer said to the Sages. It once happened to a young woman at Haitalu²⁵ that her menstrual flow was interrupted for three 'onahs, and when the matter was submitted to the Sages they ruled that it sufficed for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed the flow. They replied: A time of emergency is no proof. What was the emergency? — Some say, It was a time of dearth,²⁶ while others say, The quantity of foodstuffs the woman had prepared²⁷ was rather large and the Rabbis took into consideration the desirability of avoiding the loss of the levitically clean things.

Our Rabbis taught: It once happened that Rabbi acted in agreement with the ruling of R. Eliezer, and after he reminded himself observed, 'R. Eliezer deserves to be relied upon in an emergency'. What could be the meaning of 'after he reminded himself'? If it be explained: After he reminded himself that the halachah was not in agreement with R. Eliezer but in agreement with the Rabbis [the difficulty would arise:] How could he act according to the former's ruling even in an emergency? — The fact is that it was not stated whether the law was in agreement with the one Master or with the other Master. Then what is meant by 'after he reminded himself'? — After he reminded himself that it was not an individual that differed from him but that many differed from him, he observed 'R. Eliezer deserves to be relied upon in an emergency'.

Our Rabbis taught: If a young girl who had not yet attained the age of menstruation²⁸ observed a discharge, after the first time it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it; after the second time also²⁹ it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it, but after the third time³⁰ she is in the same position as all other women³¹ and³² causes uncleanness retrospectively³³ for twenty-four hours or from her previous examination to her last examination. If subsequently three 'onahs have passed over her³⁴ and then she again observed a discharge it suffices for her³⁵ to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it.³⁶ If another three 'onahs have passed over her³⁴ and then again she observed a discharge it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it. But if another three 'onahs have passed over her³⁷ and she again observed a discharge she is in the same position as all other women³⁸ and causes uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from her previous examination to her last one.³⁹ When, however, a girl had attained the age of menstruation,⁴⁰ after the first observation it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed the discharge, while after the second time she causes uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from her previous examination to her last examination.⁴¹ If subsequently three 'onahs have passed over her⁴² and then she again observed a discharge, it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it.⁴³

The Master said,⁴⁴ 'If subsequently three 'onahs have passed over her and then she again observed a discharge, it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it'.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 10a

What is the ruling where¹ she again observes discharges at the end of subsequent single 'onahs?² — R. Giddal citing Rab replied: After the first time and after the second time it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time of her observation of the discharge, but after the third time she causes uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from her previous examination to her last examination.

'If another three 'onahs have passed over her and then again she observed a discharge it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it'. What is the ruling where she again observes discharges at the end of single 'onahs?³ — R. Kahana citing R. Giddal who had it from Rab replied: After the first time it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed the discharge but after the second time she causes uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from her previous examination to her last examination. Whose view does this⁴ represent? That of Rabbi who laid down that if a thing has occurred twice presumption is established.⁵ Read then the final clause:⁶ 'If subsequently three 'onahs have passed over her and then she again observed a discharge, it suffices for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observed it'. Does not this agree only with the view of R. Eliezer?⁷ And should you reply that it in fact represents the view of Rabbi but that in the case of [an interval of three] 'onahs he holds the same view as R. Eliezer, [it could be retorted]: Does he indeed hold the same view seeing that it was stated, 'After he reminded himself'?⁸ — The fact is that it represents the view of R. Eliezer but⁹ [in respect of presumption in the case of] menstrual periods he is of the same opinion as Rabbi.¹⁰

A stain [discovered by one who had not yet reached the age of menstruation] between her first and second [observation of a discharge] is regarded as clean,¹¹ but as regards one discovered between her second and third observation, Hezekiah ruled: It is unclean, while R. Johanan ruled: It is clean. 'Hezekiah ruled: It is unclean', since, when she observed [a discharge for the third time] she becomes unclean [retrospectively],¹² her stain also¹³ causes her to be unclean; 'while R. Johanan ruled: It is clean,' for this reason: Since¹⁴ she was not yet confirmed in the condition of presumptive menstruation¹⁵ she cannot be regarded as unclean on account of her stain.

(1) After the one discharge at the end of the three 'onahs respectively.

- (2) Sc. does it suffice for her to reckon her uncleanness from the time she observes the discharge or is her uncleanness to be retrospective? The reasons for and against are discussed in Rashi.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 10b

R. Elai demurred:¹ But what is the difference between this class of woman and a virgin [just married] whose blood is clean?² — R. Zera replied: In the case of the latter her secretion³ is frequent⁴ but in that of the former her secretion is not frequent.⁵

'Ulla stated: R. Johanan who had it from R. Simeon b. Jehozadak⁶ ruled, 'If a young girl who had not yet attained the age of menstruation observed a discharge, her spittle or her midras-uncleanness in the street⁷ after a first discharge and after a second discharge is clean,⁸ and her stain is also clean'; but I do not know [whether the last ruling]⁹ was his own or his Master's.¹⁰ In what practical issue could this matter? — In respect of establishing the ruling¹¹ to be the view of one authority¹¹ against two authorities.¹² When Rabin and all the other seafarers came¹³ they stated that the ruling was in agreement with the view of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak.

R. Hilkiyah b. Tobi ruled: In the case of a young girl who had not yet reached the age of menstruation¹⁴ a discharge of menstrual blood, even if it continued¹⁵ throughout all the seven days,¹⁶ is regarded as a single observation.¹⁷ [Since you say,] 'Even¹⁸ if it continued'¹⁵ it follows that there is no necessity to state that the law is so¹⁹ where there was a break.²⁰ But is not this contrary to reason, seeing that a break would cause the discharge to be like two separate observations? — Rather read: In the case of a young girl who had not yet reached the age of menstruation,¹⁴ a discharge of menstrual blood that²¹ continued throughout all the seven days²² is regarded as a single observation. R. Shimi b. Hiyya ruled: Dripping is not like an observation.²³ is But does not the woman in fact observe it?²⁴ — Read: It is not like a continuous discharge but like one broken up.²⁵ Does this²⁶ then imply that the continuous discharge²⁷ was one like²⁸ a river?²⁹ — Rather read: It is only like a continuous discharge.³⁰

Our Rabbis taught: It is established that the daughters of Israel before reaching the age of puberty are definitely³¹ in a condition of presumptive cleanness and the [elder] women need not examine them. When they have reached the age of puberty they are definitely³¹ in a condition of presumptive uncleanness and [elder] women must examine them. R. Judah ruled: They must not examine them with their fingers³² because they might corrupt them,³³ but they dab them with oil within and wipe it off from without and they are thus self examined.³⁴

R. JOSE RULED: FOR A WOMAN IN PREGNANCY etc. A Tanna recited in the presence of R. Eleazar, 'R. Jose ruled: As for a woman in pregnancy and a nursing woman over whom three onahs have passed it suffices for her³⁵ [to reckon her³⁵ period of uncleanness from] the time of her [observation of the flow]'. 'You', the other remarked, 'began with two³⁶ and finished with one,³⁷ do you perchance mean: A pregnant woman who was also³⁸ a nurse,³⁹ and this⁴⁰ teaches us incidentally the law that [in respect of an interval of three 'onahs]⁴¹ the days of a woman's pregnancy supplement those of her nursing and those of her nursing supplement those of her pregnancy? As it was taught: 'The days of her pregnancy supplement those of her nursing and the days of her nursing supplement those of her pregnancy. In what manner? If there was a break⁴² of two 'onahs during her pregnancy and of one during her nursing, or of two during her nursing and one during her pregnancy, or of one and a half during her pregnancy and one and a half during her nursing, they are all combined into a series of three 'onahs'.⁴³ One can well understand the ruling that 'the days of her pregnancy supplement those of her nursing' since this is possible where a woman became pregnant while she was still continuing her nursing. But how is it possible that 'the days of her nursing⁴⁴ supplement those of her pregnancy'?⁴⁵ — If you wish I might reply: This is possible in the case of a dry birth.⁴⁶ And if you prefer I might reply: Menstrual blood is one thing and birth blood is another thing.⁴⁷ And if you prefer I might reply: Read the first clause only.⁴⁸

OF WHAT DID THEY SPEAK WHEN THEY LAID DOWN THAT IT SUFFICES [FOR THEM TO RECKON] THEIR [PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM] THE TIME [OF THEIR DISCOVERY OF THE FLOW]'? etc. Rab stated: This⁴⁹ refers to all of them,⁵⁰ and Samuel stated: This⁴⁹ was learnt only in respect of a virgin⁵¹ and an old woman⁵² but for pregnant or nursing women⁵³ it suffices for them, throughout all the days of their pregnancy and throughout all the days of their nursing respectively to reckon their uncleanness from the time of their observing a flow. In the same manner R. Simeon b. Lakish stated: This⁵⁴ refers to all of them; while R. Johanan stated: This was learnt only in respect of a virgin and an old woman but for pregnant or nursing women it suffices throughout all the days of their pregnancy and throughout all the days of their nursing respectively to reckon their uncleanness from the time of their observing the flow. This dispute⁵⁵ is analogous to one between Tannas. [For it was taught]: If pregnant or nursing women were

(1) Against Hezekiah.

(2) In the case of the latter the blood is assumed to be that of the wound caused by a first intercourse which is exempt from the laws of uncleanness. If on the following day, however, the colour of the discharge changed the woman becomes unclean, but a bloodstain discovered after intercourse (cf. infra 60a) is nevertheless clean. Why then should a stain in the former case be unclean on account of the subsequent discharge? (V. Tosaf.).

(3) The discharge of the wound (cf. prev. n.).

(4) So that there is a double reason why the stain should be regarded as clean. For (a) it might be attributed to blood that issued from a foreign body and (b) even if it is to be attributed to blood of the woman's own body that blood might have been the secretion of the wound (v. Tosaf.).

(5) And if the stain is due to blood that originated from the woman's body it could not be other than menstrual which causes uncleanness.

(6) This is not the scholar of the same name mentioned in Sanh. 26a who was spoken of disparagingly in the presence of R. Johanan (R. Tam.). The one here mentioned was a teacher of R. Johanan whose honour the latter would have protected had anything derogatory been said against him in his presence.

(7) I.e., if it was discovered in a public place and it is uncertain whether the girl was a menstruant at that time.

(8) As presumptive menstruation had not yet been established uncleanness cannot be imposed in a doubtful case (cf. prev. n.).

(9) Concerning the stain.

(10) R. Simeon b. Jehozadak's.

(11) Of Hezekiah (supra 10a).

(12) R. Johanan and R. Simeon b. Jehozadak; and the law would accordingly be in agreement with the majority. If R. Johanan, however, gave the ruling in his own name alone Hezekiah is opposed by one authority only and the law need not necessarily be against him.

(19) That the discharge 'throughout all the seven days is regarded as a single observation'.

(20) Though it was followed by a renewal of the discharge.

(21) Omitting 'even' (cf. supra n. 9) used in the first version supra.

(22) The normal period of menstruation.

(23) Lit., 'one who drips is not like one who sees'. This is now assumed to mean that dripping is not regarded even as a single observation.

(24) The dripping. How then can it be maintained that it is not regarded even as one observation (cf. prev. n.)?

(25) I.e., like a number of separate observations. By the time the dripping ceases completely the woman is deemed to be in a confirmed condition of presumptive menstruation and any subsequent discharge causes her uncleanness to be retrospective.

(26) The distinction drawn between 'dripping' and a 'continual discharge'.

(27) Since it is regarded as a single observation.

(28) Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'also'.

(29) Sc. without a stop. But is this likely? No woman surely could survive a discharge of blood that was continuous for seven days.

(30) It is regarded as one observation and the girl is not subject to retrospective uncleanness before she has experienced two more menstrual discharges.

bleeding profusely it suffices for them, throughout all the days of their pregnancy and throughout all the days of their nursing respectively, to reckon their uncleanness from the time of their observing their flow; so R. Meir. R. Jose and R. Judah and R. Simeon, however, ruled: Only after a first observation did [the Sages] rule that it suffices for them¹ to reckon their uncleanness from the time of their observing the flow but after a second observation they cause uncleanness retrospectively for twenty-four hours or from their previous examination to their last examination.

