

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. FROM WHAT TIME MAY ONE RECITE THE SHEMA' IN THE EVENING? FROM THE TIME THAT THE PRIESTS ENTER [THEIR HOUSES] IN ORDER TO EAT THEIR TERUMAH¹ UNTIL THE END OF THE FIRST WATCH.² THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER. THE SAGES SAY: UNTIL MIDNIGHT. R. GAMALIEL SAYS: UNTIL THE DAWN COMES UP.³ ONCE IT HAPPENED THAT HIS⁴ SONS CAME HOME [LATE] FROM A WEDDING FEAST AND THEY SAID TO HIM: WE HAVE NOT YET RECITED THE [EVENING] SHEMA'. HE SAID TO THEM: IF THE DAWN HAS NOT YET COME UP YOU ARE STILL BOUND TO RECITE. AND NOT IN RESPECT TO THIS ALONE DID THEY SO DECIDE, BUT WHEREVER THE SAGES SAY UNTIL MIDNIGHT', THE PRECEPT MAY BE PERFORMED UNTIL THE DAWN COMES UP. THE PRECEPT OF BURNING THE FAT AND THE [SACRIFICIAL] PIECES, TOO, MAY BE PERFORMED TILL THE DAWN COMES UP.⁵ SIMILARLY, ALL [THE OFFERINGS] THAT ARE TO BE EATEN WITHIN ONE DAY MAY LAWFULLY BE CONSUMED TILL THE COMING UP OF THE DAWN. WHY THEN DID THE SAGES SAY 'UNTIL MIDNIGHT'? IN ORDER TO KEEP A MAN FAR FROM TRANSGRESSION.

GEMARA. On what does the Tanna base himself that he commences: FROM WHAT TIME?⁶ Furthermore, why does he deal first with the evening [Shema']? Let him begin with the morning [Shema']! — The Tanna bases himself on the Scripture, where it is written [And thou shalt recite them] . . . when thou liest down and when thou risest up,⁷ and he states [the oral law] thus: When does the time of the recital of the Shema' of lying down begin? When the priests enter to eat their terumah.⁸ And if you like, I can answer: He learns [the precedence of the evening] from the account of the creation of the world, where it is written, And there was evening and there was morning, one day.⁹ Why then does he teach in the sequel: THE MORNING [SHEMA'] IS PRECEDED BY TWO BENEDICTIONS AND FOLLOWED BY ONE. THE EVENING [SHEMA'] IS PRECEDED BY TWO BENEDICTIONS AND FOLLOWED BY TWO?¹⁰ Let him there, too, mention the evening [Shema'] first? — The Tanna commences with the evening [Shema'], and proceeds then to the morning [Shema']. While dealing with the morning [Shema'], he expounds all the matters relating to it, and then he returns again to the matters relating to the evening [Shema'].

The Master said: FROM THE TIME THAT THE PRIESTS ENTER TO EAT THEIR 'TERUMAH'. When do the priests eat terumah? From the time of the appearance of the stars. Let him then say: 'From the time of the appearance of the stars'? — This very thing he wants to teach us, in passing, that the priests may eat terumah from the time of the appearance of the stars. And he also wants to teach us that the expiatory offering is not indispensable,¹¹ as it has been taught:¹² And when the sun sets we-taher,¹³ the setting of the sun is indispensable [as a condition of his fitness] to eat terumah, but the expiatory offering is not indispensable to enable him to eat terumah. But how do you know that these words 'and the sun sets' mean the setting of the sun, and this 'we-taher' means that the day clears away?

- (1) If the priests have become ritually unclean, they are not permitted to eat terumah, to which a certain holiness attaches, till they have taken a bath and the sun has set.
 - (2) I.e., until either a fourth or a third of the night has passed. V. infra 3a.
 - (3) Maim: about one and one fifth hours before actual sunrise. V. Pes. 93b.
 - (4) R. Gamaliel's.
 - (5) This sentence is parenthetical. It is nowhere laid down that the burning of the fat etc. is permitted only till midnight. It is mentioned here in order to inform us that wherever the time fixed for the performance of a duty is the night, it expires at the rise of the dawn (Rashi).
 - (6) I.e., where is it stated in the Law that the recital of the Shema' is prescribed at all?
 - (7) Deut. VI, 7.
 - (8) This answers also the second question, as the Bible mentions first the recital of the evening time.
 - (9) Gen. I, 5.
 - (10) Infra 11a.
 - (11) For the eating of terumah even where it is necessary to complete the purification rites, v. Ker. II,1.
 - (12) Sifra, Emor.
 - (13) Lev. XXII, 7. This can be rendered as E.V.: 'he (the man) is clean', or it (the day) is clean (clear), as understood now by the Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 2b

It means perhaps: And when the sun [of the next morning] appears, and we-taher means the man becomes clean?¹ — Rabbah son of R. Shila explains: In that case, the text would have to read we-yithar.² What is the meaning of we-taher?³ The day clears away, conformably to the common expression, The sun has set and the day has cleared away. This explanation of Rabbah son of R. Shila was unknown in the West,⁴ and they raised the question: This 'and the sun sets', does it mean the real setting of the sun, and 'we-taher' means the day clears away? Or does it perhaps mean the appearance of the sun, and we-taher means the man becomes clean? They solved it from a Baraitha, it being stated in a Baraitha: The sign of the thing is the appearance of the stars. Hence you learn that it is the setting of the sun [which makes him clean] and the meaning of we-taher is the clearing away of the day.

The Master said: FROM THE TIME THAT THE PRIESTS ENTER TO EAT THEIR 'TERUMAH'. They pointed to a contradiction [from the following]: From what time may one recite the Shema' in the evening? From the time that the poor man⁵ comes [home] to eat his bread with salt till he rises from his meal. The last clause certainly contradicts the Mishnah. Does the first clause also contradict the Mishnah? — No. The poor man and the priest have one and the same time.

They pointed to a contradiction [from the following]: From what time may one begin to recite the Shema' in the evening? From the time that the people come [home] to eat their meal on a Sabbath eve. These are the words of R. Meir. But the Sages say: From the time that the priests are entitled to eat their terumah. A sign for the matter is the appearance of the stars. And though there is no real proof of it,⁶ there is a hint for it. For it is written: So we wrought in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rise of the dawn till the appearance of the stars.⁷ And it says further: That in the night they may be a guard to us, and may labour in the day.⁸ (Why this second citation?⁹ — If you object and say that the night really begins with the setting of the sun, but that they left late and came early, [I shall reply]: Come and hear [the other verse]: ‘That in the night they may be a guard to us, and may labour in the day’). Now it is assumed that the ‘poor man’ and ‘the people’ have the same time [for their evening meal.]¹⁰ And if you say that the poor man and the priest also have the same time, then the Sages would be saying the same thing as R. Meir? Hence you must conclude that the poor man has one time and the priest has another time? — No; the ‘poor man’ and the priest have the same time, but the ‘poor man’ and the ‘people’ have not the same time.

But have the ‘poor man’ and the priest really the same time? They pointed to a contradiction [from the following]: From what time may one begin to recite the Shema’ in the evening? From the time that the [Sabbath] day becomes hallowed on the Sabbath eve. These are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua says: From the time that the priests are ritually clean to eat their terumah. R. Meir says: From the time that the priests take their ritual bath in order to eat their terumah. (Said R. Judah to him: When the priests take their ritual bath it is still day-time!)¹¹ R. Hanina says: From the time that the poor man comes [home] to eat his bread with salt. R. Ahai (some say: R. Aha). says: From the time that most people come home to sit down to their meal. Now, if you say that the poor man and the priest have the same time, then R. Hanina and R. Joshua would be saying the same thing? From this you must conclude, must you not, that the poor man has one time and the priest has another time. — Draw indeed that conclusion!

Which of them is later? — It is reasonable to conclude that the ‘poor man’ is later. For if you say that the ‘poor man’ is earlier, R. Hanina would be saying the same thing as R. Eliezer.¹² Hence you must conclude that the poor man is later, must you not? — Draw indeed that conclusion.

The Master said:¹³ ‘R. Judah said to him: When the priests take their ritual bath it is still daytime!’ The objection of R. Judah to R. Meir seems well founded? — R. Meir may reply as follows: Do you think that I am referring to the twilight [as defined] by you?¹⁴ I am referring to the twilight [as defined] by R. Jose. For R. Jose says: The twilight is like the twinkling of an eye. This¹⁵ enters and that¹⁶ departs — and one cannot exactly fix it.¹⁷

(1) Through his sin-offering.

(2) The verb being in the future.

(3) Which may be taken as a past tense, the waw not being conversive.

(4) In the Palestinian schools.

(5) Who cannot afford an artificial light.

(6) That the day ends with the appearance of the stars.

(7) Neh. IV, 15.

(8) Ibid. 16.

(9) The first verse seems to afford ample proof.

(10) I.e., the time the ‘poor man’ mentioned in the first Baraitha comes home to take his evening meal is identical with that at which people generally come to eat their meals on Sabbath eve.

(11) And not even twilight, v. Shab. 35a.

- (12) Tosef. points out that the ground for this statement is not clear.
- (13) In the Baraitha just quoted.
- (14) According to which definition it lasts as long as it takes to walk half a mil, v. Shab. 34b.
- (15) The evening.
- (16) The day.
- (17) And consequently the priests may bathe at twilight as defined by R. Jose since it is still day, and one may also read at that time the Shema' since it is practically night.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 3a

There is a contradiction between R. Meir [of one Baraitha]¹ and R. Meir [of the last Baraitha]² — Yes, two Tannaim transmit different versions of R. Meir's opinion. There is a contradiction between R. Eliezer [of the last Baraitha]³ and R. Eliezer [of the Mishnah]⁴ — Yes, two Tannaim⁵ transmit two different versions of R. Eliezer's opinion. If you wish I can say: The first clause of the Mishnah⁶ is not R. Eliezer's.⁷

UNTIL THE END OF THE FIRST WATCH. What opinion does R. Eliezer hold? If he holds that the night has three watches, let him say: Till four hours [in the night]. And if he holds that the night has four watches, let him say: Till three hours? — He holds indeed, that the night has three watches, but he wants to teach us that there are watches in heaven⁸ as well as on earth. For it has been taught: R. Eliezer says: The night has three watches, and at each watch the Holy One, blessed be He, sits and roars like a lion. For it is written: The Lord does roar from on high, and raise His voice from His holy habitation; 'roaring He doth roar'⁹ because of his fold. And the sign of the thing is:¹⁰ In the first watch, the ass brays; in the second, the dogs bark; in the third, the child sucks from the breast of his mother, and the woman talks with her husband. What does R. Eliezer understand [by the word watch]? Does he mean the beginning of the watches? The beginning of the first watch needs no sign, it is the twilight! Does he mean the end of the watches? The end of the last watch needs no sign, it is the dawn of the day! He, therefore, must think of the end of the first watch, of the beginning of the last watch, and of the midst of the middle watch. If you like I can say: He refers to the end of all the watches. And if you object that the last watch needs no sign, [I reply] that it may be of use for the recital of the Shema', and for a man who sleeps in a dark room¹¹ and does not know when the time of the recital arrives. When the woman talks with her husband and the child sucks from the breast of the mother, let him rise and recite.

R. Isaac b. Samuel says in the name of Rab: The night has three watches, and at each watch the Holy One, blessed be He, sits and roars like a lion and says: Woe to the children, on account of whose sins I destroyed My house and burnt My temple and exiled them among the nations of the world.

It has been taught: R. Jose says, I was once travelling on the road, and I entered into one of the ruins of Jerusalem in order to pray. Elijah of blessed memory appeared and waited for me at the door till I finished my prayer.¹² After I finished my prayer, he said to me: Peace be with you, my master! and I replied: Peace be with you, my master and teacher! And he said to me: My son, why did you go into this ruin? I replied: To pray. He said to me: You ought to have prayed on the road. I replied: I feared lest passers-by might interrupt me. He said to me: You ought to have said an abbreviated prayer.¹³ Thus I then learned from him three things: One must not go into a ruin; one may say the prayer on the road; and if one does say his prayer on the road, he recites an abbreviated prayer. He further said to me: My son, what sound did you hear in this ruin? I replied: I heard a divine voice, cooing like a dove, and saying: Woe to the children, on account of whose sins I destroyed My house and burnt My temple and exiled them among the nations of the world! And he said to me: By your life and by your head! Not in this moment alone does it so exclaim, but thrice each day does it exclaim thus! And more than that, whenever the Israelites go into the synagogues and schoolhouses and respond: ‘May His great name be blessed!’¹⁴ the Holy One, blessed be He, shakes His head and says: Happy is the king who is thus praised in this house! Woe¹⁵ to the father who had to banish his children, and woe to the children who had to be banished from the table of their father!

Our Rabbis taught: there are three reasons why one must not go into a ruin: because of suspicion,¹⁶ of falling debris and of demons. — [It states] ‘Because of suspicion’.¹⁷ It would be sufficient to say, because of falling debris’? —

- (1) Where he says: When people come home for their Sabbath-meal, which is after twilight.
 - (2) Which fixes a time which is before twilight.
 - (3) Which fixes sunset as the time-standard.
 - (4) Which fixes as time-standard, the appearance of the stars (when priests enter to eat terumah).
 - (5) V. Glos.
 - (6) Where the beginning of the time is fixed.
 - (7) R. Eliezer's ruling being merely with reference to the terminus ad quem.
 - (8) Among the ministering angels.
 - (9) So literally. Thus ‘roaring’ is mentioned three times in the text.
 - (10) I.e., of each watch.
 - (11) That has no windows to admit the daylight.
 - (12) The Tefillah, v. Glos.
 - (13) V. infra 29a.
 - (14) The principal congregational response in the doxology, the Kaddish v. P.B. p. 37.
 - (15) V. D.S. cur. edd.; what is there for the father.
 - (16) That a woman may be waiting for him there.
 - (17) The Gemara now proceeds to explain why all the three reasons must be mentioned.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 3b

When the ruin is new.¹ But it would be sufficient to say: ‘because of demons’? — When there are two people.² If there are two people, then there is no suspicion either? — When both are licentious [there is suspicion]. — [It states] ‘Because of falling debris’. It would be sufficient to say: ‘because of suspicion and demons’? — When there are two decent people. [It states] ‘Because of demons’. It would be sufficient to say; ‘because of suspicion and falling debris’? — When there are two decent people going into a new ruin. But if there are two, then there is no danger of demons either? — In their haunt there is danger. If you like I can say, indeed the reference is to one man and to a new ruin which was situated in the fields; in which case there is no suspicion, for a woman would not be found in the fields, but the danger of demons does exist.

Our Rabbis taught: The night has four watches. These are the words of Rabbi. R. Nathan says: Three. What is the reason of R. Nathan? — It is written: So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came into the outermost part of the camp in the beginning of the middle watch.³ And one taught: Under ‘middle’ is to be understood only something which is preceded by one and followed by one. And Rabbi?⁴ — ‘The middle’ means: one of the middle ones. And R. Nathan? — Not ‘one of the middle ones’ is written, but ‘the middle’ is written. What is Rabbi’s reason? — R. Zerika, in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, says: One verse reads, At midnight do I rise to give thanks unto Thee because of Thy righteous ordinances.⁵ And another verse reads: Mine eyes forestall the watches.⁶ How is this?⁷ — [This is possible only if] the night has four watches. And R. Nathan? — He is of the opinion of R. Joshua, as we have learnt: R. Joshua says: until the third hour, for such is the custom of kings, to rise in the third hour.⁸ Six hours of the night and two hours of the day amount to two watches.⁹ R. Ashi says: One watch and a half are also spoken of as ‘watches’. (R. Zerika further said, in the name of R. Ammi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: One may discuss in the presence of a dead body only things relating to the dead. R. Abba b. Kahana says: This refers only to religious matters,¹⁰ but as for worldly matter there is no harm. Another version is: R. Abba b. Kahana says: This refers even to religious matters. How much more so to worldly matters!)

But did David rise at midnight? [Surely] he rose with the evening dusk? For it is written: I rose with the neshef and cried.¹¹ And how do you know that this word neshef means the evening? It is written: In the neshef, in the evening of the day, in the blackness of night and the darkness!¹² — R. Oshaia, in the name of R. Aha, replies: David said: Midnight never passed me by in my sleep. R. Zera says: Till midnight he used to slumber like a horse,¹³ from thence on he rose with the energy of a lion. R. Ashi says: Till midnight he studied the Torah, from thence on he recited songs and praises. But does neshef mean the evening? Surely neshef means the morning? For it is written: And David slew them from the ‘neshef’ to the evening ‘ereb of the next day,¹⁴ and does not this mean, from the ‘morning dawn’ to the evening? — No. [It means:] from the [one] eventide to the [next] eventide. If so, let him write: From neshef to neshef, or from ‘ereb to ‘ereb? — Rather, said Raba: There are two kinds of neshef: [the morning neshef], when the evening disappears [nashaf] and the morning arrives,¹⁵ [and the evening neshef], when the day disappears [nashaf] and the evening arrives.¹⁶

But did David know the exact time of midnight? Even our teacher Moses did not know it! For it is written: About midnight I will go out into the midst of Egypt.¹⁷ Why ‘about midnight’? Shall we say that the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: ‘About midnight’? Can there be any doubt in the mind of God?¹⁸ Hence we must say that God told him ‘at midnight’, and he came and said: ‘About midnight’. Hence he [Moses] was in doubt; can David then have known it? — David had a sign. For so said R. Aha b. Bizana in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: A harp was hanging above David’s bed. As soon as midnight arrived, a North wind came and blew upon it and it played of itself. He arose immediately and studied the Torah till the break of dawn. After the break of dawn the wise men of Israel came in to see him and said to him: Our lord, the King, Israel your people require sustenance! He said to them: Let them go out and make a living one from the other.¹⁹ They said to him: A handful cannot satisfy a lion, nor can a pit be filled up with its own clods.²⁰ He said to them: Then go out in troops and attack [the enemy for plunder]. They at once took counsel with Ahithofel and consulted the Sanhedrin and questioned the Urim and Tummim.²¹ R. Joseph says: What verse [may be cited in support of this]? And after Ahithofel was Jehoiada, the son of Benaiah,²² and Abiathar; and the captain of the King's host was Joab.²³ 'Ahithofel', this was the counsellor. And so it is said: Now the counsel of Ahithofel, which he counselled in those days, was as if a man inquired of the word of God.²⁴

- (1) So that there is no danger of falling debris.
 - (2) The assumption is that where two are together there is no danger of an attack by demons.
 - (3) Judg. VII, 19.
 - (4) How does he explain the term middle?
 - (5) Ps. CXIX, 62.
 - (6) Ibid. 148.
 - (7) That somebody may rise at midnight and still have two watches before him, the minimum of the plural 'watches' being two.
 - (8) V. infra 9b. With reference to the morning Shema'.
 - (9) Since the day for royal personages begins at eight a.m. that is with the third hour when they rise. David by rising at midnight forestalled them by eight hours, i.e., two watches each having four hours.
 - (10) Lit., 'words of the Torah'. It would show disrespect for the dead.
 - (11) Ibid. 147. E.V. 'dawn'.
 - (12) Prov. VII, 9.
 - (13) That has a very light sleep, v. Suk. 26a.
 - (14) I Sam. XXX, 17.
 - (15) Neshef in this case denoting 'dawn'.
 - (16) Neshef in this case denoting 'dusk'.
 - (17) Ex. XI, 4.
 - (18) Lit., 'heaven'.
 - (19) Let the rich support the poor.
 - (20) We cannot be self-supporting to supply all our needs, any more than a handful can satisfy a lion, or the soil taken out of a pit fill its cavity.
 - (21) The divine oracle of the High-Priest's breast-plate.
 - (22) The text here has 'Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada', who is mentioned in II Sam. XX, 23.
 - (23) I Chron. XXVII, 34.
 - (24) II Sam. XVI, 23.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 4a

'Benaiah the son of Jehoiada', this means the Sanhedrin. 'And Abiathar',¹ these are the Urim and Tummim. And so it says: And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Kerethi and Pelethi.² Why are they³ called 'Kerethi' and 'Pelethi'? Kerethi, because their words are decisive [korethim]; Pelethi, because they are distinguished [mufla'im] through their words. And then it comes 'the captain of the King's host Joab'. R. Isaac b. Adda says: (Some say, R. Isaac the son of Addi says) Which verse?⁴ Awake, my glory; awake, psaltery and harp; I will awake the dawn.⁵

R. Zera says:⁶ Moses certainly knew and David, too, knew [the exact time of midnight]. Since David knew, why did he need the harp? That he might wake from his sleep. Since Moses knew, why did he say ‘about midnight’? — Moses thought that the astrologers of Pharaoh might make a mistake, and then they would say that Moses was a liar. For so a Master said: Let thy tongue acquire the habit of saying, ‘I know not’, lest thou be led to falsehoods [lying]. R. Ashi says: It⁷ was at midnight of the night of the thirteenth passing into the fourteenth [of Nisan], and thus said Moses to Israel: The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Tomorrow [at the hour] like⁸ the midnight of to-night, I will go out into the midst of Egypt.

A prayer of David . . . Keep my soul, for I am pious.⁹ Levi and R. Isaac:¹⁰ The one says, Thus spoke David before the Holy One, blessed be He; Master of the world, am I not pious? All the kings of the East and the West sleep to the third hour [of the day], but I, at midnight I rise to give thanks unto Thee.¹¹ The other one says: Thus spoke David before the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the world, am I not pious? All the kings of the East and the West sit with all their pomp among their company, whereas my hands are soiled with the blood [of menstruation], with the foetus and the placenta, in order to declare a woman clean for her husband.¹² And what is more, in all that I do I consult my teacher, Mephibosheth, and I say to him: My teacher Mephibosheth, is my decision right? Did I correctly convict, correctly acquit, correctly declare clean, correctly declare unclean? And I am not ashamed [to ask]. R. Joshua, the son of R. Iddi, says Which verse [may be cited in support]? And I recite Thy testimonies before kings and am not ashamed.¹³ A Tanna taught: His name was not Mephibosheth. And why then was he called Mephibosheth? Because he humiliated¹⁴ David in the Halachah. Therefore was David worthy of the privilege that Kileab¹⁵ should issue from him. R. Johanan said: His name was not Kileab but Daniel. Why then was he called Kileab? Because he humiliated [maklim] Mephibosheth [ab]¹⁶ in the Halachah. And concerning him Solomon said in his wisdom: My son, if thy heart be wise, my heart will be glad, even mine.¹⁷ And he said further: My son, be wise, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him that taunteth me.¹⁸

But how could David call himself pious? It is not written: I am not sure [lule] to see the good reward of the Lord in the land of the living;¹⁹ and a Tanna taught in the name of R. Jose: Why are there dots upon the word ‘lule’?²⁰ David spoke before the Holy One, blessed be He: ‘Master of the world, I am sure that you will pay a good reward to the righteous in the world to come, but I do not know whether I shall have a share in it’?²¹ [He was afraid that] some sin might cause [his exclusion].²² This conforms to the following saying of R. Jacob b. Iddi. For R. Jacob b. Iddi pointed to a contradiction. One verse reads: And behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest,²³ and the other verse reads: Then Jacob was greatly afraid!²⁴ [The answer is that] he thought that some sin might cause [God's promise not to be fulfilled]. Similarly it has been taught: Till Thy people pass over, O Lord, till the people pass over that Thou hast gotten.²⁵ ‘Till Thy people pass over, O Lord’: this is the first entry [into the Land]. ‘Till the people pass over that Thou hast gotten’: this is the second entry. Hence the Sages say: The intention was to perform a miracle for Israel²⁶ in the days of Ezra, even as it was performed for them in the days of Joshua bin Nun,²⁷ but sin caused [the miracle to be withheld].²⁸

THE SAGES SAY: UNTIL MIDNIGHT. Whose view did the Sages adopt?²⁹ If it is R. Eliezer's view, then let them express themselves in the same way as R. Eliezer?

(1) He was the High Priest of David.

- (2) II Sam. XX, 23.
- (3) The Sanhedrin (Rashi). The Tosafists, however, refer this to the Urim and Tummim.
- (4) May be cited in support of the story of David's harp.
- (5) Ps. LVII 9.
- (6) Here the Gemara resumes the discussion of the question raised above as to how it is possible that David knew something which Moses did not know.
- (7) The incident of Ex. XI, 4.
- (8) The particle ka being rendered 'like' and not 'about'.
- (9) Ps. LXXXVI, 1-2.
- (10) Offer different homiletical interpretations.
- (11) Ibid. CXIX, 62.
- (12) The restrictions of Lev. XII, 2ff do not apply to all cases of abortion nor is all discharge treated as menstrual, and David is represented as occupying himself with deciding such questions instead of with feasting. MS.M. omits 'blood'.
- (13) Ps. CXIX, 46.
- (14) The homiletical interpretation of the name is, Out of my mouth humiliation.
- (15) Cf. II Sam. III, 3.
- (16) Lit., 'father', a teacher.
- (17) Prov. XXIII, 15.
- (18) Ibid. XXVII, II.
- (19) Ps. XXVII, 13.
- (20) The dots are interpreted as meaning he was not quite sure.
- (21) Hence you see that he was not so sure of his piety.
- (22) This is the reply to the question. David was quite sure of his general pious character, but he feared that his sins might exclude him from the reward etc.
- (23) Gen. XXVIII, 15.
- (24) Ibid. XXXII, 8. The contradiction lies in the fact that Jacob was afraid in spite of having God's promise.
- (25) Ex. XV, 16.
- (26) Lit. 'the Israelites were worthy to have a miracle performed for them'.
- (27) When they entered victoriously.
- (28) And they entered only as subjects of Cyrus.
- (29) According to the Gemara, R. Eliezer and R. Gamaliel differ in the interpretation of the Bible words, 'And when thou liest down'. R. Eliezer explains them to mean, when you go to bed; hence he says that the time expires at the end of the first watch. R. Gamaliel understands them to mean, when you sleep; hence he fixes the whole night as the time of the recital.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 4b

If it is R. Gamaliel's view, let them express themselves in the same way as R. Gamaliel? — In reality it is R. Gamaliel's view that they adopted, and their reason for saying, UNTIL MIDNIGHT is to keep a man far from transgression. For so it has been taught: The Sages made a fence for their words so that a man, on returning home from the field in the evening, should not say: I shall go home, eat a little, drink a little, sleep a little, and then I shall recite the Shema' and the Tefillah, and meanwhile, sleep may overpower him, and as a result he will sleep the whole night. Rather should a man, when returning home from the field in the evening, go to the synagogue. If he is used to read the Bible, let him read the Bible, and if he is used to repeat the Mishnah, let him repeat the Mishnah, and then let him recite the Shema' and say the Tefillah, [go home] and eat his meal and say the Grace. And whosoever transgresses the words of the Sages deserves to die. Why this difference that, in other cases, they do not say 'he deserves to die', and here they do say 'he deserves to die'? — If you wish, I can say because here there is danger of sleep overpowering him. Or, if you wish, I can say because they want to exclude the opinion of those who say that the evening prayer is only voluntary.¹ Therefore they teach us that it is obligatory.

The Master said:² 'Let him recite Shema' and say the Tefillah'. This accords with the view of R. Johanan.³ For R. Johanan says: Who inherits the world to come? The one who follows the Ge'ullah⁴ immediately with the evening Tefillah. R. Joshua b. Levi says: The Tefilloth were arranged to be said in the middle.⁵ What is the ground of their difference? — If you like, I can say it is [the interpretation of] a verse, and if you like, I can say that they reason differently. For R. Johanan argues: Though the complete deliverance from Egypt took place in the morning time only,⁶ there was also some kind of deliverance in the evening;⁷ whereas R. Joshua b. Levi argues that since the real deliverance happened in the morning [that of the evening] was no proper deliverance.⁸ 'Or if you like, I can say it is [the interpretation of] a verse'. And both interpret one and the same verse, [viz.,] When thou liest down and when thou risest up.⁹ R. Johanan argues: There is here an analogy between lying down and rising. Just as [at the time of] rising, recital of Shema' precedes Tefillah, so also [at the time of] lying down, recital of Shema' precedes Tefillah. R. Joshua b. Levi argues [differently]: There is here an analogy between lying down and rising. Just as [at the time of] rising, the recital of Shema' is next to [rising from] bed,¹⁰ so also [at the time of] lying down, recital of Shema' must be next to [getting into] bed.¹¹

Mar b. Rabina raised an objection. In the evening, two benedictions precede and two benedictions follow the Shema'.¹² Now, if you say he has to join Ge'ullah with Tefillah, behold he does not do so, for he has to say [in between], 'Let us rest'?¹³ — I reply: Since the Rabbis ordained the benediction, 'Let us rest', it is as if it were a long Ge'ullah. For, if you do not admit that, how can he join in the morning, seeing that R. Johanan says: In the beginning [of the Tefillah] one has to say: O Lord, open Thou my lips [etc.],¹⁴ and at the end one has to say: Let the words of my mouth be acceptable?¹⁵ [The only explanation] there [is that] since the Rabbis ordained that O Lord, open Thou my lips should be said, it is like a long Tefillah.¹⁶ Here, too, since the Rabbis ordained that 'Let us rest' should be said, it is like a long Ge'ullah.

R. Eleazar b. Abina says: Whoever recites [the psalm] Praise of David¹⁷ three times daily, is sure to inherit¹⁸ the world to come. What is the reason? Shall I say it is because it has an alphabetical arrangement? Then let him recite, Happy are they that are upright in the way,¹⁹ which has an eightfold alphabetical arrangement. Again, is it because it contains [the verse], Thou openest Thy hand [and satisfiest every living thing with favour]?²⁰ Then let him recite the great Hallel,²¹ where it is written: Who giveth food to all flesh!²² — Rather, [the reason is] because it contains both.²³ R. Johanan says: Why is there no nun in Ashre?²⁴ Because the fall of Israel's enemies²⁵ begins with it. For it is written: Fallen is²⁶ the virgin of Israel, she shall no more rise.²⁷ (In the West²⁸ this verse is thus interpreted: She is fallen, but she shall no more fall. Rise, O virgin of Israel). R. Nahman b. Isaac says: Even so, David refers to it by inspiration²⁹ and promises them an uplifting. For it is written: The Lord upholdeth all that fall.³⁰

R. Eleazar b. Abina said furthermore: Greater is [the achievement] ascribed to Michael than that ascribed to Gabriel. For of Michael it is written: Then flew unto me one of the Seraphim,³¹ whereas of Gabriel it is written: The man Gabriel whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly in a flight etc.³² How do you know that this [word] 'one' [of the Seraphim] means Michael? — R. Johanan says: By an analogy from [the words] 'one', 'one'. Here it is written: Then flew unto me one of the Seraphim; and in another place it is written: But, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me.³³ A Tanna taught: Michael [reaches his goal] in one [flight], Gabriel in two, Elijah in four, and the Angel of Death in eight. In the time of plague, however, [the Angel of Death, too, reaches his goal] in one.

R. Joshua b. Levi says: Though a man has recited the Shema' in the synagogue, it is a religious act to recite it again upon his bed. R. Assi says: Which verse [may be cited in support]? Tremble and sin not; commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still, Selah.³⁴ R. Nahman, however, says:

- (1) V. infra 27b.
 - (2) In the Baraitha just quoted.
 - (3) That in the evening, too, the Shema' has to precede the Tefillah.
 - (4) The benediction for the deliverance from Egypt (v. P. B. p. 99). It follows the Shema' and precedes the Tefillah.
 - (5) Between the two Shema' recitals. In the morning the Tefillah follows, and in the evening it precedes the Shema'.
 - (6) As it says, On the morrow of the Passover the children of Israel went forth (Num. XXXIII, 3).
 - (7) Hence even in the evening Ge'ullah must be joined closely to Tefillah.
 - (8) Hence in the evening the Ge'ullah must not be joined closely to Tefillah.
 - (9) Deut. VI, 7.
 - (10) I.e., it is the first prayer said on rising from the bed.
 - (11) I.e., it is the last prayer said before going to bed.
 - (12) V. infra 11a.
 - (13) This is the second benediction, to be said in the evening between Ge'ullah and Tefillah, v. P.B. p. 99. The prayer, 'Blessed be the Lord for evermore' that follows the second benediction is a later addition.
 - (14) Ps. LI, 17. This verse said in introduction to the Tefillah ought to be considered an interruption.
 - (15) Ps. XIX, 15.
 - (16) I.e., part of the Tefillah.
 - (17) I.e., Ps. CXLV.
 - (18) Lit., 'that he is a son of'.
 - (19) Ps. CXIX.
 - (20) Ibid. CXLV, 16.
 - (21) I.e., Ibid. CXXXVI. On Hallel, v. Glos.
 - (22) Ibid. v. 25.
 - (23) The alphabetical arrangement and the sixteenth verse, dealing with God's merciful provision for all living things.
 - (24) This is Psalm CXLV, which is arranged alphabetically, save that the verse beginning with the letter nun (N) is missing.

(25) Euphemistic for Israel.

(26) Heb. vkpb

(27) Amos V, 2.

(28) Palestine. V. supra p. 3, n. 4.

(29) Lit., 'the Holy Spirit'. The meaning is, David knew by inspiration that Amos was going to prophesy the downfall of Israel, and he refers to that verse and prophesies their being raised up again, though their downfall is not mentioned by David.

(30) Ps. CXLV, 14.

(31) Isa. VI, 6.

(32) Dan. IX, 21. The meaning is: Michael covered the distance in one flight, without any stop, whereas Gabriel had to make two flights, resting in between. This is inferred from the fact that the word fly occurs twice.

(33) Ibid. X, 13.

(34) Ps. IV, 5.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 5a

If he is a scholar, then it is not necessary. Abaye says: Even a scholar should recite one verse of supplication, as for instance: Into Thy hand I commit my spirit. Thou hast redeemed me, O Lord, Thou God of truth.¹

R. Levi b. Hama says in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: A man should always incite the good impulse [in his soul]² to fight against the evil impulse. For it is written: Tremble and sin not.³ If he subdues it, well and good. If not, let him study the Torah. For it is written: 'Commune with your own heart'.⁴ If he subdues it, well and good. If not, let him recite the Shema'. For it is written: 'Upon your bed'. If he subdues it, well and good. If not, let him remind himself of the day of death. For it is written: 'And be still, Selah'.

R. Levi b. Hama says further in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: What is the meaning of the verse: And I will give thee the tables of stone, and the law and the commandment, which I have written that thou mayest teach them?⁵ 'Tables of stone': these are the ten commandments; 'the law': this is the Pentateuch; 'the commandment': this is the Mishnah; 'which I have written': these are the Prophets and the Hagiographa; 'that thou mayest teach them': this is the Gemara.⁶ It teaches [us] that all these things were given to Moses on Sinai. R. Isaac says: If one recites the Shema' upon his bed, it is as though he held a two-edged sword in his hand.⁷ For it is said: Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand.⁸ How does it indicate this? — Mar Zutra, (some say, R. Ashi) says: [The lesson is] from the preceding verse. For it is written: Let the saints exult in glory, let them sing for joy upon their beds,⁹ and then it is written: Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand. R. Isaac says further: If] one recites the Shema' upon his bed, the demons keep away from him. For it is said: And the sons of reshef¹⁰ fly ['uf] upward.¹¹ The word 'uf refers only to the Torah, as it is written: Wilt thou cause thine eyes to close [hata'if]¹² upon it? It is gone.¹³ And 'reshef' refers only to the demons, as it is said: The wasting of hunger, and the devouring of the reshef [fiery bolt] and bitter destruction.¹⁴ R. Simeon b. Lakish says: If one studies the Torah, painful sufferings are kept away from him. For it is said: And the sons of reshef fly upward. The word 'uf refers only to the Torah, as it is written: 'Wilt thou cause thine eyes to close upon it? It is gone'.

And 'reshef' refers only to painful sufferings, as it is said: 'The wasting of hunger, and the devouring of the reshef [fiery bolt]. R. Johanan said to him: This¹⁵ is known even to school children.¹⁶ For it is said: And He said: If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and wilt do that which is right in His eyes, and wilt give ear to His commandments, and keep all His statutes, I will put none of the diseases upon thee which I have put upon the Egyptians; for I am the Lord that healeth thee.¹⁷ Rather [should you say]: If one has the opportunity to study the Torah and does not study it, the Holy One, blessed be He, visits him with ugly and painful sufferings which stir him up. For it is said: I was dumb with silence, I kept silence from the good thing, and my pain was stirred up.¹⁸ 'The good thing' refers only to the Torah, as it is said: For I give you good doctrine; forsake ye not My teaching.¹⁹

R. Zera (some say, R. Hanina b. Papa) says: Come and see how the way of human beings differs from the way of the Holy One, blessed be He. It is the way of human beings that when a man sells²⁰ a valuable object to his fellow, the seller grieves and the buyer rejoices. The Holy One, blessed be He, however, is different. He gave the Torah to Israel and rejoiced. For it is said: For I give you good doctrine; forsake ye not My teaching.

Raba (some say, R. Hisda) says: If a man sees that painful sufferings visit him, let him examine his conduct. For it is said: Let us search and try our ways, and return unto the Lord.²¹ If he examines and finds nothing [objectionable], let him attribute it to the neglect of the study of the Torah. For it is said: Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest out of Thy law.²² If he did attribute it [thus], and still did not find [this to be the cause], let him be sure that these are chastenings of love. For it is said: For whom the Lord loveth He correcteth.²³

Raba, in the name of R. Sahorah, in the name of R. Huna, says: If the Holy One, blessed be He, is pleased with a man, he crushes him with painful sufferings. For it is said: And the Lord was pleased with [him, hence] he crushed him by disease.²⁴ Now, you might think that this is so even if he did not accept them with love. Therefore it is said: To see if his soul would offer itself in restitution.²⁵ Even as the trespass-offering must be brought by consent, so also the sufferings must be endured with consent. And if he did accept them, what is his reward? He will see his seed, prolong his days.²⁶ And more than that, his knowledge [of the Torah] will endure with him. For it is said: The purpose of the Lord will prosper in his hand.²⁷

R. Jacob b. Idi and R. Aha b. Hanina differ with regard to the following: The one says: Chastenings of love are such as do not involve the intermission of study of the Torah. For it is said: Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest out of Thy law.²⁸ And the other one says: Chastenings of love are such as do not involve the intermission of prayer. For it is said: Blessed be God, Who hath not turned away my prayer, nor His mercy from me.²⁹ R. Abba the son of R. Hiyya b. Abba said to them: Thus said R. Hiyya b. Abba in the name of R. Johanan: Both of them are chastenings of love. For it is said: For whom the Lord loveth He correcteth.³⁰ Why then does it say: 'And teachest him out of Thy law'? Do not read telammedenu, [Thou teachest him] but telammedenu, [Thou teachest us]. Thou teachest us this thing out of Thy law as a conclusion a fortiori from the law concerning tooth and eye.³¹ Tooth and eye are only one limb of the man, and still [if they are hurt], the slave obtains thereby his freedom. How much more so with painful sufferings which torment the whole body of a man! And this agrees with a saying of

R. Simeon b. Lakish. For R. Simeon b. Lakish said: The word 'covenant' is mentioned in connection with salt, and the word 'covenant' is mentioned in connection with sufferings: the word 'covenant' is mentioned in connection with salt, as it is written: Neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking.³² And the word 'covenant' is mentioned in connection with sufferings, as it is written: These are the words of the covenant.³³ Even as in the covenant mentioned in connection with salt, the salt lends a sweet taste to the meat, so also in the covenant mentioned in connection with sufferings, the sufferings wash away all the sins of a man.

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says: The Holy One, blessed be He, gave Israel three precious gifts, and all of them were given only through sufferings. These are: The Torah, the Land of Israel and the world to come. Whence do we know this of the Torah? — Because it is said: Happy is the man whom Thou chastenest, o Lord, and teachest him out of Thy law.³⁴ Whence of the Land of Israel? — Because it is written: As a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee,³⁵ and after that it is written: For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land.³⁶ Whence of the world to come? — Because it is written: For the commandment is a lamp, and the teaching is light, and reproofs of sufferings are the way of life.³⁷

(2) In the Talmud the good impulses and evil impulses of a man are personified as two genii or spirits dwelling in his soul, the one prompting him to do good things and the other one to do wicked things. Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 5b and [nonetheless] buries his children,¹ all his sins are forgiven him. R. Johanan said to him: I grant you Torah and acts of charity, for it is written: By mercy and truth iniquity is expiated.² ‘Mercy’ is acts of charity, for it is said: He that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, prosperity and honour.³ ‘Truth’ is Torah, for it is said: Buy the truth and sell it not.⁴ But how do you know [what you say about] the one who buries his children? — A certain Elder [thereupon] recited to him in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: It is concluded from the analogy in the use of the word ‘iniquity’. Here it is written: By mercy and truth iniquity is expiated. And elsewhere it is written: And who recompenseth the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children.⁵

R. Johanan says: Leprosy and [the lack of] children are not chastisements of love. But is leprosy not a chastisement of love? Is it not taught: If a man has one of these four symptoms of leprosy,⁶ it is nothing else but an altar of atonement? — They are an altar of atonement, but they are not chastisements of love. If you like, I can say: This [teaching of the Baraitha] is ours [in Babylonia], and that [saying of R. Johanan] is theirs [in Palestine].⁷ If you like, I can say: This [teaching of the Baraitha] refers to hidden [leprosy], that [saying of R. Johanan] refers to a case of visible [leprosy]. But is [the lack of] children not a chastisement of love? How is this to be understood? Shall I say that he had children and they died? Did not R. Johanan himself say: This is the bone of my tenth son?⁸ — Rather [say then] that the former saying refers to one who never had children, the latter to one who had children and lost them.

R. Hiyya b. Abba fell ill and R. Johanan went in to visit him. He said to him: Are your sufferings welcome to you? He replied: Neither they nor their reward.⁹ He said to him: Give me your hand. He gave him his hand and he¹⁰ raised him.

R. Johanan once fell ill and R. Hanina went in to visit him. He said to him: Are your sufferings welcome to you? He replied: Neither they nor their reward. He said to him: Give me your hand. He gave him his hand and he raised him. Why could not R. Johanan raise himself?¹¹ — They replied: The prisoner cannot free himself from jail.¹²

R. Eleazar fell ill and R. Johanan went in to visit him. He noticed that he was lying in a dark room,¹³ and he bared his arm and light radiated from it.¹⁴ Thereupon he noticed that R. Eleazar was weeping, and he said to him: Why do you weep? Is it because you did not study enough Torah? Surely we learnt: The one who sacrifices much and the one who sacrifices little have the same merit, provided that the heart is directed to heaven.¹⁵ Is it perhaps lack of sustenance? Not everybody has the privilege to enjoy two tables.¹⁶ Is it perhaps because of [the lack of] children? This is the bone of my tenth son! — He replied to him: I am weeping on account of this beauty¹⁷ that is going to rot in the earth. He said to him: On that account you surely have a reason to weep; and they both wept. In the meanwhile he said to him: Are your sufferings welcome to you? — He replied: Neither they nor their reward. He said to him: Give me your hand, and he gave him his hand and he raised him.

Once four hundred jars of wine belonging to R. Huna turned sour. Rab Judah, the brother of R. Sala the Pious, and the other scholars (some say: R. Adda b. Ahaba and the other scholars) went in to visit him and said to him: The master ought to examine his actions.¹⁸ He said to them: Am I suspect in your eyes? They replied: Is the Holy One, blessed be He, suspect of punishing without justice? — He said to them: If somebody has heard of anything against me, let him speak out. They replied: We have heard that the master does not give his tenant his [lawful share in the] vine twigs. He replied: Does he leave me any? He steals them all! They said to him: That is exactly what the proverb says:¹⁹ If you steal from a thief you also have a taste of it!²⁰ He said to them: I pledge myself to give it to him [in the future]. Some report that thereupon the vinegar became wine again; others that the vinegar went up so high that it was sold for the same price as wine.

It has been taught: Abba Benjamin says, All my life I took great pains about two things: that my prayer should be before my bed and that my bed should be placed north and south. 'That my prayer should be before my bed'. What is the meaning of 'before my bed'? Is it perhaps literally in front of my bed? Has not Rab Judah said in the name of Rab (some say, in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi): How do you know that when one prays there should be nothing interposing between him and the wall? Because it says: Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall and prayed?²¹ — Do not read 'before my bed', but 'near²² my bed'. 'And that my bed should be placed north and south'. For R. Hama b. R. Hanina said in the name of R. Isaac: Whosoever places his bed north and south will have male children, as it says: And whose belly Thou fillest with Thy treasure,²³ who have sons in plenty.²⁴ R. Nahman b. Isaac says: His wife also will not miscarry. Here it is written: And whose belly Thou fillest with Thy treasure, and elsewhere it is written: And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold there were twins in her womb.²⁵

It has been taught: Abba Benjamin says, When two people enter [a Synagogue] to pray, and one of them finishes his prayer first and does not wait for the other but leaves,²⁶ his prayer is torn up before his face.²⁷ For it is written: Thou that tearest thyself in thine anger, shall the earth be forsaken for thee?²⁸ And more than that, he causes the Divine Presence to remove itself from Israel. For it says Or shall the rock be removed out of its place?²⁹ And 'rock' is nothing else than the Holy One, blessed be He, as it says: Of the Rock that begot thee thou wast unmindful.³⁰ And if he does wait, what is his reward? —

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 6a

R. Jose b. R. Hanina says: He is rewarded with the blessings enumerated in the following verse: Oh that thou wouldst hearken to My commandments! Then would thy peace be as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea; Thy seed also would be as the sand, and the offspring of thy body like the grains thereof etc.¹

It has been taught: Abba Benjamin says, If the eye had the power to see them, no creature could endure the demons. Abaye says: They are more numerous than we are and they surround us like the ridge round a field. R. Huna says: Every one among us has a thousand on his left hand and ten thousand on his right hand.² Raba says: The crushing in the Kallah³ lectures comes from them.⁴ Fatigue in the knees comes from them. The wearing out of the clothes of the scholars is due to their rubbing against them. The bruising of the feet comes from them. If one wants to discover them,⁵ let him take sifted ashes and sprinkle around his bed, and in the morning he will see something like the footprints of a cock. If one wishes to see them, let him take the after-birth of a black she-cat, the offspring of a black she-cat, the first-born of a first-born, let him roast it in fire and grind it to powder, and then let him put some into his eye, and he will see them. Let him also pour it into an iron tube and seal it with an iron signet that they⁶ should not steal it from him. Let him also close his mouth, lest he come to harm. R. Bibi b. Abaye did so,⁷ saw them and came to harm. The scholars, however, prayed for him and he recovered.

It has been taught: Abba Benjamin says: A man's prayer is heard [by God] only in the Synagogue. For it is said: To hearken unto the song and to the prayer.⁸ The prayer is to be recited where there is song.⁹ Rabin b. R. Adda says in the name of R. Isaac: How do you know that the Holy One, blessed be He, is to be found in the Synagogue? For it is said: God standeth in the congregation of God.¹⁰ And how do you know that if ten people pray together the Divine presence is with them? For it is said: 'God standeth in the congregation of God'.¹¹ And how do you know that if three are sitting as a court of judges the Divine Presence is with them? For it is said: In the midst of the judges He judgeth.¹² And how do you know that if two are sitting and studying the Torah together the Divine Presence is with them? For it is said: Then they that feared the Lord spoke one with another;¹³ and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before Him, for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon His name.¹⁴ (What does it mean: 'And that thought upon His name'? — R. Ashi¹⁵ says: If a man thought to fulfill a commandment and he did not do it, because he was prevented by force or accident, then the Scripture credits it to him as if he had performed it.) And how do you know that even if one man sits and studies the Torah the Divine Presence is with him? For it is said: In every place where I cause My name to be mentioned I will come unto thee and bless thee.¹⁶ Now, since [the Divine presence is] even with one man, why is it necessary to mention two?¹⁷ — The words of two are written down in the book of remembrance, the words of one are not written down in the book of remembrance. Since this is the case with two, why mention three? — I might think [the dispensing of] justice is only for making peace, and the Divine Presence does not come [to participate]. Therefore he teaches us that justice also is Torah. Since it is the case with three, why mention ten? — To [a gathering of] ten the Divine Presence comes first, to three, it comes only after they sit down.

R. Abin¹⁸ son of R. Ada in the name of R. Isaac says [further]: How do you know that the Holy One, blessed be He, puts on tefillin?¹⁹ For it is said: The Lord hath sworn by His right hand, and by the arm of His strength.²⁰ 'By His right hand': this is the Torah; for it is said: At His right hand was a fiery law unto them.²¹ 'And by the arm of his strength': this is the tefillin; as it is said: The Lord will give strength unto His people.²² And how do you know that the tefillin are a strength to Israel? For it is written: And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the Lord is called upon thee, and they shall be afraid of thee,²³ and it has been taught: R. Eliezer the Great says: This refers to the tefillin of the head.²⁴

R. Nahman b. Isaac said to R. Hiyya b. Abin: What is written in the tefillin of the Lord of the Universe? — He replied to him: And who is like Thy people Israel, a nation one in the earth.²⁵ Does, then, the Holy One, blessed be He, sing the praises of Israel? — Yes, for it is written: Thou hast avouched the Lord this day . . . and the Lord hath avouched thee this day.²⁶ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel: You have made me a unique entity²⁷ in the world, and I shall make you a unique entity in the world. ‘You have made me a unique entity in the world’, as it is said: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one.²⁸ ‘And I shall make you a unique entity in the world’, as it is said: And who is like Thy people Israel, a nation one in the earth.²⁹ R. Aha b. Raba said to R. Ashi: This accounts for one case, what about the other cases?³⁰ — He replied to him: [They contain the following verses]: For what great nation is there, etc.; And what great nation is there, etc.;³¹ Happy art thou, O Israel, etc.;³² Or hath God assayed, etc.;³³ and To make thee high above all nations.³⁴ If so, there would be too many cases? — Hence [you must say]: For what great nation is there, and And what great nation is there, which are similar, are in one case; Happy art thou, O Israel, and Who is like Thy people, in one case; Or hath God assayed, in one case; and To make thee high, in one case.

And all these verses are written on [the tefillin of] His arm.

Rabin son of R. Adda in the name of R. Isaac says [further]: If a man is accustomed to attend Synagogue [daily] and one day does not go, the Holy One, blessed be He, makes inquiry about him. For it is said: Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of His servant, and now walketh in darkness and hath no light?¹ [And still] if he absented himself on account of some religious purpose, he shall have light. But if he absented himself on account of a worldly purpose, he shall have no light. Let him trust in the name of the Lord.² Why?³ Because he ought to have trusted in the name of the Lord and he did not trust.

R. Johanan says: Whenever the Holy One, blessed be He, comes into a Synagogue and does not find ten persons there,⁴ He becomes angry at once.⁵ For it is said: Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? When I called, was there no answer?⁶

R. Helbo, in the name of R. Huna, says: Whosoever has a fixed place for his prayer has the God of Abraham as his helper. And when he dies, people will say of him: Where is the pious man,⁷ where is the humble man,⁸ one of the disciples of our father Abraham! — How do we know that our father Abraham had a fixed place [for his prayer]? For it is written: And Abraham got up early in the morning to the place where he had stood.⁹ And 'standing' means nothing else but prayer. For it is said: Then stood up Phinehas and prayed.¹⁰

R. Helbo, in the name of R. Huna, says [further]: When a man leaves the Synagogue, he should not take large steps. Abaye says: This is only when one goes from the Synagogue, but when one goes to the Synagogue, it is a pious deed to run. For it is said: Let us run to know the Lord.¹¹ R. Zera says: At first when I saw the scholars running to the lecture on a Sabbath day, I thought that they were desecrating the Sabbath.¹² But since I have heard the saying of R. Tanhum in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: A man should always, even on a Sabbath, run to listen to the word of Halachah, as it is said: They shall walk after the Lord, who shall roar like a lion,¹³ I also run. R. Zera says: The merit of attending a lecture lies in the running. Abaye says: The merit of attending the Kallah sessions¹⁴ lies in the crush. Raba says: The merit of repeating a tradition lies in [improving] the understanding of it. R. Papa says: The merit of attending a house of mourning lies in the silence observed. Mar Zutra says: The merit of a fast day lies in the charity dispensed. R. Shesheth says: The merit of a funeral oration lies in raising the voice.¹⁵ R. Ashi says: The merit of attending a wedding lies in the words [of congratulation addressed to the bride and bridegroom].¹⁶

R. Huna says: Whosoever prays at the rear of a Synagogue is called wicked. For it is said: The wicked walk round about.¹⁷ Abaye says: This only applies where he does not turn his face towards the Synagogue, but if he does turn his face towards the Synagogue there is no objection to it. There was once a man who prayed at the rear of a Synagogue and did not turn his face towards the Synagogue. Elijah passed by and appeared to him in the guise of an Arabian¹⁸ merchant. He said to him: Are you standing with your back to your Master?¹⁹ and drew his sword and slew him.

One of the scholars said to R. Bibi b. Abaye (some say: R. Bibi said to R. Nahman b. Isaac): What is the meaning of: When vileness is exalted among the sons of men?²⁰ He replied to him: These are the things of supreme importance²¹ which nevertheless people neglect.²² R. Johanan and R. Eliezer both interpret: As soon as a man needs the support of his fellow-creatures his face changes colour like the kerum, as it is said: 'As the kerum is to be reviled among the sons of men'. What is the 'kerum'? When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: There is a bird in the coast towns²³ whose name is kerum, and as soon as the sun shines upon it it changes into several colours.²⁴ R. Ammi and R. Assi both say: [When a man needs the support of his fellow-beings] it is as if he were punished with two [opposite] punishments, with fire and water. For it is said: When Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads, we went through fire and through water.²⁵

R. Helbo further said in the name of R. Huna: A man should always take special care about the afternoon-prayer. For even Elijah was favourably heard only while offering his afternoon-prayer. For it is said: And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening offering, that Elijah the prophet came near and said . . . Hear me, O Lord, hear me.²⁶ 'Hear me', that the fire may descend from heaven, and 'hear me', that they may not say it is the work of sorcery. R. Johanan says: [Special care should be taken] also about the evening-prayer. For it is said: Let my prayer be set forth as incense before Thee, the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.²⁷ R. Nahman b. Isaac says: [Special care should be taken] also about the morning-prayer. For it is said: O Lord, in the morning shalt Thou hear my voice; in the morning will I order my prayer unto Thee, and will look forward.²⁸

R. Helbo further said in the name of R. Huna: Whosoever partakes of the wedding meal of a bridegroom and does not felicitate him does violence to 'the five voices' mentioned in the verse: The voice of joy and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the voice of them that say, Give thanks to the Lord of Hosts.²⁹ And if he does gladden him what is his reward? — R. Joshua b. Levi said: He is privileged to acquire [the knowledge of] the Torah which was given with five voices. For it is said: And it came to pass on the third day, when it was morning, that there were thunders³⁰ and lightnings and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of a horn . . . and when the voice of the horn waxed louder . . . Moses spoke and God answered him by a voice.³¹ (This is not so!³² For it is written: And all the people perceived the thunders?³³ — These voices were before the revelation of the Torah.) R. Abbahu says: It is as if he³⁴ had sacrificed a thanksgiving offering. For it is said: Even of them that bring offerings of thanksgiving into the house of the Lord.³⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac says: It is as if he had restored one of the ruins of Jerusalem. For it is said: For I will cause the captivity of the land to return as at the first, saith the Lord.³⁶

R. Helbo further said in the name of R. Huna: If one is filled with the fear of God his words are listened to. For it is said: The end of the matter, all having been heard: fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole man.³⁷ What means, 'For this is the whole man'? — R. Eleazar says: The Holy One, blessed be He, says: The whole world was created for his sake only. R. Abba b. Kahana says: He is equal in value to the whole world. R. Simeon b. 'Azzai says (some say, R. Simon b. Zoma says): The whole world was created as a satellite for him.

R. Helbo further said in the name of R. Huna: If one knows that his friend is used to greet him, let him greet him first.³⁸ For it is said: Seek peace and pursue it.³⁹ And if his friend greets him and he does not return the greeting he is called a robber. For it is said: It is ye that have eaten up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses.⁴⁰

The mechanical repetition of a tradition has no value if you do not try to understand it better. Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 7a

R. Johanan says in the name of R. Jose: How do we know that the Holy One, blessed be He, says prayers? Because it says: Even them will I bring to My holy mountain and make them joyful in My house of prayer.¹ It is not said, 'their prayer', but 'My prayer'; hence [you learn] that the Holy One, blessed be He, says prayers. What does He pray? — R. Zutra b. Tobi said in the name of Rab: 'May it be My will that My mercy may suppress My anger, and that My mercy may prevail over My [other] attributes, so that I may deal with My children in the attribute of mercy and, on their behalf, stop short of the limit of strict justice'.² It was taught: R. Ishmael b. Elisha says: I once entered into the innermost part [of the Sanctuary] to offer incense and saw Akathriel Jah,³ the Lord of Hosts, seated upon a high and exalted throne. He said to me: Ishmael, My son, bless Me! I replied: May it be Thy will that Thy mercy may suppress Thy anger and Thy mercy may prevail over Thy other attributes, so that Thou mayest deal with Thy children according to the attribute of mercy and mayest, on their behalf, stop short of the limit of strict justice! And He nodded to me with His head. Here we learn [incidentally] that the blessing of an ordinary man must not be considered lightly in your eyes.

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Jose: How do you know that we must not try to placate a man in the time of his anger? For it is written: My face will go and I will give thee rest.⁴ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses: Wait till My countenance of wrath shall have passed away and then I shall give thee rest. But is anger then a mood of the Holy One, blessed be He? — Yes. For it has been taught:⁵ A God that hath indignation every day.⁶ And how long does this indignation last? One moment. And how long is one moment? One fifty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighty-eighth part of an hour. And no creature has ever been able to fix precisely this moment except the wicked Balaam, of whom it is written: He knoweth the knowledge of the Most High.⁷ Now, he did not even know the mind of his animal; how then could he know the mind of the Most High? The meaning is, therefore, only that he knew how to fix precisely this moment in which the Holy One, blessed be He, is angry. And this is just what the prophet said to Israel: O my people, remember now what Balak king of Moab devised, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him . . . that ye may know the righteous acts of the Lord.⁸ What means ‘That ye may know the righteous acts of the Lord’? — R. Eleazar says: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel: See now, how many righteous acts I performed for you in not being angry in the days of the wicked Balaam. For had I been angry, not one remnant would have been left of the enemies of Israel.⁹ And this too is the meaning of what Balaam said to Balak: How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? And how shall I execrate, whom the Lord hath not execrated?¹⁰ This teaches us that He was not angry all these days. And how long does His anger last? One moment. And how long is one moment? R. Abin (some say R. Abina) says: As long as it takes to say Rega’.¹¹ And how do you know that He is angry one moment? For it is said: For His anger is but for a moment [rega’], His favor is for a lifetime.¹² Or if you prefer you may infer it from the following verse: Hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast.¹³ And when is He angry? — Abaye says: In [one moment of] those first three hours of the day, when the comb of the cock is white and it stands on one foot. Why, in each hour it stands thus [on one foot]?¹⁴ — In each other hour it has red streaks, but in this moment it has no red streaks at all.

In the neighbourhood of R. Joshua b. Levi there was a Sadducee¹⁵ who used to annoy him very much with [his interpretations of] texts. One day the Rabbi took a cock, placed it between the legs of his bed and watched it. He thought: When this moment arrives I shall curse him. When the moment arrived he was dozing [On waking up]¹⁶ he said: We learn from this that it is not proper to act in such a way. It is written: And His tender mercies are over all His works.¹⁷ And it is further written: Neither is it good for the righteous to punish.¹⁸ It was taught in the name of R. Meir: At the time when the sun rises and all the kings of the East and West put their crowns upon their heads and bow down to the sun, the Holy One, blessed be He, becomes at once angry.

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Jose: Better is one self-reproach in the heart of a man than many stripes, for it is said: And she shall run after her lovers . . . then shall she say,¹⁹ I shall go and return to my first husband; for then was it better with me than now.²⁰ R. Simon b. Lakish says: It is better than a hundred stripes, for it is said: A rebuke entereth deeper into a man of understanding than a hundred stripes into a fool.²¹

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Jose: Three things did Moses ask of the Holy One, blessed be He, and they were granted to him. He asked that the Divine Presence should rest upon Israel, and it was granted to him. For it is said: Is it not in that Thou goest with us [so that we are distinguished, I and Thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth].²² He asked that the Divine Presence should not rest upon the idolaters, and it was granted to him. For it is said: ‘So that we are distinguished, I and Thy people’. He asked that He should show him the ways of the Holy One, blessed be He, and it was granted to him. For it is said: Show me now Thy ways.²³ Moses said before Him: Lord of the Universe, why is it that some righteous men prosper and others are in adversity, some wicked men prosper and others are in adversity? He replied to him: Moses, the righteous man who prospers is the righteous man the son of a righteous man; the righteous man who is in adversity is a righteous man the son of a wicked man. The wicked man who prospers is a wicked man son of a righteous man; the wicked man who is in adversity is a wicked man son of a wicked man.

The Master said above: ‘The righteous man who prospers is a righteous man son of a righteous man; the righteous man who is in adversity is a righteous man son of a wicked man'. But this is not so! For, lo, one verse says: Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children,²⁴ and another verse says: Neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers.²⁵ And a contradiction was pointed out between these two verses, and the answer was given that there is no contradiction. The one verse deals with children who continue in the same course as their fathers, and the other verse with children who do not continue in the course of their fathers! — [You must] therefore [say that] the Lord said thus to Moses: A righteous man who prospers is a perfectly righteous man; the righteous man who is in adversity is not a perfectly righteous man. The wicked man who prospers is not a perfectly wicked man; the wicked man who is in adversity is a perfectly wicked man. Now this [saying of R. Johanan]²⁶ is in opposition to the saying of R. Meir. For R. Meir said: only two [requests] were granted to him, and one was not granted to him. For it is said: And I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, although he may not deserve it, And I will show mercy on whom I will show mercy,²⁷ although he may not deserve it.²⁸

And He said, Thou canst not see My face.²⁹ A Tanna taught in the name of R. Joshua b. Korhah: The Holy One, blessed be He, spoke thus to Moses: When I wanted, you did not want [to see My face]³⁰ now that you want, I do not want. — This is in opposition to [the interpretation of this verse by] R. Samuel b. Nahmani in the name of R. Jonathan. For R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: As a reward of three [pious acts]³¹ Moses was privileged to obtain three [favours]. In reward of 'And Moses hid his face', he obtained the brightness of his face.³² In reward of 'For he was afraid', he obtained the privilege that They were afraid to come nigh him.³³ In reward of 'To look upon God', he obtained The similitude of the Lord doth he behold.³⁴

And I will take away My hand, and thou shalt see My back.³⁵ R. Hama b. Bizana said in the name of R. Simon the Pious: This teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be He, showed Moses the knot of the tefillin.³⁶

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Jose: No word of blessing that issued from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be He, even if based upon a condition, was ever withdrawn by Him. How do we know this? From our teacher Moses. For it is said: Let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven; and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.³⁷ Though Moses prayed that this might be mercifully averted and it was cancelled, [the blessing] was nevertheless fulfilled towards his children. For it is said: The sons of Moses: Gershom and Eliezer . . . And the sons of Eliezer were Rehabia the chief . . . and the sons of Rehabiah were very many.³⁸ And R. Joseph learnt: They were more than sixty myriads. This is to be learnt from two occurrences of the term 'manifold'. Here it is written: were very many, and elsewhere It is written: And the children of Israel were very fruitful and increased abundantly, and became very many.³⁹

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 7b

R. Johanan said [further] in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: From the day that the Holy One, blessed be He, created the world there was no man that called the Holy One, blessed be He, Lord,¹ until Abraham came and called Him Lord. For it is said: And he said, O Lord [Adonai] God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?² Rab said: Even Daniel was heard [in his prayer] only for the sake of Abraham. For it says: Now therefore, O our God, hearken unto the prayer of Thy servant, and to his supplications, and cause Thy face to shine upon Thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake.³ He ought to have said: 'For Thy sake', but [he means]: For the sake of Abraham, who called Thee Lord.

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: How do you know that we must not try to placate a man in the time of his anger? Because it is said: My face will go and I will give thee rest.⁴

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: From the day that the Holy One, blessed be He, created His world there was no man that praised the Holy One, blessed be He, until Leah came and praised Him. For it is said: This time will I praise the Lord.⁵

Reuben. [What is the meaning of 'Reuben'?] — R. Eleazar said: Leah said: See the difference between⁷ my son and the son of my father-in-law. The son of my father-in-law voluntarily sold his birthright, for it is written: And he sold his birthright unto Jacob.⁸ And, nonetheless, behold, it is written of him: And Esau hated Jacob,⁹ and it is also written: And he said, is not he rightly named Jacob? for he hath supplanted me these two times.¹⁰ My son, however, although Joseph took his birthright from him against his will — as it is written: But, for as much as he defiled his father's couch, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph,¹¹ — was not jealous of him. For it is written: And Reuben heard it, and delivered him out of their hand.¹²

Ruth. What is the meaning of Ruth? — R. Johanan said: Because she was privileged to be the ancestress of David, who saturated¹³ the Holy One, blessed be He, with songs and hymns. How do we know that the name [of a person] has an effect [upon his life]?¹⁴ — R. Eleazar said: Scripture says: Come, behold the works of the Lord, who hath made desolations in the earth.¹⁵ Read not shammoth, ['desolations'], but shemoth, [names].

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: A bad son¹⁶ in a man's house is worse than the war of Gog and Magog. For it is said: A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son,¹⁷ and it is written after that: Lord, how many are mine adversaries become! Many are they that rise up against me.¹⁸ But in regard to the war of Gog and Magog it is written: Why are the nations in an uproar? And why do the peoples mutter in vain,¹⁹ but, it is not written: 'How many are mine adversaries become!'

'A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom his son'. 'A Psalm of David'? He ought to have said: 'A Lamentation of David'! R. Simeon b. Abishalom said: A parable: To what is this to be compared? To a man who has a bond outstanding against him; until he pays it he worries²⁰ but after he has paid it, he rejoices. So was it with David. When the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house,²¹ he began worrying. He thought: it may be a slave or a bastard who will have no pity on me. When he saw that it was Absalom, he was glad, and therefore he said: 'A Psalm'.

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world. For it is said: They that forsake the law praise the wicked, but such as keep the law contend with them.²² It has been taught to the same effect: R. Dosthai son of R. Mattun says: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world. For it is said: 'They that forsake the law praise the wicked, etc.' — Should somebody whisper to you: But is it not written: Contend not with evil-doers, neither be thou envious against them that work unrighteousness,²³ then you may tell him: Only one whose conscience smites²⁴ him says so. In fact, ‘Contend not with evil-doers’, means, to be like them; ‘neither be thou envious against them that work unrighteousness’, means, to be like them. And so it is said: Let not thy heart envy sinners, but be in the fear of the Lord all the day.²⁵ But this is not so! For R. Isaac said: If you see a wicked man upon whom fortune²⁶ is smiling, do not attack him. For it is said: His ways prosper at all times.²⁷ And more than that, he is victorious in the court of judgment; for it is said: Thy judgments are far above out of his sight.²⁸ And still more than that, he sees the discomfiture of his enemies; for it is said: As for all his adversaries, he puffeth at them.²⁹ There is no contradiction. The one [R. Isaac] speaks of his private affairs, the other one [R. Johanan] of matters of religion.³⁰ If you wish I can say: both speak of matters of religion, and still there is no contradiction. The one [R. Isaac] speaks of a wicked man upon whom fortune is smiling, the other one speaks of a wicked man upon whom fortune is not smiling. Or if you wish, I can say, both speak of a wicked man upon whom fortune is smiling, and still there is no contradiction. The one [R. Johanan] speaks of a perfectly righteous man, the other one of a man who is not perfectly righteous. For R. Huna said: What is the meaning of the verse: Wherefore lookest Thou, when they deal treacherously, and holdest Thy peace, when the wicked swalloweth up the man that is more righteous than he?³¹ Can then the wicked swallow up the righteous? Is it not written: The Lord will not leave him in his hand?³² And is it not written further: There shall no mischief befall the righteous?³³ [You must] therefore [say]: He swallows up the one who is only ‘more righteous than he’, but he cannot swallow up the perfectly righteous man. If you wish I can say: It is different when fortune is smiling upon him.

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: If a man has a fixed place for his prayer, his enemies succumb to him. For it is said: And I will appoint a place for My people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and be disquieted no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more as at the first.³⁴ R. Huna pointed to a contradiction. [Here] it is written: ‘To afflict them’, and [elsewhere]: To exterminate them?³⁵ [The answer is]: First to afflict them and then to exterminate them.

R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: The service of the Torah is greater than the study thereof.³⁶ For it is said: Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, who poured water on the hands of Elijah.³⁷ It is not said, who learned, but who poured water. This teaches that the service of the Torah is greater than the study thereof.

R. Isaac said to R. Nahman: Why does the Master not come to the Synagogue in order to pray?³⁸ — He said to him: I cannot.³⁹ He asked him: Let the Master gather ten people and pray with them [in his house]? — He answered: It is too much of a trouble for me. [He then said]: Let the Master ask the messenger of the congregation⁴⁰ to inform him of the time when the congregation prays?⁴¹ He answered: Why all this [trouble]? — He said to him: For R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai:

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 8a

What is the meaning of the verse: But as for me, let my prayer be made unto Thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time?¹ When is the time acceptable? When the congregation prays. R. Jose b. R.

Hanina says: [You learn it] from here: Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable time have I answered thee.² R. Aha son of R. Hanina says: [You learn it] from here: Behold, God despiseth not the mighty.³ And it is further written: He hath redeemed my soul in peace so that none came nigh me; for they were many with me.⁴ It has been taught also to the same effect; R. Nathan says: How do we know that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not despise the prayer of the congregation? For it is said: 'Behold, God despiseth not the mighty'. And it is further written: 'He hath redeemed my soul in peace so that none came nigh me, etc.'. The Holy One, blessed be He, says: If a man occupies himself with the study of the Torah and with works of charity and prays with the congregation, I account it to him as if he had redeemed Me and My children from among the nations of the world.

Resh Lakish said: Whosoever has a Synagogue in his town and does not go there in order to pray, is called an evil neighbour. For it is said: Thus saith the Lord, as for all Mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused My people Israel to inherit.⁵ And more than that, he brings exile upon himself and his children. For it is said: Behold, I will pluck them up from off their land, and will pluck up the house of Judah from among them.⁶

When they told R. Johanan⁷ that there were old men in Babylon, he showed astonishment and said: Why, it is written: That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, upon the land;⁸ but not outside the land [of Israel]! When they told him that they came early to the Synagogue and left it late, he said: That is what helps them. Even as R. Joshua b. Levi said to his children: Come early to the Synagogue and leave it late that you may live long. R. Aha son of R. Hanina says: Which verse [may be quoted in support of this]? Happy is the man that hearkeneth to Me, watching daily at My gates, waiting at the posts of My doors,⁹ after which it is written: For whoso findeth me findeth life.¹⁰ R. Hisda says: A man should always enter two doors into the Synagogue.¹¹ What is the meaning of 'two doors'? Say: The distance of two doors, and then pray.¹²

For this let every one that is godly pray unto Thee in the time of finding.¹³ R. Hanina says: 'In the time of finding' refers to [the finding of] a wife. For it is said: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good.¹⁴ In the West they used to ask a man who married a wife thus: Maza or Moze?¹⁵ 'Maza', for it is written: Whoso findeth [maza] a wife findeth a great good. 'Moze', for it is written: And I find [moze] more bitter than death the woman.¹⁶ R. Nathan says: 'In the time of finding' refers to the [finding of] Torah. For it is said: For whoso findeth me findeth life, etc.¹⁷ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: 'In the time of finding' refers to the [finding of] death. For it is said: The issues of death.¹⁸ Similarly it has been taught: Nine hundred and three species of death were created in this world. For it is said: The issues of death, and the numerical value of Toza'oth is so. The worst of them is the croup, and the easiest of them is the kiss.¹⁹ Croup is like a thorn in a ball of wool pulled out backwards.²⁰ Some people say: It is like [pulling] a rope through the loop-holes [of a ship].²¹ [Death by a] kiss is like drawing a hair out of milk. R. Johanan said: 'In the time of finding' refers to the [finding of a] grave. R. Hanina said: Which verse [may be quoted in support]? Who rejoice unto exultation and are glad, when they can find the grave.²² Rabbah son of R. Shila said: Hence the proverb: A man should pray for peace even to the last clod of earth [thrown upon his grave]. Mar Zutra said: 'In the time of finding', refers to the [finding of a] privy.²³ They said in the West: This [interpretation] of Mar Zutra is the best of all.

Raba said to Rafram b. Papa: Let the master please tell us some of those fine things that you said in the name of R. Hisda on matters relating to the Synagogue! — He replied: Thus said R. Hisda: What is the meaning of the verse: The Lord loveth the gates of Zion [Ziyyon] more than all the dwellings of Jacob?²⁴ The Lord loves the gates that are distinguished [me-zuyanim] through Halachah more than the Synagogues and Houses of study.²⁵ And this conforms with the following saying of R. Hiyya b. Ammi in the name of ‘Ulla: Since the day that the Temple was destroyed, the Holy One, blessed be He, has nothing in this world but the four cubits of Halachah alone. So said also Abaye: At first I used to study in my house and pray in the Synagogue. Since I heard the saying of R. Hiyya b. Ammi in the name of ‘Ulla: ‘Since the day that the Temple was destroyed, the Holy One, blessed be He, has nothing in His world but the four cubits of Halachah alone’, I pray only in the place where I study. R. Ammi and R. Assi, though they had thirteen Synagogues in Tiberias, prayed only between the pillars where they used to study.²⁶

R. Hiyya b. Ammi further said in the name of ‘Ulla: A man who lives from the labour [of his hands] is greater than the one who fears heaven.²⁷ For with regard to the one who fears heaven it is written: Happy is the man that feareth the Lord,²⁸ while with regard to the man who lives from his own work it is written: When thou eatest the labour of thy hands, happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.²⁹ ‘Happy shalt thou be’, in this world, ‘and it shall be well with thee’, in the world to come. But of the man that fears heaven it is not written: ‘and it shall be well with thee’.

R. Hiyya b. Ammi further said in the name of ‘Ulla: A man should always live in the same town as his teacher. For as long as Shimei the son of Gera was alive Solomon did not marry the daughter of Pharaoh.³⁰ — But it has been taught that he should not live [in the same place]? — There is no contradiction. The former [speaks of a disciple] who is submissive to him, the other [of a disciple] who is not submissive.

R. Huna b. Judah in the name of R. Menahem in the name of R. Ammi said: What is the meaning of the verse: And they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed?³¹ This refers to people who leave the Scroll of the Law [while it is being read from] and go out [from the Synagogue]. R. Abbahu used to go out between one reader and the next.³² R. Papa raised the question: What of going out between verse and verse? It remains unanswered. — R. Shesheth used to turn his face to another side and study. He said: We [are busy] with ours, and they [are busy] with theirs.³³

and even [such verses as] Ataroth and Dibon,¹ for if one completes his Parashoth together with the congregation, his days and years are prolonged. R. Bibi b. Abaye wanted to finish all the Parashoth of the whole year on the eve of the Day of Atonement. But Hiyya b. Rab of Difti² recited to him [the following Baraitha]: It is written: And ye shall afflict your souls, in the ninth day of the month at even.³ Now, do we fast on the ninth? Why, we fast on the tenth! But this teaches you that if one eats and drinks on the ninth, Scripture accounts it to him as if he fasted on the ninth and tenth.⁴ Thereupon he wanted to finish them in advance. But a certain Elder recited to him a Baraitha teaching: However, he should not read them in advance of nor later [than the congregation]. Even so did R. Joshua b. Levi say to his children: Complete your Parashoth together with the congregation, twice the Hebrew text and once Targum; be careful with the jugular veins to follow [the teaching of] R. Judah, as we have learnt: R. Judah says: He must cut through the jugular veins; and be careful [to respect] an old man who has forgotten his knowledge through no fault of his own,⁵ for it was said: Both the whole tables and the fragments of the tables were placed in the Ark.⁶

Raba said to his children: When you are cutting meat, do not cut it upon your hand. (Some people say on account of danger;⁷ and some in order not to spoil the meal.)⁸ Do not sit upon the bed of an Aramaean woman, and do not pass behind a Synagogue when the congregation is praying. 'Do not sit upon the bed of an Aramaean woman'; some say that this means: Do not go to bed before reciting the Shema';⁹ some say it means: Do not marry a proselyte woman; and some say it means literally [the bed of] an Aramaean woman, and this rule was laid down because of what happened to R. Papa. For R. Papa once visited an Aramaean woman. She brought out a bed and said: Sit down. He said to her: I will not sit down until you raise the cover of the bed. She raised the cover and they found there a dead baby. Hence said the scholars: It is not permitted to sit down upon the bed of an Aramaean woman. 'And do not pass behind a Synagogue when the congregation is praying'; this supports the teaching of R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: It is not permitted for a man to pass behind a Synagogue when the congregation is praying. Abaye said: This applies only when there is no other door, but when there is another door,¹⁰ there is no objection. Furthermore, this applies only when there is no other Synagogue, but when there is another Synagogue there is no objection. And furthermore, this applies only when he does not carry a burden, and does not run, and does not wear tefillin. But where one of these conditions is present there is no objection.

It has been taught: R. Akiba says: For three things I like the Medes: When they cut meat, they cut it only on the table; when they kiss, they kiss only the hand; and when they hold counsel, they do so only in the field. R. Adda b. Ahabah says: Which verse [may be quoted in support of the last]? And Jacob sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock.¹¹ It has been taught: R. Gamaliel says: For three things do I like the Persians: They are temperate in their eating, modest in the privy, and chaste in another matter.¹² I have commanded My consecrated ones.¹³ R. Joseph learnt: This refers to the Persians who are consecrated and destined for Gehinnom.¹⁴

R. GAMALIEL SAYS: UNTIL THE DAWN RISES. Rab Judah says in the name of Samuel: The Halachah is as laid down by R. Gamaliel. It was taught, R. Simeon b. Yohai says: Sometimes a man may recite the Shema' twice in the night, once before the dawn breaks and once after the dawn breaks, and thereby fulfil his duty once for the day and once for the night.

Now this is self-contradictory. You say: 'A man may sometimes recite the Shema' twice in the night', which shows that it is still night after the dawn breaks. And then you say: 'He thereby fulfils his duty once for the day and once for the night', which shows that it is daytime? — No! It is in reality night, but he calls it day because some people rise at that time. R. Aha b. Hanina said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The Halachah is as stated by R. Simeon b. Yohai. Some people refer this [statement] of R. Aha b. Hanina to the following lesson,¹⁵ which has been taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says in the name of R. Akiba: Sometimes a man may recite the Shema' twice in the day-time, once before sunrise and once after sunrise, and thereby fulfill his duty once for the day and once for the night. Now this is self-contradictory. You say: 'A man may sometimes recite the Shema' twice in the daytime', which shows that before sunrise it is daytime, and then you state: 'He thereby fulfills his duty once for the day and once for the night', which shows that it is night? —

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 9a

No! It is in reality day, but he calls it night because some people go to bed at that time. R. Aha b. Hanina said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The Halachah is as stated by R. Simeon who said in the name of R. Akiba. R. Zera says: However, he must not say [the prayer]: 'cause us to lie down'.¹ When R. Isaac b. Joseph came [from Palestine], he said: This [tradition] of R. Aha b. Hanina in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi was not expressly said [by R. Joshua], but it was said [by R. Aha] by inference.² For it happened that a couple of scholars became drunk at the wedding feast of the son of R. Joshua b. Levi, and they came before R. Joshua b. Levi [before the rise of the sun] and he said: R. Simeon is a great enough authority to be relied on in a case of emergency.

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT HIS SONS CAME HOME [LATE], etc. How is it that they had not heard before of this opinion of R. Gamaliel? — [They had heard], but they asked thus: Do the Rabbis join issue with you? For if so, where there is a controversy between an individual and a group, the Halachah follows the group. Or do the Rabbis agree with you [in substance], but they say: UNTIL MIDNIGHT, in order to keep a man far away from transgression? — He replied: The Rabbis do agree with me, and it is your duty [to recite the Shema']. But they say, UNTIL MIDNIGHT, in order to keep a man far from transgression.

AND NOT IN RESPECT TO THIS ALONE DID THEY SO DECIDE, etc. But does R. Gamaliel say 'until midnight', that he should continue AND NOT IN RESPECT TO THIS ALONE DID THEY SO DECIDE? — That is what R. Gamaliel said to his sons: Even according to the Rabbis who say, 'UNTIL MIDNIGHT', the obligation continues until the dawn breaks, but the reason they said, 'UNTIL MIDNIGHT', was in order to keep a man far away from transgression.

THE BURNING OF THE FAT, etc. But [the Mishnah] does not mention the eating of the Passover offering. This would point to a contradiction [with the following Baraitha]: The duty of the recital of the Shema' in the evening, and of the Hallel³ on the night of the Passover, and of the eating of the Passover sacrifice can be performed until the break of the dawn? — R. Joseph says: There is no contradiction. One statement [the Mishnah] conforms with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, and the other with the view of R. Akiba. For it has been taught: And they shall eat of the flesh in that night.⁴ R. Eleazar b. Azariah says: Here it is said: 'in that night', and further on it is said: For I will go through the land of Egypt in that night.⁵ Just as the latter verse means until midnight, so also here it means until midnight. R. Akiba said to him: But it is also said: Ye shall eat it in haste,⁶ which means: until the time of haste?⁷ [Until the break of the dawn]. [Said R. Eleazar to him,]⁸ If that is so, why does it say: in the night? [R. Akiba answered,]⁸ Because I might think that it may be eaten in the daytime⁹ like the sacrifices; therefore it is said: 'in the night', indicating that only in the night is it eaten and not in the day. We can understand why according to R. Eleazar b. Azariah, whose opinion is based on the Gezerah shawah,¹⁰ the word 'that' is necessary. But according to R. Akiba what is the purpose of this word 'that'?¹¹ — It is there to exclude another night. For, since the Passover sacrifice is a sacrifice of minor sanctity and peace-offerings are sacrifices of minor sanctity, I might think that just as the peace-offerings are eaten for two days and one night so is also the Passover-offering eaten for two nights instead of the two days, and therefore it might be eaten for two nights and one day! Therefore it is said: 'in that night'; in that night it is eaten, but it is not eaten in another night. And R. Eleazar b. Azariah?¹² He deduces it from the verse: And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning.¹³ R. Akiba? — If [you deduced it] from there, I could say that 'morning' refers to the second morning. And R. Eleazar? — He answers you: 'Morning' generally means the first morning.

And [the controversy of] these Tannaim is like [the controversy of] the other Tannaim in the following Baraitha: There thou shalt sacrifice the passover-offering at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt.¹⁴ R. Eliezer says: 'At even',¹⁵ you sacrifice; 'at sunset', you eat; and 'at the season that thou camest out of Egypt',¹⁶ you must burn [the remainder]. R. Joshua says: 'At even', you sacrifice; 'at sunset', you eat; and how long do you continue to eat? Till 'the season that thou camest out of Egypt'.

R. Abba said: All agree that when Israel was redeemed¹⁷ from Egypt they were redeemed in the evening. For it is said: The Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night.¹⁸ But they did not actually leave Egypt till the daytime. For it is said: On the morrow after the passover the children of Israel went out with a high hand.¹⁹ About what do they disagree? — About the time of the haste.²⁰ R. Eleazar b. Azariah says: What is meant by 'haste'? The haste of the Egyptians.²¹ And R. Akiba says: It is the haste of Israel.²² It has also been taught likewise: 'The Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night.' But did they leave in the night? Did not they in fact leave only in the morning, as it says: 'On the morrow after the passover the children of Israel went out with a high hand? But this teaches that the redemption had already begun in the evening.

Speak now [na] in the ears of the people, etc.²³ In the school of R. Jannai they said: The word

‘na’ means: I pray. The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses: I pray of thee, go and tell Israel, I pray of you to borrow from the Egyptians vessels of silver and vessels of gold, so that this righteous man [Abraham] may not say: And they shall serve them, and they shall afflict them¹ He did fulfill for them, but And afterward shall they come out with great substance² He did not fulfill for them. They said to him: If only we could get out with our lives! A parable: [They were] like a man who was kept in prison and people told him: To-morrow, they will release you from the prison and give you plenty of money. And he answered them: I pray of you, let me go free today and I shall ask nothing more!

And they let them have what they asked.³ R. Ammi says: This teaches that they let them have it against their will. Some say, against the will of the Egyptians, and some say, against the will of the Israelites. Those that say ‘against the will of the Egyptians’ cite the verse: And she that tarrieth at home divideth the spoil.⁴ Those that say: ‘against the will of the Israelites’, say it was because of the burden [of carrying it]. And they despoiled Egypt.⁵ R. Ammi says: This teaches that they made it like a snare⁶ without corn. Resh Lakish said: They made it like a pond without fish.

Him: Lord of the Universe, sufficient is the evil in the time thereof! Thereupon the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: Go and tell them: I AM has sent me unto you.⁹

Hear me, O Lord, hear me.¹⁰ R. Abbahu said: Why did Elijah say twice: 'Hear me'? This teaches that Elijah said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Lord of the Universe, 'hear me', that the fire may descend from heaven and consume everything that is upon the altar; and 'hear me', that Thou mayest turn their mind that they may not say that it was the work of sorcery. For it is said: For Thou didst turn their heart backward.¹¹

MISHNAH. FROM WHAT TIME MAY ONE RECITE THE SHEMA IN THE MORNING? FROM THE TIME THAT ONE CAN DISTINGUISH BETWEEN BLUE AND WHITE. R. ELIEZER SAYS: BETWEEN BLUE AND GREEN. AND HE HAS TIME TO FINISH UNTIL SUNRISE. R. JOSHUA SAYS: UNTIL THE THIRD HOUR OF THE DAY, FOR SUCH IS THE CUSTOM OF KINGS, TO RISE AT THE THIRD HOUR. IF ONE RECITES THE SHEMA' LATER HE LOSES NOTHING, BEING LIKE ONE WHO READS IN THE TORAH.¹²

GEMARA. What is the meaning of BETWEEN BLUE AND WHITE? Shall I say: between a lump of white wool and a lump of blue wool? This one may also distinguish in the night! It means rather: between the blue in it and the white in it.¹³ It has been taught: R. Meir says: [The morning Shema' is read] from the time that one can distinguish between a wolf and a dog; R. Akiba says: Between an ass and a wild ass. Others say: From the time that one can distinguish his friend at a distance of four cubits. R. Huna says: The halachah is as stated by the 'Others'. Abaye says: In regard to the tefillin,¹⁴ the halachah is as stated by the 'Others'; in regard to [the recital of] the Shema', as practised by the watin.¹⁵ For R. Johanan said: The watin used to finish it [the recital of the Shema'] with sunrise, in order to join the ge'ullah with the tefillah,¹⁶ and say the tefillah in the daytime. R. Zera says: What text can be cited in support of this? They shall fear Thee with the sun,¹⁷ and so long as the moon throughout all generations.¹⁸ R. Jose b. Eliakim testified¹⁹ in the name of the holy community of Jerusalem:²⁰ If one joins the ge'ullah to the tefillah, he will not meet with any mishap for the whole of the day. Said R. Zera: This is not so! For I did join, and did meet with a mishap. They asked him: What was your mishap? That you had to carry a myrtle branch into the king's palace?²¹ That was no mishap, for in any case you would have had to pay something in order to see the king! For R. Johanan said: A man should always be eager to run to see the kings of Israel. And not only to see the kings of Israel, but also to see the kings of the Gentiles, so that, if he is found worthy,²² he may be able to distinguish between the kings of Israel and the kings of the Gentiles.