IF, HOWEVER, SHE SUFFERED THE FIRST FLOW etc. R. Huna ruled: If on three occasions she jumped and suffered a flow she² has thereby established for herself a fixed period.³ In what respect?⁴ If it be suggested, In respect of certain days,⁵ could it not be objected that on any day on which she did not jump she observed no flow?⁶ — Rather, [the fixation meant is in respect] of jumps.⁷ But surely it was taught: 'Any regular discharge established as a result of an accident, even though it had been repeated many times, does not establish a fixed period'. Does not this mean that no fixed period whatsoever⁸ is established? — No, it means that no fixed period is established in respect of days alone⁹ or jumps alone,¹⁰ but as regards days and jumps jointly¹¹ a fixed period is well established.¹² But 'is it not obvious¹³ [that no fixed period can be established] in respect of days alone?¹⁴ — R. Ashi replied: [This¹⁵ was necessary in a case] for instance, where the woman jumped on two Sundays and suffered a flow while on a Sabbath¹⁶ she jumped and suffered no flow but on the Sunday following she observed one without jumping. As it might have been presumed that it had now become known retrospectively that¹⁷ it was the day¹⁸ and not the jumping¹⁹ that had caused the flow,²⁰ we were informed²¹ that it was the jump of the previous day¹⁶ ‘that was the cause²² and that the reason why the woman did not observe it was because the jump was premature.’²³

Another reading:²⁴ R. Huna’ ruled: If on three occasions she jumped and suffered a flow she has thereby established for herself a fixed period in respect of days but not in respect of jumps. In what circumstances?²⁵ — R. Ashi replied: If a woman jumped on two Sundays and on each occasion suffered a flow while²⁶ on one²⁷ Sunday she suffered one without jumping where it is obvious that it is the day²⁸ that is the cause.²⁹

MISHNAH. ALTHOUGH [THE SAGES] HAVE LAID DOWN THAT [FOR A WOMAN WHO HAS A SETTLED PERIOD] IT SUFFICES TO RECKON HER PERIOD OF UNCLEANNESS FROM THE TIME SHE OBSERVED THE FLOW, SHE MUST NEVERTHELESS EXAMINE HERSELF [REGULARLY],³⁰ EXCEPT WHERE SHE IS A MENSTRUANT³¹ OR³² IS CONTINUING IN THE BLOOD OF PURIFICATION.³³ SHE³⁴ MUST ALSO USE TESTING-RAGS WHEN³⁵ SHE HAS MARITAL INTERCOURSE EXCEPT WHEN SHE CONTINUES IN THE BLOOD OF PURIFICATION³³ OR WHEN SHE IS A VIRGIN³⁶ WHOSE BLOOD IS CLEAN.³⁷ AND TWICE [DAILY] MUST SHE³⁴ EXAMINE HERSELF: IN THE MORNING³⁸ AND AT THE [EVENING] TWILIGHT,³⁹ AND ALSO WHEN SHE IS ABOUT⁴⁰ TO PERFORM HER MARITAL DUTY.⁴¹ PRIESTLY WOMEN ARE SUBJECT TO AN ADDITIONAL RESTRICTION [IN HAVING TO MAKE EXAMINATION] WHEN THEY ARE ABOUT TO EAT TERUMAH. R. JUDAH RULED: [THESE MUST EXAMINE THEMSELVES] ALSO AFTER THEY HAVE CONCLUDED A MEAL⁴² OF TERUMAH.

GEMARA. EXCEPT WHEN SHE IS A MENSTRUANT, because during the days of her menstruation she needs no examination.⁴³ This⁴⁴ is quite satisfactory according to R. Simeon b. Lakish who ruled, ‘A woman may establish for herself a settled period during the days of her zibah⁴⁵ but not during the days of her menstruation’,⁴⁶ [since the discarding of an examination would be] well justified.⁴⁷ According to R. Johanan, however, who ruled, ‘A woman may establish for herself a settled period during the days of her menstruation’, why should she not examine herself seeing that it is possible that she had established for herself a settled period?⁴⁸ — R. Johanan can answer you: I only spoke of a case where the woman observed the flow issuing⁴⁹ from a previously closed source,⁵⁰ but I did not speak of one where she observed it issuing⁵¹ from an already open source.⁵²

OR IS CONTINUING IN THE BLOOD OF PURIFICATION. It was assumed that the reference is to one who is only desirous of continuing in the blood of purification.⁵³ Now this⁵⁴ is quite satisfactory according to Rab who holds that ‘it⁵⁵ all emanates from the same source which the Torah declared to be unclean [during a certain period]⁵⁶ and clean [during another period]’⁵⁷ [since the discarding of an examination would be] well justified,⁵⁸ but according to Levi who holds that 'it⁵⁵ emanates from two different sources'⁵⁹ why should she not examine herself, seeing that it is possible⁶⁰ that the unclean source had not yet ceased to flow?⁶¹ — Levi can answer you: This⁶² is in agreement with⁶³

- (1) Pregnant and nursing women.
 - (2) Though a flow resulting from a jump is obviously an accident.
 - (3) This is explained presently.
 - (4) Is the period fixed.
 - (5) I.e., if the jump and resulting flow took place, for instance, on three Sundays, every subsequent Sunday is regarded as the fixed day so that even in the absence of a jump, if on examination she discovered a flow, her uncleanness is not retrospective, while if she failed to examine herself she is deemed to be unclean on the presumption that the flow had appeared at the fixed time.
 - (6) Which proves that the day itself is not the fixed period. How then could a Sunday on which she does not jump (cf. prev. n.) be regarded as the fixed period?
 - (7) Sc. on any day she jumped she is presumed to be unclean unless on examination she found herself to be clean.
 - (8) Even in respect of jumps.
 - (9) The Sundays, for instance, (cf. supra, p. 69, n. 7) on which she did not jump.
 - (10) On any day other than a Sunday.
 - (11) I.e., a Sunday on which she jumped.
 - (12) If she jumped on any Sunday that day is deemed to be her fixed period.
 - (13) Since each discharge was preceded by a jump.
 - (14) The answer being in the affirmative the difficulty arises: What need was there to teach the obvious?
 - (15) The ruling that no fixed period is established in respect of days alone.
 - (16) Saturday.
 - (17) As on the Saturday on which she jumped she suffered no flow while on the Sunday following on which she did not jump she observed one.
 - (18) The Sunday, since it was the third on which she observed a flow.
 - (19) Cf. prev. n. but one.
 - (20) And Sunday might consequently be regarded as her fixed period irrespective of whether she jumped on it or not.
 - (21) By the ruling under discussion (cf. supra n. 10).
 - (22) Of the discharge on the Sunday.
 - (23) Lit., 'the time of jumping had not yet arrived'. Her fixed period, therefore, is only a Sunday (not any other day of the week) on which she jumped (and no Sunday on which she did not jump).
 - (24) Cf. nn. on first reading supra, mut. mut.
 - (25) Lit., 'how is this to be imagined?'
 - (26) Cur. edd. in parenthesis, 'and on the Sabbath (Saturday) she jumped and did not observe (a flow)'. Cf. Elijah Wilna's glosses.
 - (27) Cur. edd. insert 'another' in parenthesis.
 - (28) In this case the Sunday.
 - (29) Of the discharge. Hence the ruling that a fixed period has been established 'in respect of days'.
 - (30) Morning and evening; in order to make sure that there was no discharge whatsoever.
 - (31) Who, having suffered a flow, is unclean for seven days irrespective of whether she had a flow or not on any of the last six days.
 - (32) After a childbirth.

- (33) Cf. Lev. XII, 4. The examination would be purposeless since even the appearance of blood would not affect her cleanness.
- (34) WHO HAS A FIXED PERIOD.
- (35) Before or after.
- (36) Newly married
- (37) During the first four nights (cf. supra n. 9).
- (38) To make sure that the objects she handled during the previous night are clean.
- (39) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
- (40) Lit., 'passes'.
- (41) Lit., 'to serve her house'.
- (42) Lit., 'at the time of their passing away from eating'.
- (43) Cf. relevant n. on our Mishnah.
- (44) That no examination is necessary.
- (45) I.e., during the eleven days between the periods of menstruation. If, for instance, she suffered a menstrual flow on the first day of two consecutive months and also on the fifteenth day (which is one of the eleven days of zibah) of the same months, while on the first of the third month she had no menstrual flow and on the fifteenth of that month she again observed a flow she (on account of the three observations on the fifteenth) establishes for herself a settled period on the fifteenth of the subsequent months though the first two observations had taken place during the eleven days of zibah.
- (46) If, for instance, she suffered a flow on the first and on the fifth day of one month and again on the fifth of the two subsequent months no settled period is thereby established for the fifth of the month, because during menstruation, a woman normally bleeds and a recurrent discharge proves no settled habit.
- (47) Lit., 'beautiful', 'right'. Such an examination could serve no useful purpose whatsoever. It cannot serve the purpose of ascertaining whether she is clean (since she is in any case unclean even in the absence of a discharge) and it cannot serve the purpose of enabling her to establish a settled period (since no settled period can be established during the seven days of menstruation).
- (48) Cf. prev. n. but one mut. mut.
- (49) On each of the three occasions.
- (50) If, e.g., the flow made its first appearance (cf. infra 39b) on the first day of three consecutive months as well on the twenty-fifth of the second month. In this case the first day of each subsequent month is regarded as the settled period, because the first two of the three discharges originated from a closed source (there having been no flow before) while the last (though it appeared after the menstruation had begun on the twenty-fifth of the previous months) is also regarded as originating from a closed source since the discharge on the twenty-fifth which originated from a closed source is deemed to be the commencement of the flow on the first of the following month that followed it.
- (51) Even on one of the three occasions.
- (52) As is the case spoken of in our Mishnah where even the first observation would be made during menstruation where the source is already open.
- (53) But had not yet commenced then, i.e., a woman after childbirth who concluded the seven unclean days for a male or the fourteen unclean days for a female (cf. Lev. XII, 1-5).
- (54) The ruling that no examination is necessary on the seventh or fourteenth day (cf. prev. n.).
- (55) The blood discharged within forty or eighty days respectively after childbirth (cf. Lev. XII, 1-5).
- (56) Cf. supra, n. 3.
- (57) The thirty-three days after the seven for a male and the sixty-six days after the fourteen for a female (cf. Lev. XII, 4f).

(58) Lit., 'beautiful', 'right'. Such an examination would be purposeless since after the seventh and the fourteenth day respectively the woman would in any case be clean irrespective of whether there was any discharge or not.

(59) The unclean source being open during the first seven and fourteen days respectively and after the forty and eighty days respectively when the clean one is closed, while the latter is open during the thirty-three and sixty-six days respectively when the former is closed.

(60) Where there was a continuous issue from the unclean period into the clean one (cf. infra 35b).

(61) Unless there was an examination and it had been ascertained that there was a definite break in the flow at the end of the seven and the fourteen days respectively the woman might still be unclean even though the unclean period prescribed had passed. Why then should no examination be necessary?

(62) The ruling that the menstruant needs no examination.

(63) Lit., 'whose'.

Beth Shammai who hold that 'it¹ all emanates from the same source'.² But would the Tanna teach an anonymous Mishnah³ in agreement with the view of Beth Shammai?⁴ — This is an anonymous ruling that is followed by a divergence of opinion, and wherever an anonymous ruling is followed by a dispute the halachah does not agree with the anonymous ruling. And if you prefer I might reply: Was it stated,⁵ 'desirous of CONTINUING'?⁶ It was only stated, 'CONTINUING'.⁷ But if the woman was already 'continuing'⁷ what was the purpose of stating the ruling?⁸ — It might have been assumed that she should examine herself in case she establishes for herself⁹ a settled period, hence we were informed [that no examination is necessary] because no settled period can be established [by the regularity of a discharge from] a clean source for that of an unclean one. This is satisfactory according to Levi who stated that there are two sources,¹⁰ but according to Rab who stated that there was only one source¹⁰ why should she not examine herself seeing that she might have established for herself⁹ a settled period? — Even in that case she cannot establish a settled period in the clean days for the unclean ones.

SHE MUST ALSO USE TESTING-RAGS WHEN SHE HAS MARITAL INTERCOURSE etc. We have learnt elsewhere: If a young girl, whose age of menstruation¹¹ had not yet arrived, married, Beth Shammai ruled: She is allowed¹² four nights,¹³ and Beth Hillel ruled: Until the wound is healed.¹⁴ R. Giddal citing Samuel stated: They¹⁵ learnt this¹⁶ only in the case where bleeding through intercourse had not ceased, though she subsequently observed a discharge that may not have been due to intercourse;¹⁷ but if bleeding through intercourse had ceased¹⁸ and then she observed a discharge¹⁹ she²⁰ is unclean.²¹ If one night has passed without intercourse and then she observed a discharge she is unclean. If the colour of her blood changed²² she is unclean.

R. Jonah raised an objection:²³ OR WHEN SHE IS A VIRGIN WHOSE BLOOD IS CLEAN [she need not use testing-rags]. But why should she not rather use testing-rags²⁴ seeing that it is possible that the colour of her blood had changed? — Raba replied, Read the first clause: EXCEPT WHERE SHE IS A MENSTRUANT OR IS CONTINUING IN THE BLOOD OF PURIFICATION, from which it follows that only in those cases no examination is required but that a virgin whose blood is clean does require one.²⁵ But, then, are not the two rulings²⁶ mutually contradictory? — The former²⁷ refers to one who had marital intercourse, where it might well be assumed that the membrum was the cause of the change;²⁸ while the latter²⁹ refers to one who had no marital intercourse.³⁰ So it was also taught: This³¹ applies only in the case where 'bleeding through intercourse had not ceased, though she subsequently observed a discharge that may not have been due to intercourse, but if bleeding through intercourse had ceased and then she observed a discharge she is unclean. If one night has passed without intercourse and then she observed a discharge she is unclean. If the colour of her blood has changed she is unclean.'³²

TWICE [DAILY] MUST SHE etc. Rab Judah citing Samuel stated: They learnt this³³ only in respect of clean things, but to her husband she is permitted.³⁴ Is not this³⁵ obvious, seeing that we learnt, IN THE MORNING?³⁶ — Rather, if the statement³⁷ was at all made it was in connection with the final clause: AND³⁸ ALSO WHEN SHE IS ABOUT TO PERFORM HER MARITAL DUTY; Rab Judah citing Samuel stated, They learnt this only as regards a woman who was handling clean things, who, since it is necessary that she examine herself³⁹ for the sake of the clean things,⁴⁰ must also examine herself⁴¹ for the sake of her husband, but if a woman was not handling clean things she requires no examination. But what new point does he⁴² teach us, seeing that we have learnt: All women are in a condition of presumptive cleanness for their husbands?⁴³ — If the ruling were to be derived from the Mishnah⁴³ it might have been presumed that the ruling applied only to a woman who had a settled period but that a woman who had no settled period does require examination.⁴⁴ But does not our Mishnah⁴⁵ deal with one who has a settled period?⁴⁶ — Our Mishnah deals with both one who had a settled period, and one who had no settled period,⁴⁷ and it is this that was meant,⁴⁸ that although she had a settled period, since she must be examined for the sake of the clean things she handled she must also be examined for the sake of her husband. But did not Samuel state this⁴⁹ once, for R. Zera citing R. Abba b. Jeremiah who had it from Samuel stated, 'A woman who had no settled period may not perform marital intercourse before she has examined herself'⁵⁰ and it has been explained⁵⁰ to refer to one who was engaged in the handling of clean things?⁵¹ — The one statement⁵² was inferred from the other.⁵³ So it was also taught: This⁵⁴ applies only to clean things⁵⁵ but to her husband she is permitted.⁵⁶ This,⁵⁷ however, applies only where he left her in a state of presumptive cleanness, but if he left her in one of presumptive uncleanness she remains for ever in her uncleanness until she tells him, 'I am clean'.

wound that had been caused by the first intercourse.

(14) Keth. 6a. Cf. prev. two nn. mut. mut.

(15) Beth Hillel.

(16) 'Until the wound is healed'.

(17) As intercourse invariably caused the wound to bleed, any discharge of blood before the wound is healed is attributed to the same cause.

(18) Even if only on one occasion.

(19) Irrespective of whether it occurred during intercourse or at any other time.

(20) Since during one intercourse at least there was no bleeding and the wound may consequently be presumed to have been healed.

(21) The discharge being attributed to menstruation.

(46) How then could it have been maintained that Samuel applied the law to one who had no settled period?

(47) Since (as has explicitly been stated) the former requires examination it is self-evident that the latter also requires it.

(48) By our Mishnah.

(49) That even a woman who had no settled period need not be examined as far as her husband is concerned unless she was also in the habit of handling clean things.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 12a

R. Zera enquired of Rab Judah: Should¹ a wife examine herself² for her husband? — The other replied: She should not examine herself. But [why should she not] examine herself, seeing that none could be the worse for it?³ If [she were to do] so her husband would be uneasy in his mind⁴ and he would keep away from her.

R. Abba enquired of R. Huna: Must⁵ a woman examine herself immediately [after intercourse] in order to make her husband liable to a sin-offering?⁶ The other replied: Is it at all possible for an examination to take place immediately [after intercourse], seeing that it was taught: ‘What is meant by "immediately"?' This may be illustrated by the parable of an attendant⁷ and the witness⁸ who stand at the side of the lintel⁹ where the witness enters immediately after the attendant goes out, this being the interval which the Rabbis allowed as regards wiping off¹⁰ but not as regards examination?¹¹ — The question rather is whether she must wipe herself.¹² Some there are who say that it was this that he¹³ enquired of him:¹⁴ Must a woman examine herself [after intercourse]¹⁵ in order to make her husband liable¹⁶ to a suspended guilt-offering?¹⁷ — The other replied: She should not examine herself. But [why should she not] examine herself, seeing that none could be the worse for it?¹⁸ — If [she were to do] so¹⁹ her husband would be uncertain in his mind²⁰ and he would keep away from her.

AND ALSO WHEN SHE IS ABOUT etc. R. Ammi citing R. Jannai remarked: And this is the test²¹ of virtuous women.²² Said R. Abba b. Memel to R. Ammi: The Tanna learnt MUST,²³ [how then could] you learn ‘virtuous women’?²² — The other replied: Because I maintain that whosoever observes the enactments of the Sages may be described as²⁴ virtuous.²⁵ Said Raba: Would then²⁶ one who does not observe the enactments of the Sages merely lose the designation of²⁷ virtuous man but would not be called wicked? Rather, said Raba, as for virtuous women the testing-rag, with which they have examined themselves before one intercourse, they do not use it before any other intercourse, but those who are not virtuous use it and do not mind.

[Reverting to] the main text,²⁸ ‘R. Zera citing R. Abba b. Jeremiah who had it from Samuel stated: A woman who has no settled period may not perform marital intercourse before she has examined herself’. Said R. Zera to R. Abba b. Jeremiah: Is it²⁹ only one who has no settled period that must have an examination while a woman who has a settled period requires no examination?³⁰ — The other replied: A woman who has a settled period must have an examination³¹ only when she is awake³² but not when she is asleep;³³ while a woman who has no settled period must have an examination whether she is awake or asleep. Raba observed: Could he³⁴ not reply³⁵ that a woman who had a settled period must be examined³⁶ in respect of clean things³⁷ but not in respect of her husband [alone]³⁸ while a woman who had no settled period must have an examination even in respect of her husband [alone]?³⁹ As, however, he did not give such a reply it may be inferred that Samuel holds the view that in respect of her husband alone³⁸ a woman⁴⁰ needs no examination.⁴¹

Our Rabbis taught: The wives of ass-drivers,⁴² labourers⁴³ and people coming from a house of mourning⁴³ or a house of feasting⁴⁴ are in respect of their husbands⁴⁵ deemed to be in a state of presumptive cleanness and the latter may, therefore, come and stay with them whether they are asleep or awake. This, however, applies only where the men⁴⁶ left the woman in a state of presumptive cleanness but if they left them in a state of presumptive uncleanness each woman is forever regarded as unclean until she announces to her husband 'I am clean'. But how does Samuel⁴⁷ explain this case?⁴⁸ If it refers to a woman who has a settled period, does not a difficulty arise from the case where she is awake?⁴⁹ And if it refers to one who has no settled period, does not a difficulty arise both from the case where she is awake and from that where she is asleep?⁵⁰ — As a matter of fact it refers to one who had a settled period⁵¹ but⁵² as the husband had solicited her⁵³ there can be no more reliable⁵⁴ examination than this.⁵⁵

R. Papa asked Raba: May one⁵⁶ act in accordance with that Baraita?⁵⁷

 - (12) Immediately after intercourse, so as to ascertain (cf. supra p. 77, n. 17) whether her husband is liable to a sin-offering.
 - (13) R. Abba.
 - (14) R. Huna.
 - (15) After the lapse of the interval defined supra as 'immediately'.
 - (16) Should any blood be discovered.
 - (17) Which is incurred in the case of a doubtful transgression. The discovery of blood (cf. prev. n.) is no proof that the discharge began before or during the intercourse as it may have begun after.

- (27) Lit., 'would not be called'.
- (28) Quoted supra 11b ad fin.
- (29) Since Samuel spoke only of a woman 'who has no settled period'.
- (30) But how could this assumption be upheld in view of our Mishnah which prescribes an examination though it speaks of a woman who had a settled period?
- (31) Before intercourse is permitted.
- (32) Because (a) as she is then able to handle clean things and would have to be examined for the purpose she must also be examined for the sake of her husband: and (b) an examination when one is awake does not involve undue inconvenience.
- (33) When (a) she is unable to handle clean things and (b) an examination would mean much inconvenience (cf. prev. n. mut. mut.).
- (34) R. Abba b. Jeremiah.
- (35) To R. Zera.

- (38) If she handled no clean things.
- (39) Sc. even if no clean things had been handled by her.
- (40) Even if she has no settled period.
- (41) Samuel's statement supra that 'a woman . . . may not . . . before she examined herself' refers, therefore, to one who was engaged in the handling of clean things.
- (42) Sc. people whose occupations take them away from their homes for considerable periods.

- (48) In the Baraitha just cited.
- (49) Of course it does. According to this Baraitha no examination is required while according to Samuel (cf. (a) note 6) an examination is required.
- (50) In both cases (even when the woman is awake), no examination is expected, while according to Samuel (cf. (b) note 6) an examination must be held even when she is asleep.
- (51) Hence the ruling that no examination is necessary when she is asleep (cf. note 6).
- (52) In reply to the objection why no examination is required when she is awake.
- (53) And she consented.
- (54) Lit., 'great'.
- (55) Had she not ascertained beforehand that she was clean she would not have consented. Samuel's ruling, however, which ordains an examination applies only to husbands whose occupations do not take them away from their homes, and not to such (of whom the Baraita speaks) as returned home after a considerable absence (cf. Tosaf. and Tosaf. Asheri).

(56) Lit., 'what is it'.

(57) Of the ass- drivers etc., i.e., (cf. Tosaf. contra Rashi) that no examination is necessary, as far as the husband is concerned, where the woman is half asleep (v. Tosaf, s.v. ihc).

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 12b

— The other replied: Brewer,¹ no; because [otherwise]² she would become repulsive to him.