R. Ela said to 'Ulla: When you go up there,²³ give my greeting to my brother R. Berona in the presence of the whole college, for he is a great man and rejoices to perform a precept [in the correct manner]. Once he succeeded in joining ge'ullah with tefillah,²⁴ and a smile did not leave his lips the whole day. How is it possible to join the two, seeing that R. Johanan has said:²⁵ At the beginning of the tefillah one has to say, O, Lord, open Thou my lips,²⁶ and at the end he has to say, Let the words of my mouth be acceptable etc.²⁷ — R. Eleazar replied: This²⁸ must then refer to the tefillah of the evening. But has not R. Johanan said: Who is it that is destined for the world to come? One who joins the ge'ullah of the evening with the tefillah of the evening? — Rather said

R. Eleazar: This must then refer to the tefillah of the afternoon. R. Ashi said: You may also say that it refers to all the tefillahs, but since the Rabbis instituted [these words]²⁸ in the tefillah, the whole is considered one long tefillah. For if you do not admit this, how can he join in the evening, seeing that he has to say the benediction of 'Let us rest'?²⁹ You must say then that, since the Rabbis ordained the saying of 'Let us rest', it is considered one long ge'ullah.³⁰ So here, since the Rabbis instituted these words in the tefillah, the whole is considered one long tefillah.

Seeing that this verse, 'Let the words of my mouth be acceptable etc.' is suitable for recital either at the end or the beginning [of the tefillah], why did the Rabbis institute it at the end of the eighteen benedictions? Let it be recited at the beginning? — R. Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: Since David said it only after eighteen chapters [of the Psalms],³¹ the Rabbis too enacted that it should be said after eighteen blessings. But those eighteen Psalms are really nineteen? — 'Happy is the man' and 'Why are the nations in an uproar'³² form one chapter. For R. Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: David composed a hundred and three chapters [of psalms], and he did not say 'Hallelujah' until he saw the downfall of the wicked, as it says, Let sinners cease out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless the Lord, O my soul. Hallelujah.³³ Now are these a hundred and three? Are they not a hundred and four? You must assume therefore that 'Happy is the man' and 'Why are the nations in an uproar' form one chapter. For R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Johanan:

(1) Gen. XV, 14.

(2) Ibid.

(3) Ex. XII, 36.

(4) Ps. LXVIII, 13.

(5) Ex. XII, 36.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 10a

: Every chapter that was particularly dear to David he commenced with 'Happy' and terminated with 'Happy'.¹ He began with 'Happy', as it is written, 'Happy is the man', and he terminated with 'Happy', as it is written, 'happy are all they that take refuge in Him'.²

There were once some highwaymen³ in the neighbourhood of R. Meir who caused him a great deal of trouble. R. Meir accordingly prayed that they should die. His wife Beruria⁴ said to him: How do you make out [that such a prayer should be permitted]? Because it is written Let hatta'im cease? Is it written hot'im?⁵ It is written hatta'im!⁶ Further, look at the end of the verse: and let the wicked men be no more. Since the sins will cease, there will be no more wicked men! Rather pray for them that they should repent, and there will be no more wicked. He did pray for them, and they repented.

A certain Min⁷ said to Beruria: it is written: Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear.⁸ Because she did not bear is she to sing? She replied to him: You fool! Look at the end of the verse, where it is written, For the children of the desolate shall be more than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord.⁹ But what then is the meaning of 'a barren that did not bear'? Sing, O community of Israel, who resemblest a barren woman, for not having born children like you for Gehenna.

A certain Min said to R. Abbahu: It is written: A Psalm of David when he fled from Absalom his son.¹⁰ And it is also written, A mihtam of David when he fled from Saul in the cave.¹¹ Which event happened first? Did not the event of Saul happen first? Then let him write it first? He replied to him: For you who do not derive interpretations from juxtaposition, there is a difficulty, but for us who do derive interpretations from juxtaposition there is no difficulty. For R. Johanan said: How do we know from the Torah that juxtaposition counts? Because it says, They are joined¹² for ever and ever, they are done in truth and uprightness.¹³ Why is the chapter of Absalom juxtaposed to the chapter of Gog and Magog?¹⁴ So that if one should say to you, is it possible that a slave should rebel against his master,¹⁵ you can reply to him: Is it possible that a son should rebel against his father? Yet this happened; and so this too [will happen].

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: What is the meaning of the verse, She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and the law of kindness is on her tongue?¹⁶ To whom was

Solomon alluding in this verse? He was alluding only to his father David who dwelt in five worlds and composed a psalm [for each of them]. He abode in his mother's womb, and broke into song, as it says, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all my inwards¹⁷ bless His holy name.¹⁸ He came out into the open air and looked upon the stars and constellations and broke into song, as it says, Bless the Lord, ye angels of His, ye mighty in strength that fulfil His word, hearkening unto the voice of His word. Bless the Lord, all ye His hosts¹⁹ etc. He sucked from his mother's bosom and looked on her breasts and broke into song, as it says, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits.²⁰ What means 'all His benefits'? — R. Abbahu said: That He placed her breasts at the source of understanding.²¹ For what reason is this? — Rab Judah said: So that he should not look upon the place of shame; R. Mattena said: So that he should not suck from a place that is foul. He saw the downfall of the wicked and broke into song, as it says, Let sinners cease out of the earth and let the wicked be no more. Bless the Lord, O my soul, Hallelujah.²² He looked upon the day of death and broke into song, as it says, Bless the Lord, O my soul. O Lord my God, Thou art very great, Thou art clothed with glory and majesty.²³ How does this verse refer to the day of death? — Rabbah son of R. Shila said: We learn it from the end of the passage, where it is written: Thou hidest Thy face, they vanish, Thou withdrawest their breath, they perish etc.²⁴

R. Shimi b. 'Ukba (others say, Mar 'Ukba) was often in the company of R. Simeon b. Pazzi, who²⁵ used to arrange aggadahs [and recite them] before R. Johanan. He²⁶ said to him: What is the meaning of the verse, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless His holy name?²⁷ — He replied: Come and observe how the capacity of human beings falls short of the capacity of the Holy One, blessed be He. It is in the capacity of a human being to draw a figure on a wall, but he cannot invest it with breath and spirit, bowels and intestines. But the Holy One, blessed be He, is not so; He shapes one form in the midst of another, and invests it with breath and spirit, bowels and intestines. And that is what Hannah said: There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beside Thee, neither is there any zur [rock] like our God.²⁸ What means, neither is there any zur like our God? There is no artist [zayyar] like our God. What means, 'For there is none beside Thee'? R. Judah b. Menasiah said: Read not, There is none bilteka, but, There is none lebalotheka [to consume Thee]. For the nature of flesh and blood is not like that of the Holy One, blessed be He. It is the nature of flesh and blood to be outlived by its works, but the Holy One, blessed be He, outlives His works. He said to him:²⁹ What I meant to tell you is this: To whom did David refer in these five verses beginning with 'Bless the Lord, O my soul'? He was alluding only to the Holy One, blessed be He, and to the soul. Just as the Holy One, blessed be He, fills the whole world, so the soul fills the body. Just as the Holy One, blessed be He, sees, but is not seen, so the soul sees but is not itself seen. Just as the Holy One, blessed be He, feeds the whole world, so the soul feeds the whole body. Just as the Holy One, blessed be He, is pure, so the soul is pure. Just as the Holy One, blessed be He, abides in the innermost precincts, so the soul abides in the innermost precincts. Let that which has these five qualities come and praise Him who has these five qualities.

R. Hamnuna said: What is the meaning of the verse, Who is as the wise man? And who knoweth the interpretation [peshar] of a thing?³⁰ Who is like the Holy One, blessed be He, who knew how to effect a reconciliation [pesharah] between two righteous men, Hezekiah and Isaiah? Hezekiah said: Let Isaiah come to me, for so we find that Elijah went to Ahab,³¹ as it says, And Elijah went to show himself unto Ahab.³² Isaiah said: Let Hezekiah come to me, for so we find that Jehoram son of Ahab went to Elisha.³³ What did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He brought sufferings upon Hezekiah and then said to Isaiah, Go visit the sick. For so it says, In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet, son of Amoz, came to him and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thy house in order, for thou shalt die and not live³⁴ etc. What is the meaning of ‘thou shalt die and not live’? Thou shalt die in this world and not live in the world to come. He said to him: Why so bad? He replied: Because you did not try to have children. He said: The reason was because I saw by the holy spirit that the children issuing from me would not be virtuous. He said to him: What have you to do with the secrets of the All-Merciful? You should have done what you were commanded, and let the Holy One, blessed be He, do that which pleases Him. He said to him: Then give me now your daughter; perhaps through your merit and mine combined virtuous children will issue from me. He replied:³⁵ The doom has already been decreed. Said the other: Son of Amoz, finish your prophecy and go. This tradition I have from the house of my ancestor:³⁶ Even if a sharp sword rests upon a man's neck he should not desist from prayer.³⁷ This saying is also recorded in the names of R. Johanan and R. Eleazar: Even if a sharp sword rests on a man's neck, he should not desist from prayer, as it says, Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him.³⁸

(1) In point of fact this is the only one. V. Tosaf. a.l.

(2) The last verse of Ps. II, which shows that according to R. Johanan Pss. I and II formed one Psalm.

(9) Apparently the point is that at present she is barren, but in the future she shall have many children. Probably Beruria was thinking of Rome as ‘the married wife’ and Jerusalem as ‘the desolate’.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 10b

([Similarly] R. Hanan said: Even if the master of dreams¹ says to a man that on the morrow he will die, he should not desist from prayer, for so it says, For in the multitude of dreams are vanities and also many words, but fear thou God).² Thereupon straightway, Hezekiah turned his face to the kir [wall] and prayed unto the Lord.³ What is the meaning of 'kir'? — R. Simeon b. Lakish said: [He prayed] from the innermost chambers [kiroth] of his heart, as it says, My bowels, my bowels, I writhe in pain! Kiroth [The chambers] of my heart etc.⁴ R. Levi said: [He prayed] with reference to [another] 'kir'. He said before Him: Sovereign of the Universe! The Shunammite woman made only one little chamber [on the roof] and Thou didst restore her son to life.⁵ How much more so then me whose ancestor⁶ overlaid the Temple with silver and gold! Remember now, O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee in truth and with a whole heart, and have done that which is good in Thy sight.⁷ What means, 'I have done that which is good in Thy sight'? — Rab Judah says in the name of Rab: He joined the ge'ullah with the tefillah.⁸ R. Levi said: He hid away the Book of Cures.⁹

Our Rabbis taught:¹⁰ King Hezekiah did six things; of three of them they [the Rabbis] approved and of three they did not approve. Of three they approved: he hid away the Book of Cures; and they approved of it; he broke into pieces the brazen serpent,¹¹ and they approved of it; and he dragged the bones of his father [to the grave] on a bed of ropes,¹² and they approved of it.¹³ Of three they did not approve: He stopped up the waters of Gihon,¹⁴ and they did not approve of it; he cut off [the gold] from the doors of the Temple and sent it to the King of Assyria,¹⁵ and they did not approve of it; and he intercalated the month of Nisan during Nisan,¹⁶ and they did not approve of it. But did not Hezekiah accept the teaching: This month shall be unto you the beginning of months:¹⁷ [this means] that this is Nisan and no other month shall be Nisan?¹⁸ — He went wrong over the teaching enunciated by Samuel. For Samuel said: The year must not be declared a prolonged year on the thirtieth of Adar, since this day may possibly belong to Nisan;¹⁹ and he thought: We do not pay heed to this possibility.²⁰

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Jose b. Zimra: If a man makes his petition depend on his own merit, heaven makes it depend on the merit of others; and if he makes it depend on the merit of others, heaven makes it depend on his own merit. Moses made his petition depend on the merit of others, as it says, Remember Abraham, Isaac and Israel Thy servants!²¹ and Scripture made it depend on his own merit, as it says, Therefore He said that He would destroy them, had not Moses His chosen stood before Him in the breach to turn back His wrath, lest He should destroy them.²² Hezekiah made his petition depend on his own merit, as it is written: Remember now, O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee,²³ and God made it depend on the merit of others, as it says, For I will defend this city to save it, for Mine own sake and for My servant David's sake.²⁴ And this agrees with R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: What is the meaning of the verse, Behold for my peace I had great bitterness?²⁵ Even when the Holy One, blessed be He, sent him [the message of] peace it was bitter for him.²⁶

Let us make, I pray thee, a little chamber on the roof.²⁷ Rab and Samuel differ.²⁸ One says: It was an open upper chamber, and they put a roof on it. The other says: It was a large verandah, and they divided it into two.²⁹ For him who says that it was a verandah, there is a good reason why the text says kir [wall]. But how does he who says that it was an upper chamber account for the word kir? — [It is used] because they put a roof on it [kiruah]. For him who says it was an upper chamber there is a good reason why the text uses the word 'aliyath [upper chamber]. But how does he who says it was a verandah account for the word 'aliyath? — It was the best [me'ulla]³⁰ of the rooms.

And let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool and a candlestick.³¹ Abaye (or as some say, R. Isaac) said: If one wants to benefit from the hospitality of another, he may benefit, as Elisha did,³² and if he does not desire to benefit, he may refuse to do so, as Samuel the Ramathite did,³³ of whom we read, And his return was to Ramah, for there was his house;³⁴ and R. Johanan said: [This teaches that] wherever he travelled, his house was with him.³⁵

And she said unto her husband: Behold now, I perceive that he is a holy man of God.³⁶ R. Jose b. Hanina said: You learn from this that a woman recognizes the character of a guest better than a man. 'A holy man'. How did she know this? — Rab and Samuel gave different answers. One said: Because she never saw a fly pass by his table. The other said: She spread a sheet of linen over his bed, and she never saw a nocturnal pollution on it. He is a holy [man]. R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: He is holy, but his attendant is not holy. For so it says: And Gehazi came near to thrust her away;³⁷ R. Jose son of Hanina said: He seized her by the breast.³⁸

That passeth by us continually.³⁹ R. Jose son of R. Hanina said in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: If a man entertains a scholar in his house and lets him enjoy his possessions, Scripture accounts it to him as if he had sacrificed the daily burnt-offering.⁴⁰

R. Jose son of Hanina further said in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: A man should not stand on a high place when he prays, but he should pray in a lowly place, as it says; Out of the depths have I called Thee, O Lord.⁴¹ It has been taught to the same effect: A man should not stand on a chair or on a footstool or on a high place to pray, but he should pray in a lowly place, since there is no elevation before God, and so it says, 'Out of the depths have I called Thee, O Lord', and it also says, A prayer of the afflicted, when he fainteth.⁴²

R. Jose son of R. Hanina also said in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: When one prays, he should place his feet in proper position,⁴³ as it says, And their feet were straight feet.⁴⁴

R. Jose son of R. Hanina also said in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: What is the meaning of the verse, Ye shall not eat with the blood?⁴⁵ Do not eat before ye have prayed for your blood.⁴⁶ R. Isaac said in the name of R. Johanan, who had it from R. Jose son of R. Hanina in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: If one eats and drinks and then says his prayers, of him the Scripture says, And hast cast Me behind thy back.⁴⁷ Read not gaweka [thy back], but geeka [thy pride]. Says the Holy One, blessed be He: After⁴⁸ this one has exalted himself, he comes and accepts the kingdom of heaven!⁴⁹

R. JOSHUA SAYS: UNTIL THE THIRD HOUR. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The halachah is as stated by R. Joshua.

HE WHO RECITES THE SHEMA' LATER LOSES NOTHING. R. Hisda said in the name of Mar 'Ukba: Provided he does not say the benediction of 'Who formest the light'.⁵⁰ An objection was raised from the statement: He who recites the Shema' later loses nothing; he is like one reading in the Torah, but he says two blessings before it and one after. Is not this a refutation of R. Hisda? It is [indeed] a refutation. Some there are who say: R. Hisda said in the name of Mar 'Ukba: What is the meaning of HE LOSES NOTHING? He does not lose the benedictions. It has been taught to the same effect: He who says the Shema' later loses nothing, being like one who reads from the Torah, but he says two blessings before and one after.

R. Mani said: He who recites the Shema' in its proper time is greater than he who studies the Torah.⁵¹ For since it says, HE WHO SAYS LATER LOSES NOTHING, BEING LIKE A MAN WHO READS IN THE TORAH, we may conclude that one who recites the Shema' at its proper time is superior. MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IN THE EVENING EVERY MAN SHOULD RECLINE AND RECITE [THE SHEMA'], AND IN THE MORNING HE SHOULD STAND, AS IT SAYS, AND WHEN THOU LIEST DOWN AND WHEN THOU RISEST UP.⁵² BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, SAY THAT EVERY MAN SHOULD RECITE IN HIS OWN WAY, AS IT SAYS, AND WHEN THOU WALKEST BY THE WAY.⁵³ WHY THEN IS IT SAID, AND WHEN THOU LIEST DOWN AND WHEN THOU RISEST UP? [THIS MEANS], AT THE TIME WHEN PEOPLE LIE DOWN AND AT THE TIME WHEN PEOPLE RISE UP. R. TARFON SAID: I WAS ONCE WALKING BY THE WAY AND I RECLINED TO RECITE THE SHEMA' IN THE MANNER PRESCRIBED BY BETH SHAMMAI, AND I INCURRED DANGER FROM ROBBERS. THEY SAID TO HIM: YOU DESERVED TO COME TO HARM, BECAUSE YOU ACTED AGAINST THE OPINION OF BETH HILLEL.

(1) This seems to be simply a periphrasis for 'if a man is told in a dream'. Two explanations are then possible of what follows. (i) If he dreams and the dream so far comes true that a sword is placed on his neck, still he should pray. (ii) Even if he only dreams this, he should still pray etc. (R. Bezael of Regensburg.)

(2) Eccl. V, 6. Apparently this is how R. Hanan understands the verse. E.V. Through the multitude and vanities there are also many words.

- (3) Isa. XXXVIII, 2. MS.M. adds: Finally he gave him his daughter (in marriage) and there issued from him Menasseh and Rabshakeh. One day he (Hezekiah) carried them on his shoulder to the Synagogue (Var. lec. to the house of learning) and one of them said, 'Father's bald head is good for breaking nuts on', while the other said, 'it is good for roasting fish on. He thereupon threw them both on the ground and Rabshakeh was killed, but not Menasseh. He then applied to them the verse, The instruments also of the churl are evil; he deviseth wicked devices. (Isa. XXXII, 7).

GEMARA. Beth Hillel cause no difficulty; they explain their own reason and the reason [why they reject the opinion] of Beth Shammai. But why do not Beth Shammai accept the view of Beth Hillel? — Beth Shammai can reply: If this is so,¹ let the text say, 'In the morning and in the evening'. Why does it say, 'When thou liest down and when thou risest up'? To show that in the time of lying down there must be actual lying down, and in the time of rising up there must be actual rising up. And how do Beth Shammai explain the words 'And when thou walkest by the way'? — They need it for the following, as has been taught: 'When thou sittest in thy house':² this excludes a bridegroom. 'And when thou walkest by the way': this excludes one who is occupied with the performance of a religious duty.³ Hence they laid down that one who marries a virgin is free [from the obligation to say the Shema' in the evening] while one who marries a widow is bound.⁴ How is the lesson⁵ derived? — R. Papa said: [The circumstances must be] like a 'way'. As a 'way' [journey] is optional, so whatever is optional [does not exempt from the obligation]. But does not the text treat [also] of one who is going to perform a religious duty, and even so the All Merciful said that he should recite? — If that were so, the All Merciful should have written [simply], 'While sitting and while walking'. What is the implication of when thou sittest and when thou walkest? — In the case of thy sitting and thy walking thou art under the obligation, but in the case of performing a religious duty thou art exempt. If that is so, one who marries a widow should also be exempt? — The one⁶ is agitated, the other not. If a state of agitation is the ground, it would apply also the the case of his ship sinking at sea! And should you say, Quite so, why did R. Abba b. Zabda say in the name of Rab: A mourner is under obligation to perform all the precepts laid down in the Torah except that of the tefillin, because the term 'headtire' is applied to them, as it says, Bind thy headtire upon thee?⁷ — In that case the agitation is over a religious duty, here it is over an optional matter.

And Beth Shammai?⁸ — They require it to exclude persons on a religious mission.⁹ And Beth Hillel?¹⁰ — They reply: Incidentally it tells you that one recites also by the way.¹¹

Our Rabbis taught: Beth Hillel say that one may recite the Shema' standing, one may recite it sitting, one may recite it reclining, one may recite it walking on the road, one may recite it at one's work. Once R. Ishmael and R. Eleazar b. Azariah were dining at the same place, and R. Ishmael was reclining while R. Eleazar was standing upright. When the time came for reciting the Shema', R. Eleazar reclined and R. Ishmael stood upright. Said R. Eleazar b. Azariah to R. Ishmael: Brother Ishmael, I will tell you a parable. To what is this [our conduct] like? It is like that of a man to whom people say, You have a fine beard, and he replies, Let this go to meet the destroyers.¹² So now, with you: as long as I was upright you were reclining, and now that I recline you stand upright!¹³ He replied: I have acted according to the rule of Beth Hillel and you have acted according to the rule of Beth Shammai. And what is more, [I had to act thus], lest the disciples should see and fix the halachah so for future generations. What did he mean by 'what is more'? He meant: Should you argue that Beth Hillel also allow reclining, [I reply that] this is the case only where one was reclining from the first. Here, however, since at first you were upright and now you recline, they may say, This shows that they [both] are of the opinion of Beth Shammai, and perhaps the disciples will see and fix the halachah so for future generations.

R. Ezekiel learnt: If one follows the rule of Beth Shammai he does right, if one follows the rule of Beth Hillel he does right. R. Joseph said: If he follows the rule of Beth Shammai, his action is worthless, as we have learnt: If a man has his head and the greater part of his body in the sukkah¹⁴ while the table is in the house, Beth Shammai declare his action void, while Beth Hillel declare it valid. Said Beth Hillel to Beth Shammai: Once the Elders of Beth Shammai and the Elders of Beth Hillel went to visit R. Johanan b. Ha-horanith, and they found him with his head and the greater part of his body in the sukkah while the table was in the house, and they made no objection. They replied: Do you bring a proof from this?¹⁵ [The fact is that] they also said to him: If such has been your regular custom, you have never performed the precept of the sukkah in your lifetime.¹⁶ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: One who follows the rule of Beth Shammai makes his life forfeit, as we have learnt: R. TARFON SAID: I WAS ONCE WALKING BY THE WAY AND I RECLINED TO RECITE THE SHEMA' IN THE MANNER PRESCRIBED BY BETH SHAMMAI, AND I INCURRED DANGER FROM ROBBERS. THEY SAID TO HIM: YOU DESERVED TO COME TO HARM, BECAUSE YOU ACTED AGAINST THE OPINION OF BETH HILLEL.

MISHNAH. IN THE MORNING TWO BLESSINGS ARE TO BE SAID BEFORE IT¹⁷ AND ONE AFTER IT. IN THE EVENING TWO ARE SAID BEFORE IT AND TWO AFTER IT, ONE LONG AND ONE SHORT.¹⁸ WHERE THEY [THE SAGES] LAID DOWN THAT A LONG ONE SHOULD BE SAID, IT IS NOT PERMITTED TO SAY A SHORT ONE. WHERE THEY ORDAINED A SHORT ONE A LONG ONE IS NOT PERMITTED. [A PRAYER] WHICH THEY ORDERED TO BE CONCLUDED [WITH A BENEDICTION]¹⁹ MUST NOT BE LEFT WITHOUT SUCH A CONCLUSION; ONE WHICH THEY ORDERED TO BE LEFT WITHOUT SUCH A CONCLUSION MUST NOT BE SO CONCLUDED.

GEMARA. What benedictions does one say [in the morning]? R. Jacob said in the name of R. Oshaia:

(1) That only the time of the recital is meant.

(2) Ibid.

(3) This is the reading of MS.M., and this is the version found in Tosaf. Suk. 25a a.v. l , fkcui and elsewhere. Cur. edd. reverse the positions of 'bridegroom' and 'one who is occupied, etc.'

- (4) V. infra.
- (5) Relating to one who is occupied with the performance.

- (7) Ezek. XXIV, 17. Ezekiel, though a mourner, was commanded exceptionally to wear his headtire, i.e., (as the Rabbis understand) tefillin, from which it is deduced that ordinarily a mourner does not do so. But the fact remains that worry as a rule does not exempt from the precepts.
- (8) How do they interpret the words 'and when thou walkest by the way'? V. next note.
- (9) This seems to be a repetition of the question and answer given above and is best left out with MS.M.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 11b

'[Blessed art Thou] who formest light and createst darkness'.¹ Let him say rather: 'Who formest light and createst brightness'? — We keep the language of the Scripture.² If that is so, [what of the next words in the text], Who makest peace and createst evil: do we repeat them as they are written? It is written 'evil' and we say 'all things' as a euphemism. Then here too let us say 'brightness' as a euphemism! — In fact, replied Raba, it is in order to mention the distinctive feature of the day in the night-time and the distinctive feature of the night in the day-time. It is correct that we mention the distinctive feature of the night in the day-time, as we say, 'Who formest light and createst darkness'.³ But where do you find the distinctive feature of the day mentioned in the night-time? — Abaye replied: [In the words,] 'Thou rollest away the light from before the darkness and the darkness from before the light'.⁴

Which is the other [benediction]?⁵ — Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: 'With abounding love'.⁶ So also did R. Eleazar instruct his son R. Pedath [to say]: 'With abounding love'. It has been taught to the same effect: We do not say, 'With everlasting love', but 'With abounding love'. The Rabbis, however, say that 'With everlasting love'⁷ is said; and so it is also said, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with affection I have drawn thee.⁸

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: If one rose early to study [the Torah] before he had recited the Shema', he must say a benediction [over the study]. But if he had already recited the Shema', he need not say a benediction, because he has already become quit by saying 'With abounding love'.⁹

R. Huna said: For the reading of Scripture it is necessary to say a benediction,¹⁰ but for the study of the Midrash¹¹ no benediction is required. R. Eleazar, however, says that for both Scripture and Midrash a benediction is required, but not for the Mishnah. R. Johanan says that for the Mishnah also a benediction is required, [but not for the Talmud]. Raba said: For the Talmud also it is necessary to say a blessing. R. Hiyya b. Ashi said:¹² Many times did I stand before Rab to repeat our section in the Sifra of the School of Rab,¹³ and he used first to wash his hands and say a blessing, and then go over our section with us.¹⁴

What benediction is said [before the study of the Torah]? — Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: [Blessed art Thou . . .] who hast sanctified us by Thy commandments, and commanded us to study the Torah.¹⁵ R. Johanan used to conclude as follows:¹⁶ ‘Make pleasant, therefore, we beseech Thee, O Lord our God, the words of Thy Torah in our mouth and in the mouth of Thy people the house of Israel, so that we with our offspring and the offspring of Thy people the house of Israel may all know Thy name and study Thy Torah. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who teachest Torah to Thy people Israel’.¹⁷ R. Hammuna said: ‘[Blessed art Thou . . .] who hast chosen us from all the nations and given us Thy Torah. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who givest the Torah’.¹⁸ R. Hammuna said: This is the finest of the benedictions. Therefore let us say all of them.¹⁹

We have learnt elsewhere.²⁰ The deputy high priest²¹ said to them [the priests], Say one benediction, and they said the benediction and recited the Ten Commandments, the Shema’, the section ‘And it shall come to pass if ye hearken diligently’, and ‘And the Lord said’,²² and recited with the people three benedictions, viz ., ‘True and firm’,²³ the benediction of the ‘Abodah,²⁴ and the priestly benediction.²⁵ On Sabbath they said an additional benediction for the outgoing watch.²⁶ Which is the ‘one benediction’ referred to above? The following will show. R. Abba and R. Jose came to a certain place the people of which asked them what was the ‘one benediction’ [referred to], and they could not tell them. They went and asked R. Mattena, and he also did not know. They then went and asked Rab Judah, who said to them: Thus did Samuel say: It means, ‘With abounding love’. R. Zerika in the name of R. Ammi, who had it from R. Simeon b. Lakish said: It is, ‘Who formest light’. When R. Isaac b. Joseph came [from Palestine] he said: This statement of R. Zerika was not made explicitly [by R. Simeon b. Lakish], but was inferred by him [from another statement]. For R. Zerika said in the name of R. Ammi, who had it from R. Simeon b. Lakish: This²⁷ shows that the recital of one blessing is not indispensable for that of the other. Now if you say that they used to recite ‘Who formest the light’, it is correct to infer that the recital of one blessing is not indispensable for that of the other, since they did not say, ‘With abounding love’.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 12a

But if you say that they used to say, 'With abounding love', how can you infer that one blessing is not indispensable for the recital of the other? Perhaps the reason why they did not say, 'Who formest the light' was because the time for it had not yet arrived,¹ but when the time for it did arrive, they used to say it! And if this statement was made only as an inference, what does it matter? — If it was made only as an inference [I might refute it as follows]: In fact, they said, 'With abounding love', and when the time came for 'Who formest the light', they said that too. What then is the meaning of 'One blessing is not indispensable for the other'? The order of the blessings is not indispensable.

'They recited the Ten Commandments, the Shema', the sections "And it shall come to pass if ye diligently hearken", and "And the Lord said", "True and firm", the 'Abodah, and the priestly benediction'. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Outside the Temple also people wanted to do the same,² but they were stopped on account of the insinuations of the Minim.³ Similarly it has been taught: R. Nathan says, They sought to do the same outside the Temple,⁴ but it had long been abolished on account of the insinuations of the Minim. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah⁵ had an idea of instituting this in Sura,⁶ but R. Hisda said to him, It had long been abolished on account of the insinuations of the Minim. Amemar had an idea of instituting it in Nehardea, but R. Ashi said to him, It had long been abolished on account of the insinuations of the Minim.

'On Sabbath they said an additional blessing on account of the outgoing watch'. What was this benediction? — R. Helbo said: The outgoing watch said to the incoming one, May He who has caused His name to dwell in this house cause to dwell among you love and brotherhood and peace and friendship.

WHERE THEY ORDAINED THAT A LONG BENEDICTION SHOULD BE SAID. There is no question that where a man took up a cup of wine thinking that it was beer and commenced [with the intention to say the benediction] for beer but finished with that of wine, he has fulfilled his obligation. For even had he said the benediction, 'By whose word all things exist',⁷ he would have fulfilled his duty, as we have learnt: 'In the case of all of them,⁸ if he says, "By whose word all things exist", he has performed his obligation'.⁹ But where he took up a cup of beer thinking it was wine and began [with the intention to say the benediction] for wine and finished with the benediction for beer, the question arises, do we judge his benediction according to its beginning or according to its ending? — Come and hear: 'In the morning, if one commenced with [the intention to say] "Who formest light" and finished with "Who bringest on the evening twilight",¹⁰ he has not performed his obligation; if he commences [with the intention to say] "Who bringest on the evening twilight" and finished with "Who formest the light", he has performed his obligation. In the evening, if one commenced [with the intention to say] "Who bringest on the evening twilight" and finished with "Who formest the light", he has not performed his obligation; if he begins with [the intention to say] "Who formest the light" and closes with "Who bringest on the evening twilight", he has performed his obligation. The principle is that the final form is decisive'. — It is different there because [at the end] he says, 'Blessed art Thou who formest the luminaries'.¹¹ This would be a good argument for Rab who said that any blessing that does not contain the mention of God's name is no blessing.¹² But if we accept the view of R. Johanan who said that any blessing that does not contain a mention of the divine kingship is no blessing, what can be said?¹³ Rather [we must reply]: Since Rabbah b. 'Ulla has said: So as to mention the distinctive quality of the day in the night-time and the distinctive feature of the night in the day-time,¹⁴ [we may assume that] when he said a blessing [with the divine name] and with the kingship¹⁵ in the beginning, he refers to both of them.¹⁶

Come and hear from the concluding clause: 'The principle is that the final form is decisive'. What further case is included by the words 'the principle is'? Is it not the one we have mentioned?¹⁷ — No; it is to include bread and dates. How are we to understand this? Shall I say that he ate bread thinking that he was eating dates,¹⁸ and commenced [with the intention of saying the benediction] for dates and finished [with the blessing for] bread? This is just the same thing! — No, this is required [for the case where] he ate dates thinking that he was eating bread, and he began with [the intention to say the blessing] for bread and finished with that of dates. In this case he has fulfilled his obligation; for even if he had concluded with the blessing for bread, he would also have fulfilled it. What is the reason? — Because dates also give sustenance.¹⁹

Raba b. Hinena the elder said in the name of Rab: If one omits to say True and firm²⁰ in the morning and 'True and trustworthy'²¹ in the evening, he has not performed his obligation; for it is said, To declare Thy lovingkindness in the morning and Thy faithfulness in the night seasons.²²

Raba b. Hinena the elder also said in the name of Rab: In saying the Tefillah, when one bows,²³ one should bow at [the word] 'Blessed' and when returning to the upright position one should return at [the mention of] the Divine Name. Samuel said: What is Rab's reason for this? — Because it is written: The Lord raiseth up them that are bowed down.²⁴ An objection was raised from the verse, And was bowed before My name?²⁵ — Is it written, 'At My name'? It is written,

'Before My Name'.²⁶ Samuel said to Hiyya the son of Rab: O, Son of the Law, come and I will tell you a fine saying enunciated by your father.²⁷ Thus said your father: When one bows, one should bow at 'Blessed', and when returning to the upright position, one should return at [the mention of] the Divine Name.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 12b

R. Shesheth, when he bowed, used to bend like a reed,¹ and when he raised himself, used to raise himself like a serpent.²

Raba b. Hinena the elder also said in the name of Rab: Throughout the year one says in the Tefillah, 'The holy God', and 'King who lovest righteousness and judgment',³ except during the ten days between New Year and the Day of Atonement, when he says, 'The holy King' and 'The King of judgment'. R. Eleazar says: Even during these days, if he said, 'The holy God', he has performed his obligation, since it says, But the Lord of Hosts is exalted through justice, and the holy God is sanctified through righteousness:⁴ When is the Lord of Hosts exalted through justice? In these ten days from New Year to the Day of Atonement; and none-the-less it says, 'the holy God'. What do we decide?⁵ — R. Joseph said: 'The holy God' and 'The King who loves righteousness and judgment'; Rabbah said: 'The holy King' and 'The King of judgment'. The law is as laid down by Rabbah.

Raba b. Hinena the elder said further in the name of Rab: If one is in a position to pray on behalf of his fellow and does not do so, he is called a sinner, as it says, Moreover as for me, far be it from me that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you.⁶ Raba said: If [his fellow] is a scholar, he must pray for him even to the point of making himself ill. What is the ground for this? Shall I say, because it is written, There is none of you that is sick for me or discloseth unto me?⁷ Perhaps the case of a king is different. It is in fact derived from here: But as for me, when they⁸ were sick, my clothing was sackcloth, I afflicted my soul with fasting.⁹

Raba b. Hinena the elder further said in the name of Rab: If one commits a sin and is ashamed of it,¹⁰ all his sins are forgiven him, as it says, That thou mayest remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more, because of thy shame; when I have forgiven thee all that thou hast done, saith the Lord God.¹¹ Perhaps with a whole congregation the case is different? — Rather [we derive it] from here: And Samuel said to Saul, Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up? And Saul answered, I am sore distressed; for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophets nor by dreams; therefore I called thee that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.¹² But he does not mention the Urim and Thummim¹³ because he had killed all [the people of] Nob, the city of the priests.¹⁴ And how do we know that Heaven had forgiven him? — Because it says, And Samuel said . . . Tomorrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me,¹⁵ and R. Johanan said: 'With me means, in my compartment [in Paradise]. The Rabbis say [we learn it] from here: We will hang them up unto the Lord in Gibeah of Saul, the chosen of the Lord.¹⁶ A divine voice came forth and proclaimed: The chosen of the Lord.¹⁷

R. Abbahu b. Zutrathi said in the name of R. Judah b. Zebida: They wanted to include the section of Balak¹⁸ in the Shema', but they did not do so because it would have meant too great a burden for the congregation.¹⁹ Why [did they want to insert it]? — Because it contains the words, God who brought them forth out of Egypt.²⁰ Then let us say the section of usury²¹ or of weights²² in which the going forth from Egypt is mentioned? — Rather, said R. Jose b. Abin, [the reason is] because it contains the verse, He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a lioness; who shall rouse him up?²³ Let us then say this one verse and no more? — We have a tradition that every section which our master, Moses, has divided off we may divide off, but that which our master, Moses, has not divided off, we may not divide off. Why did they include the section of fringes?²⁴ — R. Judah b. Habiba said: Because it makes reference to five²⁵ things — the precept of fringes, the exodus from Egypt, the yoke of the commandments, [a warning against] the opinions of the Minim, and the hankering after sexual immorality and the hankering after idolatry. The first three we grant you are obvious: the yoke of the commandments, as it is written: That ye may look upon it and remember all the commandments of the Lord;²⁶ the fringes, as it is written: That they make for themselves fringes;²⁷ the exodus from Egypt, as it is written: Who brought you out of the land of Egypt.²⁸ But where do we find [warnings against] the opinions of the heretics, and the hankering after immorality and idolatry? — It has been taught: After your own heart:²⁹ this refers to heresy; and so it says, The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.³⁰ After your own eyes:²⁹ this refers to the hankering after immorality; and so it says, And Samson said to his father, Get her for me, for she is pleasing in my eyes.³¹ After which ye use to go astray:²⁹ this refers to the hankering after idolatry; and so it says, And they went astray after the Baalim.³²

MISHNAH. THE EXODUS FROM EGYPT IS TO BE MENTIONED [IN THE SHEMA'] AT NIGHT-TIME. SAID R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH: BEHOLD I AM ABOUT³³ SEVENTY YEARS OLD,³³ AND I HAVE NEVER BEEN WORTHY TO [FIND A REASON] WHY THE EXODUS FROM EGYPT SHOULD BE MENTIONED AT NIGHTTIME UNTIL BEN ZOMA EXPOUNDED IT: FOR IT SAYS: THAT THOU MAYEST REMEMBER THE DAY WHEN THOU CAMEST FORTH OUT OF THE LAND OF EGYPT ALL THE DAYS OF THY LIFE.³⁴ [HAD THE TEXT SAID,] 'THE DAYS OF THY LIFE' IT WOULD HAVE MEANT [ONLY] THE DAYS; BUT 'ALL THE DAYS OF THY LIFE' INCLUDES THE NIGHTS AS WELL. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAY: 'THE DAYS OF THY LIFE REFERS TO THIS WORLD; ALL THE DAYS OF THY LIFE' IS TO ADD THE DAYS OF THE MESSIAH.

GEMARA. It has been taught: Ben Zoma said to the Sages: Will the Exodus from Egypt be mentioned in the days of the Messiah? Was it not long ago said: Therefore behold the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say: As the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, As the Lord liveth that brought up and that led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country and from all the countries whither I had driven them?³⁵ They replied: This does not mean that the mention of the exodus from Egypt shall be obliterated, but that the [deliverance from] subjection to the other kingdoms shall take the first place and the exodus from Egypt shall become secondary. Similarly you read: Thy name shall not be called any more Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name.³⁶

This does not mean that the name Jacob shall be obliterated, but that Israel shall be the principal name and Jacob a secondary one. And so it says: Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old.¹ 'Remember ye not the former things': this refers to the subjections to the other nations; 'Neither consider the things of old': this refers to the exodus from Egypt.

Behold I shall do a new thing; now shall it spring forth.² R. Joseph learnt: This refers to the war of Gog and Magog. A parable: To what is this like? To a man who was travelling on the road when he encountered a wolf and escaped from it, and he went along relating the affair of the wolf. He then encountered a lion and escaped from it, and went along relating the affair of the lion. He then encountered a snake and escaped from it, whereupon he forgot the two previous incidents and went along relating the affair of the snake. So with Israel: the later troubles make them forget the earlier ones.

Abram the same is Abraham.³ At first he became a father to Aram [Ab-Aram] only, but in the end he became a father to the whole world.⁴ [Similarly] Sarai is the same as Sarah. At first she became a princess to her own people, but later she became a princess to all the world.⁵ Bar Kappara taught: Whoever calls Abraham Abram transgresses a positive precept, since it says, Thy name shall be Abraham.⁶ R. Eliezer says: He transgresses a negative command,⁷ since it says, Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram.⁸ But if that is so, then the same should apply to one who calls Sarah Sarai? — In her case the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham, As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her Sarai, but Sarah shall her name be.⁹ But if that is so, the same should apply to one who calls Jacob Jacob? — There is a difference in his case, because Scripture restored it [the name Jacob] to him, as it is written: And God spoke unto Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob.¹⁰ R. Jose b. Abin (or, as some say, R. Jose b. Zebida) cited in objection the following: Thou art the Lord, the God who didst choose Abram!¹¹ — The answer was given: There the prophet¹² is recounting the noble deeds of the All Merciful [and relates] that that was the case originally.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. IF ONE WAS READING IN THE TORAH [THE SECTION OF THE SHEMA'] WHEN THE TIME FOR ITS RECITAL ARRIVED, IF HE HAD THE INTENTION¹³ HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IN THE BREAKS¹⁴ ONE MAY GIVE GREETING OUT OF RESPECT¹⁵ AND RETURN GREETING; IN THE MIDDLE [OF A SECTION] ONE MAY GIVE GREETING OUT OF FEAR¹⁶ AND RETURN IT. SO R. MEIR. RABBI JUDAH SAYS: IN THE MIDDLE ONE MAY GIVE GREETING OUT OF FEAR AND RETURN IT OUT OF RESPECT, IN THE BREAKS ONE MAY GIVE GREETING OUT OF RESPECT AND RETURN GREETING TO ANYONE. THE BREAKS ARE AS FOLLOWS: BETWEEN THE FIRST BLESSING AND THE SECOND,¹⁷ BETWEEN THE SECOND AND 'HEAR', BETWEEN 'HEAR' AND 'AND IT SHALL COME TO PASS', BETWEEN AND IT SHALL COME TO PASS' AND 'AND THE LORD SAID AND BETWEEN AND THE LORD SAID' AND 'TRUE AND FIRM'.¹⁸ RABBI JUDAH SAYS: BETWEEN 'AND THE LORD SAID' AND 'TRUE AND FIRM' ONE SHOULD NOT INTERRUPT.

R. JOSHUA B. KORHAH SAID: WHY WAS THE SECTION OF 'HEAR' PLACED BEFORE THAT OF 'AND IT SHALL COME TO PASS'? SO THAT ONE SHOULD FIRST ACCEPT UPON HIMSELF THE YOKE OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN¹⁹ AND THEN TAKE UPON HIMSELF THE YOKE OF THE COMMANDMENTS.²⁰ WHY DOES THE SECTION OF 'AND IT SHALL COME TO PASS' COME BEFORE THAT OF 'AND THE LORD SAID'? BECAUSE [THE SECTION] 'AND IT SHALL COME TO PASS' IS APPLICABLE BOTH TO THE DAY AND TO THE NIGHT,²¹ WHEREAS [THE SECTION] 'AND THE LORD SAID' IS APPLICABLE ONLY TO THE DAY.²²

GEMARA. This²³ proves that precepts must be performed with intent.²⁴ [No, perhaps] what IF HE HAD THE INTENTION means is, if it was his intention to read the Scripture? 'To read'? But surely he is reading! — [The Mishnah may refer] to one who is reading [a scroll] in order to revise it.²⁵

Our Rabbis taught: The Shema' must be recited as it is written.²⁶ So Rabbi. The Sages, however, say that it may be recited in any language. What is Rabbi's reason? — Scripture says: and they shall be,²⁷ implying, as they are they shall remain.²⁸ What is the reason of the Rabbis? — Scripture says 'hear',²⁹ implying, in any language that you understand.³⁰ Rabbi also must see that 'hear' is written? — He requires it [for the lesson]: Make your ear hear what your mouth utters.²¹

, The Rabbis, however, concur with the authority who says that even if he did not say it audibly he has performed his obligation. The Rabbis too must see that ‘and they shall be’ is written? — They require this to teach that he must not say the words out of order. Whence does Rabbi derive the rule that he must not say the words out of order? — He derives it from the fact that the [text says] ‘ha-debarim’ [the words] when it might have said simply debarim [words]. And the Rabbis? — They derive no lesson from the substitution of ha-debarim for debarim.

May we assume that Rabbi was of opinion that the whole Torah is allowed to be read in any language, since if you assume that it is allowed to be read only in the holy tongue, why the ‘and they shall be’ written by the All-Merciful? — This was necessary, because ‘hear’ is written.³¹ May we assume that the Rabbis were of opinion that the whole Torah is allowed to be read only in the holy tongue. since if you assume that it is allowed to be read only in any language. why the ‘hear’ written by the All-Merciful? — It is necessary because ‘and they shall be’ is written.³²

Our Rabbis taught: ‘And they shall be’.³³ This teaches that they must not be read backwards. ‘These words upon thy heart’.³³ Am I to say that the whole [first] section requires kawanah?³⁴ Therefore the text says ‘these’: up to this point kawanah is necessary, from this point kawanah is not necessary. So R. Eliezer. Said R. Akiba to him: Behold it says.

(1) Isa. XLIII, 18.

(2) Ibid. 29.

(3) I Chron. I, 27.

(4) As it says, Behold I have made thee a father of a multitude of nations, Gen. XVII, 5.

(5) ‘Sarai’ means literally ‘my princess’, Sarah ‘princess’ simply.

(6) Ibid.

(7) Which is more serious.

(8) Ibid.

(9) Sc. for you but not necessarily for others. Gen. XVII, 15.

(10) Ibid. XLVI, 2.

(11) Neh. IX, 7.

(12) Nehemiah, so called because he was here speaking under the guidance of the holy spirit.

(13) This is explained in the Gemara. Lit., ‘he directed his heart’.

(14) Between the sections, as presently explained.

(15) E.g., to a teacher.

(16) To one who he is afraid will harm him if he does not give greeting, but not merely out of respect.

(17) V. P.B. p. 39.

(18) Ibid. p. 42.

(19) By proclaiming the unity of God.

(20) By saying the words, if ye shall diligently hearken to all My commandments.

(21) Since it mentions all the commandments.

(22) Since it mentions only the precept of fringes, which is not obligatory by night.

(23) The words IF HE HAD INTENTION.

(24) And not, as it were, accidentally.

(25) And is not attending to the sense.

(26) I.e., in the original language.

(27) Deut. VI, 6.

(28) Lit., 'in their being they shall be'.

(29) Ibid. 4.

(30) The Hebrew verb shema, like the French entendre, means both 'hear' and 'understand'. (21) I.e., say it audibly.

(31) And otherwise I might take this to imply, in any language.

(32) Which otherwise I might take to imply, in the original only.

(33) Deut. VI, 6.

(34) The Hebrew word kawanah combines the meanings of attention and intention-attention to what is being said, intention to perform the commandment.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 13b

Which I command thee this day upon thy heart. From this you learn that the whole section requires to be said with kawanah. Rabbah b. Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah is as laid down by R. Akiba. Some refer this statement¹ to the following. as it has been taught: One who reads the Shema' must pay proper attention² to what he says. R. Aha said in the name of R. Judah: If he has paid proper attention to the first section, he need not do so for the rest. Rabba b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah is as stated by R. Aha in the name of R. Judah.

Another [Baraita] taught: 'And they shall be': this teaches that they must not be said backwards. 'upon thy heart': R. Zutra says: Up to this point extends the command of kawanah,³ from this point only the command of reciting applies. R. Josiah says: Up to this point extends the command of reciting; from this point the command of kawanah applies. Why this difference in the application from this point of the command of reciting? [presumably] because it is written 'to speak of them';⁴ here too [in the first] also it is written, 'and thou shalt speak of them'!⁵ What he means is this: Up to this point applies the command both of kawanah and reciting; from this point onwards applies the command of reciting [even] without kawanah.⁶ And why this difference in the application up to the point of the command both of reciting and kawanah? [presumably] because it is written, upon thy heart and thou shalt speak of them?⁷ [In the second section] there too it is written, 'upon thy hearts to speak of them'.⁸ That text was required for the lesson enunciated by R. Isaac, who said: 'Ye shall put these my words [upon your hearts]';⁸ it is requisite that the placing [of the tefillin] should be opposite the heart.

The Master stated [above]: 'R. Josiah said: Up to this point extends the command of reciting; from this point onwards the command of kawanah applies'. Why this difference in the application from this point onward of the command of kawanah? [Presumably] because it is written, 'upon your heart'? There too [in the first section] also it is written upon thy heart? — What he meant is this: Up to this point applies the command of reciting and kawanah, from this point onwards applies that of kawanah [even] without reciting.⁹ Why this difference in the application up to this point of the command of reciting and kawanah? [Presumably] because it is written, 'upon thy heart and thou shalt speak of them'? There too [in the second section] also it is written, 'upon your heart to speak. of them'! These words have reference to words of Torah, and what the All-Merciful meant is this: Teach your children Torah, so that they may be fluent in them.

Our Rabbis taught: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one.¹⁰ Up to this point concentration¹¹ is required. So says R. Meir. Raba said: The halachah is as stated by R. Meir.

It has been taught: Symmachus says: Whoever prolongs the word ehad [one]. has his days and years prolonged. R. Aha b. Jacob said: [He must dwell] on the dalet.¹² R. Ashi said: Provided he does not slur over the heth.¹³ R. Jeremiah was once sitting before R. Hiyya b. Abba, and the latter saw that he was prolonging [the word ehad] very much. He said to him: Once you have declared Him king¹⁴ over [all that is] above and below and over the four quarters of the 'heaven, no more is required.

R. Nathan b. Mar 'Ukba said in the name of Rab Judah: 'upon thy heart' must be said standing. [Only] 'Upon thy heart'? How can you assume this? Rather say: Up to 'upon thy heart' must be said standing; from there onwards not [necessarily]. R. Johanan, however, said: The whole [first] section must be said standing. And R. Johanan in this is consistent; for Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah is as stated by R. Aha in the name of R. Judah.¹⁵

Our Rabbis taught: 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one': this was R. Judah the Prince's recital of the Shema'.¹⁶ Rab said once to R. Hiyya: I do not see Rabbi accept upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven.¹⁷ He replied to him: Son of Princes!¹⁸ In the moment when he passes his hand over his eyes, he accepts upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven. Does he finish it afterwards or does he not finish it afterwards?¹⁹ Bar Kappara said: He does not finish it afterwards; R. Simeon son of Rabbi said, He does finish it afterwards. Said Bar Kappara to R. Simeon the son of Rabbi: On my view that he does not finish it afterwards, there is a good reason why Rabbi always is anxious to take a lesson in which there is mention of the exodus from Egypt.²⁰ But on your view that he does finish it afterwards, why is he anxious to take such a lesson? — So as to mention the going forth from Egypt at the proper time.²¹

R. Ela the son of R. Samuel b. Martha said in the name of Rab: If one said 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one', and was then overpowered by sleep, he has performed his obligation. R. Nahman said to his slave Daru: For the first verse prod me,²² but do not prod me for any more. R. Joseph said to R. Joseph the son of Rabbah: How did your father use to do? He replied: For the first verse he used to take pains [to keep awake], for the rest he did not use to take pains.

R. Joseph said: A man lying on his back should not recite the Shema'. [This implies] that he may not read [the Shema' lying on his back], but there is no objection to his sleeping in this posture. But did not R. Joshua b. Levi curse anyone who slept lying on his back?²³ In reply it was said: To sleeping thus if he turns over a little on his side there is no objection, but to read the Shema' thus is forbidden even if he turns over somewhat. But R. Johanan turned over a little and read the Scripture? — R. Johanan was an exception, because he was very corpulent.

IN THE BREAKS HE MAY GIVE GREETING etc. For what may he RETURN GREETING? Shall I say, out of respect? But seeing that he may give greeting, is there any question that he may return it? Rather [what I must say is]: He gives greeting out of respect and returns greeting to anyone. [But then] read the next clause: IN THE MIDDLE HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF FEAR AND RETURNS IT. Returns it for what reason? Shall I say, out of fear? But seeing that he may give greeting, is there any question that he may return it? Rather [what we must say is], out of respect. But then this is the view of R. Judah,²⁴ as we learn, R. JUDAH SAYS: IN THE MIDDLE HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF FEAR AND RETURNS IT OUT OF RESPECT, AND IN THE BREAKS HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF RESPECT AND RETURNS GREETING TO ANYONE? — There is a lacuna, and [our Mishnah] should read as follows: IN THE BREAKS HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF RESPECT, and needless to say he may return it, AND IN THE MIDDLE HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF FEAR and needless to say he may return it. So R. Meir. R. Judah says: IN THE MIDDLE HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF FEAR AND RETURNS IT OUT OF RESPECT,

AND IN THE BREAKS HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF RESPECT AND RETURNS IT TO ANYONE. It has been taught similarly: If one was reciting the Shema' and his teacher or superior meets him in the breaks, he may give greeting out of respect, and needless to say he may return it, and in the middle he may give greeting out of fear and needless to say he may return it. So R. Meir. R. Judah said: In the middle he may give greeting out of fear and return it out of respect, and in the breaks he may give greeting out of respect and return it to anyone.

Ahi the Tanna¹ of the school of R. Hiyya put a question to R. Hiyya: What of interrupting [to give greeting] during the recital of Hallel² and the reading of the Megillah?² Do we argue a fortiori that if he may interrupt during the recital of the Shema' which is a Biblical precept, there is no question that he may do so during the recital of Hallel, which is a Rabbinical precept, or do we say that the proclaiming of the miracle³ is more important? — He replied: He may interrupt, and there is no objection. Rabbah said: On the days on which the individual says the complete Hallel,⁴ he may interrupt between one section and another but not in the middle of a section; on the days on which the individual does not say the complete Hallel⁵ he may interrupt even in the middle of a section. But that is not so. For surely Rab b. Shaba once happened to visit Rabina on one of the days on which the individual does not say the complete Hallel and he [Rabina] did not break off to greet him? — It is different with Rab b. Shaba, because Rabina had no great respect for him.

Ashian the Tanna' of the school of R. Ammi enquired of R. Ammi: May one who is keeping a [voluntary]⁶ fast take a taste?⁷ Has he undertaken to abstain from eating and drinking, and this is really not such, or has he undertaken not to have any enjoyment, and this he obtains? — He replied: He may taste, and there is no objection. It has been taught similarly: A mere taste does not require a blessing, and one who is keeping a [voluntary] fast may take a taste, and there is no objection. How much may he taste? — R. Ammi and R. Assi used to taste as much as a rebi'ith.⁸

Rab said: If one gives greeting to his fellow before he has said his prayers⁹ it is as if he made him a high place, as it says, Cease ye from man in whose nostrils is a breath, for how little is he to be accounted!¹⁰ Read not bammeh [how little], but bammah [high place].¹¹ Samuel interpreted: How come you to esteem this man and not God?¹² R. Shesheth raised an objection: IN THE BREAKS HE GIVES GREETING OUT OF RESPECT AND RETURNS IT!¹³ — R. Abba explains the dictum to refer to one who rises early to visit another.¹⁴ R. Jonah said in the name of R. Zera: If a man does his own business before he says his prayers, it is as if he had built a high place. He said to him: A high place, do you say? No, he replied; I only mean that it is forbidden.¹⁵ R. Idi b. Abin said in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian:¹⁶ It is forbidden to a man to do his own business before he says his prayers, as it says, Righteousness shall go before him and then he shall set his steps on his own way.¹⁷

R. Jonah further said in the name of R. Zera: Whoever goes seven days without a dream is called evil, as it says, And he that hath it shall abide satisfied; he shall not be visited with evil.¹⁸ Read not sabea', [satisfied] but sheba' [seven].¹⁹ R. Aha the son of R. Hiyya b. Abba said to him: Thus said R. Hiyya in the name of R. Johanan: Whoever sates himself with words of Torah before he retires will receive no evil tidings, as it says, And if he abides sated he shall not be visited with evil.

THE BREAKS ARE AS FOLLOWS etc. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah follows R. Judah, who says that one should not interrupt between 'your God' and 'True and firm'. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: What is R. Judah's reason? Because we find in Scripture the words,

- (1) The one who repeated the section of the Mishnah for the teacher to expound. V. Glos. s.v. (b).
 - (2) V. Glos.
 - (3) The Hallel proclaims the exodus on Passover, and the Megillah the miraculous deliverance from Haman.
 - (4) E.g., Tabernacles and Hanukah. V. 'Ar. 10b.
 - (5) Viz., New Moon and the last six days of passover.
 - (6) V. Tosaf s.v.
 - (7) To see if food is cooked properly.
 - (8) A fourth of a log, i.e., about an egg and a half.
 - (9) I.e., before he recites the tefillah.
 - (10) Isa. II, 22.
 - (11) And render, if he is esteemed he becomes a high place.
 - (12) Samuel draws a similar lesson without altering the text.
 - (13) Though the Shema' is said before the tefillah.
 - (14) After the manner of the Roman clientes with their patrons. But if one meets his neighbour he may greet him.
 - (15) But it is not so bad as idolatry.
 - (16) This is the reading of Rashi. Cur. edd. have: This agrees with the dictum of R. Idi b. Abin etc., which is obviously a contradiction.
 - (17) Ps. LXXXV, 14. 'Righteousness' here is taken to mean justification by prayer. E.V., 'Righteousness shall go before Him and shall make His footsteps a way'.
 - (18) Prov. XIX, 23.
 - (19) And render, 'if he abides seven nights without and is not visited (with a dream, this shows that) he is evil'.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 14b

The Lord God is truth.¹ Does he repeat the word 'true'² or does he not repeat the word 'true'? — R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: He repeats the word 'true'; Rabbah says: He does not repeat the word 'true'. A certain man went down to act as reader before Rabbah, and Rabbah heard him say 'truth, truth', twice; whereupon he remarked: The whole of truth has got hold of this man.³

R. Joseph said: How fine was the statement which was brought by R. Samuel b. Judah when he reported that in the West [Palestine] they say [in the evening], Speak unto the children of Israel and thou shalt say unto them, I am the Lord your God, True.⁴ Said Abaye to him: What is there so fine about it, seeing that R. Kahana has said in the name of Rab: [In the evening] one need not begin [this third section of the Shema'] but if he does begin, he should go through with it? And should you say that the words, 'and thou shalt say unto them' do not constitute a beginning, has not R. Samuel b. Isaac said in the name of Rab, 'Speak unto the children of Israel' is no beginning, but 'and thou shalt say unto them' is a beginning? — R. Papa said: In the West they hold that 'and thou shalt say unto them' also is no beginning, until one says, 'and they shall make unto themselves fringes'. Abaye said: Therefore we [in Babylon] begin [the section], because they begin it in the West; and since we begin we go through with it, because R. Kahana has said in the name of Rab: One need not begin, but if he begins he should go through with it.

Hiyya b. Rab said: If one has said [in the evening] 'I am the Lord your God,' he must say also,

‘True [etc.]’; if he has not said ‘I am the Lord your God’, he need not say ‘True’. But one has to mention the going forth from Egypt?⁵ — He can say thus: We give thanks to Thee O Lord our God, that Thou hast brought us forth from the land of Egypt and redeemed us from the house of servitude and wrought for us miracles and mighty deeds, by the [Red] Sea, and we did sing unto Thee.⁶

R. JOSHUA B. KORHAH SAID: WHY IS THE SECTION OF ‘HEAR’ SAID BEFORE etc. It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai says: It is right that ‘Hear’ should come before ‘And it shall come to pass because the former prescribes learning⁷ and the latter teaching,⁸ and that ‘and it shall come to pass’ should precede ‘And the Lord said’ because the former prescribes teaching and the latter performance. But does then ‘hear’ speak only of learning and not also of teaching and doing? Is it not written therein, ‘And thou shalt teach diligently, and thou shalt bind them and thou shalt write them’? Also, does ‘and it shall come to pass’ speak only of teaching and not also of performance? Is it not written therein, ‘and ye shall bind and ye shall write’? — Rather this is what he means to say: It is right that ‘hear’ should precede ‘and it shall come to pass’, because the former mentions both learning, teaching, and doing; and that ‘and it shall come to pass’ should precede ‘and the Lord said’, because the former mentions both teaching and doing, whereas the latter mentions doing only. But is not the reason given by R. Joshua b. Korhah sufficient? — He [R. Simeon b. Yohai] gave an additional reason. One is that he should first accept Upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven and then accept the yoke of the commandments. A further reason is that it [the first section] has these other features.

Rab once washed his hands and recited the Shema’ and put on tefillin and said the tefillah. But how could he act in this way,⁹ seeing that it has been taught: ‘One who digs a niche in a grave for a corpse is exempt from reciting Shema’ and tefillah and from tefillin and from all the commandments prescribed in the Torah. When the hour for reciting the Shema’ arrives, he goes up and washes his hands and puts on tefillin and recites the Shema’ and says the tefillah?’ Now this statement itself contains a contradiction. First it says that he is exempt and then it says that he is under obligation? — This is no difficulty; the latter clause speaks of where there are two,¹⁰ the former of where there is only one. In any case this seems to contradict Rab? — Rab held with R. Joshua b. Korhah, who said that first he accepts the yoke of the kingdom of heaven and then he accepts the yoke of the commandments.¹¹ I will grant you that R. Joshua b. Korhah meant that the recital [of one section] should precede that of the other. But can you understand him to mean that the recital should precede the act [of putting on the tefillin]? And further, did Rab really adopt the view of R. Joshua b. Korhah? Did not R. Hiyya b. Ashi say: On many occasions I stood before Rab when he rose early and said a blessing and taught us our section and put on phylacteries and then recited the Shema’?¹² And should you say, he did this only when the hour for reciting the Shema’ had not yet arrived — if that is so what is the value of the testimony of R. Hiyya b. Ashi? — To refute the one who says that a blessing need not be said for the study of the Mishnah;¹³ he teaches us that for the Mishnah also a blessing must be said. All the same there is a contradiction of Rab?¹⁴ — His messenger was at fault.¹⁵ ‘Ulla said: If one recites the Shema’ without tefillin it is as if he bore false witness against himself.¹⁶ R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: It is as if he offered a burnt-offering without a meal-offering and a sacrifice without drink-offering.

R. Johanan also said: If one desires to accept upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven in the most complete manner

- (1) Jer. X, 10. E.V. 'the true God'.
- (2) After concluding the Shema' with the word true, does he have to repeat the word which is really the beginning of the next paragraph in the prayers?
- (3) Sc., he cannot stop saying 'truth'.
- (4) I.e., the opening and closing words of the third section, omitting the middle part which deals with the fringes since the law of fringes does not apply at night.
- (5) And if he omits both the third section and 'True and faithful' where does he mention it?
- (6) And he then continues, 'Who is like unto Thee' and 'Cause us to lie down'. P.B., p. 99.
- (7) As it says, and thou shalt speak.

, he should consult nature and wash his hands and put on tefillin and recite the Shema' and say the tefillah: this is the complete acknowledgment of the kingdom of heaven. R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: If one consults nature and washes his hands and puts on tefillin and recites the Shema' and says the tefillah, Scripture accounts it to him as if he had built an altar and offered a sacrifice upon it, as it is written, I will wash my hands in innocency and I will compass Thine altar, O Lord.¹ Said Raba to him: Does not your honour think that it is as if he had bathed himself, since it is written, I will wash in purity and it is not written, 'I will wash my hands'.²

Rabina said to Raba: Sir, pray look at this student who has come from the West [Palestine] and who says: If one has no water for washing his hands, he can rub³ his hands with earth or with a pebble or with sawdust. He replied: He is quite correct. Is it written, I will wash in water? It is written: In cleanliness — with anything which cleans. For R. Hisda cursed anyone who went looking for water at the time of prayer.⁴ This applies to the recital of the Shema', but for the tefillah one may go looking. How far? — As far as a parasang. This is the case in front of him, but in the rear, he may not go back even a mil. [From which is to be deduced], A mil he may not go back; but less than a mil he may go back.

MISHNAH. IF ONE RECITES THE SHEMA' WITHOUT HEARING WHAT HE SAYS, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. R. JOSE SAYS: HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IF HE RECITES IT WITHOUT PRONOUNCING THE LETTERS

CORRECTLY, R. JOSE SAYS THAT HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION, R. JUDAH SAYS THAT HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IF HE RECITES IT BACKWARD,⁵ HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. IF HE RECITES IT AND MAKES A MISTAKE HE GOES BACK TO THE PLACE WHERE HE MADE THE MISTAKE.

GEMARA. What is R. Jose's reason? — Because it is written, 'Hear' which implies, let your ear hear what you utter with your mouth. The first Tanna, however, maintains that 'hear' means, in any language that you understand. But R. Jose derives both lessons from the word.

We have learnt elsewhere: A deaf person who can speak but not hear should not set aside terumah;⁶ if, however, he does set aside, his action is valid. Who is it that teaches that the action of a deaf man who can speak but not hear in setting aside terumah is valid if done, but should not be done in the first instance? — Said R. Hisda: It is R. Jose, as we have learnt: IF ONE RECITES THE SHEMA' WITHOUT HEARING WHAT HE SAYS, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. R. JOSE SAYS: HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. Now R. Jose holds that he has not performed his obligation only in the case of the recital of the Shema', which is Scriptural, but the setting aside of terumah, [is forbidden] only on account of the blessing, and blessings are an ordinance of the Rabbis,⁷ and the validity of the act does not depend upon the blessing. But why should you say that this⁸ is R. Jose's opinion? Perhaps it is R. Judah's opinion, and he holds that in the case of the recital of the Shema' also, it is valid only if the act is done, but it should not be done in the first instance, and the proof of this is that he states, IF ONE RECITES, which implies, if done, it is done, but it should not be done in the first instance? — The answer is: The reason why it says, IF ONE RECITES, is to show you how far R. Jose is prepared to go, since he says that even if it is done it is not valid. For as to R. Judah, he holds that even if he does it in the first instance he has performed his obligation. Now what is your conclusion? That it is the opinion of R. Jose. What then of this which we have learnt: A man should not say the grace after meals mentally, but if he does so he has performed his obligation. Whose opinion is this? It is neither R. Jose's nor R. Judah's. For it cannot be R. Judah's, since he said that even if he does so in the first instance he has performed his obligation; nor can it be R. Jose's, since he says that even if done it is not valid!⁹ What must we say then? That it is R. Judah's opinion' and he holds that it is valid only if done but it should not be done in the first instance. But what of this which was taught by R. Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi: A deaf man who can speak but not hear may set aside terumah in the first instance. Whose view does this follow? It can be neither R. Judah's nor R. Jose's. For as for R. Judah, he says that it is valid only if done but it should not be done in the first instance; while R. Jose says that even if done it is not valid! In fact it follows R. Judah's view, and he holds that it may be done even in the first instance, and there is no contradiction [between the two views attributed to him], one being his own and the other that of his teacher, as we have learnt: R. Judah said in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah: When one recites the Shema', he must let himself hear what he says,¹⁰ as it says, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one'. Said R. Meir to him: Behold it says, 'Which I command thee this day upon thy heart': on the intention of the heart depends the validity of the words.¹¹ If you come so far, you may even say that R. Judah agreed with his teacher, and there is no contradiction: one statement¹² gives R. Meir's view, the other R. Judah's.

We have learnt elsewhere:¹³ All are qualified to read the Megillah¹⁴ except a deaf-mute, an imbecile and a minor; R. Judah declares a minor qualified. Who is it that declares the act of a deaf-mute, even if done, to be invalid?¹⁵ R. Mattena says: It is R. Jose, as we have learnt: IF ONE RECITES THE SHEMA' WITHOUT HEARING WHAT HE SAYS, HE HAS PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. SO R. JUDAH. R. JOSE SAYS: HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION. But why should we say that the above statement [regarding a deaf-mute] follows R. Jose, and that the act even if done is invalid?

(1) Ps. XXVI, 6.

(2) Raba apparently stresses the order of the words in the original, and renders: I will (do the equivalent) of bathing in purity [by washing] my hands.

(3) Lit., 'wipe'.

(4) And so delayed to say his prayers.

(5) I.e., with the sections in the wrong order.

(6) Because he cannot hear the blessing which he has to say over the action.

(7) V. Pes. 7.

(8) That a deaf man should not set aside terumah.

(9) Since grace after meals is a Scriptural injunction.

(10) I.e., in the first instance, but the act if done is valid.

(11) Hence even in the first instance the act is valid.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 15b

Perhaps it follows R. Judah, and while the act may not be done [only] in the first instance, yet if done it is valid? — Do not imagine such a thing. For the statement puts a deaf-mute on the same level as an imbecile and a minor, [implying that] just as in the case of an imbecile and a minor the act if done is not valid,¹ so in the case of a deaf-mute the act if done is not valid. But perhaps each case has its own rule?² — But [even if so] can you construe this statement as following R. Judah? Since the later clause³ says that 'R. Judah declares it valid', may we not conclude that the earlier clause does not follow R. Judah? — Perhaps the whole statement follows R. Judah, and two kinds of minor are referred to, and there is a lacuna, and the whole should read thus: All are qualified to read the Megillah except a deaf-mute, an imbecile and a minor. This applies only to one who is not old enough to be trained [in the performance of the precepts].⁴ But one who is old enough to be trained may perform the act even in the first instance. This is the ruling of R. Judah: for R. Judah declares a minor qualified. How have you construed the statement? As following R. Judah, and that the act is valid only if done but should not be done in the first instance. But then what of that which R. Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi taught, that a deaf person who can speak but not hear may set aside terumah in the first instance—which authority does this follow? It is neither R. Judah nor R. Jose! For if it is R. Judah, he says that the act is valid only if done, but it may not be done in the first instance; and if R. Jose, he says that even if done it is not valid! — What then do you say, that the authority is R. Judah and that the act may be done even in the first instance?

What then of this which has been taught: A man should not say the grace after meals mentally, but if he does so he has performed his obligation? Whose opinion is this? It can be neither R. Judah's nor R. Jose's. For as to R. Judah, he has said that it may be done even in the first instance, and as to R. Jose, he has said that even if done it is not valid! — In truth it is the opinion of R. Judah, and the act may be done even in the first instance, and there is no contradiction between his two statements; in one case he is giving his own view, in the other that of his teacher, as it has been taught: R. Judah said in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah: One who recites the Shema' must let his ear hear what he says, as it says, 'Hear, O Israel'. Said R. Meir to him: 'Which I command thee this day upon thy heart', indicating that the words derive their validity from the attention of the heart. Now that you have come so far, you may even say that R. Judah was of the same opinion as his teacher, and still there is no contradiction: one statement gives the view of R. Judah, the other that of R. Meir.

R. Hisda said in the name of R. Shila: The halachah is as laid down by R. Judah in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, and the halachah is as laid down by R. Judah. Both these statements are necessary. For if we had been told only that the halachah is as stated by R. Judah I might have thought that the act may be done even in the first instance. We are therefore informed that the halachah is as laid down by R. Judah in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah. And if we had been told that the halachah is as laid down by R. Judah in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, I might have thought that the act must [be performed thus] and if not there is no remedy.⁵ We are therefore informed that the halachah is as stated by R. Judah.

R. Joseph said: The difference of opinion relates only to the recital of the Shema', but in the case of other religious acts all agree that he has not performed his obligation [if he says the formula inaudibly], as it is written, attend and hear, O Israel.⁶ An objection was raised: A man should not say grace after meals mentally, but if he does he has performed his obligation! — Rather, if this statement was made it was as follows: R. Joseph said: The difference of opinion relates only to the Shema', since it is written, 'Hear O Israel'; but in regard to all the other religious acts, all are agreed that he performs his obligation. But it is written, 'Attend and hear, O Israel'? — That [text] applies only to words of Torah.⁷

IF ONE RECITED WITHOUT PRONOUNCING THE LETTERS DISTINCTLY. R. Tabi said in the name of R. Josiah: The halachah in both cases follows the more lenient authority.⁸

R. Tabi further said in the name of R. Josiah: What is meant by the text, There are three things which are never satisfied, . . . the grave and the barren womb?⁹ How comes the grave next to the womb? It is to teach you that just as the womb takes in and gives forth again, so the grave takes in and will give forth again. And have we not here a conclusion a fortiori: if the womb which takes in silently gives forth with loud noise,¹⁰ does it not stand to reason that the grave which takes in with loud noise¹¹ will give forth with loud noise? Here is a refutation of those who deny that resurrection is taught in the Torah.¹²

R. Oshaia taught in the presence of Raba: And thou shalt write them:¹³ the whole section must be written [in the mezuzah¹⁴ and tefillin], even the commands.¹⁵ He said to him: From whom do you learn this?¹⁶ This is the opinion of R. Judah, who said with reference to the sotah:¹⁷ He writes the imprecation but not the commands. [And you argue that] this is the rule in that case, since it is written, And he shall write these curses,¹⁸ but here, since it is written, ‘and thou shalt write them’, even the commands are included. But is R. Judah's reason because it is written, ‘and he shall write’? [Surely] R. Judah's reason is because it is written, ‘curses’, which implies, curses he is to write but not commands!¹⁹ — It was still necessary.²⁰ You might have thought that we should draw an analogy between the ‘writing’ mentioned here and the ‘writing’ mentioned there, and that just as there he writes curses but not commands, so here he should not write commands. Therefore the All-Merciful wrote ‘and thou shalt write them’, implying, commands also.

R. Obadiah recited in the presence of Raba: ‘And ye shall teach them’:²¹ as much as to say thy teaching must be faultless²² by making a pause ‘between the joints’.²³ For instance, said Raba, supplementing his words ‘Al lebabeka [upon thy heart], ‘al lebabekem [upon your heart], Bekol lebabeka [with all thy heart], bekol lebabekem [with all your heart], ‘eseb be-sadeka [grass in thy field], wa-’abaddetem meherah [and ye shall perish speedily], ha-kanaf pesil [the corner a thread], etthkem me-erez [you from the land]. R. Hama b. Hanina said: If one in reciting the Shema’ pronounces the letters distinctly, hell is cooled for him, as it says, When the Almighty scattereth kings therein, it snoweth in Zalmon.²⁴ Read not be-fares [when he scattereth] but befaresh [when one pronounces distinctly], and read not be-zalmon [in Zalmon] but be-zalmaweth [in the shadow of death].

R. Hama b. Hanina further said: Why are ‘tents’ mentioned

- (1) This is deduced in respect of a minor from the fact that he is mentioned in conjunction with an imbecile.
 - (2) I.e., we do not put a deaf-mute on the same footing as an imbecile, although they are mentioned in conjunction.

alongside of 'streams' as it says, [How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob . . .]¹ as streams² stretched out, as gardens by the river side, as aloes planted³ etc.? To tell you that, just as streams bring a man up from a state of uncleanness to one of cleanness, so tents⁴ bring a man up from the scale of guilt to the scale of merit.

IF ONE RECITES IT BACKWARD, HE HAS NOT PERFORMED HIS OBLIGATION etc. R. Ammi and R. Assi were once decorating the bridal chamber for R. Eleazar. He said to them: In the meantime I will go and pick up something from the House of Study and come back and tell you. He went and found a Tanna reciting before R. Johanan: If [reciting the Shema'] one [recollects that] he made a mistake but does not know where, if he is in the middle of a section he should go back to the beginning; if he is in doubt which section he has said, he should go back to the first break;⁵ if he is in doubt which writing⁶ he is on, he goes back to the first one. Said R. Johanan to him: This rule applies only where he has not yet got to 'In order that your days may be prolonged', but if he has got to 'In order that your days may be prolonged', then [he can assume that] force of habit has kept him right.⁷ He came and told them, and they said to him, If we had come only to hear this, it would have been worth our while.

MISHNAH. WORKMEN MAY RECITE [THE SHEMA'] ON THE TOP OF A TREE OR THE TOP OF A SCAFFOLDING, A THING THEY ARE NOT ALLOWED TO DO IN THE CASE OF THE TEFILLAH. A BRIDEGROOM IS EXEMPT FROM THE RECITAL OF THE SHEMA' FROM THE FIRST NIGHT UNTIL THE END OF THE SABBATH, IF HE HAS NOT CONSUMMATED THE MARRIAGE.⁸ IT HAPPENED WITH R. GAMALIEL THAT WHEN HE MARRIED HE RECITED THE SHEMA ON THE FIRST NIGHT: SO HIS DISCIPLES SAID TO HIM: OUR MASTER, YOU HAVE TAUGHT US THAT A BRIDEGROOM IS EXEMPT FROM THE RECITAL OF THE SHEMA'. HE REPLIED TO THEM: I WILL NOT LISTEN TO YOU TO REMOVE FROM MYSELF THE KINGSHIP OF HEAVEN EVEN FOR A MOMENT.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Workmen may recite [the Shema'] on the top of a tree or on the top of a scaffolding, and they may say the tefillah, on the top of an olive tree and the top of a fig tree,⁹ but from all other trees they must come down to the ground before saying the tefillah, and the employer must in any case come down before saying the tefillah,¹⁰ the reason in all cases being that their mind is not clear.¹¹ R. Mari the son of the daughter of Samuel¹² pointed out to Rab a contradiction. We have learnt, he said: WORKMEN MAY RECITE [THE SHEMA'] ON THE TOP OF A TREE OR THE TOP OF A SCAFFOLDING which would show that the recital does not require kawanah.¹³ Contrast with this: When one recites the Shema', it is incumbent that he should concentrate his attention¹⁴ on it, since it says, 'Hear, O Israel', and in another place it says, Pay attention and hear, O Israel,¹⁵ showing that just as in the latter 'hearing' must be accompanied by attention, so here it must be accompanied by attention. He gave no reply. Then he said to him: Have you heard any statement on this point? — He replied: Thus said R. Shesheth: This is the case only if they stop from their work to recite. But it has been taught: Beth Hillel say that they may go on with their work while reciting? — There is no contradiction. The former statement refers to the first section, the latter to the second section [of the Shema’].

Our Rabbis taught: Labourers working for an employer recite the Shema’ and say blessings before it and after it and eat their crust and say blessings before it and after it, and say the tefillah of eighteen benedictions, but they do not go down before the ark¹⁶ nor do they raise their hands [to give the priestly benediction].¹⁷ But it has been taught: [They say] a resume of the eighteen benedictions?¹⁸ — Said R. Shesheth: There is no contradiction: one statement gives the view of R. Gamaliel, the other of R. Joshua.¹⁹ But if R. Joshua is the authority, why does it say ‘labourers’? The same applies to anyone! — In fact, both statements represent the view of R. Gamaliel, and still there is no contradiction: one refers to [labourers] working for a wage, and the other to [those] working for their keep,²⁰ and so it has been taught: Labourers working for an employer recite the Shema’ and say the tefillah and eat their crust without saying a blessing before it, but they say two blessings after it, namely, [he says] the first blessing²¹ right through²² and the second blessing he begins with the blessing for the land, including ‘who buildest Jerusalem’ in the blessing²³ for the land. When does this hold good? For those who work for a wage. But those who work for their keep or who eat in the company of the employer say the grace right through.²¹

A BRIDEGROOM IS EXEMPT FROM RECITING THE SHEMA’.²⁴ Our Rabbis taught: ‘When thou sittest in thy house’: this excludes one engaged in the performance of a religious duty. ‘And when thou walkest by the way’: this excludes a bridegroom. Hence they deduced the rule that one who marries a virgin is exempt, while one who marries a widow is not exempt. How is this derived? — R. Papa said: [The sitting in the house] is compared to the way: just as the way is optional, so here it must be optional. But are we not dealing [in the words ‘walkest by the way’] with one who goes to perform a religious duty, and even so the All-Merciful said that he should recite? — If that were so, the text should say, ‘in going’. What is meant by ‘in thy going’? This teaches that it is in thy going that thou art under obligation, and in the going for a religious duty thou art exempt.

Talmud - Mas. Berachoth 16b

If that is the case, why does it say, 'One who marries a virgin'? The same would apply to one who marries a widow! — In the former case he is agitated, in the latter case he is not agitated. If his agitation is the ground, then even if his ship has sunk in the sea he should also be exempt? [And if this is so] , why then has R. Abba b. Zabda said in the name of Rab: A mourner is under obligation to perform all the precepts laid down in the Torah except that of tefillin, because they are called 'headtire', as it says, 'Thy headtire bound upon thy head' etc.? — The reply is: There the agitation is over an optional matter, here it is over a religious duty.

MISHNAH. [RABBAN GAMALIEL] BATHED ON THE FIRST NIGHT AFTER THE DEATH OF HIS WIFE. HIS DISCIPLES SAID TO HIM: YOU HAVE TAUGHT US, SIR, THAT A MOURNER IS FORBIDDEN TO BATHE. HE REPLIED TO THEM: I AM NOT LIKE OTHER MEN, BEING VERY DELICATE. WHEN TABI HIS SLAVE DIED HE ACCEPTED CONDOLENCES FOR HIM. HIS DISCIPLES SAID TO HIM: YOU HAVE TAUGHT US, SIR, THAT CONDOLENCES ARE NOT ACCEPTED FOR SLAVES? HE REPLIED TO THEM: MY SLAVE TABI WAS NOT LIKE OTHER SLAVES: HE WAS A GOOD MAN. IF A BRIDEGROOM DESIRES TO RECITE THE SHEMA ON THE FIRST NIGHT, HE MAY DO SO. RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: NOT EVERYONE WHO DESIRES TO PASS AS A SCHOLAR¹ MAY DO SO.

GEMARA. How did Rabban Gamaliel² justify his action?³ — He held that the observance of aninuth⁴ by night is only an ordinance of the Rabbis, as it is written, [And I will make it as the mourning for an only son,] and the end thereof as a bitter day,⁵ and where it concerns a delicate person the Rabbis did not mean their ordinance to apply.

WHEN TABI HIS SLAVE DIED etc. Our Rabbis taught: For male and female slaves no row [of comforters]⁶ is formed, nor is the blessing of mourners⁷ said, nor is condolence offered. When the bondwoman of R. Eliezer died, his disciples went in to condole with him. When he saw them he went up to an upper chamber, but they went up after him. He then went into an ante-room and they followed him there. He then went into the dining hall and they followed him there. He said to them: I thought that you would be scalded with warm water; I see you are not scalded even with boiling hot water.⁸ Have I not taught you that a row of comforters is not made for male and female slaves, and that a blessing of mourners is not said for them, nor is condolence offered for them? What then do they say for them? The same as they say to a man for his ox and his ass: 'May the Almighty replenish your loss'. So for his male and female slave they say to him: 'May the Almighty replenish your loss'. It has been taught elsewhere: For male and female slaves no funeral oration is said. R. Jose said: If he was a good slave, they can say over him, Alas for a good and faithful man, who worked for his living! They said to him: If you do that, what do you leave for free-born?

Our Rabbis taught: The term 'patriarchs' is applied only to three,⁹ and the term 'matriarchs' only to four.¹⁰ What is the reason? Shall we say because we do not know if we are descended from Reuben or from Simeon? But neither do we know in the case of the matriarchs whether we are descended from Rachel or from Leah! — [Rather the reason is] because up to this point they were particularly esteemed, from this point they were not so particularly esteemed. It has been taught elsewhere: Male and female slaves are not called 'Father so-and so' or 'Mother so-and so'; those of Rabban Gamaliel, however, were called 'Father so-and-so' and 'Mother so-and-so'. The example [cited] contradicts your rule? It was because they were particularly esteemed.

R. Eleazar said: What is the meaning of the verse, So will I bless Thee as long as I live; in Thy name will I lift up my hands?¹¹ 'I will bless Thee as long as I live' refers to the Shema'; 'in Thy name I will lift up my hands' refers to the tefillah. And if he does this, Scripture says of him, My soul is satisfied as with marrow and fatness.¹² Nay more, he inherits two worlds, this world and the next, as it says, And my mouth doth praise Thee with joyful lips.¹³

R. Eleazar on concluding his prayer¹⁴ used to say the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, to cause to dwell in our lot love and brotherhood and peace and friendship, and mayest Thou make our borders rich in disciples and prosper our latter end with good prospect and hope, and set our portion in Paradise, and confirm us¹⁵ with a good companion and a good impulse in Thy world, and may we rise early and obtain the yearning of our heart to fear Thy name,¹⁶ and mayest Thou be pleased to grant the satisfaction of our desires!¹⁷

R. Johanan on concluding his prayer added the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, to look upon our shame, and behold our evil plight, and clothe Thyself in Thy mercies, and cover Thyself in Thy strength, and wrap Thyself in Thy lovingkindness, and gird Thyself with Thy graciousness, and may the attribute of Thy kindness and gentleness come before Thee!

R. Zera on concluding his prayer added the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, that we sin not nor bring upon ourselves shame or disgrace before our fathers!¹⁸

R. Hiyya on concluding his prayer added the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, that our Torah may be our occupation, and that our heart may not be sick nor our eyes darkened!

Rab on concluding his prayer added the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, to grant us long life, a life of peace, a life of good, a life of blessing, a life of sustenance, a life of bodily vigour,¹⁹ a life in which there is fear of sin, a life free from shame and confusion, a life of riches and honour, a life in which we may be filled with the love of Torah and the fear of heaven, a life in which Thou shalt fulfil all the desires of our heart for good!²⁰

Rabbi on concluding his prayer added the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, and God of our fathers, to deliver us from the impudent and from impudence, from an evil man, from an evil hap, from the evil impulse, from an evil companion, from an evil neighbour, and from the destructive Accuser, from a hard lawsuit and from a hard opponent, whether he is a son of the covenant or not a son of the covenant!²¹ [Thus did he pray] although guards²² were appointed²³ to protect Rabbi.

R. Safra on concluding his prayer added the following: May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, to establish peace

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH . [IF] AN EGG IS LAID ON A FESTIVAL-DAY, BETH SHAMMAI¹ SAY: IT MAY BE EATEN [ON THE SAME DAY], BUT BETH HILLEL¹ MAINTAIN: IT MAY NOT BE EATEN [UNTIL THE DAY IS OVER]. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [THE QUANTITY OF] LEAVEN² IS OF THE SIZE OF AN OLIVE³ AND LEAVENED BREAD IS OF THE SIZE OF A DATE,⁴ BUT BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: BOTH⁵ ARE OF THE SIZE OF AN OLIVE. HE WHO SLAUGHTERS GAME ON POULTRY ON A FESTIVAL-DAY, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE MAY DIG UP [EARTH] WITH A SHOVEL⁶ AND COVER [THE BLOOD],⁷ BUT BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: ONE MAY NOT SLAUGHTER⁸ UNLESS HE HAS [LOOSE] EARTH PREPARED FROM THE DAY BEFORE [THE FESTIVAL];⁹ BUT THEY AGREE THAT IF HE HAS [ALREADY] SLAUGHTERED, HE MAY DIG UP [EARTH] WITH A SHOVEL AND COVER [THE BLOOD], BECAUSE¹⁰ THE ASHES OF THE HEARTH ARE MUKAN [CONSIDERED AS HAVING BEEN PREPARED].¹¹

GEMARA. What¹² are we discussing? If one should say about a hen kept¹³ for food, what is the reason of Beth Hillel,¹⁴ [seeing that] it is food which has been separated;¹⁵ and [if] about a hen kept for laying eggs, what is the reason of Beth Shammai,¹⁶ [seeing that] it is mukzeh?¹⁷ — But what objection is this? Perhaps Beth Shammai do not accept [the prohibition of] Mukzeh? (We are of the opinion that even he who permits mukzeh forbids nolad;¹⁸ what then is the reason of Beth Shammai?) — R. Nahman replied: In table [we are debating] about a hen kept for laying eggs; but he who accepts [the prohibition of] mukzeh accepts [the prohibition of] nolad, and he who rejects [the prohibition of] mukzeh rejects [the prohibition of] nolad.¹⁹ Beth Shammai is [of the same opinion] as R. Simeon²⁰ and Beth Hillel is [of the same opinion] as R. Judah.²¹ But did R. Nahman say thus? Surely we have learnt: Beth Shammai say: One may remove²² [on the Sabbath] from the table [with the hand] bones and nutshells;²³ but Beth Hillel maintain: One lifts off the whole table-top and shakes it.²⁴ And R. Nahman²⁵ said: As for us, we only hold that Beth Shammai [follow the view] of R. Simeon! — R. Nahman can reply to you: With reference to the Sabbath where the Tanna teaches anonymously²⁶ according to [the opinion of] R. Simeon as we have learnt: You may cut up gourds²⁷ for cattle and a carcass²⁸ for dogs²⁹ Beth Hillel is made to represent the opinion of R. Simeon; but

(8) On a Festival-day.