R. Kahana stated, 'I asked the women folk of the house of R. Papa and of R. Huna son of R. Joshua, "Do the Rabbis on coming home from the schoolhouse require you to undergo an examination"? And they answered me in the negative'. But why did he³ not ask⁴ the Rabbis themselves? — Because it is possible that they imposed additional restrictions upon themselves.⁵

Our Rabbis taught: A woman who has no settled period is forbidden marital intercourse and is entitled neither to a kethubah⁶ nor to a usufruct⁷ nor to maintenance,⁸ nor to her worn-out clothes.⁹ Her husband, furthermore, must divorce her and may never marry her again; so R. Meir. R. Hanina b. Antigonus ruled: She must use two testing-rags when she has marital intercourse; they render her unfit¹⁰ and they also render her fit.¹¹ In the name of Abba Hanan it was stated: Woe to her husband.¹² 'She is forbidden marital intercourse', because she might¹³ cause him moral injury. 'And is entitled neither to a kethubah', since she is unfit for cohabitation she is not entitled to a kethubah. 'Nor to usufruct nor to maintenance nor to her worn-out clothes' because the provisions¹⁴ embodied in the agreed terms of a kethubah are subject to the same laws as the kethubah itself.¹⁵ 'Her husband, furthermore, must divorce her and may never marry her again'. Is not this obvious?¹⁶ — It was necessary in the case where she was subsequently cured.¹⁷ As it might have been presumed that [in such a case] he may remarry her we were informed [that this is forbidden], because it may sometimes happen that having proceeded to marry another man she would be cured and [her first husband] would then say, 'Had I known that to be the case I would not have divorced her even if you had given me a hundred maneh', and the get would thus be annulled and her children would be bastards.¹⁸

'In the name of Abba Hanan it was stated: Woe to her husband'. Some explain: He said this in opposition to R. Meir,¹⁹ because [Abba Hanan maintains that] she must be allowed to collect her kethubah. Others there are who explain: He said it in opposition to R. Hanina b. Antigonus,²⁰ because [Abba Hanan maintains that intercourse is always forbidden] since thereby she might²¹ cause her husband to sin.

Rab Judah citing Samuel stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Hanina b. Antigonus. But in what case? If it is one where the woman is engaged in the handling of clean things, has not Samuel [it may be objected] said it once?²² And if it is one where she was not engaged in the handling of clean things, did he not say [it may again be objected] that as far as her husband is concerned she requires no examination, for did not R. Zera in fact state in the name of R. Abba b. Jeremiah who had it from Samuel, 'A woman who had no settled period may not perform marital intercourse before she examines herself', and it has been explained to refer to one who was engaged in the handling of clean things?²³ — He who taught the one did not teach the other.²⁴ [

 - (16) Why then should an obvious ruling have to be enunciated?
 - (17) I.e., acquired a settled period.
 - (18) Hence the ruling that he may never again marry her, even if she subsequently acquired a settled period. On the basis of this ruling the husband is duly cautioned when divorce is arranged that his act is definite and final and, consequently, any subsequent plea of his 'Had I known etc.' has no validity whatsoever (cf.  - (24) It refers indeed to the case where the woman was engaged in handling clean things: but Samuel having given his ruling only once, Rab Judah applied it to the ruling of R. Hanina b. Antigonus, while R. Abba quoted it as an independent ruling.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 13a

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. EVERY HAND THAT MAKES FREQUENT EXAMINATION IS IN THE CASE OF WOMEN PRAISEWORTHY,¹ BUT IN THE CASE OF MEN IT OUGHT TO BE CUT OFF.²

GEMARA. Wherein [in this respect]³ do women differ from men?⁴ — Women [in this matter] are not sensitive,⁵ hence they are praiseworthy,¹ but in the case of men who are highly sensitive [their hands] ought to be cut off.² But, if so,² what was the point in saying ‘MAKES FREQUENT’ [seeing that the same reason² applies] also where [the examinations are] infrequent? — When ‘MAKES FREQUENT’ was mentioned it was intended to refer to women only.⁶

One taught: This⁷ applies only to the emission of semen but as regards flux⁸ a man also is as praiseworthy as the women;⁹ and even in regard to the emission of semen, if he desires to make the examination with a splinter or with a potsherd¹⁰ he may do so. May he not, however, do it with a rag, seeing that it was taught: A man may examine himself with a rag or with any other thing he wishes? — As Abaye stated elsewhere: ‘With a thick rag’.¹⁰ so also here¹¹ it may be explained: With a thick rag.¹⁰ And in what connection was Abaye’s statement made? In connection with the following: If a priest, while eating terumah, felt a shiver run through his body¹² he takes hold of his membrum¹³ and swallows the terumah.¹⁴ ‘Takes hold’! But has it not been taught: R. Eliezer said, ‘Whoever holds his membrum when he makes water is as though he had brought a flood on the world’?¹⁵ To this Abaye replied. ‘With a thick rag’.¹⁶ Raba replied: It¹⁷ may even be said to apply to a soft rag for once the semen has been detached the subsequent touch does no longer matter.¹⁸ And Abaye?¹⁹ — He made provision against the possibility of an additional discharge.²⁰ And Raba? — He does not consider the possibility of any additional discharges. But does he not, seeing that it was taught, ‘To what may this²¹ be compared? To the putting of a finger upon the eye where, as long as the finger remains on it, the eye continues to tear’?²² Now Raba?²³ — It is quite uncommon for one to get heated twice in immediate succession.²⁴

[Reverting to] the main text: ‘R. Eliezer said, Whoever holds his membrum when he makes water is as though he had brought a flood on the world’. But, they said to R. Eliezer, would not the spray bespatter his feet and he would appear to be maimed in his privy parts so that he²⁵ would be the cause of casting upon his children the reflection of being illegitimate? — It is preferable, he answered them, that a man should be the cause of casting upon his children the reflection of being illegitimate than that he should make himself a wicked man, even for a while, before the Omnipresent. Another [Baraita] taught: R. Eliezer replied to the Sages. It is possible for a man to stand on a raised spot and to make water or to make water in loose earth and thus to avoid making himself wicked, even for a while, before the Omnipresent. Which²⁶ did he²⁷ tell them²⁸ first? If it be suggested that it was the first mentioned statement that he gave them first [is it likely, it may be objected], that after he spoke to them of a prohibition²⁹ he would merely offer a remedy?³⁰ — The fact is that it was the last mentioned statement³¹ that he gave them first, and when they asked him, ‘What is he to do when he can find no raised spot or loose earth’, he answered them, ‘It is preferable that a man should be the cause of casting upon his children the reflection of being illegitimate than that he should make himself a wicked man, even for a while, before the Omnipresent’.

But why all these precautions?³² — Because otherwise one might emit semen in vain, and R. Johanan stated: Whosoever emits semen in vain deserves death, for it is said in Scripture. And the thing³³ which he did³³ was evil in the sight of the Lord, and He slew him also.³⁴ R. Isaac and R. Ammi said. He³⁵ is as though he shed blood, for it is said in Scripture. Ye that inflame yourselves among the terebinths, under every leafy tree, that slay the children in the valleys under the clefts of the rocks;³⁶ read not 'that slay'³⁷ but 'that press out'.³⁸ R. Assi said: He³⁹ is like one who worships idols; for here³⁶ it is written, 'Under every leafy tree' and elsewhere⁴⁰ it is written, upon the high mountains . . . and under every leafy tree.⁴¹

Rab Judah and Samuel once stood upon the roof of the Synagogue of Shaf-veyathil⁴² in Nehardea. Said Rab Judah to Samuel 'I must make water'. 'Shinena',⁴³ the other replied, 'take hold of your membrum⁴⁴ and make the water outside [the roof]'. But how could he⁴⁵ do so, seeing that it was taught: R. Eliezer said, Whoever holds his membrum when he makes water is as though he brought a flood on the world? — Abaye replied: He treated this case as that of a reconnoitering troop, concerning which we learnt, 'If a reconnoitering troop has entered a town in time of peace the open wine jars are forbidden⁴⁶ and the closed ones are permitted,⁴⁷ but in times of war the former as well as the latter are permitted because the troops have no time to offer libations'.⁴⁸ Thus it clearly follows that owing to their being in a state of fear they do not think⁴⁹ of offering libations, and so also in this case, since he⁴⁵ was in a state of fear he would not think of lustful matters. But what fear could there be here? — If you wish I might reply: The fear of the night and of the roof.⁵⁰ If you prefer I might reply: The fear of his Master.⁵¹ If you prefer I might say: The fear of the Shechinah.⁵² If you prefer I might say: The fear of the Lord that was⁵³ upon him,⁵⁴ for Samuel once remarked of him⁵⁵ 'This man is no mortal being'.⁵⁵ If you prefer I might say: He was a married man, and concerning such R. Nahman ruled, 'If a man was married, this is permitted'. If you prefer I might say: It was this that he taught him, viz., that which R. Abba the son of R. Benjamin b. Hiyya learnt: But he may support the testicles from below. And if you prefer I might say: It was this that he taught them, viz., that which R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Johanan: It has a limit; from the corona downward [touch] is permitted but from the corona upwards¹ it is forbidden.

Rab stated: 'A man who wilfully causes erection should be placed² under the ban'. But why did he³ not say, 'This is forbidden'? Because the man⁴ merely incites his evil inclination against himself.⁵ R. Ammi, however, stated: He⁴ is called a renegade, because such is the art of the evil inclination: To-day it incites man to do one wrong thing,⁶ and to-morrow⁷ it incites him to worship idols and he proceeds to worship them.

There are others who read: R. Ammi⁸ stated, He who excites himself by lustful thoughts will not be allowed to enter the division of the Holy One, blessed be He. For here it is written, Was evil in the sight of the Lord,⁹ and elsewhere it is written, For Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness; evil shall not sojourn with Thee.¹⁰

R.¹¹ Eleazar stated: Who are referred to¹² in the Scriptural text, Your hands are full of blood?¹³ Those that commit masturbation with their hands.

It was taught at the school of R. Ishmael, Thou shalt not commit adultery¹⁴ implies, Thou shalt not practise masturbation either with hand or with foot.

Our Rabbis taught: 'proselytes and those that play with children delay the advent of the Messiah'. The statement about proselytes may be understood on the lines of the view of R. Helbo, for R. Helbo said, 'proselytes are as hard for Israel to endure as a sore',¹⁵ what, however, could be meant by 'those that play with children'?¹⁶ If it be suggested: Those that practise pederasty [it could well be objected]: Are not such people subject to stoning?¹⁷ If, however, it be suggested: Those that practise onanism through external contact¹⁸ [it could be objected]: Are not such deserving destruction by flood?¹⁷ — The meaning rather is: Those that marry minors who are not capable of bearing children, for R. Jose¹⁹ stated: The Son of David²⁰ will not come before all the souls in Guf²¹ will have been disposed of, since it is said, For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made.²² BUT IN THE CASE OF MEN IT OUGHT TO BE CUT OFF. The question was raised: Have we here²³ learnt a law or merely an execration? 'Have we here learnt a law' as in the case where R. Huna cut off one's hand;²⁴ 'or merely an execration'? — Come and hear what was taught: R. Tarfon said, 'If his hand touched the membrum let his hand be cut off upon his belly'. 'But', they said to him,²⁵ 'would not his belly be split'? 'It is preferable', he replied, 'that his belly shall be split rather than that he should go down into the pit of destruction'.²⁶ Now if you concede that we have here²⁷ learnt a law²⁸ one can well understand why they said, 'Would not his belly be split'; but if you maintain that we have only learnt of an execration,²⁹ what could be meant by [the question] 'His belly be split'? — What then would you suggest, that we have learnt here a law, would it not suffice, [it may be objected, that the cutting off shall] not be done on his belly? — The fact, however, is that it was this that R. Tarfon meant: Whosoever puts his hand below his belly that hand shall be cut off. They said to R. Tarfon, 'If a thorn stuck in his belly, should he not remove it'? 'No', he replied. 'But [they said] would not his belly be split'?³⁰ 'It is preferable', he replied, 'that his belly shall be split rather than that he should go down to the pit of destruction'.²⁶ MISHNAH. IN THE CASE OF A DEAF,³¹ AN IMBECILE, A BLIND OR AN INSANE³² WOMAN, IF OTHER WOMEN OF SOUND SENSES ARE AVAILABLE³³ THEY ATTEND TO HER,³⁴ AND SHE MAY THEN EAT TERUMAH.

GEMARA. Why should not a DEAF woman make her own examination, seeing that it was taught: Rabbi stated, A deaf woman was living in our neighbourhood and not only³⁵ did she examine herself but her friends also on observing a discharge would show it to her?³⁶ — There it was a woman who could speak but not hear while here the reference is to one who can neither speak nor hear; as we have learnt: The deaf person of whom the Sages spoke is always³⁷ one who can neither hear nor speak.³⁸

A BLIND. Why should she not make her own examination and show the testing-rag to her friend? — R. Jose son of R. Hanina replied: The 'blind' is no part of the Mishnah.³⁹

OR AN INSANE WOMAN. Is not this exactly the same as IMBECILE?⁴⁰ This refers to one whose mind was deranged owing to a disease.

Our Rabbis taught: A priest who is an imbecile may be ritually immersed and then fed with terumah⁴¹ in the evening.⁴² He must also be watched that he does not fall asleep.⁴³ If he falls asleep he is deemed unclean⁴⁴ and if he does not fall asleep he remains clean. R. Eliezer son of R. Zadok ruled: He should be provided with a leather bag.⁴⁵ The Rabbis said to him: 'Would not this cause heat all the more?' 'According to your view', he replied, 'should an imbecile have no remedy?' 'According to our view', they retorted, 'only if he falls asleep⁴⁶ is he deemed unclean but if he does not fall asleep he remains clean, while according to your view there is the possibility that he might discharge a drop of blood of the size of a mustard seed and this would be absorbed in the bag'.⁴⁷

A Tanna taught: It was stated in the name of R. Eleazar, The imbecile is to be provided with a metal bag. Abaye explained: It must be one of copper, as we have learnt.⁴⁸ R. Judah ruled, Those buds of hyssop⁴⁹ are regarded⁵⁰ as if they had been made of copper.⁵¹

R. Papa remarked: From this⁵² it may be inferred that breeches⁵³ are forbidden. But is it not written in Scripture, And thou shalt make them linen breeches to cover the flesh of their nakedness?⁵⁴ — That may be explained as it was taught: To what were the breeches of the priests like? They were like the knee breeches of horsemen, reaching upwards to the loins and downwards to the thighs. They also had laces but had no padding either back or front.⁵⁵

Abaye stated:

Camel riders¹ are forbidden to eat terumah.² So it was also taught: All camel-drivers are wicked,³ all sailors are righteous,⁴ but among the ass-drivers some are wicked and others righteous. Some say: The latter are those who use a saddle⁵ and the former are those who use no saddle,⁶ while others say: The former are those who ride astraddle⁷ and the latter are those who do not ride astraddle.⁸

R. Joshua b. Levi cursed the man who sleeps on his back.⁹ But this, surely, is not correct,¹⁰ for did not R. Joseph rule that one lying on his back should not read the shema',¹¹ from which it follows, does it not, that it is only the shema' that he must' not read but that he may well sleep in this manner? — As regards sleeping on one's back this is quite proper if one slightly inclines sideways, but as regards the reading of the shema' even if one inclines sideways this is forbidden.¹² But did not R. Johanan turn slightly on his side and read the shema'? — R. Johanan was different [from other people] because he was corpulent.¹³

MISHNAH. IT IS THE CUSTOM OF THE DAUGHTERS OF ISRAEL WHEN HAVING MARITAL INTERCOURSE TO USE TWO TESTING-RAGS, ONE FOR THE MAN AND THE OTHER FOR HERSELF,¹⁴ AND VIRTUOUS WOMEN PREPARE ALSO A THIRD RAG WHEREBY TO MAKE THEMSELVES FIT FOR MARITAL DUTY.¹⁵ IF A VESTIGE OF BLOOD IS FOUND ON HIS RAG¹⁶ THEY ARE BOTH UNCLEAR¹⁷ AND ARE ALSO UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF BRINGING A SACRIFICE.¹⁸ IF ANY BLOOD IS FOUND ON HER RAG IMMEDIATELY AFTER THEIR INTERCOURSE THEY ARE BOTH UNCLEAR AND ARE ALSO UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF BRINGING A SACRIFICE. IF, HOWEVER, ANY BLOOD IS FOUND ON HER RAG AFTER A TIME THEY ARE UNCLEAR¹⁹ BY REASON OF DOUBT²⁰ BUT EXEMPT FROM THE SACRIFICE. WHAT IS MEANT BY 'AFTER A TIME'? WITHIN AN INTERVAL IN WHICH SHE CAN DESCEND FROM THE BED AND WASH HER FACE.²¹ BUT [IF BLOOD WAS FOUND SOME TIME] AFTER SUCH AN INTERVAL SHE CAUSES UNCLEANNESS RETROSPECTIVELY²² FOR A PERIOD OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS²³ BUT SHE DOES NOT CAUSE THE MAN WHO HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HER TO BE UNCLEAR.²⁴ R. AKIBA RULED: SHE²⁵ ALSO CAUSES THE MAN WHO HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HER TO BE UNCLEAR.²⁶ THE SAGES, HOWEVER, AGREE WITH R. AKIBA THAT ONE WHO OBSERVED A BLOODSTAIN CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS TO THE MAN WHO HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HER.

GEMARA. But²⁷ why should not the possibility be considered that the blood might be that of a louse?²⁸ — R. Zera replied that place is presumed to be tested as far as a louse is concerned. There are others, however, who reply: It is too narrow for a louse. What is the practical difference between them?²⁹ — The practical difference between them is the case where a crushed louse was found.³⁰ According to the reply³¹ that the place is presumed to be tested, this must have come from somewhere else,³² but according to the reply³¹ that the place is too narrow it might be presumed that the attendant³³ has crushed it.³⁴

It was stated: If a woman examined herself with a rag that she had previously examined,³⁵ and then she pressed it against her thigh on which she found blood on the following day, Rab ruled: She³⁶ is subject to the uncleanness of a menstruant.³⁷ Said R. Shimi b. Hiyya to him: But, surely, you told us, ‘She has only to take the possibility³⁸ into consideration’. It was also stated: Samuel ruled: She is subject to the uncleanness of a menstruant.³⁷ And so they also ruled at the schoolhouse: She is subject to the uncleanness of a menstruant.

It was stated: If a woman examined herself with a rag which she had not previously examined and having put it into a box she found upon it, on the following day, some blood,³⁹ R. Joseph stated: Throughout all his lifetime R. Hiyya regarded [her] as unclean but in his old age he ruled that [she] was clean. The question was raised: What⁴⁰ does he⁴¹ mean: That throughout all his⁴² lifetime he regarded [her] as menstrually unclean⁴³ and in his old age he ruled that [she] was clean as far as menstruation is concerned but unclean on account of the bloodstain,⁴⁴ or it is possible that throughout his lifetime he regarded [her] as unclean on account of the stain⁴⁴ and in his old age he ruled that [she] was absolutely⁴⁵ clean? — Come and hear what was taught: If a woman examined herself with a rag which she had not previously examined and having put it into a box she found upon it, on the following day, some blood, Rabbi ruled: She is regarded as menstrually unclean,⁴⁶ and R. Hiyya ruled: She is regarded as unclean on account of the bloodstain.⁴⁷

Said R. Hiyya to him: 'Do you not agree that it¹ must be slightly bigger than the size of a bean?'² 'Indeed', the other replied. 'If so',³ the first retorted, 'you also regard it as a stain'.⁴ Rabbi, however, holds the opinion that it is necessary for the stain to be slightly bigger than the size of a bean in order to exclude the possibility of its being the blood of a louse, but as soon as this possibility is ruled out the blood must undoubtedly have come from her body. Now did not this occur⁵ when he was in his old age but when he was young he regarded it⁶ as menstrually unclean?⁷ This is conclusive.

Rabbi was commending R. Hama b. Bisa to R. Ishmael son of R. Jose as a great man, when the latter said to him, 'If you come across him⁸ bring him to me'. When he⁹ came he¹⁰ said to him, 'Ask me something'. 'What is the ruling', the other asked, 'if a woman examined herself with a rag which she had not previously examined and having put it into a box she found some blood upon it on the following day?' 'Shall I give you,' the first answered, 'the ruling according to the views of my father¹¹ or shall I rather give it to you according to the views of Rabbi?'¹² 'Tell me,' the other said, 'the ruling according to Rabbi'. 'Is this the person', R. Ishmael exclaimed, 'of whom it is said that he is a great man! How could one ignore¹³ the views of the Master¹⁴ and listen to those of the disciple?'¹⁵ R. Hama b. Bisa, however, was of the opinion that since Rabbi was the head of the college and the Rabbis were frequently in his company his traditions were more reliable.¹⁶ What is the view of Rabbi [that has just been referred to] and what is that of R. Jose? — R. Adda b. Mattena replied: — A Tanna taught, Rabbi declares her¹⁷ unclean and R. Jose declares her clean. In connection with this R. Zera stated: When Rabbi declared her unclean he did so in agreement with the ruling of R. Meir, but when R. Jose declared her clean he did so in accordance with his own view. For we learnt:¹⁸ If a woman when attending to her needs¹⁹ observed a discharge of blood, R. Meir ruled: If she was standing at the time she is unclean but if she was sitting she is clean. R. Jose ruled: In either case she is regarded as clean.²⁰ Said R. Aha son of Raba to R. Ashi: But did not R. Jose the son of R. Hanina state that when R. Meir ruled that the woman was unclean he did so only on account of the bloodstain,²¹ whereas Rabbi regarded her as unclean by reason of menstruation?²² — The other replied, What we maintain is this: When that ruling²³ was stated it was that the uncleanness was due to menstruation.²⁴

IF ANY BLOOD IS FOUND ON HER RAG IMMEDIATELY AFTER HER INTERCOURSE THEY ARE BOTH UNCLEAN etc. Our Rabbis taught:²⁵ What is meant by 'immediately'? This may be illustrated by the parable of the attendant and the witness who stood at the side of the lintel where the witness enters immediately after the attendant goes out, this being the interval which the Rabbis allowed as regards wiping off,²⁶ but not as regards an examination.²⁷

IF, HOWEVER, ANY BLOOD IS FOUND ON HER RAG AFTER A TIME etc. A Tanna taught: They²⁸ do incur the obligation of bringing a suspensive guilt-offering. But what is the reason of our Tanna?²⁹ — It is essential³⁰ [that the doubt shall be of the same nature as in the case of the consumption of] one piece of two pieces.³¹

WHAT IS MEANT BY 'AFTER A TIME'? etc. Is not, however, this³² incongruous with the following: What is meant by 'after a time'? R. Eleazar³³ son of R. Zadok explained: Within an interval in which³⁴ she can stretch out her hand, put it under the cushion or bolster, take out a testing-rag and make examination with it?³⁵ — R. Hisda replied: By AFTER is meant the interval following this interval.³⁶ But was it not stated in connection with this,³⁷ IF, HOWEVER, ANY BLOOD IS FOUND ON HER RAG AFTER A TIME THEY ARE UNCLEAR, BY REASON OF THE DOUBT BUT EXEMPT FROM THE SACRIFICE. WHAT IS MEANT BY 'AFTER A TIME'? WITHIN AN INTERVAL IN WHICH SHE CAN DESCEND FROM THE BED AND WASH HER FACE?³⁸ — It is this that was implied:³⁹ WHAT IS MEANT BY 'AFTER A TIME'? Within an interval in which she can stretch out her hand, put it under the cushion or bolster, take out a testing-rag and make examination with it; and WITHIN AN INTERVAL IN WHICH SHE CAN DESCEND FROM THE BED AND WASH HER FACE [the question of uncleanness is subject to] a divergence of view between R. Akiba and the Sages. But was it not stated,⁴⁰ AFTER SUCH AN INTERVAL?⁴¹ — It is this that was meant: And this is the interval concerning which R. Akiba and the Sages are at variance.