(9) In the three cases here mentioned Beth Shammai is more lenient than Beth Hillel. Hence they are taught together though not all are relevant to the subject.

- (10) The sentence introduced by because has no casual relation with what precedes, and infra 8a, the letter a == because, is emended to u == and.
- (11) 'Mukan', 'set in readiness'; v. Glos. The wood having been kindled on the previous day, the ashes accumulated during the Festival are considered as if they were prepared before the Festival, as the house-holder had in his mind that there would be ashes which he could use for covering the blood.
- (12) Kind of hen that laid the egg.
- (13) Lit., 'standing'.
- (14) Who say the egg may not be eaten.
- (15) From the hen. Since the hen was kept to be killed for food, the egg laid is regarded as a separated edible part of the hen. Cf., however, ouarb Hul. 14b who takes the word rpt in the sense of ucru urp.
- (16) Who say the egg may be eaten.
- (17) A thing not mentally intended or set in readiness before the Festival to be used on the Festival is called mukzeh; v. Glos. Since the hen was not 'set in readiness' before the Festival the egg should therefore be forbidden to be eaten or handled on the Festival.
- (18) Lit., 'born'; i.e., an object which has only come into existence in its present form on a Festival. Such is forbidden to be used on a Festival.
- (19) There is no fundamental difference between mukzeh and nolad, only temporal.

- (23) Bones and nutshells are regarded as refuse and by the law of mukzeh may not be handled.
- (24) Beth Hillel accept the prohibition of mukzeh and therefore rule that one may not remove the bones and nutshells with his hand but gets rid of them by lifting the table-top. Shab. 143a.
- (25) R. Nahman, wishing to follow the standard rule that in disputes between Shammai and Hillel the law prevails as Hillel, and also to follow the rule that the law prevails according to the opinion expressed in an anonymous Mishnah, here reverses the teaching of the two Schools.
- (26) A Mishnah taught anonymously without mention of its author indicates that the teaching is the prevailing law.
- (27) The cutting up of gourds is not regarded as unnecessary labour on Sabbath, for the animals are then better able to feed.

with reference to Festivals, where the Tanna teaches anonymously according to [the Opinion of] R. Judah as we have learnt: You may not [on a Festival] chop up firewood from rafters¹ nor from a beam which was broken on a Festival² — Beth Hillel is made to represent the opinion of R. Judah.

Now who taught our Mishnah anonymously, [was it not] Rabbi?³ Why then is it that with reference to the Sabbath he teaches the Mishnah anonymously according to [the opinion of] R. Simeon, whereas with reference to Festivals he teaches the Mishnah anonymously according to R. Judah? — I will answer. With respect to the Sabbath which is stringent so that people will not come to treat it lightly, he taught the Mishnah anonymously according to R. Simeon who is lenient; [with respect to] a Festival which is less stringent⁴ so that people might come to treat it lightly, he taught the Mishnah anonymously according to R. Judah who is strict.

How have you explained it [the Mishnah]? With respect to a hen kept for laying eggs [the prohibition is] on account of mukzeh! If so, then instead of disputing about an egg,⁵ let [the Mishnah state that] they dispute about the hen [itself]!⁶ — It is in order to inform you of the extent of the opinion⁷ of Beth Shammai that [even] nolad is permitted. Then let them, dispute about the hen [itself] to show you the extent [of the opinion] of Beth Hillel that they forbid [even] mukzeh! And if you reply that information with respect to the extent of the opinion of permitting is to be preferred,⁸ then let them dispute about it both,⁹ thus: ‘A hen and its egg [laid on a Festival] may be eaten; but Beth Hillel maintain: They may not be eaten’!¹⁰ — Therefore, said Rabbah: In reality, it [the Mishnah] refers to a hen kept for food; but we are discussing a Festival which fell on a Sunday,¹¹ and [the prohibition¹² is] on account of preparation [on a Sabbath].¹³ For Rabbah is of the opinion that every egg laid now was completely formed the day before. And Rabbah is consistent with his view;¹⁴ for Rabbah said: What is [the teaching of] that which is written,¹⁵ and it shall come to pass on the sixth day that they shall prepare that which they bring in?¹⁶ [It is that] a weekday may prepare¹⁷ for Sabbath, and a weekday may prepare for a Festival; but a Festival may not prepare for Sabbath and Sabbath may not prepare for a Festival.¹⁸ Said Abaye to him [Rabbah]: But if it is so,¹⁹ let [the egg laid on] a Festival in general²⁰ be permitted!²¹ — It is a preventive measure out of consideration for a Festival falling on a Sunday.²² Let [the egg laid on] a Sabbath in general²³ be permitted!²¹ — It is a preventive measure out of consideration for a Sabbath [immediately] following a Festival.²⁴ But do we enact a preventive measure [in such a case]? Surely it was taught: If one slaughters a hen²⁵ and finds therein eggs completely formed, they may be eaten on the Festival.²⁶ Now if this be so,²⁷ let them²⁸ be prohibited on account of those [eggs] laid on the same day!²⁹ — He answered him: [The case of] there being in a hen eggs completely formed is a rare occurrence, and the Rabbis do not decree a prohibition with regard to a rare occurrence.

R. Joseph said: It³⁰ is a preventive measure on account of [the eating of] fruit fallen [from a tree].³¹ Said Abaye to him: What is the reason [that] fruit fallen from a tree [on a Festival] is forbidden?

(9) The hen and its egg. Granted that information respecting the power of permission is preferable, but where, by a slight addition, more information could be given, this addition should be made.

(10) And since the Mishnah does not state this, R. Nahman's explanation of the Mishnah cannot be accepted.

(11) Lit., ‘(immediately) after the Sabbath’.

- (12) According to Beth Hillel.
- (13) Though the egg was here prepared by nature, it is none the less forbidden.
- (14) Expressed elsewhere. 'Er. 38b. V. Tosaf. s.v. rnt.
- (15) This clause is omitted in 'Er.; for such an expression is only used in haggadic passages, cf. D.S.
- (16) Ex. XVI, 5.
- (17) The preparation needs only be by word of mouth, or even by thought alone.
- (18) [As a day of rest, a festival is included in the term Sabbath and requires also 'preparation'; but such 'preparation' may not take place on the Sabbath and consequently the egg is prohibited].
- (19) Lit., 'from now', where now refers to what Rabbah has just stated as the reason for Hillel's view.
- (20) Except that falling on a Sunday.
- (21) To be eaten the same day.
- (22) If it should be permitted in the one case it will be thought that it is also permitted in the other.
- (23) Except when a Festival falls on a Friday.
- (24) V. p. 4, n. 15.
- (25) On a Festival.
- (26) No matter whether the Festival falls on a Sunday or on any other day, infra 7b.
- (27) That a measure is enacted in such a case.
- (28) The eggs found in the hen killed on a Festival falling on a Sunday.
- (29) Which are forbidden.
- (30) The prohibition of the egg according to Beth Hillel.
- (31) On a Festival, which is forbidden. Not eating the egg laid on a Festival is fencing the law of not eating fruit fallen on a Festival.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 3a

It is a preventive measure lest one climbs [a tree] and plucks [its fruit];¹ but this² is itself [only] a preventive measure: should we then come and enact one preventive measure to safeguard [another] preventive measure! — Both³ are one preventive measure.⁴

R. Isaac said: It is a preventive measure on account of [the consuming of] juices exuding [from fruit].⁵ Said Abaye to him: What is the reason that juice exuding [from fruit on a Festival] is forbidden? It is a preventive measure lest one [purposely] squeezes out [the juice];⁶ [thus] this is itself [only] a preventive measure; should we then come and enact one preventive measure against [the breach of] another preventive measure! — Both⁷ are one preventive measure.⁸

All [the other Rabbis] do not explain⁹ as R. Nahman does, in accordance with our objection.¹⁰ Likewise they do not explain as Rabbah, because they do not accept [his rule of] Hakanah.¹¹ But why does not R. Joseph explain as does R. Isaac? — He will answer you: An egg is food and fruit is food, excluding juice which is not food [but a beverage]. And why does not R. Isaac explain as does R. Joseph? — He will answer you: An egg is enclosed [in the hen] and juice is enclosed in the fruit, excluding fruit which is exposed all the time.

R. Johanan also is of the opinion that it is a preventive measure on account of [the consuming of] juices exuding [from fruit]. For R. Johanan pointed out a contradiction between one statement of R. Judah and another statement and [also] reconciled it: We have learnt: You may not squeeze fruit¹² to bring out juice, and [even] if the juice exuded of itself it is [still] forbidden. R. Judah says: If [the fruit was intended] as an eatable, what exudes is permitted; but if [it was kept] for its juice, then what exudes is forbidden.¹³ So we see that according to R. Judah [what exudes from] anything [kept] as eatables is [regarded] as food separated.¹⁴ But contrast this with the following: R. Judah further said:¹⁵ One may stipulate on the first day of the [New Year] Festival with respect to a basket of fruit¹⁶ and eat it on the second [day];¹⁷ similarly an egg laid on the first [day] may be eaten on the second.¹⁸ Only 'on the second', but not on the first!¹⁹ And R. Johanan answered: The statement must be reversed.²⁰ Now since he [R. Johanan] contrasts them with each other, infer from this that there is one and the same reason.²¹

- (1) An act Biblically forbidden on a Sabbath or Festival, being in the nature of reaping.
 - (2) Prohibition of eating fallen fruit on a Festival.
 - (3) The prohibition of eating the egg laid on a Festival and the fruit fallen from a tree on a Festival.
 - (4) Against the same prohibition of climbing and gathering fruit. In the enactment of the measure against fallen fruit the egg was included, being regarded as a fallen fruit.
 - (5) On a Festival. Not eating the egg laid on a Festival is fencing the law of not consuming juice exuding from fruit on a Festival.
 - (6) An act Biblically forbidden on a Sabbath or Festival, being in the nature of threshing.
 - (7) The prohibition of eating the egg and the juice.
 - (8) Against the same prohibition of squeezing juice from fruit on a Festival. In the enactment of the measure against exuding juice the egg was included.
 - (9) Our Mishnah.
 - (10) Supra 2b.
 - (11) V. Glos.
 - (12) On a Sabbath or Festival.
 - (13) Shab. 143b.
 - (14) I.e., a part of the whole.
 - (15) With respect to the New Year Festival which even in Palestine was observed for two days.
 - (16) Not yet tithed.
 - (17) It is forbidden to separate the Levitical tithe on a Festival (v. infra 36b). But since, according to R. Judah, only one of the two days is holy, the owner can make a conditional statement on the first day as follows: if to-day is not the Festival, then let this specified portion be the tithe for the rest; if, on the other hand, to-day is the Festival, then let what I have just said be void. On the second day he says likewise: If to-day is not the Festival, then let the specified portion be the tithe; if to-day is the Festival, then the specified portion is already tithe. By means of these two conditional statements the owner can, on the second day, proceed to eat the fruit, for it has been tithed either on the first or second day. V. 'Er. 39b.
 - (18) For if the first day when the egg was laid was the holy day of the two days, then it can be eaten on the following day; and if the first day was not the holy day then the egg may also be eaten on the second day because it was not laid on a Festival. 'Er. 39b.
 - (19) Because the egg is not regarded as food separated from the hen, and this is contradictory to his statement above with respect to the juice being permitted to be consumed on the Festival itself. At present it is assumed that the reference here is to a hen kept for food.
 - (20) To remove the contradiction, R. Johanan suggests, that in the quoted Mishnah, it is not R. Judah who permits the juice to be consumed but his opponent, the anonymous Tanna.
 - (21) For prohibiting both the egg and the self-exuded juice, viz., it is a preventive measure against the breach of the prohibition of squeezing juice from fruit on a Festival.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 3b

Rabina says: In reality you need not reverse [the authorities] for R. Judah was speaking from the point of view of the Rabbis,¹ thus: According to my view [the egg] is permitted even on the first day, because it is food separated [from the hen]; but according to your opinion, you should at least agree with me that it is permitted on the second day, for they² are two distinct days of holiness.³ And the Rabbis answered him: No, [the two days] are one [continuous day of] holiness. Rabina, the son of R.'Ulla, says: [We are dealing] here with a hen kept for laying eggs, and R. Judah⁴ is consistent with his view, for he holds [the interdict of] mukzeh.⁵

An objection was raised: Both an egg laid on a Sabbath and an egg laid on a Festival may not be moved to cover therewith a vessel,⁶ nor to support therewith the leg of a bed;⁷ but a vessel may be placed over it so that it should not be broken; and if in doubt,⁸ it is forbidden; and if it got mixed up with [even] a thousand [eggs], they are all forbidden.⁹ This is well, according to Rabbah, who says [that it is] 'on account of preparation',¹⁰ [then it is a] doubt with respect to a Biblical prohibition, and every doubt with respect to a Biblical prohibition [must be decided] with stringency. But according to R. Joseph and R. Isaac, who say [that it is] 'a preventive measure', then it is a doubt with respect to a Rabbinical enactment, and every doubt with respect to a Rabbinical enactment [is resolved] with leniency!¹¹ — The last clause [of the text] deals with a doubt of trefa.¹² If so, consider the latter clause; 'and if it got mixed up with a thousand [eggs] they are all forbidden'. Now if you say that the doubt is whether [the egg was laid on] a Festival or on a weekday,¹³ it is well, because [the egg] is an object which can become [otherwise] permitted,¹⁴ and any object which can become [otherwise] permitted is not neutralized even in a thousand [times its quantity].¹⁵ But if you say that it is a doubt of trefa, then [the egg] is an object which cannot become [otherwise] permitted and should therefore] be neutralized by a greater number [than itself].¹⁶ And if you answer 'an egg is valuable and is not neutralized by a greater number,' this¹⁷ would be correct according to him who says that we learnt 'whatsoever one is wont to count'.¹⁸ But according to him who says that we learnt 'that which one is wont to count', what is to be said?¹⁹ For we have learnt:²⁰ If one had trusses of fenugreek of kil'ayim of a vineyard²¹ they are to be burnt;²² if they got mixed up with others²³ and these [again with others,²⁴ they are all to be burnt. This is the opinion of R. Meir. But the Sages say: [The forbidden trusses] are neutralized in [a majority of the proportion of] one in two hundred. For R. Meir used to say: That which one is wont to count [when selling] disqualifies.²⁵ But the sages say: Only six things²⁶ render [the whole] prohibited — R. Akiba says: seven — and they are as follows: The nuts of Perek,²⁷ and the pomegranates of Baden,²⁷ casks spigoted, beetroot-tops,²⁸ cabbage stalks²⁹ and Greek gourds. R. Akiba adds also the loaves of a householder.³⁰ Those mixtures which are subject to the law of 'Orlah, [impart the prohibition of] 'Orlah,³¹ and those which are subject to the law of Kil'ayim of a vineyard [impart the prohibition of] Kil'ayim of a vineyard.³² And it was stated thereon that R. Johanan said: We learnt,³³ 'that which one is wont to count [when selling]'; and Resh Lakish said: We learnt: 'whatsoever one is wont to count [when selling].' [Now the text]³⁴ would be well according to the opinion of Resh Lakish; but according to the opinion of R. Johanan, what can be said? R. Papa replied: This Tanna³⁵ is the author [of the teaching] concerning the 'litra of dried figs', who says that anything which [is sold] by number, even though [its prohibition is] a Rabbinical enactment, is not annulled, how much more so when it is Biblical.³⁶ For we have learnt:³⁷ If a litra of dried figs³⁸ was pressed upon the top of a jar³⁹ and he does not know on which jar it was pressed, or on the top of a barrel and he does not know on which barrel it was pressed, or on top of a basket⁴⁰ and he does not know on which basket it was pressed, R. Meir maintains [that] R. Eliezer

 - (15) This is a Talmudic principle with respect to the neutralization of an object when intermixed with permitted commodities. Though normally a certain portion of the latter is sufficient to neutralize the former, that does not operate if the former is destined to become permitted without recourse to neutralization. Hence, in our case, where the egg was laid on a Festival-day and is forbidden for that day only, but not after, if that egg got mixed up with no matter how many others on the day it was laid, it is not neutralized, but all are forbidden on that day.  - (19) To explain this statement; for the eggs which are sometimes sold in bulk do not belong to such a category. Whatsoever is more comprehensive than that. According to the former teaching, neutralization is not permitted in the case of any objects which are regarded as of sufficiently high commercial value to be sold in units rather than in bulk. said: We regard the upper [layers] as if they are dispersed [among each barrel] and the lower¹ neutralize the upper [litra of figs]; [while] R. Joshua says: If there were there a hundred tops [of barrels] they neutralize, but if not, then [all] the top layers are forbidden and [all] the remainders are permitted. [But] R. Judah maintains² [that] R. Eliezer said: If there are a hundred upper layers they neutralize, but if not then [all] the top layers are forbidden and [all] the remainders are permitted; [while] R. Joshua Says: Even if there are three hundred tops of barrels they do not neutralize.³ If it⁴ was pressed in a jar and he does not know in which jar he pressed it, all agree that they neutralize. [You say], All agree? [Why] this is the point they are disputing! Said R. Papa: This is what he says: If it was pressed in a jar and he does not know it, which part of the jar it was pressed, whether northward or southward, all agree that it is neutralized.⁵

R. Ashi said: In reality the doubt is whether [the egg was laid] on a Festival-day or on a weekday,⁶ [but] it [the egg] is a forbidden] object which will become permitted,⁷ and anything [forbidden] which will become permitted, even though [forbidden] by a Rabbinical enactment⁸ is not neutralized.⁹

It was taught: Others say in the name of R. Eliezer: The egg [laid on a Festival] and the hen may be eaten. About what are we discussing? If about a hen kept for food, it is self-evident that the egg and the hen are permitted;¹⁰ and if about a hen kept for laying eggs, then the egg and the hen are forbidden!¹¹ — Answered R. Zera: [It means,] it [the egg] may be eaten in virtue of the hen.¹² What are the circumstances?¹³ — Said Abaye: For example when he bought it [the hen] without specifying [for what purpose]; if it is killed then it is [retrospectively] clear that it was intended to be kept for food;¹⁴ if it is not killed, then it is evident that it was intended to be kept for laying eggs.¹⁵ R. Mari says: He states an exaggeration.¹⁶ For it was taught: Others say in the name of R. Eliezer: The egg may be eaten, it and its hen, and its chicken and its shell. What is meant by 'its shell'? Shall I say [it means] literally 'shell', is then the shell [fit for] food?¹⁷ Again, if it should [mean] a chicken in its shell, surely the Rabbis dispute with R. Eliezer b. Jacob¹⁸ only when the chicken is actually hatched, but when it has not yet been hatched they do not dispute!¹⁹ Therefore 'the chicken and its shell' is an exaggeration,²⁰ so also here 'it and its hen may be eaten' is an exaggeration.

It was stated: A Sabbath and a Festival [following one another]. Rab says: [An egg] laid on the one is forbidden on the other, but R. Johanan maintains: [The egg] laid on the one is permitted on the other. Shall we say that Rab holds that they [a Sabbath and a Festival immediately following] are regarded as one [continuous day of] holiness? But Rab said: The halachah is according to the four elders who decided according to the opinion of R. Eliezer who says [the Sabbath and the Festival] are two [distinct days of] holiness! — Rather they differ here in Rabbah's [law of] Hakanah;²¹ Rab accepts Rabbah's law of Hakanah and R. Johanan rejects Rabbah's law of Hakanah.

The same is disputed by Tannaim: If it [an egg] is laid on a Sabbath, it may be eaten on a Festival;²² [if it is laid] on a Festival it may be eaten on a Sabbath.²³ R. Judah says in the name of R. Eliezer: The dispute still continues; for Beth Shammai say: It may be eaten; whereas Beth Hillel maintain: It may not be eaten.²⁴ The host of R. Adda b. Ahabah had some eggs from a festival [which he wished to prepare] for the Sabbath.²⁵ He came before him, and asked: Is it permitted to roast them to-day²⁶ that we may eat their to-morrow? He answered him: What is in your mind: [in a dispute between] Rab and R. Johanan the halachah is as R. Johanan? But even R. Johanan only allows [the egg] to be quaffed on the morrow, but not on the same day [it was laid];²⁷ even as it was taught: Whether an egg was laid on a Sabbath or on a Festival, one may not move it to cover therewith a vessel nor to support therewith the leg of a bed.²⁸

The host of R. Papa — some say it was another man who came before R. Papa — had some eggs from a Sabbath [which he wished to prepare] on the [immediately following] Festival. He came, asking him: Is it permitted to eat them to-morrow?²⁹ He answered him: Go away now and come to-morrow: for Rab would not appoint an interpreter for himself from [the first day of] the Festival until [the termination of] its companion³⁰ on account of inebriety.³¹ When he came on the morrow, he said to him:

(1) Layers of each barrel.

(2) R. Meir and R. Judah differ with respect to the dispute between R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(3) The litra of figs, for the top layers of figs are in the category of things that are also sold by number and therefore the quantity of vessels is immaterial. Cf. J. Ter. IV, 7.

(4) The litra of terumah figs.

(5) Because not being a complete layer now, it is no longer in the category of being numbered. R. Joshua is then the Tanna who held that anything which is often sold by number is not annulled, and he will be the author of the teaching regarding the mixed egg.

(6) And as for the suggestion that in any doubt with respect to a prohibition based on a Rabbinical enactment leniency is required, v. supra 3b.

(7) After a certain time. The egg will in any case be permitted after the Festival.

(8) Concerning which leniency is usually preferred.

(9) And we are to proceed with stringency even in the case of doubt.

(10) That is, in the view of Beth Shammai; and if R. Eliezer intends to rule like Beth Shammai, why mention the hen-mother at all? Rashi.

(11) On account of mukzeh. V. infra 34a.

(12) If the hen is eaten on the Festival so may also the egg be eaten.

(13) When it is the actual eating of the hen that renders also the egg permissible.

(14) And therefore the egg, being part of the hen, may also be eaten.

(15) And therefore the egg is not permitted.

(16) He uses the figure of speech called hyperbole for the sake of emphasis; i.e., he states the law very emphatically, mentioning more than is necessary.

(17) All that was necessary to be said was 'the chicken', for the shell is not classed as food.

(18) And say that a chicken just hatched may be eaten even though its eyes were not open. V. infra 6b.

(19) I.e., they all agree that it may not be eaten. Hence it cannot mean in its shell.

(20) Saying more than is required.

(21) Supra 2b. V. Glos.

(22) Immediately following the Sabbath.

(23) Immediately following the Festival.

(24) So that the anonymous Tanna supports R. Johanan and R. Judah supports Rab.

(25) Immediately following the Festival, and he was doubtful.

(26) On Friday, the day they were laid.

(27) When it is forbidden even to move it.

(28) Supra 3b. q.v.

(29) I.e., on the Sunday.

(30) I.e., the second day of the Festival.

(31) Rab was in the habit of appointing an interpreter who would enlarge and expand the teachings he would communicate to him. Rab was so scrupulous that he refrained from communicating teachings and decisions to his interpreter on a feast day lest he should risk giving less than his best through the influence of drinking wine on the Festival. R. Papa would not give on a Sabbath a decision for the same reason.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 4b

If [I had given my decision] forthwith, I would have erred, and told you that [in a dispute between] Rab and R. Johanan the halachah is as R. Johanan; whereas Raba has said: In these three [cases]¹ the law is as Rab, both when he is lenient and when he is stringent.

R. Johanan said: If branches fell off a palm tree on a Sabbath, it is forbidden to burn them [for firewood] on the Festival [immediately following it], and do not seek to refute me [by referring to the case] of the egg.² What is the reason? Because the egg is fit to be taken raw on the [Sabbath] day [it was laid],³ and since you do not permit it [to be eaten] until the following day, one will surely know that on the same day [that it was laid] it is prohibited.⁴ [But in the case of the] branches which are not fit for the [Sabbath] day [on which they fell],⁵ if you permit them to be used on the morrow,⁶ one might say that even on the [same] day [they fell off]⁷, they are also permitted, while [their prohibition] the day before was on account of the Sabbath, when they were not fit for burning.

R. Mattenah said: If branches fell off a palm tree on a Festival into an oven, one may add thereto a larger amount of wood kept in readiness⁸ and burn them [together]. But is he not handling a prohibited object?⁹ Since the greater part consists of that which is permitted, when he is handling, he is handling that which is permitted. But he neutralizes a prohibited object at the outset, and we have learnt: One may not [directly] neutralize a prohibited object at the outset!¹⁰ — This applies only [where the object is prohibited] according to the Biblical law, but [where it is only] Rabbinical[y] [prohibited] one may [directly] neutralize.¹¹ But how is it to be explained according to R. Ashi, who says that an object [forbidden] which will become permitted is not neutralized even though [forbidden] by a Rabbinical enactment?¹² — this applies only where the prohibited object remains intact, but here the thing forbidden is indeed burnt up.¹³ It was stated: [With reference to] the two Festival-days of the Diaspora,¹⁴ Rab says: [The egg] laid on the one¹⁵ is permitted on the other,¹⁶ and R. Assi maintains: [The egg] laid on the one is forbidden on the other. Shall it be said that R. Assi holds the opinion that [both days] have one continuous holiness? But R. Assi recited the habdalah¹⁷ [blessing] between the first and second Festival-days?¹⁸ — R. Assi himself was in doubt, hence he acted in both cases with stringency.¹⁹

R. Zera said: Logic supports R. Assi; for we are now well acquainted with the fixing of the new moon and, nevertheless, we do observe two days.²⁰ Abaye said: Logic supports Rab; for we have learnt: In early times they used to light bonfires,²¹ but on account of the mischief of the Samaritans²² the Rabbis ordained that messengers should go forth.²³ Now if the [mischief of the] Samaritans ceased²⁴ we would [all] observe only one day; and [even during the Samaritan mischief] wherever the messengers arrived²⁵ they observed [only] one day.²⁶ But now that we are well acquainted with the fixing of the new moon,²⁷ why do we observe two days? — Because they sent [word] from there [Palestine]:²⁸ Give heed to the customs of your ancestors which have come down to you; for it might happen that the government might issue a decree²⁹ and it will cause confusion [in ritual].

It was stated: [With respect to] the two Festival-days of the New Year, Rab and Samuel³⁰ both say: [An egg] laid on the first day is forbidden on the second day. For we have learnt:³¹ In early times they [the Sanhedrin] admitted the testimony about new moon throughout the [whole]³² day.³³ Once, however, the witnesses were late in arriving

(1) For the three cases v. infra 5b. Our case is one of the three.

(2) Concerning which I have said that an egg laid on a Sabbath may be eaten on the immediately following Festival-day.

(3) All egg may not be cooked on a Sabbath, but may be eaten raw because there is no work in sucking eggs.

(4) On account of mukzeh.

(5) For it is prohibited to kindle fire on a Sabbath. Cf. Ex. XXXV, 3.

(6) The following Festival-day.

(7) If it were a Festival and not a Sabbath.

(8) V. Glos. s.v. mukan.

(9) When stoking the fire the alien branches are prohibited on account of mukzeh.

- (10) This statement is not found anywhere else so worded, but is inferred from Ter. V, 9, where it is stated that if one se'ah of Heave-offering fell into less than 100 se'ahs of common produce, and other common produce afterwards fell therein, if it was in error the whole is permitted, but if wantonly, it is forbidden. Cf. a'r a.l.
- (11) And the prohibition of mukzeh is only Rabbinical.
- (12) V. supra 3a. And the wood will in any case be permitted after the Festival.
- (13) Cf. Tosaf. Pes. 26b. s.v. asj .
- (14) Outside Palestine every Festival which Biblically is to be observed for day is kept for two days because of doubt. Since the Festival is fixed for a certain day of the month (for example passover on the 15th Nisan) it is Important to know the exact day the New Moon appears. For the consecration of the New Moon was determined not only by mathematical calculation but by the confirmation of witnesses who had seen it. This applied only to the 30th, but on the 31st, the day would be consecrated even without witnesses, because it would be known that after the 30th the moon should become new even if it were not seen, for the moon renewed itself about every 292 days. therefore those in Palestine could easily be informed whether the new moon was consecrated by the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem on the 30th day or on the 31st, thus making the month just passed either full or defective. But those in the Diaspora, not being able to be informed in time whether the new moon was consecrated on the 30th or on the 31st, kept the appointed Festival-day for two days in order to be sure of observing it (for example, in the case of Passover, they kept both the 15th and 16th of Nisan as the 1st day of Passover). Hence the two Festival-days of the Diaspora.
- (15) I.e., the first day.
- (16) Because only one of the two days is holy.
- (17) V. Glos.
- (18) He would not have recited the habdalah had he regarded the two Festival-days as one continuous day of holiness. V. Rashi.
- (19) The observance in the Diaspora of two days instead of one as in Palestine can be regarded from two points of view: (a) It was an enactment of the Rabbis that for all time in the Diaspora two days should be kept for each Festival-day (v. supra n. 1). From that point of view the two days are regarded as one long day of holiness and the egg might not be eaten on the second day. (b) The people in the Diaspora have taken upon themselves the observance of two days instead of one because of their uncertainty; for those however, who were well acquainted with the fixing of the new moon, the first day only is regarded as really holy and the second day as of a minor holiness, requiring the recitation of the habdalah between the two, and the egg would be permitted to be eaten on the second day.
- (20) Presumably because the Rabbis have so enacted for us to keep the two days as one continuous day of holiness and it is their ordinances that we observe.
- (21) They indicated the new moon outside Jerusalem by means of firesignals whether the day just elapsed was the 30th of the past month or the 1st of the coming month.
- (22) In lighting beacons at other times to confuse the Jews. For the term Cuthim v. J.E. vol. IV, p. 398.
- (23) V. R.H. 22b (Sonc. ed. p. 96, n. 7).
- (24) And we reverted to the lighting of fire-signals.
- (25) The distance covered by the traveling messengers was relative, dependent on what day in the month a festival fell, so that sometimes they would cover more territory than at others.
- (26) Evidently the observance of two days was not an enactment for all time.
- (27) The calendar was fixed about the beginning of the fourth century. [This has been ascribed to Hillel II, v. Graetz IV, pp. 316-318.]
- (28) To the Jews in the Diaspora. Cf. Sanh. 17b. [probably this refers to the message sent by R. Jose (J. 'Er. III) a contemporary of Hillel II, urging the people of the Diaspora not to depart from the ancestral customs despite the calendar which have been introduced by the Patriarch, v. Graetz IV, p. 456.]

(29) To destroy all the sacred writings and prevent the study of the Law and thus all knowledge of fixing the calendar would be lost.

and the Levites erred in the chant.¹ [In consequence] they enacted that they should only receive witnesses until Minhah,² but if witnesses came from Minhah onwards³ they observed [the remainder of] that day⁴ and the following day as holy.⁵

Rabbah said: Since the enactment of R. Johanan b. Zakkai, the egg is permitted;⁶ for we have learnt:⁷ After the destruction of the Temple⁸ R. Johanan enacted that testimony [concerning the appearance of new moon] should be admitted the [whole] day.⁹ Said Abaye to him: But have not Rab and Samuel both said that the egg is forbidden [on the second day]? — He replied to him: I quote to you R. Johanan b. Zakkai, and you tell me about Rab and Samuel!¹⁰ But for Rab and Samuel our Mishnah is a difficulty! — There is no difficulty. This [ruling] applies to us [Babylonians], but that [ruling] applies to them [the Palestinians].¹¹ But R. Joseph¹² says: Even from [the time of] the enactment of R. Johanan b. Zakkai and onwards the egg is prohibited [on the second day]. What is the reason? It¹³ is a matter which was decided by a majority vote¹⁴ and whatever was [forbidden] by a majority vote, requires another majority vote to permit it.¹⁵ Said R. Joseph: Whence do I infer this?¹⁶ From what is written: 'Go say to them, return ye to your tents'.¹⁷ And [Scripture] further says: 'When the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount'.¹⁸ And we have further learnt:¹⁹ The fourth [year] vineyard [fruit] was to be brought to Jerusalem [from all places] within a radius of one day's journey [from Jerusalem], and the following are its boundaries: Elath²⁰ on the South,²¹ Akrabah²² on the North, Lydda²³ on the West, and the Jordan on the East.²⁴ And 'Ulla said — others say Rabba b. Bar Hana in the name of R. Johanan — What is the reason? [It is] in order to decorate the streets of Jerusalem with fruits. And it was [further] taught: R. Eliezer had trees of the fourth year in a vineyard to the east of Lydda near Kefar Tabi²⁵

(1) They sang the psalm for ordinary days at the eventide sacrifice and it turned out after the arrival of witnesses that it was actually New Year's day. V. Tamid VII, 3-4.

(2) The time of the offering of the eventide sacrifice. V. Glos. Cf. Schurer II, I pp. 286ff.

(3) When there was still some part of the day to run, though their testimony would not be accepted for consecrating the 30th as New Year's day, yet.

(4) The end of the 30th from the arrival of the witnesses to the close of the day was also considered holy.

(5) Hence it was seen that the Sanhedrin itself under such conditions observed the New Year's Festival for two days even where there was no uncertainty; and the people outside Jerusalem would need to observe both the 30th and the 31st of Ellul as New Year in case of such a contingency, so that the observance of two days for the New Year's Feast was an enactment of the Rabbis from the very beginning making two days one continuous day of holiness, and, therefore, an egg laid on the first day is prohibited even on the second.

(6) To be eaten on the second day.

(7) R.H. 30b.

(8) Since the Temple no longer existed the reason for the previous enactment falls away.

(9) So that the observance of the two days at the present time could only be on account of doubt, since only one of the two days is holy. For, even if witnesses came towards the end of the 30th, the whole of the 30th would be regarded as New Year and the 31st would be regarded as a weekday. But if no witnesses came on the 30th, the 31st would be New Year's day and the 30th, though observed as a holy day, was in reality an ordinary day; and therefore the egg laid on the 30th in such a case would be permitted on the 31st.

(10) R. Johanan b. Zakkai was the greater authority.

(11) The enactment of R. Johanan b. Zakkai could only affect Palestine, where only one day, viz., the 30th, would now be regarded as New Year, however late the messengers came on that day. But in Babylon and all places outside Palestine, the observance of the two days was not affected by the enactment of R. Johanan, for there the two days were kept holy by the early Rabbinical enactment, and were regarded as one continuous day of holiness.

(12) In opposition to Rabbah.

(13) The prohibition of the egg on the second day.

(14) If witnesses had not come before eventide the Assembly of Sages decided to make the two days one continuous day of holiness.

(15) Even though the reason for its prohibition no longer exists, the prohibition still holds until a further vote in Assembly had been taken and declaring it now permissible; and as no such vote had been taken the status quo remains, i.e., the prohibition of the egg is still binding. V. Sanh. 59b. It is pointed out infra 5b that the vote of Assembly was not directly dealing with the egg but with the making of the two days one continuous day of holiness.

(16) That a prohibition once made by an Assembly is still binding until it has been rescinded by another Assembly.

(19) M.Sh. V, 2; R.H. 31b. (9) Fruit of the first three years of a tree may not be eaten, and the fruit of the fourth year must be eaten before the Lord in Jerusalem, Lev. XIX, 23. If, however, the journey was too great, the fruit might be redeemed and the money expended in Jerusalem. V. Deut. XIV, 24-25. The Rabbis, however, ordained that for a radius of one day's journey from Jerusalem the fruit could not be redeemed but must be brought to Jerusalem.

and he wished to renounce [the vineyard] for the poor.¹ But his disciples said to him: Master, thy colleagues have already taken a vote with respect to your case and permitted it.² Who are meant by 'thy colleagues'? R. Johanan b. Zakkai [and his school]. Now the reason [why the fruit may be redeemed] is only because they had taken a vote; but if they had not taken a vote, it would not [have been permitted].³

What is meant by 'And [Scripture] further says'?⁴ — He means thus: Consider: It is written: Be ready against the third day, come not near a woman.⁵ Then what is the purpose of 'Go say to them, Return ye to your tents'? Infer therefrom that every prohibition decided by a majority vote requires another majority vote to rescind it. And should you reply, it comes as a command concerning conjugal duties,⁶ [then] come and hear: 'When the trumpet soundeth long they shall Come up to the mount.' Now consider: It is written: 'Neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that Mount.'⁷ Then what is the purpose of: 'When the trumpet soundeth long they shall come up to the Mount'. Conclude therefrom that what has been prohibited by a majority vote requires another majority vote to rescind it.⁸ And should you argue, this only applies to the case of a Biblical [prohibition] but not to the case of a Rabbinical [prohibition],⁹ [then] come and hear: 'The fourth [year vineyard] fruit, etc.' Now the law concerning the fourth [year vineyard] fruit is a Rabbinical enactment, and yet they said to him: 'Thy colleagues have already taken a vote respecting your case and permitted it!' And if you say¹⁰ that R. Johanan b. Zakkai allowed also a vote to be taken concerning an egg and permitted it, [I will reply]: They only took a vote concerning testimony, but concerning the egg they did not take a vote. Said Abaye to him: Has there been then at all a vote taken [at any time] concerning the egg [itself]?¹¹ The egg is dependent on [the acceptance of] testimony: If the testimony of the witnesses is disallowed, then the egg is forbidden¹² but if the testimony of the witnesses is permitted then the egg is [a automatically] permitted,¹³

R. Adda and R. Salmon, both of Be Kelohith¹⁴ say: Even [from the time of] the enactment of R. Johanan b. Zakkai and onwards the egg is prohibited. Why? The Temple may very soon be rebuilt,¹⁵ and people would say: 'Did we not eat last year on the second day [of the New Year] the egg [laid on the first day]? Now too, we shall continue to eat it;' and they will not know that in the previous year¹⁶ they [the two days] were of two distinct forms of holiness¹⁷ whereas now¹⁸ they are one [continuous day of] holiness.¹⁹ If so, we should not even accept [the] testimony [of witnesses the whole day]! What is the reason? For the Temple may very soon be rebuilt, and people might say: 'Did we not accept last year testimony concerning the New Moon during the whole day [long]? Now too, we shall [continue to] accept [their testimony]!?' — Where [is the comparison] in this? [The acceptance of] testimony is entrusted to the Beth din²⁰ [only], but [the case of] the egg is entrusted to all.²¹

Raba Says: Even since the enactment of R. Johanan b. Zakkai and onwards, the egg is forbidden; [for] does not R. Johanan b. Zakkai agree that if witnesses arrive after Minhah, the remainder of that day and the following day is observed as holy?²² Raba further said: The law [is as] Rab in the foregoing three cases²³ whether he is lenient or stringent. [

- (1) In order not to have to bring the fruit himself to Jerusalem, but that the poor might gather the fruit for themselves and bring it to Jerusalem. Although R. Eliezer lived after the fall of Jerusalem when the reason for decorating its streets no longer existed, yet he adhered to the ruling that the fruit being within the radius of one day's journey, could not be redeemed but had to be brought to Jerusalem.
- (2) I.e., the authority you are holding to has been rescinded by another authority and you can therefore redeem the fruits and bring only the money to Jerusalem.
- (3) [Which proves that whatever has been decided by a majority vote requires another majority vote to abrogate the decision, even where the reason for the original decision no longer operates].
- (4) The question here is: How do you infer from the first passage of Scripture the principle that a prohibition once made is absolutely binding until it has been rescinded; and if the inference is satisfactory, why is it necessary to have a second Scripture text? Rashi.

- (7) Ibid. XXXIV, 3. The expression 'before that Mount' is interpreted as meaning 'that Mount covered with the cloud of the Divine presence', from which it might be inferred that only as long as the cloud of the Divine presence remained over the mountain no man or beast could draw near, but when the cloud was removed the people might, by their own inference, have thought that they might now ascend the mountain.
- (8) The reason for the 'trumpet sounding long' was to indicate that the Divine presence was removed from the mountain.
- (9) As our case of the egg.
- (10) R. Joseph resumes here the thread of his remarks which were interrupted by quoting the source of his principle.
- (11) And if no vote was directly taken, the question of requiring another vote rescinding it does not arise.

- (22) In which case the two days of New Year would be regarded as one continuous day of holiness. According to this view, the object of R. Johanan's enactment of accepting witnesses throughout the 30th day was for the purpose of fixing the days of the Festivals following New Year; i.e., if witnesses came any time on the 30th, that day would be the first of Tishri, from which the days of the month would be computed.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 6a

Raba said: On the first day of a Festival, [only] Gentiles may busy themselves with a corpse,¹ [but] on the second day, Israelites may busy themselves with a corpse, and² even on the two Festival-days of the New Year, which however is not the case with respect to an egg.³ The Nehardeans⁴ say: The same holds good even with respect to an egg; for what is in your mind: Perhaps [the month of] Ellul will be intercalated?⁵ Surely R. Hinena b. Kahana said in the name of Rab: From the days of Ezra⁶ and onward we do not find Ellul ever intercalated.⁷

Mar Zutra said: This⁸ was said only when [the corpse] had already been lying for some time,⁹ but if it had not lain for a long time, we let it remain.¹⁰ R. Ashi says: Even if it had not lain for a [good] long time we do not let it remain [unburied]. What is the reason? With regard to a dead body the Rabbis have made the second day of a Festival as a weekday even with respect to cutting for it a shroud and cutting for it a [branch of] myrtle.¹¹ Rabina said: But nowadays when there are Guebers¹² we apprehend.¹³

Rabina was once sitting in the presence of R. Ashi on [one of] the two Festival-days of the New Year,¹⁴ [and] noticing that he was troubled, he said to him: Why is the Master troubled? He [R. Ashi] replied: I have not set an 'erub tabshilin.¹⁵ Said he to him: Let the Master prepare an 'erub tabshilin now. For did not Raba say: A man may set an 'erub tabshilin on the first day of a Festival for the second and stipulate?¹⁶ — He replied: Granted that Raba [indeed] said so with respect to the two Feast-days of the Diaspora.¹⁷ But did he then say this also with respect to the two days of the New Year's Festival?¹⁸ But the Nehardeans maintain that even an egg is permitted!¹⁹ — R. Mordecai observed to him [to Rabina]: The Master²⁰ distinctly told me that he does not accept this [teaching] of the Nehardeans.

It was stated: If a chicken was hatched out on a Festival, Rab says: It is forbidden,²¹ but Samuel — some say, R. Johanan — maintains: It is permitted. Rab says it is forbidden [because] it is mukzeh;²² but Samuel — some say, R. Johanan — maintains it is permitted, since it makes itself permitted through shechitah.²³ R. Kahana and R. Assi said to Rab: What difference is there between this and a calf born on a Festival?²⁴ — He replied to them: [The case of the calf is different] since it was [regarded as] mukan²⁵ by virtue of its mother.²⁶ And what difference is there between this and a calf born [on a Festival] from a Trefa?²⁷ Rab remained silent. Said Rabbah — some say [it was] R. Joseph — Why was Rab silent? He should have replied to them: [This calf is permitted] since it is mukan for dogs through its [trefa] mother.²⁸ — Abaye replied to him:

(1) E.g., the making of a shroud and the digging of a grave.

(2) The same holds good.

(3) I.e., an egg laid on the first day of the New Year is not permitted on the second day.

(4) The scholars of Nehardea, i.e., the School of Samuel. V. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 42.

(5) I.e., Beth din will insert an extra day in the month of Ellul, in which case the New Year Festival would begin on the second day.

(6) Cf. Neh. VIII, 13, where 'second day' refers to New Year.

(7) The only exception was when the witnesses arrived late.

(8) Law that Israelites may busy themselves with a dead body on a Festival.

(9) And is decomposing and becoming offensive.

- (10) Until after the Festival.
- (11) The funeral trappings and the myrtle placed on the coffin were to honour the dead.
- (12) The fanatical sect of Persian fireworshippers, v. Git., Sonc. ed. p. 63, n. 2. This probably refers towards the close of the Sassanid rule marked by the persecution of the Jews. V. J.E. p. 648, c. 1. The Jews had to render to the Guebers compulsory service from which they were exempt on a Festival.
- (13) Lest through allowing Jews to bury on the second day of a Festival the Guebers might regard that day as an ordinary working day and compel them to work.
- (14) The New Year Festival fell on Thursday and Friday.
- (15) V. Glos. It is a symbolical act by which meals may be prepared on a Festival occurring on a Friday for the following Sabbath. The method is to prepare a dish on the Thursday for the Sabbath which enables all the cooking done on the Friday to be regarded as a continuation of the cooking begun on the Thursday.
- (16) If the first of the two days is the real feast-day, then the preparation of the food on the second day should be permitted; and if the second day is the proper feast-day, then preparation of the 'erub is permissible on the first day, which is not a Festival but a weekday.
- (17) I.e., observed only in the Diaspora where two days are observed on account of doubt.
- (18) Which are observed also in Palestine where the two days of the New Year are regarded as one continuous holy day. Surely not!
- (19) On the second day, if laid on the first day of the New Year's Festival thus indicating that only one of the two days is holy.
- (20) R. Ashi who was R. Mordecai's teacher, v. Sot. 46b.
- (21) To be eaten on the day of the Festival.
- (22) V. supra, p. 2, n. 5.
- (23) V. Glos. Before the chicken is hatched, the act of slaughtering does not permit it to be eaten. It is only when born that the chicken can be eaten through ritual slaughter. And since the hatching out of the chicken (on the Festival) enables it to be eaten through slaughtering, it also frees it from mukzeh; i.e., since it gains permission for itself to be eaten through ritual slaughter, it also gains permission for itself to be free from mukzeh.
- (24) Which may be eaten on the same day, v. infra.
- (25) V. Glos.
- (26) The calf found in a ritually slaughtered cow may be eaten through the slaughtering of its mother. The calf therefore is valid for provision even before its birth.
- (27) V. Glos. This calf when found within the mother is not permitted for use by the slaughtering of its trefa mother. It must itself be ritually slaughtered before it can be permitted; and yet we do not find anyone prohibiting the eating of a calf born of a trefa on a Festival.
- (28) Immediately before the Festival the mother-cow as trefa was intended as food for dogs, and this included the calf within it. The cow and the calf would thus become mukan for dogs and therefore the law of mukzeh should not apply to the calf. The same, however, cannot be said of the chicken in the egg.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 6b

Seeing that that which is mukan for human consumption is not mukan for dogs — for we have learnt: One may cut up¹ gourds for cattle and a carcass for dogs;² R. Judah says: If [the animal] was not yet nebelah³ on the eve of the Sabbath it is forbidden,⁴ for it was not mukan⁵ — can that which is mukan for dogs be considered mukan for human beings? — He said to him: It is even so; that which is mukan for human consumption is not mukan for dogs, for that which is useable for man one does not throw to dogs. [But] that which is mukan for dogs is [also] mukan for human consumption, for the mind of man is directed to everything which may be fitting for him. [A Baraitha] was taught in accordance with Rab [and a Baraitha] was taught in accordance with Samuel, or as some say, R. Johanan. [A Baraitha] was taught in accordance with Rab: A calf which is born on a Festival is permitted;⁶ [but] a chicken which is hatched on a Festival is forbidden. And what difference is there between the one and the other? [The calf] is mukan by virtue of its mother through shechitah,⁷ but [the chicken] is not mukan by virtue of its another.⁸ [A Baraitha] was taught in accordance with Samuel, or as some say, R. Johanan: A calf which is born on a Festival is permitted; a chicken which is hatched on a Festival is permitted. Why? [The calf] is mukan by virtue of its mother and [the chicken] makes itself permitted through slaughter.

Our Rabbis taught: A chicken which is hatched on a Festival is forbidden. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: It is forbidden even on a weekday since its eyes are not yet open. With whose opinion does the following passage agree: Even all creeping things that creep upon the earth,⁹ this includes chickens whose eyes are not yet opened?¹⁰ With whose opinion? The opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

R. Huna said in the name of Rab: An egg is completed on its issue [from the fowl]. What is meant by 'completed on its issue'? If we say, [it means] it is completed on its issue, so that [the egg] may be eaten with milk;¹¹ [which implies] when it is still within the hen [the egg] may not be eaten with milk? But surely we have learnt: If one kills a hen and finds therein completely formed eggs, these may be consumed with milk! And if [it means] it is completed on its issue so that [the egg] may be eaten on a Festival;¹² [which implies] when [the egg] is still within the hen,¹³ it may not be eaten on the Festival?¹⁴ But surely we have learnt: If one kills a hen and finds therein eggs completely formed they are permitted to be eaten on the Festival.¹⁵ And if you say that he informed us in the Baraitha what we do not learn in the Mishnah?¹⁶ This too¹⁷ we have learnt [in a Mishnah]: If an egg is laid on a Festival, Beth Shammai say: It may be eaten [on the same day], but Beth Hillel maintain: It may not be eaten [until the day is over].¹⁸ Now Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel dispute thus only about [the egg] that is laid; but if [the egg] is in the hen, all agree that it is permitted! And if you maintain that Beth Hillel prohibit [the egg] even when it is within the hen, and the reason he [the author of the Mishnah] quotes [their dispute with respect to an egg] 'laid' is in order to manifest to you the extent of the opinion of Beth Shammai that even if it is laid it is permitted; then as to that which we have learnt: If one slaughtered a hen and found therein eggs completely formed they are permitted to be eaten on the Festival — who will its author be? Neither Beth Shammai nor Beth Hillel!¹⁹ Therefore 'it is completed on its issue' [means] that [the egg] can hatch chickens, [but the egg found] in the body of the hen cannot hatch chickens. What is its practical bearing? — with respect to buying and selling.²⁰ As once happened when someone called out [to the salesmen]: Who has eggs

(1) On the Sabbath.

(2) V. supra p. 3 and notes.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) To be given to the dogs.

(5) For dog's consumption before the Sabbath.

(6) [The prohibition of nolad (V. Glos.) does not apply to living beings. V. Tosaf. s.v. kdg .]

(7) The owner of the mother-cow could have intended to kill the cow on the Festival and the cow and the calf that was within it would be mukan. The same however cannot be said of a chicken, because the owner could never conceive of an egg within the fowl ready to be hatched, so that in the case of the chicken there is no case of mukan.

(8) Because no egg is ever upon the point of being hatched when the hen is killed.

(9) Lev. XI, 42.

(10) Hul. 64a.

(11) And is not regarded as part of the flesh of the fowl. The Biblical rule not to eat meat together with milk (based on Ex. XXIII, 19) is extended by the Rabbis to include fowls. Eggs, however, may be eaten with milk.

(12) If the egg was laid before the Festival.

(13) Which was slaughtered on the Festival.

(14) On account of the law of Hakanah, v. supra 2b.

(15) Supra 2b.

(16) I.e., the Baraitha finds no support in the Mishnah, and therefore the Baraitha is not authoritative, so that R. Huna could rule that when the egg is still in the hen it may not be eaten on the Festival.

(17) The ruling of the Baraitha.

(18) Supra 2a.

(19) For Beth Shammai permit even the laid egg and Beth Hillel, according to this theory, prohibit the egg even though it is in the body of the hen.

(20) If one sells eggs for hatching then they must be eggs that are really laid and fertile.

of a cackling hen? When they gave him eggs [found] in a slaughtered hen, he came to R. Ammi [complaining], who said to them: It is an erroneous sale and he can withdraw [from it]. [But] this is self-evident!¹ — You might say that this [buyer] really wanted [the eggs] for eating, and the reason he asked [for eggs] of a cackling hen is that [such eggs] are hard-shelled; and that the practical outcome [of] his claim² is that he must refund him the difference,³ so he informs us [that this is not so].⁴

There was once one who said to [the salesmen], ‘Who has mated eggs⁵ [for sale]? Who has mated eggs?’ [When] they gave him unmated eggs,⁶ he came to R. Ammi who said to them: It is an erroneous sale and he can withdraw [from the transaction]. [But] this is self evident! — You might say that he needed [the eggs] only for eating,⁷ and the reason he asked for mated eggs is that they are richer; and that the practical bearing of this is that they must refund him the difference,⁸ so he informs us that the whole transaction is fraudulent].

Alternatively: What is meant, ‘it is completed on its issue’? [It means] it is completed with the coming forth of its greater part, and it is accordance with R. Johanan. For R. Johanan said: If the greater part of an egg issued on the day before the Festival and went back, it may be eaten on the Festival-day.⁹ There are some [scholars] who say: What is meant, ‘it is completed on its issue’? [It means] it is completed with the [coming forth] of the whole of it. Only with the coming forth of the whole of it, but not with its greater part,¹⁰ and this is to reject the opinion of R. Johanan.

[To revert to] the main text: If one slaughtered a hen and found therein completely formed eggs, these may be taken with milk.¹¹ R. Jacob says: If [the eggs] were attached [to the hen] by sinews they are forbidden.¹² Who is the author of that which our Rabbis taught: He who eats of a carcass¹³ of a clean bird, of its cluster of eggs, or of its bones, or of its veins, or of its flesh torn off while alive¹⁴ is clean;¹⁵ [but he who eats] of its ovary or of its crop or of its entrails, or if he melted its fat and swallowed it,¹⁶ he is unclean.¹⁷ — Who is the author [of the teaching], '[He who eats] of its cluster of eggs is clean'? — Said R. Joseph: It is not in accordance with R. Jacob. For if it were in accordance with R. Jacob, lo, he says: If [the eggs] were attached by sinews they are forbidden [to be taken with milk]!¹⁸ Said Abaye to him: Whence [do you say this]? Perhaps R. Jacob regards [these eggs as flesh] only with respect to a prohibition¹⁹ but not with respect to defilement? And if you say that we should enact a preventative measure also in respect to defilement?²⁰ [I would reply], This would be an extension of [the scope of] defilement, and we do not extend [the scope of] defilement by Rabbinical enactment.²¹

There are some [scholars] who say [thus]: Who is the author [of the teaching that if one eats] 'of its ovary he is unclean'?²² Said R. Joseph: It is R. Jacob: For he says, 'If [the eggs] were attached [to the hen] by sinews they are forbidden [to be taken with milk]'. Said Abaye to him: Whence [do you understand] that by the term ovary is meant [the eggs] that are attached to the ovary? Perhaps it means the ovary itself!²³ And if you object: What need is there to say this with respect to the ovary? [I would reply]: It is analogous to the crop and the inwards; for although these are [really] flesh,²⁴ [yet] since there are people who do not eat them, it is therefore necessary to state these; so also here [with respect to the ovary] since there are people who do not eat it, it is necessary to teach it. Our Rabbis taught: All creatures which copulate during the day are born during the day; all creatures which copulate during the night are born during the night; all creatures which copulate both by day and by night, give birth both by day and by night. 'Those which copulate by day are born by day', this refers to a fowl; 'those which copulate during the night are born during the night', this refers to the bat; 'those which copulate by day and by night give birth by day and by night', this refers to man and whatever is like him.

The Master said [above]: 'Those who copulate by day are born by day refers to a fowl'. What is the practical difference? — With respect to the teaching of R. Mari son of R. Kahana. For R. Mari son of R. Kahana said: If one examined a hen-coop on the eve of the Festival and could not find in it an egg, and on the morrow he rose early²⁵ and found in it an egg, it is permitted.²⁶ But did he not examine [the nest]? — I say²⁷ that he did not examine it very carefully, and even if he did examine it very carefully, I would say that [perhaps] the greater part [of the egg] came out [before the Festival] and went back; and [this ruling is] in accordance with [the opinion of] R. Johanan.²⁸

But that is not so; for R. Jose b. Saul said in the name of Rab: If one examined a hen-coop on the eve of the Festival and did not find in it an egg and on the morrow he rose early and found an egg in it, it is prohibited?²⁹ — This [latter passage] refers to eggs laid through friction with the earth,³⁰ If so,³¹ with respect to the teaching of R. Mari, might I not also say [the egg] was laid through friction with the earth? — When there is a cock near her.³² Even when there is a cock [near her] might I not [still] say that the egg was laid through friction with the earth? — Said Rabina: There is a tradition³³ that wherever there is a cock near her she will not fructify [eggs] through friction. And how near [should the cock be]?³⁴ — R. Gamda replied in the name of Rab: Sufficiently near

- (1) That it is a fraudulent sale, since he asked for one thing and was given another.
- (2) Seeing that he requires them in any case for eating.
- (3) Between the value of cackling eggs and the eggs received, but the sale is nevertheless valid and cannot be rescinded.
- (4) But we rather assume that when he asked for eggs of a cackling hen he wanted them for hatching, hence the sale is null.
- (5) Lit., 'eggs of (a hen paired with) a cock'.
- (6) Lit., 'eggs produced through friction of the body in the earth', but not through contact with a male.
- (7) And not for hatching.
- (8) Between the value of mated eggs and the eggs received, but the transaction would still be valid.
- (9) If subsequently laid on the Festival-day, and the law of mukzeh does not apply in this case.
- (10) Lit., 'with the coming . . . yes, but with . . . no'.
- (11) V. supra p. 25, n. 4.
- (12) Because they are then regarded as flesh.
- (13) The carcass of a bird not ritually slaughtered does not defile a person through being carried or touched; it is only the eating of its flesh which defiles. Cf. supra to Lev. XXII, 8 and Nid. 42b.
- (14) If any part of the bird is cut off while the bird is still living, although it may not be eaten, it does not defile.
- (15) Because the cluster of eggs, the bones and the veins are not considered as flesh.
- (16) Drinking is included in this law of defilement.
- (17) These are considered as part of the flesh.
- (18) Hence they are considered flesh.
- (19) Not because he regards the eggs as flesh but as a preventative measure to safeguard the breach of eating flesh and milk together.
- (20) I.e., to pronounce the person unclean when eating only the eggs.
- (21) The Rabbis did not extend the law of defilement by declaring the man who eats of these eggs unclean, because of the monetary loss that would follow (by his clothes and whatever he touches becoming unclean; v. Lev. XVII, 15). But with respect to the prohibition of eating the eggs with milk, there the eggs themselves are not prohibited; it is only to safeguard the law of eating flesh and milk that the Rabbis instituted a preventive measure, and though the eggs themselves may be eaten, they may not be eaten with milk. In this respect they consider the eggs flesh.
- (22) And thus considers the eggs flesh. Cf. Tosaf. Men. 70a. s.v. hmhc .
- (23) And that is indeed flesh.
- (24) And you would understand that they defile.
- (25) Before daybreak.
- (26) Because it is assumed that the egg was laid the previous day as, by the nature of the case, it could not have been laid during the night.
- (27) rnht Either Imperf. 1. sing., or Imper. 2. sing.
- (28) Who regards the egg as having been laid. It may have been deposited during the night of the Festival, but it is not regarded as having been laid during the night.
- (29) Because we assume the egg was laid during the night of the Festival.
- (30) Which eggs might be laid even at night.
- (31) That unmated eggs can be laid at night.
- (32) Therefore the egg must have been laid during the day.
- (33) Lit., 'they (teachings) are handed down'.
- (34) That the hen should not lay eggs through friction.

that [the hen] can hear his crowing in the daytime.¹ R. Mari gave a decision [in a case where the cock was] at a distance of sixty houses.² But if there is a river [between them] she [the hen] does not cross over, but if there is a bridge,³ she crosses over; if there is a plank she does not cross over. It happened once that [a hen] crossed over even a plank.

How have you explained it,⁴ with respect to unmated eggs? Then why particularly teach when he examined [the hen-coop]; even if he had not examined, it should also [be prohibited]! — If he did not examine it, I might say [the egg] was from yesterday. If so, even if he had examined it, I might still say that the greater part [of the egg] came out [yesterday] and went back and [should therefore be permitted] in accordance with R. Johanan! — The contingency stated by R. Johanan is rare.

R. Jose b. Saul further said in the name of Rab: This pulverized garlic is a danger to be left exposed.⁵

BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [THE QUANTITY OF] LEAVEN IS OF THE SIZE OF AN OLIVE, AND LEAVENED BREAD IS OF THE SIZE OF A DATE. What is Beth Shammai's reason? — If so,⁶ the Divine Law should only have written about leavened bread and not about leaven and I should have said: If leavened bread, the acidity of which is not very great, [is forbidden] at the size of an olive, how much more should leaven, the acidity of which is very great [be forbidden] at the size of an olive: then why does the Divine Law need to state leaven? In order to teach that the standard of the one is not like the standard of the other.⁷ And Beth Hillel? — It is necessary [for the Divine Law to state both]. For if the Divine Law had written only about leaven I might have said that the reason [leaven is forbidden to be seen] is that its acidity is very great, but leavened bread, the acidity of which is not great, I might have said is not [forbidden to be seen at all]. It is therefore necessary [to state leavened bread]. And if the Divine Law had stated leavened bread, [I might have said that] the reason [leavened bread is forbidden to be seen] is that it is fit for food, but leaven which is not fit for food, I might have said is not [forbidden to be seen at all]. Therefore both are necessary.

Shall we say that Beth Shammai does not agree with what R. Zera had said? For R. Zera said: The Scripture [verse]⁸ begins with the term 'leaven' and concluded with the term 'leavened bread' in order to teach that 'leaven' and 'leavened bread' are alike? — With respect to eating, no one differs [about the size].⁹ They only differ with respect to the removal [of the leaven from the house]; Beth Shammai is of the opinion that we do not learn [the law of] 'removal' from [that of] 'eating', while Beth Hillel maintains that we do learn 'removal' from 'eating'.¹⁰

Likewise it was stated: R. Jose b. Hanina said: The dispute is only with respect to the 'removal', but with respect to 'eating' all agree that both [leavened bread and leaven] are [forbidden] of the size of an olive. Likewise it was also taught: 'And there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee neither shall there be leaven seen with thee';¹¹ herein lies the dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, where Beth Shammai says that leaven is the size of an olive and leavened bread is of the size of a date, but Beth Hillel maintains that both are of the size of an olive.

HE WHO SLAUGHTERS GAME OR POULTRY ON A FESTIVAL, etc. HE WHO SLAUGHTERS [implies] only if he has done so,¹² but not [that it may be done] at the very outset. Then consider the subsequent clause: BUT BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: HE MUST NOT SLAUGHTER [etc.], whence it follows that the first Tanna holds that he may slaughter [at the outset]! — This is no difficulty. He means, ‘HE MUST NOT SLAUGHTER AND COVER [etc.]’.¹³ But consider the final clause: BUT THEY AGREE THAT IF HE SLAUGHTERED HE MAY DIG WITH A SHOVEL AND COVER; whence it follows the first clause does not mean ‘[only] if he has done it’! — Answered Rabbah: This is what [the Mishnah] says: ‘The slaughterer who comes to ask advice¹⁴ how should one answer him? Beth Shammai say: One answers him: Slaughter, dig and cover; but Beth Hillel maintain: he must not slaughter unless he had [loose] earth set in readiness before the Festival’. R. Joseph says: This is what [the Mishnah] says: ‘The slaughterer who comes to ask advice, how should one answer him? Beth Shammai say: One answers him: Go [and] dig, slaughter and cover; but Beth Hillel maintain: He may not dig unless he had [loose] earth set in readiness from before the Festival’.

Said Abaye to R Joseph: Shall it be said that you, Sir, and Rabbah disagree with respect to the teaching of R. Zera in Rab's name? R. Zera said in the name Rab: The slaughterer [of game or poultry] must put earth beneath [to receive the blood] and earth above, for it is said: ‘He shall pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust’.¹⁵ It does not say earth but ‘in earth’,¹⁶ teaching that the slaughterer must put earth beneath and earth above. You, Sir, [therefore] accept the teaching of R. Zera and Rabbah rejects the teaching of R. Zera. He answered him: Both I and Rabbah accept the teaching of R. Zera and our dispute here is as follows: Rabbah is of the opinion that he may [only slaughter] if there is [already] earth beneath [to receive the blood]; but if not, he may not slaughter,¹⁷ for we apprehend that he might change his mind and not slaughter.¹⁸ But according to my view, it is better,¹⁹ for if you will not permit him [to dig] he will come to be deprived of the joy of the Festival.²⁰

BUT THEY AGREE THAT IF SOME HAS [ALREADY] SLAUGHTERED, HE MAY DIG UP [EARTH] WITH A SHOVEL AND COVER [THE BLOOD]. R. Zerika said in the name of Rab. Judah: This only holds good when the shovel had [already] been sticking [in the earth] since the previous day.²¹ But does he not cause crumbling of the earth?²² — Answered R. Hiyya b. Ashi in the name of Rab:

- (1) The crowing does not reach so far during the daytime as at night.
 - (2) The cock was removed sixty houses from the hen yet R. Mari maintained that there was copulation and permitted the egg.
 - (3) Or ‘ferry’.
 - (4) The saying of R. Jose b. Saul.
 - (5) Any exposed liquid is forbidden for use lest a snake has drunk therefrom. The same applies to pulverized garlic.
 - (6) That the prohibition of both leaven and leavened bread were of the size of an olive.
 - (7) I.e., leavened bread is of the size of a date, for food of such a size is estimated by the Rabbis sufficient to make one ‘come to’, (cf. Yoma 79a), and leaven is of the size of an olive which is the minimum.

(8) Ex. XII, 19.

(9) I.e., even Beth Shammai agree that both leaven and leavened bread of the size of an olive are forbidden to be eaten.

(10) Ex. XII, 19 deals with the prohibition and penalty of eating anything leavened. Ex. XIII, 7 deals with the removal of anything leavened from the house. From the fact that Ex. XIII, 7 mentions both 'leaven' and 'leavened bread' Beth Shammai infer that the size of the 'leavened bread' with respect to removal is not that of an olive but that of a date.

(11) Ex. Xlii, 7.

(12) For otherwise, the Mishnah should state that a man may slaughter it. HE WHO SLAUGHTERS, however, implies that the law which follows holds good only if he has already slaughtered.

(13) Beth Hillel's point is made with reference to the covering of the blood, not with reference to the killing at all; and therefore a deduction as to the view of the first Tanna can likewise be made only with reference to the covering.

(14) Whether he may slaughter, having no earth.

(15) Lev. XVII, 13

(16) The preposition C here means in rather than with, indicating that dust is to be put on all sides. V. Nachmanides a.l. for reason of covering the blood.

(17) For he may not dig to obtain the earth to place beneath.

(18) He would then have dug earth unnecessarily.

(19) That he should be allowed to dig.

(20) For he will not be able to slaughter, v. Deut. XVI, 14.

(21) So that there is no violation of the law of digging on the Festival; for digging requires both the sticking in of the shovel as well as the lifting of it with the earth in it.

(22) Granted there is not digging, but this crumbling of the earth is also forbidden, being in the nature of grinding.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 8a

[We are dealing with a case] where the soil is loose.¹ But does he not make a hole?² — This is according to R. Abba; for R. Abba said: if one digs a hole on the Sabbath and only requires its soil, he is guiltless in regard to it.³

BECAUSE THE ASHES OF THE HEARTH ARE MUKAN [CONSIDERED AS HAVING BEEN PREPARED]. Who is speaking here of the ashes of the hearth?⁴ Answered Rabbah: Read thus: 'AND⁵ THE ASHES OF THE HEARTH ARE MUKAN'. Rab Judah said in Rab's name: They only taught this⁶ when it [the fire] had been kindled on the day of the Festival; but if it had been kindled on the Festival [itself] it is forbidden;⁷ but if [the ashes] are suitable⁸ to roast an egg therein, it is permitted.⁹ Likewise It was also taught: When they said [that] the ashes of the hearth are mukan, they only said so when it [the fire] had been kindled before the Festival; but if it had been kindled on the Festival it is forbidden; but if they are suitable to roast an egg therein it is permitted. If one had brought earth into his garden or into his waste land [before the Festival] one may cover the blood therewith.¹⁰

Rab Judah further said in the name of Rab: A man may bring a basket-full of earth [into his house] and may use it for whatever is necessary.¹¹ Mar Zutra pointed out in the name of Mar Zutra the Great: This only holds good if he had appointed a special corner for it.¹²

An objection was raised: One may not slaughter a koy¹³ on a Festival, and if he did slaughter it, he may not cover its blood.¹⁴ Now if this were so¹⁵, let him cover it [the blood] in accordance with the opinion of Rab Judah?¹⁶ — But even according to your point of view, let him cover the blood with ashes of the hearth, or with earth in which a shovel was stuck?¹⁷ Therefore you must needs say that we are dealing here with a case where he has not [any of these];¹⁸ so also explain that we are dealing with a case where he has not [a basket-full of earth in the house]. If so¹⁹ then why particularly with respect to [an animal about which there is] a doubt [whether its blood requires covering]; even with respect to an animal about which there is no doubt one also may not [cover the blood by digging]?²⁰ — He uses the expression ‘not only but also’: not only may he not slaughter [in the case of an animal about which there is no doubt],²¹ but even in the case of an animal about which there is a doubt, where I might have said that because of the joy of the Festival he should be allowed to slaughter without covering the blood, he informs us [that he may not slaughter].

(1) As for example gravel or sand.

(2) When he takes it out, which is forbidden, being in the nature of ‘building’.

(3) Since it was not his intention to make the hole, the presence of the hole is only a disfigurement and for such an act of impairing or disfiguring one is not considered guilty of a breach of the Sabbath law; and although such an act is forbidden ab initio, yet for the sake of the joy of the Festival it has been permitted.

(4) Lit., ‘who has mentioned its name previously (that you are referring to it now)?’

(5) Changing the letter א for ל. V. supra p. 1, n. 10.

(6) That the ashes of the hearth are considered mukan.

(7) On account of mukzeh.

(8) Hot enough.

(9) To use such ashes for covering the blood even though the fire was kindled on the Festival itself, because since the ashes may be used for baking they cannot be regarded as mukzeh and may therefore be used, when in such a state, for any other purpose.

(10) Since it was prepared for any purpose.

(11) And it is not regarded as a part of the earth of the house and thus be prohibited from being handled.

(12) I.e., he did scatter over the ground, thereby indicating that it was for his use.

(13) A bearded deer or antelope (GR. ) Jast. V. however Hul. 79b where it is defined as a cross between a goat and a gazelle. V. also B.K., Sonc. ed. p. 443 n. 6. A doubt prevails regarding this animal whether it is in the category of cattle the blood of which need not be covered, or in the category of game the blood of which is to be covered. Cf. Lev. XVII, 13.

(14) Perchance it is cattle and he would be handling earth unnecessarily. V. Hul. 83b, 79b.

(15) That earth thus brought could be used in any way.

(16) By listing the basket-full of earth. Even if it were definitely cattle, the earth could still be used without infringing the law not to do any work on a Festival.

(17) From before the Festival, which is stated in our Mishnah to be mukan.

(18) Viz., ashes or a shovel of earth.

(19) That we are dealing with a case where he has no earth except through digging.

(20) Since we accept the decision of Beth Hillel according to which it is forbidden to dig earth on a Festival for covering blood.

(21) Since he has no earth in readiness.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 8b

But surely since he teaches at the end [of the clause] ‘and if he did slaughter it, he may not cover its blood’, understand from this that [we are] speaking of a case where he has [earth in readiness]!¹ — Therefore answered Rabbah: The ashes of the hearth² are regarded as mukan for [the covering of blood of] animals about which there is no doubt, but they are not regarded as mukan with respect to animals about which there is some doubt [whether their blood requires covering]. Why are they not [considered mukan in respect of the blood of the animal] about which there is a doubt? because he would be making a hole [in the ashes on the Festival]! Then in the case of an animal [game] about which there is no doubt, he would also be making a hole? But [why would it not be regarded as making a hole in the ashes]? because it is in accordance with R. Abba!³ Than here also it is in accordance with R. Abba!⁴ And if [you say that] the reason [why he may not use them to cover the blood of an animal about which there is] a doubt is that he may cause a crumbling [of the earth],⁵ we should enact a preventive measure on account of crumbling of the earth even in the case of definite [game]? — In the case of [animals] about which there is no doubt, even if he crumbles the earth [it is permitted]; for the positive command [to cover the blood] comes and overrides the negative command.⁶ But when do we say that a positive command overrides⁷ a negative command, [only in cases] like ‘circumcision in leprosy’⁸ or ‘a linen garment with [woolen] fringes’,⁹ where the infringement of the negative command is at the same time as the fulfillment of the of the positive command!¹⁰ — This presents no difficulty, for simultaneously with the crumbling of the earth he covers the blood. But after all, [in] a Festival there exists both a positive and a negative command,¹¹ and a positive command cannot override both a positive and negative command! — Therefore answered Raba: ashes of the hearth [or anything like it] are intended for a definite case of game but not for a doubt.¹² And Raba follows [here] his opinion [expressed elsewhere]. For Raba said: If one brought in earth [before the Festival] to cover therewith excrement [of a child], he may cover therewith the blood of a bird;¹³ [to cover therewith] the blood of a bird he may not cover therewith the excrement [of a child].¹⁴ The *Neharbeleans*¹⁵ say: Even if one brought in earth to cover therewith the blood of a bird, he may [also] cover therewith the excrement [of a child].¹⁶

In the West¹⁷ they say: R. Jose Hama and R. Zera — some say, Raba the son of R. Jose b. Hama and R. Zera — differ therein; one says: koy is analogous to excrement,¹⁸ and the other says: koy is not analogous to excrement.¹⁹ It may be proved that it was Raba who said that koy is analogous to excrement; for Raba said: If one brought in earth to cover therewith excrement [of a child], he may cover therewith the blood of a bird, [but if he brought it earth to cover therewith] the blood of a bird, he may not cover therewith the excellent [of a child].²⁰ Conclude from this [that it was Raba].

Rami the son of R. Yabba said: The reason why we are not allowed to cover [the blood of] a koy is that it is a preventive measure against permitting the use of its suet.²¹ If it is so, [it should be prohibited] even on a weekday! — On a weekday people will say because he wants to clean his court.²² What is there to be said if he slaughtered [the koy] on a dust-heap?²³ [And further] what will you say if one comes to ask advice?²⁴ — On a weekday even if there is any doubt the Rabbis would tell him: Go, take trouble and cover [the blood]; but on a Festival, if there is a doubt, would the Rabbis tell him: Go, take trouble and cover [the blood]!²⁵ R. Zera learnt: it is not only with respect to a koy that the Rabbis said [thus]; but even if one slaughtered cattle, game and poultry and their blood became mingled, it is [also] prohibited to cover [such mingled blood] on a Festival.²⁶

Said R. Jose b. Jasiniah: This was only said when one cannot cover it [the mingled blood] with one thrust of the shovel;²⁷ but if one can cover it with one thrust of the shovel, it is permitted. But is not this self-evident?²⁸ — You might assume that we should prohibit [even] one shovelful lest perchance [he might go on to use] two shovelfuls, so he informs us [that one is allowed]. Rabbah said: If one slaughtered a bird on the eve of the Festival [and omitted to cover the blood], one may not cover it on the Festival;²⁹

(1) For otherwise there would be no point in stating the law, seeing that where no earth in readiness is available he may not cover the blood of an animal which certainly requires covering. The original question therefore remains, viz., why should he not cover the blood of the koy either according to the teaching of Rab Judah or with the ashes of the earth?

(2) The same applies to the basket-full of earth.

(3) Who does not regard this as digging a pit; v. supra 6a.

(4) Therefore the reason cannot be on account of making a hole.

(5) [It is possible that the ashes contain cinders, or the basket-full of earth clods. V. supra p. 33 n. 6].

(6) Not to do any work on a Festival.

(7) Lit., 'positive command comes and overrides etc.'

(8) It is forbidden to remove a Leprous spot by an operation. Deut. XXIV, 8. The command to circumcise however (Gen. XVII, 10ff) has to take place even though a leprous spot is on the foreskin.

(9) Woollen fringes (Deut. XXII, 12) may be inserted in a garment of linen in spite of the prohibition not to wear a garment of heterogeneous materials.

(10) For the act of crumbling the earth precedes the action of covering the blood.

(11) In addition to the negative command 'not to do any work', cf. Lev. XXIII, 7, 8, 21, 35 there is also a positive command of 'resting', cf. ibid. XXIII, 39.

(12) [They are not considered mukam in respect of animals about which there is a doubt, not because of the infringement of any prohibition involved, but because it is assumed that he had intended to use them only for such animals as definitely require the covering of their blood].

(13) In the case of a child's excrements the need is only a probable one, but with respect to the blood, he decided beforehand to kill on that day. Therefore if he prepared the earth to use for a contingency. how much more should he be permitted to use it for that which he definitely decided.

(14) For the earth was set in readiness only for a certain definitely determined object and therefore cannot be used in case of contingency.

(15) I.e., Rami b. Berabi or Beroki V. Sanh. 17b, Sonc. ed. p. 89. Neharbel identified with Nehar Bil, east of Bagdad, Obermeyer, p. 269.

(16) Because the contingency of the excrement is almost a certainty.

(17) I.e., Palestine. The Babylonians, when alluding to Palestine, called it the West, as Palestine was to the west of Babylon. Cf. Ber. 2b. But V. Sanh. 17b.

(18) I.e., if one brought earth to cover dung, he could cover therewith the blood of the koy, for the contingency of the dung is similar to the uncertainty with respect to the koy.

(19) Because the contingency of the dung is almost a certainty, and is therefore regarded as definite in comparison with koy which is absolutely uncertain.

(20) Hence Raba regards the contingency of requiring the earth for dung as remote and not as almost a certainty

(21) Heleb (V. Glos.). Suet is disallowed in the case of oxen and sheep but not in the case of game. If therefore you allow to cover its blood, people might regard it as game.

(22) And not because the koy is regarded as game. On a Festival work is forbidden with the exception of the preparation of food. The cleansing of a court is no exception.

(23) Where you cannot say that the covering of the blood is in order to keep the dust-heap clean.

(24) Whether, if he slaughters a koy on a weekday he should cover its blood? Is there not the possibility of the one asking the question, on being told that he is to cover its blood, himself coming to the conclusion that he may regard the koy as game and thus eat its suet.

(25) Surely not! Therefore people might come to a wrong inference.

(26) Because in so doing, he would be doing unnecessary work in covering the blood of the cattle.

(27) Which would be sufficient to cover the blood of the game and poultry; so that anything more than one shovelful would be unnecessary work.

(28) The one shovelful is required for the game and poultry, so that no extra work is done on account of the blood of the cattle.

(29) Because that which could be done before the Festival may not be done on the Festival. The bird, however, could be eaten in spite of the breach of the positive command to cover the blood.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 9a

if one prepared dough on the eve of the Festival, he may separate from its hallah¹ on the Festival.² The father of Samuel Says: Even if one Prepared dough on the eve of the Festival, he may not separate from it hallah on the Festival.³ Shall it be said that Samuel disputes with his father? For Samuel said: With respect to hallah outside Palestine, one may go on eating [of the dough] and separate the priestly portion at the end!⁴ — Answered Raba: Does then not Samuel agree that if one designated it by name⁵ that it is forbidden to be eaten by laymen?⁶

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE MAY NOT CARRY A LADDER [ON A FESTIVAL] FROM ONE DOVECOTE TO ANOTHER,⁷ BUT HE MAY INCLINE IT FROM ONE PIGEON-HOLE TO ANOTHER. BUT BETH HILLEL PERMIT [THIS].

GEMARA. R. Hanan b. Ammi said: The dispute refers only to public ground, when Beth Shammai is of the opinion that whoever sees [him carrying the ladder] might say that he needed it for [plastering his roof];⁸ Beth Hillel hold, his dovecote proves his intention; but in private ground, all agree that it is permitted. But it is not so. For Rab Judah said in the name of Rab:⁹ 'Wherever the sages have forbidden anything because of appearances, it is forbidden even in the most innermost chambers!¹⁰ — It is [a contro versy of] Tannaim. For it was taught: One may spread them out in the sun, but not in the presence of people.¹¹ R. Eleazar and R. Simeon forbid this.¹²

Others say [thus]: R. Hanan b. Ammi said: The dispute refers to private ground; for Beth Shammai accept the teaching of Rab Judah in the name of Rab, and Beth Hillel reject the teaching of Rab Judah in the name of Rab; but on public ground all agree that it is forbidden. Shall it be said that Rab ruled as Beth Shammai?!¹³ — It is [a controversy of] Tannaim.¹⁴ For it was taught:

'He may spread them out in the sun, but not in the presence of people. R Eleazar and R. Simeon forbid this'

- (1) The priestly portion of dough. V. Glos.
 - (2) For the decree of the Rabbis 'not to separate tithes on a Festival' (infra 36b) did not include dough, since it is permitted to make dough, which cannot be eaten until the priestly portion of the dough has been taken.
 - (3) When the Rabbis permitted the separation of hallah on a Festival, it only referred to a dough that was made on the Festival.
 - (4) Thus showing that the separation of hallah is not essential, since the eating of the dough does not depend upon the separation of hallah; and since one may eat of the dough before the separation one should be allowed to separate the hallah on the Festival, since the separation cannot be regarded as making the dough legally fit for use; cf. infra 36b.
 - (5) If one designated the separated part by the name hallah, it automatically assumes the name of terumah (V. Glos.).
 - (6) Hence such hallah is called terumah and can therefore be included in the Rabbinical enactment forbidding tithing on a Festival.
 - (7) To bring down the pigeons that are to be slaughtered.
 - (8) A man must avoid even the appearance of transgression.
 - (9) The authority of Rab as head of the Babylonian Community was not to be disputed by all Amora like R. Hanan, for he was regarded as enjoying the authority of a Tanna. CF. Sanh. 83b; 'Er. 50b; etc.; cf. also Tosaf. B.M. 46b.
 - (10) If therefore on public ground it is forbidden because of appearances, It should also be forbidden even on private ground.
 - (11) This refers to clothes which were accidently wetted on the Sabbath. For they might say that work had been done in washing. Hence there is an opinion that in private ground where the question of because of appearances does not apply it is permitted.
 - (12) Shab. 64b; 146b.
 - (13) This explanation would make Rab appear to side with Beth Shammai against Beth Hillel. But Rab would not go against the standard rule that the halachah prevails according to the opinion of Beth Hillel.
 - (14) The dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel according to R. Hanan is similar to the dispute between the anonymous Tanna and Rabbis Eleazar and Simeon. Rab, however, must explain the dispute of the Mishnah as in the first stage of the argument, and Beth Hillel, according to him, permit even on public ground because the dovecote proves the intention.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 9b

Our Mishnah is not in agreement with the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel agree that one may carry the ladder from one dovecote to [another] dovecote;¹ they dispute only about bringing it back, Beth Shammai saying: One may not bring it back, and Beth Hillel maintaining: One may even bring it back. R. Judah said: These words apply only to a dovecote ladder;² but with respect to a loft-ladder all agree that it is forbidden.³ R. Dosa says: One may incline it [the ladder] from one pigeon-hole to another. Others say in the name of R. Dosa: One may even move it with [short] hop-like steps.⁴

The sons of R. Hiyya⁵ went out to the Villages [to inspect the fields]. When they came back their father asked them: Has any legal question come before you? They replied to him: A case of [carrying] a loft-ladder came before us and we permitted it. He said to them: Go and forbid what you have permitted. They were of the opinion: Since R. Judah said that they [Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel] do not dispute with respect to a loft-ladder, it follows that the first Tanna holds that they do differ [even there].⁶ But this is not so; R. Judah is only explaining the view of the first Tanna.⁷ Whence [is this known]? — Since [the list Tanna] states: ‘One may carry a ladder from one dovecote to another [dovecote].’ If therefore you maintain that they differ with respect to a loft-ladder [instead of] this [phrase], ‘One may carry a ladder from one dovecote to another dovecote,’⁸ he should say, ‘One may carry a ladder to a dovecote.’⁹ [Evidently] this is what he means: only [the ladder] of a dovecote but not that of a loft. And the other?¹⁰ — Does it then state a ladder of a dovecote? It [only] states ‘from one dovecote to another dovecote’, [indicating] even to any number of dovecotes.¹¹

Others say: A case of inclining a loft-ladder came before us and we permitted it. He said to them: Go and forbid what you have permitted. They were of the opinion that what the first Tanna¹² forbids, R. Dosa permits.¹³ But it is not so. [Rather is it] what the first Tanna permits,¹⁴ R. Dosa forbids.

BUT HE MAY INCLINE IT FROM ONE PIGEON HOLE TO ANOTHER etc. Accordingly [we see] that Beth Shammai is stringent in regard to the joy of the Festival¹⁵ and Beth Hillel is lenient, but the following contradicts this: If one slaughters game or poultry on a Festival, Beth Shammai say: He may dig up [earth] with a shovel and cover [the blood], but Beth Hillel maintain: One may not slaughter unless he has [loose] earth prepared from the day before [the Festival]!¹⁶ — R. Johanan replied: The authorities should be reversed.¹⁷ ‘Whence [does this follow]?’¹⁸ Perhaps Beth Shammai say thus there¹⁹ only when there is [already] a shovel sticking in the earth,²⁰ but not where there is no shovel sticking in the earth.²¹ Or perhaps Beth Hillel permit here²² only because the dovecote makes it evident,²³ but there²⁴ it is not permitted!²⁵ Rather, if there is a difficulty,²⁶ the following is the difficulty. Beth Shammai say,²⁷ One may not take [pigeons]²⁸ unless he stirred [them] up²⁹ the day before. But Beth Hillel say: He stands and declares, ‘This one or that one shall I take’.³⁰ Accordingly [we see] that Beth Shammai is stringent in regard to the joy of the Festival and Beth Hillel is lenient; but the following contradicts this: If one slaughters game or poultry on a Festival [etc.]! — R. Johanan replied: The authorities should be reversed. Whence [does this follow]?³¹ Perhaps Beth Shammai [permit] only when there is [already] a shovel sticking in the earth

(1) In order not to be deprived of the joy of the Festival.

(2) As his intention is then unmistakable.

(3) For the sake of appearance, as it may certainly be thought that he wishes to repair the roof.

(4) If the top of the ladder does not reach a particular pigeon-hole otherwise.

(5) Judah and Hezekiah.

(6) And, of course, Beth Hillel's view is law.

(7) Thus none permit the use of the ladder of the loft, since R. Judah does not state a separate view.

(8) Which signifies a ladder only used for dovecotes.

(9) The word l'cian should have been omitted.