R. Ashi replied: The former and the latter⁴² represent the same length of time; when she has the testing-rag in her hand the time IS WITHIN AN INTERVAL IN WHICH SHE CAN DESCEND FROM THE BED AND WASH HER FACE, but if she has not the rag in her hand the time is limited to 'within an interval in which she can stretch out her hand, put it under the cushion or bolster, take out a testing-rag and make examination with it'.

An objection was raised: What is meant by 'after a time'? This question was submitted by R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok to the Sages at Usha when he asked them,

- (1) The bloodmark on the rag.
 - (2) Lit., 'like a bean and more'. If it is smaller it may be presumed to be that of a louse (cf. infra 58b).
 - (3) That the stain must be no less than a certain minimum.
 - (4) Cf. supra n. 2. Had it been regarded as menstrual blood the smallest speck of it would have sufficed to cause certain uncleanness (cf. infra 40a)
 - (5) Lit., 'he stood'.
 - (6) In agreement with Rabbi.
 - (7) Obviously he did, since in his youth he would not have ventured to differ from Rabbi who was his master (Rashi). Aliter: In his youth he would not have addressed Rabbi in the second person (cf. B.B. 158b) but as 'the Master' (Tosaf.).
 - (8) Lit., 'when he comes to your hand'.
 - (9) R. Hama.
 - (10) R. Ishmael.
 - (11) R. Jose.
 - (12) These views are stated infra.
 - (13) Lit., 'put down'.
 - (14) R. Jose.
 - (15) Rabbi.
 - (16) Lit., 'sharpened'.
 - (17) The woman referred to in R. Bisa's question.
 - (18) So MS.M. and marg. gl. Cur. edd., 'it was taught'.
 - (19) Making water.
 - (20) Mishnah infra 59b q.v. notes.
 - (21) I.e., doubtful uncleanness.
 - (22) Certain uncleanness. How then could R. Zera maintain that Rabbi followed the view of R. Meir?

- (23) Of R. Jose b. Hanina.
- (24) Cf. prev. n. but one mut. mut.
- (25) Supra 12a, q.v. notes.
- (26) Externally, which takes place instantly after intercourse.
- (27) Internally, which must inevitably take place after a longer interval than the one allowed had elapsed. In the former case the uncleanness is certain and the sacrifice incurred is a sin-offering, while in the latter case the uncleanness is of a doubtful nature and the sacrifice incurred is a suspensive guilt-offering.
- (28) Husband and wife, contrary to the ruling of the Tanna of our Mishnah that they are EXEMPT FROM THE SACRIFICE.
- (29) Cf. prev. n.
- (30) If a suspensive guilt-offering is to be incurred.
- (31) One of which was e.g., permitted fat and the other was forbidden fat, and it is not known which of the two pieces the person in question had consumed. Only in such a case of doubt is a suspensive guilt-offering incurred (cf. Ker. 17b). Where, however, the doubt involves only one object or person (as is the case under discussion where only one woman is concerned) no suspensive guilt-offering can be incurred.
- (32) The definition of 'AFTER A TIME'
- (33) So Bah. Cur. edd. 'Eliezer'.
- (34) While still in bed.
- (35) This interval (cf. prev. n.) being shorter than the one IN WHICH SHE CAN DESCEND FROM THE BED etc., it follows that, according to this Baraitha, during the longer interval the woman does not convey uncleanness to her husband and is only subject to the lesser restrictions of the twenty-four hours' period of retrospective uncleanness. How then are the two rulings to be reconciled?
- (36) Defined in our Baraitha. Lit., 'after the after'. During the interval as defined in the Baraitha both husband and wife are subject to doubtful uncleanness but after that interval, and during the one defined in our Mishnah, the woman, according to the Rabbis, as stated in the next clause of the Mishnah, does not convey any uncleanness to her husband.
- (37) The interval defined in our Mishnah.
- (38) Which clearly shows, does it not, that during the interval spoken of in our Mishnah the woman does carry uncleanness to her husband?
- (39) Sc. some words are missing from our Mishnah and are to be regarded as inserted.
- (40) In connection with the dispute between R. Akiba and the Sages.
- (41) Sc. after the one defined in our Mishnah; from which it follows that during this interval both agree that the woman does carry uncleanness to her husband.
- (42) The interval defined in our Mishnah and the one defined in the Baraitha.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 15a

'Are you perchance of the same opinion as R. Akiba that the woman¹ carries uncleanness to the man who had intercourse with her?'² 'We', they answered him, 'have not heard his ruling'.³ 'Thus', he said to them, 'did the Sages at Jamnia enunciate the ruling: If the woman did not delay more than the time in which she can descend from the bed and wash her face,⁴ this⁵ is regarded as 'within the time limit' and both are unclean on account of the doubt,⁶ and exempt from bringing a sacrifice but they are subject to the obligation of a suspensive guilt-offering. If she delayed for such a time during which she could descend from the bed and wash her face,⁷ this⁸ is regarded as being 'after the time',⁹ Similarly if she delayed¹⁰ for twenty-four hours¹¹ or for a period between her previous and her present examination,¹² the man who had intercourse with her is unclean on account of his contact,¹³ but not on account of his intercourse.¹⁴ R. Akiba ruled: He also contracts uncleanness on the ground of his intercourse.¹⁵ R. Judah son of R. Johanan b. Zakkai ruled: Her husband may enter the Temple and burn incense.¹⁶ Now according to R. Hisda¹⁷ one can well see why the Rabbis declare the man clean, but according to R. Ashi¹⁸ why do the Rabbis declare him clean? And should you reply that this is a case where she did not have the rag in her hand¹⁹ [it could be retorted:] Should not then²⁰ a distinction have been made explicitly between the case where the woman had a rag in her hand and where she had no rag in her hand?²¹ — This is a difficulty.

‘R. Judah son of R. Johanan b. Zakkai ruled: Her husband may enter the Temple and burn incense’. But why should not a prohibition be imposed²² on the ground that the man came in contact with a menstruant during the twenty-four hours of her retrospective uncleanness? — He²³ holds the same view as Shammai who ruled: For all women it suffices to reckon their period of uncleanness from the time of their discovering the flow.²⁴ But should not a prohibition be imposed²¹ on the ground that the man has experienced an emission of semen? — This is a case where his intercourse was not consummated.²⁵

THE SAGES, HOWEVER, AGREE WITH R. AKIBA THAT ONE WHO OBSERVED A BLOODSTAIN. Rab explained: [She conveys UNCLEANNESS] retrospectively and the ruling is that of R. Meir.²⁶ Samuel, however, explained: [She conveys UNCLEANNESS] from now²⁷ onwards and the ruling is that of the Rabbis. ‘From now onwards’! Would not this²⁸ be obvious? — It might have been presumed that, since retrospective uncleanness for a period of twenty-four hours is only a Rabbinical measure and the uncleanness of bloodstains at all times²⁹ is also only a Rabbinical measure, as during the twenty-four hours’ period a woman does not convey uncleanness to the man who had intercourse with her so also in the case of a stain²⁹ does she not convey uncleanness to the man who had intercourse with her, hence we were informed [that she does convey uncleanness to the man]. Might it not, however, be suggested that the law is so indeed?³⁰ — [No, since] in the former case there is no slaughtered ox in your presence³¹ but here there is a slaughtered ox in your presence.³² Resh Lakish also explained in the same way³³ [that uncleanness is conveyed] retrospectively and that the ruling is that of R. Meir. R. Johanan explained: [The uncleanness is conveyed] from now onwards and the ruling is that of the Rabbis.

MISHNAH. ALL WOMEN ARE IN THE CONDITION OF PRESUMPTIVE CLEANNESS FOR THEIR HUSBANDS.³⁴ FOR THOSE WHO RETURN FROM A JOURNEY THEIR WIVES ARE IN THE CONDITION OF PRESUMPTIVE CLEANNESS.

GEMARA. What need was there³⁵ to state,³⁶ THOSE THAT RETURN FROM A JOURNEY? — It might have been presumed that this³⁷ applies only to a husband who was in the town, since in such a case the woman thinks of her duties³⁸ and duly examines herself, but not to a husband who was not in town since the question of [marital] duty does not occur to her, hence we were informed [that the law applies to the latter case also]. Resh Lakish in the name of R. Judah Nesi’ah³⁹ observed: But this⁴⁰ applies only where the husband came and found her within her usually clean period.⁴¹ R. Huna observed: This⁴¹ was learnt only of a woman who had no settled period, but if she had a settled period intercourse with her is forbidden.⁴² Topsy turvy!⁴³ Does not, on the contrary, the reverse stand to reason, since in the case of a woman who has no settled period it might well be assumed that she experienced a discharge, but where she has a settled period [she should be presumed to be clean] since her period was fixed? — Rather, if the statement was at all made it was made in the following terms: R. Huna said, This⁴⁴ was learnt only in the case of a woman the time of whose settled period had not arrived⁴⁵ but if that time had arrived⁴⁵ she is forbidden,⁴² for he⁴⁶ is of the opinion that [the laws of] settled periods⁴⁷ are Pentateuchal. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: Even if the time of her settled period has arrived she is also permitted,⁴⁸ for he is of the opinion that [the laws relating to] settled period are only Rabbinical.⁴⁹ R. Ashi reported thus: R. Huna said,

- (1) For a period of twenty-four hours retrospectively.
 - (2) This (cf. prev. n.) being the only time limit recognized.
 - (3) Sc. his time limit. Consequently they could not possibly have adopted it.
 - (4) Sc. the time elapsed was no longer than that during which she can examine herself while still in bed.
 - (5) The discovery of a discharge within that space of time (cf. prev. n.).
 - (6) In agreement with R. Hisda supra.
 - (7) A period of time which is longer than the former (cf. supra n. 1).
 - (8) The discharge discovered after the period mentioned (cf. prev. n.).
 - (9) I.e., 'the interval following this interval' as R. Hisda explained (supra 14b).
 - (10) Longer than the periods mentioned.
 - (11) After intercourse.
 - (12) When the discharge was discovered.
 - (13) With the woman. Such a contact with a menstruant within the twenty-four hours' period only subjects him to one day's uncleanness until nightfall and the uncleanness is only Rabbinical and of an uncertain character.
 - (14) With a menstruant; sc. the uncleanness, even in its uncertain character, does not extend over seven days as would have been the case with one who had intercourse with a confirmed menstruant.
 - (15) Cf. prev. n. mut. mut.
 - (16) This is explained infra.
 - (17) Who explained supra that the interval within which SHE CAN DESCEND FROM THE BED is regarded as the 'interval after this interval'.
 - (18) Who maintained supra that 'the former and the latter represent the same length of time'.
 - (19) So that after she descended from the bed she spent some more time in taking up the rag.
 - (20) In order to avoid the possible mistake that even within the shorter interval, when the woman had the rag in her hand, the Rabbis hold the man to be clean.
 - (21) Of course it should. Since no such distinction, however, is made it is obvious, is it not, that the Rabbis hold the man to be clean even if the discharge was discovered after the interval in which the woman can descend from the bed with the rag in her hand?
 - (22) Lit., 'and let (the prohibition) be inferred'.
 - (23) R. Judah.
 - (24) Supra 2a.
 - (25) R. Akiba, however, maintains that the first stage of intercourse with a menstruant is regarded as its consummation, and consequently uncleanness is conveyed even in such a case (Rashi).
 - (26) Who in regard to bloodstains adopts (supra 5a and infra 52b) the more restrictive view.
 - (27) The time of the discovery of the stain.
 - (28) That the Rabbis agree she conveys uncleanness after the discovery of a stain (cf. prev. n.).