- (10) I.e., R. Hiyya, what was the meaning of the text to him?
- (11) The expression from 'one dovecote to another dovecote' is not asserting that it was a dovecote ladder, but rather that the ladder may be moved to several dovecotes.
- (12) The first Tanna of R Dosa is R. Judah who forbids the carrying of a loft-ladder.
- (13) The loft-ladder at any rate to be inclined from one pigeon hole to another.
- (14) R. Judah permits the carrying of a dovecote ladder while R. Dosa forbids carrying and only permits inclining the ladder which had been brought to the dovecote before the Festival. But a loft-ladder would be forbidden even to incline.
- (15) Beth Shammai do not give a more lenient decision out of regard for the joy of the Festival.
- (16) Supra 2a. In this case Beth Shammai is more lenient than Beth Hillel.
- (17) Rashi: The authorities in the second Mishnah are to be reversed; Tosaf.: The authorities of the first Mishnah are to be reversed.
- (18) There is no need to change the authorities for the attitude of each school in the second Mishnah can be in harmony with their attitude in the first Mishnah.
- (19) That it is permissible to dig up earth with a shovel.
- (20) Before the Festival when there is no likelihood of breaking any law on the Festival.
- (21) Even if the earth is loose, for in sticking in the shovel it would appear as if he were digging on a Festival. Similarly in the second Mishnah an onlooker might think that he was intending to repair his roof.
- (22) Not out of consideration for the joy of the Festival.
- (23) That no forbidden work is intended to be performed.
- (24) In the first Mishnah.
- (25) To dig even though the shovel was already sticking in the earth because he may cause a crumbling of the earth which is in the nature of grinding and the possibility of an infringement of the law by digging takes precedence over the consideration of the joy of the Festival.
- (26) Which led R. Johanan, to reverse the authorities.
- (27) Infra 10a.
- (28) For slaughtering on a Festival.
- (29) V. infra 10a.
- (30) Preparing then, for the following day.
- (31) So D.S. as supra. Cur. edd. 'perhaps it is not so'.

but not when there is no shovel sticking in the earth;¹ or perhaps Beth Hillel rule thus only here because since it is mukzeh,² it is sufficient if he stands and declares, 'This one or that one shall I take';³ but there [they do] not [rule thus]! Rather, if there is a difficulty, the following is the difficulty: Beth Shammai say: One may not take a pestle⁴ to cut up meat thereon; but Beth Hillel permit [it].⁵ Accordingly [we see] that Beth Shammai is stringent in regard to the joy of the Festival and Beth Hillel is lenient, but the following contradicts this: If one slaughters game or poultry [on a Festival] Beth Shammai etc.! — R. Johanan replied: The authorities should be reversed. 'Whence [does this follow]? Perhaps it is not so? [Perhaps] Beth Shammai rule [thus] only there where there is [already] a shovel sticking in the earth, but not when there is no shovel sticking In the earth. Or perhaps Beth Hillel rule thus only here, because it [the pestle] bears the designation of utensil;⁶ but there [they do] not [rule thus]! Rather, if there is a difficulty, the following is the difficulty: Beth Shammai say: One may not lay out a hide⁷ for treading on⁸ and one may not lift it up unless it has [sticking to it] flesh [as much as] an olive;⁹ but Beth Hillel permit.¹⁰ Accordingly [we see] that Beth Shammai is stringent in regard to the joy of the Festival and Beth Hillel is lenient, but the following contradicts that if one slaughters game or poultry on a Festival etc! — R. Johanan replied: The authorities should be reversed. Whence [does this follow]? Perhaps it is not so; [perhaps Beth Shammai rule thus only there, where there is [already] a shovel sticking in the earth, but not when there is no shovel sticking in the earth. Or perhaps Beth Hillel rule thus only here because it [the hide] is fit for sitting thereon,¹¹ but there [they do] not [rule thus]! Rather, if there is a difficulty, the following is the difficulty: Beth Shammai say: One may not take down shutters¹² on a Festival, but Beth Hillel permit them even to be put back.¹³ Accordingly [we see] that Beth Shammai is stringent in regard to the joy of the Festival and Beth Hillel is lenient, but the following contradicts this: If one slaughters game or poultry on a Festival etc.! It is well [that the rulings of] Beth Shammai are not contradictory: there [it is permitted only] when there is [already] a shovel sticking in the earth but here there is no shovel sticking in the earth.¹⁴ But [the views of] Beth Hillel are contradictory! — Said R. Johanan: The authorities should be reversed. [Why reverse the authorities]?¹⁵ Perhaps Beth Hillel rule thus only here because building and pulling down do not apply to utensils,¹⁶ but there [they do] not [rule thus].

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY:¹⁷ ONE MUST NOT TAKE [PIGEONS] UNLESS HE HAS STIRRED¹⁸ [THEM] UP THE DAY BEFORE [THE FESTIVAL]: BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE STANDS AND DECLARES: THIS ONE OR THAT ONE WILL I TAKE. GEMARA. R. Hanan b. Ammi said: The dispute is only with respect to the first brood¹⁹ when Beth Shammai is of the opinion that²⁰ we preventively prohibit,²¹ lest he may come to change his mind;²² whereas Beth Hillel is of the opinion: We do not prohibit as a precautionary measure; but with respect to the second brood all agree that it is sufficient when he stands and declares, ‘This one or that one will I take’.²³

Now according to Beth Hillel, why must he declare, ‘This one or that one will I take’, let him [rather] say, ‘Of these will I take [one] tomorrow’?²⁴ And if you reply that Beth Hillel do not accept [the law of] Bererah,²⁵ surely we have learnt:²⁶ If a corpse [lay] in a room²⁷ which has many doors²⁸ they are all unclean;²⁹ if one of these [doors] was opened,³⁰ it alone is unclean³¹ and all the others are clean.³² If he formed the intention to take it [the corpse] out through one of them, or through a window which [measures] four handbreadths square,³³ this gives protection to all the other doors.³⁴ Beth Shammai say: Providing that he had formed his intention to take it out³⁵ before the person died;³⁶ but Beth Hillel say: [It holds good] even [if his intention was formed] after the person died!³⁷ — But has it not already been stated thereon: Rabbah said: [The statement of Beth Hillel is] with respect to the cleansing of the entrances from now onwards.³⁸ R. Oshaia also said: [The statement of Beth Hillel is] with respect to the cleansing of the entrances from now onwards; only ‘from now onwards’ but not ‘retrospectively’.³⁹ Raba says: In reality [the statement of Beth Hillel is even in respect of cleansing] retrospectively,⁴⁰ and here⁴¹ the reason⁴² is lest he might take up [a pigeon] and put it down again, take up [a pigeon] and put it down again and thus come to take one which is not fit for him.⁴³ But you say it is sufficient if he stands and says this or that will I take!⁴⁴ — This only applies on the eve of the Festival,⁴⁵

(1) Similarly they do not permit to take a pigeon on a Festival unless he had specified before the Festival the particular pigeon he intended to slaughter, for after handling one he might change his mind and decide upon another and thus the handling of the first pigeon would be regarded as unnecessary work on a Festival.

(2) Viz., the prohibition of taking pigeons without previous preparation.

(3) This constitutes sufficient preparation.

(4) Used for the pounding of groats and therefore reserved for work forbidden on a Festival and so must not be handled.

(5) Infra 11a.

(6) Lit., 'the law of a utensil is upon it', and one may always handle a utensil on a Festival.

(7) Flayed on the Festival.

(8) Whereby it becomes tanned.

(9) The minimum to be used as a meal and what is needful for food may be carried about on a Festival.

(10) Cf. infra p. 51.

(11) They used to sit cross-legged upon rugs.

(12) For it is of the nature of building and pulling clown. V. infra 54, n. 2.

(13) Although such work is not directly for the sake of the Festival, infra 11b.

(14) I.e., in this case there is nothing corresponding to the shovel sticking in the earth in order to permit.

(15) Cf. MS.M. Cur. ed. 'or'. [The text is in disorder: D.S. a.l. on the basis of different MSS. reconstructs it as follows: 'On a Festival etc.' — Said R. Johanan: The authorities are reversed. But whence (does this follow)? Perhaps Beth Shammai rules thus only there . . . but here there is no shovel . . . earth. Or perhaps Beth Hillel rule thus only here because building etc.' — following the same line of argument as in the preceding cases].

(16) The forms of the utensils are not changed but are only used for a different purpose.

(17) Supra 9b. q.v.

(18) To stir up, means to examine properly what sort of bird it was.

(19) It is usual to leave the first brood as company for the parent birds.

(20) If he did not 'stir' them before the Festival.

(21) Taking any on the Festival.

(22) About slaughtering that particular pigeon and put it back. He would thus have handled and moved the pigeon unnecessarily. If, however, he 'stirred' them before the Festival and chose one for slaughter, then he has definitely made up his mind to have that bird.

(23) For there is no question of putting the bird back, since it is only the first brood that is left with the parent birds.

(24) Since a verbal preparation is sufficient to remove the prohibition of mukzeh, it should be assumed that the bird chosen on the Festival is retrospectively the same one about which he spoke the day before.

(25) Retrospective selection. A legal term to denote that a present selection shall have retrospective validity. The selection of a particular dove on the Festival from a number that have been generally designated before the Festival (when it was intended to take one only) shall rank as though that dove itself has been selected before the Festival.

(26) Infra 37b; 'Er. 68b; Oh. VII, 3.

(27) A corpse in a room defiles not only the vessels inside the room but even those standing just outside the door beneath the lintel of the entrance through which the corpse is to be carried out. If there is more than one entrance to the room the same rule applies to them all unless it has been specifically determined to carry it through one particular entrance. Such determination protects the other entrances.

(28) All of which are closed or open.

(29) The doors themselves and even the vessels outside under the same lintels; because the corpse may be carried out through any one of them.

(30) After the person's death.

- (31) For it is assumed that the corpse will be taken out through the open door.
- (32) I.e., all vessels placed subsequently in the remaining entrances. With respect to those vessels placed there prior to the opening of the one door v. the immediately following hypothetical dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
- (33) The minimum opening through which a whole corpse could be carried out.
- (34) His intention or determination is regarded as if he had actually opened the entrance.
- (35) Through a particular door.
- (36) But if only after death, then those vessels which had been placed in the same entrance prior to his determination would be unclean.
- (37) It ranks as though that door had been designated for that purpose immediately at death; hence we see that Beth Hillel accept the rule of Bererah.
- (38) I. e., from the time subsequent to his determination. According to Beth Shammai, when there has been no determination before the death, all the entrances are unclean and the subsequent determination does not remove the uncleanness except by the actual act of opening. Not so Beth Hillel. But Beth Hillel will not accept the rule of Bererah.
- (39) I.e., those vessels placed in the entrances from the time of death until the forming of his intention all agree are unclean.
- (40) Because Beth Hillel accept the rule of Bererah.
- (41) In our Mishnah.
- (42) That Beth Hillel say that he must specify this or that.
- (43) On account of mukzeh; for his intention was to take only what was necessary' for him. If, however, he said 'this or that I will take,' he will definitely take those designated.
- (44) Why not apprehend here too lest he will pick and choose since he did not 'stir' them before the Festival?
- (45) I.e., If he makes this declaration on the eve of the Festival to remind him that he may not pick and choose on the Festival on account of mukzeh.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 10b

but¹ on the Festival [itself]² it is forbidden,³ for sometimes the [seemingly] fat ones are found [to be] lean, and the [seemingly] lean ones are found [to be] fat, and [thus] he handles [birds] which are not fit for him; or else, sometimes they may all be found lean, and he will leave them and thus come to refrain from the joy of the Festival.⁴

MISHNAH. IF HE DESIGNATED⁵ BLACK [DOVES]⁶ BUT FOUND WHITE, WHITE BUT FOUND BLACK, TWO BUT FOUND THREE, THEY ARE [ALL] FORBIDDEN;⁷ THREE BUT FOUND TWO, THEY ARE PERMITTED. [IF HE DESIGNATED DOVES] INSIDE THE NEST AND FOUND THEM IN FRONT OF THE NEST, THEY ARE FORBIDDEN; BUT IF NONE EXCEPT THESE WERE THERE, THEY ARE PERMITTED.

GEMARA. Is not this self-evident? — Said Rabbah: We are dealing here with a case where he had designated black and white,⁸ and on the following morning he found black ones in the place of the white and white ones in the place of the black; you might say they are the very same [doves] and they had only exchanged [their nests], so he informs us⁹ that those¹⁰ are gone away and these are different ones. Shall it be said that [this Mishnah] supports the view of R. Hanina? for R. Hanina said:¹¹ [If] majority and proximity [are in opposition]¹² you follow the majority?¹³

— As Abaye has explained,¹⁴ when there is a board,¹⁵ likewise also here [explain] when there is a board.

[IF HE DESIGNATED] TWO [DOVES] BUT FOUND THREE THEY ARE [ALL] FORBIDDEN. Whichever way you take it [they are forbidden]; if these¹⁶ are other [doves], then they are indeed others;¹⁷ if they are the same, then there is [another] one mixed up with them.¹⁸

[IF HE DESIGNATED] THREE [DOVES] BUT FOUND TWO THEY ARE PERMITTED. What is the reason? — They are indeed the same¹⁹ and one of them has flown away. Shall it be said that the Mishnah is according to Rabbi and not according to the Sages? For we have learnt: If one deposited one hundred [zuz]²⁰ and found two hundred,²¹ [it is assumed that] there is hullin [money]²² and second tithe [money] mixed together. This is the opinion of Rabbi. But the Sages say: The entire sum is hullin [money].²³ If he deposited two hundred [zuz] and found one hundred, [it is assumed that] one hundred has been left²⁴ and one hundred has been taken away. This is the opinion of Rabbi. But the Sages say: The entire sum is hullin [money].²⁵ — You can even say [that it is] in accordance with the Sages, for It was stated thereon: R. Johanan and R. Eleazar both say:²⁶ Doves are different since they are used to hop about.²⁷ But why is it necessary²⁸ to explain here, ‘doves are different since they are used to hop about’? Surely it has already been stated with respect to this [very Baraita] that [there is a dispute between] R. Johanan and R. Eleazar; one says: The controversy [between Rabbi and the Sages] is when there were two purses,²⁹ but when there is [only] one purse all agree that the entire sum is hullin.³⁰ And the other says: The dispute is when there is one purse,³¹ but when there are two purses all agree that [we are to assume] one hundred has been left and one hundred taken away! It is well according to the view that the dispute relates to two purses; hence it is necessary to explain here ‘it is different with doves since they are used to hop about.’ But according to the view that ‘the dispute is [only] with respect to one purse but when there are two purses all agree that one hundred had been left and one hundred taken’ why is it necessary to answer it [as above]; surely you have said indeed that they do not dispute with respect to two purses?³² — Said R. Ashi: We are dealing here with doves tied together and with purses fastened together;³³ doves pull themselves apart from one another, but purses do not pull themselves apart from one another.³⁴ And Rabbi:³⁵ — He will answer you: In the case of purses too, it occurs

(1) If he has to make up his mind.

(2) I.e., if he only said ‘of these will I take to-morrow.

(3) To take any bird.

(4) But had he specifically designated which to take, he would not change his mind.

(5) For eating on the Festival.

(6) That were in the nest.

(7) In the first case they are definitely strange doves and in the second case since he cannot recognize the doves he designated they are all forbidden.

(8) In two separated nests.

(9) That we are to suppose.

(10) Doves that have been designated for slaughter on the eve of the Festival.

(11) B.B. 23b.

(12) I.e., If a case can be decided one way on the ground of majority and another way on the ground of nearness.

For majority and nearness, cf. Ex. XXIII, 2 and Deut. XXI, 3 respectively. V. also B.B., Sonc. ed. p. 117, n. 2.

(13) Here too it is probable that the doves are the same and that the nests have been exchanged owing to their close proximity. On the other hand it is possible to imagine these doves as part of the great majority of birds which do not belong to him and which had not been predetermined on.

(14) With reference to another case, infra 11a.

(15) In front of the dovecote upon which strange birds settle. Accordingly it is also probable that as soon as the old doves left their dovecote (quitted their nest), these strange doves took their place. The question of proximity therefore applies equally to the strange doves as well as to the doves that were originally in the nest in which case no one disputes that majority decides.

(16) All three.

(17) They are therefore forbidden, for these have not been designated before the Festival.

(18) And since it is not known which is the new one they are all forbidden.

(19) I.e., two of the three previously designated.

(20) I.e., one case of a hundred zuz of the second tithe which had to be taken to Jerusalem, but which owing to the distance was converted into money. This money had to be spent in Jerusalem. V. Deut. XIV, 22-26.

(21) I.e., two one-hundred zuz pieces.

(22) I.e., ordinary, unconsecrated, not of the second tithe.

(23) He must therefore select the finest coin for the second tithe and say: If this was originally the second tithe coin then it is well; if, on the other hand, the other coin was originally the second tithe, then let this one be exchanged for the other.

(24) For he would not have put away hulin money together with second tithe money; and since two coins were found instead of one, it is to be assumed that the one-hundred zuz piece of the second tithe had been taken out and put in another place, while this two-hundred is ordinary money subsequently put in the same place.

(25) Because the owner would not have separated one second tithe coin from the other except to take it to Jerusalem; hence the Sages assume that he had taken out the two hundred zuz which he put somewhere away, replacing them by the hundred zuz of ordinary money, but that he had forgotten the whole matter. Similarly according to the Sages it would follow that the three doves had flown away and two others came in their place. V. Pes. 100.

(26) In explanation of this seeming contradiction.

(27) Therefore one of them may have hopped away and the two left are of the original ones. But the same cannot be said with respect to money.

(28) For both R. Johanan and R. Eleazar.

(29) Each containing one hundred zuzim. It is then that Rabbi says that one hundred was left and one hundred taken away.

(30) For if he took aught of such money he would have taken the lot.

(31) It is then that the Sages assume that the entire two hundred second tithe money had been taken out and placed elsewhere.

(32) The contradiction shown between the Mishnah and the view of the Sages was removed by both R. Johanan and R. Eleazar by explaining that there was a difference between doves and coins. But since one of the same two Rabbis maintains that in the case of two purses each containing one hundred zuzim the Sages agree that the hundred left is part of the original, which is in agreement with the statement in the Mishnah, then why was he a party to that explanation of the contradiction?

(33) The expression 'One purse containing two hundred zuzim' means two purses, each containing one hundred zuzim, tied together and regarded as one purse; likewise 'two purses' would mean when they are not tied together. In the former case the Sages hold that the purse left is not one of the original two that were tied together. This view is contradictory to the Mishnah which says that the two doves found are of the original three that were tied together from which one had torn itself away. This contradiction is overcome by drawing a distinction between live birds and inanimate purses.

(34) And therefore the purse left may not be of the original two tied together.

(35) Surely this is a logical distinction!

that their knot becomes worn out.

WITHIN THE NEST AND FOUND THEM IN FRONT OF THE NEST THEY ARE FORBIDDEN. Shall it be said that this¹ supports the view of R. Hanina? For R. Hanina said:² [If] majority and proximity [are in opposition] you follow the majority? — Said Abaye: When there is a board.³ Raba says: 'We are treating here of two nests one above the other;⁴ and it goes without saying that if he designated [doves] in the lower [nest] and did not designate [those] in the upper, and [on the morrow] finds [doves] in the lower [nest] and none in the upper they are forbidden, for we assume that those of the lower [nest] had flown away and these⁵ had indeed hopped down; but even if he designated [doves] in the upper [nest] and did not designate [those] in the lower and he came and found [some] in the upper and did not find [any] in the lower, these too are forbidden, for we assume that those⁶ had flown away and these had indeed fluttered up.⁷ BUT IF NONE EXCEPT THESE WERE THERE THEY ARE PERMITTED. What are the circumstances? If you say that [this refers] to those which can fly, then it is possible to assume that those had flown away and these are different ones? And if [this refers] to those which can [only] hop,⁸ then if there is [another] nest within fifty cubits, they might indeed have hopped away;⁹ and if there is no [other] nest within fifty cubits, it is obvious that they are permitted, for Mar 'Ukba b. Hama said: 'Whatever hops does not hop more than fifty cubits! — In truth [it means] where there is [another] nest within fifty cubits, but e.g., it is situated round a corner; you might say that they have indeed hopped away,' so it¹⁰ informs us that they only hop along as long as by turning they see their nest,¹¹ but if not,¹² they do not hop away.

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY:¹³ YOU MAY NOT TAKE A PESTLE¹⁴ TO CUT UP MEAT THEREON,¹⁵ BUT BETH HILLEL PERMIT [IT]. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE MAY NOT PLACE A HIDE¹⁶ FOR TREADING ON¹⁷ NOR MAY HE LIFT IT UP UNLESS THERE IS AS MUCH AS AN OLIVE OF FLESH WITH IT,¹⁸ BUT BETH HILLEL PERMIT IT.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: And they [both] agree that if he had already cut up meat thereon, it [the pestle] may not be moved.¹⁹

Abaye said: The dispute is [only] with respect to a pestle, but in the case of a butcher's block²⁰ all agree that it is permitted. This is obvious: we learnt, A PESTLE!²¹ — You might say that the same applies even to a butcher's block²² and the reason it states PESTLE is in order to inform you of the extent of the view of Beth Hillel that even an object specially made for work which is forbidden²³ is also permitted; hence he informs us [that it is not so]. Others state; Abaye [himself] replied:²⁴ It is only necessary [to teach] that even a new butcher's block [is permitted]. You might say: He may change his mind and not cut up [meat] on it,²⁵ so he informs us [that this is not so]. Do then Beth Shammai not fear [the possibility of] one changing his mind?²⁶ Surely it was taught: Beth Shammai say: One may not lead the slaughterer²⁷ and the knife to the animal [to be slaughtered]²⁸ nor the animal to the slaughterer and the knife; but Beth Hillel say: One may bring the one to the other. Beth Shammai say: One may not carry spices or a pestle to the mortar, nor the mortar to the spices or the pestle; but Beth Hillel say: One may bring the one to the other! — What comparison is this? [With respect to] an animal it is well: he may come to change his mind saying, let us leave this lean animal and I will bring another animal which is fatter than this; [with respect to] a dish too he may come to change his mind, saying, let us leave this dish which requires spices and I will bring another [dish] which does not require spices. [But] here what are we to suppose? He will change his mind and not cut up [the meat]? Since he has already slaughtered [the animal], it has to be cut up.

BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE MAY NOT PLACE A HIDE. A Tanna taught: And they [both] agree that one may salt upon it meat for roasting.²⁹ Abaye said: It was taught only [when it is] for roasting but not for boiling.³⁰ This is obvious: We learnt³¹ ‘for roasting’? — This he [Abaye] informs us that even for roasting [to salt it almost as much] as for boiling is [also] forbidden.

Our Rabbis taught: One may neither salt³² pieces of suet³³ for turn them about.³⁴ They reported in the name of R. Joshua: One may spread them out in the air on pegs [of wood]. R. Mattenah said: The halachah is as R. Joshua. Others state: R. Mattenah said: The halachah is not as R. Joshua. This is well according to the version, ‘the halachah is as R. Joshua’, [then it is necessary]: For I might say, [when] an individual and a majority [are in dispute] the halachah is as the majority: [hence] he informs us that [here] the halachah is as the individual. But according to the version ‘the halachah is not as R. Joshua’, it is obvious: [for when] an individual and a majority [are in dispute], the halachah is as the majority! — You might think that the opinion of R. Joshua is logical, for if you will not permit him³⁵ he will altogether forbear to slaughter,³⁶ so he informs us.³⁷ And why is this different from the case of placing a hide before the treading place?³⁸

— There it is not manifest,¹ since it [the hide] is fit to be used as a mat to sit on. Here [however] he will be led to argue: 'What is the reason [that] the Rabbis permitted me [to spread it on pegs]: so that it should not become offensive: what difference is there whether I spread them or salt them? Rab Judah in the name of Samuel said: A man may salt [on a Festival] several pieces of meat together even though he needs only one piece.² R. Adda b. Ahabah made use of an artifice and salted piece after piece.³ MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY:⁴ ONE MAY NOT TAKE DOWN SHUTTERS ON A FESTIVAL,⁵ BUT BETH HILLEL PERMIT EVEN TO PUT THEM BACK AGAIN.

GEMARA. What [kind of] shutters? — Said 'Ulla: The shutters of a [shopkeeper's] stall.⁶ 'Ulla further said: There are three cases where [the Rabbis] allowed the completing [of the action]⁷ on account of its beginning,⁸ and they are as follows: [The placing of] the hide for people to tread on,⁹ [the taking down of] shutters from stalls¹⁰ and the replacing of a plaster¹¹ in the Temple. And Rehaba said in the name of Rabbi Judah:¹² Also he who opens his cask [of wine] or commences [cutting] into his dough for the requirements of the Festival¹³ and according to R. Judah who Says: He may finish [selling them after the Festival].¹⁴

‘[The placing of] the hide for people to tread on’; we have [already] learnt it!¹⁵ — You might say that the reason of Beth Hillel¹⁶ is because it is fit to be used as a mat and therefore even though [the hide was flayed] before the Festival it is also [permitted]; so he informs us [that] they permitted its completion for the sake of the beginning: [therefore if flayed] on the Festival it is [permitted], before the Festival it is not [permitted].

‘[THE TAKING DOWN OF] SHUTTERS FROM STALLS’ we have also learnt, [viz., but Beth Hillel permit even to put them back again]: — You might say that the reason of Beth Hillel is that building or demolishing does not apply to utensils and [therefore] even [the lids of chests in] houses are also permitted,¹⁷ so he informs us that they only permitted its completion on account of the beginning; therefore of stalls only [is it permitted] but not of [chests in] houses.¹⁸

‘The replacing of a plaster in the Temple’ we have also learnt [viz.]:¹⁹ One may replace²⁰ a plaster [on a wound] in the Temple but not in the country:²¹ — You might Say, what is the reason? Because there is no shebuth²² in the Temple and [therefore] even a priest not performing a Temple service [may also replace a plaster], so he informs us that they [only] permitted its completion on account of the beginning, [therefore it is permitted] only in the case of [a priest] performing a Temple service, but not when not performing a Temple service. ‘[The case of] opening a cask’, we have also learnt²³ [viz.]: He who opens his cask [of wine] or commences cutting into his dough for the requirements of the Festival, R. Judah says: He may finish [selling them after the Festival]; but the Sages say: He may not finish! — You might say that the Rabbis regarded the uncleanness of an ‘am ha-arez during the [period of the] Festival as cleanness and [therefore] even though he had not commenced²⁴ it is also [permitted];²⁵ so he informs us that they only permitted its completion on account of the beginning, [therefore] only if he had commenced [to sell them during the Festival] but not if he had not commenced.²⁶ And ‘Ulla: What is the reason that he does not state this?²⁷ — He does not deal with [cases] where there is a dispute. But there is a dispute concerning those too!²⁸ — The [opinion of] Beth Shammai against that of Beth Hillel is regarded as having no authority.²⁹

Our Mishnah³⁰ is not according to the following Tanna; for it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel agree that one may take down the shutters on a Festival; they dispute only about replacing, Beth Shammai maintaining: One may not replace [them]; while Beth Hillel rules: One may even replace [them]. When is this said? Where they [the shutters] have hinges,³¹ but if they have no hinges all agree that it is permitted [even to replace them]. But it was taught: This applies only if they have no hinges, but if they have hinges all agree that it is forbidden! — Said Abaye: When they have hinges on the side all³² agree that it is forbidden,³³ they only dispute where there is a hinge in the middle:

(1) That the spreading of the hide is for tanning.

(2) For this is not doing extra work, for there is one act of salting whether it be for one or for several pieces.

(3) After salting one piece for eating on the same day, he took another under the pretence that it was preferable, and so on until the whole was salted. The object was to preserve the meat in better condition for the days following the Festival.

(4) Supra 10a.

(5) For it is of the nature of building and pulling down, work forbidden on a Festival.

(6) Although general trading is prohibited on a Festival, yet things necessary for the full enjoyment of the Festival may be sold on trust, no payment being made on the day of the Festival. One or two shutters were taken down to show that such goods might be obtained.

(7) Which was not necessary for the Festival and in an ordinary way would have been prohibited.

(8) The beginning of the action was necessary for the enjoyment of the Festival and so the ending is permitted for the sake of the beginning. If it were forbidden, it might cause the neglect of beginning certain work which was necessary for the full enjoyment of the Festival.

(9) If he would not be allowed to use the skin in this way he would not kill.

(10) If he will not be allowed to close he will not open to give food.

(11) To apply a plaster on the Sabbath is forbidden. If, however, a priest having a plaster on a wound on his hand by reason of which he may not perform the Temple service (because nothing may adhere to his hand during the Temple service) has removed same, then he may replace it after the Temple service is over.

(12) [The reference is to Rab Judah, whom Rehaba designated as 'Rabbi' ('my teacher') because he was his teacher (Rashi). V. D.S. a.l.]

(13) To retail these to the pilgrims during the Festival among whom may be some of the .rtv lng who do not observe the law of purification and who may have come into contact with the wine or bread thus rendering them unclean. According to R. Judah, the remainder also may after the Festival be bought by or sold to anyone however scrupulous he may be. V. p. 56, n. 1. Here, too, if we do not allow him to sell after the Festival, he will not commence opening for the Festival.

(14) This is explained infra.

(15) Supra 11a. Then why mention it again?

(16) In permitting the hide to be trodden on.

(17) To be taken off and to be put back again.

(18) I.e. , even Beth Hillel hold that building or demolishing with respect to utensils is Rabbinically prohibited, but here they permit only on account of the enjoyment of the Festival.

(19) 'Er. 102b.

(20) On a Sabbath.

(21) vbsn (country) used here as opposed to asen (Sanctuary, Temple precincts).

(22) A Rabbinical Statute concerning the true keeping of the Sabbath; an act forbidden by the Rabbis on a Sabbath as being out of harmony with the celebration of the day. The replacing of a plaster on a Sabbath, like other medicinal remedies, is forbidden by the Rabbis as a preventive measure against pounding spices. The prohibition of acts as shebuth, however, did not apply to Temple duties. V. Glos.

(23) Hag. 26b. Wine or dough which has been touched by an 'am ha-arez may not be bought by or sold to persons who are scrupulous about purification, for the 'am ha-arez is suspected of being unclean. If an 'am ha-arez comes into contact with the wine or the dough during the Festival, they are not contaminated and may be bought by or sold to anybody during the Festival, even the most scrupulous. Should any wine or dough remain after the Festival, R. Judah and the Sages dispute whether these may continue to be bought by or sold to scrupulous people. If, however, wine or dough not for sale during the Festival came in contact with an 'am ha-arez, such may not be bought by or sold to the scrupulous after the Festival even according to R. Judah.

(24) To sell during the Festival.

(25) To the most scrupulous according to R. Judah, even though an 'am ha-arez had come into contact with these.

- (26) The uncleanness of an 'am ha-arez was regarded as clean only with respect to things that were started to be sold, but if an 'am ha-arez touched a thing that had not been started to be sold, he contaminated them.
- (27) Additional case of Rehaba.
- (28) For Beth Shammai dispute the three cases he mentions.
- (29) Lit., 'Beth Shammai('s view), in the place of Beth Hillel is not a Mishnah', since the halachah is determined according to Beth Hillel. Cf. Ber. 36b, Yeb. 9a.
- (30) Which states the dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel with respect to taking down shutters.
- (31) In which case replacing appears more in the nature of building.
- (32) Both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
- (33) Because it is more difficult to put them back.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 12a

One master¹ holds that we preventively prohibit a hinge in the centre on account of a hinge at the side;² and the other master³ is of the opinion we do not preventively prohibit.⁴

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE MAY NOT CARRY OUT AN INFANT⁵ OR A LULAB⁶ OR A SCROLL OF THE LAW⁷ INTO PUBLIC GROUND,⁸ BUT BETH HILLEL PERMIT [IT].

GEMARA. A Tanna taught before R. Isaac b. Abdimi: He who slaughters a freewill burnt-offering on a Festival is flagellated.⁹ Said he to him: He who taught you this held the opinion of Beth Shammai who maintain: We do not say, 'Since carrying out is permitted for what is [actually] necessary [for the preparation of food], it is also permitted for that which is not necessary'.¹⁰ For if [he held the opinion of] Beth Hillel, surely they maintain: 'Since carrying out is permitted where it is necessary, it is also permitted where it is not necessary', so also here, since slaughtering is permitted where it is necessary¹¹ it is also permitted where it is not necessary.¹² To this Rabbah demurred: Whence do you know that Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel differ on this [point]; perhaps they differ as to whether [the laws of] 'erub and carrying out apply to Sabbath, but [the laws of] 'erub and carrying out do not apply to a Festival?¹³ One Master is of the opinion, 'Erub and [the laws of] carrying out apply to both the Sabbath and the Festival,¹⁴ and the other Master maintains, 'Erub and [the laws of] carrying out apply to Sabbath but 'erub and [the laws of] carrying out do not apply to the Festival, as it is written, Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the Sabbath day,¹⁵ only on the Sabbath day but not on the Festival!¹⁶ To this R. Joseph demurred [in turn]: If so,¹⁷ let them¹⁸ dispute with respect to stones!¹⁹ Since, however, they do not dispute about stones, infer from it that they differ with respect to carrying out [things] that are not necessary [in the preparation of food].²⁰

R. Johanan is also of the opinion that they differ in whether [we say], 'Since carrying out is permitted for what is necessary [in the preparation of food] it is also permitted for what is not necessary [in the preparation of food]'; for a tanna recited before R. Johanan:²¹ He who boils the thigh sinew on a Festival²² in milk and eats it is flagellated on five counts, for [unnecessarily] cooking the sinew on a Festival,²³ for eating the sinew, for boiling meat in milk,²⁴ for eating meat with milk,²⁴ and

- (1) I.e., Beth Shammai.
- (2) If the former is permitted, one will think that the latter, too, is permitted.
- (3) I.e., Beth Hillel.
- (4) And therefore permit even to put them back again. The two Baraitha therefore are not contradictory, for each refers to a different case.
- (5) On a Festival, even to circumcise it. The circumcision ceremony was usually performed in a synagogue, hence the need to carry the infant out.
- (6) Lit., 'palm-branch', which bound together with myrtles and willows was carried, together with a citron, during the Feast of Tabernacles. V. Lev. XXIII, 40. Beth Shammai prohibit the carrying out of the lulab even for the purpose of fulfilling this command.
- (7) For the purpose of reading it.
- (8) For only such work as is necessary in the preparation of food may be done on a Festival.
- (9) The only offering which an individual may bring on a Festival is one part of which he may eat. But a burnt-offering is entirely consumed by fire on the altar; hence he does unnecessary work on the Festival. Obligatory (i.e., public) burnt-offerings are however permitted, as are all public sacrifices, both on the Sabbath and on Festivals, but voluntary offerings can be offered after the Festival.
- (10) As follows from our Mishnah.
- (11) For his own food during the Festival.
- (12) As the freewill burnt-offering.
- (13) The carrying of articles from one domain to another is forbidden, yet by means of an 'erub it is permitted. 'Erub is a symbolical act by which is established the legal fiction of joining one private estate with another private estate, thus extending the area in which things could be carried.
- (14) Just as it is not permitted on a Sabbath to carry from one domain to another without an 'erub, so on a Festival.
- (15) Jer. XVII, 22.
- (16) Thus Beth Hillel too may hold that we do not say, 'Since a certain labour is permitted in the preparation of food, it is also permitted in other cases too', their reason in the Mishnah being that they do not regard carrying out as a labour at all vis a vis Festivals.
- (17) That Beth Hillel hold that the prohibition of carrying without an 'erub does not apply to Festivals.
- (18) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
- (19) Which it is altogether unnecessary to carry out; whether these may be carried out on Festivals into a public domain, v. Tosaf. s.v. ד ו and R. Hananel.

- (22) Forbidden in Gen. XXXII, 33.
- (23) Since the sinew may not be eaten, the work of cooking it is unnecessary and consequently punishable by flogging. The same applies to the work of kindling a fire.
- (24) The prohibition of boiling meat with milk or eating of the same as well as making any use thereof is derived from the three passages of Scripture (Ex. XXIII, 19; XXXIV, 26; Deut. XIV, 21) forbidding to seeth a kid in its mother's milk.

for kindling fire.¹ Said he [R. Johanan] to him: Go, teach [this] outside [the Academy]; [what you have said with respect to] kindling and cooking has no authority, and if you say that it has an authority, [that authority] must be Beth Shammai who maintain that we do not say, 'Since carrying out [on a Festival] is permitted for what is necessary² it is also permitted for what is not necessary', likewise [they maintain] here that we do not say, 'Since the kindling of fire is permitted [on a Festival] for what is necessary, it is also permitted for what is not necessary'. For according to Beth Hillel, since they maintain [that we do say] 'Since carrying out is permitted for what is necessary, it is also permitted for what is not necessary', so also they would maintain here [that we say], 'Since the kindling of fire is permitted for what is necessary. it is also permitted for what is not necessary'.³

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: YOU MAY NOT TAKE TO THE PRIEST HALLAH⁴ OR PRIESTLY DUES⁵ ON A FESTIVAL WHETHER THEY WERE SEPARATED ON THE DAY BEFORE OR ON THE SAME DAY. BUT BETH HILLEL PERMIT IT. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: AN ANALOGY [SUPPORTS OUR VIEW]: HALLAH AND PRIESTLY DUES ARE A GIFT TO THE PRIEST AND TERUMAH⁶ IS [LIKEWISE] A GIFT TO THE PRIEST; JUST AS ONE MAY NOT TAKE [TO THE PRIEST] TERUMAH⁷ SO ONE MAY NOT TAKE [TO HIM] PRIESTLY DUES. BETH HILLEL, REPLIED TO THEM: NO! IF YOU SAY⁸ IN THE CASE OF TERUMAH WHICH HE HAS NOT THE RIGHT TO SEPARATE,⁹ WILL YOU SAY [THE SAME] WITH RESPECT TO PRIESTLY DUES WHICH HE IS PERMITTED TO SEPARATE?¹⁰

GEMARA. Now it was assumed that [the Mishnah means where] they were [both] separated on that day and slaughtered on that day, and [where] they were [both] separated the day before and slaughtered the day before. Who is [the authority for] our Mishnah: It is neither R. Jose nor R. Judah but the 'Others'!¹¹ For it was taught: R. Judah said: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel did not differ concerning the dues which were separated on the eve of the Festival, [both agreeing] that you may take them together with the dues which were separated and killed on the same day [viz., the Festival]!¹² They differ only whether one may take them¹³ by themselves, when Beth Shammai say: You may not take [them], and Beth Hillel maintain: You may take [them]. And this is how Beth Shammai argued: Hallah and Priestly Dues are a gift to the priest and terumah is a gift to the priest; just as you may not take terumah, so may you not take Priestly Dues. Beth Hillel replied to them: No! If you say [thus] of terumah which he has not the right to set apart [on a Festival], would you say [the same] of Priestly Dues which he has the right to set apart! R. Jose said: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel do not differ about the Priestly Dues, [both agreeing] that you may take [them];¹⁴ they dispute only with respect to terumah when Beth Shammai say: You may not take [it],¹⁵ and Beth Hillel maintain: You may take [it]. And this is how Beth Hillel argued: Hallah and Priestly Dues are a gift to the priest and terumah is a gift to the priest; just as you may take the Priestly Dues [to the priest] so may you take terumah [to him]. Beth Shammai replied to them: No! If you say [thus] of Priestly Dues which he has the right to separate [on a Festival], would you say [the same] of terumah which he has not the right to separate! Others say: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel do not differ about terumah, [both agreeing] that you may not take [it]; they dispute only with respect to the Priestly Dues, when Beth Shammai say: You may not take [them] and Beth Hillel maintain: You may take [them]. Now shall it be said that it [the Mishnah] is [the ruling of] 'Others' and not [the ruling of] R. Judah?¹⁶ — Said Raba: Does it then say, 'Which were separated that day and killed that day'? It [only] says, 'WHICH WERE SEPARATED [etc.]' but in reality they were slaughtered the day before. [Accordingly] shall it be said that it [the Mishnah] is according to R. Judah and not according to the ‘Others’?¹⁷ — You can even say, [It agrees with] the ‘Others’, for [they speak of Priestly Dues separated on a Festival] from those [animals] slaughtered the day before. If so they are identical with R. Judah! — They differ in respect of being brought together with other Priestly Dues.¹⁸

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The halachah is as R. Jose.¹⁹ R. Tobi the son of R. Nehemiah had a jug of wine of terumah. He came to R. Joseph asking him: May I carry it now [on the Festival] to the priest? He answered him: Thus did Rab Judah say in the name of Samuel: The halachah is as R. Jose.

The host²⁰ of Rab, son of R. Hanan had bundles of mustard-stalks [and] he asked him: Is it permissible to crush it on the Festival and eat of it?²¹ He could not answer.²² He went to Raba who replied: You may rub ears of corn together²³ and crumble pods²⁴ on a Festival.²⁵ Abaye raised an objection: He who rubs ears of corn on the eve of the Sabbath may winnow them on the following day [Sabbath] from hand to hand and eat, but [he may] not [winnow them] with a reed-basket nor with a dish. He who rubs ears of corn on the eve of a Festival may winnow them on the following day [the Festival] little by little²⁶ and eat, even with a reed-basket and even with a dish, but not with a tray nor with a winnowing fan nor in a sieve.²⁷ [Now] only ‘on the eve of the Festival’ [is rubbing of corn stated to be permitted] but not on the Festival [itself]!²⁸ — You may even say [that it may be done] on the Festival [itself], but because he states in the first part [of the passage] ‘on the eve of the Sabbath’, he also states in the concluding part ‘on the eve of a Festival’. If so,²⁹ we find that one has the right to separate [on a Festival]³⁰ and we have learnt: NO! IF YOU SAY THAT WITH RESPECT TO TERUMAH WHICH HE HAS NO RIGHT TO SEPARATE etc.! — This is no difficulty:

(1) V. Ex. XII, 16 and cf. n. 4.

(2) As in the preparation of food.

(3) This proves that R. Johanan is also of the opinion that the dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel is whether we say, ‘Since carrying out is permitted etc.

(4) Dough-offering. V. Num. XV, 17-21. Although hallah may be taken from the dough in order to enable the dough to be eaten, it may not be carried to the priest.

(5) For the different parts of a slaughtered animal which fall to the share of the priest, v. Deut. XVIII, 3.

(6) Heave-offering. V. Num. XVIII, 11ff and Glos.

(7) To the priest on a Festival, since it could have been taken to the priest before the Festival when it was separated.

(8) That one may not bring to the priest on a Festival.

(9) On a Festival; cf. infra 36b.

(10) Since slaughtering is permitted on a Festival. Surely not!

(11) ‘Others’ usually refers to R. Meir; Hor. 13b.

(12) He regards the latter as axiomatic, and permits the former because no extra work is involved.

(13) The Priestly Dues separated before the Festival.

(14) The same holds good with respect to hallah.

(15) To the priest on a Festival.

(16) The Mishnah can certainly not agree with R. Jose; but can it agree with R. Judah?

(17) For according to the present explanation, even Beth Shammai permit taking to the priest the Priestly Dues of animals slaughtered on the Festival. Put the 'Others' represent Beth Shammai as prohibiting the bringing of Priestly Dues from both an animal slaughtered before or on the day of the Festival.

(18) Which were separated on the Festival itself. In R. Judah's opinion Beth Shammai permit them to be taken in conjunction with similar gifts separated on the day of the Festival.

(19) Who hold that Beth Hillel permits even terumah to be taken to the priest on a Festival.

(20) I.e., Innkeeper.

(21) Is crushing prohibited since it is possible to do this before the Festival?

(22) Lit., 'it was not in his hand'.

(23) To separate the grain from the chaff; v. infra 13b.

(24) To get the seeds out.

(25) Since rubbing ears of corn is different from the usual manner of threshing and does not involve culpability on a Sabbath it is altogether permitted in the case of a Festival.

(26) Lit., 'upon the hand', v. fast. s.v. Sh.

(27) Such vessels are used for large quantities and it would appear as if he was preparing for the following day.

(28) Which contradicts Rab b. R. Hanan.

(29) That one may rub ears of corn on a Festival.

(30) Corn is liable for tithing only after it has been threshed, winnowed and piled up in a heap, after which nothing may be eaten until terumah is taken. But before it is subject to tithe a light meal is permitted. By allowing a man on a Festival to rub ears of corn and eat the grain it follows that he must also be permitted to take terumah which he would not have done before, as terumah is generally not separated in the ears of corn until they have been turned into grain.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 13a

One¹ is [according to] Rabbi and the other² is [according to] R. Jose son of R. Judah.³ For it was taught: If he brought in ears of corn⁴ to make dough therefrom, he may eat a slender repast⁵ thereof and it is exempt [from terumah]; [if however he brought in the ears of corn] in order to rub the in together,⁶ Rabbi declares them liable [to terumah]⁷ and R. Jose son of R. Judah exempts them.⁸ But [even] according to R. Jose son of R. Judah, it⁹ may also occur when, for example, one has brought in ears of corn to make dough therefrom¹⁰ and on the Festival changed his mind [deciding] to rub them,¹¹ so that they become tebel¹² on the day [of the Festival]!¹³ — Rather what does terumah [mentioned in the Mishnah] mean? Terumah [as separated] in most cases.¹⁴

Abaye said: The dispute¹⁵ is only with respect to ears of corn,¹⁶ but in the case of grain of pulse all agree that when in bundles they are tebel.¹⁷ Shall it be said that the following supports him? [For we have learnt]: He who had bundles of fenugreek of tebel, must beat out [the seeds] and estimate how much seed there is in them and separate [terumah] on the seed, but he does not separate [terumah] on the stalks.¹⁸ Is not the author of this R. Jose son of R. Judah who says there¹⁹ that it is not tebel, yet here²⁰ it is tebel?²¹ — No, it is in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi.²² If it is in accordance with Rabbi, [then] why state fenugreek; even ears of corn too [are liable to be tithed]? — What then: [it is according to] R. Jose son of R. Judah? Let [the text] inform us of other kinds of pulse²³ and [I would infer] how much more [is it true of] fenugreek? But he [the Tanna] needs [to teach it about] fenugreek; for I might have thought that since the stalks have the same taste as the fruit, he should also give tithe on the stalks,²⁴ so he informs us [that it is not so].

Others state: Abaye said: The dispute is only with respect to ears of corn,²⁵ but as for grain of pulse all agree that when in bundles they are not tebel.²⁶ An objection is raised: He who had bundles of fenugreek of tebel, he must beat out [the seeds] and estimate how much seed there is in them and separate [terumah] on the seed but not on the stalks. Does not tebel connote that it is tebel in respect of terumah?²⁷ — No, [it means] tebel in respect of the terumah of the tithe,²⁸ and it is in accordance with R. Abbahu's dictum in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish. For R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: The first tithe [levitical] which one anticipated while the corn was yet in the ears,²⁹ its designation renders it tebel in respect of the terumah of the tithe.³⁰ Why must he [the Levite] beat out [the seeds]? Let him say [to the priest]: Just as they have given them to me so will I give them to you!³¹ — Said Raba: This is a penalty.³² Likewise has it been taught: A Levite to whom his tithes were given while the corn was still in the ear, must³³ make it [fit for] a barn;³⁴ [if it is] grapes, he must make them into wine; if olives, he must turn them into oil; [only] then does he separate the terumah of [the] tithe and give same to the priest. For just as the great terumah is taken

- (1) The Baraitha allowing the corn to be rubbed and eaten on the Festival.
 - (2) Our Mishnah.
 - (3) Both agree that rubbing ears of corn on a Festival is allowed. They only dispute whether terumah must then be separated. Rabbi maintains that it is required; consequently terumah may in such a case be separated on a Festival. R. Jose, however, holds that it is unnecessary; hence terumah may never be separated on a Festival. (Rashi). Tosaf: This, i.e., the Mishnah, is according to Rabbi, for since Rabbi holds that the bringing in of the ears for eating raw constitutes the final stage for tithing, terumah could and should have been separated before the Festival; and it is a general rule that whatever could be done before the Festival may not be done on the Festival. But the Baraitha is according to R. Jose b. R. Judah: for since he holds that the bringing in of the ears for eating raw does not constitute the final stage for tithing, there was no obligation to tithe them before the Festival; hence if he decides on the Festival to make a full meal of them, he must first separate terumah; since there was no obligation before, it is regarded as something which could not be done earlier, and therefore it is permitted on a Festival.
 - (4) Not yet ready for tithing.
 - (5) V. p. 62, n. 13.
 - (6) And to eat the grain raw little by little.
 - (7) According to Rabbi, the bringing in of corn into the house for the purpose of eating raw grain corresponds to the finishing touch of the corn brought into the barn and makes it liable for tithing even for a light meal.
 - (8) He draws a distinction between the two purposes. For the Biblical expression ids (Num. XVIII, 27) signifies corn which has been threshed and levelled out in a heap, and as this corn was brought in the ears, it has not had the finishing touch making it ready for tithing.
 - (9) The taking of terumah on a Festival.
 - (10) After the usual threshing and winnowing.
 - (11) And eat them raw. On the interpretation of Tosaf. (v. supra p. 63 n. 3) the question should read, 'But even according to Rabbi . . . therefrom' (when no obligation rested upon him to tithe before the Festival), 'and on the Festivals . . . to rub them', when he may not eat of these except after tithing, so that we find terumah being authorized to be set apart on a Festival.
 - (12) Grain from which the priestly and Levitical dues have not been taken. V. Glos.
 - (13) The fact that he brought in the ears of corn to make dough therefrom after the normal threshing and winnowing made them liable for terumah, and by changing his mind to rub the ears together to eat them raw not only cannot remove the liability for tithing, but, on the contrary, takes the place of the finishing touch in the barn so that not even a light meal may be had without first taking terumah.

(14) Viz., when the corn is levelled out in heaps in a barn, as above. But the case which is now discussed is exceptional and therefore generally disregarded. The Mishnah can therefore agree both with Rabbi and R. Jose.

(15) Between Rabbi and R. Jose b. Judah.

(16) It is then that R. Jose exempts from tithing.

(17) V. Glos. Because pulse is frequently tied up in bundles to be threshed in small quantities as required, and consequently the bringing in of a bundle of pulse in the house corresponds to the finishing touch of grain in a barn. (Rashi).

(18) Ter. X, 6.

(19) In the case of ears of corn.

(20) In the case of pulse.

(21) The statement 'bundles of fenugreek of tebel' presupposes a liability for tithing, because the tying up into bundles is the finishing preparation for tithing.

(22) Who maintains that even ears of corn are also liable for tithing when brought into the house for use.

(23) Which are not tied up into bundles, like peas or beans.

(24) For the stalks together with its fruit are used for seasoning. The Baraita can therefore on this argument be in accordance with Rabbi, so that it affords no support to Abaye.

(25) It is then that Rabbi says that they are liable to be tithed, because many take bundles of corn into the house to eat them raw or roasted without having been stored and prepared for tithing in a barn.

(26) Because pulse becomes liable for tithing only after it has been made into a stack.

(27) Consequently we see that although yet in bundles they are already liable for tithing.

(28) The proper order of tithing, after the corn has first been levelled out in the barn, is this: First terumah is separated for the priest (called the great terumah) and one-tenth of the remainder (called tithe) for the Levite, who in turn, separates one-tenth of his tithe for the priest which is designated terumah of the tithe. The great terumah, or simply terumah as it is generally referred to, varies from one-fortieth to one-sixtieth. It is also called the 'great terumah' because this portion is greater than that received from the Levite.

(29) I.e., the Israelite separated it before separating the great terumah.

(30) Although had he not separated tithe it would not be regarded as tebel, and a light meal would be permissible. Similarly in the Baraita, although pulse does not become liable to terumah before it has been made into a stack, once the Levite anticipated and received his share when in bundles, it becomes liable also to terumah of the tithe.

(31) If it referred to the terumah of an Israelite he would have to beat out the grain because the expression ids (Num. XVIII, 27) signifies that the priest is to be given tithe only when the corn is threshed; V. Rashi.

(32) For taking the tithe before the great terumah was rendered, against the prescribed order.

(33) Before giving his terumah to the priest.

(34) When it would have received the last preparation for tithing.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 13b

only from the threshing-floor and from the wine-press,¹ so also is the terumah of the tithe to be taken only from the threshing-floor and from the wine-press.

[It is stated above]: 'He estimates!' Surely it requires [exact] measuring!² — The author of this is Abba Eleazar b. Gimal. For it was taught: Abba Eleazar b. Gimal says: 'And your heave-offering shall be reckoned unto you'.³ Scripture speaks of two heave-offerings,⁴ one [being] the great terumah and the other the terumah from the [Levite's] tithe; just as the great terumah may be separated by estimation⁵ and by mental determination⁶ so may the terumah from the [Levite's] tithe be separated by estimation and by mental determination.

The text [above stated]: R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: The first tithe which one anticipated while the corn was yet in the ears, its designation renders it tebel in respect of the terumah from the [Levite's] tithe. What is the reason? Said Raba: Because it already bears the name tithe.

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: The First Tithe which was anticipated while the corn was yet in the ears is exempt from the great terumah, for Scripture Says: Then ye shall offer up an heave-offering of it for the Lord, a tithe of the tithe;⁷ a tithe of the tithe have I commanded you, but not 'the great terumah and a tithe of the tithe'. Said R. Papa to Abaye: If so, even if he anticipated it⁸ at the barn too? — He replied to him: It is for your sake that Scripture states: Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave-offering of the Lord.⁹ What [reason] do you see?¹⁰ — In the one case,¹¹ it is already corn;¹² in the other, it is not already corn.

We have learnt elsewhere:¹³ He who hulls barley,¹⁴ may hull it grain by grain and eat it;¹⁵ but if he hulls [it] and lays [the grains] in his hand, he is liable [to give tithe].¹⁶ Said R. Eleazar: And it is likewise with respect to the Sabbath.¹⁷ But this is not so! For Rab's wife hulled for him cupfuls, and likewise R. Hiyya's wife hulled cupfuls for him! Rather if this [statement of R. Eleazar] has been said, It was said with respect to the second clause: He who rubs ears of wheat may winnow them from one hand to the other and eat them [without tithing]; but if he winnows them and lays them on his lap he is liable. Said R. Eleazar: And it is likewise with respect to the Sabbath. R. Abba b. Mamel demurred to this: And [in] the first clause, [is he liable] in respect to tithe but not in respect to Sabbath? Is there then any action which with respect to the Sabbath does not rank as the final act,¹⁸ whereas with respect to tithe it is regarded as the final act?¹⁹ To this R. Shesheth the son of R. Idi demurred: Is there not? Surely there is [the case of what constitutes] their threshing-floor in respect of tithing;²⁰ for we have learnt,²¹ When is their harvesting time for tithing?²² In the case of cucumbers and gourds after their coils of blossom have dropped,²³ and if they have not dropped, then as soon as they have been made a heap. And we learnt likewise of onions:²⁴ [They are liable for tithing] as soon as he [their owner] sets up a heap. Yet with respect to the Sabbath the setting up of a heap does not involve culpability? Therefore you must needs say that [with respect to the Sabbath] the Torah forbade work of craftsmanship;²⁵ so also here²⁶ [say] the Torah forbade work of craftsmanship.

How should one rub them?²⁷ — Abaye in the name of R. Joseph says: One [finger] against one [finger].²⁸ But R. 'Awia in the name of R. Joseph says: One [finger] against two [fingers].²⁹ Raba [however] says: So long as he does it in an unusual way it is permitted even between the thumb and all the fingers.

How should one winnow [them on a Sabbath]? — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah in the name of Rab: He should winnow

- (1) V. Num. XVIII, 27.
- (2) If the text referred to the great terumah, the expression 'estimate' would be correct, since according to Scripture no definite percentage is required, for even a single grain can exempt the whole of the crop, while the giving of one-fortieth — one-sixtieth is only a Rabbinical enactment. But now that we explain that it means the terumah from the Levite's tithe, it definitely says (Num. XVIII, 27) that this must be one-tenth.

from the joints of the fingers upwards.¹ They laughed at it in the West:² so long as he does it in an unusual manner [it is permitted to be done] even with the whole palm! But said R. Eleazar: He should winnow vigorously with one hand.³ MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: SPICES MAY BE POUNDED WITH A WOODEN PESTLE⁴ AND SALT IN A SMALL CRUSE OR WITH A WOODEN LADLE;⁵ BUT BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: SPICES MAY BE POUNDED AFTER THEIR USUAL FASHION WITH A STONE PESTLE AND SALT WITH A WOODEN PESTLE.⁶

GEMARA. All agree at any rate that [the pounding of] salt must be done in an unusual manner; what is the reason? — R. Huna and R. Hisda [differ]. One says: [Because] all dishes require salt,⁷ but not all dishes require spices; and the other says: [Because] all spices lose their flavour,⁸ but salt does not lose its flavour. Wherein do they differ? — The difference between them is when he knew [on the eve of the Festival] what dish he will cook [on the morrow],⁹ or in the case of saffron.¹⁰

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Everything which is pounded may be pounded in the usual way, even salt.¹¹ But Surely you have said that salt must be [pounded] in an unusual way! He rules as the following Tanna, for it was taught: R. Meir says: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel do not differ over [commodities] which are pounded, [agreeing] that they may be pounded in the usual way, and salt with them;¹² they differ only with respect to pounding it [salt] alone, when Beth Shammai say: Salt [may be pounded] in a small cruse and with a wooden ladle only for roasting¹³ but not for boiling, and Beth Hillel maintain: [It may be pounded] with everything. ‘With everything’! — Can you think so?¹⁴ — Say rather, for everything.¹⁵

R. Aha Bardela said to his son: ‘When you pound [salt], incline [the mortar] sideways and pound. R. Shesheth heard¹⁶ the sound of a mortar and pestle; [then] said he: This is not [coming] from my house. Perhaps it was done sideways?¹⁷ — He heard a shrill noise.¹⁸ Perhaps it was spices?¹⁹ — Spices produce a dull sound.

Our Rabbis taught: One may not prepare pearl-barley²⁰ nor pound anything in a mortar. [You state] two [contradictory rulings]?²¹ — This is what it means to say: ‘What is the reason that you may not prepare pearl-barley? Because you may not pound [anything] in a mortar. Then it should have [only] stated: ‘One may not pound [anything] in a mortar’! — If it stated [only], ‘One may not pound anything in a mortar’, I would say, that is only in a big mortar; but in the case of a small mortar [I would say], It is well; so it informs us [that this is not so]. But it was taught: One may not pound in a big mortar but one may pound in a small mortar! — Said Abaye: ‘When the teaching²² was taught, it too was taught of a large mortar.²³

(1) But not in his palm.

(2) I.e., the scholars of Palestine. V. Sanh. 17b, Sonc. ed. p. 89.

(3) Not just throw it up a little.

(4) Although the pounding of spices is permitted on a Festival it should be done in a somewhat different way from ordinary days.

(5) The pounding of salt must be done in all entirely unusual way, both with regard to the vessel in which, and also with regard to the vessel with which, it is pounded.

(6) According to Beth Hillel it is sufficient if the vessel with which it is pounded is different.

(7) He should therefore have prepared the salt before the Festival.

(8) Therefore it must be prepared on the day it is required.

(9) According to the first reason, even the pounding of spices must be done in an unusual manner since it could have been prepared on the day it is required.

(10) According to not lose its flavour, so that according to the second reason it is the same as salt.

(11) Or, Even salt! But etc.

(12) I.e., pounding them both on the same occasion, by preparing the salt immediately after the spices (Rashi as explained by Rashal).

(13) When a small quantity only is required.

(14) Even with a utensil which may not be handled at all on the Sabbath?

(15) I.e., for every purpose, whether for roasting or boiling — and that in the usual way Rab Judah thus has a Tanna in support for his ruling.

(16) On a Festival.

(17) In which case it is permissible.

(18) Whereas if the mortar were inclined there would be a heavy, dull noise.

(19) Which may be pounded in the usual way.

(20) On a Festival, because it requires toilsome pounding.

(21) The first ruling forbids toilsome pounding only, whereas the second forbids all pounding.

(22) Introduced by, Our Rabbis taught'.

(23) The two statements are not contradictory. The first statement forbidding the pounding of pearl-barley refers even to a small mortar, and the second statement refers to a big mortar. Only pearl-barley is forbidden to be pounded in a small mortar but other things may be.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 14b

Raba says: There is no difficulty: this [Baraita¹ refers] to us,² and the other [Baraita³ refers] to them.⁴

R. Papa visited Mar Samuel.⁵ They set before him pearl-barley broth and he did not eat of it. Perhaps they prepared it in a small mortar?⁶ — He noticed that it was very fine.⁷ Perhaps they prepared it the day before [the Festival]? — He saw that it [the pearl-barley] was still bearing the polish from the husking.⁸ Or you can say: It is different in the case of the house of Mar Samuel, on account of the laxity of the servants.⁹

MISHNAH. IF ONE SELECTS PULSE ON A FESTIVAL, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE MUST SELECT THE EDIBLE PARTS AND EAT [THEM FORTHWITH]; BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE MAY PICK OUT AS USUAL¹⁰ [FROM A SMALL QUANTITY] IN HIS LAP OR IN A BASKET OR IN A DISH; BUT NOT ON TO A BOARD OR IN A SIFTER OR IN A SIEVE.¹¹ RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS: HE MAY EVEN RINSE THEM [IN WATER] AND SKIM OFF [THE REFUSE].

GEMARA. It was taught: Rabban Gamaliel said: This was [only] stated when the edible part is more than the refuse;¹² but if the refuse is more than the edible part, all agree that he must pick out the edible part and leave the refuse. If the refuse is more than the edible part, is there anyone who permits it [to be picked]?¹³ — This refers to a case where the work [of picking out the refuse] is great though the quantity [of the refuse] is small.¹⁴

RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS: HE MAY EVEN RINSE THEM AND SKIM OFF [THE REFUSE]: It was taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: This was the practice in the house of Rabban Gamaliel; they brought a bucket-full of lentils and poured water over them with the result that that which was edible remained below and the refuse [floated] on top. But has not the opposite been taught?¹⁵ — There is no contradiction: The one applies to sand, the other applies to chaff.¹⁶

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: ONE MAY SEND [GIFTS TO A NEIGHBOUR] ON A FESTIVAL ONLY PORTIONS [READY FOR EATING],¹⁷ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: ONE MAY SEND CATTLE, GAME AND POULTRY WHETHER ALIVE OR SLAUGHTERED. ONE MAY [ALSO] SEND WINE, OIL, FLOUR OR PULSE BUT NOT GRAIN.¹⁸ BUT R. SIMEON PERMITS [ALSO] GRAIN.¹⁹

GEMARA. R. Jehiel taught: Provided that he does not send it [the present] by a company [of men].²⁰ A Tanna taught: A company consists of not less than three persons. R. Ashi put the question: What [is the law] with respect to three persons with three varieties [of gifts]?²¹ This question is undecided.

R. SIMEON PERMITS [ALSO] GRAIN. It was taught: R. Simeon allows grain: e.g., wheat, to prepare thereof food for gladiators;²² barley, to give to his cattle; [and] lentils to prepare thereof groats.²³

MISHNAH. ONE MAY SEND CLOTHES, WHETHER SEWN UP OR NOT YET SEWN UP EVEN THOUGH THERE IS KIL'AYIM²⁴ IN THEM, PROVIDED THEY ARE NECESSARY²⁵ FOR THE FESTIVAL; BUT [ONE MAY] NOT [SEND] HOB-NAILED SANDALS²⁶ NOR UNSTITCHED SHOES. R. JUDAH SAYS: NOT EVEN WHITE SHOES BECAUSE THEY [STILL] REQUIRE AN ARTISAN [TO BLACKEN THEM]. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER MAY BE USED ON A FESTIVAL MAY [ALSO] BE SENT [ON A FESTIVAL].

GEMARA. As for sewn [articles] it is well: they are fit for garments; [likewise] unsewn [articles] too, [as] they are fit for a covering. But for what are kil'ayim fit? And if you say they can be used to fold under him,²⁷ surely it was taught: Neither shall there come upon thee [a garment of two kinds of stuff mingled together],²⁸ but you may spread it beneath you. But the Sages said: It is forbidden to do so lest a thread might cling to his body! And if you say [that it is permissible] if there is anything interposing between them,²⁹ surely R. Simeon b. Pazzi said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, who said in the name of R. Jose b. Saul, who said in the name of Rabbi in the name of the Holy Community at Jerusalem:³⁰ Even if ten mattresses lie one on top of the other and [some material of] kil'ayim is beneath them, it is forbidden to sleep thereon! And if [you say] it refers to a curtain, surely 'Ulla said: Why did [the Sages] say a curtain is unclean³¹ because the attendant warms himself beside it!³²

— Rather, [this refers] to hard material;¹ just as R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: The coarse felt-mattresses [coming] from Naresh² are permitted [to sit on].³ R. Papa said: Slippers⁴ are not [forbidden] on account of kil'ayim. Raba said: These money-bags do not come under [the law of] kil'ayim,⁵ but seed-bags do come under [the law of] kil'ayim.⁶ R. Ashi said: Neither money-purses nor seed-bags are subject to [the law of] kil'ayim, because it is not the usual practice to warm oneself with these.

BUT NOT HOB-NAILED SANDALS: What is the reason that hob-nailed sandals may not [be sent]? Because of the incident that occurred.⁷ Abaye said: Hob-nailed sandals may not be worn [during a Festival] but they may be handled. ‘They may not be worn on account of the incident that happened; ‘but they may be handled’, since it teaches ONE MAY NOT SEND; for if you maintain that it is forbidden to handle, now if it is forbidden to handle, need sending [be taught]?’⁸

NOR UNSTITCHED SHOES. This is obvious! — It is necessary even when it is fastened with wooden pins.⁹

R. JUDAH SAYS: NOT EVEN WHITE SHOES. It was taught: R. Judah permits black [sandals] and forbids white because they [still] require a clod containing silicate of iron.¹⁰ R. Jose forbids black [sandals] because they [still] require to be smoothed. And they do not differ, the one Master [ruling] according to his district and the other Master according to his district. In the district of the one Master [the sandal was finished] with the flesh [side of the leather] inside, [and] in the district of the other Master [they finished the sandals] with the flesh [side] outwards.¹¹

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHATEVER MAY BE USED ON A FESTIVAL R. Shesheth permitted scholars to send tefillin¹² on a Festival. Abaye said to him: But we have learnt: WHATEVER MAY BE USED ON A FESTIVAL MAY HE SENT:¹³ — This is what he means to say: ‘Whatever one uses on a weekday¹⁴ may be sent on a Festival.

Abaye said: Since we are now dealing with tefillin, we would say something thereon. If one was on his way [home],¹⁵ wearing tefillin on his head,¹⁶ and the sun was setting upon him, he should place his hand upon them¹⁷ until he reaches his house. If he was sitting in the Academy¹⁸ with tefillin on his head and the holiness of the day [the Sabbath] came in, [then] he must place his hand upon them, until he reaches his house.¹⁹ R. Huna the son of R. Ika raised an objection: If one was on his way [home] with tefillin on his head and the holiness of the day [the Sabbath] came in, [then] he must place his hand upon them until he reaches a house situated near the wall [of the city].²⁰ If he was sitting in the Academy [with tefillin on his head] and the holiness of the day came in, he must place his hand upon them until he reaches the house nearest to the Academy.²¹ There is no contradiction. The one treats of a case when it [the house] is guarded,²² the other when it is not guarded. If it is not guarded, [then] why particularly ‘on his head’; even if they [the tefillin] were [found] lying on the ground he should also [be allowed to carry them to this house]: For we have learnt: He who finds tefillin [on a Sabbath] may bring them in in pairs!²³ — This is no difficulty: The one²⁴ treats of a case when it is guarded against thieves and against dogs, the other²⁵ when it is guarded against dogs but it is not guarded against thieves.²⁶ You might think that the majority of robbers [in that district] are Israelites²⁷ who would not handle them disrespectfully; hence he informs us [that it is not so]. - (20) And leave the tefillin there, but he may not carry them into the city.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 15b

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. [IF] A FESTIVAL FELL ON THE EVE OF SABBATH, ONE MAY NOT AT THE OUTSET COOK ON THE FESTIVAL FOR THE SABBATH, BUT HE MAY COOK FOR THE FESTIVAL, AND IF ANY IS LEFT OVER IT REMAINS FOR THE SABBATH; AND HE MAY PREPARE A DISH ON THE EVE OF THE FESTIVAL¹ AND RELY UPON IT [TO PREPARE FOOD] FOR THE SABBATH.² BETH SHAMMAI SAY: TWO DISHES [ARE REQUIRED FOR THIS PURPOSE], WHILE BETH HILLEL SAY: ONE DISH. YET THEY [BOTH] AGREE THAT A FISH AND AN EGG UPON IT ARE [CONSIDERED AS] TWO DISHES. [IF] HE ATE IT³ OR IT WAS LOST, HE MAY NOT IN THE FIRST PLACE

COOK [IN RELIANCE] ON IT, BUT IF HE LEFT OVER ANY [SMALL] PORTION OF IT, HE MAY RELY ON IT [TO COOK] FOR THE SABBATH.

GEMARA. Whence do we know this?⁴ — Said Samuel: Because the Scripture Says: Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy,⁵ remember it in view of another⁶ Festival which comes to make it forgotten.⁷ What is the reason [for the institution of the ‘erub]?⁸ — Said Raba: In order that he may choose a fine portion for the Sabbath and a fine portion for the Festival.⁹ R. Ashi said: In order that people might say, ‘You may not bake on a Festival for the Sabbath, how much the more [is it forbidden] on a Festival for a weekday’.¹⁰

We have learnt: HE MAY PREPARE A DISH ON THE EVE OF THE FESTIVAL AND RELY UPON IT [TO PREPARE FOOD] FOR THE SABBATH. It is well according to R. Ashi who says, ‘In order that people might say you may not bake on a Festival for the Sabbath [etc.]’: hence it is only ON THE EVE OF THE FESTIVAL but not on the Festival. But according to Raba, why particularly on the eve of the Festival; even on the Festival [itself] too [let it be permitted]?¹¹ — It is even so, but it is a preventive decree lest he be negligent.¹² Now a Tanna deduces it from the following: Bake that which ye will bake, and seethe that which ye will seethe;¹³ from this R. Eliezer concluded [that] you may bake only [in dependence] upon what is [already] baked and you may cook only [in dependence] upon what is [already] cooked.¹⁴ Herein the Sages found a Biblical support for ‘erub tabshilin’.¹⁵

Our Rabbis taught: It happened that R. Eliezer was once sitting and lecturing the whole day [of the Festival] on Festival laws. [When] the first group left [the lecture hall] he said: These are people of butts;¹⁶ [when] the second group [left] he said: These are people of casks; [when] the third group [left] he said: These are people of pitchers;¹⁷ [when] the fourth group [left] he said: These are people of flasks; [when] the fifth group [left] he said: These are people of beakers.¹⁸ [When] the sixth group began to go out he said: These are the people of the curse.¹⁹ He cast his eyes at his disciples²⁰ and their faces began to change,²¹ [whereupon] he said to them: My sons, not of you said I this, but of those who have gone out, who put aside life eternal and occupy themselves with the life temporal [or ephemeral]. When they were taking their leave²² he said to them: Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto him for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye grieved; for the joy of the Lord is your [strength] stronghold.²³ The Master said: ‘Who put aside life eternal and occupy themselves with the life temporal’. But the enjoyment of the Festival is a religious duty! — R. Eliezer is consistent with his [own] view, for he said: Rejoicing on the Festival is optional. For it was taught: R. Eliezer says: On a Festival a man has nought [to do] save either eat and drink or sit and learn. R. Joshua says: Divide it, half of it for the Lord, [and] half of it for yourselves. R. Johanan said: Both drew their inference from the same Scripture verse[s]. One verse states: A solemn assembly to the Lord thy God,²⁴ and another verse reads: Ye shall have a solemn assembly.²⁵ How is this [to be reconciled]? R. Eliezer is of the opinion: Either the whole of it is for the Lord or the whole of it is for yourselves; while R. Joshua is of the opinion: Divide it; half of it is for the Lord and half of it is for yourselves. What means ‘for whom nothing is prepared’? — R. Hisda said: For him who did not set [i.e., prepare] an ‘erub tabshilin. Others say: He who had not the opportunity to set an ‘erub tabshilin; but he who had the opportunity to set an ‘erub tabshilin and did not set is a transgressor. What means ‘for the joy of the Lord is your strength’?

— R. Johanan said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: The Holy One, blessed be He, said unto Israel: My children, borrow on My account and celebrate the holiness of the day, and trust in Me and I will pay. R. Johanan [further] said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: He who desires his property to be preserved for him, should plant therein an adar,²⁶ for it says: The Lord on high is mighty;²⁷ alternatively, adara,²⁸ [implies] what its name [indicates]; for people say: Why [is it called] adara? Because it lasts from generation to generation.²⁹ It was similarly taught: A field in which there is an adar can neither be robbed nor forcibly purchased and its fruits are protected.³⁰

R. Tahlifa, the brother of Rabinai of [Be] Hozae³¹ learnt:

(1) V. supra p. 23, n. 1.

(2) The dish prepared on the eve of the Festival is regarded as the basis upon which the right to cook on the Festival for the Sabbath depends.

(3) The dish intended for the 'erub.

(4) That he may cook for the Sabbath in virtue of a special dish ('erub).

(5) Ex. XX, 8.

(6) Lit., 'from another'.

(7) The interest in the Festival preceding the Sabbath might cause one to forget about the Sabbath. The 'erub counteracts this possibility. [Aliter: 'Remember it since one might forget it' (v. Rashi) — a rendering supported by MS.M. which reads rj tk for rj tn cf. cur. edd.]

(8) Actually it is not based upon any Biblical verse, but is only a Rabbinical enactment, the verse being a mere support.

(9) He will not consume all the good things on the Festival, but will leave some for the Sabbath.

(10) The 'erub is instituted not in honour of Sabbath but in honour of the Festival.

(11) For on the Festival itself he can still choose a fine portion for the Sabbath.

(12) And omit to prepare it altogether.

(13) Ex. XVI, 23.

(14) On the Friday which is a Festival, you may bake and cook only in virtue of the baking and cooking of the previous day.

(15) This phrase indicates that the present deduction too is merely in support, not the actual source of the law, which is Rabbinical only.

(16) I.e., very rich, counting their wine by butts. They have left thus early because of the large quantities of food and drink waiting for them. These are gluttons.

(17) I.e., less rich than the second but wealthier than the next group.

(18) Less keen on their pleasures.

(19) The emptiness of the Lecture Hall roused his ire.

(20) Who had remained behind.

(21) I.e., to turn pale, because they thought he was angry with them for not leaving earlier — apparently they thought that he considered himself bound to go on as long as he had hearers.

(22) At the close of the lecture.

(23) Neh. VIII, 10.

(24) Deut. XVI, 8.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 16a

The entire sustenance of man [for the year] is fixed for him from New Year's [Festival] to the Day of Atonement,¹ except the expenditure for Sabbaths and the expenditure for Festivals and the expenditure for the instruction of his children in the Law; if he [spent] less [for any of these] he is given less and if he [spent] more he is given more. Said R. Abbahu:² What verse of Scripture [supports this]? 'Blow the horn at the new moon at the full moon for our feast-day'.³ Which is the Festival on which the moon is concealed? Say, it is New Year;⁴ and it is written [with respect to this Festival]: 'For it is a statute [hok] for Israel, an ordinance of the God of Jacob'.⁵ How is it implied that [the word] hok connotes sustenance? For it is written: 'And did eat their portion [hukkam] which Pharaoh gave them'.⁶ Mar Zutra says, [It is inferred] from here: 'Feed me with mine allotted [hukki]⁷ bread'. It was taught: They related concerning Shammai, the Elder [that] all his life he ate in honour of the Sabbath. [Thus] if he found a well-favoured animal he said, Let this be for the Sabbath. [If afterwards] he found one better favoured he put aside the second [for the Sabbath] and ate the first.⁸ But Hillel the Elder had a different trait, for all his works were for the sake of heaven,⁹ for it is said: Blessed be the Lord, day by day.¹⁰ It was likewise taught: Beth Shammai say: From the first day of the week [prepare] for the Sabbath;¹¹ but Beth Hillel say: Blessed be the Lord, day by day.¹⁰

R. Hama b. Hanina said: He who makes a gift to his neighbour need not inform him, for it says, 'And Moses knew not that the skin of his face sent forth beams'.¹² An objection was raised: 'That ye may know I am the Lord who sanctify you',¹³ The Holy One, blessed be He, said unto Moses: Moses, I have a precious gift in my treasury and its name is Sabbath and I wish to give it to Israel; go and tell them. Hence R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: He who gives a child [a piece of] bread must inform its mother! — There is no difficulty. The one treats of a gift which will naturally become known, and the other treats of a gift which does not naturally become known. But the Sabbath too is a gift which would have naturally become known! — Its reward¹⁴ would not naturally be known.¹⁵ The Master said: 'Hence R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: He who gives a child [a piece of] bread must inform its mother'. What should he do to it [the child]?¹⁶ — He smears it with oil or puts rouge on it. But now that we are afraid of witchcraft, what [is to be done]?¹⁷ — R. Papa said: He must smear it [the child] with some of that very substance [he put on the bread].¹⁸ R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Every commandment which the Holy One, blessed be He, gave unto Israel, He gave to them publicly, except the Sabbath which He bestowed upon them in secret, for it is said: 'It is a sign between Me and the children, of Israel for ever'.¹⁹ If so, idolators should not be punished on its account!²⁰ — The Sabbath He indeed made known to them [the idolator] but its reward He did not make known to them. Or you can say: Its reward too He made known to them [but] the enlarged soul,²¹ He did not make known to them; for R. Simeon b. Lakish said: On the eve of the Sabbath the Holy One, blessed be He, gives to man an enlarged soul and at the close of the Sabbath He withdraws it from him, for it says: He ceased from work and rested:²² once it [the Sabbath] has ceased²³ woe that the [additional] soul is lost!²⁴

A MAN MAY PREPARE A DISH ON THE EVE OF THE FESTIVAL. Abaye said: They taught this only of a dish²⁵ but not of bread.²⁶ Why is bread different that it is not [fit for an 'erub]? If I were to say something used as a relish is required then what of pearl-barley which is also not a relish — for R. Zera said: These Babylonians are fools for they eat bread with bread²⁷ — and [yet] R. Nahumi b. Zecharaiah said in the name of Abaye: One may set an 'erub of pearl-barley broth! — Rather, we require [for an 'erub dish] something which is not common, and bread is common, whereas pearl-barley broth is not common.²⁸ Others teach: Abaye said: They taught this only of a dish but not of bread. What is the reason? If I were to say something which is not common is required whereas bread is common, then what of pearl-barley broth, which is also not common and [yet] R. Nahumi b. Zecharaiah said in the name of Abaye: One may not set an 'erub with pearl-barley broth! — Rather, something used as a relish is required and bread is not used as a relish and pearl-barley broth too is not used as a relish for R. Zera said: These Babylonians are fools for they eat bread with bread.

R. Hiyya taught: The lentils at the bottom of the pot²⁹ can be relied upon as an 'erub tabshilin, providing that they amount to as much as an olive. R. Isaac son of Rab Judah said: One may scrape off the fat which is upon the knife and rely upon it as an 'erub tabshilin, providing that it amounts to as much as an olive.

R. Assi said in the name of Rab: Small salted fish are not subject to [the interdict against] the cooking of a heathen.³⁰ R. Joseph said: And if a heathen grilled them one may rely upon them as [or for] an 'erub tabshilin,³¹ but if a heathen made them into a pie of fish-hash it is prohibited.³² This is obvious! [that] the fish-hash is the principal element;¹ hence he informs us that the flour is the principal element.

R. Abba said: An 'erub tabshilin² must be the size of all olive.³ The Scholars asked: [Does that mean] one olive for all [the participants together] or an olive for each one separately? — Come and hear: For R. Abba said in the name of Rab: An 'erub tabshilin requires to be the size of an olive whether for one or for one hundred.

We have learnt: [IF] HE ATE IT OR IT WAS LOST, HE MAY NOT IN THE FIRST PLACE COOK [IN RELIANCE] ON IT, BUT IF HE LEFT OVER ANY [SMALL] PORTION OF IT, HE MAY RELY ON IT [TO COOK] FOR THE SABBATH. What does 'ANY' [SMALL] PORTION mean? Does it not mean although it is not as much as an olive?⁴ — No, when it is as much as an olive.

Come and hear: This dish⁵ [can be] grilled or pickled or stewed⁶ or boiled; and the Spanish colias⁷ [can be used] when he had poured hot water over it⁸ on the eve of the Festival; [for] its commencement and its end⁹ there is no standard [in quantity]. Does it not [surely] mean there is no standard [fixed] at all? No, there is no upper [i.e., maximum] standard,¹⁰ but there is a downwards [i.e., minimum] standard.¹¹

R. Huna said in the name of Rab: The 'erub tabshilin requires cognizance.¹² It is certain that the cognizance of him who deposits [the dish] is required but do we require the cognizance of him for whom it is deposited, or do we not require [it]? — Come and hear: For the father of Samuel used to set the 'erub for the whole of Nehardea; R. Ammi and R. Assi used to set the 'erub for the whole of Tiberias.¹³ R. Jacob b. Idi proclaimed: He who has not set an 'erub tabshilin, let him come and rely upon mine. And how far?¹⁴ — R. Nahumi b. Zecharaiah said in the name of Abaye: As far as the Sabbath limit.¹⁵

There was a certain blind man who used to recite Baraitas in the presence of Mar Samuel. When he noticed that he was gloomy he asked him: Why are you gloomy? Because I have not set an 'erub tabshilin,¹⁶ replied he. Then rely upon mine, he rejoined. The following year he [again] noticed that he was gloomy. Said he to him: Why are you gloomy? He answered him: Because I have not set all 'erub tabshilin. [Then] said he to him: You are a transgressor: to everybody else it is permitted,¹⁷ but to you it is forbidden.¹⁸

Our Rabbis taught: If a Festival falls on the eve of Sabbath one may neither set [on the Festival] a boundary 'erub¹⁹ nor an 'erub of courts.²⁰ Rabbi Says: One may set a court 'erub but not a boundary 'erub, for you can forbid him²¹ what is forbidden to him [on a Festival]²² but you cannot forbid him what is allowed to him [on a Festival].²³ It was stated: Rab says: The halachah is as the first Tanna, and Samuel says: The halachah is as Rabbi.

The Scholars asked: Is the halachah as Rabbi [meant] leniently or stringently?— Of course he [Samuel] meant it leniently!²⁴ — [The question was raised] because R. Eleazar sent word to the Diaspora [to wit]; Not as you teach in Babylon that Rabbi permits and the Sages forbid, but [rather] Rabbi forbids and the Sages permit. How is it now?²⁵ — Come and hear: For R. Tahlifa b. Abdimi decided a case according to Samuel, and Rab remarked [thereon:] The first decision of this young scholar is harmful.²⁶ [Now] if you say that he [Samuel] meant [his teaching] to be lenient it is well, hence this is harmful. But if you say [he meant] stringently, what harmful [teaching] is there! — Since many come to error²⁷

(1) And therefore the dough is disregarded altogether.

(2) The Hebrew employs the plural.

(3) But not less.

(4) Which contradicts Rab.

(5) Of the 'erub.

(6) Shaluk, translated 'stewed', means very much boiled.

(7) A very small fish of the tunny type. V. Krauss TA II, pp. 91 and 506.

(8) The pouring of hot water on the tunny fish is its preparation for eating.

(9) I.e., both when it is first made for an 'erub and when part has been eaten or lost.

(10) I.e., as regards its greatness.

(11) Below which it cannot constitute an 'erub.

(12) That it has been set for the purpose of 'erub.

(13) It is evident from this that the cognizance of all the Jewish residents of Nehardea and Tiberias was not required.

(14) I.e. within what area.

(15) Tehum, v. Glos.

(16) The Festival referred to here was New Year when in 'erub cannot be set conditionally.

(17) To rely upon my 'erub.

(18) I only had intended those who had unwittingly forgotten to rely on my 'erub, but not where the forgetfulness is through sheer negligence.

(19) Enabling him to go on the Sabbath from one township to another.

(20) Enabling him to carry on the Sabbath from one court to another, because he would thereby join the courts in a legal sense, making them all as one. This ranks as the repairing of an object and constitutes work.

(21) To effect on a Festival that a certain action should be permitted on the Sabbath.

(22) The prohibition of going from one township to another applies both to Sabbaths and Festivals.

(23) Carrying out from one private court to another is permitted on a Festival, without an 'erub.

(24) For Rabbi allows a court 'erub to be set on a Festival.

(25) Did Samuel mean that the halachah is as Rabbi taught in Babylon or as taught in Palestine.

(26) I.e. leading to a breach of the law.

(27) By forgetfully carrying on the Sabbath following the Festival from one court to another though no 'erub could be set on the Festival.

Talmud - Mas. Beitzah 17a

this is harm.¹ Raba said in R. Hisda's name who said in the name of R. Huna: The halachah is as Rabbi, viz., that it is forbidden.²

Our Rabbis taught: If a Festival fell on a Sabbath, Beth Shammai Say: He must pray eight [benedictions]³ and recite [the benediction] of the Sabbath separately and of the Festival separately; but Beth Hillel say: He must pray seven [benedictions]⁴ beginning with the Sabbath [formula] and ending with the Sabbath [formula],⁵ and he makes mention of the holiness of the day in the middle.⁶ Rabbi says: He should also conclude it [the benediction] 'Who sanctifieth the Sabbath, Israel and the Seasons.' A tanna recited in the presence of Rabina: 'Who sanctifieth Israel and the Sabbath⁷ and the Seasons.' He said to him: Does then Israel sanctify the Sabbath?⁸ The Sabbath has already been sanctified [from the creation] and so continues! Say rather: 'Who sanctifieth the Sabbath, Israel and the Seasons.' R. Joseph said: The halachah is as Rabbi and as Rabina explained it.

Our Rabbis taught: If a Sabbath falls on a New Moon or on the intermediate days of a Festival,⁹ at the evening, morning and afternoon services he prays seven [benedictions]¹⁰ and makes mention of the nature of the day¹¹ in the 'Abodah,¹² and if he did not recite [it], he is made to turn back;¹³ R. Eliezer says: [He alludes to the day] in the Thanksgiving [benediction],¹⁴ while in the Additional Services¹⁵ he begins with the Sabbath [formula] and closes with the Sabbath [formula], and makes mention of the holiness of the day in the middle.¹⁶ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka say: Whenever one is obliged to say seven benedictions¹⁷ he begins with the Sabbath [formula] and closes with the Sabbath [formula] and mentions the holiness of the day in the middle. Said R. Huna: The halachah is not as that pair [of scholars].¹⁸

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. ALL ARE BOUND TO APPEAR [AT THE TEMPLE],¹ EXCEPT A DEAF MAN [HERESH],² AN IMBECILE AND A MINOR,³ A PERSON OF UNKNOWN SEX [TUMTUM],⁴ A HERMAPHRODITE,⁵ WOMEN, UNFREED SLAVES,⁶ THE LAME, THE BLIND, THE SICK, THE AGED, AND ONE WHO IS UNABLE TO GO UP ON FOOT.⁷ WHO IS [IN THIS RESPECT DEEMED] A MINOR?⁸ WHOEVER IS UNABLE⁹ TO RIDE ON HIS FATHER'S SHOULDERS AND GO UP FROM JERUSALEM TO THE TEMPLE MOUNT. [THIS IS] THE VIEW OF BETH SHAMMAI.

BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: WHOEVER IS UNABLE TO HOLD HIS FATHER'S HAND AND GO UP FROM JERUSALEM TO THE TEMPLE MOUNT, FOR IT IS SAID:¹⁰ THREE REGALIM.¹¹

BETH SHAMMAI SAY: THE PILGRIMAGE-OFFERING¹² MUST BE WORTH [AT LEAST] TWO PIECES OF SILVER¹³ AND THE FESTAL OFFERING¹⁴ ONE MA'AH OF SILVER.¹⁵ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: THE PILGRIMAGE-OFFERING MUST BE WORTH [AT LEAST] ONE MA'AH OF SILVER AND THE FESTAL SACRIFICE TWO PIECES OF SILVER.

GEMARA. What does [the word] ALL come to include?¹⁶ — It comes to include one who is half a slave and half a freedman.¹⁷ But according to Rabina, who says: One who is half a slave and half a freedman is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], what does [the word] ALL come to include? — It comes to include one who was lame on the first day [of the festival] and became well¹⁸ on the second.

This will be right according to the one who says: All of them¹⁹ can make good [the sacrifices] for one another;²⁰ but according to the one who says: All of them can make good [the sacrifices] of the first day [only],²¹ what does ALL, come to include? — It comes to include a man who is blind in one eye; and it is contrary to the opinion of the following Tanna. For it is taught: Johanan b. Dahabai²² said in the name of R. Judah: A man who is blind in one eye is exempt from appearing [at the Temple]²³ as it is said:²⁴ Yir'eh [He will see], Yera'eh [He will be seen].²⁵

As He comes to see, so he comes to be seen: just as [He comes] to see with both eyes, so also to be seen with both eyes. Alternatively, I could answer: Actually, it is as I said at first;²⁶ and as for your objection [arising] from the statement of Rabina, it is not a [valid] objection: the one [teaching]²⁷ is according to the earlier Mishnah,²⁸ and the other²⁹ is according to the later Mishnah.³⁰ For we have learnt: One who is half a slave and half a freedman serves his master one day and himself the other day: this is the view of Beth Hillel. Said Beth Shammai to them:

(1) I.e., at the Temple Court (vrzg), on the three Pilgrim Festivals of Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles; cf. Ex. XXIII, 14, 17; Deut. XVI, 16. The word vhttr (rendered in our text, 'to appear') is understood by Rashi, Maimonides, Jastrow, Danby etc. in the sense of ohbp , htr, the personal appearance of the pilgrim in the Temple. But R. Tam (in Tosaf. a. l.) regards it as referring to the burnt-offering (v. Lev. I, 3f) brought by the pilgrim on his visit to the Temple i.e. it stands for vhtr , kug; cf. end of Mishnah, 4b, 6b et seq.

(2) Explained infra 2b as a 'deaf-mute'.

(3) The deaf man, imbecile and minor are exempted from the observance of this and other positive precepts on account of lack of intelligence. The reason for the exemption of others is explained in the Gemara.

(4) ouynuy from ony 'to fill up stop': one whose genitals are concealed or undeveloped.

(5) xubhdursbt Grk. **.

(6) Explained infra 4a as 'half free'; v. p. 2, n. 6.

(7) I.e., from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount.

(8) Ordinarily, a boy up to the age of thirteen years and a day is considered a minor

(9) I.e., is too young; but as soon as he is old enough he must visit the Temple, because, although exempt by the Law of the Torah till he reaches his majority (v. n. 8), the Rabbis imposed on the father the duty of training him in the observance of the precepts.

(10) Ex. XXIII, 14.

(11) ohkdr (pl. of kdr) rendered in E.V. by 'times', occurs in this sense again only in Num. XXII, 28, 32, 33. On the basis of Ex. XXIII, 14, the Mishnah often uses ohkdr of the three Pilgrim Festivals. But the usual meaning of kdr is 'foot', hence the quotation is understood in our Mishnah as 'three times on foot' i.e., the precept to appear at the Temple applies only to those who can walk.

(12) vhtr, the word translated above 'to appear' (v. p. 1, n. 1). Here it stands for vhtr , kug, the burnt-offering, which, it was inferred from Ex. XXIII, 15 (end), the pilgrim had to bring on visiting the Temple.

(13) I.e., two ma'ahs, v. n. 4.

(14) vdhdv, whence our tractate derives its name. It was a peace-offering (cf. Lev. III, 15) and was inferred from Lev. XXIII, 41; v. infra 9a.

(15) A sixth of a denar, v. Glos.

(16) The word 'ALL' is emphatic; it implies that persons who might be thought exempt are subject to the commandment; hence the question.

(17) E.g., he belonged to two masters, and was freed by one of them.

(18) Lit., 'became straight' (in limb).

(19) I.e., the seven individual days of the festival.

(20) I.e., if a man was unfit to bring his sacrifices on the first day of the festival (e.g., if he was exempt on account of lameness) and during the festival he became fit (i.e., regained the use of his leg), it is his duty to make good his sacrificial dues on the day of the festival that he becomes fit.

(21) I.e., if he was unfit on the first day, he is completely exempt, though he becomes fit in the course of the festival.

(22) Probably the name means, 'Goldsmith'.

(23) Or, according to Tosaf. (v. p. 1, n. 1), 'exempt from bringing the pilgrimage-offering'; and so wherever the translation has 'appearing'.

(24) Ex. XXIII, 17.

(25) vtrh may be vocalised vtrh (Kal, 'He will see') or following the Massorah, vtrh (Nif'al, 'He will be seen, appear'); cf. Gen. XXII, 14. By combining both readings, it is deduced that the 'seeing' and 'being seen' must be alike in regard to fulness of vision i.e., in regard to the use of both eyes: just as God comes to see the pilgrim with both eyes (an anthropomorphism for full vision necessitated by the desired parallel in respect to man), so when the pilgrim comes to appear before God, he must be able to see with both eyes. So Rashi: but R. Tam (in Tosaf. a.l.) prefers to make man the subject, and construes thus; vtrh, vtrh just as the pilgrim is seen by God, Who has two eyes (i.e., full vision), so he must see Him (i.e., appear in the Divine presence) with both eyes.

(26) I.e., that the word all comes to include a half-slave.

(27) I.e., the statement that unfreed slaves are exempt from visiting the Temple, which Rabina interprets as inferring such as are half free.

(28) I.e., the Mishnah as it was formulated before the School of Hillel (whose ruling was authoritative against that of the Shammaite School cf. Ber. 36b and Gratz, vol. IV, p. 424, n. 4; Heb. edn. vol. II, p. 172, n. 1) came over to the view of the School of Shammai. vbuatr vban (rendered, 'the earlier Mishnah') may refer either (a) to a single previous ruling later revised, or (b) to an entire compilation of the Mishnah, in which case it may be rendered, 'the first Mishnah'; cf. J.E. vol. VIII, P. 610f, and refs.

(29) V. note 4.

(30) I.e., representing the later opinion of the School of Hillel. Though this second opinion contradicts the first, the earlier ruling was not erased from the Mishnah, on the principle that a Mishnah (ruling) which had once been taught was not to be removed from its place; cf. Yeb. 30a et passim.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 2b

You have made it right for his master,¹ but you have not made it right for himself² He may not marry a bondwoman, nor may he marry a freewoman.³ Should he abstain [from marriage]? But then was not the world created only for propagation?⁴ as it is said:⁵ 'He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited'. For the sake of the social order,⁶ therefore, his master must be compelled to set him free, and the latter must give him a bond for the half of his value. Thereupon Beth Hillel retracted and gave their ruling in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai.

EXCEPT A DEAF MAN [HERESH], AN IMBECILE AND A MINOR etc. [Our Mishnah] speaks of HERESH similarly as of the IMBECILE and MINOR: just as the IMBECILE and MINOR lack understanding, so HERESH [means] one that lacks understanding. This teaches us in accordance with that which we have learnt:⁷ 'Wherever the Sages speak of HERESH,⁸ [it means] one who can neither hear nor speak.⁹ This [would imply] that he who can speak but not hear,¹⁰ hear but not speak is obligated.¹¹ We have [thus] learnt that which our Rabbis taught.¹² One who can speak but not hear is termed HERESH: one who can hear but not speak is termed Illem [dumb]; both of these are deemed sensible in all that relates to them. And whence [is it deduced] that one who can speak but not hear is termed Heresh, and one who can hear but not speak is termed 'Illem? — For it is written: But I am as Heresh [a deaf man], I hear not,' and I am as Illem [a dumb man] that openeth not his mouth.¹³ Alternatively, I could explain: As people say,¹⁴ His words have been taken away.¹⁵

'One that can speak but not hear, hear but not speak is obligated'. But surely it is taught: One that can speak but not hear, hear but not speak is exempt!¹⁶ — Said Rabina, and according to others, Raba: [Our Mishnah] is defective and should read thus: All are bound to appear [at the Temple] and to rejoice,¹⁷ except a Heresh that can speak but not hear, [or] hear but not speak, who is exempt from appearing [at the Temple];¹⁸ but though he is exempt from appearing, he is bound to rejoice. One, however, that can neither hear nor speak,¹⁹ an imbecile and a minor are exempt even from rejoicing, since they are exempt from all the precepts stated in the Torah,²⁰ Likewise it is also taught: All are bound to appear [at the Temple] and to rejoice, except a Heresh that can speak but not hear, [or] hear but not speak, who is exempt from appearing; but though he is exempt from appearing

- (1) I.e., he gets the full benefit of his half-ownership.
- (2) R. Meshullam (in Tosaf.) prefers the opposite reading. 'You have made it right for himself, but you have not made it right at all for his master'; because the latter loses any possible share of the offspring.
- (3) Being partly a freedman he may not marry a slave; being partly a slave he may not marry a freewoman; v. Deut. XXIII, 18 and Targum Onkelos a.l.
- (4) Lit., 'for fruitfulness and multiplication', cf. Gen. I, 28.
- (5) Isa. XLV, 18.
- (6) Lit., 'for the sake of the establishment (or improvement) of the world'; cf. Git. IV, 2, 3, where Danby renders; 'as a precaution for the general good'.
- (7) Ter. I, 2.
- (8) I.e., together with the Imbecile and Minor.
- (9) Tosaf. quotes and explains exceptions to this rule: cf. Meg. 19b and Hul. 2a.
- (10) E.g., he was able to hear when born and learnt to speak, but later became deaf.
- (11) I.e., to fulfil the precept of appearing at the Temple.
- (12) I.e., our Mishnah supports and thus gives validity to the following Baraitha. (11) This statement agrees, by implication, with our Mishnah, which puts only a deaf-mute in the same category as an imbecile.
- (13) Ps. XXXVIII, 14.
- (14) I.e., a popular proverb; v. J.E vol X, p. 226f.
- (15) I.e., okt ('dumb') is an abbreviation of vhkikn khe, at ('his words have been taken away').
- (16) I.e., from visiting the Temple; thus the Baraitha contradicts our Mishnah.
- (17) V. Deut. XVI, 14. Ritually the rejoicing took the form of a sacrificial meal of peace-offerings; cf. infra 8b and Pes. 109a.
- (18) And from bringing the accompanying burnt-offering.
- (19) I.e., the Heresh of our Mishnah. Thus the fully worded Mishnah would refer to two kinds of Heresh: (a) the partial Heresh that can either speak or hear, who must 'rejoice', though he is exempt from visiting the Temple; (b) the complete Heresh, who is exempt from both.
- (20) Torah primarily refers to the Pentateuch, but also has a wider meaning, which includes the whole Bible and even the entire range of Jewish teaching, both study and practice.

he is bound to rejoice. One, however, that can neither hear nor speak, an imbecile and a minor are exempt even from rejoicing, since they are exempt from all the precepts stated in the Torah. Why is it that in regard to appearing they are exempt, and in regard to rejoicing they are obligated? With regard to appearing, it is deduced by forming an analogy between the expressions for appearing¹ from [the section] 'Assemble',² for it is written: Assemble the people, the men and the women and the little ones;³ and it is [further] written: When all Israel is come to appear.⁴ But whence is it deduced for the latter?⁵ — For it is written: That they may hear and that they may learn.³ And it is taught: 'That they may hear', [this] excludes one that can speak but not hear; 'and that they may learn', [this] excludes one that can hear but not speak. Does this then mean to say that one that cannot talk cannot learn? But behold there were two dumb men in the neighbourhood of Rabbi, sons of the daughter of R. Johanan b. Gudgada, and according to others, sons of the sister of R. Johanan, who, whenever Rabbi entered the College, went in and sat down

[before him], and nodded their heads and moved their lips. And Rabbi prayed for them⁶ and they were cured,⁷ and it was found that they were versed in Halachah,⁸ Sifra,⁹ Sifre¹⁰ and the whole Talmud!¹¹ Said Mar Zutra, Read, That they may teach.¹² R. Ashi said: Assuredly it is [to be read]: That they may teach.¹³ For if you suppose [that it should be read]: That they may learn, and [argue that] if one cannot talk one cannot learn (and [obviously] if one cannot hear one cannot learn),¹⁴ that follows from [the expression]: That they may hear.¹⁵ Therefore, it must certainly be [read]: That they may teach.¹⁶

R. Tanhum said: One that is deaf in one ear is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], for it is said: In their ears.¹⁷ But [this expression], 'in their ears', is required [to teach that it¹⁸ must be] in the ears of all Israel!¹⁹ — That can be deduced from [the expression],²⁰ 'before all Israel'. But if [it were deduced] from [the expression] 'before all Israel', I might say: Even though they did not hear;²¹ therefore it is written in the Divine Law:²² 'in their ears,' they must be able to hear!²³ — That can be deduced from [the expression], in order that they may hear.²⁴

R. Tanhum said: One that is lame in one foot is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], as it is said: Regalim [on foot].²⁵ But this [word] Regalim is required to exclude people with wooden legs! — That follows from [the word] Pe'amim [steps].²⁶ For it is taught: 'Pe'amim'; 'Pe'amim' means only feet;²⁷ and thus it is said: The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of [pa'ame]²⁸ the needy.²⁹ And it further says: How beautiful are thy steps [pe'amayik] in sandals, O prince's daughter.³⁰

Raba expounded: What is the meaning of the verse: 'How beautiful are thy steps in sandals, O prince's daughter'. [It means:] How comely are the feet of Israel when they go up on the festival pilgrimage. 'Prince's daughter': [means] daughter of Abraham our father, who is called prince, as it is said: The princes of the peoples are gathered together, the people of the God of Abraham.³¹ 'The God of Abraham', and not the God of Isaac and Jacob? [It must mean], therefore, the God of Abraham, who was the first of the Proselytes.³²

R. Kahana said: R. Nathan b. Minyomi expounded in the name of R. Tanhum:³³ What is the meaning of the verse: And the pit was empty, there was no water in it?³⁴ Since it says that the pit was empty, would I not know that there was no water in it? [It must mean] therefore, there was no water in it, but there were in it snakes and scorpions.

Our Rabbis taught: Once R. Johanan b. Beroka and R. Eleazar Hisma³⁵ went to pay their respects to R. Joshua at Peki'in.³⁶ Said he to them: What new teaching was there at the College to-day? They replied: We are thy disciples and thy waters do we drink.³⁷ Said he to them: Even so, it is impossible for a college session to pass without some novel teaching. Whose Sabbath³⁸ was it? — It was the Sabbath of R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah, [they replied].-And what was the theme of his Haggadic³⁹ discourse to-day? They answered: The section 'Assemble'.⁴⁰ And what exposition did he give thereon? 'Assemble the people the men and the women and the little ones'. If the men came to learn, the women came to hear,⁴¹ but wherefore have the little ones to come? In order to grant reward⁴² to those that bring them. Said he to them: There was a fair Jewel in your hand, and you sought to deprive me of it.

He further expounded: Thou hast avouched the Lord this day . . . and the Lord has avouched thee this day.⁴³ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel: You have made me a unique object of your love⁴⁴ in the world, and I shall make you a unique object of My love in the world.⁴⁵ You have made me a unique object of your love, as it is written: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One.⁴⁶ And I shall make you a unique object of My love, as it is said:

- (11) x" a Lit., 'six orders' into which the Mishnah, and consequently the Talmud, which is the commentary on it, is divided. [MS.M. reads, 'Talmud'].
- (12) I.e., usnkh (Pi'el) for usnkh (Kal). Such textual changes are not to be regarded as serious Biblical emendations, but as part of the exegetical method of the Rabbis for the purpose of halachic and Haggadic deduction.
- (13) I.e., quite apart from the instance of the two dumb scholars, it can be proved that teach is the right reading.
- (14) [MS.M. omits bracketed words which, in fact, are superfluous].
- (15) The underlying reason for excluding the deaf is their inability to learn. If now you suppose that the dumb cannot learn, their exclusion can be inferred from the expression, 'that they may hear', which excludes the deaf, and similarly the dumb, and the words 'that they may learn' are superfluous.
- (16) And the inference that a dumb person cannot learn falls away.
- (17) Deut. XXXI, 11. The plural indicates that those present must be able to hear with both ears; and by analogy (v. supra p. 5, n. 9) we apply this rule also to the law of Ex. XXIII, 17.

- (27) I.e., natural as opposed to artificial feet.
- (28) lingp (steps) being parallel to hkdr (feet) must mean the same as the latter.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 3b

And who is like unto Thy people Israel, a nation one in the earth.¹ And he² also took up the text and expounded: The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails well planted are the words of masters of Assemblies, which are given from one Shepherd.³

Why are the words of the Torah⁴ likened to a goad? To teach you that just as the goad directs the heifer along its furrow in order to bring forth life to the world, so the words of the Torah direct those who study them from the paths of death to the paths of life. But [should you think] that just as the goad is movable so the words of the Torah are movable;⁵ therefore the text says: 'nails'.

But [should you think] that just as the nail diminishes⁶ and does not increase, so too the words of the Torah diminish and do not increase; therefore the text says: 'well planted'; just as a plant grows and increases, so the words of the Torah grow and increase.

‘The masters of assemblies’: these are the disciples of the wise, who sit in manifold assemblies and occupy themselves with the Torah, some pronouncing unclean and others pronouncing clean, some prohibiting and others permitting, some disqualifying⁷ and others declaring fit.

Should a man say: How in these circumstances shall I learn Torah?⁸ Therefore the text says: ‘All of them are given from one Shepherd’. One God gave them;⁹ one leader¹⁰ uttered them from the mouth of the Lord of all creation, blessed be He; for it is written: ‘And God spoke all these words’.¹¹ Also do thou make thine ear like the hopper¹² and get thee a perceptive heart to understand the words of those who pronounce unclean and the words of those who pronounce clean, the words of those who prohibit and the words of those who permit, the words of those who disqualify and the words of those who declare fit. He [then] spoke to them¹³ in the following words: It is not an orphan generation in which R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah lives. But they could have told him directly!¹⁴ — It was on account of a certain occurrence. For it is taught: Once R. Jose b. Durmaskith¹⁵ went to pay his respects to R. Eliezer at Lod.¹⁶ Said the latter to him: What new thing was taught in College today? He replied: They decided by vote that in Ammon and Moab¹⁷ the tithe of the poor should be given in the seventh year.¹⁸ Said [R. Eliezer] to him: Jose, stretch forth thine hands and lose thy sight.¹⁹ He stretched forth his hands and lost his sight. R. Eliezer [then] wept and said: The counsel of the Lord is with them that fear Him,’ and His covenant, to make them know it.²⁰ He [then] said to him: Go, say to them: Be not concerned about your voting,²¹ thus have I received a tradition from Rabban²² Johanan b. Zakkai, who heard [it] from his teacher, and his teacher from his teacher, that it is a halachah of Moses from Sinai²³ that in Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor is to be given in the seventh year. What is the reason? — Many cities were conquered by those who came up from Egypt, which were not conquered by those who came up from Babylon; since the first consecration²⁴ held [only] for the time,²⁵ but did not hold for the future [permanently],²⁶ therefore they were left²⁷ in order that the poor might be sustained upon them in the seventh year. It is taught: When his mind was calmed, he said: May it be granted that Jose’s sight be restored.²⁸ And it was restored.

Our Rabbis taught: Who is [deemed] an imbecile? He that goes out alone at night²⁹ and he that spends the night in a cemetery, and he that tears his garments. It was taught: R. Huna said: They must all be [done] together.³⁰ R. Johanan said: Even if [he does only] one of them. What is the case? If he does them in an insane manner, even one is also [proof]. If he does not do them in an insane manner, even all of them [prove] nothing? — Actually [it is a case where] he does them in an insane manner. But if he spent the night in a cemetery, I might say: He did [it] in order that the spirit of impurity might rest upon him.³¹ If he went out alone at night, I might say: He was seized by lycanthropy.³² If he tore his garment, I might say: He was lost in thought. But as soon as he does them all,

- (17) According to Rashi, that part of Ammon and Moab which was subjugated by Sihon and Og, and later was captured from them by the Israelites (v. Num. XXI, 21-35. and Hul. 60b). But according to R. Tam (in Tosaf.), it refers to the rest of Ammon and Moab, not conquered by Sihon and Og.
- (18) In Transjordan, which did not possess the sanctity of Palestine proper, the land did not have to be fallow in the seventh year (cf. Lev. XXV, 2f). Accordingly, the Rabbis ordained that the tithe of the poor, although given the preceding year, should again be given in the seventh year. V. Deut. XIV, 28-29 and Sifre a.l.; cf. also Lev. XXIII, 22 and Deut. XXIV, 19.

he becomes like [an ox] who gored an ox, an ass and a camel, and becomes [thereby] a mu'ad [forewarned gorer]¹ in regard to all [animals]. R. Papa said: If R. Huna had heard of that which is taught: Who is [deemed] an imbecile? 'One that destroys all that is given to him'; he would have retracted.² The question was raised: When he would have retracted, would he have retracted only with regard to the [case of the] man who tore his garment, because it resembles this [case];³ or would he have retracted with regard to all of them?⁴ — It remains [undecided].

A PERSON OF UNKNOWN SEX [TUMTUM], A HERMAPHRODITE etc.: Our Rabbis taught: [The word] ‘males’⁵ [by itself] comes to exclude women;⁶ [the expression]. ‘thy males’, comes to exclude the tumtum and hermaphrodite; ‘all thy males’ comes to include minors.

The Master said: [The word] ‘males’ comes to exclude women. But why do I need a verse for this? Consider: it is a positive precept dependent on a fixed time, and women are exempt from every positive precept dependent on a fixed time!⁷ — It is needed. You might say: We can make a deduction by forming an analogy between the expressions for appearing, from [the section] ‘Assemble’:⁸ just as there women are obligated. so here women are obligated; it therefore teaches us [that it is not so].

The Master said: [The expression]. ‘thy males’, comes to exclude a tumtum and a hermaphrodite. Granted that with regard to the hermaphrodite it is necessary [for Scripture to exclude him]. You might say that since he has a male aspect, he is obligated; it therefore teaches us that he is sui generis.⁹ But the tumtum is a dubious case;¹⁰ is a Biblical text required to exclude a dubious case?¹¹ — Said Abaye: [It is required for the case] where his testicles are outside.¹²

The Master said: [The expression], ‘all thy males’, comes to include minors. But we have learnt: EXCEPT AN IMBECILE AND A MINOR! — Said Abaye: There is no contradiction. The one case [speaks] of a minor who is old enough to be initiated,¹³ the other of a minor who is not old enough to be initiated. But a minor who is old enough to be initiated is obligated only by Rabbinic enactment!¹⁴ — Yes, it is so; and the Biblical text is merely a support.¹⁵ What then is the purpose of the Biblical text?¹⁶ — To intimate the teaching of ‘Others’.¹⁷ For it is taught: Others say: The scraper.¹⁸ the copper-smith¹⁹ and the tanner are exempt from appearing [at the Temple], for it is said: ‘All thy males’: he that is able to go up [on the pilgrimage] with all thy males. These, therefore, are excluded, because they are not fit²⁰ to go up with all thy males.

WOMEN AND UNFREED SLAVES etc.: Granted as regards women, as we have said,²¹ but as regards slaves, whence do we deduce [their exemption]? — Said R. Huna: Scripture says: before the Lord, God:²² [this means] one that has one Lord; this one,²³ therefore, is excluded because he has another lord.²⁴ But why do I need a Biblical intimation for this? Consider: every precept which is obligatory on a woman is obligatory on a slave; every precept which is not obligatory on a woman is not obligatory on a slave; for this is deduced by analogy from [the case of] the woman, through the double occurrence of [the expression] unto her.²⁵ Said Rabina: It²⁶ is needed only for [the exemption of] one that is half a slave and half a freedman!²⁷ This can also be proven; for [the Mishnah] speaks of WOMEN AND UNFREED SLAVES. What is meant by unfreed? Should I say that it means entirely unfreed, then it should simply say, ‘Slaves’! Surely, therefore [it must mean] slaves that have not been completely freed. And who are such? Those that are half slaves and half freedmen. Proven.

THE LAME, THE BLIND, THE SICK, THE AGED: Our Rabbis taught: ‘Regalim’ [on foot]:²⁸ this excludes people with wooden legs. Another interpretation:²⁹ Regalim: this excludes the lame, the sick, the blind, the aged, and one that cannot go up on foot. ‘And one that cannot go up on foot’: What does this come to include? — Said Raba: It comes to include

- (1) Lit., ‘forewarned’; an animal whose owner stands forewarned and consequently liable to full indemnity on account of three successive injuries (V. Ex. XXI, 36).
 - (2) I.e., he would have considered this action by itself as proof of imbecility.
 - (3) I.e., the case of the man who destroys whatever is given to him.
 - (4) I.e., he would have agreed entirely with R. Johanan's view.
 - (5) In the phrase ‘all thy males’. Ex. XXIII, 17.
 - (6) I.e., from obligation to visit the Temple; v. Mishnah, p. 1.
 - (7) The exemption of women from the performance of these precepts is not due to any inferiority of status, but to delicate consideration for their physical nature; cf. also Kid. 29a and 34af.
 - (8) V. supra p. 5, n. 10. This law likewise is dependent on a fixed time.
 - (9) And to be excluded.
 - (10) Even more dubious than that of the hermaphrodite, because the sexual organs of the former are concealed. Thus the tumtum may be a female and quite exempt from appearing at the Temple.
 - (11) It would in any case be exempt because obligation could not be proven. For another explanation and reading v. Tosaf. a.l., and Maharsha.
 - (12) And only the membrum is hidden: being certain of the sex, we might think that he is bound to appear; Scripture therefore prevents this conclusion.
 - (13) V. Mishnah p. 1, n. 9.
 - (14) And not by Biblical injunction; therefore the verse cannot refer to this case.
 - (15) I.e., a confirmation; or perhaps a mnemotechnical aid.
 - (16) I.e., the word ‘all’; for there are no superfluous expressions in the Bible.
 - (17) I.e., R. Meir, who is quoted under this term subsequent to the unsuccessful conspiracy by R. Nathan and himself against Rabban Simon b. Gamaliel; v. Hor. 13b.
 - (18) V. Keth. 77a, where this word (. nen) is explained as (a) one that collects dog's excrements (used, according to Rashi ibid., for steeping clothes prior to laundering, and according to Rashi here, for preparing cordwain); (b) a tanner on a small scale, in contr. to hxruc a tanner on a large scale.
 - (19) Explained ibid. as (a) a kettle-smith; (b) one that digs copper in the shaft.
 - (20) On account of the malodour resulting from these occupations.
 - (21) V. supra p. 13.
 - (22) Ex. XXIII, 17.
 - (23) I.e., the slave.
 - (24) I.e., a human master in addition to his Divine Master.
 - (25) V. Deut. XXIV, 3 (of the woman), and Lev. XIX, 20 (of the bondwoman).
 - (26) I.e., the Biblical intimation.
 - (27) This is in accordance with ‘the earlier Mishnah’ (v. supra p. 3, nn. 6, 8), but according to ‘the later Mishnah’, the master is compelled to free the half slave, who is then bound to appear at the Temple.
 - (28) V. p. 7, n. 11.
 - (29) The first interpretation is not quite satisfactory, because the exclusion of people with wooden legs can be deduced from ohngp in Ex. XXIII, 17; cf. p. 7. n. 12.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 4b

a delicate person.¹ For it is written: When ye come to appear before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to trample² My courts?³

A Tanna taught: The uncircumcised⁴ and the unclean⁵ are exempt from [bringing] the pilgrimage-offering.⁶ Granted as regards the unclean, for it is written: And thither thou shalt come,' and thither ye shall bring.⁷ To whomever 'coming' applies, 'bringing' applies; to whomever 'coming' does not apply, 'bringing' does not apply. But whence do we derive [the exemption of] the uncircumcised? — This will be according to R. Akiba, who includes the uncircumcised like the unclean. For it is taught: R. Akiba said: [the expression], what man soever,⁸ comes to include uncircumcised.⁹

Our Rabbis taught: An unclean person is exempt from [bringing] the pilgrimage-offering, for it is written: 'And thither thou shalt come; and thither ye shall bring'. To whomever 'coming' applies 'bringing' applies; to whomever 'coming' does not apply 'bringing' does not apply. R. Johanan b. Dahabai said in the name of R. Judah: A person who is blind in one eye is exempt from appearing [at the Temple]. for it is said: Yir'eh¹⁰ [He shall see], Yera'eh [He shall be seen]; just as He comes to see, so He comes to be seen; as He comes to see with both eyes. so also to be seen with both eyes.

R. Huna, when he came to this verse, Yir'eh, Yera'eh,¹¹ wept. He said: The slave whom his Master longs to see should become estranged from him! For it is written: When ye come to appear¹² before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to trample My courts?¹³

R. Huna, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And thou shalt sacrifice peace-offerings, and shalt eat there.¹⁴ The slave at whose table his Master longs to eat should become estranged from him! For it is written: To what purpose is the abundance of your sacrifices unto Me? saith the Lord.¹⁵

R. Eleazar, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And his brethren could not answer him, for they were affrighted at his presence.¹⁶ Now if the rebuke of flesh and blood be such, how much more so the rebuke of the Holy One, blessed be He!

R. Eleazar, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And Samuel said to Saul: Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring¹⁴ me up?¹⁷ Now if Samuel, the righteous, was afraid of the Judgment, how much more so should we be! How do we know this about Samuel?¹⁸ — For it is written: And the woman said unto Saul: I see godlike beings coming up out of the earth.¹⁹ 'Coming up'²⁰ implies two: one was Samuel, but [who was] the other? Samuel went and brought Moses with him, Saying to him: Perhaps, Heaven forbid,²¹ I am summoned to Judgment: arise with me,²² for there is nothing that thou hast written in the Torah, which I did not fulfil.

R. Ami, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Let him put his mouth in the dust, perhaps there may be hope.²³ He said: All this, and [only] perhaps!²⁴

R. Ami, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Seek righteousness, seek humility, perhaps ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.²⁵ He said: All this, and [only] perhaps!

R. Assi, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish justice in the gate, perhaps the Lord, the God of hosts, will be gracious.²⁶ All this, and [only] perhaps!

R. Joseph, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: But there is that is swept away without judgment.²⁷ [He said]:²⁸ Is there anyone who passes away before one's [allotted] time?²⁹ — Yes, as in the story [heard] by R. Bibi b. Abaye,³⁰ who was frequently visited by the Angel of death. [Once] the latter said to his messenger: Go, bring me Miriam, the women's hairdresser!³¹ He went and brought him Miriam, the children's nurse. Said he to him:³² I told thee Miriam, the women's hairdresser. He answered: If so, I will take her back. Said he to him: Since thou hast brought her, let her be added.³³ But how were you able to get her?³⁴ She was holding a shovel in her hand and was heating and raking¹ the oven. She took it and put it on her foot and burnt herself; thus her luck was impaired and I brought her. Said R. Bibi b. Abaye to him²: Have ye³ permission to act thus? He answered him: Is it not written: 'There is that is swept away without judgment'? He countered: But behold it is written: One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh!⁴ He replied: I have charge of them⁵ till they have completed the generation,⁶ and then I hand them over to Dumah!⁷ He [then] asked him: But after all, what do you do with her years?⁸ He replied: If there be a Rabbinic scholar who overlooks his hurt, I shall give them to him in her stead.⁹

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And thou didst incite Me against him, to destroy him without cause.¹⁰ A slave whose Master, when they incite him yields,¹¹ is there any help for him?

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Behold, He putteth no trust in His holy ones.¹² If He does not put His trust in His holy ones, in whom will He put his trust? One day he was going on a journey and saw a man gathering figs; he was leaving those that were ripe and was taking those that were unripe. So he said to him: Are not those¹³ better? He replied: I need those for a journey: these will keep, but the others will not keep. Said [R. Johanan] this is the meaning of the verse: Behold He putteth no trust in His holy ones.¹⁴ But is it so? For behold there was a disciple In the neighbourhood of R. Alexandri, who died in his youth, and [R. Alexandri] said: Had this scholar wished, he could have lived!¹⁵ If now it be [as R. Johanan said] perhaps he was one of those of whom it is said: 'Behold He putteth no trust in His holy ones'! — That [scholar] was one who had rebelled against his teachers!¹⁶

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And I will come near to you to judgment and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages.¹⁷ A slave whose Master brings him near to judge him, and hastens to testify against him, is there any remedy for him?

Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai said: Woe unto us that Scripture weighs against us light like grave offences.¹⁸

Resh Lakish¹⁹ said: Whoever wrests the judgment of the proselyte is as if he wrests the judgment of the All-High, for it is said:²⁰ And that turn aside the proselyte²¹ from his right: the consonants [can be read]: And that turn Me aside.²²

R. Hanina b. Papa said: Whoever does something [wrong] and repents of it, is forgiven at once,²³ for It is said: And [that] fear not Me.²⁴ But if they do fear Me, they are forgiven at once. R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: For God shall bring every work into the judgment concerning every hidden²⁵ thing.²⁶ A slave to whom his Master accounts errors²⁷ as wilful offences, is there any remedy for him? What is the meaning of, concerning every hidden thing? — Rab said: This refers to one who kills a louse in the presence of his neighbour, so that he feels disgust thereat. And Samuel said: This refers to one who spits in the presence of his neighbour so that he feels disgust thereat. What is the meaning of, whether it be- good or whether it be — evil?²⁸ — The School of R. Jannai said: This refers to one who gives alms to a poor person publicly,²⁹ like the story of R. Jannai. He [once] saw a man give a zuz³⁰ to a poor person publicly, so he said to him: It had been better that you had not given him, than now that you have given him publicly and put him to shame. The School of R. Shila said: This refers to one who gives alms to a woman secretly. for he brings her into suspicion. Raba said: This refers to one who is in the habit of sending his wife on the eve of the Sabbath meat that has not been cut up.³¹ But Raba [himself] used to send! — The daughter of R. Hisda³² is different, for he was sure of her that she was an expert!³³

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are come upon them.³⁴ A slave whose Master brings many evils and troubles upon him, is there any remedy for him? What is the meaning of ‘evils and troubles’?³⁵ — Rab said: Evils which become antagonists³⁶ to each other, as for instance the [bites of] a wasp and a scorpion.³⁷ And Samuel said: This refers to one who furnishes money to the poor person [only] in the hour of his extreme distress.³⁸ Raba said: This is the meaning of the proverb, For [purchasing] provision a zuz is not to be found, for hanging up [in the basket]³⁹ it can be found.

Then My anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide My face from them.⁴⁰ R. Bardela b. Tabyumi said that Rab said: To whomever ‘hiding of the face’ does not apply is not one of them;⁴¹ to whomever [the words] and they shall be devoured⁴² does not apply is not one of them. Said the Rabbis to Raba: To [our] master 'the hiding of the face' does not apply, and [the words] 'And they shall be devoured' do not apply! Said he to them: Do ye know then how much I send secretly to the Court of King Shapur?¹ Even so the Rabbis directed their eyes upon him.² Meanwhile the Court of King Shapur sent [men], who plundered him.³ He [then] said: This is it that is taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Wherever the Rabbis direct their eyes there is either death or poverty.

Tosaf. translates: 'when one is about to be hanged', and explains thus: A man is threatened with execution unless he offers a ransom; being poor, a small ransom would be accepted. But now the arrangement of a mortgage is offered him; this serves only to aggravate his misfortune, for the ransom price is raised. A third explanation is given by Maharsha a.l.

And I will hide My face in that day.⁴ Raba said: Although I hide My face from them, I shall speak to them⁵ in a dream.⁶ R. Joseph: said: His hand is stretched over us, as it is said: And I have covered thee in the shadow of My hand.⁷

R. Joshua b. Hanania was [once] at the court of Caesar.⁸ A certain unbeliever⁹ showed him [by gestures]: A people whose Lord has turned His face from them — He showed him [in reply]: His hand is stretched over us. Said Caesar to R. Joshua: What did he show thee?—A people whose Lord has turned His face from them. And I showed him: His hand is stretched over us.

They [then] said to the heretic:¹⁰ What didst thou show him?A people whose Lord has turned His face from them. And what did he show thee? — I do not know. Said they: A man who does not understand what he is being shown by gesture should hold converse in signs before the king! They led him forth and slew him.

When the soul of R. Joshua b. Hanania was about to go to its rest, the Rabbis said to him: What will become of us at the hands of the unbelievers? He answered them: Counsel is perished from the children,¹¹ their wisdom is vanished.¹² So soon as counsel is perished from the children,¹³ the wisdom of the peoples of the world is vanished.¹⁴ Or I may derive it from here: And he said: Let us take our journey, and let us go, and I will go over against thee.¹⁵

R. Ila was once walking up the stairs of the house of Rabbi b. Shila, when he heard a child reading the verse: For, lo, He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what his conversation was.¹⁶ He said: A slave Master declares to him his conversation, is there any remedy for him? — What is the meaning of [the expression] 'What his conversation was'? — Rab said: Even the superfluous conversation¹⁷ between a man and his wife is declared to a person in the hour of his death. But is it so? Now behold R. Kahana once lay down beneath the bed of Rab,¹⁸ and he heard him converse and jest and perform his needs. [Thereupon] he said: The mouth of Rab is like that of one who has not tasted any food.¹⁹ Said [Rab] to him: Kahana, get out, this is unseemly! — There is no contradiction: In the one case [it is] where he has to procure her favour, in the other, where he has no need to procure her favour.

But if ye will not hear it, My soul shall weep in secret for the pride.²⁰ R. Samuel b. Inia said in the name of Rab: The Holy One, blessed be He, has a place and its name is 'Secret'. What is the meaning of [the expression] 'for the pride'?—R. Samuel b. Isaac said: For the glory²¹ that has been taken from them and given to the nations of the world. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: For the glory of the Kingdom of Heaven.²² But is there any weeping in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He? For behold R. Papa said: There is no grief in the Presence²³ of the Holy One blessed be He; for it is said: Honour and majesty are before Him; strength and beauty are it²⁰ His sanctuary!²⁴ — There is no contradiction; the one case [refers to] the inner chambers,²⁵ the other case [refers to] the outer chambers. But behold it is written: And in that day did the Lord, the God of Hosts, call to weeping and to lamentation, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth!²⁶ — The destruction of the Temple is different, for even the angels of peace wept [over it]; for it is said: Behold for their altar²⁷ they cried without; the angels of peace wept bitterly.²⁸

And mine eye shall drop tears and tears, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive.²⁹ R. Eleazar said: Wherefore these three [expressions of] 'tears'? One for the first Temple, and one for the second Temple, and one for Israel, who have become exiled from their place. But there are some who say: One for the neglect of [the study of] the Torah. This is all right according to the view that [one] is for Israel, who have become exiled from their place: this agrees with that which is written: 'Because the Lord's flock is carried away captive'. But according to the view that it was for the neglect of [the study of] the Torah, how do you explain [the text], 'Because the Lord's flock is carried away'? — Since Israel have become exiled from their place, you can have no greater neglect of [the study of] the Torah than this.

Our Rabbis taught: Over three the Holy One, blessed be He, weeps every day: over him who is able to occupy himself with [the study of] the Torah and does not; and over him who is unable to occupy himself with [the study of] the Torah and does; and over a leader who domineers over the community.

Rabbi was once holding the Book of Lamentations and reading therein: when he came to the verse, He hath cast down from heaven unto the earth,³⁰ it fell from his hands. He said: From a roof so high to a pit as deep!³¹

Rabbi and R. Hiyya were once going on a journey. When they came to a certain town, they said: If there is a rabbinical scholar here, we shall go and pay him our respect. They were told: There is a rabbinical scholar here³² and he is blind.³³ Said R. Hiyya to Rabbi: Stay [here]; thou must not lower thy princely dignity;³⁴ I shall go and visit him. But [Rabbi] took hold of him and went with him. When they were taking leave from him,³⁵ he said to them: Ye have visited one who is seen but does not see; may ye be granted to visit Him who sees but is not seen. Said [Rabbi to R. Hiyya]: If now [I had hearkened to you] you would have deprived me of this blessing. They [then] said to him: From whom didst thou hear this?³⁶ -I heard it at a discourse of R. Jacob's. For R. Jacob of Kefar Hitya,³⁷ used to visit his teacher every day. When he became old, the latter said to him: Let the master not trouble himself since he is unable. He replied: Is it a small thing that is written concerning the Rabbis? And he shall still live alway, he- shall not see the pit; when he seeth that wise man die.³⁸ Now if he who sees wise men at their death shall live, how much more so [he who sees them] in their life.

R. Idi, the father of R. Jacob b. Idi, used to spend three months on his journey and one day at the school;³⁹ and the Rabbis called him 'One day scholar'. So he became dispirited, and applied to himself the verse: I am as one that is a laughing-stock to his neighbour etc.⁴⁰ Said to him R. Johanan: I beg of you, do not bring down punishment upon the Rabbis. R. Johanan then went forth to the College and delivered the [following] exposition: Yet they seek Me day by day, and delight to know My ways.⁴¹ Do they then seek Him by day, and do not seek Him by might? It comes to tell you. therefore, that whoever studies the Torah even one day in the year, Scripture accounts it to him as though he had studied the whole year through. And similarly in the case of punishment, for it is written: After the number of the days in which you spied out the land.⁴² Did they then sin forty years? Was it not forty days that they sinned? It must come to teach you, therefore, that whoever commits transgression even one day in the year, Scripture accounts it to him as though he had transgressed the whole year through.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 6a

Who brought him thus far?¹ — Said Abaye to him: Thus far his mother brought him,² since she is bound to rejoice³ [on the festival]; from here onward, if he is able to go up from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount holding his father's hand, he is obligated, and if not, he is exempt.

Rabbi objected on behalf of Beth Hillel to the view of Beth Shammai: But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband: Until the child be weaned, when I will bring him up.⁴ Now Samuel was [already] able to ride on his father's shoulders!⁵ — Said his father⁶ to him: But according to thy own reasoning there is a difficulty: was not Hannah herself bound to rejoice [on the festival]?⁷ The explanation, therefore, must be that Hannah saw that Samuel was exceptionally delicate, and she feared that the journey might unduly fatigue Samuel.⁸ R. Simeon⁹ asked: What [is the law], according to the view of Beth Shammai, respecting a minor who is lame,¹⁰ and according to both views, respecting one who is blind?¹¹ — What is the case? Shall one say that it is a case of a lame child who will never be able to walk,¹² and of a blind child who will never be able to see? Now [in such cases] a major is exempt, can there be any question about a minor?¹³ — No, [the question] is necessary with respect to a lame child who may [eventually] be able to walk¹⁴ and with respect to a blind child who may [eventually] be able to see. What [is the law then]? — Abaye said: Wherever a major is obligated according to the law of the Torah, we also initiate a minor according to Rabbinic law; wherever a major is exempt according to the law of the Torah, a minor is also exempt according to Rabbinic law.

BETH SHAMMAI SAY: THE PILGRIMAGE-OFFERING MUST BE WORTH [AT LEAST] TWO PIECES OF SILVER etc. Our Rabbis taught: Beth Shammai say: The pilgrimage-offering [must be worth at least] two pieces of silver and the festal-offering one ma'ah of silver, because the pilgrimage-offering is offered up entirely to God,¹⁵ which is not the case with regard to the festal-offering;¹⁶ furthermore, we find that for the Festival of Weeks¹⁷ Scripture has enjoined more burnt-offerings than peace-offerings.¹⁸ But Beth Hillel say: The pilgrimage-offerings [must be at least] one ma'ah of silver and the festal-offering two pieces of silver, because the festal-offering obtained prior to the Revelation,¹⁹ which is not the case with regard to the pilgrimage-offering. Furthermore, we find that in the case of 'the princes',²⁰ Scripture enjoined more peace-offerings than burnt-offerings.

Now why do not Beth Hillel agree with Beth Shammai? — As for your saying that the pilgrimage-offering is more important because it is entirely offered up to God, on the contrary, the festal-offering is more important, because in it there are two meals.²¹ And as for your saying that we should learn by analogy from the Feast of Weeks, [I contend that] we should form an analogy between the offering of an individual and the offering of an individual,²² but we should not form an analogy between the offering of an individual and an offering of the community.²³ And why do not Beth Shammai agree with Beth Hillel? — As for your saying that the festal-offering is more important because it obtained prior to the Revelation, [I contend] that the pilgrimage-offering also obtained prior to the Revelation.²⁴ And as for your saying that we should learn by analogy from 'the princes'. [I contend that] we have to form an analogy between something that applies to [future] generations²⁵ and something [else] that applies to [future] generations;²⁶ but we should not form an analogy between something that applies to [future] generations and something that does not apply to [future] generations.²⁷ Now according to Beth Hillel, why is the festal-offering singled out as obtaining prior to the Revelation? Because it is written: And they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings.²⁸ Surely the pilgrimage-offerings must also [have been offered up then]; [for] behold, it is written: And they offered burnt-offerings!²⁹ — Beth Hillel are of the opinion that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the 'continual burnt-offering'.³⁰ And Beth Shammai? — They are of the opinion that the burnt-offering that the Israelites offered in the wilderness was a pilgrimage-offering.³¹

Abaye said: Beth Shammai and R. Eleazar and R. Ishmael are all of the opinion that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was a pilgrimage-offering. And Beth Hillel and R. Akiba and R. Jose the Galilean are all of the opinion that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the 'continual burnt-offering'. 'Beth Shammai', as we have said [above]. 'R. Ishmael', for it is taught: R. Ishmael said: The general directions were given at Sinai,³²

(1) I.e., from his house to Jerusalem. The fact that he could travel to Jerusalem shows that he is old enough to do without his mother; at that age he is also old enough to be able to go up from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount by holding his father's hand. What point, therefore, is there in defining a minor as one that is unable even with the aid of his father to go up from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount, when the prior journey to Jerusalem shows that he is old enough to do this and therefore no longer a minor?

(2) Thus the assumption that he was old enough to do without his mother is wrong.

(3) I.e., in order to fulfil the commandment to rejoice she must go to Jerusalem (cf. Deut. XIV, 26); but she is not subject to the commandment to appear before the Lord on the Temple Mount.

- (4) I Sam. I, 22. According to the Talmud a child is weaned at the end of 24 months.
- (5) According to Rashi a child can do that at the end of a year. The Shammaite view, therefore, must be wrong.
- (6) The other reading, Abaye, is an anachronism; [unless we read 'Said Abaye' omitting 'to him'.]
- (7) She ought therefore to have gone up to the Sanctuary (then at Shiloh) and taken Samuel with her even before he was weaned.
- (8) Thus the case of Samuel cannot be regarded as a support for the Hillelite view.
- (9) I.e., R. Simeon b. Lakish, v. Pes. 119a.
- (10) Beth Shammai require a child to go up to the Temple (as part of his initiation or religious training) as soon as he can do so by riding on his father's shoulders. Since the lame child could go up to the Temple Mount in this manner, is he bound to do this? But the question is not applicable to Beth Hillel, because they require the child to be able to walk.
- (11) This question is applicable to Beth Hillel, too, because the blind child could go up the Temple Mount by holding his father's hand.
- (12) Lit., 'become straight'.
- (13) His initiation would serve no purpose, for even on becoming of age he will be exempt.
- (14) I.e., before he becomes of age. The question is: must we train him now because when he grows up he will be fit and therefore bound to 'appear', or shall we exempt him on account of his present defects?
- (15) Lit., 'the Most-High'.
- (16) Which is partly burnt, and partly eaten by pilgrims and priests.

- (19) V. Ex. XXIV, 5, which is taken to refer to a time prior to the Revelation though it occurs after the Decalogue; cf. Shab. 88a, where the building of the altar and the offering of sacrifices thereon by 'the young men of the children of Israel', (taken by the Rabbis to be the firstborn) is said to have taken place on the fifth Sivan, a day before the Revelation.

- (21) For the altar and for man.
- (22) I.e., the pilgrimage and festal-offerings which were private offerings should be compared with the offerings of 'the princes', which were also private offerings.
- (23) I.e., the offerings prescribed for the Feast of Weeks, which were provided from the Temple treasury.
- (24) V. Ex. XXIV, 5.
- (25) I.e., the pilgrimage and festal-offerings.
- (26) I.e., the public offerings of the Feast of Weeks.
- (27) I.e., the prince's offerings.
- (28) Ibid.
- (29) Ibid. The pilgrimage-offering was a burnt-offering.
- (30) V. Num. XXVIII, 2-6: this was a daily public offering from which no inference could be drawn regarding the pilgrimage-offerings.
- (31) Because the expression 'they saw God' (Ex. XXIV, 11) which, being similar to the expression 'shall appear' (Ex. XXIII, 17). is taken to imply that it was offered as a pilgrimage celebration.
- (32) I.e., many precepts were left vague at Sinai, which were explained in full detail after the erection of the Tabernacle; cf., for example, Ex. XX, 24 with the detailed instructions concerning the sacrifices in Lev. I-VII.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 6b

and the details in the Tent of Meeting.¹ But R. Akiba said: The general directions and the details were given at Sinai² and repeated in the Tent of Meeting and enjoined a third time in the Plains of Moab.³ Now if you suppose that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the [statutory] continual burnt-offering⁴, is it possible for a sacrifice not to require flaying and dissection at first⁵ and later to require flaying and dissection?⁶

‘R. Eleazar’, for it was taught: It is it continual burnt-offering, which was offered in Mount Sinai.⁷ R. Eleazar said: The manner of its offering was enjoined at Sinai, but it was not actually offered up.⁸ R. Akiba said: It was offered up and was never discontinued. But how am I to explain [the verse]: Did you bring unto Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?⁹ — The tribe of Levi, who were not guilty of idol worship.¹⁰ offered them up.¹¹

‘Beth Hillel’, as we have said [above]. ‘R. Akiba’, also, as we have said [above]. ‘R. Jose the Galilean’, for it is taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: Three precepts are enjoined upon Israel when they make their pilgrimage at a festival: the pilgrimage-offering and the festal-offering and the rejoicing.¹² The pilgrimage-offering has something that the other two have not;¹³ and the festal-offering has something that the other two have not; and the rejoicing has something that the other two have not. The pilgrimage-offering has something that the other two have not, for the pilgrimage-offering is offered entirely to God, which is not the case with the other two. The festal-offering has something that the other two have not, for the festal-offering obtained prior to the Revelation,¹⁴ which was not the case with the other two. The rejoicing has something which the other two have not, for the rejoicing applies to both men and women,¹⁵ which is not the case with the other two.¹⁶

With reference to R. Ishmael, why do you represent him as agreeing with Beth Shammai?¹⁷ [Because you argue]: If it were supposed that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the continual burnt-offering, is it possible for a sacrifice not to require flaying and dissection at first and later to require flaying and dissection? But behold R. Jose the Galilean said [distinctly]¹⁸ that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the continual burnt-offering; [and yet he held that] at first it did not require flaying and dissection, and later it did require flaying and dissection. For it is taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: The burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness did not require flaying and dissection, because flaying and dissection came into force only from [the erection of] the Tent of Meeting onward!¹⁹ — Strike out R. Ishmael from here.²⁰

R. Hisda asked: How is this verse to be understood: And he sent the young men of the children of Israel, who offered burnt-offerings [namely] lambs, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord?²¹ Or Perhaps both were oxen?²² What difference does it make? Mar Zutra said: In regard to the punctuation.²³ R. Abba, the son of Raba, said: In regard to one who says: I vow [to offer] a burnt-offering like the burnt-offering which Israel offered in the wilderness. What [must he offer]? Were they oxen or lambs? — It remains [undecided].

We have learnt elsewhere:²⁴ The following things

- (1) Cf. Lev. I, 1.
 - (2) Though not mentioned in connection with the Revelation but in other parts of the Torah e.g.. Leviticus.
 - (3) Cf. Deut. I, 5f.
 - (4) Enjoined by God for all time, and not offered by individuals at their own discretion as pilgrimage-offerings.
 - (5) Since, according to R. Ishmael, the laws of flaying and dissection as details were laid down only at the Tent of Meeting.
 - (6) The burnt-offerings mentioned in Ex. XXIV, 5, before the Revelation at the Tent of Meeting, were offered up whole, whilst the continual burnt-offering. like all burnt-offerings, required flaying and dissection, v. Lev. I, 6; therefore it must be pilgrimage-offerings that are referred to in Ex. XXIV, which they offered on their own accord and which were consequently not subject to any of the detailed laws governing burnt-offerings (Rashi).
 - (7) Num. XXVIII, 6.
 - (8) Thus the burnt-offerings brought by the 'young men' (Ex. XXIV, 5) must have been pilgrimage-offerings.
 - (9) Amos V, 25. This implies, contrary to R. Akiba's view, that in the wilderness the regular public sacrifices were not offered, because Israel was under divine censure.
 - (10) Cf. Ex. XXXII, 26.
 - (11) I.e., they offered the continual burnt-offerings at their own expense (Rashi).
 - (12) The spirit of festive joy was expressed by a sacrificial feast; if the offerings brought in fulfillment of vows, as free-will gifts or as tithe, did not suffice for all, additional peace-offerings had to be brought as offerings of rejoicing.
 - (13) I.e., is superior in a certain respect to the other two.
 - (14) The peace-offerings which the 'young men' also offered at Sinai (Ex. XXIV,5) though not offered on a festival, are called festal-offerings (vdhdj) because they were the fulfilment of Ex. V, 1. As R. Jose holds that the pilgrimage-offerings were not prior to the Revelation, he is in agreement with Beth Hillel.
 - (15) V. Deut. XIV, 26. The Tosefta reading is: For the offerings of rejoicing can be offered during any of the seven days' vgca kf ihnuka, vk ah vj nava
 - (16) Which, being precepts not expressly enjoined upon women, and being dependent on a fixed time (v. p. 13, n. 4) are incumbent on men only.
 - (17) The question is against Abaye's statement above (p. 28): since the Hillelite view is the more authoritative, Abaye should avoid representing R. Ishmael as agreeing with Beth Shammai.
 - (18) I.e., it is clearly inferred from the Baraita just quoted.
 - (19) Thus the reasoning which sought to make R. Ishmael agree with Beth Shammai is wrong.
 - (20) I.e., from the list of those who hold the Shammaite view.
 - (21) Ex. XXIV, 5.
 - (22) I.e., the burnt-offerings as well as the peace-offering.
 - (23) ohngy euxhp. According to Rashi, the Neginoth or cantillation signs are referred to: the first interpretation would require the word , ukg to have a disjunctive accent (e.g.. ethnahta, as in our texts), and the second would require a conjunctive accent (e.g.. Pashta or Rebia'). But actually the Neginoth are of Post-Talmudic origin; v. J.E. Vol. I p. 157, 6, prg. 7. For doubtful verse-division cf. also Yoma 5a-b. V. also Ned., Sonc. ed., p. 113, n. 5.

have no prescribed limit:¹ the [crop of the] corner of a field [to be left for the poor],² the first fruits,³ the visiting of the Temple [Re'ayon],⁴ deeds of loving-kindness,⁵ and the study of the Torah. R. Johanan said: We were of the opinion that the visiting of the Temple [with an offering] had no maximum limit, but that it had a minimum limit,⁶ till R. Oshaya Berabbi⁷ came and taught that the visiting of the Temple [with an offering] has no maximum nor minimum limit.⁸ But the Sages said: The pilgrimage-offering⁹ must be worth [at least] one ma'ah of silver and the festal-offering two pieces of silver.

What is meant by Re'ayon? — R. Johanan says: [It means] appearing¹⁰ in the Temple Court.¹¹ Resh Lakish says: [It means] appearing with a sacrifice.¹² Concerning the first day¹³ of the Festival, all are agreed that the visit must be accompanied by an offering; they differ only with regard to the other days of the festival. [Further] if a man brings [an offering] every time that he comes, all are agreed that we are to accept it from him; they differ only with regard to a man who comes and does not bring [an offering]. R. Johanan is of the opinion that [Re'ayon means] appearing at the Temple Court; he need not therefore bring [an offering] whenever he comes. Resh Lakish says: [Re'ayon means] appearing with an offering; thus he must bring [an offering] whenever he comes.

Resh Lakish put an objection to R. Johanan. [It is written]: None shall appear before Me empty!¹⁴ — He replied to him: [This refers] to the first day of the Festival.¹⁵

He [again] put an objection to him: 'None shall appear before Me empty': [this means one must bring] animal sacrifices.¹⁶ You say, animal sacrifices, but perhaps [it means] birds or meal-offerings? [Nay], you may deduce it by analogy. A festal-offering is prescribed for man¹⁷ and a pilgrimage-offering is prescribed for God:¹⁸ just as the festal-offering prescribed for man is an animal sacrifice,¹⁹ so the pilgrimage-offering prescribed for God is an animal sacrifice. And what is meant by animal sacrifices? Burnt-offerings. You say burnt-offerings, but perhaps [it means] peace-offerings? [Nay], you may deduce it by analogy: a festal-offering is prescribed for man and a pilgrimage-offering is prescribed for God: just as the festal-offering which is prescribed for man is one that is fitting²⁰ for him, so the pilgrimage-offering which is prescribed for God must be one that is fitting²¹ for Him. And so it is right, that your table should not be full and the table of the Master empty!²² — He replied: [This refers] to the first day of the festival.

[Again] he Put an objection to him: R. Jose son of R. Judah said: Three times in the year were the Israelites commanded to go on pilgrimage: on the Feast of Unleavened Bread, on the Feast of Weeks and on the Feast of Booths; and they must not appear in divisions,²³ for it is said: All thy males;²⁴ and they must not appear empty-handed for it is said: None shall appear before Me empty!²⁵ — He replied: [This refers] to the first day of the festival.

R. Johanan put an objection to Resh Lakish: [It is written]: Yir'eh [He will see]. Yera'eh [He will be seen];²⁶ just as I [come] free,²⁷ so you [come] free! — All, therefore, must agree that if a person comes and does not bring [an offering] that he may enter [the Temple Court] and present himself and go out.²⁸ They differ only with regard to a person who comes and brings [an offering]. R. Johanan, who says [Re'ayon means] appearing in the Temple Court, [holds] that there is no limit to 'appearing', but that there is a limit to the offerings. And Resh Lakish says:

[Re'ayon means] appearing with an offering; thus there is no limit to the offerings either. R. Johanan put an objection to him: [It is written]: Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house!²⁹ — There it refers to sin-offerings.³⁰ as R. Levi [taught]. For R. Levi pointed to a contradiction; it is written: 'Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house', and it is written: I will come into Thy house with burnt-offerings!³¹ There is no contradiction: the one case refers to sin-offerings and trespass-offerings; the other case refers to burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. It has also been taught thus: 'Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house': the verse speaks of sin-offerings and trespass-offerings. You say of sin-offerings and trespass-offerings, but perhaps it is of nought but burnt-offerings and peace-offerings? When it says: 'I will come to Thy house with burnt-offerings, I will perform unto Thee my vows', behold burnt-offerings and peace-offerings are mentioned; how now shall I explain [the verse]: 'Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house'? The verse speaks of sin-offerings and trespass-offerings.

'And they must not appear in divisions etc.' R. Joseph thought to explain it [thus]: If a man has ten sons, they should not make the pilgrimage five one day and five the next day.³²

(1) I.e., fixed by Scripture.

(2) V. Lev. XIX, 9 and XXIII, 22; the Rabbis fixed the minimum at a sixtieth of the field.

(3) Deut. XXVI, 1-11.

(4) ihtr, ihtr or ihtr lit., appearing' sc. at the Temple Court; secondarily, it means the sacrifice brought on the occasion of the Temple visit; cf. end of page, and p. 1, n. 1.

(5) It includes all deeds of kindness; but for almsgiving the Rabbis prescribed a limit, v. Keth. 50a.

(6) prescribed by Scripture i.e., the ma'ah or two ma'ahs mentioned in the Mishnah.

(7) hcrc: According to Rashi, 'great in his generation, i.e., eminent; according to Levy and Jastrow, 'belonging to a school of an eminent teacher' (contra. of hcr hc); a title of scholars, most frequently applied to disciples of R. Judah ha-Nasi and his contemporaries, but also to some of his predecessors and sometimes to the first Amoraim; v. Naz., Sonc. ed., p. 64, n. 1.

(8) V. p. 31, n. 7.

(9) Heb. vhttr v. n. 5, and p. 31, n. 10.

(10) The different form of the word implies a different meaning from vhttr; the latter in this context would mean 'the (cost of the) pilgrimage burnt-offering'; the former signifies 'appearing' in the Temple.

(11) I.e., there is no limit to the number of visits, but only one sacrifice need be brought.

(12) I.e., however many visits are made to the Temple Court a sacrifice must be brought every time.

(13) Lit., 'the essential part'.

(14) Ex. XXIII, 15. Thus the visitor to the Temple must always bring an offering.

(15) But on all subsequent visits no offering need be brought.

(16) ohj cz signifies sacrifices slaughtered with a knife, i.e., unvc ('beasts') in contradistinction to upig ('birds'), for which vehkn ('pinching the neck with finger nail') is prescribed.

(17) yuhsv Grk.  a private man (as opposed to a priest, officer etc.), a commoner; ignoble, ignorant (Jast.). Here it means the pilgrim (as opposed to God), for whom the festal-offering was intended to provide the festive meal.

(18) Lit., 'the Most High'. The words 'before Me' (in Ex. XXIII, 15) imply that the pilgrimage-offering was prescribed primarily as a sacrifice to God in contradistinction to the festal-offering which was to provide food for the worshipper.

(19) Cf. Ex. XXIII, 18 where hdj ckj ('the fat of any festal-offering') implies that it was an animal, for birds have no ckj, fat to be burnt on the altar.

(20) I.e., it provides him with meat for his feast.

(21) I.e., a burnt-offering.

(22) Thus an offering should be brought on each visit to the Temple, which refutes R. Johanan.

(23) Lit., 'by halves'. Explained infra p. 34.

(24) Ex. XXIII, 17.

(25) This apparently supports Resh Lakish.

(26) V. p. 3, n. 3.

(27) I.e., without sacrifices.

(28) This new view of the controversy shows that the previous arguments between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish were not actually advanced by the Rabbis named but by later scholars, v. Tosaf. Bek. 4b, s.v. tkt,

(29) Prov. XXV, 17. I.e., one should not bring too many sacrifices to the House of God. There is possibly a play here on the word kdr which means 'foot' and also 'pilgrimage-festival'. For the term 'Friend' understood of God, cf. the terms of endearment in Cant. which the Rabbis interpreted as expressing the loving relationship between Israel and God.

(30) I.e., the verse means: Avoid the necessity of bringing sin-offerings.

(31) Ps. LXVI, 13. Thus it is good to bring sacrifices.

(32) Taking ihmj k literally. i.e., 'by halves'.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 7b

Said Abaye to him: This is obvious; which of them would you make transgressors and which of them would you make zealous?¹ What then is the purpose of the verse?² To intimate the teaching of 'Others'.³ For it is taught: 'Others' Say: The scraper, the copper-smith and the tanner are exempt from appearing [at the Temple]; for it is said, 'All thy males': he who is able to go on the pilgrimage with 'all thy males'; these [then] are excluded, because they are unable to go up with all thy males.⁴

MISHNAH. BURNT-OFFERINGS DURING THE MID-FESTIVAL⁵ ARE TO BE BROUGHT FROM [ANIMALS BOUGHT WITH] UNCONSECRATED MONEY,⁶ AND PEACE-OFFERINGS,⁷ [ALSO] FROM [ANIMALS BOUGHT WITH SECOND] TITHE MONEY.⁸ ON THE FIRST FESTIVAL DAY OF PASSOVER, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: [THEY MUST BE BROUGHT] FROM [ANIMALS BOUGHT WITH] UNCONSECRATED MONEY; AND BETH HILLEL SAY: [THEY CAN BE BROUGHT ALSO] FROM [ANIMALS BOUGHT WITH SECOND] TITHE MONEY. ISRAELITES⁹ MAY FULFIL THEIR OBLIGATION¹⁰ WITH VOW-OFFERINGS, FREEWILL-OFFERINGS¹¹ AND TITHE OF CATTLE;¹² AND THE PRIESTS WITH SIN-OFFERINGS AND TRESPASS-OFFERINGS.¹³ FIRSTLINGS,¹⁴ THE BREAST AND THE SHOULDER,¹⁵ BUT NOT WITH BIRD-OFFERINGS,¹⁶ NOR MEAL-OFFERINGS.¹⁷

GEMARA. Accordingly, it is during the mid-festival only that burnt-offerings are brought from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money, but on the festival [they may be brought] also from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. [But] why? It is obligatory, and everything that is obligatory must be brought from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money! And if you say: It comes to teach us this, [to wit,] that burnt-offerings can be brought during the mid-festival but not on the festival;¹⁸ then this will be according to Beth Shammai!¹⁹ For we have learnt: Beth Shammai say. One may bring peace-offerings [on the festival]²⁰ without laying the hands²¹ upon them; but not burnt-offerings.²² But Beth Hillel say, One may bring peace-offerings and burnt-offerings [on the festival] and lay the hands upon them!²³ — [Our Mishnah] is defective, and it should read thus: Burnt-offerings, vow-offerings and freewill-offerings are brought during the mid-festival, but they may not be brought on the festival.²⁴ But the pilgrimage burnt-offering is brought even on the festival;²⁵ and when it is brought,²⁶ it must be brought only from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money; but the peace-offerings of rejoicing can be brought also from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money.²⁷ And regarding the festal-offering of the first festival day of Passover, Beth Shammai say: [It must be brought from animals bought with] unconsecrated money; and Beth Hillel say: [It can be brought] also from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money.²⁸ It has also been taught thus: Burnt-offerings, vow-offerings and freewill-offerings are brought during the mid-festival but not on the festival. But the pilgrimage burnt-offering is brought even on the festival; and when it is brought, it is brought only from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money; but the peace-offerings of rejoicing can be brought also from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. And regarding the festal-offering of the first festival day of Passover,²⁹ Beth Shammai say: [It must be brought] from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money; but Beth Hillel say: [It can be brought] also from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. Why is the festal-offering of the first festival day of Passover different?³⁰ — It comes to teach us this: Only the festival-offering of the fifteenth [of Nisan must be brought from animals bought with unconsecrated money] but not the festal-offering of the fourteenth [of Nisan].³¹

(1) All the ten are bound to visit the Temple on the first day; if, now, five at a time went up, the first group would be doing their duty scrupulously and the second five would be remiss.

(2) ‘All thy males,’ teaching that they must not appear in divisions.

(3) V. p. 14, n. 5.

(4) ‘They must not appear in divisions’ means, therefore, that all the Israelites must form one group; if the scraper etc. were to go on the pilgrimage they would have to form, because of their malodour, a separate group, which is forbidden.

(5) sgun lit., ‘appointed time,’ i.e., the intermediate days of Passover and Sukkoth as opposed to cuy ouh, festival days (called in the Bible ase tren ‘holy convocation’). In the Bible sgun includes both festival and intermediate days, cf. e.g. Lev. XXIII, 4.

(6) As opposed to animals bought with Second Tithe money (v. infra, n. 8). All obligatory offerings had to be brought from unconsecrated animals (cf. Men. 82a and infra p. 36).

(7) Brought to provide sufficient meat for the pilgrim and his family so that they might keep the festival with rejoicing (cf. Deut. XIV, 26).

(8) Cf. Deut. XIV, 22f. The tithe was separated in the first, second, fourth and fifth year of the seven year cycle, after terumah (‘heave-offering’) had been given to the Priest and First Tithe to the Levite. It was to be consumed in Jerusalem or the money with which it was redeemed spent there (v. Danby, P. 73, n. 6).

(9) As opposed to priests.

(10) I.e., of ‘rejoicing’ on the festival by offering peace-offerings wherewith to provide themselves with meat for the feast. Thus it is unnecessary to bring special sacrifices for this purpose, if the vow-offerings etc. provide sufficient for the family's needs.

(11) Cf. Mishnah Meg. I, 6.

- (12) V. Lev. VII, 31-39.
- (13) Brought by pilgrims and of which only the priests may eat; v. Num. XVIII, 9f.
- (14) V. ibid. 17-19.
- (15) V. Lev. VII, 29f.
- (16) They were sin-offerings.
- (17) V. Lev. II, 1. The bird and meal-offerings would not provide a feast suited to the occasion of rejoicing.
- (18) I.e., it is forbidden to offer the pilgrimage burnt-offerings on the festival (when all manner of work is prohibited), even though it is an obligatory offering of the festival, because there is time to bring the offering the next day.
- (19) Whose opinion is invalid against that of Beth Hillel.
- (20) Because they supply the pilgrim with his feast.
- (21) Cf. Lev. III, 2 and infra 16a. The act of laying on of the hands, which causes the pilgrim to support himself on the animal, is forbidden by the Rabbis on Festival and Sabbath on account of shebuth ('abstention, rest', v. Glos.) i.e., it is an action out of keeping with the restful character of the holy day. though it is not actually included in one of the thirty-nine categories of labour (v. Mishnah Shab. VII, 2) and cf. Mishnah Bez. V, 2.
- (22) Exceptions were the continual burnt-offerings and the additional offerings, which were permitted to be offered because they had an appointed time (cf. Num. XXVIII, 2 usgunc); otherwise, Beth Shammai explained 'unto you' in Ex. XII, 16 to mean: for yourselves offer sacrifices but not entirely for God.
- (23) Since it is permitted to bring them, the laying on of the hands is also permitted. V. Bez. 19b.
- (24) Even according to Beth Hillel.
- (25) Though it could be brought during the mid-festival, Lev. XXIII, 4 ('and ye shall keep it a feast') is taken by Beth Hillel to imply that it should be offered on the first day of the festival.
- (26) [Wilna Gaon emends 'when they are brought' referring to all the mentioned offerings].
- (27) V. p. 36, n. 1, and infra p. 39.
- (28) Explained infra.
- (29) As distinct from the festal-offering of the fourteenth of Nisan; v. next note.
- (30) I.e., why is it specifically mentioned?
- (31) If the paschal lamb did not suffice for the company a festal-offering could be sacrificed in addition (cf. Sifre to Deut. XVI, 2 and Pes. 69b). This festival-offering was not obligatory, hence even Beth Shammai would agree that it could be brought from the Second Tithe.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 8a

Thus he holds that the festal-offering of the fourteenth [of Nisan] is not enjoined by the Torah.

The Master said [above]: 'Beth Hillel say: [The festal-offering of the first day of the festival can be brought also] from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money'. Why? It is obligatory, and everything that is obligatory must be brought only from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money!¹ — 'Ulla said: When he supplements [the unconsecrated by that of the Second Tithe].² Hezekiah said: One animal may be supplemented by another animal, but money may not be supplemented by money. And R. Johanan said: Money may be supplemented by money, but one animal may not be supplemented by another animal. There is a teaching agreeing with Hezekiah and there is a teaching agreeing with R. Johanan. There is a teaching agreeing with R. Johanan: [it is written]: After the tribute;³ this teaches that a man must bring his obligatory offering from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. And whence [do we know] that if he desires to mix he may mix?⁴ The text teaches: According as the Lord, thy God, shall bless thee.⁵ There is a teaching agreeing with Hezekiah: [The expression] ‘after the tribute’ teaches that a man may bring his obligatory offering from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. Beth Shammai say: The first [festival] day from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money.⁶ thenceforward⁷ [also] from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. Beth Hillel say: The first meal⁸ from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. thenceforward⁹ from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. And the remaining days of Passover, a man may fulfil his obligation¹⁰ [also] with the tithe of cattle.¹¹ Why may he not [do so] on the festival?¹² — R. Ashi said: Lest he come to separate tithe on the festival; and it is impossible to separate tithe on the festival on account of the [marking with] red paint.¹³ What evidence is there that the [word] ‘tribute’ indicates that which is unconsecrated? — Because it is written: And the King Ahasuerus laid tribute upon the land.¹⁴

ISRAELITES MAY FULFIL THEIR OBLIGATION WITH VOW-OFFERINGS AND FREEWILL-OFFERINGS. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written], And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast.¹⁵ This includes all kinds of rejoicings as [festival] rejoicing.¹⁶ Hence the Sages said: Israelites may fulfil their obligation with vow-offerings, freewill-offerings and tithe of cattle; and the priests with sin-offering and guilt-offering, and with firstlings, and with the breast and the shoulder; one might [think] also with bird-offerings and meal-offerings, [therefore] Scripture teaches: ‘And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast’.

(1) Cf. p. 36.

(2) If he has a large company and the festival-offering from his unconsecrated means (ihkuj) will not suffice, he is permitted to add thereto from the Second Tithe: according to Hezekiah, it means that he may purchase other festival-offerings with Second Tithe money; according to R. Johanan, he may add Second Tithe money in order to purchase a larger animal. The former deems it better that one should satisfy one's obligation to bring the festival-offering from unconsecrated means by bringing therefrom a complete offering i.e., the first, though by itself inadequate for the company; the latter prefers that every morsel of the festival-offering should contain a percentage purchased with unconsecrated money (Rashi). Tosaf. explains that R. Johanan objects to ‘dividing one's obligation’ by spreading it over two animals.

(3) Deut. XVI, 10.

(4) The expression ‘mix’ supports R. Johanan, because it is applicable to money and not to animals.

(5) Ibid. I.e., with both unconsecrated and consecrated means.

(6) Because it is obligatory then.

(7) Though still termed festival-offerings, they are really peace-offerings of rejoicing.

(8) I.e., the first festival-offering.

(9) Even on the same day.

(10) ‘To rejoice’.

(11) And also of course with offerings bought with Second Tithe money.

(12) I.e., satisfy his obligation after the first meal with tithe cattle, just as he may buy an offering with Second Tithe money.

(13) Every tenth animal was designated as tithe by being marked with red paint (Bek. IX, 7); on a holy day painting, being regarded as work, is prohibited.

(14) Esth. X, 1. The word used here Xn, and , Xn in Deut. XVI, 10 are from the same root.

(15) Deut. XVI, 14, which refers to Sukkoth, but by analogy is applicable to each of the three pilgrim festivals.

(16) I.e., the precept to rejoice can be fulfilled only by having meat at the feast (cf. Pes. 119a), but the flesh of any kind of sacrifice will do.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 8b

only with those [offerings] from which the festal-offering can be brought;¹ these, then, are excluded Since the festal-offering cannot be brought from them. R. Ashi said: It is to be deduced from [the expression]. 'And thou shalt rejoice'; these, then, are excluded because there is no [festive] joy in them. But what does R. Ashi do with [the expression]. 'in thy feast'.² — To intimate what R. Daniel b. Kattina learnt. For R. Daniel b. Kattina said that Rab said: Whence [is it derived] that marriages³ may not take place during the mid-festival? Because it is said: 'And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast', but not in thy wife.⁴

MISHNAH. HE THAT HAS MANY TO EAT [WITH HIM] AND FEW POSSESSIONS,⁵ OFFERS MANY PEACE-OFFERINGS AND FEW BURNT-OFFERINGS,⁶ [HE THAT HAS] MANY POSSESSIONS AND FEW TO EAT [WITH HIM] BRINGS MANY BURNT-OFFERINGS⁷ AND FEW PEACE-OFFERINGS. [HE THAT HAS] FEW OF EITHER, FOR HIM IS PRESCRIBED:⁸ ONE MA'AH OF SILVER', 'TWO PIECES OF SILVER'.⁹ HE THAT HAS MANY OF BOTH, OF HIM IT IS SAID: EVERY MAN SHALL GIVE AS HE IS ABLE, ACCORDING TO THE BLESSING OF THE LORD THY GOD, WHICH HE HATH GIVEN THEE.¹⁰

GEMARA. Whence shall he bring many peace-offerings? Behold He has not! — Said R. Hisda: He may supplement [unconsecrated money with Second Tithe money] and bring a large bull.¹¹ Said R. Shesheth to him: Behold they said: One may supplement beast with beast! What did he mean? Should one say he meant this: Behold they said: One may supplement beast with beast, but not money with money; then he should say to him: One may not supplement money with money!¹² — He must, therefore, have meant this: Behold they said: One may also supplement beast with beast!¹³ According to whom will this be? It will be neither according to Hezekiah nor according to R. Johanan.¹⁴ And should you say: It is only the Amoraim¹⁵ who differ [about it],¹⁶ but the Baraitas¹⁷ do not differ;¹⁸ but behold it says: The first meal must come from unconsecrated money!¹⁹ — The first meal means that the amount of the value of a first meal²⁰ must be from unconsecrated money.²¹

'Ulla said that Resh Lakish said: If a man set aside ten beasts for his festal-offering [and] he offered up five on the first day of the festival, he may offer up the other five on the second day of the festival;²² R. Johanan said: Since he has interrupted [the offer- above) and not leave R. Hisda to infer what is prohibited from a statement of what is permitted. ings]. he cannot offer any more. R. Abba said: But they do not differ: the one speaks of an instance where he did not declare his intention, and the other speaks of an instance where he did declare his intention.²³ What is the case of the one who had not declared his intention?²⁴ — Should one say that there is no time left in the day to offer them, then the reason for his not offering them was because there is no time left in the day!²⁵ [Should one say], therefore, that he had no [more] people to eat with him!²⁵ - — No, it refers to a case where there was time left in the day [to offer] and he had people to eat with him; seeing that he did not offer them on the first day [of the festival] it proves that he left them over [intentionally].²⁶ And so it stands to reason;²⁷ for when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said that R. Johanan said: If a man set aside ten beasts for his festal-offering, [and] he offered five the first day of the festival, he may offer the other five on the second day of the festival. [Now the two statements of R. Johanan] contradict one another! Surely, therefore, you must learn from this that in the one case he does not declare his intention and in the other he does declare his intention. Proven.

It is also reported:²⁸ R. Shaman b. Abba said that R. Johanan said:

(13) I.e., and not merely money with money.

(14) As neither of them permits the supplementing of both money with money and beast with beast.

(15) Lit., 'speakers': the Talmudic scholars who were active from the time of the conclusion of the Mishnah (C. 220 C.E.) to the end of the fifth century, and compiled almost the whole of the Gemara; v. Glos. s.v. Amora. Here Hezekiah and R. Johanan are referred to.

(16) I.e., regarding the permissibility of supplementing money with money and adding beast to beast.

(17) Lit., 'extraneous (teachings)': the generic term for Tannaitic teachings not included in the Mishnah, v. Glos.

(18) The Baraithas quoted above (pp. 38, 39) in support of Hezekiah and R. Johanan respectively do not contradict each other regarding the permissibility of adding money to money, only regarding the adding of beast to beast, which the first Baraita prohibits and the second permits. Thus R. Shesheth will agree with the second Baraita which permits the adding of beast to beast as well as money to money.

(19) This presumably means that the whole of the flesh of the first meal must come from unconsecrated money, which in turn shows that the Baraita refers to the supplementing of beast with beast and not of money with money.

(20) [I.e., the amount required to constitute generally a first festal meal and not, as assumed, the whole of the first meal. The text is in slight disorder].

(21) Thus the Baraita may refer both to animals and money.

(22) Rashi explains: One must not suppose that by offering the remaining beasts on the second day (i.e., the first day of the mid-festival) he is transgressing the commandment to keep one day as a feast i.e., to offer his festal offerings on the first day (deduced infra p. 44 from Lev. XXIII, 41, 'and ye shall keep it (only) a feast'), for the second day he is merely 'compensating' for the dues of the first. But according to R. Hananel (quoted in Tosaf'. rzuj v"s) hba cuy ouh ('the second day') means, or should read, iurj t cuy ouh ('the last day of the festival'); and he explains that one should not think that since vow-offerings and freewill-offerings cannot be brought on a festival day, therefore the remaining beasts may not be offered then; for these sacrifices are to be regarded as festal-offerings not as vow- or freewill-offerings, since in the first place they were set aside for that purpose. This interpretation is supported by the J.T.

(23) I.e., he said explicitly I set all of them aside for the first day; if then he offers some on the second day, they are merely 'compensation' for the first day.

(24) That you rule that he cannot offer them any more.

(25) But his intention was to offer them on the first day.

(26) In order to provide a feast for the second day.

(27) I.e., that R. Johanan would grant that if he declared his intention to offer them all on the first day, he may offer the remaining beasts on the second.

(28) This is an Amoraic (v. p. 41, n. 3) corroboration to the effect that where it is evident that the pilgrim did not intend in the first instance to hold over some of the offerings for the second day, R. Johanan would agree with Resh Lakish.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 9a

They taught this¹ only [of a case] when it had not ended, but if it had ended, he may offer the rest [on the second day]. What does 'ended' mean? Shall one say [it means]: he had ended² his sacrifices? What [in that case] should he offer? It must mean, therefore, that the day had not ended,³ but if the day had ended,⁴ he may offer the rest [on the second day].

MISHNAH. HE WHO DID NOT BRING HIS FESTAL-OFFERING ON THE FIRST FESTIVAL, DAY OF THE FEAST [OF TABERNACLES], MAY BRING IT DURING THE WHOLE OF THE FESTIVAL, EVEN ON THE LAST FESTIVAL DAY⁵ OF THE FEAST [OF TABERNACLES]. IF THE FESTIVAL, PASSED AND HE DID NOT BRING THE FESTIVAL OFFERING, HE IS NOT BOUND TO MAKE IT GOOD. OF SUCH A PERSON IT IS SAID: HE THAT IS CROOKED CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT AND THAT WHICH IS WANTING CANNOT BE RECKONED.⁶ R. SIMEON B. MENASYA SAID: WHO IS IT 'THAT IS CROOKED' WHO 'CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT'? HE THAT HAS CONNECTION WITH A FORBIDDEN RELATION⁷ AND BEGETS BY HER BASTARD ISSUE. SHOULD YOU SAY THAT IT APPLIES TO A THIEF OR ROBBER, BUT THEN HE IS ABLE TO MAKE RESTITUTION AND BE MADE STRAIGHT. R. SIMEON B. YOHAI SAID: ONLY HE CAN BE CALLED 'CROOKED' WHO WAS STRAIGHT AT FIRST AND BECAME CROOKED. AND WHO IS THIS? — A DISCIPLE OF THE SAGES WHO FORSAKES THE TORAH.

GEMARA. Whence do we know this?⁸ — R. Johanan in the name of R. Ishmael said: [The expression] 'Azereth ['solemn assembly'] is used of the seventh day of Passover,⁹ and [the expression] 'Azereth is used of the eighth day of the Feast [of Tabernacles].¹⁰ Just as there it¹¹ intimates that one can make good [thereon the festal-offering due on the first day] so here¹² it intimates that one can make good [thereon the festal-offering of the first day]. And it is free [for interpretation];¹³ for were it not free one might object: whereas [this¹⁴ applies] to the seventh day of Passover which is not differentiated from the preceding [days], can you say this of the eighth day of the Feast [of Tabernacles] which is differentiated from the preceding [days].¹⁵ But it is not so;¹⁶ it is quite free [for interpretation]. Consider, what does 'Azereth mean? [Evidently it means], restrained [‘Azur]¹⁷ in respect of doing work. But behold it is written: Thou shalt do no work;¹⁸ wherefore, then, has the Divine Law written ‘Azereth’¹⁹ You must infer therefrom [that it is] in order to leave it free [for interpretation]. But the Tanna²⁰ [of the following Baraitha] deduces it from here. For it is taught: And ye shall keep it a feast unto the Lord seven days.²¹ One might think that he must go on bringing festal-offerings the whole of the seven days. Scripture, therefore, says, ‘it’: on it [only] are you to offer festal-offerings, but you are not to offer festal-offerings on all the seven days. If so, why does it say, ‘seven’? To intimate that one may make good [the festal-offering during the seven days of the festival]. And whence [do we learn] that if he did not bring the festal-offering on the first festival day of the Feast [of Tabernacles] that he can go on bringing it during the course of the whole Festival, even on the last festival day? Scripture says: Ye shall keep it in the seventh month.²² If, now, [it is to be kept] in the seventh month, one might think that one can go on bringing the festal-offering throughout the whole month, therefore Scripture says, ‘it’:²³ on ‘it’ [only] are you to offer festal-offerings, but you are not to offer festal-offerings outside it.

And what is the nature of this ‘making good’? — R. Johanan says: They²⁴ make up for the first day;²⁵ and R. Oshaiah says: They make up for one another.²⁶ What is the [practical] point at issue between them? — R. Zera said: [The case of] a man who was lame²⁷ on the first day [of the festival] and became well on the second day is the point of issue between them. R. Johanan says: They make up for the first day; since on the first day he was not qualified [to bring the festal-offering], he is not qualified on the second. And R. Oshaiah says: They make up for one another; although he was not qualified on the first day he is qualified on the second. But could R. Johanan have said this? For behold Hezekiah said: If [a Nazirite] became defiled during the day [of the eighth] he has to bring [a sacrifice], but during the night [preceding the eighth] he does not have to bring [a sacrifice].²⁸ But R. Johanan said: Also [if he was defiled] during the night, he must bring [a sacrifice]!²⁹ — Said R. Jeremiah: The case of uncleanness is different,³⁰ because it can be made good [as is the case with the sacrifice] on the Second Passover.³¹ R. Papa demurred to this: It is right according to the view that the Second Passover

(3) And he refrained from offering the remaining beasts.

(4) And he had no opportunity of offering all his sacrifices.

(5) Which is regarded as a separate festival, nevertheless one can make good thereon the festal-offering due on the first day of Tabernacles.

(12) I.e., in the case of the eighth day of Tabernacles, even though it has the status of a separate festival; v. infra 17a.

(13) I.e., the word , rmg is redundant; this makes the inference by analogy irrefutable.

- (22) Ibid. I.e., you can bring the festal-offering on every festival day in the month.
- (23) The second 'it' of the verse.
- (24) I.e., the days of the festival following the first.
- (25) I.e., the first day of the festival is the specific day for the festival-offering. If a man was liable to bring it on the first day but did not, he may make it good on a subsequent day of the festival; but if he was exempt on the first day, he is no longer bound to bring the offering.
- (26) I.e., each day makes up for the preceding in the sense that it puts a new liability on the pilgrim; thus on whichever day of the festival he becomes qualified, he is bound to bring his offerings.
- (27) And therefore exempt; v. p. 1.
- (28) If a Nazirite (v. Num. VI, 2f) becomes defiled, he must wait seven days, and bring a sacrifice on the eighth, before he again begins to observe the days of his Naziritehood. One sacrifice will suffice for several defilements if the lapse between any two is less than eight days. But if he became defiled on the eighth day, he must bring a sacrifice for the previous defilement, since it was already due, and also for the subsequent defilement, since it occurred in a new period of eight days. If, however, the second defilement occurred on the night preceding the eighth, a second sacrifice has not to be brought, since the first cannot be offered till the morning, (for sacrifices are offered only during the day), the obligation to bring a sacrifice cannot be said to have yet fallen due and consequently the question of making good does not in his view arise. Cf. Ker. II, 3.
- (29) Because he has already been purified by ritual immersion (vklycy) on the seventh day, and the sun of that day has set (ana crgv). Now this statement seems to show that R. Johanan holds that though one is not qualified to bring a sacrifice (e.g., the Nazirite on the night preceding the eighth day), one may make up for it later.
- (30) I.e., a sacrifice which cannot be offered on account of uncleanness is exceptional.
- (31) Which is offered to make good the nonobservance of the First Passover sacrifice owing to a disqualification of uncleanness. V. Num. 10f. Thus those who are unfit to bring the paschal lamb on the First Passover may bring it on the Second, and similarly in other cases of uncleanness; but in all other cases of disqualification, R. Johanan would hold that an offering which could not be brought on one day cannot be made good.

makes up for the First;¹ but what is to be said according to the view that the Second [Passover] is a separate festival?² — Therefore, said R. Papa, R. Johanan must be of the opinion that the night [before the day on which the sacrifice is due] is not regarded as belonging to the preceding period.³ But how could R. Johanan have said this?⁴ For behold R. Johanan said: If [a zab]⁵ had one emission in the night and two in the [following] day, he must bring [a second offering];⁶ but [if he had] two in the night and one in the day, he has not to bring [a second offering].⁷ Now if you imagine that R. Johanan is of the opinion that the night [before the day on which the sacrifice is due] is not regarded as belonging to the preceding period, then even [if he had] two [emissions] at night and one in the day he must bring [a second offering]! — R. Johanan said this only according to the view that the night [before] is regarded as belonging to the preceding period.⁸ But according to this view it is surely obvious!⁹ — It is required for the case where there are two [emissions] in the day and one the [preceding] night. You might have thought [the decision] to be according to the objection of R. Shisha son of R. Idi, it therefore teaches us that it is according to R. Joseph.¹⁰

IF THE FESTIVAL PASSED AND HE DID NOT BRING THE FESTIVAL OFFERING, HE IS NOT BOUND TO MAKE IT GOOD. OF SUCH A PERSON IT IS SAID: HE THAT IS CROOKED CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT AND THAT WHICH IS WANTING CANNOT BE RESTORED. Bar He-He¹¹ said to Hillel: [Instead of] the [expression] ‘to be reckoned’ it ought to be ‘to be filled’!¹² It must refer, therefore, to one whose fellows reckoned him¹³ for [the performance of] a religious act, but he would not be reckoned with them. It has also been taught thus: ‘He that is crooked cannot be made straight’: this refers to one who neglected to read the morning Shema’ or the evening Shema’,¹⁴ or he neglected the morning prayer¹⁵ or the evening prayer. And that which is wanting cannot be reckoned’; this refers to one whose fellows resolved¹⁶ on [the performance of] a religious act and he would not be reckoned with them.