- (29) Even after discovery.
- (30) That she does not convey uncleanness to the one who had intercourse with her after the discovery of a bloodstain just as she does not render him unclean retrospectively during the twenty-four hours prior to her having observed a discharge.
- (31) Metaphor. Within the twenty-four hours prior to her having observed a discharge.
- (32) Sc. the bloodstain had actually been discovered.
- (33) As Rab supra.
- (34) In respect of intercourse; sc. no examination is required for the purpose. It is necessary only for determining the condition of any clean objects the woman may have handled.
- (35) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.
- (36) After the ruling in the first clause which applies to all husbands.
- (37) The ruling in the first clause.
- (38) Lit., 'she throws upon herself' —
- (39) The Prince, R. Judah II.
- (40) The ruling in the final clause.
- (41) I.e., within thirty days after her last observation of a discharge. After the thirty days, since most women have monthly periods, intercourse must be preceded by an examination. (12) That 'within her usually clean period' no examination is required.
- (42) Unless there was previous examination.
- (43) Lit., 'towards where' or towards the tail' (cf. B.B. (Sonc. ed.) p. 435, n. 17).
- (44) That 'within her usually clean period' no examination is required.
- (45) During the husband's absence from town.
- (46) R. Huna.
- (47) Sc. that when the date of a settled period arrives the woman is presumed to be in a state of doubtful uncleanness.
- (48) No previous examination being required.
- (49) Sc. the Rabbis required a woman to examine herself when the date of her settled period arrives in order to ascertain whether there was a discharge or not. If, however, her husband was out of town and on his return it was unknown to him whether she did or did not examine herself she is not to be regarded as being in a condition of doubtful uncleanness.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 15b

This¹ was learnt only of a woman who had no settled period that was determinable by days alone but one that was determinable by both days and leaps, so that since the period depends on some specific act it might well be presumed, that she did not leap and that, therefore, did not observe any discharge. Where, however, she has a settled period that was determinable by the days alone, she must have no intercourse, for he is of the opinion that the restrictions relating to settled periods are Pentateuchal. Rabbah b. Bar Hana ruled: Even if she has a settled period that was determined by the days alone, she is permitted intercourse, for he holds the opinion that [the restrictions relating to] settled periods are only Rabbinical.

R. Samuel citing R. Johanan ruled: If a woman has a settled period, her husband² may³ calculate the days of that period and⁴ come in unto her.⁵ Said R. Samuel b. Yeba to R. Abba: Did R. Johanan refer also to a young wife who⁶ is too shy to perform immersion? — The other replied: Did then R. Johanan speak of one who had actually⁷ observed a discharge? It may [in fact be held] that R. Johanan spoke⁸ only of a case where it is doubtful whether or not the woman did observe a discharge and where, [so that] even if some reason could be found for assuming that she did observe one, it may also be assumed that she had since performed immersions,⁹ but in a case where it is certain that she had observed a discharge, who could say that she had since performed immersion? And, seeing that it is a question of a doubt¹⁰ being opposed by a certainty¹¹ [she must be deemed unclean] since a doubt cannot take one out of a certainty. But does it not? Was it not in fact taught: If a haber¹² died and left a store-room full of fruits, even if they were only then due to be tithed,¹³ they are presumed to have been properly prepared.¹⁴ Now here it is a case of certain tebel¹⁵ and there is only the doubt as to whether or not it was tithed, and the doubt nevertheless sets aside the certainty? — No, there it is a case of a certainty against a certainty, in agreement with a statement of R. Hanina of Hozae,¹⁶ for R. Hanina of Hozae said: It is presumed with a haber that he does not allow anything to pass out of his control unless it has been duly prepared. And if you prefer I might say: It is a case of doubt against doubt, since [the man might have acted] in accordance with a suggestion of R. Oshaia, for R. Oshaia said: A man¹⁷ may resort to a device with his produce and store it¹⁸ together with its chaff¹⁹ so that²⁰ his cattle may eat of it²¹ and it is exempt from the tithes.²²

But does not a doubt set aside a certainty? Surely it has been taught: It once happened that the handmaid of a certain tax-collector in Rimmon²³ threw the body of a premature child into a pit, and a priest²⁴ came and gazed into it to ascertain whether it was male or female,²⁵ and when the matter came before the Sages²⁶ they pronounced him clean because weasels and martens are commonly found there.²⁷ Now here, surely, it is a certainty that the woman had thrown a premature child into the pit and a doubt whether they had dragged it away or not, and yet does not the doubt set aside the certainty? — Do not read, ‘Threw the body of a premature child into a pit’ but

- (1) That the woman is presumed to be clean even if the date of her settled period had already arrived.
 - (2) Having been out of town for seven days after that period.
 - (3) On returning home during the days in which she had the opportunity of performing immersion and attain cleanness.
 - (4) Without asking her whether she had made use of her opportunity (cf. prev. n.).
 - (5) On the assumption that she had duly performed immersion and is now clean.
 - (6) Unless urged by her husband.
 - (7) Lit., ‘certainly’.
 - (8) That the woman need not be asked.
 - (9) And since R. Johanan's ruling is based on the existence of these doubts there can be no distinction between a younger and an older woman.
 - (10) As to whether there was immersion in consequence of which she would be clean.
 - (11) Of a discharge which renders her unclean.
 - (12) V. Glos.
 - (13) Lit., ‘sons of their day’.
 - (14) A.Z. 41b; i.e., that the priestly and levitical dues have been duly set aside for them.
 - (15) V. Glos. Since the fruit had reached a stage when it was liable to the dues (cf. prev. n.).
 - (16) A district on the eastern side of the Tigris.

(17) Desirous of avoiding tithes.

(18) Lit., 'and brings it in'.

(19) Only corn that had been winnowed before it was brought into the store-room within the house is liable to tithe.

(20) Since it was brought in unwinnowed (cf. prev. n.).

(21) Even after its subsequent winnowing. A human being, though permitted to eat it in accordance with Pentateuchal law, may not do so in accordance with a Rabbinic measure.

(22) Even Rabbinically. Now since it is possible that the produce was taken to the store-room in accordance with R. Oshaia's suggestion (a case of doubtful tebel) and it is also possible that it had been duly tithed, we have here a case of doubt against doubt. As a haber is presumed not to allow anything to pass out of his hand unless it had been duly prepared the Rabbis in this case waived aside their restriction and allowed a human being also to eat of the produce.

(23) A town near Jerusalem.

(24) Who was ignorant of the laws of uncleanness (cf. Rashi's fourth interpretation and Tosaf.) and unaware that by bending over the pit just above the embryo he would contract uncleanness.

(25) The period of a woman's uncleanness after childbirth is twice as long in the case of the latter as in that of the former (cf. Lev. XII, 2ff).

(26) To decide whether the priest contracted uncleanness by bending over the pit and thus 'overshadowing' the dead body.

(27) In pits. Tosef. Oh. XVI. These creatures might be presumed to have devoured or dragged away the body so that there was no 'overshadowing' on the part of the priest.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 16a

'a kind of premature child'.¹ But was it not stated, 'To ascertain whether it was male or female'?² — It is this that was meant: And a priest came and gazed into it to ascertain whether she had aborted an inflated object or a premature child and, if some ground could be found for assuming that she aborted a premature child, to ascertain whether it was male or female. And if you prefer I might reply: Since weasels and martens are commonly found there they had certainly dragged it away.³

An enquiry was addressed to⁴ R. Nahman: [Is the examination at] regular menstrual periods Pentateuchal⁵ or only Rabbinical?⁶ The latter replied: Since our colleague Huna citing Rab ruled, If a woman who has a settled period did not make an examination when that period arrived but later on⁷ observed a discharge, she must take into consideration the possibility [of a discharge] on the date of the settled period,⁸ and also the possibility of [twenty-four hours retrospective uncleanness] on account of her observation.⁹ Thus¹⁰ it clearly follows that [the examination at] regular menstrual periods is Pentateuchal. There are others who say that he¹¹ replied thus: The reason then¹² is that she had 'observed a discharge,'¹³ but if she had not observed one the possibility¹⁴ need not be taken into consideration. Thus¹⁵ it follows clearly that [the examination at] regular menstrual periods is only Rabbinical.

It was stated: If a woman had a settled period, and when the time of that period arrived she did not make the examination and later she did make one, Rab ruled: If on examination she found that she was unclean she is unclean but if she found that she was clean she remains clean. Samuel, however, ruled, Even if on examination she found herself clean she is deemed unclean, since the guest¹⁶ comes at the usual time. Must it be assumed that they¹⁷ differ on [the question of the necessity for an examination at] regular menstrual periods, one Master¹⁸ holding that it is Pentateuchal¹⁹ and the other Master²⁰ maintaining that it is only Rabbinical?²¹ R. Zera replied: Both¹⁷ may agree that²² [the examination at] regular menstrual periods is Pentateuchal, but²³ one ruling²⁴ refers to a woman who examined herself within the period of the duration of her menstruation²⁵ while the other²⁶ refers to a woman who did not examine herself within the period of the duration of her menstruation.²⁷ R. Nahman b. Isaac maintained: They¹⁷ differ on the very question of [the necessity for an examination at] the regular menstrual periods, one Master²⁸ holding that it is Pentateuchal²⁹ while the other Master³⁰ maintains that it is only Rabbinical.

R. Shesheth observed: [The discussion here] is analogous to that of the following Tannas: [For it was taught:] R. Eliezer³¹ ruled, She³² is to be regarded as menstrually unclean,³³ while R. Joshua³⁴ ruled: Let her be examined.³⁵ And these Tannas³⁶ differ on the same principle as the following Tannas. For it was taught: R. Meir ruled, She³⁷ is to be regarded as menstrually unclean,³⁸ while the Sages³⁴ ruled, Let her be examined.³⁵ Abaye observed, We also learnt to the same effect. For we learnt: R. Meir ruled, If a woman was in a hiding place³⁹ when the time of her regular period arrived and she did not examine herself, she is nevertheless clean, because fear suspends the menstrual flow.⁴⁰ The reason then⁴¹ is that there was fear, but if there had been no fear she would have been deemed unclean. Thus it clearly follows [that the necessity for an examination at] regular periods is Pentateuchal. May it be assumed that the following Tannas also differ on the same principle? For it was taught: If a woman observed some blood [that might be] due to a wound,⁴² even if this occurred during her usual period of menstruation, she is deemed to be clean;⁴³ so R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Rabbi ruled: If she has a regular period⁴⁴ she⁴⁵ must take her period into consideration.⁴⁶ Now do they not differ on this principle, one Master⁴⁷ holding that [the examinations at] the regular periods are Pentateuchal, while the other Master⁴⁸ holds that they are only Rabbinical? — Rabina replied: No; both may agree that [the examinations at] the regular periods are only Rabbinical, but it is on the question whether the interior of the uterus is unclean⁴⁹ that they differ. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that the woman is clean⁵⁰ but the blood⁵¹ is unclean because it comes through the uterus,⁵² and Rabbi⁵³ in effect said to him: If⁵⁴ you take into consideration the possibility of her usual menstrual flow, the woman also should be unclean,⁵⁵ and if⁵⁶ you do not take into consideration the possibility of her usual menstrual flow, [the blood also should be clean since] the interior of the uterus⁵⁷ is clean.

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: A WOMAN NEEDS TWC⁵⁸ TESTING-RAGS FOR EVERY INTERCOURSE,⁵⁹ OR SHE MUST PERFORM IT IN THE LIGHT OF A LAMP.⁶⁰ BETH HILLEL RULED: TWO TESTING-RAGS⁶¹ SUFFICE HER FOR THE WHOLE NIGHT.⁶² [

(1) Sc. it was not certain whether it was a child at all. Hence it is here also a case of doubt against doubt.

(2) Implying that it was definitely a child and that the only doubt was as to its sex.

(3) Hence it is a case of a certainty against a certainty.

(4) Var. lec., 'Raba enquired of' (MS.M. and Asheri).

(5) So that if a woman failed to make the examination at the proper time she is deemed to be unclean (on the ground that the discharge had appeared at its usual time) even though she observed no blood when she examined herself some time later (since it might have dropped on the ground and been lost).

- (6) Hence if she failed to make the examination at the proper time she is regarded as clean.
- (7) Sc. at the first examination after the settled period.
- (8) If it was due prior to the period of twenty-four hours immediately preceding the observation. Her uncleanness in such a case extends backward to the time of the settled period.
- (9) If less than twenty-four hours intervened between the time of the settled period and the observation.
- (10) Since the possibility of a discharge at the time of the settled period is taken into consideration presumably even where no subsequent discharge had been observed. It is now assumed that 'discharge' was mentioned only on account of the second clause, 'the possibility . . . on account of her observation'.
- (11) R. Nahman.
- (12) Why 'she must take into consideration . . . the date of the settled period'.
- (13) It being assumed that as she discovered a discharge on examination she might also have discovered one if she had made an examination at the time of her settled period.

- (18) Samuel.
- (19) Hence the woman's uncleanness in the absence of one.
- (20) Rab.
- (21) Cf. prev. n. but one mut. mut. But how could this be reconciled with the first version of R. Nahman supra according to which Rab is of the opinion that the examination is Pentateuchal?
- (22) Lit., 'that all the world'.
- (23) As to the difficulty raised (v. supra n. 11).
- (24) The last cited.
- (25) As she nevertheless discovered no discharge, it may safely be assumed that there was none even earlier when the regular menstruation period had begun.
- (26) The first version of R. Nahman.
- (27) But did so later on. As it is quite likely that earlier, during the period of menstruation, there was a discharge, the woman must well be deemed unclean. An old ed. inserts here: 'And there are others who say that one Master spoke of one particular case and the other spoke of another particular case and there is in fact no difference of opinion between them' (v. Maharsha and marginal gloss).
- (28) Samuel.
- (29) Hence the woman's uncleanness in the absence of one.
- (30) Rab.
- (31) Maintaining that the examination is Pentateuchal.
- (32) A woman who failed to make the examination at the time of her regular period.
- (33) From the time her regular period was due to commence.
- (34) Holding that the examination is only Rabbinical.
- (35) Even though her period of menstruation had passed. If on examination she finds herself to be clean she is regarded as clean (despite the possibility of an earlier discharge) and if she finds herself unclean, the uncleanness is retrospective from the time her settled period was due.
- (36) R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.
- (37) A woman who failed to make the examination at the time of her regular period.

- (41) Why she is regarded as clean.
- (42) In her womb.
- (43) The blood being attributed to the wound.
- (44) If she has no regular period Rabbi, for the reason given in prev. n., agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
- (45) If the blood was observed on the day the period was due to commence.
- (46) Sc. she is regarded as unclean, since it is possible that some particle of menstrual blood was mixed up with that of the wound.

- (49) Lit. 'as to the source, the place thereof is unclean'. And, therefore, capable of imparting uncleanness to any clean blood that passes through it.
- (50) Sc. she is not subject to the major uncleanness of menstruation which extends over seven days.
- (51) Though coming from a wound.
- (52) Where it contracts an uncleanness (a 'father of uncleanness') which causes it to impart a one day's uncleanness to a human being, so that any object touched by the woman on that day becomes unclean.
- (53) Relaxing the law.
- (54) By regarding the blood as unclean.
- (55) For seven days, as any other menstruant.
- (56) Since you exempt the woman from menstrual uncleanness.
- (57) Lit., 'the source of its place'.
- (58) Previously unused.
- (59) One is used before, and the other after and both are preserved until the morning when they are to be examined in daylight.
- (60) So that the testing-rag may be immediately examined.
- (61) One of which is used prior to the first intercourse and the other after the last.
- (62) This being sufficient to determine whether she is menstrually unclean and whether she is to convey uncleanness to any clean object she may have handled. (So Rashi; cf., however, Tosaf. and Tosaf. Asheri for a different interpretation.)

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 16b

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Although [the Sages] have said, 'He who has intercourse in the light of a lamp is contemptible',¹ Beth Shammai ruled: A woman needs two² testing-rags for every intercourse³ or she must perform it in the light of a lamp, but Beth Hillel ruled: Two testing-rags suffice for her for the whole night.

It was taught: Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel, 'According to your view⁴ is there no need to provide against the possibility that she might emit⁵ a drop of blood of the size of a mustard seed in the course of the first act and this would be covered up with semen during the second act?'⁶ 'But', replied Beth Hillel, even according to your view⁷ is there no need to provide against the possibility that the spittle,⁸ while still in the mouth,⁹ was crushed out of existence?'¹⁰ '[We maintain our view,] the former retorted, 'because what is crushed once is not the same as that which is crushed twice'.

It was taught: R. Joshua stated, 'I approve⁵ of the view of Beth Shammai'.⁷ 'Master', said his disciples to him, 'what an extension [of the restrictions] you have imposed upon us!' 'It is a good thing', he replied, 'that I should impose extensive restrictions upon you in this world in order that your days may be prolonged in the world to come.'

R. Zera remarked: From the words of all these authorities¹¹ we may infer¹² that a conscientious man should not indulge in intercourse twice in succession.¹³ Raba said: One may indulge in intercourse twice in succession, for that ruling¹⁴ was taught only in respect of clean objects.¹⁵ So it was also taught: This¹⁶ applies only to clean objects¹⁵ but to her husband she is permitted.¹⁷ This,¹⁸ however, applies only where he had left her in a state of presumptive cleanness, but if he left her in a state of presumptive uncleanness she is presumed to be in that state forever until she tells him, 'I am clean'.

R. Abba citing R. Hiyya b. Ashi who had it from Rab ruled: If a woman¹⁹ examined herself with a testing-rag which was subsequently lost she is forbidden intercourse until she had reexamined herself. R. Ela demurred: If it had not been lost²⁰ would she not²¹ have been allowed intercourse even though she is unaware [whether there was or there was not a discharge], why then should she not now also²² be allowed intercourse? — Raba replied: In the former case her proof is in existence,²³ but in the latter case²² her proof is not in existence.²⁴

R. Johanan stated: It is forbidden to perform one's marital duty in the day-time.²⁵ What is the Scriptural proof? That it is said, Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night wherein it was said: 'A man-child is brought forth'.²⁶ The night is thus set aside²⁷ for conception but the day is not set aside for conception. Resh Lakish stated: [The proof is] from here: But he that despiseth His ways²⁸ shall die.²⁹ As to Resh Lakish, how does he expound R. Johanan's text?²⁶ — He requires it for the same exposition as that made by R. Hanina b. Papa. For R. Hanina b. Papa made the following exposition: The name of the angel who is in charge of conception is 'Night', and he takes up a drop and places it in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He, saying, 'Sovereign of the universe, what shall be the fate of this drop? Shall it produce a strong man or a weak man, a wise man or a fool, a rich man or a poor man?' Whereas 'wicked man' or 'righteous one' he does not mention, in agreement with the view of R. Hanina. For R. Hanina stated: Everything is in the hands of heaven except the fear of God, as it is said, And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear etc.³⁰ And R. Johanan?³¹ — If that were the only meaning,³² Scripture should have written,³³ 'A man-child is brought forth'³⁴ why then was it stated, 'was brought forth a man-child'?³⁵ To indicate that the night³⁶ is set aside for conception³⁶ but the day is not set aside for conception. As to R. Johanan how does he expound the text of Resh Lakish?²⁹ — He requires it for [an application to the same types] as those described in the Book of Ben Sira:³⁷ 'There are three [types] that I hate, yea, four that I do not love: A Scholar³⁸ who frequents wine-shops³⁹ [or, as others say, a scholar that is a gossip],⁴⁰ a person who sets up a college in the high parts of a town,⁴¹ one who holds the membrum when making water and one who enters his friend's house suddenly'.⁴² R. Johanan observed:⁴³ Even his own house.

R. Simeon b. Yohai observed: There are four [types]⁴⁴ which the Holy One, blessed be He, hates, and as for me, I do not love them: The man who enters his house suddenly and much more so [if he so enters] his friend's house, the man who holds the membrum when he makes water,

 - (20) Lit., 'it is'.
 - (21) Since the examination of the rags, according to Beth Hillel, is never to take place before the following morning and, even according to Beth Shammai, no lamp is required at night and the examination is equally postponed until the morning whenever two rags are used for each act.
 - (22) Where the rag is lost.
 - (23) And it may well be examined in the morning to ascertain, regarding clean objects the woman had handled, whether she is clean or unclean. As regards intercourse too, should it be found that her uncleanness began prior to the act, she could bring a sin-offering.
 - (24) Were intercourse to be allowed in such a case there would be no possible means of ascertaining the condition of the woman any more than if there had been no examination at all. Hence Rab's prohibition.
 - (25) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis, 'said R. Hamnuna. MS.M. reads for 'Hamnuna' 'Huna'.

 - (34) Sc. the word gaber (male-child) should have preceded horoh (brought forth).
 - (35) Horoh (cf. prev. n.) preceding gaber and thus standing close to the word 'night'.
 - (36) Cf. prev. n.
 - (37) Cf. Ecclesiasticus XXI, 23.
 - (38) Lit., 'chief'.

- (39) Lit., 'a house of drinkings'.
(40) Cur. edd. in parenthesis insert 'and others say, an excitable scholar'.
(41) A manifestation of arrogance.
(42) It was to types like these that Prov. XIX, 16 alluded.
(43) Not only 'his friend's house'.
(44) Lit., 'things'.

Talmud - Mas. Nidah 17a

the man who when naked makes water in front of his bed, and the man who has intercourse in the presence of any living creature. 'Even', said Rab Judah to Samuel, 'in the presence of mice?' 'Shinena',¹ the other replied, 'no; but [the reference is to] a house like that of So and so where they have intercourse in the presence of their men-servants and maidservants.² But what was the exposition they made? — Abide ye here with³ the ass,⁴ implies: peoples that are like an ass. Rabbah son of R. Huna used to chase away the wasps from his curtained bed.⁵ Abaye drove away the flies.⁶ Rabba⁷ chased away the mosquitoes.⁶

R. Simeon b. Yohai stated, There are five things which [cause the man] who does them to forfeit his life and his blood is upon his own head: Eating⁸ peeled garlic, a peeled onion or a peeled egg, or drinking diluted liquids that⁹ were kept over night; spending a night in a graveyard; removing one's nails and throwing them away in a public thoroughfare; and blood-letting followed immediately by intercourse.

'Eating peeled garlic etc.' Even though they are deposited in a basket and tied up and sealed, an evil spirit rests upon them. This, however, has been said only where their roots or peel did not remain¹⁰ with them, but if their roots or peel remained with them there can be no objection.¹¹ 'And drinking diluted liquids that were kept over night'. Rab Judah citing Samuel explained: This applies only where they were kept over night in a metal vessel. R. Papa stated: Vessels made of alum crystals are the same in this respect as vessels made of metal. So also said R. Johanan: This applies only where they were kept in a metal vessel; and vessels made of alum crystals are the same in this respect as vessels made of metal.

'Spending a night in a graveyard', in order that a spirit of uncleanness may rest upon him.¹² [This should not be done] since in consequence he might sometimes be exposed to danger.

'Removing one's nails and throwing them away in a public thoroughfare'. [This is dangerous] because a pregnant woman passing over them would miscarry. This, however, has been said only of a case where one removes them with a pair of scissors. Furthermore, this has been said only of a case where one removes the nails of both hands and feet. Furthermore, this has been said only in the case where one did not cut anything immediately after cutting them but if something was cut immediately after they were cut there can be no danger.¹³ This, however, is not [to be relied upon]. One should be on his guard in all the cases mentioned.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: Three things have been said about the disposal of nails: He who burns them is a pious man, he who buries them is a righteous man, and he who throws them away is a wicked