Bar He-He said to Hillel: Then shall ye again discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not.¹⁷ ‘The righteous’ is the same as ‘he that serveth God’; ‘the wicked’ is the same as ‘he that serveth Him not’! — He answered him: He that serveth Him and he that serveth Him not both refer to such as are perfectly righteous; but he that repeated his chapter a hundred times is not to be compared with him who repeated it a hundred and one times.¹⁸ Said [Bar He-He] to him: And because of once he is called ‘he that serveth Him not’? — He answered: Yes, go and learn from the mule-drivers market; ten parasangs for one zuz,¹⁹ eleven parasangs for two zuz.

Elijah²⁰ said to Bar He-He, and others say, to R. Eleazar: What is the meaning of the verse: Behold I have refined thee but not as silver; I have tried thee in the furnace of affliction?²¹ It teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, went through all the good qualities in order to give [them] to Israel, and He found only poverty.²² Samuel said, and others say. R. Joseph: This accords with the popular saying: Poverty befits Israel like a red trapping a white horse.²³ R. SIMEON B. MENASYA SAID: WHO IS IT ‘THAT IS CROOKED’ WHO ‘CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT’? HE THAT HAS CONNECTION WITH A FORBIDDEN RELATION AND BEGETS BY HER BASTARD ISSUE etc. Only if he begets, but not if he does not beget. But behold it is taught: R. Simeon b. Menasya said: If a man steal, he can return the theft and [so] become straight; but he that has connection with a married woman and makes her prohibited unto her husband is banished from the world and passes away.²⁴ (R. Simeon b. Yohai said: One does not say: Examine the camel, examine the pig,²⁵ Only examine the lamb.²⁶ And who is this? A disciple of the wise who has forsaken the Torah. R. Judah b. Lakish said: Any disciple of the wise who has forsaken the Torah, of him Scripture says: As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.²⁷ And it further says: What unrighteousness have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me?)²⁸ — There is no contradiction: the one case refers to his unmarried sister,²⁹ the other refers to a married woman.³⁰ Or I might say: Both are cases of married women; but there is no contradiction: in the one case

(1) V. Pes. 93a.

(2) This excludes the explanation that a sacrifice, not offered in time owing to uncleanness, can be made good later.

(3) [Lit., 'is not (deemed as) wanting time'. I.e., the fact that one cannot bring an offering on the night preceding the day on which it is due, is not regarded as a disqualifying factor, and consequently in the case of a Nazirite the night preceding the eighth day completes the eight days' period, so that the sacrifice may be said to fall due thereon, though he is actually prevented from offering it because it is still night. For this reason the sacrifice which was not offered at night can be made good on the following morning, and should he in the meantime suffer a second defilement, he has to bring a second sacrifice, whereas in the case of the festival-offering where he was lame on the first day, there was no obligation whatsoever resting on him to bring a sacrifice and consequently this cannot be made good].

(4) I.e., that the night preceding the day on which a sacrifice is due is not regarded as belonging to the preceding period.

(5) CZ, one who suffers from gonorrhoea (v. Lev. XV). After the first emission he is considered a hrc kgc and is unclean for the day; after the second, he is tyn, (unclean in the degree of zab), and has to count seven clean days, wash his garments, have ritual immersion and wait for sunset; after the third, he has, in addition, to bring sacrifices on the eighth day (cf. Ned. 43b). This zab had counted seven days and was to bring his offerings on the morrow, and in the meantime he saw further discharges.

(6) Because the first emission is counted with the two of the morning.

(7) Because the two nocturnal emissions make him unclean within the period of the first defilement, i.e., before the eighth day.

(8) But his own view is the reverse.

(9) As his own opinion the statement would have point in as much as it tells us his personal view; otherwise the teaching is an obvious corollary of the principle that the night before belongs to the preceding period.

it was against her will,¹ in the other it was with her consent. Or you may say: in both cases it was against her will but there is no contradiction: the one case concerns a priest's wife² and the other an Israelite's wife.

Neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in,³ Rab said: As soon as man goes forth from Halachic⁴ to Scripture study he no longer has peace.⁵ And Samuel said: It means one who leaves Talmud for Mishnah.⁶ And R. Johanan said: Even [if he goes] from Talmud to Talmud.⁷

MISHNAH. [THE LAWS CONCERNING] THE DISSOLUTION OF VOWS⁸ HOVER IN THE AIR AND HAVE NOUGHT TO REST ON.⁹ THE LAWS CONCERNING THE SABBATH, FESTAL-OFFERINGS, ACTS OF TRESPASS¹⁰ ARE AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR, FOR THEY HAVE SCANT SCRIPTURAL BASIS BUT MANY LAWS. [THE LAWS CONCERNING] CIVIL CASES AND [TEMPLE] SERVICES,¹¹ LEVITICAL CLEANNESS AND UNCLEANNES, AND THE FORBIDDEN RELATIONS¹² HAVE WHAT TO REST ON,¹³ AND IT IS THEY THAT ARE THE ESSENTIALS OF THE TORAH.

GEMARA. It is taught: R. Eliezer said: They¹⁴ have something to rest on, for it is said: When one shall clearly utter¹⁵ [a vow], when one shall clearly utter [a vow]:¹⁵ one [intimates] an utterance to bind, and the other an utterance to dissolve. R. Joshua said: They have something to rest on, for it is said: Wherefore I swore in My wrath.¹⁶ [It means,] I swore in My wrath,¹⁷ but I retracted.¹⁸ R. Isaac said: They have something to rest on, for it is said: Whosoever is of a willing heart.¹⁹ Hanania, son of the brother of R. Joshua, said: They have something to rest on, for it is said: I have sworn, and I have confirmed it, to observe Thy righteous ordinances.²⁰ Rab Judah said that Samuel said: Had I been there I should have said to them: My [Scriptural proof] is better than yours, for it is said: He shall not break his word.²¹ 'He' may not break it, but others may dissolve it for him. Raba said: To all these [proofs] objection can be made except to that of Samuel, against which no objection can be raised. For against R. Eliezer [it may be objected]: Perhaps [the verse is to be explained] according to R. Judah, who said it in the name of R.

Tarfon. For it is taught: R. Judah said in the name of R. Tarfon: Indeed, neither of them becomes a Nazirite, because Naziriteship can be assumed only by clear utterance.²² Against R. Joshua [it may be objected]: Perhaps this is the meaning of the verse: I swore in My wrath and did not retract'. Against R. Isaac [it may be objected]: Perhaps [the verse comes to] exclude the view of Samuel. For Samuel said: Though he determined in his heart,²³ he must still utter it with his lips.²⁴ And [the verse]²⁵ teaches us that even though he did not utter it with his lips [it is binding]. Against Hanania, the son of the brother of R. Joshua [it may be objected]: Perhaps [the verse is to be explained] according to R. Giddal who said it in the name of Rab. For R. Giddal said that Rab said: Whence [is it to be deduced] that one may take an oath to fulfil a precept?²⁶ For it is said: 'I have sworn, and I have confirmed it, to observe Thy righteous ordinances'.²⁷ But against Samuel's proof no objection can be raised. Raba, and some say, R. Nahman b. Isaac, said: This is the meaning of the popular saying: Better one grain of pungent pepper than a basketful of pumpkins.²⁸

THE LAWS CONCERNING THE SABBATH. But they are written [in Scripture]!²⁹ — No, it is necessary [to state this] for the teaching of R. Abba. For R. Abba said: He who digs a hole on the Sabbath and requires it only for the sake of its earth is not liable for it.³⁰ According to which authority [will this be]? According to R. Simeon, who said: one is not liable for work [performed on the Sabbath] which is not required for itself.³¹ — You may even say that it is according to R. Judah:³² there³³ one is improving.³⁴ here³⁵ one is spoiling.³⁶ But why does it say: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR?³⁷

 - (5) Because the Halachah provides the ultimate ruling for conduct; cf. Hershon, Talmudic Miscellany, Ch. XI, No. 33, and the lines in Longfellow's 'Golden Legend' beginning: The Kabbala and Talmud lore, etc. (quoted in Streane's Chagigah).
 - (6) Without the Talmudic explanation and discussion the Mishnah may be misleading.
 - (7) According to Rashi, from the Palestinian Talmud (or Jerusalmi) to the Babylonian Talmud which was more difficult; cf. Sanh. 24a and B.M. 85b. But according to Tosaf., from either to the other before the first is properly understood.
 - (8) By a Sage, to whom the person who makes the vow explains his original intention which did not include the special circumstances that now cause him to regret the vow; thus a vyrj j , p ('a way of retraction') is found whereby the vow can be annulled. V. Ned. 9a, 10b.
 - (9) I.e., in Biblical teaching, and depend only on oral tradition; but cf. Num. XXX, 8-9.
 - (10) The misappropriation of holy things to secular use. V. Lev. V, 14-16.
 - (11) I.e., the offering of sacrifices.
 - (12) V. Lev. XVIII, 6f.
 - (13) [MS.M.: 'have on whom to rest', i.e., have good authority. V. Zeitlin, JQR. (N.S.) VII, p. 500].
 - (14) I.e., the laws concerning the dissolution of vows.
 - (15) Twice: in Lev. XXVII, 2 and Num. VI, 2.
 - (16) Ps. XCV, R.
 - (17) I.e., hastily, but in calmer mood I regretted the oath and retracted. The verse refers to God, of course; but the inference is drawn from the anthropomorphism for ill-considered human vows.

(18) The 'change of mind' attributed here to God with regard to the generation of the wilderness must be explained by reference to Sanh. 110b where the view is expressed that they have a share in the world to come, i.e., they were not permitted to enter Canaan, their earthly possession, but it was granted them to enter their Heavenly heritage.

(19) Ex. XXXV, 5. But if the heart be no longer willing it is possible for the vow to be dissolved (cf. discussion in Shab. 26b).

(20) Ps. CXIX, 106. But where instead of confirmation there is retraction, the person may be released from his vow.

(21) Num. XXX, 3.

(22) If the assumption of the state of Nazir (v. Num. VI) was made the forfeit of a wager between two, R. Tarfon holds that neither loser nor winner is a Nazir, because Naziriteship must be explicitly vowed and cannot be assumed conditionally. This he deduces from one of the two verses cited by R. Eliezer (cf. Nazir 32b Mishnah and 34a top).

(23) To swear a certain oath.

(24) Otherwise it is no oath and he is not liable.

(25) Cited by R. Isaac.

(26) I.e., it is meritorious to do this that he may fulfil the precept with greater zeal.

(27) V. Ned. 7b.

(28) I.e., a sharp mind is better than mere learning.

(29) Why then does the Mishnah say that there is little Scriptural basis for them?

(30) But if he required the hole itself, he would be guilty of building on the Sabbath, v. Shab. 73b.

(31) E.g., a hole dug for the sake of its earth. R. Simeon stated this principle in connection with carrying out the dead on the Sabbath (v. Shab. 93a).

(32) Who holds that one may not carry a corpse out on the Sabbath for burial (v. ibid.).

(33) I.e., in the case of the corpse.

(34) I.e., burying the corpse and achieving something desired.

(35) I.e., in the case of the digging of a hole.

(36) The hole does not improve the ground nor is it desired for itself.

(37) Implying that some kind of support is afforded by the Torah.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 10b

— Because the Torah prohibited [on the Sabbath] purposed work,¹ yet purposed work is not mentioned in Scripture.² [LAWS CONCERNING] FESTAL-OFFERINGS. But they are written [in Scripture]!³ — No, it is necessary in the light of what R. Papa said to Abaye: Whence [do we know] that [the verse]: And ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord⁴ signifies sacrifice? Perhaps the Divine Law means: Celebrate a Festival!⁵ — If so, when it is written, That they may hold a feast unto Me in the wilderness,⁶ would that also mean: Celebrate a festival! And should you say that it indeed means that, surely it is written: And Moses said: 'Thou must also give into our hand beasts of killing and burnt-offerings'⁷ — Perhaps the Divine Law means this: Eat ye and drink and celebrate a festival before Me!⁸ — Do not think of this; for it is written: Neither shall the fat of My feast remain all night until the morning.⁹ If now you suppose that it means a festival¹⁰ [only], has a festival fat? — But perhaps the Divine Law means this: the fat that is offered during the course of the festival should not remain overnight!¹¹ — If so, then [it would imply] that only during the festival the fat may not remain overnight, but throughout the year¹² it may remain overnight; [but behold] it is written: All night unto the morning!¹³ — [But] perhaps from this [verse alone] one would know it merely as a positive precept, therefore Scripture wrote the other [verse to enjoin it] as a prohibition!¹⁴ — [To enjoin it] as a prohibition there is another verse: Neither shall any of the flesh, which thou sacrificest the first day at even, remain all night until the morning¹⁵ — [But] perhaps [this was required] in order to impose upon him two prohibitions and one positive precept! — Rather, it can be deduced from [the word] ‘wilderness’ which occurs in two passages. Here it is written: That they may hold a feast unto Me in the wilderness.¹⁶ And elsewhere it is written: Did ye bring unto Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness?¹⁷ Just as in the latter verse [it means] sacrifices, so in the former [it means] sacrifices. Why then does it say: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR?¹⁸ — [Because] no inference may be drawn concerning statements of the Torah from statements of the Prophets.¹⁹

ACTS OF SACRILEGE. But they are written [in Scripture]! Rami b. Hama said: It is required only for that which we have learnt. If the agent did his errand [committing thereby an act of sacrilege],²⁰ the householder²¹ is guilty of sacrilege;²² if he did not do his errand, the agent is guilty of sacrilege. But why should he²³ be guilty if he did his errand? Shall one man sin and another become liable!²⁴ That is why [the Mishnah says]: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. Raba said: But what is the objection? Perhaps sacrilege is different, since we compare it with terumah²⁵ through the analogous expressions for ‘sin’ [which occur in connection with both laws]:²⁶ just as there²⁷ the agent of a person is like himself²⁸, so here the agent of a person is like himself. Rather, said Raba, it must be required for the [following] teaching; If the householder remembered,²⁹ but the agent did not remember, the agent is guilty of sacrilege. What has the poor agent done!³⁰ That is why [the Mishnah says]: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. R. Ashi said: What is the objection? Perhaps it is like [every other] case where one spent [in error] sacred money for secular purposes!³¹ Rather, said R. Ashi, it must be required for that which we have learnt. If a man took away a stone or a beam from Temple property, he is not guilty of sacrilege; but if he gave it to his fellow,³² he himself is guilty, but his fellow is not guilty.³³ See now, he has taken it, what difference does it make whether he or his fellow [keeps it]! Therefore it says: LIKE MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. But what is the objection? Perhaps it is [to be explained] according to Samuel. For Samuel said: Here

(1) Lit., ‘work of thought’ (cf. Ex. XXXV, 35 where it is rendered in E.V. ‘skillful workmanship’) i.e., work that achieves the purpose primarily intended; v. supra n. 9. The various kinds of work prohibited on the Sabbath are deduced from the different kinds of work involved in the Tabernacle; cf. Shab. 73a (Mishnah) Rashi a.l.

(2) It is only deduced from the juxtaposition of the section concerning the Sabbath and the section concerning the construction of the Tabernacle in Ex. XXXV.

(3) Ex. XII, 14; Lev. XXIII, 41.

(4) Ibid.

(5) I.e., without sacrifices. Tosaf. a.l. suggests: Celebrate it with dances, taking the rt. duj to mean to dance’; cf. Ps. CVII, 27.

(6) Ex. V, 1.

(7) Ibid. X, 25.

(8) The ‘beasts for killing’ (Heb. ohj CZ, E.V. ‘sacrifices’) would thus not refer to sacrifices (i.e., ‘peace-offerings’) but to animals killed for meat only.

(9) But should be burnt on the altar before dawn. Ibid. XXIII, 18.

- (10) Heb. dj , which can mean both festival and festal-offering; cf. vdhdj , the Rabbinic word for festal-offering, which is derived from the same root.
- (11) But it does not follow that there is an obligation to bring a festal-offering.
- (12) I.e., in the case of other sacrifices offered at non-festival times.
- (13) Lev. VI, 2, which refers to all occasions, not just to festivals: it teaches us that the limbs and fat of sacrifices slaughtered during the day may be burnt on the altar all night but not thereafter.
- (14) The neglect of an ordinary positive precept is not indictable; but the transgression of a prohibition entails the bringing of a sin-offering, if the offence was committed unwittingly, or the punishment of stripes (maximum thirty-nine), if the transgression was wittingly committed, unless a severer penalty is ordained by Scripture. Exceptions not involving stripes are (a) 'a prohibitive precept transformed into a mandatory law' i.e., when the transgression must be repaired by a succeeding act; (b) a prohibition the transgression of which involves no action. Hence, the prohibition here referred to does not involve stripes.
- (15) Deut. XVI, 4.
- (16) Ex. V, 1.
- (17) Amos V, 25.
- (18) For deduction by analogy is considered support for a law.
- (19) Heb. vkce Lit., 'tradition', a designation for post-Pentateuchal books of the Bible, which are deemed of lesser authority than the Pentateuch or Torah. V. Bacher, Exeg. Term. I, 166, II, 185.
- (20) E.g., sacred money was mixed with secular money, and not knowing of this, he asked the agent to buy a garment for him with the money.
- (21) I.e., the one who instructed the agent.
- (22) I.e., he has to refund the value of the sacred property plus a fifth and bring a trespass-offering.
- (23) I.e., the householder.
- (24) It is a Talmudic principle that no one is considered an agent or messenger for the committal of sin, i.e., the transgressor is liable whether he commits the sin on his own behalf or for another.
- (25) A portion of the produce, between a fortieth and a sixtieth, given to the priest. V. Glos.
- (26) Lev. V, 15 (trespass), and Num. XVIII, 32 (terumah).
- (27) I.e., in the case of terumah.
- (28) Deduced from the words, 'Ye also', in Num. XVIII, 28.
- (29) Before the agent committed sacrilege by spending the money for secular use.
- (30) He did not know that he was misappropriating sacred money; why then should he be held responsible?
- (31) Though a person committed sacrilege in error he is held responsible; so too here in the case of the agent.
- (32) By this act he takes it out of the possession of the Temple.
- (33) Derived from Lev. V, 16.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 11a

it refers to the treasurer [of the Sanctuary] to whom the building stones had been entrusted, so that wherever it is, it is in his possession!¹ Rather [it can be explained] from the latter part [of the Mishnah]. If he built it into his house, he is not guilty of sacrilege until he dwells under it to the value of a perutah.² See now, he has effected a change therein,³ what difference does it make whether he dwells [under it] or does not dwell [under it]!⁴ Therefore it says: LIKE MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. But what is the objection? Perhaps it is [to be explained] according to Rab. For Rab said: It refers to a case where he placed it over a roof-aperture,⁵ [in which case] if he dwells in [the house] he is [guilty of sacrilege]. If he does not dwell in [the house] he is not [guilty]! — Therefore, it must be after all as Raba said: and as for your objection that the same applies to any person who spent [in error] sacred money for secular purposes, [one may answer]: There⁶ he knew full well that he had sacred money, he should therefore have taken care; but here,⁷ how could he know? Therefore [the Mishnah says]: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR⁸

SCANT SCRIPTURAL BASIS BUT MANY LAWS. A Tanna taught: [The laws concerning defilement through] leprosy-signs⁹ and tent-covering¹⁰ have scant Scriptural basis and many laws. [You say] leprosy-signs have scant Scriptural basis? [On the contrary] leprosy-signs have considerable Scriptural basis! — R. Papa said: It means as follows: Leprosy-signs have considerable Scriptural basis and few laws, [defilement through] tent-covering has scant Scriptural basis and many laws. But what practical difference does it make? — If you are in doubt about anything concerning leprosy-signs search the Bible, but if you are in doubt about anything concerning [defilement through] tent-covering search the Mishnah.¹¹

CIVIL CASES. But they are written [in Scripture]¹² — It is necessary only for the teaching of Rabbi. For it is taught: Rabbi said: Life for life¹³ [means] monetary compensation. You say [it means] monetary compensation; but perhaps [it means] actual life? — ‘Giving’ is mentioned below,¹⁴ and ‘giving’ is mentioned above:¹⁵ just as in the latter case [it means] monetary compensation, so in the former case [it means] monetary compensation.

TEMPLE SERVICES. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It refers only to the carrying of the blood [to the altar]. For it is taught: And they shall present;¹⁶ this [means] the receiving of the blood.¹⁷ Now the Divine Law used for it an expression of ‘carrying’, as it is written: And the priest shall present¹⁸ the whole and make it smoke upon the altar,¹⁹ and the Master said: This [means] the carrying²⁰ of the pieces [of the offering] to the altar ramp.²¹ This is to tell us that the ‘carrying’ [of the blood] is not to be excluded from the category of ‘receiving’ [the blood].²²

[LAWS OF] LEVITICAL CLEANNESS. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It refers only to the measure of a ritual bath, which is not stated in Scripture. For it is taught: And he shall bathe in water,²³ [this means] in water of a ritual bath;²⁴ all his flesh: [this means in] water which covers all his body. And how much is this? A cubit²⁵ by a cubit to the height of three cubits; and the Sages fixed the measure of the ritual bath water at forty se'ahs.²⁶

[LAWS CONCERNING LEVITICAL] UNCLEANNESS. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It refers only to [defilement caused by touching a part of a dead] creeping creature, which is the size of a lentil; this is not stated in Scripture. For it is taught: In them:²⁷ I might think [it means] all of them,²⁸ therefore Scripture teaches: ‘Of them’.²⁹ I might then think [it means] even a part of them,³⁰ therefore Scripture says: ‘in them’. How is this to be explained? [It means that he is not defiled] till he touches a part of one which is as the whole of one. The Sages fixed the measure at the size of a lentil, for a snail³¹ is at first the size of a lentil. R. Jose b. R. Judah said: [It must be] the size of the tail of a lizard.³²

FORBIDDEN RELATIONS. But they are written [in Scripture]!

- (1) Thus he does not commit sacrilege till he gives it (i.e., the stone or beam) into the possession of his fellow.
- (2) A small coin. V. Glos.
- (3) E.g., by chiselling the beam or stone and fixing it into the house: through this alteration it becomes his own property.
- (4) He has already misappropriated sacred property.
- (5) vcurt (cf. Hos. XIII, 3; II Kings VII, 2), an aperture in the roof leading to the ground floor (answering to the Greek hypaithron, Roman compluvium), contrad. from iukj a garret-window in the wall projecting above the flat roof (Jast.); cf. also Levy s.v. By placing the beam over the aperture he in no way alters it and can always restore it, and is thus not guilty of sacrilege till he dwells in the house and enjoys the use of it.
- (6) I.e., in the case quoted in the objection.
- (7) I.e., in the case of the agent.
- (8) For though the agent could hardly avoid the sacrilege, he is deemed to have committed sacrilege in error and is held responsible.
- (9) V. Lev. XIII-XIV.
- (10) V. Num. XIX, 14, from which it is inferred that men and utensils under the same 'tent' (i.e., overshadowed by the same covering) as a corpse suffer corpse-defilement.
- (11) I.e., oral tradition.
- (12) I.e., why then does the Mishnah say that they merely have something to rest on?
- (13) Ex. XXI, 23.
- (14) I.e., in our own case.
- (15) Ex. XXI, 22 (the preceding verse).
- (16) Lev. I, 5.
- (17) It is inferred from the fact that this clause comes immediately after the injunction to slaughter the animal; therefore it is taken to refer to the 'receiving' of the blood, for the blood cannot be 'carried' till it is 'received'.
- (18) E.V. 'offer', though it is the same verb as in verse 5.
- (19) Lev. I, 13.
- (20) It cannot mean the burning of the pieces, for that is distinctly mentioned afterwards.
- (21) I.e., the inclined plane leading to the altar. Cf. Mid. III, 3.
- (22) I.e., though it is a part of the offering-service that can be omitted (e.g., if the animal is slaughtered close to the altar, so that the blood can be sprinkled forthwith), nevertheless if it is not omitted, it is an essential part of the service and is subject to all its conditions.
- (23) Lev. XV, 16. This is evidently the verse intended. The words urac , t ('his flesh'), which really belong to Lev. Xlv, 9 must be deleted.
- (24) Lit., 'gathering' of water, which must contain water directly from a river or a spring, or rain water led directly to it; but ihcuta ohn (lit., 'drawn water i.e., water from a receptacle) if added to the ritual bath above a certain measure, invalidates it.
- (25) A measure equal to the distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger (cf. Kel. XVII, 9.10).
- (26) Measure of capacity, equal to six kabs; v. Pes. 109a.
- (27) Lev. XI, 31 OVC; E. V. '(whosoever doth touch) them'.
- (28) I.e., he becomes unclean when he touches the whole of the unclean animal.
- (29) Ibid. v. 32.
- (30) I. e., however small.
- (31) ynj (cf. ibid. 30). Rashi renders, 'snail'; Jast., 'lizard (chameleon)'; Levy, 'Bindschleiche' (slowworm, blindworm), or 'Eidechse' (lizard); Goldschmidt, 'Schnecke' (snail), 'skink' or 'Blindschleiche'; B.D.B., a kind of lizard. From Hul. 122a it seems to be a vertebrate. Danby translates it there 'land crocodile'.

(32) vtykv (cf. ibid.) Jast. regards the first V, as part of the word, except in Mishnah, Tosefta and Sifra, where it is the definite article attached to vtyk. The tail of the vtykv writhes after being cut off, thus showing independent life; hence it meets the requirements of the verse by being a part of an unclean animal and yet an entire life by itself, and is suitable as a measure for defilement. It is bigger than a lentil.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 11b

— This refers only to his daughter by a woman whom he had forced; this case is not written [in Scripture]. For Raba said: R. Isaac b. Abdimi told me, It is to be deduced by analogy from [the words] ‘they’, ‘they’,¹ and from [the words] ‘lewdness’, ‘lewdness’.²

IT IS THEY THAT ARE THE ESSENTIALS OF THE TORAH, These are and those are not!³ — Say, therefore, these and those are essentials of the Torah.

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH THE [SUBJECT OF] FORBIDDEN RELATION⁴ MAY NOT BE EXPOUNDED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE,⁵ NOR THE WORK OF CREATION⁶ IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO, NOR [THE WORK OF] THE CHARIOT⁷ IN THE PRESENCE OF ONE, UNLESS HE IS A SAGE AND UNDERSTANDS OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE. WHOSOEVER SPECULATES UPON FOUR THINGS, A PITY⁸ FOR HIM! HE IS AS THOUGH HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD, [TO WIT], WHAT IS ABOVE,⁹ WHAT IS BENEATH,¹⁰ WHAT BEFORE, WHAT AFTER.¹¹ AND WHOSOEVER TAKES NO THOUGHT FOR THE HONOUR OF HIS MAKER,¹² IT WERE A MERCY¹³ IF HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD.

GEMARA. You say at first: NOR [THE WORK OF] THE CHARIOT IN THE PRESENCE OF ONE;¹⁴ and then you say: UNLESS HE IS A SAGE AND UNDERSTANDS OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE! — This is the meaning: the forbidden relations may not be expounded to three,¹⁵ nor the work of creation to two, nor [the work of] the chariot to one, unless he is a Sage and understands of his own knowledge.¹⁶

THE FORBIDDEN RELATIONS MAY NOT BE EXPOUNDED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE. What is the reason? Shall one say, because it is written: Whosoever to any that is near of kin to him?¹⁷ ‘Whosoever’¹⁸ [implies] two, ‘near of kin to him’ [implies] one; and the Divine Law said: Ye shall not approach to uncover their nakedness.¹⁹ But then since it is written: Whosoever curseth his God,²⁰ Whosoever giveth of his seed unto Molech,²¹ are these [passages] also [to be interpreted] thus! — These, therefore, must be required to make Gentiles subject to the prohibition concerning blasphemy²² and idolatry like the Israelites; then this [verse]²³ is also required to make Gentiles subject to the prohibition concerning the forbidden relations like the Israelites!²⁴ It must be inferred, therefore, from the verse: Therefore shall ye keep My charge.²⁵ ‘Ye shall keep’ [implies] two,²⁶ ‘My charge’ [implies] one; and the Divine Law said: That ye do not any of these abominable customs.²⁷ But then since it is written: Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore,²⁸ And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread,²⁹ And ye shall keep the charge of the holy things,³⁰ are these [passages] also [to be interpreted] thus! — Therefore, said R. Ashi,

THE FORBIDDEN RELATIONS MAY NOT BE EXPOUNDED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE must mean: the secrets³¹ of the forbidden relations may not be expounded to three.³² What is the reason? It is a logical conclusion:³³ when two sit before their master, one engages in discussion with his master and the other inclines his ear to the instruction; but [when there are] three, one engages in discussion with his master, and the other two engage in discussion with one another and do not know what their master is saying, and may come to permit that which is prohibited in the matter of the forbidden relations. If so, [the rule should apply to] the whole Torah also!³⁴ The [subject of] forbidden relations is different, for the master said:³⁵ Robbery and the forbidden relations, a man's soul covets and lusts for them. If so, [the rule should apply to] robbery also! [In the case of] the forbidden relations, whether [the opportunity] be before him or not before him, a man's inclination is strong; [in the case of] robbery, if [the opportunity] is before him, his inclination is strong, but if it is not before him, his inclination is not strong.

NOR THE WORK OF CREATION IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO. Whence [do we infer] this? — For the Rabbis taught: For ask thou now of the days past;³⁶ one may inquire,³⁷ but two may not inquire. One might have thought that one may inquire concerning the pre-creation period, therefore Scripture teaches: Since the day that God created man upon the earth.³⁸ One might have thought that one may [also] not inquire concerning the six days of creation,³⁹ therefore Scripture teaches: The days past⁴⁰ which were before thee.⁴¹ One might have thought one may [also] inquire concerning what is above and what is below, what before and what after, therefore the text teaches: And from one end of heaven unto the other.⁴² [Concerning the things that are] from one end of heaven unto the other thou mayest inquire, but thou mayest not inquire what is above, what is below, what before, what after.

(1) The word vbv ('they') occurs in Lev. XVIII, 17 in connection with a legitimate daughter, and ibid. v. 10 in connection with the grand-daughter of an illegitimate wife (v. Yeb. 97a). By analogy, we infer that an illegitimate daughter is also a forbidden relation.

(2) Having established an analogy between the legitimate and illegitimate daughter (v. n. 7), we go farther and say the word vnz ('lewdness'), which implies the penalty of burning (v. ibid. XX, 14) for connection with one's legitimate daughter, applies also to connection with one's illegitimate daughter; v. Yeb., Sonc. ed., p. 4, nn. 8-12.

(3) I.e., the laws explicitly stated in Scripture are essentials of the Torah, and those not so explicitly stated are not!

(4) V. p. 50, n. 8.

(5) I.e., it is forbidden to expound this subject in the presence of more than two.

(6) V. Gen. I, 1-3; J.E. vol. IV, pp. 280f,s. 'Cosmogony', and vol. VIII, p. 235. The term ḥatrc vagn (Work of Creation) does not include the whole Talmudic cosmogony, only its esoteric aspects. The cosmogonic details mentioned infra in the Gemara (pp. 63f), such as the ten elements, the ten agencies etc., do not form part of the secret doctrine of Ma'aseh Bere'shith, for the Mishnah expressly forbids the teaching of the creation mysteries in public. The views recorded in the Talmud regarding the work of creation seem to belong chiefly to the realm of Aggadah. As regards their origin, they cannot with certainty be connected with the theosophic and cosmogonic doctrines of the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, nor with Gnosticism; nor on the other hand can the mysticism of the Geonic period (e.g., as preserved in Sefer Yezirah with reference to the heavenly halls, angelology etc.) be regarded as a direct continuation of the Talmudic doctrines.

(7) V. Ezek. I, 4f, X, and Isa. VI; cf. Meg. IV, 10; and v. J.E. vol. VIII, p. 498. The mysteries of Creation and the Chariot were favourite themes with the mystics; for further information v. J.E. vol. III, p. 456f, s. 'Cabala'.

(8) Heb. hu, r or hu, r; but Mishnah ed., MS. M. and var. lec. in Aruch have hutr ('he is looked upon as though'). Jastrow, who takes ח, ר to mean 'relief, mercy, pity', renders as in text; Rashi translates: 'it were better for him', taking the root meaning to be 'mercy'; Levy translates: 'it were more advantageous for him'; Goldschmidt and Danby: 'it were better'.

(9) Sc., the sky stretching over the heads of the 'living creatures of the Chariot (Rashi).

(10) Sc., the 'living creatures'.

(11) I.e., beyond the sky eastward and westward (Rashi). This makes the reference spatial, and this explanation is supported by the use of the terms infra (p. 62); but from the Gemara 16a and the Tosef. it is clear that the terms have also a temporal significance. i.e., what happened before Creation and what will happen hereafter (Tosaf. a.l.).

(12) Explained infra 16a.

(13) V. p. 59, n. 5.

(14) This means, apparently, that a person is not permitted to study the mysteries of the Chariot even by himself, although the fact that he can study without the aid of a teacher shows that he is a Sage and understands of his own knowledge.

(15) I.e., the number refers to the pupils and does not include the teacher.

(16) I.e., is able to speculate by himself. Such a disciple will not require to ask his teacher questions, for these mysteries may not be explained explicitly. D.S. omits the 'and'; cf. p. 77.

(17) Lev. XVIII, 6.

(18) Heb. אח אח lit., 'man man', i.e., two men, as a minimum.

(19) Ibid. I.e., to reveal the reasons underlying the laws of the forbidden relations.

(20) Ibid. XXIV, 15.

(21) Ibid. XX, 2.

(22) Lit., 'blessing of God', a euphemism.

(23) Ibid. XVIII, 6.

(26) The plural ('Ye') implies at least two.

(27) Ibid. V. p. 60, n. 8.

(28) Ex. XXXI, 14.

(29) Ibid. XII, 17.

(30) Num. XVIII, 5.

(31) I.e., according to Rashi, such forbidden relations as are not explicitly mentioned in Scripture, but are inferred, e.g., a man's daughter by a woman he violated, the mother of his father-in-law, or the mother of his mother-in-law (v. Sanh. 75a); according to Maharsha, the secrets of the reasons for the prohibitions; according to Goldschmidt, the details and subtleties of the subject.

(32) vakak: this marginal correction is indubitably correct as against vakac ('in the presence of three'), of cur. edd.

(33) I.e., it is founded on reason and not deduced from Scripture.

(34) I.e., that not more than two pupils may study with the master.

(35) Mak. 23b.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 12a

But now that this¹ is inferred from [the expression] 'From one end of heaven unto the other',² wherefore do I need [the expression], 'Since the day that God created man upon the earth'? — To intimate that which R. Eleazar taught. For R. Eleazar said: The first man [extended]³ from the earth to the firmament, as it is said: Since the day that God created man upon the earth;⁴ but as soon as he sinned,⁵ the Holy One, blessed be He, placed His hand upon him and diminished him,⁶ for it is said: Thou hast fashioned me⁷ after and before,⁸ and laid Thine hand upon me.⁹

Rab Judah said that Rab said: The first man [extended]¹⁰ from one end of the world to the other,¹¹ for it is said: 'Since the day that God created man upon the earth, and from one end of heaven to the other'; as soon as he sinned, the Holy One, blessed be He, placed His hand upon him and diminished him, for it is said: 'And laid Thine hand upon me'. If so, the verses¹² contradict one another! — They both [have] the same dimensions.¹³

Rab Judah further said that Rab said: Ten¹⁴ things were created the first day, and they are as follows: heaven and earth, Tohu [chaos], Bohu [desolation],¹⁵ light and darkness, wind and water, the measure of day and the measure of night.¹⁶ Heaven and earth, for it is written: In the beginning God created heaven and earth.¹⁷ Tohu and Bohu, for it is written: And the earth was Tohu and Bohu.¹⁸ Light and darkness: darkness, for it is written: And darkness was upon the face of the deep;¹⁸ light, for it is written: And God said, Let there be light.¹⁹ Wind and water, for it is written: And the wind²⁰ of God hovered over the face of the waters.²¹ The measure of day and the measure of night, for it is written: And there was evening and there was morning, one day.²² It is taught: Tohu is a green line that encompasses the whole world, out of which darkness proceeds, for it is said: He made darkness His hiding-place round about Him.²³ Bohu, this means the slimy²⁴ stones that are sunk in the deep, out of which the waters proceed, for it is said: And he shall stretch over it the line of confusion [Tohu] and the plummet of emptiness [Bohu].²⁵

But was the light created on the first day? For, behold, it is written: And God set them in the firmament of the heaven,²⁶ and it is [further] written: And there was evening and there was morning a fourth day²⁷ — This is [to be explained] according to R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: The light which the Holy One, blessed be He, created on the first day, one could see thereby from one end of the world to the other; but as soon as the Holy One, blessed be He, beheld the generation of the Flood and the generation of the Dispersion,²⁸ and saw that their actions were corrupt, He arose and hid it from them, for it is said: But from the wicked their light is withholden.²⁹ And for whom did he reserve it? For the righteous in the time to come,³⁰ for it is said: And God saw the light, that it was good;³¹ and 'good' means only the righteous, for it is said: Say ye of the righteous that he is good.³² As soon as He saw the light that He had reserved for the righteous, He rejoiced, for it is said: He rejoiceth at the light of the righteous.³³ Now Tannaim [differ on the point]: The light which the Holy One, blessed be He, created on the first day one could see and look thereby from one end of the world to the other; this is the view of R.

Jacob. But the Sages say: It³⁴ is identical with the luminaries;³⁵ for they were created on the first day, but they were not hung up [in the firmament] till the fourth day.³⁶

R. Zulra b. Tobiah said that Rab said: by ten things³⁷ was the world created: By wisdom³⁸ and by understanding,³⁹ and by reason,⁴⁰ and by strength,⁴¹ and by rebuke,⁴² and by might,⁴³ by righteousness and by judgment,⁴⁴ by lovingkindness and by compassion.⁴⁵ By wisdom and understanding, for it is written: The Lord by wisdom founded the earth; and by understanding established the heavens.⁴⁶ By reason, for it is written: By His reason⁴⁷ the depths were broken up.⁴⁸ By strength and might, for it is written: Who by His strength setteth fast the mountains, Who is girded about with might.⁴⁹ By rebuke, for it is written: The pillars of heaven were trembling, but they became astonished at His, rebuke.⁵⁰ By righteousness and judgment, for it is written: Righteousness and judgment are the foundation of Thy throne.⁵¹ By lovingkindness and compassion, for it is written: Remember, O Lord, Thy compassions and Thy mercies; for they have been from of old.⁵² Rab Judah further said: At the time that the Holy One, blessed be He, created the world, it went on expanding like two clues⁵³ of warp, until the Holy One, blessed be He, rebuked it and brought it to a standstill, for it is said: 'The pillars of heaven were trembling, but they became astonished at His rebuke'. And that, too, is what Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of the verse, I am God Almighty?⁵⁴ [It means], I am He that said to the world: Enough!⁵⁵ Resh Lakish said: When the Holy One, blessed be He, created the sea, it went on expanding, until the Holy One, blessed be He, rebuked it and caused it to dry up, for it is said: He rebuketh the sea and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers.⁵⁶

Our Rabbis taught: Beth Shammai say: Heaven was created first and afterwards the earth was created, for it is said: In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.⁵⁷ Beth Hillel say: Earth was created first and afterwards heaven, for it is said: In the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven.⁵⁸ Beth Hillel said to Beth Shammai: According to your view, a man builds the upper storey [first] and afterwards builds the house! For it is said: It is he that buildeth His upper chambers in the heaven,⁵⁹ and hath founded His vault upon the earth.⁶⁰ Said Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel: According to your view, a man makes the footstool [first], and afterwards he makes the throne!⁶¹ For it is said: Thus saith the Lord, The Heaven is My throne and the earth is My footstool.⁶² But the Sages say: Both were created at the same time.⁶³ For it is said: Yea, Mine hand hath laid the foundation of the earth, and My right hand hath spread out the heavens: When I call unto them they stand up together.⁶⁴ And the others?⁶⁵ What is the meaning of 'together'? — [It means] that they cannot be loosened from one another.⁶⁶ However, the verses contradict one another! — Resh Lakish answered: When they were created, He created heaven [first], and afterwards He created the earth; but when He stretched them forth He stretched forth the earth [first], and afterwards He stretched forth heaven.

What does 'heaven' [Shamayim] mean? R. Jose b. Hanina said: It means, 'There is water'.⁶⁷ In a Baraitha it is taught: [It means], 'fire and water'⁶⁸; this teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, brought them and mixed⁶⁹ them one with the other and made from them the firmament.

R. Ishmael questioned R. Akiba when they were going on a journey together, saying to him: Thou who hast waited⁷⁰ twenty-two years upon Nahum of Gimzo,⁷¹ who used to explain the [particle] Eth⁷² throughout the Torah, [tell me] what exposition did he give of [Eth] the heaven and [Eth] the earth?⁷³ Said [R. Akiba] to him: If it had said, 'heaven and earth', I could have said that Heaven and Earth⁷⁴ were names of the Holy One, blessed be He.⁷⁵ But now that it says: '[Eth] the heaven and [Eth] the earth', heaven [means] the actual heaven, and earth [means] the actual earth.

- (1) I.e., that inquiry may not go beyond the first day of creation.
 - (2) I.e., since one may not inquire beyond the extent of heaven, it follows that one may not inquire beyond the time of its existence, i.e., concerning what happened prior to the creation.
 - (3) I.e., in height: this is the usual explanation. But Goldschmidt suggests that the meaning might also be: his vision extended from earth to heaven. Cf. R. Eleazar's statement infra p. 63 and n. 2 a. 1.
 - (4) The verse continues, (lit.), 'and unto the end of heaven'.
 - (5) Lit., 'became of bad odour'.
 - (6) The Yalkut Shim'oni (S. 827, Deut. IV, 32) adds 'and brought him down to one hundred cubits'. This is probably derived from the word vfpf 'Thine hand' in the verse that follows, the numerical value of ; f ('hand') being a hundred. Cf. also B.B. 75a (and Rashbam a.l.) and Sanh. 100a (and Rashi a.l.).
 - (7) Heb., hb, rm lit., (as E.V.) 'Thou hast hemmed me in'. Here, however, it is taken to mean the same as hb, rmh 'fashioned, created'.

 - (13) The distance from east to west is the same as from the earth to heaven, v. infra 13a. But in Tam. 31b-32a (the Scholars of the South, i.e., of Alexandria) are reported to have said, in reply to a question put to them by Alexander the Great, that the distance from east to west is greater than that from earth to heaven.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 12b

But why do we have ‘[Eth] the earth’?¹ — To put heaven before earth.²

It is taught: R. Jose says: Alas for people that they see but know not what they see, they stand but know not on what they stand. What does the earth rest on? On the pillars, for it is said: Who shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble.⁷ The pillars upon the waters, for it is said: To Him that spread forth the earth above the waters.⁸ The waters upon the mountains, for it is said: The waters stood above the mountains.⁹ The mountains on the wind, for it is said: For, lo, He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind.¹⁰ The wind upon the storm, for it is said: The wind, the storm maketh its substance.¹¹ Storm is suspended on the arm of the Holy One, blessed be He, for it is said: And underneath¹² are the everlasting arms.¹³ But the Sages say: [The world] rests on twelve pillars,¹⁴ for it is said: He set the borders to the peoples according to the number [of the tribes] of the children of Israel.¹⁵ And some say seven pillars, for it is said: She hath hewn out her seven pillars.¹⁶ R. Eleazar b. Shammua’ says: [It rests] on one pillar, and its name is ‘Righteous’, for it is said: But ‘Righteous’ is the foundation of the world.¹⁷

R. Judah said: There are two firmaments, for it is said: Behold, unto the Lord thy God belongeth heaven, and the heaven of heavens.¹⁸ Resh Lakish said: [There are] seven, namely, Wilon,¹⁹ Rakia',²⁰ Shehakim,²¹ Zebul,²² Ma'on,²³ Makon,²⁴ 'Araboth.²⁵ Wilon serves no purpose except that it enters in the morning and goes forth in the evening²⁶ and renews every day the work of creation, for it is said: That stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain,²⁷ and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in.²⁸ Rakia' is that in which sun and moon, stars and constellations are set, for it is said: And God set them²⁹ in the firmament [Rakia'] of the heaven.³⁰ Shehakim is that in which millstones stand and grind³¹ manna for the righteous for it is said: And He commanded the skies [Shehakim] above, and opened the doors of heaven; and He caused manna to rain upon them for food etc.³² Zebul is that in which [the heavenly] Jerusalem³³ and the Temple and the Altar are built, and Michael, the great Prince,³⁴ stands and offers up thereon an offering, for it is said: I have surely built Thee a house of habitation [Zebul], a place for Thee to dwell in for ever.³⁵ And whence do we derive that it is called heaven? For it is written: Look down from heaven, and see, even from Thy holy and glorious habitation.³⁶ Ma'on is that in which there are companies of Ministering Angels, who utter [divine] song by night, and are silent by day for the sake of Israel's glory,³⁷ for it is said: By day the Lord doth command His lovingkindness,³⁸ and in the night His song is with me.³⁹

Resh Lakish said: Whoever occupies himself with [the study of] the Torah by night, the Holy One, blessed be He, draws over him a chord of lovingkindness⁴⁰ by day, for it is said: 'By day the Lord doth command His lovingkindness'? Because 'by night His song⁴¹ is with me'. And there are some who say: Resh Lakish said: Whoever occupies himself with the study of the Torah in this world, which is like the night, the Holy One, blessed be He, draws over him a chord of lovingkindness in the world to come, which is like the day,⁴² for it is said: 'By day the Lord doth command His lovingkindness, for by night His song is with me'.

R. Levi said: Whoever leaves off the study of the Torah and occupies himself with idle talk, he is made to eat coals of broom,⁴³ for it is said: They pluck salt-wort through idle talk,⁴⁴ and the roots of the broom are their food.⁴⁵

And whence do we derive that it⁴⁶ is called heaven? — For it is said: Look forth from Thy holy habitation [ma'on], from heaven.⁴⁷ Makon⁴⁸ is that in which there are the stores of snow⁴⁹ and stores of hail, and the loft of harmful dews and the loft of raindrops,⁵⁰ the chamber of the whirlwind and storm,⁵¹ and the cave of vapour, and their doors are of fire, for it is said: The Lord will open unto thee His good treasure,⁵² But are these to be found in the firmament? Surely, they are to be found on the earth, for it is written: Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea-monsters, and all deeps; fire and hail, snow and vapour, stormy wind, fulfilling his word!⁵³ — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: David entreated concerning them, and caused them to come down to the earth. He said before Him: Lord of the universe, Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness; let not evil sojourn with Thee;⁵⁴ righteous art Thou, O Lord, let not evil sojourn in Thy abode.⁵⁵ And whence do we derive that it⁵⁶ is called heaven? For it is written: Then hear Thou in heaven, Thy dwelling place [Makon].⁵⁷

'Araboth is that in which there are Right and Judgment and Righteousness,⁵⁸ the treasures of life and the treasures of peace and the treasures of blessing, the souls of the righteous and the spirits and the souls⁵⁹ which are yet to be born, and dew wherewith the Holy One, blessed be He, will hereafter revive the dead. Right and Judgment, for it is written: Right⁶⁰ and judgment are the foundations of Thy throne.⁶¹ Righteousness, for it is written: And He put on righteousness as a coat of mail.⁶² The treasures of life, for it is written: For with Thee is the fountain of life.⁶³ And the treasures of peace, for it is written: And called it, ‘The Lord is peace’.⁶⁴ And the treasures of blessing, for it is written: he shall receive a blessing from the Lord.⁶⁵ The souls of the righteous, for it is written: Yet the soul of my lord shall be bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God.⁶⁶ The spirits and the souls which are yet to be born, for it is written: For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made.⁶⁷ And the dew wherewith the Holy One, blessed be He, will hereafter revive the dead, for it is written: A bounteous rain didst Thou pour down, O God; when Thine inheritance was weary, Thou didst confirm it.⁶⁸ There [too] are the Ofanim⁶⁹ and the Seraphim,⁷⁰ and the Holy Living Creatures,⁷¹ and the Ministering Angels,⁷² and the Throne of God; and the King, the Living God, high and exalted, dwells over them in ‘Araboth, for it is said: Extol Him that rideth upon Araboth⁷³ whose name is the Lord.⁷⁴ And whence do we derive that it⁷⁵ is called heaven? From the word ‘riding’, which occurs in two Biblical passages. Here it is written: ‘Extol Him that rideth upon Araboth’. And elsewhere it is written: Who rideth upon the heaven as thy help.⁷⁶ And darkness and cloud and thick darkness surround Him, for it is said: He made darkness His hiding-place, His pavilion round about Him, darkness of waters, thick clouds of skies.⁷⁷ But is there any darkness before Heaven?⁷⁸ For behold it is written: He revealeth the deep and secret things; He knoweth, what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with Him.⁷⁹ — There is no contradiction: the one [verse]⁸⁰

- (1) I.e., the first Eth in the verse has been explained; but what is the purpose of the second?

 - (6) Rashi explains the application of the parable thus: Since heaven was summoned to appear first, the earth was in the position of one not accustomed to rise early; furthermore, all the work of the earth is slow, whilst the work of heaven is swift. Nevertheless, the earth appeared equally early with heaven, for they were created at the same time (according to the view of the Sages, v. p. 66), therefore Scripture begins to relate the work of the earth first. But Maharsha explains that the earth obeyed God's will first and came into being before heaven (according to the view of Beth Hillel, ibid.) just as the women in the parable actually came before the men.

- (26) According to Rashi, Wilon ('Curtain') draws in every morning, and thus causes the light of day to become visible; in the evening it draws out and hides the daylight. This process constitutes the renewal of the work of creation. But Tosaf. explains that Wilon produces the light of day, and when it withdraws at night darkness prevails.

- (47) Deut. XXVI, 15.
- (48) According to Rashi, this heaven contains stores of punishments, the snow etc. being employed not for the world's benefit, but for retribution, Tosaf., however, holds that the contents of Ma'on are used for good as well as evil, and compares Ta'an. 3b and Isa. LV, 10.

(49) For these stores cf. Job XXXVIII, 22f also Isa. XXIX, 6.

(50) Rashi: to smite down the produce.

(51) Omitted by R. Elijah of Wilna,

(52) Deut, XXVIII, 12; implying also the existence of a bad store, i.e., of punishments; but the "Ein Jacob" reads here Jer. L, 25.

(53) Ps. CXLVIII, 7, 8.

(54) Ibid. V, 5.

(55) Note how the Talmudic explanation of the verse transforms the negative description of God into a positive one, and changes ('with Thee' into 'in thy abode' to prevent any misconception about God's perfection.

(56) I.e., Makon.

(57) I Kings VIII, 39.

(58) Heb. vesm, which implies righteous actions and is often used in the sense of charity.

(59) Rashi explains that either 'spirits' and 'souls' are synonymous, or else 'spirit' means the soul that has bodily form (ectoplasm?).

(60) E.V. 'Righteousness'.

(61) Ps. LXXXIX, 15.

(65) Ps. XXIV, 5.

(66) 1 Sam. XXV, 29.

(67) Isa. LVII, 1.

(68) Ps. LXVIII, 10. The verse refers to the Revelation at Sinai, when, according to the Midrash, the souls of the children of Israel momentarily left their bodies, but God with His bounteous rain or dew of resurrection revived them. Cf. Cant. Rab. to Cant. V, 6.

(69) Lit., 'Wheels', i.e., wheel-like angels; v. Ezek. I, 15f.

(80) I.e., the latter.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 13a

refers to the inner chambers,¹ the other to the outer chambers. And R. Aha b. Jacob said: There is still another Heaven above the heads of the living creatures, for it is written: And over the heads of the living creatures there was a likeness of a firmament, like the colour of the terrible ice, stretched forth over their heads above.² Thus far you have permission to speak, thenceforward you have not permission to speak, for so it is written in the Book of Ben Sira:³ Seek not things that are too hard for thee,⁴ and search not things that are hidden from thee. The things that have been permitted⁵ thee, think thereupon; thou hast no business with⁶ the things that are secret.⁷

It is taught: R. Johanan b. Zakkai said: What answer did the Bath Kol⁸ give to that wicked one,⁹ when he said: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High?¹⁰ A Bath Kol went forth and said to him: O wicked man, son of a wicked man, grandson¹¹ of Nimrod, the wicked, who stirred the whole world to rebellion against Me¹² by his rule. How many are the years of man? Seventy, for it is said: The days of our years are threescore years and ten, or even by reason of strength fourscore years.¹³ But the distance from the earth to the firmament is a journey of five hundred years, and the thickness of the firmament is a journey of five hundred years, and likewise [the distance] between one firmament and the other.¹⁴ Above them¹⁵ are the holy living creatures: the feet¹⁶ of the living creatures are equal to all of them [together];¹⁷ the ankles of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the legs of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the knees¹⁸ of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the thighs of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the bodies of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the necks of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the heads of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the horns of the living creatures are equal to all of them. Above them is the throne of glory; the feet of the throne of glory are equal to all of them; the throne of glory is equal to all of them. The King, the Living and Eternal God, High and Exalted, dwelleth above them. Yet thou didst say, I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the Most High! Nay¹⁹, thou shalt be brought down to the nether-world, to the uttermost parts of the pit.²⁰

NOR [THE WORK OF] THE CHARIOT IN THE PRESENCE OF ONE. R. Hiyya taught: But the headings of chapters²¹ may be transmitted to him. R. Zera said: The headings of chapters may be transmitted only to the head of a court²² and to one whose heart is anxious within him.²³ Others say: Only if his heart is anxious within him.²⁴ R. Amimi said: The mysteries of the Torah may be transmitted only to one who possesses five attributes, [namely], The captain of fifty, and the man of rank, and the counsellor, and the cunning charmer, and the skillful enchanter.²⁵ R. Ammi further said: The teachings of the Torah are not to be transmitted to an idolater,²⁶ for it is said: He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for His ordinances, they have not known them.²⁷

R. Johanan said to R. Eleazar: Come, I will instruct you in the 'Work of the Chariot'.²⁸ He replied: I am not old enough.²⁹ When he was old enough, R. Johanan died.³⁰ R. Assi [then] said to him: Come, I will instruct you in the "Work of the Chariot'. He replied: Had I been worthy, I should have been instructed by R. Johanan, your master.

R. Joseph was studying the 'Work of the Chariot'; the elders of Pumbeditha³¹ were studying the 'Work of Creation'. The latter said to the former: Let the master teach us the 'Work of the Chariot'. He replied: Teach me the 'Work of Creation'. After they had taught him, they said to him: Let the master instruct us in the 'Work of the Chariot'. He replied: We have learnt concerning it: Honey and milk are under thy tongue.³² The things that are sweeter than honey and milk should be under thy tongue.³³ R. Abbahu said: [It³⁴ is inferred] from this verse: The lambs [Ke-basim] will be for thy clothing.³⁵ The things which are the mystery [Kibshono] of the world should be under thy clothing.³⁶ They³⁷ [then] said to him: We have already studied therein as far as, And He said unto me: 'Son of man'.³⁸ He replied: This is the very [portion of the] 'Work of the Chariot'.³⁹

An objection was raised: How far does [the portion of] the 'Work of the Chariot' extend? Rabbi said: As far as the second And I saw.⁴⁰ R. Isaac said: As far as Hashmal⁴¹ — As far as 'I saw'⁴² may be taught;⁴³ thenceforward, [only] the heads of chapters⁴⁴ may be transmitted. Some, however, say: As far as 'I saw', the heads of chapters may be transmitted; thenceforward, if he is a Sage able to speculate by himself, Yes; if not, No. But may one expound [the mysteries of] Hashmal? For behold there was once a child⁴⁵ who expounded [the mysteries of] Hashmal, and a fire went forth and consumed him! — [The case of] the child is different, for he had not reached the [fitting] age. Rab Judah said: That man be remembered for blessing,⁴⁶ namely, Hananiah b. Hezekiah: but for him, the Book of Ezekiel would have been withdrawn,⁴⁷ for its words contradict the words of the Torah.⁴⁸ What did he do? Three hundred garab⁴⁹ of oil were brought up to him, and he sat in an upper chamber and expounded it.

The Rabbis taught: There was once a child who was reading at his teacher's house the Book of Ezekiel, and he apprehended what Hashmal was,⁵⁰ whereupon a fire went forth from Hashmal and consumed him. So they⁵¹ sought to suppress the Book of Ezekiel, but Hananiah b. Hezekiah said to them: If he was a Sage, all are Sages!⁵² What does [the word] Hashmal mean?—Rab Judah said:

(1) Cf. supra p. 23, n. 5.

(2) Ezek. I, 22.

(3) Cf. Ecclesiasticus III, 21, 22. The author, whose full name seems to have been Jesus b. Simeon b. Eleazar b. Sira, is the only writer of the Old Testament or Apocrypha who signed his work (v. ibid. L, 27). His date falls in the first third of the second century B.C.E. He wrote in Hebrew, the Greek translation being made by his grandson, of whom it is known that he went to Egypt in 132; the greater part of the Hebrew original has been recovered from the Cairo Genizah. According to Tosef. Yad. II, 13, the writings of Ben Sira do not defile the hands, i.e., are uncanonical, and so rank the works of 'Minim' or heretics. Eccl. Rab. XII, 11 forbids one to have Ben Sira's book in the house. R. Akiba (J. Sanh. 28a) includes the readers of uncanonical writings such as those of Ben Sira among those who have no share in the world to come; v. further the discussion in Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 680f and nn. a.l. on R. Akiba's prohibition. The exclusion of Ecclesiasticus from the canon and the prohibitions with which it was surrounded were probably due to its epicurean and Sadducean tendencies. Notwithstanding, the book remained popular with Jews, and is frequently quoted in early Jewish literature as well as in the Talmud and Midrash. V. J.E. vol. XI, pp. 388f.

(4) E.V. 'that are above thy strength'.

(5) E.V. 'commanded'.

(6) E.V. 'no need of'.

(7) For a variant version of this quotation v. Gen. Rab. VIII, which contains two additional clauses.

(8) Lit., 'daughter of a voice'. According to Lampronti, Levy, Kohut (Aruch Completum) and Jast., it means an echo'; but L. Blau holds (J.E. vol. II, pp. 588f) that it means 'sound', 'resonance'. For its secular use, v. Ex. Rab. XXIX, end; bit in our passage and Rabbinic literature passim, it refers to a heavenly or divine voice.

(9) I.e., Nebuchadnezzar, who, in R. Johanan b. Zakkai's time, possibly suggested Titus.

(10) Isa. XIV, 14.

(11) As Tosaf. a.l. points out, this statement is not to be taken literally; Nebuchadnezzar is to be regarded as a spiritual descendant of Nimrod because of the similarity of their deeds (the latter persecuted Abraham — cf. Targ. pseudo-Jonathan to Gen. XIV, I; Gen. R. XLII, 5; Cant. R. VIII, 8 — and the former led into captivity Abraham's descendants) and of their place of origin (Babylon).

(12) Lit., 'against himself', an obvious emendation, dictated by a pious desire to avoid blasphemy, of 'against Me' i.e., God. In 'Er. 53a the text has been 'corrected' as here; but in Pes. 94b, Gen. R. s. 26 etc., the original reading is preserved.

(13) Ps. XC, 10.

(14) V. p. 69.

(15) I.e., the seven heavens; v. n. 5.

(16) I.e., the thickness of the hooves.

(17) I.e., 15 (7 heavens and 8 interspaces) X 500 years. But in J. Ber. 13a the figure is given as 515, the numerical sum of vrah, 'upright'; cf. Ezek. I, 7 (Tosaf.).

(18) Properly, the knee and its surrounding parts; cf. Hul. 76a.

(19) E.V. 'Yet' etc.

(20) Isa. XIV, 14f.

(21) Probably, the leading words of each section or subject (cf. Rashi a.l. and Jast. s. erp). Levy explains it as 'the interpretations of single verses'. V. infra p. 77.

(22) Ab Beth din, lit., 'Father of a Beth din' (house of judgment). The Beth din consisted of three (according to another view, five) members for monetary cases, and of twenty-three for capital cases; whilst the Beth din ha-Gadol ('High Court'), or Great Sanhedrin, was comprised of seventy elders and the Nasi, who acted as president. The Ab Beth din of the Sanhedrin was the vice-president and most important of the seventy members (cf. Sanh. I, 1-4, Sonc. ed. pp. 1-4; and J.E. vol. lii, pp. 114f).

(23) I.e., he is reverential and not given to levity.

(24) I.e., one must have both qualifications viz., be the head of a court and reverential.

(25) Isa. III, 3. For the explanation of these qualifications v. p. 85.

(26) This, and not Cuthean (substituted on account of the censorship), is undoubtedly the correct reading. Dicta of this kind were directed against heathens, and were inspired by the fear lest the knowledge of the Torah be unscrupulously used against Jews. Cf. the story of the Roman commissioners referred to in B.K., Sonc. ed., p. 215; also R. Johanan's statement in Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 400 and Num. Rab. s. 13.

(27) Ps. CXLVII, 20,

(28) The 'Work of the Chariot' and the 'Work of Creation' mentioned in the next passage, were Baraitas (Rashi), which apparently, took the relevant passages of Genesis and Ezekiel as the basis of their expositions.

(29) Cf. p. 85, where the 'captain of fifty', mentioned supra as one of the qualifications of the man to whom the mysteries of the Torah may be transmitted, is explained as one who is fifty years of age.

(30) Lit., 'R. Johanan's soul was at rest' (cf. Isa. LVII, 2).

(31) Lit., 'mouth of Beditha' (a canal of the Euphrates). It was the seat of a great Jewish academy.

(32) Cant. IV, 11.

(33) I.e., the mysteries of the Chariot may not be taught, cf. our Mishnah (p. 59). The Rabbis considered the whole of Canticles as a figurative expression of the mystical relationship between God and Israel; thus the verse quoted, which the Bridegroom says to the Bride, is really the injunction of God to Israel.

(34) I.e., the prohibition to teach the 'Chariot' mysteries.

(35) Prov. XXVII, 26.

(36) I.e., in thy bosom, a secret. The reading in MS.M. brings the Midrashic deduction out more clearly: Read not kebasim("lambs") but kebushim ("hidden things") things which are the mystery(kibshono) of the world must be kept under one's clothing'.

(37) I.e., the elders of Pumbeditha.

(38) Ezek. II, 1.

(39) I.e., if you have learnt thus far, you have learnt much, for this passage included the very verses (Ezek. I, 27, 28) the teaching of which the Rabbis prohibited.

(40) Ezek. I, 27, excluding Hashmal; v. n. 12.

(41) Ibid., including Hashmal (E.V. 'electrum'). By Hashmal, the whole subject thereof, which is described in this verse, is meant, not merely the word itself, which already occurs in v. 4. The objection here raised is that the statements of Rabbi and R. Isaac apparently contradict the statement of R. Joseph above, which seemed to imply that the passage dealing with the 'Work of the Chariot' extended to Ezek. II, 1.

(42) I.e., 'I saw' according to Rabbi, or 'Hashmal' according to R. Isaac, (43) I.e., Rabbi and R. Isaac indicated not how far the 'Work of the Chariot' extended, but how far therein it was permissible to teach.

(44) V. p. 75, n. 3.

(45) Aram. teubh, a term applicable to a boy from infancy to school age. Hot-tinger's view (De Incestu etc., p. 54, quoted by A. W. Streane) that not a child in years but in knowledge of Talmud is meant is unlikely. Cf. the frequent use of the term in the Zohar.

(46) Cf. Neh. V, 19.

(47) Heb. zbd lit., 'hidden, stored away', i.e., declared un-canonical. The idea and name of the Greek 'Apocrypha' have often been traced to this technical significance of the verb zbd in the Talmud; but this is denied by G. F. Moore, v. J.E., vol. II, pp. 1-2 and 6.

(48) Cf. Ezek. XVIII, 4, 20 with Ex. XX, 5, XXIV, 7; Ezek. XLIV, 31 with Lev. XXII, 8; Ezek. XLIV, 22 with Lev. XXI, 14; also Ezek. XLV, 20, which mentions a sacrifice for the seventh day of the first month, entirely unknown from the Torah. V. Rashi to the above verses of Ezek., and Men. 45a, and Kid. 78a.

(49) 'A bottle, keg', as a 'measure (Jast.); 'an earthen jar', (Levy). The oil was to provide light for study.

(50) Jast. translates: 'speculated over the Hashmal'. Had the child drawn a picture of it? (V. J.E. vol. III, p. 148, s. 11).

(51) I.e., the Rabbis.

(52) I.e., the case of the child is exceptional: having a Sage's understanding of the mysteries of Hashmal, he endangered his life by his speculation; but ordinary readers of Ezekiel would not run any risk.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 13b

Living creatures speaking fire.¹ In a Baraita it is taught: [Hashmal means], At times they are silent, at times they speak.² When the utterance goes forth from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be He, they are silent, and when the utterance goes not forth from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be He, they speak.

And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.³ What is the meaning of 'ran and returned'? — Rab Judah said: Like the flame that goes forth from the mouth of a furnace.⁴ What is the meaning of 'as the appearance of a flash of lightning'? — R. Jose b. Hanina said: Like the flame that goes forth from between the potsherds.⁵

flashing up, so that a brightness was round about it; and out of the midst thereof as the colour of electrum [Hashmal], out of the midst of the fire.⁶ Whither did it⁷ go? Rab Judah said that Rab said: It went to subdue the whole world under the wicked Nebuchadnezzar. And wherefore all this? — That the peoples of the world might not say: Into the hand of a low people the Holy One, blessed be he, delivered His children,⁸ The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Who caused Me to be a servant to idol-worshippers? The iniquities of Israel, they caused Me.

Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel at the bottom hard by the living creatures.⁹ R. Eleazar said: [It means] a certain angel, who stands on the earth and his head reaches unto the living creatures. In a Baraita it is taught: His name is Sandalfon;¹⁰ he is higher than his fellows by a [distance of] five hundred years' journey, and he stands behind the Chariot and wreathes crowns¹¹ for his Maker. But is it so? Behold it is written: Blessed be the glory of the Lord from His place,¹² accordingly, no one knows His place!¹³ — He¹⁴ pronounces the [Divine] Name over the crown, and it goes and rests on His head.¹⁵

Raba said: All that Ezekiel saw Isaiah saw.¹⁶ What does Ezekiel resemble? A villager who saw the king.¹⁷ And what does Isaiah resemble? A townsman who saw the king.¹⁸

Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of the verse: I will sing unto the Lord, for He is highly exalted?¹⁹ [It means] a song to him who is exalted over the exalted ones.²⁰ For a Master said: The king of the wild animals is the lion; the king of the cattle is the ox; the king of the birds is the eagle; and man is exalted over them; and the Holy One, blessed be He, is exalted over all of them, and over the whole world.

One verse says: As for the likeness of their faces, they had the face of a man; and they four had the face of a lion on the right side, and they four had the face of an ox on the left side etc.²¹ And [elsewhere] it is written: And everyone had four faces; the first face was the face of the cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle;²² but the ox is not mentioned! — Resh Lakish said: Ezekiel entreated concerning it and changed it into a cherub. He said before Him:²³ Lord of the universe, shall an accuser²⁴ become an advocate!²⁵ What is the meaning of cherub? — R. Abbahu said: Like a child [Rabia],²⁶ for so in Babylonia a child is called Rabia. R. Papa said to Abaye: But according to this, [what is the meaning of] the verse, 'The first face was the face of the cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle': are not the face of the cherub and the face of a man the same! — [The one is] a big face, and [the other is] a small face.²⁷

One verse says: Each one had six wings,²⁸ and another verse says: And every one had four faces, and every one of them had four wings!²⁹ — There is no contradiction: the one³⁰ refers to the time when the Temple was no longer standing,³¹ [when] as it were,³² the wings of the living creatures were diminished. Which of them were taken away? — R. Hananel said that Rab said: Those with which they utter song. [For] here³³ it is written: And with twain he did fly. And one called unto another and said;³⁴ and [elsewhere] it is written: Wilt thou set thine eyes upon it? It is gone.³⁵ But our Rabbis said: Those with which they cover their feet, for it is said: And their feet were straight feet,³⁶ and if [these wings] had not been taken away, whence could he have known!³⁷ — Perhaps, [the feet] were exposed and he saw them. For if you do not say so, [then from the words], As for the likeness of their faces, they had the face of man,³⁸ [one might infer] likewise that [the wings covering them] were taken away! They³⁹ must therefore have been exposed, and he saw them; similarly here, they⁴⁰ were exposed, and he saw them. But how can they be compared? Granted that it is customary to expose one's face before one's master, but it is not customary to expose one's feet before one's master!

One verse says: Thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him;⁴¹ and another verse says: Is there any number of His armies?⁴² — There is no contradiction: the one⁴³ refers to a time when the Temple was standing, and the other refers to a time when the Temple was no longer standing; [when] as it were, the heavenly household⁴⁴ was diminished.

It is taught: Rabbi said in the name of Abba Jose b. Dosai: ‘Thousand thousands ministered unto ‘Him’, — this is the number of one troop; but of His troops there is no number. But Jeremiah b. Aba said: ‘Thousand thousand ministered unto Him’ — at the fiery stream,⁴⁵ for it is said: A fiery stream issued and came forth from before Him; thousand thousands ministered unto Him and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him.⁴¹ Whence does it come forth? — From the sweat of the ‘living creatures’, And whither does it pour forth? R. Zutra b. Tobiah said that Rab said: Upon the head of the wicked in Gehinnom,⁴⁶ for it is said: Behold, a storm of the Lord is gone forth in fury,⁴⁷ yea, a whirling storm; it shall whirl upon the head of the wicked.⁴⁸ But R. Aha b. Jacob said: Upon those who pressed forward,⁴⁹ for it is said: Who pressed forward⁵⁰ before their time, whose foundation was poured out as a stream.⁵¹ It is taught: R. Simeon the Pious said: These are the nine hundred and seventy four generations who pressed themselves forward to be created⁵²

(3) Ezek. 1,14.

(4) I.e., a brick-kiln.

(5) I.e., perforated earthen pieces used in smelting gold. ezc (E.V. ‘flash of lightning’) is here explained in its Aramaic sense of ‘a fragment, piece of pottery’.

(6) Ibid. v. 4.

(7) I.e., the stormy wind coming out of the north.

(10) Perhaps from Grk.  == cobrother. Sandalfon is described as brother of Metatron; v. J.E. vol. XI, pp. 39-40; cf. also Longfellow's poem ‘Sandalphon’.

(11) I.e., offers up the prayers of the righteous.

(12) Ezek. III, 12.

(13) I.e., the vagueness of the expression ‘from His place’ indicates that God's place is unknown even to His angels.

(14) I.e., Sandalfon,

(15) [MS.M. ‘in its place : i.e., the prayer is effective.]

(16) V. Isa. VI, 1 ff: Despite the differences between the descriptions given by Isaiah and Ezekiel, they both saw identical visions of God's glory.

(17) According to Rashi, the point is that the rustic — to whom the sight of the king is a novelty — is naturally inclined to give his impressions at length. But Tosaf. explains that the villager has to give a detailed description of the royal splendour in order to convince his hearers that he actually saw the king. Likewise Ezekiel, to whom was granted the rare distinction, of prophecy outside Palestine, had to prove by a detailed account that he actually beheld the Divine Glory though he dwelt by the river Chebar.

(18) The townsman — to whom the king is a familiar sight is not inclined to indulge in any lengthy description (Rashi); nor does he have to go into details in order to convince his hearers of the truth of his statement (Tosaf.).

(19) Ex. XV, 1.

(20) This is an explanation of the words of the text, vtd vtd (E.V. 'highly exalted'), which mean lit., 'to be exalted he is exalted'.

(25) Israel required the Divine Chariot to intercede for them. Cf. R.H. 26a.

(26) The word curf ('Cherub') is explained as composed of f ('like') and cur = thcr ('a growing boy'). For modern suggestions regarding the root-meaning of the word v. B.D.B. s.v.

(27) I.e., the face of a man and the face of a boy.

(28) Isa. VI, 2.

(29) Ezek. I, 6. It is assumed that the 'Seraphim' of Isaiah and the 'living creatures' of Ezekiel had originally the same number of wings.

(30) I.e., Isa. VI, 2.

(31) I.e., the time for the destruction of the Temple had come. Ezekiel prophesied the event, and lived to learn of the fulfilment of his prophecy, as well as to foretell the rebuilding of the Sanctuary.

(32) Lit., 'as though it were possible', refers to an allegorical or anthropomorphous expression with reference to the Lord (Jast.), or, as here, to the celestial creatures.

(33) Ibid. vv. 2, 3.

(34) The juxtaposition of the two verses shows that with the wings with which they flew they also uttered God's praise.

(35) Lit., 'cause to fly'; cf. also rest of verse, Prov. XXIII, 5. The occurrence of the word fly in the two passages shows that it is the wings with which the heavenly beings fly (i.e., utter their song to God) that are gone. This verse in Proverbs is understood by the Rabbis to refer to the neglect of the study of the Torah (cf. Rashi a. l., and Ber. 5a, Meg. 18a): the meaning would seem to be that when the Torah is neglected the divine song of the angels is silenced.

(36) Ezek. I, 7.

(51) Job XXII, 16. The word 'stream' is the link between this verse and Dan. VII, 10.

(52) According to the Rabbinic interpretation of Ps. CV, 8, the Divine Plan originally envisaged the creation of a thousand generations prior to the giving of the Torah, but foreseeing their wickedness, God held back nine hundred and seventy-four generations, and gave the Torah at the end of twenty-six generations from Adam (cf. Gen. V, XI, Ex. VI, 16-20, and Seder 'Olam Ch. 1). The translation here follows the text of MS. M. 2 (v. D.S. a.I. n. 20) viz. , utrchvk inmg (pi'el) uynhea cur. edd.: , utrchvk(pu'al) uynuea

before the world was created, but were not created: the Holy One, blessed be He, arose and planted them¹ in every generation, and it is they who are the insolent² of each generation. But R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The words, Asher Kummetu,³ indicate blessing: these are the scholars who wrinkle themselves⁴ over the words of the Torah in this world, [wherefore] the Holy One, blessed be He, shall reveal a secret to them in the world to come, for it is said: 'To whom a secret⁵ is poured out as a stream'. Samuel said to R. Hiyya b. Rab: O son of a great man,⁶ come, I will tell thee something from those excellent things which thy father has said. Every day ministering angels are created from the fiery stream, and utter song, and cease to be,⁷ for it is said: They are new every morning: great is Thy faithfulness.⁸ Now he differs from R. Samuel b. Nahmani, for R. Samuel b. Nahmani said that R. Jonathan said: From every utterance that goes forth from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be He, an angel is created,⁹ for it is said: By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth.¹⁰

One verse says: His raiment was as white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool;¹¹ and [elsewhere] it is written: His locks are curled and black as a raven!¹² — There is no contradiction: one verse¹³ [refers to God] in session,¹⁴ and the other in war.¹⁵ For a Master said: In session none is more fitting than an old man, and in war none is more fitting than a young man.

One passage says: His throne was fiery flames;¹⁶ and another Passage says: Till thrones were places, and One that was ancient of days did sit!¹⁷ — There is no contradiction: one [throne] for Him, and one for David; this is the view of R. Akiba. Said R. Jose the Galilean to him: Akiba, how long wilt thou treat the Divine Presence as profane!¹⁸ Rather, [it must mean], one for justice and one for grace.¹⁹ Did he accept [this explanation from him, or did he not accept it? — Come and hear: One for justice and one for grace; this is the view of R. Akiba. Said R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah to him: Akiba, what hast thou to do with Aggadah?²⁰ Cease thy talk, and turn²¹ to [the laws concerning defilement through] leprosy-signs and tent-covering!²² Rather, [it must mean] one for a throne and one for a stool; the throne to sit upon, the stool for a footrest, for it is said: The heaven is My throne, and the earth is My foot-rest.²³

When R. Dimi came,²⁴ he said: Eighteen curses did Isaiah pronounce upon Israel, yet he was not pacified²⁵ until he pronounced upon them this verse: The child shall behave insolently against the aged, and the base against the honourable.²⁶ Which are the eighteen curses? — It is written: For, behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah stay and staff every stay of bread, and every stay of water, the mighty man, and the man of war; the judge and the prophet, and the diviner, and the elder; the captain of fifty; and the man of rank, and the counsellor, and the wise charmer, and the skillful enchanter. And I will give children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them.²⁷ ‘Stay’ — this means the masters of the Bible.²⁸ ‘Staff’ — this means the masters of the Mishnah, like R. Judah b. Tema and his colleagues. R. Papa and our Rabbis dispute therein: one says that there were²⁹ six hundred orders of the Mishnah, and the other that there were seven hundred orders of the Mishnah.³⁰ ‘Every stay of bread’ — this means the masters of Talmud,³¹ for it is said: Come, eat of My bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled.³² ‘And every stay of water’ — this means the masters of Aggadah, who draw the heart of man like water by means of the Aggadah. ‘The ‘mighty man’ — this means the masters of traditions.³³ ‘And the man of war’ — this means one who knows how to dispute³⁴ in the warfare of the Torah. ‘The judge — this means a judge who passes judgment in strictest accord with truth — ‘The prophet’ — according to the literal meaning of the word. ‘The diviner’ — this means the King, for it is said: A divine sentence is in the lips of the King.³⁵ ‘The elder’ — this means one who is worthy to sit in session.³⁶ ‘The captain of fifty’: do not read ‘the captain of fifty’ but ‘the captain of the Pentateuch’;³⁷ it means one who knows how to argue in the five books of the Torah. Another explanation: ‘the captain of fifty’ — as R. Abbahu [taught]. For R. Abbahu said. From here [we learn] that a Methurgeman³⁸ may not be appointed over a congregation, who is less than fifty years of age. ‘And a man of rank’ — this means one for whose sake favour is shown to his [entire] generation, like R. Hanina b. Dosa,³⁹ for instance, on high,⁴⁰ [or] below,⁴¹ like R. Abbahu at the court of Caesar.⁴² ‘The counsellor’ — [this means] one who knows how to determine the intercalation of years⁴³ and the fixation of months.⁴⁴ ‘And the wise [man]’⁴⁵ -this means a disciple who makes his teachers wise. ‘Charmer’ — at the moment that he begins a Torah⁴⁶ — discourse, all become dumb. ‘And the skillful [‘man]’⁴⁷ — this means one who understands one thing from another.⁴⁸ ‘Enchanter’ — this means one who is worthy to have imparted to him the words of the Torah, which was given in a whisper.⁴⁹ ‘And I will give children to be their princes’: what is the meaning of [the words], ‘I will give children to be their princes’? R. Eleazar said: It means persons who are empty⁵⁰ of good deeds.⁵¹ ‘And babes shall rule over them’. R. Aha⁵² b. Jacob said: [It means] foxes sons of foxes.⁵³ ‘But he was not pacified⁵⁴ until he said to them: The child shall behave insolently against the aged’: — those persons who are empty of good deeds shall behave insolently against such as are filled with good deeds⁵⁵ as a pomegranate [with seeds]. ‘And the base against the honourable’: those to whom weighty [precepts] appear as light ones⁵⁶ will come and behave insolently against those to whom light [precepts] appear as weighty ones.⁵⁷

R. Kattina said: Even at the time of Jerusalem's downfall honest men did not cease from among them, for it is said: For a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father: ‘Thou hast a mantle, be thou our ruler’!⁵⁸ Matters on account of which men hide themselves as in a garment⁵⁹ thou hast ‘under thy hand’.⁶⁰ And this ruin:⁶¹ what is the meaning of [the expression] ‘and this ruin’? — Matters which people do not grasp unless they stumble over them⁶² are under thy hand’.

In that day shall he take⁶³ [an oath], saying: I am not⁶⁴ a healer, for in my house is neither bread nor a mantle; ye shall not make me ruler of a people.⁶⁵ — Shall he take, ‘Take’ expresses an oath, for it is said: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God [in vain].⁶⁶ I am not a healer:’ I was⁶⁷ not of those who are bound to the Schoolhouse.⁶⁸ For in my house is neither bread nor a mantle, — for I possess no knowledge of Bible or Mishnah or Gemara, But perhaps that case⁶⁹ is different; for had he said to them, I have knowledge, they would have said to him, Tell us then! — He could have answered that he had learnt but had forgotten; why then does it say: ‘I am not a healer’? [It must mean], I am not a healer at all.⁷⁰ But is it so? Behold Raba said: Jerusalem was not destroyed until honest men ceased therefrom, for it is said: Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that doeth justly, that seeketh truth;⁷¹ and I will pardon him.⁷² — There is no contradiction:

(1) I.e., distributed them over the later generations; cf. Yoma 38b, ‘The Holy One, blessed be He, saw that the righteous were few, so He arose and planted them in every generation’. Another reading has ‘banished them’, but the meaning remains unchanged (v. Tosaf. a.I.).

(2) Cf. Aboth V, 20, (Sonc. ed., p. 73f).

(3) Rendered above, ‘who pressed forward’.

(4) So Jast.: from the root meaning ‘to compress, curl’; hence it can be understood in the sense of ‘to wrinkle (the brow)’ as well as ‘to press forward’ (as above). Levy and Goldschmidt render by ‘sich zusammendrängen’ (press themselves together, limit themselves).

(5) OSUXH, ‘their foundation’ is here taken to mean the same as OSUX, ‘their secret

(6) Lit., ‘son of a lion’.

(7) Cf. the lines in Longfellow's Sandalphon (quoted by Streane): ‘The Angels of Wind and of Fire Chant only one hymn, and expire With the song's irresistible stress’,

(8) Lam. III, 23. I.e., great is Thy praise on account of them (Rashi).

(9) But not from the fiery stream, as Rab holds.

(12) Cant. V, 11.

(13) I.e., Dan. VII, 9.

(14) I.e., sitting in judgment; cf. ibid. v. 10.

(15) Canticles is interpreted by the Rabbis as referring in greater part to the Exodus (note that the book is read in the synagogue during Passover) when God appeared as a warrior (cf. Ex. XV, 3).

(16) Dan. VII, 9.

(17) Ibid., beginning of the verse. The plural implies two thrones, whereas the first passage speaks of only one.

(18) By asserting that David occupies a place next to God.

(19) Lit., ‘righteousness’, but used here, apparently, in the sense of ‘lovingkindness, grace’.

(20) For Haggadah v. Glos. s. Aggadah. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah regards even this explanation as dangerous, because it implies a duality of character on the part of God, and militates against the fundamental Jewish concept of God's perfect unity.

(21) The two verbs in the English are represented by one in the Hebrew viz. l kf which is really a combination of l ku vkf, ‘cease and go (elsewhere)’.

(22) V. p. 56, nn. 5 and 6. R. Akiba's intellectual gifts were best suited to Halachah, not Haggadah. The laws relating to defilement by leprosy and tent-covering form two of the most difficult tractates of the Halachah.

- (30) The Mishnah is now divided into six orders, V. J.E. vol, VIII, p, 615.
- (31) This included the discussions 'if the Amoraim added to the Mishnah. The decisions of the experts in Talmud could be relied upon, but those who gave decisions on the basis of the Mishnah only were called 'destroyers of the world' (Sot. 22a); cf. supra p. 50. Thus, the masters of the Talmud were, so to speak, as essential to Israel as bread itself.
- (32) Prov. IX, 5.
- (33) Lit., 'things heard' i.e., oral reports of a halachic character — legal decisions — which were carefully handed down by teacher to disciple. These tradents of legal traditions were veritable living 'books of reference'.
- (34) Lit., 'to take up and give'. The expression is primarily a commercial term, denoting 'buying and selling' or any financial transaction. Here it is used in the transferred sense of being able to deal with the argumentation essential to the study of the Torah. A distinction is here drawn between the keen-minded debater ('the man of war') and the expert in traditions ('the mighty man'): the latter is remarkable chiefly for his learning, the former is distinguished for his reasoning power and mental acumen.
- (35) Ibid. XVI, 10.

- (43) The Jewish year consists ordinarily of twelve lunar months (v. n. 5). In order to prevent the festivals from falling in the wrong seasons, it was necessary periodically to adjust the lunar calendar to the solar year: this was achieved by introducing an intercalary month (Adar II) between Adar and Nisan. V., further, Sanh. 2a (Sonc. ed., p. 1) and 10a (p. 42f); also J.E. vol. III, p. 498f.
- (44) I.e., determination of the beginning of a month by the first appearance of the new moon. As the moon revolves round the earth in approx. twenty-nine and a half days, the Jewish months consists, alternately, of twenty-nine or thirty days.
- (45) The expression 'wise (E. V. cunning") charmer' is clearly intended in the verse to refer to one person; but the Gemara interprets 'wise' and 'charmer' as a composite phrase referring to two distinct types.
- (46) Used here not in its restricted meaning of the Pentateuch, but in its wider connotation of Jewish teaching based on Scripture; cf. Aboth I, 1 (Sonc. ed., p. 1, n., 1).
- (47) Here, as above (v. n. 6), Isaiah's description of one type of person is made to refer to two types.
- (48) I.e., is able himself to draw conclusions on the basis of the knowledge imparted to him.

and 5.

(50) The word ohrgb ('children') in the verse is explained as meaning ohrgubn ('empty'); literally, the latter means, shaken out, emptied'.

(51) Lit., 'commandments', precepts (of the Torah)', hence religious or meritorious deeds.

(52) Var. lec.: but Bah reads R. Papa b. J.

(53) The word ohkukg, ('babes') in the verse is explained as a derivative of tkg, ('fox'), with the meaning, 'double foxes i.e., second generation of foxes.

(54) V. p. 84, n. 6.

(55) This is an explanation of the word ize (aged) in the verse, which must necessarily have the opposite meaning of rgb ('child' i.e., one empty of good deeds). Note also that zaken is explained elsewhere as one who is both learned (v. Sifra Kedoshim Par. 3' Ch. VII, and Kid. 32b) and practised in the Torah and its precepts (v. Ber. 39a). Cf. also p. 109 (The Elder).

(56) The word vkeb ('base') in the verse is here explained as a derivative of ke ('light').

(57) There is a play here on the word scfb ('honourable'), the root of which also means, 'heavy, weighty'.

(58) Isa. III, 6.

(59) I.e., feel ashamed in their ignorance of them — namely the teachings of the Torah — should be detected.

(60) I.e., knowest well; the expression is quoted from the end of v. 6 (ibid.).

(61) Lit., 'and this stumbling'; ibid,

(62) I.e., which they learn only through their mistakes.

(63) E.V. 'swear'.

(64) E.V. will not be'.

(65) Ibid. 7.

(66) Ex, XX, 7. The bracketed words are omitted in cur. edd. but not in the "Ein Jacob'.

(67) The Heb. verb in the verse, which, being in the imperfect form should ordinarily denote the future or at least the present tense, is here understood as having a past meaning, viz., 'I used not to be',

(68) Lit., 'of those who bind (themselves) in the Schoolhouse'.

(69) I.e., the case referred to in Isaiah is no proof of real honesty, because (according to the argument which follows) falsehood could easily have been detected.

(70) I.e., I have never studied. This voluntary admission proves his honesty.

(71) Heb. vbunt which is only a slight variant of vbnt 'honesty'.

(72) Jer. V, 1.

the one [verse] refers to religious matters,¹ the other to business. In regard to religious matters, there were [honest men left]; in regard to business, there were no [honest men left].

Our Rabbis taught: Once R. Johanan b. Zakkai was riding on an ass when going on a journey, and R. Eleazar b. 'Arak was driving the ass from behind. [R. Eleazar] said to him: Master, teach me a chapter of the 'Work of the Chariot'.² He answered: Have I not taught you³ thus: 'Nor [the work of] the chariot in the presence of one, unless he is a Sage and understands of his own knowledge'? [R. Eleazar] then said to him: Master, permit me to say before thee something which thou hast taught me.⁴ He answered, Say on! Forthwith R. Johanan b. Zakkai dismounted from the ass, and wrapped himself up,⁵ and sat upon a stone beneath an olive tree. Said [R. Eleazar] to him: Master, wherefore didst thou dismount from the ass? He answered: Is it proper that whilst thou art expounding the ‘Work of the Chariot’, and the Divine Presence is with us, and the ministering angels accompany us, I should ride on the ass! Forthwith, R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak began his exposition of the ‘work of the Chariot’, and fire⁶ came down from heaven and encompassed⁷ all the trees in the field; [thereupon] they all began to utter [divine] song. What was the song they uttered? — Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea-monsters, and all deeps . . . fruitful trees and all cedars . . . Hallelujah.⁸ An angel⁹ [then] answered¹⁰ from the fire and said: This is the very ‘Work of the Chariot’. [Thereupon] R. Johanan b. Zakkai rose and kissed him on his head and said: Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, Who hath given a son to Abraham our father, who knoweth to speculate upon, and to investigate, and to expound the ‘Work of the Chariot’ — There are some who preach well but do not act well, others act well but do not preach well, but thou dost preach well and act well. Happy art thou, O Abraham our father, that R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak hath come forth from thy loins. Now when these things were told R. Joshua, he and R. Jose the priest¹¹ were going on a journey. They said: Let us also¹² expound the ‘Work of the Chariot’; so R. Joshua began an exposition. Now that day was the summer solstice;¹³ [nevertheless] the heavens became overcast with clouds and a kind of rainbow¹⁴ appeared in the cloud, and the ministering angels assembled and came to listen like people who assemble and come to watch the entertainments¹⁵ of a bridegroom and bride. [Thereupon] R. Jose the priest went and related what happened before R. Johanan b. Zakkai; and [the latter] said: Happy are ye, and happy is she that bore you;¹⁶ happy are my eyes that have seen thus. Moreover, in my dream, I and ye were reclining¹⁷ on Mount Sinai, when a Bath Kol¹⁸ was sent to us,¹⁹ [saying]: Ascend hither, ascend hither! [Here are] great banqueting chambers, and fine dining couches prepared for you; you and your disciples and your disciples’ disciples are designated for the third class.²⁰ But is this so?²¹ For behold it is taught: R. Jose b. R. Judah said: There were three discourses:²² R. Joshua discoursed before R. Johanan b. Zakkai, R. Akiba discoursed before R. Joshua, Hanania b. Hakinai discoursed before R. Akiba; — whereas R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak he does not count! — One who discoursed [himself], and others discoursed before him, he counts; one who discoursed [himself], but others did not discourse before him, he does not count. But behold there is Hanania b. Hakinai before whom others did not discourse, yet he counts him! — He at least discoursed before one who discoursed [before others].²³

Our Rabbis taught: Four men entered the ‘Garden’,²⁴ namely, Ben ‘Azzai²⁵ and Ben Zoma,²⁶ Aher,²⁷ and R. Akiba. R. Akiba said to them: When ye arrive at the stones of pure marble,²⁸ say not, water, water!²⁹ For it is said: He that speaketh falsehood shall not be established before mine eyes.³⁰ Ben ‘Azzai cast a look and died. Of him Scripture says: Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints.³¹ Ben Zoma looked and became demented.³² Of him Scripture says: Hast thou found honey? Eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.³³ Aher mutilated the shoots.³⁴ R. Akiba departed unhurt.

Ben Zoma was asked: Is it permitted to castrate a dog?³⁵ He replied: Neither shall ye do this in your land,³⁶ — [this means], to none that is in your land shall ye do thus.³⁷ Ben Zoma was [further] asked: May a high priest marry a maiden who has become pregnant?³⁸ Do we [in such a case] take into consideration Samuel's statement, for Samuel said,

(1) Lit., ‘words of the Torah’.

(2) V. p. 59, n. 4.

- (3) Plural, i.e. R. Eleazar and his fellow-students.
- (4) The fact that R. Johanan b. Zakkai had in the past taught the 'Chariot' mysteries to R. Eleazar is difficult to reconcile with the former's present refusal to teach his disciple. It seems best to omit, with the J.T., the word rendered 'which thou hast taught me'. For two suggested explanations, if this word is retained, v. Maharsha a.I.
- (5) I.e., put round him his tallith. The latter was a four-cornered garment (similar to the Roman pallium) adorned with fringes (in accordance with Num. XV, 38f), which was worn in Talmudic times by scholars, distinguished persons, and those who led in prayers. Its use at prayers is still preserved, and has given rise to its popular designation of 'prayer-shawl'. By wrapping himself in his tallith, R. Johanan b. Zakkai showed his sense of the holiness of the occasion. V. further J.E., vol. XI, pp' 67f and Elbogen, Der Jud, Gottesdienst pp. 499f.
- (6) Cf. p. 77, n. 9.
- (7) Var. lec.: covered; intertwined; hedged in,.
- (8) Ps. CXLVIII, 7, 9, 14. This reference to trees is the clue which points to these verses as the trees' psalm. The Jerusalem Talmud reads instead I Chron. XVI, 33.
- (9) Another reading has 'angel of death', which Tosaf. rejects.
- (10) I.e., spoke with reference to R. Eleazar's exposition of the 'Chariot' mysteries.
- (11) For R. Johanan b. Zakkai's opinion of these two disciples and R. Eleazar v. Aboth, II, 8, 9.
- (12) Being only two, they would not be infringing the Mishnah law concerning the study of the 'chariot' mysteries.
- (13) Lit., 'the cycle of Tammuz' (fourth month). On such a day the sky in Palestine should be cloudless.
- (14) Cf. Ezek. I, 28.
- (15) Heb. hyunzn. Levy deriving the word from the Greek 'smiling', especially 'friendly smiling', translates it, 'Belustigungen' (entertainments, merrymakings), which agrees with Rashi's explanation and the variant reading of the Jerusalem Talmud viz., 'rejoicing'. Jast. gives the word a Hebrew origin (v.s.v.) and explains it to mean, music, sweet melodies'; he renders our passage — 'the musical entertainments at a wedding.
- (16) I.e., your respective mothers; they were not brothers.
- (17) I.e. as at a banquet, when the guests used to recline on couches (cf. Ex. Rab 25).
- (18) V. p. 73, n. 12.
- (19) Lit., 'given upon us'.
- (20) Of the seven classes (v. Midr. Till. to Ps. XI, 7) admitted (after death) into God's presence.
- (21) I.e., that R. Eleazar b. 'Arak discoursed on the 'Chariot' mysteries before his master.
- (22) I.e., only in three instances did disciples discourse on the 'Work of the Chariot' before their teachers.
- (23) Hanina b. Hakinai has to be mentioned on account of R. Akiba, to show that the latter not only discoursed himself but that also another discoursed before him; but R. Eleazar b. 'Arak did not discourse before a teacher who in his turn discoursed before others, nor did any one discourse before him, hence he is not counted.
- (24) Paradise, Heb. XSRP (cf. Cant. IV, 13, Eccl. II, 5, Neh. II, 8), 'enclosure, preserve, garden, park' (v. B. D. B. s.v.). L. Blau (Alitjudisches Zaubewesen, pp. 115f) seeks to prove that this account of the entry of the four Rabbis into Paradise is to be understood literally (v. also J.E. vol. V, p. 683). This view is shared, among others, by J. Levy and L. Ginzberg (v. J.E. vol. V, pp. 138f). On the other hand, M. Jast. (Dictionary) and Goldschmidt consider 'Pardes' a figurative expression for the mystical realm of theosophy. Rashi explains that the four scholars ascended to heaven, and Tosaf. adds that it only appeared to them that they did so. Similarly, R. Hai Gaon, who discusses the whole Baraitha in a responsum (quoted by Ha-Kotheb in 'Ein Jacob), and R. Hananel explain that the entry of the Rabbis into the 'Garden' was only a vision. Both these authorities refer to the comment on the passage contained in the mystical works 'Hekaloth Rabbathi' and 'Hekaloth Zutarthi' (v. J.E. vol. VI, pp. 332-3). V. further J.E. vol. IX, pp. 515f.
- (25) V. Ab. IV, 2, (Sonc. ed., p. 44, n. 1).
- (26) V. ibid. Mishnah I, (Sonc. ed., P 43, n. 1).

(27) Lit. 'another', by which tern, Elisha b. Abuyah is referred to after his apostasy. V. J.E. vol. V, pp. 138f, and Ab. IV, 20 (Sonc. ed., p. 55 n. 1, where instead of 'disciple of R. Meir', read 'teacher of R. Meir'). Cf. also the term 'Others' supra p. 14.

(28) Giving the illusion of water.

(29) I.e., how can we proceed!

(30) Ps. CI, 7.

(31) Ibid. CXVI, 15.

(32) Lit., 'stricken'.

(33) Prov. XXV, 16,

(34) I.e., apostatized. Scholars differ greatly regarding the nature of Aher's defection: he has been variously described as a Persian, Gnostic or Philonian dualist; as a Christian; as a Sadducee; and as a 'victim of the inquisitor Akiba', in J.E., V. 183 and bibliography.

(35) Castrated animals may not be offered as sacrifices (v. n. 12,); therefore castration is forbidden in the case of animals of the type that can be offered up. But a dog may not only not be offered itself, but even its price or equivalent may not be used for offerings (v. Tem. 30a-b). Hence the question whether the prohibition of castration applies even to a dog. Cf. also Shab. 111a.

(36) Lev. XXII, 24. The beginning of the verse reads: 'That which hath its stones bruised . . . or cut, ye shalt not offer unto the Lord'.

(37) I.e., even an animal like the dog, which cannot be offered as a sacrifice, may not be mutilated.

(38) The high priest may marry a virgin only (v. Lev. XXI, 13). The question here is: If the girl claims that despite her pregnant condition she is still a virgin, may the high priest marry her? Or if he married her without knowing of her pregnancy and actually found her to have the signs of virginity, but subsequently learnt that she was pregnant before marriage, may she remain his wife?

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 15a

I can have repeated sexual connections without [causing] bleeding;¹ or is perhaps the case of Samuel rare?² He replied: the case of Samuel is rare, but we do consider [the possibility] that she may have conceived in a bath.³ But behold Samuel said: A spermatic emission that does not shoot forth like an arrow cannot fructify! — In the first instance, it had also shot forth like an arrow.

Our Rabbis taught: Once R. Joshua b. Hanania was standing on a step on the Temple Mount, and Ben Zoma saw him and did not stand up before him.⁴ So [R. Joshua] said to him: Whence and whither, Ben Zoma?⁵ He replied: I was gazing between the upper and the lower waters,⁶ and there is only a bare three fingers' [breadth] between them, for it is said: And the spirit of God hovered over the face of the waters⁷ — like a dove which hovers over her young without touching [them].⁸ Thereupon R. Joshua said to his disciples: Ben Zoma is still outside.⁹ See now, when was it that 'the spirit of God hovered over the face of the water? On the first day [of Creation]; but the division took place on the second day, for it is written: And let it divide the waters from the waters!' And how big [is the interval]? R. Aha b. Jacob said, As a hair's breadth; and the Rabbis said: As [between] the boards of a landing bridge. Mar Zutra, or according to others R. Assi, said: As [between] two cloaks spread one over the other; and others say, as [between] two cups tilted one over the other.¹⁰ guilt.¹² What does it refer to? — He saw that permission was granted to Metatron¹³ to sit and write down¹⁴ the merits of Israel. Said he: It is taught as a tradition that on high¹⁵ there is no sitting¹⁶ and no emulation, and no back,¹⁷ and no weariness.¹⁸ Perhaps, — God forbend! — there are two divinities! [Thereupon] they led Metatron forth, and punished him with sixty fiery lashes,¹⁹ saying to him: Why didst thou not rise before him when thou didst see him? Permission was [then] given to him to strike out the merits of Aher. A Bath Kol²⁰ went forth and said: Return, ye backsliding children²¹ — except Aher.²² [Thereupon] he said: Since I²³ have been driven forth from yonder world,²⁴ let me go forth and enjoy this world. So Aher went forth into evil courses.²⁵ He went forth, found a harlot and demanded her. She said to him: Art thou not Elisha b. Abuyah? [But] when he tore a radish²⁶ out of its bed on the Sabbath and gave it to her, she said: It is another [Aher].²⁷ After his apostasy, Aher asked R. Meir [a question], saying to him: What is the meaning of the verse: God hath made even the one as²⁸ well as the other?²⁹ He replied: It means that for everything that God created He created [also] its counterpart. He created mountains, and created hills; He created seas, and created rivers. Said [Aher] to him: R. Akiba, thy master, did not explain it thus, but [as follows]: He created righteous, and created wicked; He created the Garden of Eden,³⁰ and created Gehinnom.³¹ Everyone has two portions, one in the Garden of Eden and one in Gehinnom. The righteous man, being meritorious,³² takes his own portions and his fellow's portion in the Garden of Eden. The wicked man, being guilty,³³ takes his own portion and his fellow's portion in Gehinnom. R. Mesharsheya said: What is the Biblical proof for this? In the case of the righteous, it is written: Therefore in their land³⁴ they shall possess double.³⁵ In the case of the wicked it is written: And destroy them with double destruction.³⁶

After his apostasy, Aher asked R. Meir: What is the meaning of the verse: Gold and glass cannot equal it; neither shall the exchange thereof be vessels of fine gold?³⁷ He answered: These are the words of the Torah, which are hard to acquire like vessels of fine gold, but are easily destroyed³⁸ like vessels of glass. Said [Aher] to him: R. Akiba, thy master, did not explain thus, but [as follows]: Just as vessels of gold and vessels of glass, though they be broken, have a remedy,³⁹ even so a scholar, though he has sinned, has a remedy.⁴⁰ [Thereupon, R. Meir] said to him: Then, thou, too, repent! He replied: I have already heard from behind the Veil:⁴¹ Return ye backsliding children — except Aher.

Our Rabbis taught: Once Aher was riding on a horse on the Sabbath,⁴² and R. Meir was walking behind him to learn Torah⁴³ at his mouth. Said [Aher] to him: Meir, turn back, for I have already measured by the paces of my horse that thus far extends the Sabbath limit.⁴⁴ He replied: Thou, too, go back! [Aher] answered: Have I not already told thee that I have already heard from behind the Veil: 'Return ye backsliding children' — except Aher. [R. Meir] prevailed upon him and took him, to a schoolhouse. [Aher] said to a child: Recite for me thy verse!⁴⁵ [The child] answered: There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked.⁴⁶ He then took him to another schoolhouse.⁴⁷ [Aher] said to a child: Recite for me thy verse! He answered: For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me, saith the Lord God⁴⁸. He took him to yet another schoolhouse, and [Aher] said

- (22) According to our passage, Aher was guilty of the heresy of dualism. L. Ginzberg (J.E. vol. V, pp. 138-139) denies all historic worth to the story given here, which, on account of its reference to Metatron — which he declares to be a specifically Babylonian idea — and its lack of connection with the introductory words, he declares to be of late origin. Ginzberg prefers the parallel account in J. Hag. II, 1, where it is related that when Elisha saw a scholar he slew him, that he enticed the young from studying the Torah, and that he informed against the Jews when they sought to perform the work they were ordered to do on the Sabbath in a manner not to break the Law, These events undoubtedly refer to the period of the Hadrianic persecutions. In the J.T. two reasons are mentioned for his apostasy: according to some, he saw one man break the precept of Deut. XXII, 7, without coming to harm, and another observe it and get killed; according to others, he saw the tongue of the great scholar R. Judah Nahtum in the mouth of a dog. The J.T. also gives a different version of the verses discussed by Elisha with R. Meir, and of what R. Meir said on his master's death (v. J.E. vol. VIII, p. 434).

to a child: Recite for me thy verse! He answered: And thou, that art spoiled, what doest thou, that thou clothest thyself with scarlet, that thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, that thou enlargest thine eyes with paint? In vain dost thou make thyself fair etc.¹ He took him to yet another schoolhouse until he took him to thirteen schools: all of them quoted in similar vein. When he said to the last one, Recite for my thy verse, he answered: But unto the wicked God saith: 'What hast thou to do to declare My statutes etc.'² That child was a stutterer, so it sounded as though he answered: 'But to Elisha³ God saith'. Some say that [Aher] had a knife with him, and he cut him up and sent him to the thirteen schools: and some say that he said: Had I a knife in my hand I would have cut him up.

When Aher died,⁴ they said:⁵ Let him not be judged, nor let him enter the world to come. Let him not be judged, because he engaged in the study of the Torah; nor let him enter the world to come, because he sinned. R. Meir said: It were better that he should be judged and that he should enter the world to come. When I die I shall cause⁶ smoke to rise from his grave.⁷ When R. Meir died, smoke rose up from Aher's grave. R. Johanan said: [What] a mighty deed to burn his master! There was one amongst us, and we cannot save him;⁸ if I were to take him by the hand, who would snatch him from me! [But] said he:⁹ When I die, I shall extinguish the smoke from his grave.¹⁰ When R. Johanan died, the smoke ceased from Aher's grave. The public mourner¹¹ began [his oration] concerning him¹² thus: Even the janitor¹³ could not stand before thee, O master!

Aher's daughter [once] came before Rabbi and said to him: O master, support me! He asked her: 'Whose daughter art thou?' She replied: I am Aher's daughter. Said he: Are any of his children left in the world? Behold it is written: He shall have neither son nor son's son among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.¹⁴ She answered: Remember his Torah¹⁵ and not his deeds. Forthwith, a fire came down and enveloped Rabbi's bench.¹⁶ [Thereupon] Rabbi wept and said: If it be so on account of those who dishonour her,¹⁷ how much more so on account of those who honour her!

But how did R. Meir learn Torah at the mouth of Aher? Behold Rabbah b. Bar Hana said that R. Johanan said: What is the meaning of the verse, For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the Law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts?¹⁸ [This means that] if the teacher is like an angel of the Lord of hosts, they should seek the Law at his mouth, but if not, they should not seek the Law at his mouth! — Resh Lakish answered: R. Meir found a verse and expounded it [as follows]: Incline thine ear, and hear the words of the wise, and apply thy heart unto my knowledge.¹⁹ It does not say, 'unto their knowledge', but 'unto my knowledge'.²⁰ R. Hanina said, [he decided it] from here: Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house etc.²¹ The verses contradict one another!²² There is no contradiction: in the one case Scripture refers to an adult,²³ in the other to a child. When R. Dimi came [to Babylon] he said: In the West,²⁴ they say: R. Meir ate the date and threw the kernel²⁵ away.

Raba expounded: What is the meaning of the verse: I went down to the garden of nuts, to look at the green plants of the valley etc.?²⁶ Why are the scholars likened to the nut? To tell you that just as [in the case of] the nut, though it be spoiled with mud and filth, yet are its contents not contemned, so [in the case of] a scholar, although he may have sinned, yet is his Torah not contemned.

Rabbah b. Shila [once] met Elijah.²⁷ He said to him: What is the Holy One, blessed be He, doing? He answered: He utters traditions in the name²⁸ of all the Rabbis, but in the name of R. Meir he does not utter. Rabbah asked him, Why? — Because he learnt traditions at the mouth of Aher. Said [Rabbah] to him: But why? R. Meir found a pomegranate; he ate [the fruit] within it, and the peel he threw away! He answered: Now²⁹ He says: Meir my son says: When a man suffers,³⁰ to what expression does the Shechinah give utterance? 'My head is heavy, my arm is heavy'.³¹ If the Holy One, blessed be He, is thus grieved over the blood of the wicked, how much more so over the blood of the righteous that is shed. Samuel found Rab Judah leaning on the door-bolt weeping. So he said to him: O, keen scholar,³² wherefore dost thou weep? He replied: Is it a small thing that is written concerning the Rabbis?³³ Where is he that counted, where is he that weighed? Where is he that counted the towers?³⁴ ‘Where is he that counted?’ — for they counted all the letters in the Torah. ‘Where is he that weighed?’ — for they weighed the light and the heavy³⁵ in the Torah. ‘Where is he that counted the towers?’ — for they taught three hundred halachoth³⁶ concerning a ‘tower which flies in the air’.³⁷ And R. Ammi said: Three hundred questions³⁸ did Doeg³⁹ and Ahitophel⁴⁰ raise concerning a ‘tower which flies in the air’. Yet we have learnt: Three kings and four commoners⁴¹ have no share in the world to come. What then shall become of us? Said [Samuel] to him. O, keen scholar, there was impurity⁴² in their hearts. — But what of Aher?⁴³ — Greek song did not cease from his mouth.⁴⁴ It is told of Aher that when he used to rise [to go] from the schoolhouse,⁴⁵ many heretical books⁴⁶ used to fall from his lap.

Nimos the weaver⁴⁷ asked R. Meir: Does all wool that goes down into the [dyeing] kettle come up [properly dyed]?⁴⁸ He replied: All that was clean on its mother⁴⁹ comes up [properly dyed], all that was not clean on its mother does not come up [properly dyed].

R. Akiba went up unhurt and went down⁵⁰ unhurt; and of him Scripture says: Draw me, we will run after thee.⁵¹ And R. Akiba too the ministering angels sought to thrust away; [but] the Holy One, blessed be He, said to them: Let this elder be, for he is worthy to avail himself of My glory.

- (31) Lit., 'I am lighter than my head etc.', a euphemistic expression for feeling heavy, giddy. weak; v. Sanh., Sonc. ed., pp. 304, 306. The anthropomorphism is intended to show how near God is to man and how real is His sorrow for him in the time of his trouble, even though he be a delinquent and fully deserve his punishment.

- (36) I.e., fixed traditional laws, V. Glos.
- (37) An obscure expression for which Rashi both here and Sanh. 106b (Sonc. ed., p. 727) offers several interpretations, The most likely explanations relate the 'flying tower' to the laws of defilement. It could then mean: (a) A portable turret-shaped conveyance, in which an Israelite entered heathen land, which is regarded as levitically unclean; v. Tosef. Oh. and Rashi to Sanh. l.c. 'Flying' will thus mean 'moving' i.e., being carried. (b) An open chest or cupboard containing a levitically unclean object, which stands in an open space; v, Oh. IV, If. In this case, it is best to read 'open', or, as in the Mishnah 'standing'. The following are less plausible explanations: — (a) The upper stroke of the letter lamed, i.e., they taught three hundred traditions concerning so insignificant a matter. (b) The tower of Babel. (c) A tower suspended in mid-air by magic. Cf. Sanh. 68a (Sonc. ed., p. 462), concerning the planting of cucumbers by magic.
- (38) An indication of their profound learning. V. the variant reading in Sanh, l.c.
- (39) Cf. I Sam. XXI, 8 where 'the chiefest of the herdmen' is explained by Rashi as 'the head of the Beth din'.
- (40) Cf. II Sam. XVI, 23.
- (41) The three kings are, Jeroboam, Ahab and Manasseh; the four commoners, Balaam, Doeg, Ahitophel and Gehazi, Thus their profound learning did not save Doeg and Ahitophel. V. Sanh. 90a, (Sonc. ed., pp. 602f).
- (42) Lit., 'clay', i.e., heathen sensuality (Jast.). Aliter: 'gnawing worm'; 'jealousy', i.e., evil thoughts (Levy). Whatever the exact rendering, the meaning is: They were wickedly inclined from the beginning, hence their knowledge of the Torah could not protect them.
- (43) I.e., why did not his study of the Torah save him?
- (44) Rashi reads: 'from his house'. Why Greek song should have been the cause of Aher's corruption is not clear. Rashi says that he transgressed the prohibition against music after the destruction of the Temple (v. Git. 7a; cf. Isa. XXIV, 9). Maharsha rightly objects that this does not explain the word Greek: the Gemara could have simply stated that song did not cease from his mouth. He suggests, therefore, that the Greek songs were tainted by heresy. Perhaps the simplest explanation is that Aher's devotion to Greek literature eventually led him to accept ideas which were contrary to Jewish teaching.
- (45) I.e., before his apostasy.

(46) Lit., 'books of Minim' (v. Glos. s.v. Min).

(47) hsrd, Lat. gerdino. Cf. R. Isaac the Smith, R. Johanan the Sandalmaker etc. Being a weaver, the allegory employed by Nimos is appropriate. But Jast. holds that hsrd equals (by transposition) hrsd and means 'of Gadara'. He also regards xunhb as a shortened form of xunhbct (cf. Gen. Rab. s. 65), who, he thinks, is to be identified with the cynic philosopher Oenomaus.

(48) Rashi explains: does the study of the Torah serve to protect all students from sin? Jast.: i.e., does every student of mystic philosophy escape death or scepticism? (So too Aruch). Note Oenomaus was a cynic.

(49) I.e., when the sheep was sheared, i.e., all who begin the study of the Torah when they are free from sin; or (following Jast. and Aruch), all who engage in mystic speculation in perfect purity, like R. Akiba. Cf. Ab. III, 9 (Sonc. ed., p. 32).

(50) Cf. 'entered . . . departed' supra pp. 90-91.

(51) Cant. I, 4. I.e., R. Akiba was able to follow God right into Paradise, or (according to the other opinions) into the deepest mysteries of theosophy.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 16a

— By what Biblical exposition was he able to learn this?¹ Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said that R. Johanan said: And He came from the myriads holy² — He is the Sign³ among His myriad. And R. Abbahu said: He is preeminent above ten thousand⁴ — He is the Example⁵ among His myriad. And Resh Lakish said: The Lord of hosts is His names⁶ — He is the Lord among His host. — And R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: But the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was 'not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice.'⁷ And behold, the Lord passed by.⁸

Our Rabbis taught: Six things are said concerning demons:⁹ in regard to three, they are like the ministering angels; and in regard to three, like human beings. 'In regard to three they are like the ministering angels': they have wings like the ministering angels; and they fly from one end of the world to the other like the ministering angels; and they know what will happen like the ministering angels. [You say], 'They know' — you cannot mean that!¹⁰ — Rather, they hear from behind the Veil¹¹ like the ministering angels. 'And in regard to three, they are like human beings': they eat and drink like human beings; they propagate like human beings; and they die like human beings. Six things are said of human beings: in regard to three, they are like the ministering angels, and in regard to three, they are like beasts. 'In regard to three, they are like the ministering angels': they have understanding like the ministering angels; and they walk erect like the ministering angels; and they can talk in the holy tongue¹² like the ministering angels. 'In regard to three, they are like beasts': they eat and drink like beasts; and they propagate like beasts, and they relieve themselves like beasts.

WHOSOEVER SPECULATES UPON FOUR THINGS, IT WERE A MERCY IF¹³ HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD etc. Granted as regards what is above, what is beneath,¹⁴ what [will be] after,¹⁵ that is well. But as regards what was before — what happened, happened!¹⁶ — Both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish say: It is like a human king who said to his servants: Build for me a great palace upon the dunghill.¹⁷ They went and built it for him. It is not the king's wish [thenceforth] to have the name of the dunghill mentioned.

WHOSOEVER TAKES NO THOUGHT FOR THE HONOUR OF HIS MAKER, IT WERE A MERCY IF HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD. What does this mean? R. Abba said: It refers to one who looks at the rainbow. R. Joseph said: It refers to one who commits transgression in secret. 'One who looks at a rainbow', for it is written: As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord.¹⁸ R. Joseph said: 'It refers to one who commits a transgression in secret', in accordance with R. Isaac's teaching. For R. Isaac said: When anyone commits a transgression in secret, it is as though he thrust aside the feet of the Divine Presence, for it is said: Thus saith the Lord: The heaven is My throne, and the earth is My footstool.¹⁹ But is this so? For behold R. Elai the elder said: If a man sees that his [evil] inclination is prevailing upon him, let him go to a place where he is not known, and put on black garments,²⁰ and wrap himself up²¹ in black garments, and let him do what his heart desires;²² but let him not profane the Name of Heaven publicly! — There is no contradiction. The one case speaks of one who is able to overcome²³ his [evil] inclination; the other case of one who is not able to overcome his [evil] inclination.

R. Judah b. R. Nahmani, the speaker²⁴ of Resh Lakish expounded: Anyone who looks at three things, his eyes become dim; at the rainbow, and at the Prince,²⁵ and at the priests. At the rainbow, because it is written: As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain . . . This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord.²⁶ At the Prince, for it is written: And thou shalt put of thy honour upon him.²⁷ One who looks at the priests — at the time when the Temple existed, when they stood upon their platform²⁸ and blessed Israel with the Distinguished Name²⁹ [of God]. R. Judah son of R. Nahmani, the speaker of Resh Lakish expounded: What is the meaning of the verse: Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a familiar friend.³⁰ If the evil inclination say to thee: Sin and the Holy One, blessed be He, will pardon, believe it not, for it is said: 'Trust ye not in a friend', and 'friend' [Rea'] means none other than one's evil inclination, for it is said: For the inclination³¹ of man's heart is evil [Ra'].³² And 'familiar friend' means none other than the Holy One, blessed be He, for it is said: Thou art the familiar friend of my youth.³³ Perhaps thou wilt say: Who testifies against me? The stones of a man's home and the beams of his house testify against him, for it is said: For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it.³⁴ But the Sages say: A man's soul testifies against him, for it is said: Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.³⁰ What is it that lies in a man's bosom? You must say, it is the soul. R. Zerika said: Two ministering angels that accompany him testify against him, for it is said: For He will give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.³⁵ But the Sages³⁶ say: A man's limbs testify against him, for it is said: Therefore ye are My witnesses,³⁷ saith the Lord, and I am God.³⁸

(1) Lit., 'what did he expound'? i.e., from which verse did R. Akiba learn to distinguish God's Presence so as to avoid Aher's error of dualism, or (according to another interpretation of Rashi) so as not to look in the direction of the Shechinah (Divine Presence)?

(2) Deut. XXXIII, 2.

(3) V, tu ('and He came') is explained as V, tu ('and His sign'). Jast. translates: 'He is the ensign among his myriad'. Goldschmidt: 'He is distinguished among his myriads'.

(4) Cant. V, 10.

(5) Heb. ṭndus. There is a play here on the text vccrn kuds ('pre-eminent among the thousand') from which ṭndus is derived. The expositions of the different Rabbis have the common object of showing that God's Presence could be distinguished from his myriad attendants; fine shades of difference are not necessarily to be sought. But for the thought underlying this particular homiletical play, cf. Lev. XIX, 2. Jast. translates: 'He is exemplified by His myriad (of angels)', i.e., the Divine nature is recognized indirectly from the nature of His ministering angels, v. Cant. Rab. to V, 9. But this seems hardly in keeping with the line of thought demanded by the context. Goldschmidt: 'He is marked out among his myriads'.

(22) I.e., should his passion remain unmastered, let him at least commit the sin in secret. But R. Hananel deprecates the thought that the Talmud permits sin even in such circumstances and interprets our passage thus: certainly the effect of exile and dark garments will be to conquer the man's evil inclination, so that he will then be able to do what his heart truly desires, i.e., serve God.

Tosaf, (a.l.) points out that outside the Temple too, e.g., in the provinces, it was forbidden to look at the priests during the pronouncement of the sacerdotal blessing, the reason according to the J.T. being to prevent the distraction of the people's attention.

(41) The same restrictions regarding work applied to Festival-days as to the Sabbath, except in respect of work essential to the preparation of food, which was permitted on the Festivals (v. Bez. V, 2). Now the 'laying on of the hands' had to be performed with all one's strength, so that the weight of the person was supported by the animal; and this was considered an infringement of the Sabbath rule not 'to make use' of an animal. The point of the controversy, therefore, is this: Had the laying on of the hands to be done immediately prior to the slaughter, and consequently could be regarded as essential to the preparation of food, i.e., the sacrificial meal; or could this be done on the preceding day, so that the profanation of the holyday by this act became unnecessary, although the slaughtering took place on the Festival day? V. Bez. II, 4 and Bertinoro a.l.

(42) In the J. Hag. II, 2 we are told: At first there was no controversy in Israel except over the laying on of the hands alone. But Shammai and Hillel arose and made them four (in Bab. Shab. 14b, only three points of dispute are mentioned; cf. Tosaf. to our passage). When the disciples of the School of Hillel increased, and they did not study sufficiently under their masters (lit., 'did not sufficiently minister to their masters'), the controversies in Israel increased, and they became divided into two companies, the one declaring unclean, the other declaring clean. And (the Torah) will not again return to its (uncontroversial) place until the son of David (i.e., the Messiah) will come. THE FORMER [OF EACH] PAIR WERE PRINCES¹ AND THE LATTER WERE HEADS OF

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The three of the former pairs³ who said that the laying on of the hands may not be performed, and the two of the latter pairs who said that it may be performed, were Princes, and the others were Heads of the Court — this is the view of R. Meir. But the Sages say: Judah b. Tabbai was Head of the Court, and Simeon b. Shetah was Prince. Who taught the following teaching of our Rabbis? R.⁴ Judah b. Tabbai said: May I see consolation,⁵ if I did not have a Zomem⁶ -witness put to death as a demonstration⁷ against the Sadducees⁸ who said that Zomemim-witnesses were not to be put to death unless [through their false evidence] the accused had [already] been put to death. Said Simeon b. Shetah to him: May I see consolation, if thou didst not shed innocent blood. For the Sages said: Zomemim-witnesses are not put to death until both of them have been proved Zomemim; and they are not flogged⁹ until both of them have been proved Zomemim; and they are not ordered to pay money [as damages]¹⁰ until both of them have been proved Zomemim. Forthwith Judah b. Tabbai undertook never to give a decision except in the presence of Simeon b. Shetah.¹¹ All his days Judah b. Tabbai prostrated himself on the grave of the executed man, and his voice used to be heard. The people believed that it was the voice of the executed man; [but] he said to them: 'It is my voice. Ye shall know this [by the fact that] on the morrow [when] I die my voice will not be heard'.¹² R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: But perhaps he¹³ appeased him, or [the deceased] summoned him to judgment!¹⁴ — According to whom will this¹⁵ be? Granted, if you say [it is according to] R. Meir, who said that Simeon b. Shetah was Head of the Court [and] R. Judah b. Tabbai was Prince, that is why he decided points of law in the presence of Simeon b. Shetah; but if you say [it is according to] the Rabbis, who say that Judah b. Tabbai was Head of the Court [and] Simeon b. Shetah was Prince, how may the Head of the Court decide points of law in the presence of the Prince!¹⁶ — No, 'he undertook' is to be understood with reference to association. [He said]: I will not even join [with other judges to give a decision, unless Simeon b. Shetah is present].¹⁷ MENAHEM WENT FORTH AND SHAMMAI ENTERED etc. Whither did he go forth? Abaye said: He went forth into evil courses.¹⁸ Raba said: He went forth to the King's service. Thus it is also taught: Menahem went forth to the King's service, and there went forth with him eighty pairs of disciples dressed in silk.

R. Shimon b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: Never let [the principle] of Shebuth¹⁹ [Rest] be unimportant in thy eyes. For the laying on of the hands [on a Festival-day] is [prohibited] only on account of Shebuth, yet the great men of the age differed thereon.²⁰ But is this not already quite clear!²¹ — It is required on account of a precept [the fulfilment of which is prohibited] as Shebuth.²² But is not that too quite clear!²³ — [It is required] to contradict the view that they differ regarding the laying on of the hands itself: thus he teaches us that it is in regard to Shebuth that they differ.²⁴

Rami b. Hama said: You can deduce from this²⁵ that the laying on of hands must be done with all one's strength; for if you suppose that one's whole strength is not required, what [work] does one do by laying on the hands?²⁶ An objection was raised: [It is written]: Speak unto the sons of Israel . . . and he shall lay his hands.²⁷ The sons of Israel lay on the hands but the daughters of Israel do not lay on the hands. R. Jose and R. Simeon²⁸ say: The daughters of Israel lay on the hands optionally.²⁹ R. Jose said: Abba Eleazar told me: Once we had a calf which was a peace-sacrifice, and we brought it to the Women's Court,³⁰ and women laid the hands on it — not that the laying on of the hands has to be done by women, but in order to gratify the women.³¹ Now if you suppose that we require the laying on of the hands to be done with all one's strength, would we, for the sake of gratifying the women, permit work to be done with holy sacrifices!³² Is it to be inferred, therefore, that we do not require all one's strength? — Actually, I can answer you that we do require [it to be] with all one's strength, [but the women] were told to hold their hands lightly.³³ If so, [what need was there to say], 'not that the laying on of the hands has to be done by women'? He could [more simply] have pointed out that it was no laying on of the hands at all! R. Ammi said: His argument runs: Firstly and secondly. Firstly, it was no laying on of the hands at all, and secondly, it was [done] In order to gratify the women.³⁴

R. Papa said: One may conclude from this³⁵ that it is forbidden [on a holy day to make use of] the sides [of an animal].³⁶ For if you suppose that it is permitted [to make use of] the sides, let the hands be laid on the side.³⁷ It must be concluded, therefore, that it is forbidden to make use of the sides.³⁸

(4) [Var. lec. rightly omit: 'R'].

(5) A euphemistic form of oath, meaning, 'may I not live to see the consolation of Zion'. According to this explanation (given by Tosaf. and Jast.), Judah b. Tabbai and his colleague looked forward to fuller restoration of Israel's glory than was achieved in their day, v. Mak., Sonc. ed., p. 27, n. 7. Levy, however, trans: 'May I not behold the eternal salvation (ewige Heil) etc.'; and Rashi (Mak. 5b, the alternative explanation), interprets thus: He swore by the life of his children; might he receive condolences on their passing (if etc.).

(6) Lit., 'planning (evil)'. with reference to Deut. XIX, 19; hence the technical name for false witnesses whose evidence has been refuted by other witnesses testifying that the former were with them at another place at the time of the crime, v. Mak. 5a (Sonc. ed., p. 19f). If the Zomemim secure by their false testimony the conviction (but not the punishment) of an innocent person, the Rabbis held them to be amenable to the law of retaliation; v. Deut. XIX, 21 and Mak. 5b (Sonc. ed., p. 25).

(10) Each of the three punishments referred to is retaliatory, i.e., the Zomemim-witness had intended to secure a false conviction involving the said penalty. The flogging of Zomemim-witnesses, however, may not always represent the carrying out of the lex talionis: lashes were sometimes inflicted as a substitute penalty; cf. Mak. I, If.

(11) Who would correct him, if necessary.

(12) The text is idiomatically in the third person.

(13) I.e., Judah b. Tabbai.

(14) R. Aha's point is that the cessation of the voice on Judah b. Tabbai's death is no proof that it was his. For the phenomenon might be explained in this way: whilst Judah was alive, the wrongfully executed man cried out his protest from the grave; but when Judah b. Tabbai died he ceased to call either because he had been appeased by him, or because he had now been able to summon him before the Heavenly Tribunal.

(15) I.e., the Baraitha about Judah b. Tabbai.

(16) Cf. the principle invoked against the youthful Samuel in Ber. 31b (Whoever decides a point of law in the presence of his teacher deserves death). Cf. also J. Hag. II, 2 ed. 77d, where historical evidence is cited in favour of the view that Judah b. Tammai was Prince, and also in support of the opposite opinion (Tosaf.).

(17) So Rashi; but Tosaf. explains that he undertook never to join in voting against R. Simeon b. Shetah's opinion. According to either interpretation, the purpose of the answer is to show that Judah b. Tabbai could have been the Head of the Court, for his vow did not imply that he ever gave or proposed to give a decision in the presence of his superior, the Nasi.

(18) V. p. 94 n. 3

(19) , ללא, lit., 'rest, abstention from secular occupation', hence, 'an occupation, on the Sabbath and Festivals, forbidden by the Rabbis as being out of harmony with the celebrations of the day' (Jast.) Cf. Ex. X, 3, 15.

(20) V. Bez. V, 2. By laying on the hands on an animal with pressure, one 'makes use of it', and therefore infringes the principle of Shebuth, just as much, as by riding on it, which is prohibited in the above Mishnah.

(21) I.e., Shebuth is clearly mentioned in the Mishnah; v. n. 3.

(22) Otherwise one might have thought that the importance of the religious act would override the prohibition of Shebuth.

(23) I.e., from the Mishnah; v. n.3

(24) V. Bez. 20a, where the opinion of R. Jose b. R. Judah is mentioned, viz., that the point of difference between Shammai and Hillel is whether obligatory peace-offerings require laying on of hands, the view of Shammai being that only freewill-offerings require it.

(25) Lit., 'hear from it!', i.e., from R. Johanan's statement, which makes Shebuth the ultimate point of dispute in the Mishnah.

(26) All should agree, therefore, to permit it on the holy day.

(27) Lev. I, 2-4.

(28) This, and not 'R. Ishmael', is the correct reading; cf. 'Er. 96b, and R.H. 33a, etc.

(29) I.e., it is neither an obligatory precept (צו) nor a meritorious religious act (מעשה), but a religiously indifferent act which women are permitted to perform for their own gratification.

(30) V. Mid. II,5.

(31) So that they should feel that they have had a share, like men, in the sacrificial rites of their offering.

(32) Laying on the hands with all one's strength is work (cf. p. 108, n. 3), which must not be performed with animals once they have been dedicated to the Temple. (Cf. Deut. XV, 19 and Bek. II, 2-3).

(33) Lit., 'cause to float'.

(34) [MS. M.: 'Thus he says not that the laying on of hands by women is deemed valid, since there was no laying on of hands at all, but (the object was) to gratify the women'. A reading which is preferable to that of cur. edd. V. D.S.]

(35) V. p. 108, n. 8.

(36) Similarly of the sides of a tree etc.; v. Shab. 154b-155a, and p. 108, n. 3.

(37) [Rashi reads simply: 'Let the hands be laid on', i.e., since the head on which the laying on of the hands is done is like the sides of the animal.]

(38) Actually, the laying on of the hands had to be performed on the side, i.e., of the head.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. [A CROSS-BEAM SPANNING] THE ENTRANCE¹ [TO A BLIND ALLEY]² AT A HEIGHT OF MORE THAN TWENTY CUBITS SHOULD BE LOWERED.³ R. JUDAH RULED: THIS IS UNNECESSARY. AND [ANY ENTRANCE] THAT IS WIDER THAN TEN CUBITS⁴ SHOULD BE REDUCED [IN WIDTH]; BUT IF IT HAS THE SHAPE OF A DOORWAY⁵ THERE IS NO NEED TO REDUCE IT EVEN THOUGH IT IS WIDER THAN TEN CUBITS.

GEMARA. Elsewhere we have learnt: A sukkah⁶ which [in its interior] is more than twenty cubits high is unfit, but R. Judah regards it as fit.⁷ Now wherein lies the difference [between the two cases that] in respect of the sukkah it was ruled: 'unfit', while in respect of the ENTRANCE [TO A BLIND ALLEY],¹ a remedy⁸ was indicated?⁹ — [In respect of a] sukkah, since it is a Pentateuchal ordinance,¹⁰ it [was proper categorically to] rule, 'unfit';¹¹ in respect of the ENTRANCE, however, since [the prohibition against moving objects about in the alley is only] Rabbinical,¹² a remedy could well be indicated.¹³ If you prefer I might reply: A remedy may properly be indicated in the case of a Pentateuchal law also, but as the ordinances of a sukkah are many it was briefly stated: 'unfit',¹⁴ [while in the case of] an ENTRANCE [TO A BLIND ALLEY], since the regulations governing it are not many, a remedy could be indicated.¹⁵

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: The Sages¹⁶ could have deduced it¹⁷ only from the [dimensions of] the entrance to the Hekal¹⁸ and R. Judah could only have deduced it¹⁷ from the [dimensions of] the entrance to the Ulam.¹⁹ For we have learnt: The entrance to the Hekal¹⁹ was twenty cubits high and ten cubits wide,²⁰ and that to the Ulam was forty cubits high and twenty cubits wide.²¹ And both based their expositions on the same text: And kill it at the entrance of the tent of meeting;²² the Rabbis²³ being of the opinion that the sanctity of the Hekal is distinct²⁴ [from that of the Ulam]²⁵ and that of the Ulam is distinct²⁴ from [that of the Hekal],²⁶ so that²⁷ the mention of²⁸ 'the entrance of the tent of meeting' must refer²⁹ to the Hekal only.³⁰ R. Judah, however, is of the opinion that the Hekal and the Ulam have the same degree of sanctity so that the mention²⁹ of 'the entrance of the tent of meeting'³¹ refers to both of them.³² If you prefer I might say: According to R. Judah's view also the sanctity of the Hekal is distinct from that of the Ulam,³³ but the reason for R. Judah's ruling here is because it is written: To the entrance of the Ulam of the house.³⁴ And the Rabbis?³⁵ If it has been written: 'To the entrance of the Ulam' [the implication would indeed have been] as you suggested; now, however, that the text reads, 'To the entrance of the Ulam of the house',³⁴ [the meaning is the entrance of] the house³⁶ that opens into the Ulam. But is not this text³⁷ written in connection with the Tabernacle?³⁸ — We find that the Tabernacle was called Sanctuary and that the Sanctuary was called Tabernacle.³⁹ For, should you not concede this,⁴⁰ [consider] the statement which Rab Judah made in the name of Samuel: 'Peace-offerings that were slain prior to the opening⁴¹ of the doors of the Hekal are disqualified because it is said in Scripture: And kill it at the entrance⁴² of the tent of meeting⁴³ [which⁴² implies only] when it⁴⁴ is open but not when it is closed'.⁴⁵ Now surely [it might be objected] is not this Scriptural text written in connection with the Tabernacle?⁴⁶ The fact, then, [must be conceded that an analogy may be drawn between the two, since] we find that the Sanctuary was called Tabernacle and that the Tabernacle was called Sanctuary.

One may well agree that the Sanctuary was called Tabernacle since it is written in Scripture: And I will set my Tabernacle among you.⁴⁷ Whence, however, do we infer that the Tabernacle was called Sanctuary? If it be suggested: From the Scriptural text: And the Kohathites the bearers of the sanctuary set forward⁴⁸ that the tabernacle might be set up against their coming,⁴⁹

- (1) hucn (rt. tuc 'to come') signifying either (a) a way of entry or (b) an alley which forms the entry or gives access to courtyards that open out into it.
- (2) Having courtyards on three sides of it, the fourth side opening into a public domain (v. infra p. 2, n. 1).
- (3) Lit., 'reduced', the cross-beam thereby forming a kind of gateway into the alley. In the absence of a cross-beam, or in case it is raised too high (for the reason explained in the Gemara), the alley, in accordance with Rabbinic law, cannot be regarded as a private domain and no object may be moved in it during the Sabbath.

- (11) The suggestion of a remedy might have been misunderstood as being mere advice the neglect of which did not vitally affect the performance of the precept, and so it would be concluded that ex post facto the sukkah may be deemed fit. (So according to Tosaf. s.v. vflux a.l. contra Rashi).
- (12) Pentateuchally such a prohibition applies only to a public domain which is sixteen cubits in width (v. Shab. 6b and 99a) and open on at least two sides. The ALLEY spoken of in our Mishnah is less than sixteen cubits in width and is open on one side only (cf. Supra p. 1, n. 2).
- (13) Cf. supra p. I, n. 9. There is no need for so much precaution in the case of a Rabbinical as in that of a Pentateuchal law.
- (14) Thus presenting a succinct ruling covering all disqualifications. Were remedies for each disqualification to be indicated the ruling would have extended to undue lengths, contrary to the principle of brevity in teaching (v. Pes. 3b).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 2b

that¹ [surely] was written in respect of the [holy] ark.² — Rather it is from the following text³ [that the inference was made:] And let them make Me a sanctuary,⁴ that I may dwell⁵ among them.⁶

Whether [according to the ruling] of the Rabbis or [according to that] of R. Judah might not the deduction⁷ be made from the entrance of the court [of the Tabernacle], since it is written in Scripture: The length of the court shall be a hundred cubits and the breadth fifty everywhere, and the height five cubits,⁸ and it is also written: The hangings for the one side [of the gate] shall be fifteen cubits,⁹ and again it is written: And so for the other side; on this hand and that hand by the gate of court were hangings of fifteen cubits,¹⁰ as there [the entrance was] five [cubits in height] by twenty cubits in width so here also¹¹ [the dimensions allowed should be no less¹² than] five [cubits in height but as many as] twenty cubits in width?¹³ [Such an entrance]¹⁴ may well be described¹⁵ as the entrance of the gate of the court; but it cannot be regarded¹⁵ as an ordinary ENTRANCE.¹⁶ If you prefer I might reply: The Scriptural instruction¹⁷ that the hangings for the one side shall be fifteen cubits¹⁸ applies¹⁹ to its height.²⁰ [You say], ‘Its height’! Is it not in fact written: And the height five cubits?²¹ That [refers only to a part of their height] above the edge of the altar.²²

As to R. Judah, [how could it be said that] he inferred [the measurements of a gateway] ‘from the door of the Ulam’²³ when in fact we have learnt: AND [ANY ENTRANCE] THAT IS WIDER THAN TEN CUBITS SHOULD BE REDUCED, and R. Judah did not dispute [the ruling]?²⁴ — Abaye replied: He does dispute [this ruling] in the Baraitha. For it was taught: And [any entrance] that is wider than ten cubits should be reduced, but R. Judah ruled that is was not necessary to reduce it.²⁵ Then why does he not express his disagreement in our Mishnah? — He expressed it²⁶ in respect of the height of the gateway²⁷ and the same disagreement applies to the width.

Can it, however, still [be maintained that] R. Judah inferred [the measurements of a gateway] ‘from the entrance of the Ulam’²⁸ when it was in fact taught: [A cross-beam spanning the] entrance [to a blind alley] at a height of more than twenty cubits should be lowered,²⁹ but R. Judah regards [the entrance] as a proper [gateway even if the beam is] as high as³⁰ forty or fifty³¹ cubits; and Bar Kappara taught:³² Even a hundred? [The high figure] of Bar Kappara might quite well [be regarded as] an hyperbole;³³ but in respect of [the figures] of R.³⁴ Judah,³⁵ what hyperbole [could be postulated]? [As regards that of] forty³⁶ one might well explain that he derives it from [the height of] the door of the Ulam;³⁷ whence, however, does he derive that of fifty? R. Hisda replied: The following Baraitha must have misled Rab.³⁸ For it was taught: [A cross-beam, spanning the] entrance [to a blind alley] at a height of more than twenty cubits, [and thus forming a gateway] higher than the doorway of the Hekal, should be lowered.³⁹ He consequently thought: Since the Rabbis⁴⁰ derived [their figure] from [that of the height of] the doorway of the Hekal, R. Judah must have derived [his figure] from [that of the height of] the doorway of the Ulam. [In fact,] however, this is not [the case]; R. Judah derived his figure from [that of the height of] the doorways of kings.⁴¹ As to the Rabbis, however, if they derive their figure from [that of the height of] the doorway of the Hekal, should they not also require [a gateway⁴² to have] doors like the Hekal?⁴³ Why then did we learn: The rendering of an alley fit [for carrying objects within it,]⁴⁴ Beth Shammai ruled, requires a side-post and a beam,⁴⁵ and Beth Hillel ruled: Either a side-post or a beam?⁴⁶ The doors of the Hekal were made merely for the purpose of privacy.⁴⁷ If that is the case⁴⁸ THE SHAPE OF A DOORWAY should be of no avail,⁴⁹ since the [entrance to the] Hekal had the shape of a doorway and yet was only ten cubits wide; why then did we learn: IF IT HAS THE SHAPE OF A DOORWAY THERE IS NO NEED TO REDUCE IT EVEN THOUGH IT IS WIDER THAN TEN CUBITS? — Does not that reason⁵⁰ originate but from Rab?⁵¹ Well, when Rab Judah taught Hiyya b. Rab in the presence of Rab, ‘It is not necessary to reduce [its width]’, the latter told them, ‘Teach him: It is necessary to reduce it’.

(7) As to the maximum width of an entrance. The maximum height laid down above cannot be called in question by what follows, since evidence that an entrance of a lesser height is regarded as a proper doorway cannot alter the fact that one of a bigger size (as has been proved supra from that of the doors of the Hekal or Ulam) is also regarded as a proper entrance, or gateway (cf. Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 3a

a cornice¹ should be of no avail,² since [the entrance to the] Hekal had a cornice and yet was only twenty cubits high? For have we not learnt: Five cornices of oak³ were above it, one higher than the other? (What⁴ an objection, however, is this? Is it not possible that the statement about the cornices was made in respect of the Ulam?⁵ — And what difficulty is this! It is quite possible that the build of [the entrance to] the Hekal was like that of the Ulam). Then⁶ why did R. Il'a state in the name of Rab [that if a cross-beam was] four [handbreadths] wide [it constitutes a proper gateway] even though it is not strong enough,⁷ and if it had a cornice there is no need to lower it even if it was higher than twenty cubits? — R. Joseph replied: [The ruling about] the cornice is that of a Baraitha.⁸ (Who learned it?⁹ — Abaye replied: Hama¹⁰ the son of Rabbah b. Abbuha learned it.) But even if [the ruling about] the cornice is a Baraitha, does it¹¹ not present an objection against Rab?¹² — Rab can answer you: Even if I am removed from here,¹³ are not the two Baraithas¹⁴ mutually contradictory? All you can reply,¹⁵ [however, is that they represent the views of different] Tannas;¹⁶ so also [the reply to the contradiction] against me may be [that our respective statements are the views of different] Tannas.

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: In the absence of [the statement of] Rab¹⁷ there is no contradiction between the [two] Baraithas, since the reason of the Rabbis [for limiting the height of] the beam, [may be] that there should be a distinguishing mark¹⁸ and that the use of the expression,¹⁹ 'higher than the doorway of the Hekal'²⁰ is a mere mnemonic.

As to R. Nahman b. Isaac, [his explanation may be accepted as] satisfactory if he does not adopt the view of Rabbah; but if he does adopt the view of Rabbah²¹ who stated: 'It is written in Scripture: That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel dwell in booths,²² [if the roof of the booth is] not higher than²³ twenty cubits, one knows that one is living in a booth but if it is higher than twenty cubits one would not know it, since [the roof] does not catch the eye',²⁴ from which it is clear that in respect of sukkah also they²⁵ differ on the question of distinction, why [it may be asked] should they²⁶ express the [same] difference²⁷ in two [rulings]?²⁸ — [Both are] required. For if we had been informed [of their dispute] in respect of sukkah only, it might have been assumed that only in this case does R. Judah maintain his view, [because a sukkah], since it is made for the purpose of sitting in, the eye would well observe²⁹ [the roof], but [that in the case of] an alley, since it is used for walking³⁰ he agrees with the Rabbis. And if we had been informed of the other³¹ [ruling only], it might have been assumed that only in this case did the Rabbis maintain their view, but that in the other case they agree with R. Judah. [Hence the] necessity [for both rulings].

What [is the meaning of] amaltera?³² — R. Hama son of Rabbah b. Abbuha replied: Pigeon holes.³³ When R. Dimi came³⁴ he stated that in the West³⁵ it was explained as cedar poles.³⁶ He who said that cedar poles³⁶ [constitute a proper entrance would] with even more reason [admit that] pigeon holes [constitute a proper entrance].³⁷ He, however, who said that pigeon holes [constitute a proper entrance recognizes only these] but not cedar poles.³⁸ As to him, however, who recognized³⁹ cedar poles, is not his reason because their length is considerable?⁴⁰ But [if so, it may be objected]: Is not the extent [of the roof] of a sukkah considerable⁴¹ and the Rabbis nevertheless ruled that it is not [valid]!⁴² — The fact, however, is that since [they are] valuable people talk about them.⁴³

If part of [the thickness of] the cross-beam⁴⁴ was within twenty cubits⁴⁵ and part of it above twenty cubits,⁴⁵ or if part of [the depth of] the covering⁴⁶ [of a sukkah] was within twenty cubits⁴⁵ and part of it above twenty cubits, [such an altitude] said Rabbah, is admissible⁴⁷ in the case of an entrance but inadmissible⁴⁸ in that of a sukkah. Why is this⁴⁹ admissible in the case of an entrance? Obviously because we say, [Regard the beam as] planed;⁵⁰ but, then, [why should it not] be said in respect of a sukkah also, [Regard the roof as] thinned?⁵⁰ — If you [assume the roof to be] thinned, the sunshine in the sukkah [would have to be assumed to be] more than the shade.⁵¹ But here also,⁵² if you [regard it as] planed, would not the beam be like one that can be carried away by the wind?⁵³ Consequently you must [assume that beams in the conditions mentioned]⁵⁴ are regarded as metal spits;⁵⁵ [may it not then], here also [be said], that whatever the assumption⁵⁶ the extent of the shade is actually more than that of the sunshine?⁵⁷ — Raba of Parazika⁵⁸ replied: In the case of a sukkah, since [it is usually intended] for the use of an individual, one might not remember [the altitude of the roof].⁵⁹ In the case of an entrance however, since [it is made] for the use of many, [the people concerned] would remind one another.⁶⁰

Rabina replied.⁶¹ The Rabbis made the law stricter in respect of a sukkah because [the commandment is] Pentateuchal, but in respect of an entrance [to an alley the prescribed construction of] which is only Rabbinical, the Rabbis did not impose such restrictions.

R. Adda b. Mattenah taught the statement of Rabbah just cited in the reverse order: Rabbah said: It is inadmissible in the case of an entrance but admissible in that of a sukkah. Why is this⁶² admissible in the case of a sukkah? Obviously because we say: [Regard the roof as] thinned out,⁶³ but, then, [why should it not] be said in respect of an entrance also: [Regard the beam as] planed?⁶³ — If you [regard it as] planed, the beam would be like one that can be carried away by a wind.⁶⁴ But here also⁶⁵ if you [regard the roof as] thinned out [would not also] the sunshine in the sukkah [have to be regarded as] larger in extent than its shade? Consequently you must maintain that whatever the assumption,⁶⁶ the actual extent of the shadow is larger than that of the sunshine, [may it not then] here also [be said] that whatever the assumption [beams in the condition mentioned] are regarded as metal spits?⁶⁷ — Raba of Parazika replied: In the case of a sukkah, since [it is usually made] for one individual, that person realizes his responsibility⁶⁸ and makes a point of remembering [the conditions of the roof].⁶⁹ In the case of an entrance, however, since [it is made] for the use of many, [the people affected might] rely upon one another and so overlook⁷⁰ [any defects in the cross-beam]; for do not people say: ‘a pot in charge of two cooks⁷¹ is neither hot nor cold’. Rabina replied:⁷² [the law of] sukkah, since it is Pentateuchal, requires no buttressing⁷³ but that of an entrance, since it is only Rabbinical, does require buttressing.⁷⁴

What is the ultimate decision?⁷⁵ — Rabbah b. R. Ulla replied: The one as well as the other⁷⁶ is inadmissible. Raba replied: The one as well as the other⁷⁶ is admissible, for what we learned [in respect of height¹ refers to the] interior² of the sukkah and to the empty space² of the entrance.³

Said R. Papa to Raba: A Baraita was taught which provides support for your view: '[A cross-beam over] an entrance [to a blind alley] that is higher than twenty cubits [and is thus] higher than the entrance to the Hekal⁴ should be lowered'. Now in the Hekal itself⁵ the [height of the] hollow space of [the entrance thereto] was twenty cubits.

R. Shimi b. Ashi raised an objection against R. Papa: 'How does one construct [the prescribed entrance]? One places the cross-beam, below the limit of twenty [cubits of its altitude]'.⁶ Read: 'Above'.⁷ But surely it is stated: 'below'? — It was this that we are informed:⁸ That the lowest⁹ [permitted altitude is to be measured on the same principle] as the highest. As in the case of the highest [altitude permitted] the hollow space [of the entrance must not exceed] twenty cubits, so also in the case of the lowest [altitude permitted], the hollow space [of the entrance must not be lower than] ten cubits.¹⁰

Abaye stated in the name of R. Nahman: The cubit [applicable to the measurements] of a sukkah and that applicable to¹¹ an 'entrance' is one of five [handbreadths]. The cubit [applicable to the laws] of kil'ayim¹² is one of six [handbreadths].¹³ In respect of what legal [restriction has it been ruled that] the cubit [applicable to the measurements] of an entrance is [only] one of five?¹⁴ [If it be suggested] in respect of its height¹⁵ and [of the size of] a breach in the alley,¹⁶ surely [it could be retorted] is there [not also the law on] the depth of an alley, that¹⁷ [must be no less than] four cubits,¹⁸ in which case [the adoption of the smaller cubit results in] a relaxation [of the law]?¹⁹ — [He²⁰ holds the same view] as does he²¹ who limits the depth²² to four handbreadths.²³ If you prefer²⁴ I might reply [that the depth of an alley must indeed be] four cubits, but he²⁵ spoke of the majority of cubit measurements.²⁶ In respect of what legal [restriction has R. Nahman ruled that] the cubit [applicable to the measurements] of a sukkah is one of five?²⁷ [If it be suggested,] in respect of its height²⁸ and [the permitted size of] a crooked wall,²⁹ surely [it might be objected is there [not also the law requiring] the area of the sukkah [to be four cubits] by four cubits, in which case [the adoption of the smaller cubit results in] a relaxation [of the law]?³⁰ For was it not taught: Rabbi³¹ said: ‘I maintain that any sukkah which does not contain [an area of] four cubits by four cubits is legally unfit’?³² [R. Nahman is of the same opinion] as the Rabbis who ruled [that a sukkah is valid] even if it accommodates no more than one's head, the greater part of one's body and a table.³³ And if you prefer I might reply: It³⁴ may, in fact, [be in agreement with the view of] Rabbi,³¹ but he³⁵ spoke of the majority of cubit measurements.³⁶

In respect of what legal [restrictions has R. Nahman ruled that] ‘the cubit [applicable to the laws] of kil'ayim is one of six’? — In respect of a patch³⁷ in a vineyard and the [uncultivated] border³⁸ of a vineyard; for we have learnt: [Each side of] a patch³⁹ in a vineyard, Beth Shammai ruled, must measure no less than twenty-four cubits,⁴⁰ and Beth Hillel ruled: Sixteen cubits; and [the width of] an [uncultivated] border³⁸ of a vineyard, Beth Shammai ruled, [must] measure no less than sixteen cubits,⁴⁰ and Beth Hillel ruled: Twelve cubits. What is meant by a patch in a vineyard? The barren portion of the interior of the vineyard.⁴¹ [If its sides] do not measure⁴² sixteen cubits, no seed may be sown⁴³ there, but if they do measure⁴⁴ sixteen cubits, sufficient space for the tillage of the vineyard⁴⁵ is allowed and the remaining space may be sown. And what is meant by the border of a vineyard? [The space] between the [actual] vineyard⁴⁶ and the surrounding fence. [If the width] is less than⁴² twelve cubits no seed may be sown⁴³ there, but if it measures⁴⁴ twelve cubits, sufficient space for the tillage of the vineyard⁴⁵ is allowed and the remaining area may be sown.⁴⁷ But, surely, there is [the case of vines planted] closely within four cubits [distance from one another] where [the adoption of the higher standard⁴⁸ would result] in a relaxation [of the law]?⁴⁹ For have we not learnt:⁵⁰ A vineyard [the rows of which are] planted at [distances of] less than four cubits [from one another] is not regarded, R. Simeon ruled, as a proper vineyard,⁵¹ and the Sages ruled, [It is regarded as] a proper vineyard, the intervening vines⁵² being treated as if they were non-existent?⁵³ — [R. Nahman is of the same opinion] as the Rabbis who ruled that [whatever the distances the plantation] constitutes a proper vineyard.⁵⁴ If you prefer I might reply: [He⁵⁵ may,] in fact, [hold the view of] R. Simeon, but⁵⁶ he was referring to the majority of cubit measurements.⁵⁷

Raba, however,⁵⁸ stated in the name of R. Nahman: All cubits [prescribed for legal measurements are] of⁵⁹ the size of six [handbreadths], but the latter⁶⁰ are expanded⁶¹ while the former⁶² are compact.⁶³

An objection was raised: All cubits of which the Sages spoke are of the standard⁶⁴ of six [handbreadths] except

(1) Suk. 2a and supra 2a.

(2) Lit., ‘hollow’.

- (3) But does not include the roof of the former or the cross-beam of the latter.
- (4) V. supra p. 2, n. 7.
- (5) From which the law relating to the entrance to a blind alley is derived.
- (6) Tosef. 'Er. 1; from which it follows, contrary to the view of R. Papa, that the prescribed altitude of twenty cubits for an entrance includes also the cross-beam.
- (7) Instead of 'below', the cross-beam being excluded from the prescribed altitude.
- (8) By the mention of 'below'.
- (9) vynks, lit., 'that which is below'.
- (10) The expression vynk ('below') in the Baraitha does not at all refer to a crossbeam that lies over an entrance twenty cubits in height, but to one of ten cubits only, the entire passage being in the nature of an elliptical note.
- (11) Lit., 'and the cubit of'.
- (12) V. Glos.
- (13) Adopting in each case the standard which makes for the more rigorous application of the law.
- (14) And not six as is the case with that of kil'ayim.
- (15) Sc. that the cross-beam must not be higher than twenty cubits of the lower standard on the side of rigor.
- (16) If the breach in one of the walls of the alley is wider than ten cubits, the arrangements in connection with the Sabbath are invalid on the side of rigor; v. infra 5a.
- (17) In order to render the Sabbath arrangements valid.
- (18) V. infra 5a.
- (19) Since a depth of four cubits of the lower standard would be sufficient to render the arrangements valid.
- (20) R. Nahman in whose name Abaye laid down the respective standards of the cubit.
- (21) R. Joseph (v. infra 5a).
- (22) Lit., 'who said'.
- (23) The question of the size of the respective cubits does not, therefore, arise.
- (24) The answer just given is not very satisfactory since Abaye himself who reported R. Nahman's ruling differs from R. Joseph's view (cf. Supra n. 15).
- (25) V. p. 13, n. 14.
- (26) In connection with an 'entrance'. In respect of depth, however, he may well hold the size of the cubit to be six handbreadths.
- (27) And not six as is the case with that of kil'ayim.
- (28) That its interior must not be higher than twenty of the smaller cubits.
- (29) vneq ipus; if a portion of the roof of a sukkah consists of materials that are legally unfit for the purpose, the sukkah may nevertheless be valid if that portion is adjacent to any of its walls and terminates within a distance of four cubits from that wall. That portion of the roof together with the wall it adjoins are regarded as one crooked wall; and the space under the remainder of the roof, consisting of suitable materials, may be used as a proper sukkah. (V. Suk. 17a). In both suggested cases, the cubit of the lower standard is on the side of rigor.
- (30) Since even all area measured by the smaller cubit would render the sukkah valid.
- (31) R. Judah I, the Patriarch, compiler of the Mishnah.
- (32) Suk. 3a.
- (33) Cf. Supra p. 13, n. 17.
- (34) The ruling reported in R. Nahman's name.
- (35) R. Nahman in whose name Abaye laid down the respective standards of the cubit.
- (36) In connection with the sukkah, which belong to the lower standard. In the case of the area of a sukkah, however, he may well maintain, the cubit applicable is the one of the higher standard on the side of rigor.

- (37) , j re., 'baldness'. This is further explained infra.
- (38) kuj n (rt. kuj 'to go round') a circle, circumference.
- (39) V. p. 14, n. 13.
- (40) If it is desired to grow in it wheat or other kinds of grain which under the laws of kil'ayim are forbidden to be grown among vines.
- (41) Lit., 'a vineyard the middle of which was destroyed'.
- (42) Lit., 'there is not there'.
- (43) Lit., 'he shall not bring'.
- (44) Lit., 'they were there'.
- (45) Four cubits on each side.
- (46) Sc. the vines.
- (47) Kil. IV, 1; infra 93a. These regulations — by adopting the cubit of the higher standard, are on the side of rigor.
- (48) Six handbreadths per cubit.
- (49) V. infra note 16, second clause.
- (50) Kil. V, 2.
- (51) And wheat or other corn may be sown there.
- (52) Those planted in the space of the four cubits that should intervene between each two rows.
- (53) So that the prescribed space between the remaining vines is obtained and the plantation constitutes a proper vineyard in which, in accordance with the laws of kil'ayim, no kind of grain may be sown. Now, since it is the existence of distances of four cubits between the rows of vines that determines whether a group of vines may be regarded as a vineyard in the legal sense, it follows that if the lower standard of the cubit is adopted distances of no more than (5 X 4) twenty handbreadths between the rows would subject the vineyard to the laws of kil'ayim, while if the higher standard is adopted, so that distances of (6 X 4 =) twenty-four handbreadths are required, the same plantation would constitute no proper vineyard and the plantation would thus be exempt from the laws of kil'ayim.
- (54) The standard of the cubit does not consequently affect the prohibition to sow any kinds of grain between the vines.
- (55) R. Nahman.
- (56) In adopting the higher standard of the cubit.
- (57) In connection with kil'ayim, while in respect of distances between vines he also adopts the lower standard, on the side of rigor.

- (63) , ucmg (rt. cmg 'to be sad'), the fingers are kept close to one another as are the lips of a man in sadness (Aruk); 'pressed together' (Jast.).
- (64) Lit., 'in a cubit'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 4a

that [their measurements must] not be exactly alike.¹ Now according to Raba this² is intelligible [since the measuring must be done in such a manner] as to have [the handbreadths] in the latter case expanded and the former case compact; but according to Abaye³ [does not this⁴ present] a difficulty? — Abaye can answer you: ‘The cubit [spoken of in respect] of kil'ayim is of the length of six [handbreadths]’.⁵ But since it was stated in the final clause, ‘R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: All cubits of which the Sages spoke in relation to kil'ayim are of the standard of six [handbreadths] except that these must not be compact’, does it not follow that the first Tanna⁶ referred to all cubits?⁷ — Abaye can answer you: Is there not R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who maintains the same standpoint as I!⁸ I uphold the same ruling as R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

According to Abaye's view [the standard of the respective cubits] is undoubtedly [a question in dispute between] Tannas;⁹ must it, however, be said that according to Raba's view also [the standard of the cubit is a question in dispute between] Tannas?¹⁰ — Raba can tell you, ‘It is this that R. Simeon b. Gamaliel desired¹¹ to inform us: [That the handbreadths of] the cubit applicable to kil'ayim must not be compact’.¹²

[If that is the case,¹³ he should have said,¹⁴ ‘[The handbreadths of] the cubit applicable to kil'ayim must not be compact’; what, [however, could he have meant] to exclude [by his addition,] ‘of the standard of six [handbreadths]’? [Did he] not [obviously mean] to exclude the cubit of the sukkah and the cubit of the ‘entrance’?¹⁵ No; to exclude the cubit [by which the] base,¹⁶ and the one [by which the] surrounding ledge¹⁷ [of the altar were measured]¹⁸ for it is written in Scripture: And these are the measures of the altar by cubits — the cubit¹⁹ is a cubit and a handbreadth,²⁰ the bottom shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the edge thereof round about a span,’ and this shall be the base of the altar;²¹ ‘The bottom shall be a cubit’²¹ refers to the foundation [of the altar];²¹ ‘And the breadth a cubit’²¹ refers to its surrounding ledge;¹⁷ ‘And the border thereof by the edge thereof round about a span refers to the horns;²² ‘And this shall be the base of the altar’ refers to the golden altar.²³

R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Rab: [The laws relating to] standards,²⁴ interpositions²⁵ and partitions²⁶ [are a part of] the halachic code [that was entrusted] to Moses at Sinai. Are [not the laws relating to] standards²⁴ Pentateuchal, since it is written in Scripture: A land of wheat and barley etc.²⁷ and R. Hanan stated that all this verse was said [with reference to the laws] of standards? ‘Wheat’²⁷ [namely was mentioned] as [an allusion to what] we have learnt: ‘If a man entered a leprous²⁸ house, [carrying] his clothes upon his shoulders and his sandals and rings in his hand²⁹ both he and they become levitically unclean forthwith.³⁰ If, however, he was wearing his clothes, had his sandals on his feet and his rings on his fingers, he becomes unclean forthwith but they³¹ remain clean³² unless he stayed there³³ [as much time] as is required for the eating³⁴ of half a loaf³⁵ of wheaten bread, but not of barley bread,³⁶ while in a reclining posture³⁷ and eating with some condiment’.³⁸ ‘Barley’³⁹ [is an allusion to the following]. For we have learnt: ‘A bone of the size of a barley grain causes defilement by contact and carrying, but not by cover’.⁴⁰ ‘Vines’³⁹ [are an allusion to] the quantity of a quarter [of a log]⁴¹ of wine [the drinking of which constitutes an offence]⁴² of a nazirite.

Gamaliel, in his specific mention of the cubit of six handbreadths in connection with kil'ayim, (a) be assumed to exclude the cubit of sukkah and entrance which, according to his opinion, must measure no more than five handbreadths, and his view consequently differs from that of the Sages; or (b) is his statement a commentary on the vague ruling of the Sages, that 'the measurements are not alike', its object being to explain that the cubit of six handbreadths of which they spoke must in the case of kil'ayim measure not six compact, but six expanded handbreadths, and thereby he only implied that the cubit of sukkah and entrance must be one of six compact ones, so that his views are in every way in complete agreement with that of the Sages?

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 4b

'Fig-trees' [allude to] the size of a dried fig in respect of carrying out [from one domain into another] on the Sabbath. 'Pomegranates' [are an allusion] as we learned: 'All [defiled wooden]¹ utensils of householders² [become clean if they contain holes] of the size of pomegranates.³ "A land of olive-trees" [is⁴ an allusion to the] land all the legal standards of which are of the size of olives'. [You say], 'All the legal standards of which [etc.]!' Is this conceivable? Surely there are those that have just been enumerated? Rather read: 'A land, most⁵ of the legal standards of which are of the size of olives'. 'Honey' [is an allusion to the eating of food of] the size of a big date⁶ [that constitutes an offence]⁷ on the Day of Atonement!⁸ — Do you then imagine that the standards were actually prescribed [in the Pentateuch]? [The fact is that] they are but traditional⁹ laws for which the Rabbis have found allusions in¹⁰ Scripture. But [the laws relating to] interpositions are Pentateuchal. [For was it not taught:]¹¹ Since it is written in Scripture: Then he shall bathe all his flesh¹² [it follows] that there must be no interposition between his flesh and the water; In water¹³ implies, in water that is gathered together;¹⁴ all his flesh¹³ implies, water in which all his body can be immersed;¹⁵ and how much is this? [A volume of the size of] a cubit by a cubit by a height of three cubits; and the Sages accordingly estimated that the waters of a ritual bath¹⁶ must measure forty se'ah?¹⁷ — Where a traditional law is required¹⁸ [it is in respect of] one's hair; and [it is to be understood] in accordance with [a statement of] Rabbah son of R. Huna,¹⁹ for Rabbah son of R. Huna said: 'One knotted hair constitutes an interposition,²⁰ three [hairs] constitute no interposition,²¹ but I do not know [the ruling in the case of] two'.²² [But are not the laws relating to] one's hair also Pentateuchal? For was it not taught: Then shall he bathe all his flesh²³ [implies, even] that which is attached to his flesh, and by this was meant²⁴ hair?²⁵ — Where traditional law is required²⁶ [it is the case of hair], and it is for [the purpose of] distinguishing²⁷ between an interposition] on its major, and one on its minor [portion] and between one to which the bather objects and one which he does not mind; this being understood on the lines of R. Isaac who said: [According to] traditional law²⁸ [an interposition on] its²⁹ major part to which a man objects constitutes an interposition but one which he does not mind constitutes no interposition;³⁰ the Rabbis, however, ruled that [an interposition on] its²⁹ greater part [shall constitute an interposition] even when the man does not mind it, as a preventive measure [against the possibility of allowing an interposition on] its major part to which the man does object, and that [an interposition on] its²⁹ minor portion to which a man objects [shall constitute an interposition] on account [of the possibility of allowing an interposition over] its²⁹ major portion to which a man objects.³¹ But [why should no prohibition be enacted] also [against an interposition over] its minor portion to which one does not object, as a preventive measure against [the possibility of allowing an interposition over] its minor portion to which one does object³² or its major portion to which one does not object?³³ This ruling³⁴ itself is merely a preventive measure, — shall we go as far³⁵ as to institute a preventive measure against another preventive measure?³⁶

But [the laws defining] partitions are Pentateuchal. For did not a Master state:³⁷ [The height of] the ark was nine [handbreadths]³⁸ and [the thickness of] the ark-cover was one handbreadth, so that we have here³⁹ [a total height of] ten [handbreadths]⁴⁰ — [The traditional law] is required [in respect of the views] of R. Judah who holds that the cubit used for the structure [of the Temple] was of the standard of six [handbreadths] while that for the furniture⁴¹ was only one of five handbreadths.⁴² According to R. Meir, however, who holds⁴³ that all cubit measurements⁴⁴ were of the medium size,⁴⁵ what can be said in reply?⁴⁶ — According to R. Meir [it may be replied] the traditional law refers⁴⁷ to [the legal fictions of] extension,⁴⁸ junction⁴⁹ and the crooked wall.⁵⁰

[If the cross-beam]⁵¹ was higher than twenty cubits and it is desired to reduce the height,⁵² how much is one to reduce it?⁵³ How much is one to reduce it, [you ask]? As much [obviously] as one requires!⁵⁴ But [it is this that is asked]: How much [must the raised ground⁵⁵ be in] width?⁵⁶ — R. Joseph replied: A handbreadth.⁵⁷ Abaye replied: Four [handbreadths].⁵⁸ May it be suggested that they⁵⁹ differ on the following principles — he⁶⁰ who said ‘a handbreadth’ being of the opinion that it is permissible to make use [of the floor space] under the beam⁶¹

- (30) It is for the purpose of this distinction that the traditional law was required in addition to the Biblical law relating to interposition.
- (31) While traditional law restricts a disqualifying interposition to (a) its extension over the major part of the hair and (b) the man's objection to it, the Rabbis regard even (a) without (b) or (b) without (a) as a disqualifying interposition.

Talmud - Mas. Eiruvim 5a

while he¹ who said 'four handbreadths', is of the opinion that it is forbidden to make use [of the floor space] under the beam?² — No; all may agree³ that it is permissible to make use [of floor space] under the cross-beam,⁴ but here they⁵ differ on the following principles: One Master holds the opinion that a cross-beam [is required] on account [of the necessity for] a distinguishing mark,⁶ while the other Master¹ holds that a cross-beam [is required] on account [of the necessity for] a partition.⁷ If you prefer I might reply that all agree³ that a cross-beam [is required] on account [of the necessity for] a distinguishing mark; but here they⁵ differ on [the question whether] the distinguishing mark below [must be of the same dimensions as] the one above. One Master is of the opinion that we say that a distinguishing mark below⁸ [is provided by the same width] as the one above,⁹ and the other Master¹⁰ holds that we do not say that a distinguishing mark below [is provided by the same dimensions] as the one above.¹¹ And if you prefer I might reply that all agree that a distinguishing mark below [is provided by the same width] as the one above,¹² but their¹³ point of difference here is [the question whether a wider space was ordered] as a preventive measure against the possibility of its being trodden down.¹⁴

[If an entrance to an alley] was less than ten handbreadths [in height] and it was desired to dig up the ground¹⁵ so as to bring up the altitude¹⁶ to ten [handbreadths] how much must one excavate? — [You ask] , 'How much must one excavate'? As much [of course] as one requires!¹⁷ — Rather [this is the question:] To what extent in width¹⁸ [must one excavate]? — R. Joseph replied: To¹⁹ four [handbreadths]. Abaye replied: To four cubits. Might it be suggested that they²⁰ differ on the principle laid down by R. Ammi and R. Assi? For it was stated: If a breach was made in a side-wall of²¹ an alley close to its entrance,²² it was ruled in the name of R. Ammi and R. Assi, if a strip²³ of [the width of] four [handbreadths] was there²⁴ it is permissible²⁵ [to regard the alley as ritually fit],²⁶ provided the breach is not wider than²⁷ ten [cubits].²⁸ If, however, [there was] no [such strip²⁹ there] it is permissible [to regard the alley as ritually fit, if the breach was] less than three [handbreadths wide],³⁰ [but if it was] three [handbreadths wide]³¹ this is not permissible.³² [Might it then be suggested that] R. Joseph³³ adopts the principle of R. Ammi³⁴ and that Abaye³⁵ does not hold the principle of R. Ammi?³⁶ Abaye can answer you: There³⁷ [it is a question of] destroying the ritual fitness³⁸ of an alley,³⁹ but here⁴⁰ [it is a case of] creating one.⁴¹ [Consequently] if the excavation extends⁴² [to a width of] four cubits [the entrance becomes] ritually fit,⁴³ but if not, it is not [fit]. Said Abaye: Whence do I derive my ruling?⁴⁴ From what was taught.⁴⁵ '[The movement of objects in] an alley cannot be permitted [on the Sabbath] by means of a sidepost⁴⁶ and a crossbeam⁴⁷ unless houses and courtyards open out into it'.⁴⁸ Now if [a strip of the width] of four [handbreadths were to constitute a proper alley wall) how could this⁴⁹ be possible?⁵⁰ And should you reply that the doors might open⁵¹ in the middle wall,⁵² the fact is [it could be retorted] that R. Nahman stated: We have a tradition that if [the movement of objects in] an alley is to be⁵³ permitted [on the Sabbath] by means of a side-post and a crossbeam, its length⁵⁴ must be⁵⁵ more than its width⁵⁶ and houses and courtyards must open out into it.⁵⁷ And R. Joseph?⁵⁸ — Each door might open⁵⁹ in a corner.⁶⁰ Abaye further⁶¹ stated: Whence do I derive my ruling? From what Rami b. Hama⁶² said in the name of R. Huna: If a projection from [the end of a side] wall of an alley⁶³ is less than four cubits [in width] it may be regarded as a side-post and no other post is required to effect the ritual fitness of the alley,⁶⁴ [but if it is] four cubits [wide] it is deemed to be [a part of the structure of the] alley, and another post is required to effect its ritual fitness.⁶⁴ And R. Joseph?⁶⁵ — To deprive [a projection] of its status as a post there must be⁶⁶ [a width of] four cubits but as regards constituting [a wall in] an alley, even [a width] of four handbreadths is also [enough] to constitute an alley.

[Reverting to] the above text, 'Rami b. Hama said in the name of R. Huna: If a projection from [the end of a side] wall of an alley

(1) Abaye.

(2) The inner edge of the beam forming the boundary line of the alley, while all the space under the beam itself is regarded as outside the alley. Since no one would consequently use that space no one would notice the beam which, from the level of the general floor of the alley, would be higher than twenty cubits. The raised ground must, therefore, be extended into the alley to form a substantial area; and the minimum of such an area is four handbreadths.

(3) Lit., 'for all the world hold the opinion'.

(4) Cf. Supra n. 7 first clause.

(5) Abaye and R. Joseph.

(6) That people might distinguish between the alley and the public domain into which it opens out, and would thus remember that what is permitted in the former is not permitted in the latter. A level of the width of one handbreadth which the residents must pass on their way from and into the alley is, therefore, quite sufficient for the purpose.

(7) Between the alley and the public domain. No partition is valid unless it is made for a floor space of no less than four handbreadths (v. infra 86b and cf. supra n. 9 final clause).

(8) Sc. the raised ground under the cross-beam.

(9) So that a raised level of only one handbreadth in width suffices.

(10) Abaye.

(11) Below a mark of wider width is required, viz., of four handbreadths.

(12) Only one handbreadth.

(13) Abaye's and R. Joseph's.

(14) Lit., 'he or it will diminish', sc. the raised ground, if it were to be allowed to consist of the minimum width of one handbreadth only, might in the course of time be worn down to less than a handbreadth. R. Joseph holds that this possibility was not provided against while Abaye holds that it was. Hence, according to Abaye, the necessity for a width of more than a handbreadth. And since a width above the minimum was required, it was fixed at four handbreadths. (cf. supra p. 23, n. 9 final clause).

(15) Lit., 'and he engraved in it'.

- (16) Lit., 'to complete it'.
- (17) To raise the altitude to ten handbreadths.
- (18) Lit., 'its drawing (from the entrance into the interior) by how much'.
- (19) Lit., 'in', 'by'.
- (20) R. Joseph and Abaye.
- (21) Lit., 'from its side'.
- (22) Lit., 'toward its head or top'.
- (23) Of wood, especially put up for the purpose, or a remnant of the original wall.
- (24) At the original termination of the wall, adjoining the cross-beam.
- (25) Lit., 'it (sc. the strip) permits'.
- (26) In respect of the movement of objects on the Sabbath. The breach is treated as an additional entrance to the alley and does not, therefore, affect its ritual fitness, while the validity of the main entrance is retained owing to the strip of wood or building structure which, complying with the prescribed size, serves the purpose of the original wall and, together with the wall opposite and the cross-beam above them, constitutes a valid alley to which the main entrance serves as doorway.
- (27) Lit., 'in the breach until'.
- (28) A gap wider than ten cubits cannot be regarded as a doorway and destroys, therefore, the Sabbatic ritual validity of the alley.
- (29) Sc. if it was either wanting altogether or of less than four handbreadths in width.
- (30) Such a narrow breach may be regarded as non-existent (v. Glos. s.v. labud) and the wall is deemed to be virtually intact.
- (31) And people are consequently likely to use the gap as a short cut thus neglecting the use of the main entrance.
- (32) Lit., 'it does not permit', since (v. previous note) the ritual validity of the main entrance has thereby been destroyed.
- (33) Who ruled supra, in the case of an excavation at the foot of an entrance, that a width of four handbreadths is sufficient.
- (34) Who regards a strip of four handbreadths in width to be sufficient to constitute a wall as a support for a cross-beam. MS.M. adds: 'and R. Assi'.
- (35) Who required for the excavation a width of four cubits.
- (36) MS.M. adds: 'and of R. Assi'. This is also the reading of Rashi.
- (37) The case dealt with by R. Ammi and R. Assi.
- (38) Lit., 'end'. Before the breach occurred the alley was in a condition that was ritually fit.
- (39) Hence it is sufficient for a width of four handbreadths to retain its ritual fitness.
- (40) In the matter of the excavation.
- (41) Lit., , 'the beginning of an alley'. Owing to the low altitude of the entrance, the alley was never before ritually fit.
- (42) Lit., 'there is'.
- (43) Lit., 'yes'.
- (44) Lit., 'I say it'.
- (45) Shab. 130b, infra 73b.
- (46) , lit., 'cheek', 'jaw'.
- (47) Cf. Mishnah infra 11b.
- (48) Sc. the houses open out into the courtyards and the latter into the alley (Rashi).
- (49) That 'courtyards' should open out into it'?
- (50) The prescribed minimum width of a door being four handbreadths, the doorway of one courtyard alone would cover the full width of the alley wall.

(51) Lit., 'that he opens it'.

(52) The back wall of the alley which is enclosed by the two side walls. While the latter might be as narrow as four handbreadths the former might be long enough to admit of more than one courtyard door.

(53) Lit., 'which is an alley that is'.

(54) Sc. the length of the side walls.

(55) Lit., 'all of which its length is'.

(56) The length of the middle, or back wall.

(57) Infra 12b (cf. Shab. 131a). If courtyards (i.e., a minimum of two) were to open out from the middle wall, its width would be (cf. supra note 8) no less than eight handbreadths exclusive of the doorposts; and it would thus be twice as big as either of the side walls.

(58) How, in view of Abaye's quotation and inference, could he maintain that four handbreadths are sufficient for the width of an alley wall?

(59) Lit., 'that he opens it'.

(60) Though the back wall is less than four handbreadths in length it is possible, where the side walls are four handbreadths in length, to open a door that is four handbreadths wide in each corner where the two side walls respectively meet the back wall.

(61) So MS.M. reading rntu.

(62) Var. lec., Abba (Asheri).

(63) Into the alley.

(64) Lit., 'to permit it'.

(65) Cf. supra p. 26, n. 16.

(66) Lit., 'until there is'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 5b

is less than four cubits [in width] it may be regarded as a side-post¹ and no other post is required to effect the ritual fitness of the alley, [but if it is] four cubits [wide] it is deemed to be [a part of the structure of the] alley, and² another post is required to effect its ritual fitness'.³ Where, however, does one put up that '[other] post'? If it be attached to the projection,⁴ would not one be merely adding to it?⁵ — R. Papa replied: One puts it upon the other side.⁶ R. Huna son of R. Joshua said: It may even be maintained that it⁷ is attached to the projection⁴ but it is made bigger⁸ or smaller.⁹ R. Huna son of R. Joshua stated: This¹⁰ has been said only in respect of [an entrance to] an alley [that was no less than] eight [cubits in width],¹¹ but where [the entrance to] an alley is seven [cubits wide],¹² Sabbath ritual fitness is effected¹³ because¹⁴ the portion built-up¹⁵ is longer than the breach. [This ruling is inferred] a minori ad majus from [the law relating to] a courtyard: If a courtyard¹⁶ [the movement of objects in which on the Sabbath] cannot be rendered permissible¹⁷ by means of a side-post and a cross-beam¹⁸ is nevertheless deemed fit¹³ [for such movements] where its built-up portions¹⁵ are larger than its broken [parts],¹⁹ how much more then should an alley, where [such movements] may be rendered permissible by means of a side-post and a crossbeam,²⁰ be deemed fit¹³ when²¹ the built-up portion¹⁵ [across its entrance] is larger than its open [part]. But is not a courtyard, however, different²² [from an alley]²³ since a gap of ten cubits²⁴ [was also allowed in it]?²⁵ Then how can one apply²⁶ [the same ruling] to an alley where only a gap of four cubits²⁷ [was allowed]?²⁸ — R. Huna son of R. Joshua holds the opinion that in an alley also a gap of ten cubits is allowed.²⁴ But whose view has been under discussion?²⁹ [Obviously that] of R. Huna;³⁰ and R. Huna, surely, is of the opinion, [is he not,] that only a gap of four cubits [is allowed in an alley]?³¹ R. Huna son of R. Joshua only stated his own view.³²

R. Ashi said: It may be maintained that even [where the entrance to] an alley was eight [cubits wide] no side-post is required,³³ since, whatever your assumption [might be, the ritual fitness of the alley cannot be affected]. For if the built portion is bigger³⁴ [the movement of objects in the alley would] be permitted by [reason of the fact that] the built portion [across the entrance] is larger than the opening; and if the open section is bigger³⁵ [the projection]³⁶ might be regarded as a side-post.³⁷ What [other possible objection can] you submit? That both³⁸ might be exactly alike?³⁹ [But such an assumption] would amount to an uncertainty in respect of a Rabbinical enactment,⁴⁰ and in any uncertainty appertaining to a Rabbinical enactment the more lenient course is followed.⁴¹

R. Hanin b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: As to a breach that was made in an alley

- (1) Even if originally it was put there for some other purpose.
 - (2) Unless that projection was especially constructed to serve as a side-post to the entrance.
 - (3) v. supra 5a for notes.
 - (4) Lit., 'put up with it'.
 - (5) Thus merely extending the projection further along the width of the alley and giving it a much greater resemblance to a proper wall.
 - (6) The side wall opposite.
 - (7) The side-post.
 - (8) Longer or wider than the front of the projection, so that its nature cannot be mistaken and no one could regard it as an extension of the projection.
 - (9) Shorter or narrower (cf. previous note).
 - (10) The ruling of Rami b. Hama in the name of R. Huna, supra 5a ad fin.
 - (11) In which case a projection of the width of four cubits would cover no more than half of its width.
 - (12) So that a projection of the size mentioned (v. previous note) would cover its greater part.
 - (13) Lit., 'is permitted'.
 - (14) Though the projection cannot be regarded as a side-post.
 - (15) Lit., '(which) stands'.
 - (16) Sc. a square enclosure into which houses open out (v. Tosaf. s.v. , and cf. Rashi).
 - (17) Where its wall that faced a public domain collapsed completely.
 - (18) Though these means are effective in the case of an alley.
 - (19) Even though the gaps are many and distributed among all its walls, the court remains ritually fit if the total length of the unbroken parts exceeds that of the gaps.
 - (20) If placed at the entrance that faced a public domain (cf. supra n. 8).
 - (21) In the absence of a side-post and cross-beam.
 - (22) Lit., 'what of the courtyard'.
 - (23) Sc. some of the laws relating to the former are much less restrictive than those of the latter.
 - (24) Lit., 'its breach by ten'.
 - (25) Of course it is; the freedom of movement in the courtyard is not affected by such a gap.
 - (26) Lit., 'wilt thou say'.

(27) Lit., 'whose breach by four'.

(28) As in the case of an alley, the law was restricted in respect of the size of a gap so it might also have been restricted as regards permissibility of movement where the built portion is larger than the gap. How then (cf. supra note 14) could a law relating to an alley be inferred from one relating to a courtyard?

(29) Lit., 'according to whom do we say', sc. to whose ruling was the argument, a minori ad majus, applied?

(30) A disciple of Rab and teacher of R. Huna son of R. Joshua who (supra 5a) quoted his master.

(31) Infra. How then could this view be reconciled with the inference of R. Huna son of R. Joshua?

(32) Sc. while accepting R. Huna's ruling in the case of an entrance that was no less than eight cubits in width he disagreed with it on the strength of the argument he advanced in the case of one of the width of seven.

(33) Where there was a projection of four cubits in width from one of the side walls across a part of the entrance.

(34) I.e., if the measurement of the projection was on a generous scale so that the so-called 'four cubits' really represented a higher figure, and the remaining space was in fact less than four cubits in width.

(35) Cf. previous note mutatis mutandis.

(36) Since it is in reality less than four cubits.

(37) And the movement of objects would again be permitted.

(38) The width of the projection and that of the opening.

(39) So that (a) the projection is four cubits wide and, therefore, unsuitable as a side-post and (b) the built section is not larger than the gap which is also four cubits wide.

(40) The prohibition to move objects in an alley on the Sabbath day is not Pentateuchal but Rabbinical.

(41) Consequently, 'no side-post is required'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 6a

[if it was made] in a side [wall, a gap] of ten cubits is permissible,¹ [but if it was] in the front [wall,² only a gap] of four cubits is allowed.³ Wherein, however, does a side wall differ [from the front wall] that [in the case of the former] a gap of ten cubits is allowed?¹ [Presumably] because one can say⁴ [that the gap] is an entrance, [but then] could not one say also [when it is made] in the front wall that it is an entrance? R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: [The ruling⁵ applies to a case,] for instance, where the breach was made in a corner, since people do not make an entrance in a corner. R. Huna, however, ruled: The one as well as the other⁶ [is subject to the limit] of four cubits. And so, in fact, did R. Huna say to R. Hanan b. Raba:⁷ 'Do not dispute with me, for Rab once happened to visit Damharia⁸ and actually gave a decision in accordance with my view'.⁵ 'Rab', the other replied, 'found an open field and put a fence round it'.⁹

R. Nahman b. Isaac remarked: Reason is on the side of R. Huna.¹⁰ For it was stated: 'A crooked alley,¹¹ Rab ruled, is subject to the same law as one that is open on both sides,¹² but Samuel ruled: 'It is subject to the law of a closed one'.¹³ Now with what case are we dealing here? If it be suggested: with [one where the passage through the bend is] wider than ten cubits, would Samuel in such circumstances [it may be retorted] rule that 'it is subject to the law of a closed one'?¹⁴ Consequently¹⁵ [it must be conceded that the width of the communication passage is] within [the limit of] ten cubits, and yet Rab ruled that it 'is subject to the same laws as one that is open on both sides' — From which¹⁶ it definitely follows that [the permissibility of] a breach in a side [wall] of an alley is limited to four cubits.¹⁷ And R. Hamm¹⁸ b. Raba?¹⁹ — There²⁰ it is different,²¹ since many people make their way through it.²²

[This]²³ then implies that R. Huna²⁴ is of the opinion that even if not many people make their way through it²⁵ [a breach of no more than four cubits is allowed], but why should this be different from the ruling of R. Ammi and R. Assi?²⁶ — There [it is a case] where ridges [of the broken wall] remained,²⁷ but here, [it is one] where there were no ridges.²⁸ Our Rabbis taught: How is a road through a public domain²⁹ to be provided with an 'erub?³⁰ The shape of a doorway is made at one end,³¹ and a side-post and³² cross-beam, [are fixed] at the other.³¹ Hanania, however, stated: Beth Shammai ruled: A door is made at the one end³¹ as well as at the other³¹ and it must be locked as soon as one goes out or enters, and Beth Hillel ruled: A door is made at one end and a side-post and a cross-beam at the other.

May an 'erub, however, be lawfully provided for a public domain? Was it not in fact taught,³³ 'A more [lenient rule] than this³⁴ did R. Judah lay down:

- (1) Lit., 'from its side by ten'; if the gap is not wider, the Sabbatic ritual fitness of the alley is not affected.
 - (2) Sc. the wall that was built across a portion of the entrance to reduce its original width to the permitted maximum of ten cubits.
 - (3) Lit., 'from its top by four'. Cf. supra n. 1.
 - (4) Lit., 'that he said'.
 - (5) That no larger gap than one of four cubits was allowed.
 - (6) In whatever wall the breach was made.
 - (7) Read Hanin b. Raba; cf. infra p. 31, n. 6.
 - (8) In the neighbourhood of Sura; Obermeyer, p. 298.
 - (9) Metaph. The people of Damharia were ignorant and careless in the observance of the Sabbath laws, and, in order to keep them away from further transgression, additional restrictions were imposed upon them. Elsewhere, however, even a breach of ten cubits might be allowed.
 - (10) V. supra nn. 5 and 6.
 - (11) One in the shape of an "L" each arm of which opens out into a public domain.
 - (12) Sc. as if both sides of each arm opened out into a public domain. Consequently, the side of each arm that actually opens out into the public domain must be furnished with side-posts or cross-beam while the opposite side terminating in the angle where the two arms meet must be furnished with a sort of framework that would give the passage of communication the shape of a doorway. (V. Rashi and cf. Tosaf. s.v. CR).
 - (13) The bend or angle of contact between the arms being regarded as the termination and closure of each and the side-posts or cross-beam at the two main entrances from the public domain are sufficient to effect the Sabbatic ritual fitness of the alley.
 - (14) Obviously not. Such a wide passage of communication could not possibly be treated as a closing wall.
 - (15) Lit., 'but, not?'
 - (16) Since Rab regards an opening that is narrower than ten cubits as a breach that impairs the Sabbatic ritual fitness of an alley, though that opening is not in a front wall adjoining a public domain.
 - (17) In agreement with the view of R. Huna.
 - (18) So Bomb. ed. and supra 5b ad fin. Cur. edd. 'Hanan'.
 - (19) Var. lec. 'Abba' (MS.M. and Asheri). How, it is asked, could he, in view of R. Nahman b. Isaac's submission, maintain that in a side wall, a breach of ten cubits is permitted?
 - (20) A communication passage between the two arms of a crooked alley.
 - (21) From a breach in a side wall.
 - (22) Hence the limit to a width of four cubits. Through a breach in a side wall, however, not many people pass and the limit of permissibility is, therefore, extended to ten cubits.

(23) The reply just given on behalf of R. Hanin b. Raba. Since it was laid down that he limits the width of the communication passage in a crooked alley to four cubits only because many people pass through it, he presumably allows a breach of ten cubits where only few people pass.

(24) Who differed from him.

(25) If the gap opened out, for instance, to broken ground or an unsanitary area.

(26) Who (supra 5a) do allow a breach of ten cubits.

(27) The wall did not collapse completely and a height of three or four handbreadths of it remained, so that it is not very easy to use the breach as an entrance.

(28) The passage through such a gap being easy, people would be likely to use it if it were wide enough. Hence the limit to four cubits.

(29) Such a road must pass from one end of the town to the other and must be sixteen cubits in width, while the town through which it passes must have no surrounding wall and be inhabited by no less than six hundred thousand people.

(30) V. Glos.

(31) Lit., , 'from here'.

(32) Var. lec. 'or' (Alfasi and Asheri).

(33) Shab. 6a, 117a, infra 12a.

(34) The one mentioned earlier in the context (v. previous note) where a covered space was under consideration.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 6b

If a man had two houses on the two sides [respectively] of a public domain he may¹ construct one side-post [on any of the houses] on one side and another on its other side or one cross-beam on the one side [of any of the houses] and another on its other side and then he may move things about² in the space between them;³ but they⁴ said to him: A public domain cannot be provided with an 'erub in such a manner'?⁵ And should you reply that it cannot be provided with an 'erub 'in such a manner',⁶ but that it may be provided with one by means of doors, surely, [it can be retorted,] did not Rabbah b. Bar Hana⁷ state in the name of R. Johanan that Jerusalem,⁸ were 'it not that its gates were closed at night,⁹ would have been subject to the restrictions¹⁰ of a public domain; and 'Ulla too has stated that the city gateways of Mahuza,¹¹ were it not for the fact that their doors were closed at night, would have been subject to the restriction of a public domain?¹² — Rab Judah replied: It is this that was meant: How is an 'erub to be provided for alleys that open out at both ends into a public domain? The shape of a doorway is made at one end and a side-post and¹³ cross-beam, at the other.

It was stated: Rab said: The halachah¹⁴ is in agreement with the first Tanna,¹⁵ and Samuel said: The halachah is in agreement with Hanania.¹⁶

The question was raised: According to Hanania's ruling in the name of Beth Hillel, is it necessary to lock [the single door of the alley] or not? — Come and hear what Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: It is not necessary to lock it; and so also said R. Mattenah in the name of Samuel: It is not necessary to lock it.

Some there are who read: R. Mattenah stated: 'I myself was once concerned in such a case and

Samuel told me that there was no need to lock [the door]'.¹⁷

R. 'Anan was asked: Is it necessary to lock [the door of an alley] or not?¹⁸ He replied: Come and see the [alley] gateways of Nehardea¹⁹ which are half buried in the ground²⁰ and Mar Samuel continually passes through²¹ [these gates] and yet never raised any objection.²² R. Kahana said: Those were [partially] closed.²³

When R. Nahman came²⁴ he ordered the earth to be removed.²⁵ Does this then imply that R. Nahman is of the opinion that [alley doors] must be locked?²⁶ — No; provided they are capable of being closed [Sabbatic ritual fitness is effected] even though they are not actually closed.

There was a certain crooked alley at Nehardea upon which were imposed the restriction of Rab and the restriction of Samuel, and doors were ordered²⁷ [to be fixed at its bends].²⁸ 'The restriction of Rab' who ruled that [a crooked alley] 'is subject to the same law as one that is open on both sides'; but [as] Rab in fact stated: 'The halachah is in agreement with the first Tanna'²⁹ [the second restriction was applied] in agreement with Samuel who stated: 'The halachah is in agreement with Hanania'. And [as] Samuel in fact ruled [that a crooked alley] 'is subject to the law of a closed one'³⁰ [the first restriction was applied] in agreement with Rab who ruled that '[a crooked alley] is subject to the same law as one that is open at both ends'.

Do we, however, adopt the restrictions of two³¹ [authorities who differ from one another]?³² Was it not in fact taught:³³ The halachah is always in agreement with Beth Hillel, but he who wishes to act in agreement with the ruling of Beth Shammai may do so, and he who wishes to act according to the view of Beth Hillel may do so; [he, however, who adopts] the more lenient rulings of Beth Shammai and the more lenient rulings of Beth Hillel is a wicked man, [while of the man who adopts] the restrictions of Beth Shammai and the restrictions of Beth Hillel Scripture said: But the fool walketh in darkness.³⁴ A man should rather act³⁵ either in agreement with Beth Shammai both in their lenient and their restrictive rulings or in agreement with Beth Hillel in both their lenient and their restrictive rulings?³⁶

(Now is not this³⁷ self-contradictory? You said: 'The halachah is always in agreement with Beth Hillel, and then you [proceed to] say: 'But he who wishes to act in agreement with the ruling of Beth Shammai may do so'! — This is no difficulty; the latter statement³⁸ [was made] before [the issue of] the bath kol³⁹ while the former³⁸ [was made] after [the issue of] the bath kol.³⁹ And if you prefer I might reply: Both the former and the latter statements⁴⁰ [were made] after [the issue of] the bath kol

- (39) V. Glos. and cf. infra 13b. The bath kol announced that the halachah was always in agreement with Beth Hillel.
- (40) Lit., 'that and that'.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 7a

[but the latter] represents¹ [the view of] R. Joshua who does not recognize the authority² of a bath kol.³ And if you prefer I might reply: It is this that was meant:⁴ Whenever you come across⁵ two Tannas and two Amoras who differ from one another in the manner of the disputes between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, a man should not act either in accordance with the lenient ruling of the one Master and the lenient ruling of the other Master, nor in accordance with the restriction of the one and the restriction of the other, but either in accordance with the lenient and restrictive ruling of the other or in accordance with the lenient and restrictive ruling of the other.)

At all events, [however, does not the original] difficulty⁶ [remain]? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: All the restrictions were imposed in accordance with the views of Rab, for R. Huna stated in the name of Rab, ‘The halachah [is in agreement with the first Hillel but no such ruling is given [in actual practice]’.⁷

According to R. Adda b. Ahabah, however, who, citing Rab, stated, ‘The halachah [agrees with the first Tanna] and this is also the ruling to be followed in practice,’ what can be said [in reply to the objection raised]⁸ — R. Shezbi replied: We do not adopt the restrictions of two [authorities who differ from one another] only⁹ where [their views] are mutually contradictory¹⁰ as, for instance, in the case of the ‘backbone and skull’; for we learned,¹¹ ‘If the backbone or skull [of a corpse] were defective [it does not impart levitical uncleanness by overshadowing];¹² and how much [is deemed to be] a defect in a backbone? Beth Shammai ruled: Two vertebrae, and Beth Hillel ruled: One vertebra; and in the case of a skull, Beth Shammai ruled: [A hole] as large as that made by a drill,¹³ and Beth Hillel ruled: One that would cause a living person to die’;¹⁴ and Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel, ‘And the respective rulings¹⁵ apply also¹⁶ in the case of trefah’;¹⁷ but where [the views] are not mutually contradictory¹⁸ we may well adopt¹⁹ [the restrictions or relaxations of two authorities].

[Against the contention that] where [the views of two authorities] are mutually contradictory we do not adopt [the restrictions of both], R. Mesharsheya raised [the following] objection. [Was it not taught:]²⁰ It once happened that R. Akiba gathered [the fruit of] an ethrog²¹ on the first of Shebat²² and subjected it to two tithes,²³ one²⁴ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai²⁵ and the other²⁶ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel?²⁷ — R. Akiba was uncertain of his tradition,²⁸ not knowing whether Beth Hillel said the first of Shebat or the fifteenth of Shebat and, therefore, he subjected himself to both restrictions.²⁹

R. Joseph sat before R. Huna and in the course of the session³⁰ he stated: Rab Judah laid down in the name of Rab that they³¹ differed only where [an alley opens out] into a camp³² on the one side and into a camp on the other,³³ or into a highway³⁴ on the one side and into a highway on the other,³³ but [where there was] a camp on one side and fields³⁵ on the other,³³ or fields on either side, the frame of a doorway is made at one end and a side-post and cross-beam at the other.³⁶ Now [that it has been said that ‘where there was] a camp on one side and fields on the other’ [it is sufficient if] ‘the frame of a doorway is made at one end and a side-post and cross-beam at the other’ [was it at all] necessary [to state the case of] ‘fields on either side’? — It is this that was meant: If there was a camp on one side and fields on the other it is the same³⁷ as [if there were] fields on either side. He³⁸ then concluded in the name of Rab Judah:³⁹ If the alley⁴⁰ terminated⁴¹ in a backyard,⁴² no [construction]⁴³ whatever is necessary.⁴⁴

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: That statement of Rab Judah⁴⁵ represents the view of Samuel; for if [it be maintained that it is] that of Rab, a twofold contradiction between Rab's statements would arise.¹ For R. Jeremiah b. Abba laid down on the authority of Rab that if an alley was broken along its full [width]² into a courtyard, and a breach³ was made in the courtyard [wall] over against it, the courtyard is ritually fit⁴ but the alley is forbidden. But why [should this be so]? Should it not rather be [subject to the same law] as that of an alley that terminated in a backyard?⁵ — The other replied: I do not know,⁶ but it once happened that at Dura di-ra'awatha⁷ an alley terminated in a backyard,⁸ and when I came⁹ to Rab Judah [to ask his opinion] he ruled that it required no contrivance whatsoever.¹⁰ If, therefore, a contradiction [arises if Rab Judah's statement] is ascribed to Rab, let it be [conceded to have been made] in the name of Samuel¹¹ and no difficulty whatever would arise.

Now, however, that R. Shesheth said to R. Samuel b. Abba or, as others say, to R. Joseph b. Abba: I may explain to you — [that Rab's ruling is dependent on whether] an 'erub has been prepared or not,¹² no contradiction between the two statements of Rab does now arise.¹³ For one refers to a case¹⁴ where the residents of the courtyard joined in an 'erub with those of the alley while the other refers to one¹⁴ where they did not join them in an 'erub.¹⁵

(1) Lit., 'a difficulty of Rab upon Rab in two'.

(2) Sc. its entire back wall collapsed.

(3) Of less than ten cubits in width.

(4) Lit., 'permitted', as regards the movement of objects on the Sabbath. The breach is regarded as an entrance since portions of the courtyard wall remained on both sides. The ritual unfitness of the alley cannot affect the courtyard since the residents of the former have no right of passage through the latter.

(5) Rab's reason, it is now assumed, is that the alley, owing to the breach in the courtyard, is exposed on two sides to public domains. Now since Rab Judah spoke of a backyard (which, as it has no inhabitants to claim right of passage through the alley, cannot affect its ritual fitness) and not of a courtyard (which is inhabited), it follows that if an alley terminated in the latter, it becomes ritually unfit on account of the right of passage through it of the inhabitants of the courtyard. Rab, on the other hand, spoke of a courtyard and not of a backyard. And, since he does not mention the right of passage but the breach that was made, it follows that the exposure of the alley on two sides to public domains is the only reason for its unfitness, and that the right of passage of the inhabitants of the courtyard does not affect its fitness. The two principles then that were laid down by Rab Judah, viz. (a) that the opening out of an alley into a public domain through a backyard does not destroy its ritual fitness and (b) that the opening also of a courtyard into an alley does destroy its fitness, are thus opposed by those of Rab who maintains (a) that the opening out of an alley into a public domain through a courtyard or, for the same reason, through a backyard does destroy its ritual fitness and (b) that the opening of a courtyard into an alley does not destroy it.

(6) From whom Rab Judah received the ruling.

(7) Shephardville. V. Rashi and Jast. Aliter: Diridotis, a famous commercial town on the Tigris (Wiesner, Scholien).

(8) That had a breach in the wall that faced the alley.

(9) ht, tu, so MS.M. Cur. edd. t, tu.

(10) Lit., 'and he did not cause it to require anything', at the backyard breach. The contrivance at the other end that abutted on the public domain was sufficient.

(11) Another teacher of Rab Judah.

(12) Lit., 'here that they mixed; there that they did not mix'. Where the residents of the courtyard joined the residents of the alley in the 'erub (v. Glos.), the latter is ritually fit, but if they did not join, the fitness of the latter is destroyed, not on account of the breach in the courtyard which exposed the alley to a public domain (as has been assumed supra), but on account of the absence of the joint 'erub. The fitness of the courtyard, however, is not affected since the breach between it and the alley, though extending over the full width of the latter, extends only over a portion of its own width and may, therefore, be regarded as a doorway.

(13) Lit., 'of Rab upon that of Rab also, there is no difficulty'.

(14) Lit., 'here'.

(15) Rab's ruling reported by R. Jeremiah b. Abba (supra 7b ab init.) would accordingly refer to a case where no joint 'erub was made; the incident at Dura di-ra'awatha would refer to one where such an 'erub was made; and Rab Judah's report in the name of Rab (supra 7a ad fin.) would be in agreement with Rab's view, even if no joint 'erub was made, since a backyard has no residents whose right of passage could affect the ritual fitness of the alley.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 8a

According to our previous assumption, however, that [Rab and Samuel] are in disagreement irrespective of whether a joint 'erub was made¹ or not,² on what principle do they differ where a joint 'erub was made³ and on what principle do they differ where no such 'erub was made?⁴ — Where no joint 'erub was made they differ [on the question whether a gap] that has the appearance [of a door] from without but is even [with the walls] within⁵ [may be regarded as a door];⁶ and where a joint 'erub has been made⁷ they differ on a principle that underlies a statement of R. Joseph. For R. Joseph stated: This⁸ has been taught only [in respect of all alley] that terminated in the middle of the backyard⁹ but if it terminated at the side of the backyard¹⁰ [all movement of objects in the alley on the Sabbath is forbidden.

Rabbah said: The statement¹¹ [that termination] at the middle of a backyard is permitted, applies only [where the gaps¹² were] not facing one another, but if they were facing one another [movement of objects in the alley on the Sabbath] is forbidden.

R. Mesharsheya said: The statement¹¹ [that where the gaps¹² were] not facing one another [the use of the alley] is permitted, applies only to¹³ a backyard that belonged to many people, but [not to] a backyard of an individual who might sometimes reconsider [his attitude] towards it and build houses in it¹⁴ and the alley would thus be one that terminated at the sides of a backyard [in which the movement of objects on the Sabbath] is forbidden.

Whence, however, is it inferred that a distinction is made between a backyard belonging to many people and one belonging to an individual? — From what Rabin b. R. Adda stated in the name of R. Isaac: It once occurred that one side of an alley terminated in the sea and the other terminated in a rubbish heap,¹⁵ and when the facts were submitted to Rabbi¹⁶ he neither permitted nor forbade [the movement of objects on the Sabbath] in that alley.¹⁷ [He did not declare it] forbidden because partitions¹⁸ in fact existed, [and he did not declare it] permitted since the possibility had to be considered that the rubbish heap might be removed or the sea might throw up alluvium.¹⁹ Now²⁰ is it necessary to take into consideration the possibility that a rubbish heap might be removed? Have we not in fact learnt:²¹ ‘If a rubbish heap in a public domain was ten handbreadths high,²² objects from a window above it may be thrown on to it on the Sabbath’?²³ Thus it clearly follows that a distinction is made between a public rubbish heap and a private one,²⁴ and so here also a distinction may be made between a backyard that belonged to many people and one that belonged to one person. And what [was the view of] the Rabbis²⁵ [on the question of the alley]? R. Joseph b. Abdimi replied: A Tanna taught that the Sages forbade it. R. Nahman stated: The halachah is in agreement with the ruling of the Sages.

Some there are who say: R. Joseph b. Abdimi stated: A Tanna taught that the Sages permitted it, and R. Nahman said: The halachah is not in agreement with the ruling of the Sages.

Meremar partitioned off Sura²⁶ by means of nets,²⁷ because, he said, the possibility must be considered that the sea might throw up alluvium.²⁸

A certain crooked alley²⁹ once existed at Sura [and the residents of one of its arms] folded up some matting and fixed it in its bend.³⁰ This [arrangement], said R. Hisda, is neither in agreement with the view of Rab nor with that of Samuel. According to Rab, who ruled that the law of such [an alley] is the same as that of one that is open at both ends, [a structure in] the shape of a doorway is required; and [even] according to Samuel who ruled that it is subject to the law of a closed one [it must be understood that] his ruling applied only where a proper side-post [had been fixed],³¹ but such [matting], since the wind blows on it and throws it about, is useless. If a pin, however, was inserted therein and it was thus fastened [to the wall] it may be regarded as a proper partition.³²

[Reverting to] the main text: ‘R. Jeremiah b. Abba laid down on the authority of Rab that if an alley was broken along its full [width] into a courtyard, and a breach was made in the courtyard [wall] over against it, the courtyard is ritually fit but the alley is forbidden.’³³ Said Rabbah b. ‘Ulla to R. Bebai b. Abaye, ‘Master, is not this ruling³⁴ [one that already appeared in] a Mishnah of ours:³⁵ [If the full width of a wall of] a small courtyard was broken down [so that the yard now fully opens out] into a large courtyard, [movement of objects on the Sabbath] is permitted in the large courtyard but forbidden in the small one because the gap is regarded as an entrance to the former?³⁶ — The other replied: If [our information had been derived] from there³⁷ it might have been assumed that the ruling applied only where not many people tread,³⁸ but that where many people tread³⁹ even the courtyard also [is forbidden].⁴⁰ But did we not learn this⁴¹ also: A courtyard into which many people enter from one side and go out from the other [is deemed to be] a public domain in respect of levitical defilement⁴² and a private domain in respect of the Sabbath?⁴³ — If [the ruling⁴⁴ were to be derived] from there it might have been assumed to apply only where the gaps were not facing one another⁴⁵

- (1) Between the residents of the alley and those of the courtyard.
 - (2) Sc. that (a) Rab forbids the movement of objects in the alley, even if a joint 'erub was made, on the ground of the exposure of the alley through the breach to a public domain; that (b) only the breach causes the prohibition but not the right of passage of the courtyard residents through the alley; that (c) Rab Judah's ruling (supra 7a ad fin.) represents the view of Samuel who, if a joint 'erub was made, permits the use of the alley despite the breach (as is evident from his decision in the case of a backyard which has no residents and which in respect of the laws under discussion has the same status as a courtyard that has residents who joined those of the alley in their 'erub) and that (d) where no joint 'erub was made between the residents of the courtyard and the alley Samuel forbids the use of the latter even where there was no breach (as follows from the fact that in his permission he mentioned a backyard, which has no residents, and not a courtyard which has residents).
 - (3) And the prohibition could be due to the breach only. Why does Rab regard the alley as exposed through that breach to the public domain and why does not Samuel regard it so?
 - (4) Why, since no breach was made, does Samuel rule that the residents of the courtyard cause, and why does Rab rule that they do not cause the prohibition of the use of the alley?
 - (5) Where, for instance, the courtyard is wider than the alley. The gap occasioned by the collapse of the complete wall of the latter appears as a doorway when viewed from the former.
 - (6) Rab is of the opinion that, since the gap has the appearance of a door when viewed from the courtyard and since it is not wider than ten cubits, it may well be regarded as a door for the residents of the alley also; while Samuel, owing to the fact that when viewed from the alley it has the appearance of a breach, does not recognize it as a door.
 - (7) And the question of permissibility arises on account of the gap in the wall of the courtyard.
 - (8) That no provision whatever is necessary in the case of an alley that terminated in a backyard (supra 7a ad fin.).
 - (9) So that the shape of a door remained at least on the side facing the backyard.
 - (10) In which case one side of the yard appears like a continuation of the side of the alley, and no shape of a door remains even when viewed from the yard.
 - (11) Lit., 'that which you said'.
 - (12) In (a) the wall between the alley and the yard and (b) in the yard wall that adjoined the public domain.
 - (13) Lit., 'he did not say them, but'.
 - (14) Against that portion of the wall which formed the side-post, and thus level the side of the yard with the side of the alley and give it the appearance of one extended wall.
 - (15) The third side was closed and the fourth was open on a public domain and duly furnished with a side-post and cross-beam.
 - (16) R. Judah I, compiler of the Mishnah.
 - (17) Lit., 'he did not say about it, either permission or prohibition.'

- (19) I.e., it may recede, in consequence of which possibility either of the partitions might disappear. Infra 99b.
- (20) This is the conclusion of the argument that a distinction is made between the property of several people and that of one individual.
- (21) Infra 99b.
- (22) And is consequently subject to the laws of a private domain.
- (23) The possibility of a reduction in its height, which would turn it into a public domain, not being considered.
- (24) The possibility of reduction being taken into consideration in respect of the latter (with which case Rabbi had to deal) but not in that of the former (spoken of infra 99b).
- (25) Rabbi's contemporaries.
- (26) From the river or canal (cf. B.B., Sonc. ed., p. 294, n. 5 and text) which ran along the backs of alleys that at their other ends opened out into a public domain.
- (27) The river, or canal bank was not regarded by him as a proper partition.
- (28) And people might not be aware of the difference and would continue to use the alleys on the Sabbath day as before.
- (29) Cf. supra 6a.
- (30) While a side-post was fixed at their entrance, the residents of the other arm providing no such post to their entrance.
- (31) At the entrance to each arm (Rashi). The view of Rashi's teacher is that a third side-post also must be fixed at the bend.
- (32) Lit., 'he fastened it'.
- (33) Supra 7b ab init. q.v. notes, where it was explained that this was a case where no joint 'erub was made between the residents of the alley and those of the courtyard and that the prohibition of the use of the former was due to the right of passage through it of the residents of the latter.
- (34) Cf. previous note.
- (35) V. infra 92a.
- (36) Since the gap, when viewed from the large court, is flanked on either side by the remaining portions of the fallen wall, which may be viewed as side-posts. It cannot be treated as an entrance of the small courtyard because the side portions of the wall cannot be seen from its interior where the opening has the appearance of a wide gap extending from wall to wall. Now, since it is obvious that the conditions of the alley and courtyard spoken of by Rab are analogous to those of the large and small courtyards dealt with in the Mishnah quoted, what need was there for Rab to issue a ruling that was a mere repetition of a Mishnah?
- (37) The Mishnah quoted.
- (38) As in the case dealt with in the Mishnah where the breach occurred between two courtyards and the larger one remained closed on the side of the public domain.
- (39) The case spoken of by Rab, where the courtyard was broken both on the side of the alley and on that of the public domain. People in the public domain would naturally use the courtyard as a short cut and might thus turn it into a sort of public thoroughfare.
- (40) Hence the necessity for Rab's ruling.
- (41) That the use of a courtyard by the public does not affect its status as a private domain in respect of the Sabbath laws.
- (42) Sc. any uncertainty of defilement is to be regarded as clean.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 8b

but not where they were facing each other.¹ According to Rabbah, however, who ruled [that a courtyard is] forbidden where the gaps were facing each other,² how would he explain Rab's ruling? [Obviously, that it referred to a case where the gaps were] not facing one another [but then the question arises again:] What need was there for³ two [rulings⁴ on the same subject]? — If [the rulings were derived] from there⁵ it might have been assumed to apply only to the throwing [of objects into it],⁶ but not to the moving [of them within it];⁷ hence we were informed [of Rab's ruling].⁸

It was stated:⁹ If an alley is constructed in the form of a centipede,¹⁰ the shape of a doorway, said Abaye, is made [at the entrance] of the major alley and all the others are rendered ritually fit by means of a side-post and cross-beam.¹¹ Said Raba to him: In agreement with whose view [is your ruling]? [If it is] in agreement with that of Samuel who ruled that [a crooked alley]¹² has the same law as one that is closed [at one end], why should it be necessary to have the shape of a doorway?¹³ And, furthermore, was there not once a crooked alley at Nehardea¹⁴ and [in providing for its ritual fitness] Rab's view also was taken into consideration?¹⁵ [The fact,] however, is, said Raba, that the shape of a doorway is made [at the entrance] of each minor alley¹⁶ on the one side¹⁷ while the other side¹⁸ [of each minor alley] is rendered ritually fit by means of a side-post and cross-beam.

Said R. Kahana b. Tahlifa in the name of R. Kahana b. Minyomi in the name of Rab Kahana b. Malkio who had it from R. Kahana the teacher of Rab [others say that R. Kahana b. Malkio is the same R. Kahana who was Rab's teacher]: If one side of an alley was long and the other short, [and the shortage is] less than four cubits, the cross-beam may be laid in a slanting position,¹⁹ [but if it is] four cubits the cross-beam is laid only at right angles²⁰ to the shorter side. Raba said: In either case²¹ the beam must be laid only at right angles²⁰ to the shorter side; and I can give²² my reason and also²² theirs.²³ My reason is:²² [The erection of] a cross-beam was enacted²⁴ in order [to provide] a distinguishing mark,²⁵ and [a beam] in a slanting position provides no such mark.²⁶ Their²⁷ reason is:²⁸ [The object of] a cross-beam was to provide a partition,²⁹ and [a beam] in a slanting position is also a partition. R. Kahana remarked: As the ruling is reported in the name of Kahanas, I would say something about it. The rule³⁰ that the beam may be laid in a slanting position applies only where the slant was no longer than ten cubits, but if it was longer than ten cubits all agree that it is placed only at right angles to the shorter side.³¹

The question was asked: May the space under a cross-beam be used?³² Rab and R. Hiyya and R. Johanan replied: It is permitted to use the space under the beam; Samuel, R. Simeon b. Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Lakish replied: It is forbidden to use the space under the beam. May it be assumed that they³³ differ on the following principle? One Master³⁴ is of the opinion that a cross-beam serves the purpose of a distinguishing mark,³⁵ while the other Master³⁴ holds that the cross-beam serves the purpose of a partition?³⁶ — No; all may agree that a beam serves the purpose of a partition, but it is this principle on which they differ here. One Master³⁴ holds that the distinguishing mark [is to serve as such for those who are] from within,³⁷ and the other Master³⁴ holds that it is for those who are without.³⁸ And if you prefer I would reply: All agree that it serves the purpose of a partition, but it is this on which they differ here: One Master³⁴ holds that its inner edge [is deemed to] descend and close up [the entrance]³⁹ while the other Master³⁴ maintains that it is its outer edge [that is deemed to] descend and close it up.⁴⁰ R. Hisda stated: All agree that [the use of the space] between side-posts is forbidden.⁴¹

Rami b. Mama enquired of R. Hisda: What is the ruling where one Inserted two pins [respectively] in the two [extremities of the] walls of an alley on the outside⁴² and placed a beam on them?⁴³ The other replied: According to him who permits [elsewhere the use of the space under the cross-beam the use of the space here] is forbidden;⁴⁴ and according to him who forbids [the use elsewhere of such space,⁴⁵ the use of it here] is permitted.⁴⁶

Raba said: According to him also who forbids [the use of the space under the cross-beam the use of the alley here] is forbidden, since we require the beam to rest above the alley and this is not the case here.

R. Adda b. Mattena raised an objection against Raba:⁴⁷ If its⁴⁸ cross-beam

(4) Rab's and that of the Mishnah quoted.

(5) The Mishnah.

(6) Sc. that it is Pentateuchally regarded as a private domain and that consequently it is forbidden to throw any object from the public domain into it.

(7) Such movement being forbidden by an enactment of the Rabbis who imposed upon it the restrictions of a public domain.

(8) That the moving of objects within the courtyard is permitted.

(9) By Amoras.

(10) Sc. from a major alley that opens out into a public domain minor alleys branch out in the shape of the legs of a centipede, and these have two entrances each, one from the major alley and another from a public domain (Rashi), being built, however, in such a manner as to avoid the entrances of any two opposite alleys from facing one another (R. Tam). Should the entrances of two alleys be directly opposite each other they would be regarded as one long alley that opens out at both ends into public domains and would be subject to the more stringent laws that are applicable to such all alley. (V. Tosaf. s.v. hucn a.l.)

(11) Fixed at each of the entrances that open out into the public domains.

(12) Each of the minor alleys may be regarded as an arm of a crooked alley the other arm of which is formed by the major alley.

(13) At the entrance of the major alley. If the minor ones have the status of crooked alleys the major one also, for the same reason, should have the same status and be subject to the same laws.

(14) V. supra 6b.

(15) How then could Abaye rule that only the lenient ruling of Samuel was to be followed?

(16) Lit., 'to all of them'.

(17) That terminates in the major alley (Rashi).

(18) Terminating in the public domain (Rashi). R. Han.: 'on one side etc.'; i.e., the shape of the doorway and the side-post and cross-beam may respectively be set up on either side. V. Also Marginal Gloss.

- (19) One end on the longer and the other on the shorter side, and the alley may be used as far as the beam, i.e., to the termination of each side.
- (20) Lit., 'opposite', 'corresponding'.
- (21) Whether the difference between the lengths of the two walls of an alley was four cubits or less.
- (22) Lit., 'and I say'.
- (23) That of the authorities just mentioned.
- (24) Lit., 'what is the reason?'
- (25) Supra 5a.
- (26) Lit., 'there is no recognition', because the space adjoining the part of the longer wall which protrudes beyond the shorter one, not being enclosed by any wall on its other side, might be mistaken for a continuation of the public domain.
- (27) That of the authorities just mentioned.
- (28) Lit., 'and I say'.
- (29) Between the alley and the public domain.
- (30) Lit., 'that which you said'.
- (31) Since an entrance may not be wider than ten cubits.
- (32) Sc. in the same manner as the interior of the alley. This is a general question relating to any alley.
- (33) The two groups of authorities just mentioned.
- (34) Sc. each of the group.
- (35) Between the alley and public domain. As the mark is there, it is permitted to use the space under it.
- (36) The space under the beam being virtually covered so to speak with the imaginary downward extension of the beam, no use can be made of it.
- (37) The residents of the alley. As they see only the inner side, no use may be made of the space beyond the inner edge.
- (38) I.e., the people in the public domain; so that the whole of the space under the beam belongs to the alley and consequently may be used by the residents of the alley.
- (39) The space under the beam, being in consequence outside the alley, must be regarded as belonging to the public domain and its use must, therefore, be forbidden.
- (40) Cf. previous note mutatis mutandis.
- (41) Where no cross-beam but only a side-post had been put up. The plural (Ohj k) in the text applies to alleys in general, each single alley requiring no more than one side-post at its entrance (V. Rashi).
- (42) Sc. in the thicknesses of the walls, on either side of the entrance, that face the public domain.
- (43) So that the inner edge of the beam touches the walls of the alley while the rest of the beam lies outside. Is the alley, it is asked, rendered ritually fit for the Sabbath by such an arrangement?
- (44) Since the very reason for the permission to use the space under the beam, viz., that the outer edge of the beam is deemed to descend to the ground, is a reason here for the prohibition of the use of the entire interior of the alley. For if the outer edge is the limit of the partition, the thickness of the beam separates it from the alley and so invalidates it as a partition of it.
- (45) Because he maintains that it is the inner edge of the beam that constitutes the partition.
- (46) Since the inner edge does touch the walls of the alley and so forms a valid partition between the public domain and the alley.
- (47) And also against R. Hisda (h" ,).
- (48) Of an alley.

was drawn away¹ or suspended² [at a distance of] less than three handbreadths [from the walls of the alley] there is no need to provide another beam,³ [but if the distance was] three handbreadths another beam must be provided. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: [If the distance was] less than four handbreadths there is no need to provide another beam⁴ [but if it was] four handbreadths another beam must be provided.⁵ Does not 'drawn away' [mean that the beam was altogether] outside [the alley],⁶ and 'suspended' [that it was] within?⁷ No; both⁸ [refer to a beam] within the alley, but by 'drawn away' [was meant that the beam was drawn away] from one side,⁹ and by 'suspended' [that it was drawn away] from both sides.¹⁰ [As] it might have been assumed [that the law of] labud¹¹ is applied¹² [only where the beam is removed] from one side but not¹³ [when it is removed] from the two sides, hence we were informed [that in the latter case also the law of labud¹¹ applies]. R. Ashi¹⁴ replied: [The meaning is that the beam was] drawn away [from the walls] and also suspended. And how is this to be imagined? [That a man], for instance, inserted on the tops of the two side-walls of an alley respectively two slanting pins¹⁵ whose height¹⁶ is less than¹⁷ three handbreadths¹⁸ and whose slant also¹⁹ is less than three handbreadths.²⁰ [Since] it might be assumed that we call apply either the law of labud²¹ or that of habut,²¹ but not that of both labud and habut, hence we were informed [that both may also be applied]. R. Zakkai recited in the presence of R. Johanan: [The space] between the side-posts and beneath the cross-beam is subject to the laws of a karmelith.²² 'Go out', the other told him, 'recite this outside'.²³ Said Abaye: It stands to reason that the view of R. Johanan²⁴ [applies to the space] under the beam²⁵ but [that] between the side-posts²⁶ is forbidden. Raba, however, said: [The space] between the side-posts²⁶ is also permitted. Said Rabbi: Why²⁷ do I say this? Because when R. Dimi came²⁸ he reported in the name of R. Johanan: In a place²⁹ whose area is less than³⁰ four by four [handbreadths]³¹ it is permissible³² for both the people of the public domain and those of the private domain to rearrange their burdens,³³ provided only that they do not exchange them.³⁴ And Abaye?³⁵ — There³⁶ [it is a case] where [the place] was three handbreadths in height.³⁷ Said Abaye: Why²⁷ do I say this?³⁸ Because R. Hama b. Goria said in the name of Rab: [The space] within a gateway³⁹ requires⁴⁰ a special⁴¹ side-post to render it permissible.⁴² And should you suggest that [this⁴³ is one] where the area is four handbreadths by four,⁴⁴ surely, [it can be retorted] R. Hanin⁴⁵ b. Raba⁴⁵ stated on the authority of Rab: [The space] within a gateway, though it is less than four handbreadths by four, requires a special⁴⁶ side-post to render its use permitted. And Raba?⁴⁷ — There [it is a case where the alley] opens out into a karmelith.⁴⁸ Is this,⁴⁹ however, permitted [where the alley opens out] into a public domain? The native [then would be] in the earth and the stranger in the highest heavens?⁵⁰ Yes, the like⁵¹ has found its like and is aroused.⁵²

Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to Raba: Do you not uphold the view that [according to R. Johanan, the space] between side-posts is forbidden? Surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: If [a section of one side of] an alley was lined with side-posts⁵³ [fixed within distances of] less⁵⁴ than four [handbreadths⁵⁵ between one another, the question of its use] is dependent⁵⁶ on the dispute between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis.⁵⁷ [Now this obviously means, does it not, that] according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who ruled [that in respect of such distances the law of] labud is applied,⁵⁸ one is allowed to the [the alley from the interior thereof only] up to the inner edge of the innermost post⁵⁹ and that according to the Rabbis, who ruled

[that in respect of a distance of more than three handbreadths, the law of] labud is not applied,⁶⁰ one is allowed to use [the alley] up to the inner edge of the outermost post,⁶¹ but [the use of the space] between side-posts is unanimously⁶² forbidden?⁶³ And Raba?⁶⁴ — There also [it is a case] where [the alley] opens out into a karmelith. Would this, however, be permitted [where the alley opened out] into a public domain? The native [then would be] in the earth and the stranger in the highest heavens? — Yes, the like has found its like and is aroused.⁶⁵

- (1) From the alley walls. If, for instance, it was resting on pins driven into the external extremities of the alley walls on either side of the entrance.
 - (2) On a pole erected in the center of the entrance, the ends of the beam not reaching the walls, and hanging, so to speak, in the air.
 - (3) The space between the beam and the walls being so small it is deemed to be non-existent (v. Glos. s.v. labud).
 - (4) Cf. previous note. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel regards as labud (v. Glos.) any gap that is not wider than four handbreadths.

 - (18) According to the first Tanna.
 - (19) Sc. the distance between the walls and the extremity of the pin.
 - (20) And the beam was placed upon these projections so that it is removed from the walls both vertically and horizontally.
 - (21) V. Glos. Labud ('junction') might apply to the horizontal, and habut ('beating down') to the vertical gap.
 - (22) V. Glos. Consequently the free movement of objects in that space is forbidden on the Sabbath.
 - (23) An expression of disapproval. R. Johanan holds the view that the space mentioned is regarded as a part of the alley in which the free movement of objects is permitted.
 - (24) Cf. previous note.

- (33) Lit., 'to put on the shoulder'.
- (34) And thus lead people erroneously to assume that it is permitted to carry from a public domain into a private domain or vice versa. (Shab. 8b, infra 77a). For a similar reason (v. supra n. 10) the space between the side-posts, not being of sufficient size to constitute a domain of its own, assumes the same status as the spot spoken of by R. Johanan.
- (35) How can he maintain his view against this principle of R. Johanan?
- (36) R. Johanan's ruling.
- (37) Being a clearly defined spot it may be regarded as a 'free area'. The space between side-posts, however, being comparatively small and level with the ground, is not in any way distinguishable from the domains adjoining it; and, if its use were permitted, people would erroneously assume that it is permitted to carry objects from a public domain into a private domain or vice versa. Hence the prohibition.

- (44) I.e., large enough to constitute an independent domain to be Rabbinically forbidden.
- (45) Var. lec., 'R. Hama b. Gorias' (Shab. 9a).
- (46) Lit., 'another'.
- (47) How can he maintain his ruling in view of Abaye's argument?
- (48) V. Glos., fields for instance; so that a side-post is necessary to separate the space within the entrance, which is Rabbinically forbidden from the karmelith which adjoins it and which is also Rabbinically forbidden.
- (49) To use the space within the entrance even if no side-post is provided.
- (50) A proverbial paradox. The reverse surely should be expected. If an opening to a karmelith which is only a Rabbinically forbidden domain, requires a side-post how much more so one that opens into a public domain which is Pentateuchally forbidden
- (51) Lit., 'kind'.
- (52) Sc. the space within the entrance is in fact a karmelith, but as it is less than the prescribed size, it loses all its independent existence if it is situated between a private and a public domain, to neither of which it is akin and to neither of which it can be joined. If, however, it adjoins a karmelith on one side it is deemed to have regained its existence as a karmelith by being regarded as a part of the larger domain.
- (53) The first post being placed near the entrance, the second next to it, the third next to the second and so on.

- (56) Lit., 'we came'.
- (57) Supra.
- (58) Lit., 'we say labud' (v. Glos.).
- (59) Since all posts are deemed to be united into one single unit the space between this edge and the entrance of the alley is subject to the law of the 'space between the side-posts'.
- (60) So that each post is deemed to be a separate unit, and the alley's permissibility is consequently effected by means of the first post that is fixed nearest the entrance.

(61) Cf. previous note.

(62) Lit., 'that all the world', sc. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 9b

R. Ashi replied: [This¹ may refer to a case] for instance where [one side of the alley] was lined with side-posts [placed at distances of] less than four handbreadths [from one another] along four cubits [of its length]. According to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who ruled [that in respect of such distances the law of] labud is applied [the space bordered by the side-posts] is deemed to be [a proper] alley² which requires an additional side-post to render it permissible,³ and according to the Rabbis who ruled [that the law of] labud is not applied,⁴ no other side-post is required to render it permissible.⁵ But even according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel⁶ [why] should [not this alley⁷ be permitted]⁸ as [one having a side-post that may be] seen from without⁹ though it appears even¹⁰ within?¹¹ — Is not this explanation¹² required only in respect of a statement of R. Johanan?¹³ But, surely, when Rabin came¹⁴ he reported in the name of R. Johanan [that a post that may be] seen from without but appears even from within cannot be regarded as a valid side-post.

It was stated: [A post that] is seen from within but appears even from without¹⁵ is regarded as a valid side-post; but if it is seen from without and appears even from within¹⁶ [there is a difference of opinion between] R. Hiyya and R. Simeon b. Rabbi. One maintains that it is regarded as a valid side-post and the other maintains that it is not regarded as a valid side-post. You may conclude that it was R. Hiyya who maintained that 'it is regarded as a valid side-post'; for R. Hiyya taught:¹⁷ A wall of which one side recedes more than the other, whether [the recess can be] seen from without and appears even from within or whether it can be seen from within and appears even from without, may be regarded as [being provided with] a side-post.¹⁸ This is conclusive.

Did not R. Johanan, however, hear this?¹⁹ But [what you might contend is] that he did hear it and is not of the same opinion; [is it not then possible that] R. Hiyya also is not of the same opinion?²⁰ — What [a comparison is] this! It might well [be contended that] R. Johanan does not hold the same opinion [and that it was] for this reason that he did not teach it; but as regards R. Hiyya if it is a fact that he does not hold the same opinion, what need was there for him to teach it?²¹

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: [A post that is] seen from without though it appears even from within is regarded as a valid side-post.²² Said Rabbah: We, however, raised an objection against this traditional ruling: [If the full width of a wall of] a small courtyard was broken down [so that the yard now fully opens out] into a large courtyard, [movement of objects on the Sabbath] is permitted in the large one but forbidden in the small one because the gap is regarded as an entrance to the former.²³ Now, if this²⁴ is valid, should not the movement of objects in the small courtyard also be permitted on [the principle that the entrance may be] seen without²⁵ though it appears even from within? — R. Zera replied: [This is a case] where the walls of the small one project into the large one.²⁶ But why²⁷ should not the principle of labud²⁸ be applied so that the use of the smaller courtyard also might be²⁹ permitted?³⁰ And should you reply that [the walls]³¹ were too far apart,³² surely, [it may be retorted] did not R. Adda b. Abimi recite in the presence of R. Hanina:³³ [The ruling applies to a case where] the small courtyard was ten and the large one eleven cubits?³⁴ — Rabina replied: [This is a case] where [the projections] were removed by two handbreadths from one wall and by four from the other.³⁵ Then let labud be applied to one side and [thereby³⁶ the smaller courtyard would] be permitted?

(1) R. Johanan's statement that the question of the use of the alley under discussion is dependent on the dispute between R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis.

(2) Since a wall of four cubits in length (v. supra 5a) is sufficient to constitute an alley.

(3) The permissibility of the interior of the alley between the inner edge of the innermost post and the back wall is a matter on which Rashi and others differ.

(4) Where a distance or gap is more than three handbreadths.

(5) The outermost post forming, as in their opinion it does, a separate unit, serves as side-post for the entire alley including the four cubits length of space bordered by the other side-posts.

(6) Granted that the space bordered by the side-post constitutes an alley on its own.

(7) Sc. the space bordered by the side-posts (v. previous note).

(8) Without an extra side-post for itself.

(9) Since a side-post (and in the case under discussion, the first side-post) is usually drawn slightly forward to distinguish it from the wall to which it is attached.

(10) And cannot be distinguished from the alley wall.

(11) This ruling is enunciated presently.

(12) The one advanced by R. Ashi.

(13) Of course it is.

(14) From Palestine to Babylon.

(15) I.e., the outer edge of the post is even with the outer edge of the wall of the alley so that to those viewing it from without, the post appears to form a part of the thickness of the wall, while by those within, the thickness of the inner edge that protrudes from the wall can well be seen.

(16) Where the inner edge of the post touches the outer edge of the wall, and the inner width of the post is even with the interior side of the wall, but receding from its outer side.

(17) Tosef. 'Er. I, 10, infra 15a.

(18) That side-post being provided by the thicker projection of the wall that is formed by the receding of the remainder of the wall between it and the back of the alley or by the thinner projection formed by the receding of the wall at that point.

(19) The Baraita just cited in the name of R. Hiyya. How then could he maintain supra that such a post cannot be regarded as a valid side-post?

(20) How then could the Baraita cited be adduced as proof that the ruling it lays down is also the one upheld by R. Hiyya?

(21) None whatever. Since, however, he did teach it, one may well conclude that he holds the same opinion.

(22) Cf. supra for notes.

(23) Supra 8a q.v. notes, infra 92a.

- (24) The ruling of Rabbah b. R. Huna.
- (25) Sc. from the larger courtyard.
- (26) So that the remaining sections of the common wall on either side of the breach cannot possibly be regarded as side-posts of the entrance.
- (27) If the ruling of Rabbah b. R. Huna is to be upheld.
- (28) V. Glos.
- (29) Lit., ‘and let him say labud and it shall be’.
- (30) On the ground of labud the projections of the walls of the smaller yard would be deemed joined to the walls of the larger one and thus form side-posts.
- (31) Of the larger courtyard.
- (32) From the projections. The principle of labud call only be applied to distances of less than three handbreadths.
- (33) Var. lec. Hiyya Papi (MS.M); Hanina b. Papi (Bah). Marginal note inserts, ‘and others say before R. Hanina b. Papa’.
- (34) Sc. the common wall of the two courtyards was ten cubits in length and extended on either side, in the larger courtyard only, to a length of eleven cubits, so that the joint length of the remaining sections of this wall (cf. supra note 4) cannot be more than one cubit, or six handbreadths. This allows no more than about three handbreadths for each side, from which, again, allowance must be made for the thickness of the projections, leaving a space of less than three handbreadths, to which the principle of labud may well be applied.
- (35) A total of one cubit only, but, as the gap on one side is more than the allowed maximum, labud on that side cannot be applied.
- (36) By the formation of some sort of doorway.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 10a

— [This ruling¹ is in agreement with the view of] Rabbi² who laid down that two posts are required. For it was taught: A courtyard³ may be converted into a permitted domain by means of one post,⁴ but Rabbi ruled: [Only] by two posts.⁵ [But] what [an interpretation is] this! If you concede [that a side-post that can be] seen from without but appears even from within cannot be regarded as a valid side-post,⁶ and that Rabbi holds the same view as R. Jose,⁷ and [that the replies] of R. Zera and Rabina⁸ are not to be accepted, it will be quite intelligible why [the measurement of the] small courtyard [was given] as ten cubits and that of the large one as eleven, the reason being that he⁹ is of the same opinion as R. Jose.¹⁰ If, however, you contend [that a side-post that can be] seen from without though it appears even from within may be regarded as a valid side-post, and [that the replies] of R. Zera and Rabina are to be accepted,¹¹ and that Rabbi¹² is not of the same opinion as R. Jose,¹³ what [it may be asked] was the object [of giving the measurement of the] large courtyard as eleven cubits? For whatever the explanation advanced¹⁴ [a difficulty arises]. If [it be suggested] that the object¹⁵ was¹⁶ to [explain why] the large courtyard was¹⁷ permitted, [it could well be objected that a length of] ten cubits and two handbreadths would have been enough,¹⁸ and if the object was¹⁶ to [provide a reason¹⁹ for] the prohibition of the small courtyard,²⁰ why [it may equally be objected] did he not inform us [of a case] where [the walls] were much wider apart?²¹ Hence²² it must be concluded [that a post that can be] seen from without but appears even from within²³ cannot be regarded as a valid side-post. This is conclusive.

R. Joseph remarked: I did not hear that reported ruling²⁴ [from my teachers].²⁵ Said Abaye to him.²⁶ You yourself told us that ruling, and it was in connection with the following that you told it to us. For Rami b. Abba said in the name of R. Huna that 'a post which formed an extension of the wall of an alley,²⁷ [provided it was] less than four cubits [in length], may be regarded as a valid side-post and one may use [the alley] as far as its inner edge,²⁸ [but if it was] four cubits long it must be regarded as an alley and it is forbidden to make use²⁹ of any part of the alley';³⁰ and you told us in connection with this, that three rulings may be inferred from this statement: 'It may be inferred that the space between side-posts is a forbidden domain,³¹ and it may be inferred [that the minimum] length of an alley is four cubits,³² and it may also be inferred [that a post that can be] seen from without though it appears even from within may be regarded as a valid side-post'.³³ And the law is [that a post that is] visible from without though it appears even from within may be regarded as a valid side-post. A refutation and a law?³⁴ — Yes, because R. Hiyya taught in agreement with him.³⁵

AND [ANY ENTRANCE] THAT IS WIDER THAN TEN CUBITS SHOULD BE REDUCED. Said Abaye, a Tanna taught: And [any entrance] that is wider than ten cubits should be reduced, but R. Judah ruled that it was not necessary to reduce it.³⁶ But up to what extent³⁷ [is reduction unnecessary]?³⁸ R. Ahi³⁹ [discoursing] before R. Joseph intended to reply: To the extent of thirteen cubits and a third, [this being deduced] a minori ad majus from [the law relating to] enclosures⁴⁰ round wells:⁴¹ If [in the case of] enclosures round wells, where [the use of the wells]⁴² is permitted even though the broken [portions of the enclosure] exceed the standing ones, no [break] wider than thirteen cubits and a third is permitted, how much more reason is there that no [opening] wider than thirteen cubits and a third should be permitted [in the case of] an alley [the use of] which is not permitted where its broken portions exceed the standing ones. But [in fact] this [very law]⁴³ provides [ground for all argument to the contrary]: [in the case of] enclosure of wells, where [the use of the wells] was permitted even if the broken [portions of an enclosure] exceeded the standing ones, no [gap] wider than thirteen cubits and a third could well be permitted,⁴⁴ [but in the case of] an alley, [the use of which] is not permitted where the broken portions [of its walls] exceeded their standing ones⁴⁵ [an opening] wider than thirteen cubits and a third may well be permitted. Or else, [the argument might run] in another direction: [As regards] enclosures of wells, since the law was relaxed in one respect,⁴⁶ it could also be relaxed in another,⁴⁷ [but as regards] an alley no [opening wider than ten cubits may have been allowed] at all.⁴⁸

Levi learned: If [an entrance to] all alley was twenty cubits wide a reed may be inserted in the center of it and this is sufficient.⁴⁹ He himself has learnt it and he himself said that the halachah is not in agreement with that teaching.⁵⁰

Some there are who read: Samuel laid down in the name of Levi that the halachah was not in agreement with that teaching.⁵⁰ How, then, does one proceed?⁵¹ — Samuel replied in the name of Levi:

(1) Of the Mishnah cited by Rabbah.

(2) R. Judah I, the Patriarch, compiler of the Mishnah.

(3) That had a breach not exceeding ten cubits in width in a wall that adjoined a public domain. A wider breach cannot be converted into a doorway by the means that follow.

- (4) Sc. one strip of wall remaining on one side of the breach is sufficient to constitute a side-post and to convert the breach into a doorway.
- (5) One on either side of the breach. Infra 12a.
- (6) I.e., that this (as assumed supra by Rabbah) is the reason why the smaller courtyard in the Mishnah cited (supra 9b, ad fin.) is forbidden.
- (7) That the minimum width of a side-post must be three handbreadths (infra 14b) and much more so, that of a strip of courtyard wall.
- (8) Supra 9b ad fin.
- (9) Rabbi.
- (10) Cf. supra n. 9. The one cubit (sc. six handbreadths) by which the length of the wall of the larger courtyard exceeds that of the smaller one allows of two side-posts, each of the width of three handbreadths, one on either side of the breach, and thereby the permissibility of the use of the larger courtyard is effected. The object of the measurements given would thus be to indicate the grounds on which the permissibility of the use of the larger courtyard is based.
- (11) So that the reason for the prohibition of the use of the smaller courtyard is not the one given supra (cf. note 8) but that advanced by R. Zera or Rabina.
- (12) Who, in accordance with the explanation of R. Zera, permits the use of the larger courtyard even though one of the side-posts was only two handbreadths in width.
- (13) Cf. supra p. 56, n. 9.
- (14) Lit., 'from what your desire or opinion'.

- (16) Lit., 'he came'.
- (17) By means of these posts (cf. supra n. 3).
- (18) To provide side-posts; since Rabbi does not adopt R. Jose's minimum of three handbreadths.
- (19) By allowing a distance of four handbreadths on one side (v. Rabina's reply, supra 9b ad fin.).
- (20) Thus indicating that, were it not for the impossibility of applying the principle of labud, the small courtyard would have been permitted on account of the side-posts (obtained by labud) which, though invisible from within, are visible from without.
- (21) From which it would have been much more obvious than from the less definite case mentioned that the only reason for the prohibition was the inapplicability, owing to the wide gap, of the principle of labud. From this the conclusion, that were it not for this inapplicability, the smaller courtyard also would have been permitted (cf. previous note), would inevitably have followed.
- (22) Lit., 'but, not?' Since a width of three handbreadths had to be allowed for each side-post on either side of the breach to enable the larger courtyard to be permitted and since the smaller one in such circumstances remains forbidden.
- (23) Analogous to the case under discussion (cf. previous note).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 10b

A strip of boarding of the height of ten handbreadths by four cubits may be constructed, and this is placed [in the middle of the entrance] parallel to the length of the alley.¹ Or else [one may proceed] in accordance with the advice of Rab Judah, who laid down that where [an entrance to] an alley was fifteen cubits wide a strip of boarding of three cubits [in length] may be constructed at a distance of² two cubits [from one of the walls of the alley].³ But why?⁴ [Could not one] put up a strip [of the width] of one cubit and a half [adjoining the wall] and at a distance of⁵ two cubits [from it, another] strip [of the width] of one cubit and a half?⁶ May then one infer from this⁷ that standing [portions of a wall] on the two sides [of a breach in it, though jointly] exceeding [the width of] the breach,⁸ are not [to be regarded as valid] standing?⁹ — In fact it may be maintained [that standing portions separated by a breach] are elsewhere [regarded as] a valid wall¹⁰ but here [the law] is different, since the space on the one side [of the intermediate strip] and the space on its other side unite¹¹ to destroy its legal existence. Then [why should not one] put up [adjoining one of the walls] a strip one cubit wide, and, at a distance of¹² one cubit [from that strip, another] strip one cubit wide, and at a distance of one cubit [from the second strip, a third] strip one cubit wide? May then one infer from this¹³ [that where] the standing [portions of a wall are] equal [in size] to its breaches¹⁴ [the space it enclosed is] forbidden?¹⁵ — In fact it may be maintained that elsewhere this is permitted, but here [the law] is different, since the space on the one side [of the third strip]¹⁶ and the space on its other side¹⁷ unite to destroy¹⁸ its legal existence. [Why then could not] a strip of one cubit and a half in width be put up at a distance of one cubit [from one of the walls] and another strip of the width of one cubit and a half at a distance of one cubit [from the first strip]?¹⁹ — This could indeed be done,²⁰ but the Rabbis did not put a man to so much trouble. But should not the possibility be taken into consideration that one might neglect the bigger opening²¹ and enter by the smaller one?²² R. Adda b. Mattenah²³ replied: There is a legal presumption that no man would forsake a big opening and enter by a small one. But wherein does this case differ from that of R. Ammi and R. Assi?²⁴ — There one might use [the smaller opening]²⁵ as a short cut²⁶ but here²⁷ it cannot be used as a short cut. Elsewhere²⁸ it was taught:²⁹ The leather seat of a stool and its hole combine to [constitute the minimum of] a handbreadth.³⁰ What [is meant by] ‘the leather seat of a stool’? — Rabbah b. Bar Hana in the name of R. Johanan explained: The leather covering a privy stool. And how much [must the respective areas of the leather and the hole be]? — When R. Dimi came³¹ he stated: [An area of] two fingers [of leather] on the one side [of the hole] and [an area of] two fingers on the other side, and a hole³² [of the size of] two fingers in the center. When Rabin came³¹ he stated: [The area of] one finger and a half on one side and of one finger and a half on the other, and a hole [of the size of one] finger in the center.

Said Abaye to R. Dimi: Are you³³ in dispute? — No, the other replied, one of us referred to³⁴ the thumb³⁵ and the other³⁴ to the small finger, and there is no real difference of opinion between us.³⁶ Indeed, retorted the former, you do differ, and your difference emerges in [the case where] the standing [portions of a wall jointly] exceed its breach on both sides [of which they stand]. According to your view the standing [portions situated] on the two sides [of the breach] do combine; but according to Rabin's view they must be on one side only³⁷ [but if they are] on the two sides [of the breach] they cannot combine.³⁸ For, if it be imagined that you have no difference of opinion [on this point], the statement of Rabin should have run thus: ‘[The area of] a finger and a third on one side [of the hole] and that of a finger and a third on its other side, and a hole of one finger and a third in the center’.³⁹ What then [do you suggest, said R. Dimi,] that we differ? [Should not in that case] my statement have run thus: ‘[The area of] a finger and two thirds on one side [of the hole] and that of a finger and two thirds on the other side, and a hole of the size of two fingers and two thirds in the center’?⁴⁰ If, however, it must be said⁴¹ that we differ, our difference would apply to the case where the breach is equal to [either of] the standing [portions].⁴²

BUT IF IT HAS THE SHAPE OF A DOORWAY THERE IS NO NEED TO REDUCE IT EVEN THOUGH IT IS WIDER THAN TEN CUBITS. Thus we find that the shape of a doorway is effective⁴³ in respect of the width [of an entrance]⁴⁴ and a cornice in respect of its height.⁴⁵

(1) Since a length of four cubits constitutes an alley wall, the one wide entrance may be regarded as consisting of two narrower entrances, one serving a smaller alley and one serving a larger one.

(2) Lit., ‘he removes’.

(3) Thus leaving an entrance of ten cubits in width between the boarding and the opposite wall of the alley. The space of two cubits between the boarding and the first mentioned wall is deemed to be closed and forming together with the boarding a virtual wall five cubits in length, the validity of such a wall being recognized on the ground that the standing portion of this wall (three cubits) is larger than its gap (two cubits). Likewise where the entrance is twenty cubits wide, a similar boarding is also set up near the other wall.

(4) Should it be necessary to have one strip of boarding of the full length of three cubits.

- (5) Lit., 'and he shall remove'.
- (6) Again leaving a gap no wider than two cubits on one side and reducing the width of the entrance to ten cubits.
- (7) Since only one strip of the full length of three cubits was allowed.
- (8) As in this case where the two boards would measure three cubits, whilst the gap between them only two.
- (9) But this, surely, is hardly likely.
- (10) Lit., 'standing', if they exceed the width of the breach.
- (11) Lit., 'because it comes . . . and destroys'.
- (12) Lit., 'and he shall remove'.
- (13) Since such all arrangement is not permitted.
- (14) As is the case here where each cubit width of space is flanked by a cubit width of boarding.
- (15) For the movement of objects on the Sabbath. As this point is a question in dispute between R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua (infra 15b), may it be concluded that Rab Judah is of the same opinion as R. Huna?
- (16) The one placed next to the entrance which is itself a gap of ten cubits.
- (17) The one cubit gap.
- (18) Lit., 'because it comes . . . and destroys'.
- (19) In this case the gap of one cubit in width on the one side of the second strip, being smaller than the strip, cannot unite with the entrance on the other side to destroy the existence of that strip. This would be preferable to the first procedure which involves a gap of two cubits.
- (20) Lit., 'yes, thus also'.
- (21) Depriving it thereby of the status of an entrance.
- (22) As this smaller opening is not provided with a side-post, and as the post fixed at the bigger opening which is now no longer used as an entrance (v. previous note) loses its status as a side-post, the alley would remain unprovided for by any valid side-post, and movement of objects in it on the Sabbath would be forbidden.
- (23) Var. lec., Rab Judah (Asheri).
- (24) Supra 5a where provision was made against the possibility of one using the smaller opening in preference to the bigger one.
- (25) Since it opens out from a side wall.
- (26) Lit., 'reduce walking'.
- (27) As both openings are adjacent to one another and lead practically to the same spot.
- (28) Tosef. Kelim. B.B. I, 4.
- (29) Cur. edd. ib, is incorrect since the following does not occur in any Mishnah.
- (30) As regards the laws of levitical defilement by overshadowing or ohel (v. Glos). Only where the ohel was not smaller than a handbreadth (six fingers) are utensils lying under it defiled by the prescribed minimum of a portion of a corpse lying under the same ohel (cf. Oh. III, 7; Suk. 18a).
- (31) From Palestine to Babylon.
- (32) Lit., 'space'.
- (33) Sc. R. Dimi and Rabin.
- (34) Lit., 'that'.
- (35) Which equals in width that of a small finger and a half.
- (36) Since four of the former, like six of the latter, constitute one handbreadth.
- (37) Lit., 'from one side is a standing'.
- (38) Lit., 'is not a standing', if the portion on each side is not bigger than the breach.
- (39) In which case, as in that of R. Dimi, the leather would exceed the hole only if the two sides were combined. As Rabin, however, required the leather on each side singly to exceed the hole he must obviously differ from R. Dimi.

(40) From this it would have followed that, though the standing portions on either side are smaller than the breach, the two sides are combined. This law, however, cannot be derived from the actual wording used since all it implies is that only where each of the standing portions on either side is equal to the breach, the two sides may be combined, but not when either of them is smaller than the breach.

(41) Lit., 'there is to say'.

(42) Cf. supra n. 1.

(43) in converting the alley into a permitted domain.

(44) Sc. even though it is wider than ten cubits.

(45) Even if it is higher than twenty cubits, v. supra 3a.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 11a

What, [however, is the law where these are] reversed?¹ — Come and hear what was taught: ['A cross-beam spanning the] entrance [to a blind alley] at a height of more than twenty cubits should be lowered but if [the entrance] had the shape of a doorway there is no need to lower it'.² What [about the effectiveness of] a cornice in respect of its width? — Come and hear what was taught: ['A cross-beam spanning the] entrance [to a blind alley] at a height of more than twenty cubits should be lowered, and [an entrance] that is wider than ten cubits should be reduced [in width], but if it had the shape of a doorway, there is no need to reduce [the height of the beam] and if it 'has a cornice there is no need to reduce'. Does not this³ refer to the last clause?⁴ No; [it may refer] to the first clause.⁵ Rab Judah taught Hiyya b. Rab in the presence of Rab: It is not necessary to reduce [its width].⁶ Teach him, [Rab] said to him,⁷ 'It is necessary to reduce it'. Said R. Joseph: From the words of our Master⁸ we may infer that a courtyard the greatest part [of the walls] of which consists of doors and windows cannot be converted into a permitted domain⁹ by [the construction] of the shape of a doorway. What is the reason? Since [an entrance] wider than ten cubits causes the prohibition of an alley and a breach [in a wall] that is larger than its standing [portions] causes the prohibition of a courtyard [the two may be compared]: As [an opening that is] wider than ten cubits, which causes the prohibition of an alley cannot be ritually rectified by means of the shape of a doorway, so also a [wall] the breach in which is larger than its standing [portions], which causes the prohibition of a courtyard, cannot be ritually rectified by means of the shape of a doorway. — [This, however, is no proper analogy, for the shape of a doorway] may well [be ineffective in the case of an opening] wider than ten cubits, which causes the prohibition of an alley, since it¹⁰ cannot effect permissibility in the case of enclosures of wells, in accordance with the views of R. Meir;¹¹ but how could you apply [this restriction] to the case where a breach [in a wall] is larger than its standing portions, though it causes the prohibition of a courtyard, when this¹² was permitted in respect of enclosures of wells in accordance with the opinion of all?¹³

May it be suggested [that the following] provides support to his view?¹⁴ [It was taught: The space enclosed by] such walls as consist mostly of doors and windows is permitted,¹⁵ provided the standing portions exceed the gaps?¹⁶ — [You say:] 'As consist mostly'! Is this conceivable?¹⁷ — Rather read: '[The space] in which there were many¹⁸ doors and windows [is permitted] provided the standing portions exceed the gaps?¹⁹ — Said R. Kahana: That²⁰ may have been taught in respect of Semitic²¹ doors.²² What is meant by 'Semitic doors'? — R. Rehumi²³ and R. Joseph differ on this point. One explains: [Doors] that have no [proper] side-posts, and the other explains: Such as have no lintel.²⁴

R. Johanan also holds the same view as Rab.²⁵ For Rabin son of R. Adda stated in the name of R. Isaac: It once happened that a man of the valley of Beth Hiwarta²⁶ drove four poles²⁷ in the four corners of his field and stretched across [each two of] them a rod,²⁸ and when the case was submitted to the Sages they allowed him [its use] in respect of kil'ayim.²⁹ And [in connection with this statement] Resh Lakish remarked: As they allowed him [its use] In respect of kil'ayim so have they allowed it to him in respect of the Sabbath,³⁰ but R. Johanan said: Only in respect of kil'ayim did they allow him [its use]; they did not allow it in respect of the Sabbath. Now [what is the form, of the construction] with which we are here dealing? If it be suggested [that it is one where the rods were attached] sideways,³¹ surely [it could be objected] did not R. Hisda rule that the shape of a doorway that was made [with the cross-reed attached] sideways is of no validity?³² Consequently [it must be a case where the reeds were placed] on top of the poles. Now, how³³ [far were the poles from one another]? If [it be suggested] less than ten cubits, [the difficulty arises] would R. Johanan in such a case have said that in respect of the Sabbath there is no validity [in such a door]?³⁴ Must it not [consequently be conceded that the distance was] greater than ten cubits?³⁵ — No; [the distance] in fact [might have been] within that of ten cubits, and [the reeds might have been attached] sideways, but the principle on which they³⁶ differ is that laid down by R. Hisda.³⁷

An incongruity, however, was pointed out between two rulings of R. Johanan³⁸ as well as between two rulings of Resh Lakish.³⁹ For Resh Lakish stated in the name of R. Judah son of R. Hanina:

- (1) i.e., would the shape of a doorway be effective where the height of the entrance is above twenty cubits or a cornice where the width is more than ten cubits?
 - (2) The beam.
 - (3) 'But if it has a cornice . . . it'.
 - (4) 'An entrance that is wider than ten cubits'. The answer presumably being in the affirmative, the question raised is clearly solved.
 - (5) Which deals with the height of an entrance.
 - (6) If the entrance was provided with the shape of a doorway.
 - (7) Rab Judah.
 - (8) Rab, who ruled that the shape of a doorway is of no avail where the entrance is wider than ten cubits.
 - (9) Even if the openings are less than ten cubits in width.
 - (10) The shape of a doorway.
 - (11) Cf. infra 17b. It is, therefore, quite logical that as it cannot effect permissibility in the case of the enclosures, so it cannot effect it in an alley the opening of which is wider than ten cubits.
 - (12) Breaches each of which is not wider than ten cubits though their total width is larger than that of the standing portions of the enclosure.
 - (13) Even according to R. Meir who does not allow a breach that was wider than ten cubits, and much more so according to R. Judah who allows a breach of thirteen cubits and a third.
 - (14) That the shape of a doorway does not effect permissibility where the standing portions are smaller than the breaches.
 - (15) For Sabbath use, in respect of the movement of objects.

(16) Infra 16b.

(17) Of course not. If the greater part of the walls is made up of doors and windows their 'standing portions' could not 'exceed the gaps'.

(18) Lit., in which he increased'. ivc vchra is similar in sound to the previously assumed reading, icura.

(19) Which proves that even where an opening has the shape of a doorway (as is the case with the 'doors and windows' spoken of) the space enclosed cannot be regarded as a permitted domain unless the total width of the standing portions exceeds that of the breaches, in agreement with the view of Rab.

(20) The ruling just cited.

(21) Sc. Palestinian. htnha is derived from oa the second son of Noah whose descendants lived in Palestine (R. Han. in Tosaf. s.v. hj , p a.l.). Aliter. Desolate or incomplete (Rashi).

(22) A ruling which need not necessarily apply to ordinary, or proper doors.

(23) MS.M., Nehumi.

(24) Lit., 'ceiling'.

(25) That the shape of a doorway is of no avail where the entrance to an alley is wider than ten cubits.

(26) V. Ta'an., Sonc. ed., p. 7, n. 2.

(27) ihxhsbue pl. of xsbue or xuybue Cf. Gr. **.

(28) To give them the shape of a doorway.

(29) V. Glos. They regarded the doorway shaped structures as valid partitions which enable the owner to grow vines on one side though corn was grown in close proximity on the other. In the absence of a partition it is necessary, in accordance with the laws of kil'ayim, to leave a distance of four cubits between a vineyard and a cornfield.

(30) Sc. to move objects within the space enclosed, the poles and rods being treated as valid doorways.

(31) I.e., they were not placed on the tops of the poles but were joined lower down to their sides.

(32) Lit., 'he has done nothing'. Such a construction then could not be regarded as valid in respect of kil'ayim?

(33) Lit., 'and in what?'

(34) Obviously not, since it is universally agreed that a maximum width of ten cubits is permitted.

(35) Apparently it must; which proves that R. Johanan, who stated: 'They did not allow it in respect of the Sabbath' holds the same view as Rab.

(36) R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

(37) Resh Lakish does not adopt the principle; hence his opinion that, though the reeds were attached sideways, the shape of the doorway is a valid one in respect of the Sabbath as in that of kil'ayim. R. Johanan, however, upholds the principle in the case of the Sabbath since its sanctity is great, but not in that of kil'ayim which is of comparatively lesser importance and subject to lesser restrictions. Hence his view that the doorway under discussion is valid in respect of the latter but invalid in that of the former.

(38) Lit., 'of R. Johanan on R. Johanan'.

(39) Cf. previous note.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 11b

A plait [of rods trained on poles] is a valid partition¹ in respect of kil'ayim but not in respect of the Sabbath; and R. Johanan stated: As it has no [validity as regards] partitions in connection with the Sabbath, so it has no [validity in respect of] partitions in connection with kil'ayim. One might well concede that there is really no incongruity between the two rulings of Resh Lakish, since the former might be his own while the latter might be that of his Master;² but do not the two rulings of R. Johanan represent a contradiction? [Still] if you were to concede that there³ [the rods were placed] on the tops of the poles while here [the plait was trained] on the sides [all would be] well.⁴ If, however, you maintain that in both cases [the rods were attached] sideways, what can be said [in explanation]?⁵ — The fact is that it may be maintained that both cases refer [to rods attached] sideways, but there³ [the distance between the poles was] within that of ten cubits while here it exceeded that of ten cubits. But whence is it derived that we draw a distinction⁶ between [distances of] ten, and more than ten cubits? — [From the following] which R. Johanan said to Resh Lakish. ‘Did it not so happen [the former said to the latter] that R. Joshua went to R. Johanan b. Nuri to study the Torah; and, though he was well versed in the laws of kil’ayim, on finding that [the Master] was sitting among the trees, he stretched a rod from one tree to another and said to him: Master, if vines were growing on one side of the rod⁷ would it be permitted⁸ to sow corn on the other?’⁹ [And the Master] told him: [If the distance between the trees¹⁰ is] within that of ten cubits it is permitted but if it exceeds ten cubits it is forbidden?’ Now, what was the case under discussion? If it be suggested: [one where the rod was placed] on the tops of the trees, [why was it ruled, it could be objected, that] ‘if it exceeds ten cubits it is forbidden’ seeing that it was taught: If forked reeds were there and a plait was made above them it is permitted¹¹ even [if the distance between the reeds] exceeded that of ten cubits?¹² Must it not consequently [be one where the rod was attached] sideways?¹³ And yet he¹⁴ told him, ‘[If the distance between the trees is] within that of ten cubits it is permitted but if it exceeds ten cubits it is forbidden’ — This proves it.

[Reverting to] the [previous] text, R. Hisda ruled that the shape of a doorway that was made [with the cross-reed attached] sideways is of no validity. R. Hisda further ruled: The shape of the doorway of which they¹⁵ spoke must be sufficiently strong to support¹⁶ a door [made of the lightest material] even if only a door of straw.

Resh Lakish ruled in the name of R. Jannai: The shape of a doorway must have a mark for a hinge. What [is meant by] ‘a mark for a hinge’? R. Awia replied: A loop.¹⁷ R. Aha the son of R. Awia, met the students of R. Ashi. He asked them, ‘Did the master say anything in respect of the shape of a doorway?’ ‘He,’ they replied to him, ‘said nothing at all [about it]’.

It was taught: The shape of a doorway of which they¹⁵ spoke must have a reed on either side and one reed above. Must [the side-reeds] touch [the upper one] or not?¹⁸ — R. Nahman replied: They need not touch it, and R. Shesheth replied: They must touch it. R. Nahman proceeded to give a practical decision¹⁹ in the house of the Exilarch in agreement with his traditional ruling.²⁰ Said R. Shesheth to his attendant, R. Gadda,²¹ ‘Go pull them out and throw them away’. He accordingly went there, pulled them out and threw them away. He was found, however, by the people of the Exilarch's household and they incarcerated him. R. Shesheth thereupon followed him and, standing at the door [of his place of confinement], called out to him, ‘Gadda, come out’, and he safely came out.

R. Shesheth met Rabbah b. Samuel and asked him, ‘Has the Master learnt anything about the shape of a doorway?’ — ‘Yes’, the other replied, ‘we have learnt: An arched [doorway], said R. Meir, is subject to the obligation of a mezuzah²² but the Sages exempt it.²³ They agree, however,²⁴ that if its lower section²⁵ was ten handbreadths in height [the doorway] is subject to the obligation.²⁶ And Abaye²⁷ stated: All²⁸ agree that, if [an arched doorway] was ten handbreadths high but its lower section²⁹ was less than³⁰ three [handbreadths in height], or even if the lower section was three [handbreadths high] but its total height was less than ten handbreadths, the doorway is not valid at all.³¹ They only differ where [the height of] its lower section was three handbreadths, its total height³² was ten cubits and the width [of its arch] was less than four handbreadths, but [its sides are wide enough for the arch] to be cut to a width³³ of four handbreadths. R. Meir is of the opinion [that the sides are regarded as] cut for the purpose of completing [the prescribed width], while the Rabbis maintain [that they are not regarded as] cut for the purpose of completing [the prescribed width].³⁴ ‘If you meet the people of the Exilarch’s house’, he³⁵ said to him, ‘tell them nothing whatever of the Baraita about the arched doorway’.

MISHNAH. THE RENDERING OF AN ALLEY FIT [FOR THE MOVEMENT OF OBJECTS WITHIN IT ON THE SABBATH], BETH SHAMMAI RULED, REQUIRES A SIDE-POST AND A BEAM,³⁶ AND BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER A SIDE-POST OR A BEAM. R. ELIEZER RULED: TWO SIDE-POSTS. A DISCIPLE IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL, STATED IN THE PRESENCE OF R. AKIBA: BETH SHAMMAI AND BETH HILLEL DID NOT DIFFER ON [THE RULING THAT] AN ALLEY THAT WAS LESS THAN FOUR CUBITS [IN WIDTH]³⁷ MAY BE CONVERTED INTO A PERMITTED DOMAIN EITHER BY MEANS OF A SIDE-POST OR BY THAT OF A BEAM. THEY ONLY³⁸ DIFFER IN THE CASE OF ONE THAT WAS WIDER THAN FOUR, AND NARROWER THAN³⁹ TEN CUBITS, IN RESPECT OF WHICH BETH SHAMMAI RULED: BOTH A SIDE-POST AND A BEAM [ARE REQUIRED] WHILE BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER A SIDE-POST OR A BEAM. R. AKIBA MAINTAINED THAT THEY⁴⁰ DIFFERED IN BOTH CASES.⁴¹ GEMARA. In accordance with whose [view was our Mishnah⁴² taught]? Is it in agreement neither with the view of Hanania nor with that of the first Tanna?⁴³ — Rab Judah replied: It is this that was meant: How is a blind⁴⁴ ALLEY RENDERED FIT [FOR THE MOVEMENT OF OBJECTS WITHIN IT ON THE SABBATH]? BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [By the construction of] A SIDE-POST AND A BEAM AND BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER A SIDE-POST OR A BEAM.

BETH SHAMMAI RULED: A SIDE-POST AND A BEAM. Does this⁴⁵ then imply that Beth Shammai hold the opinion that Pentateuchally⁴⁶ four partitions [and no less, constitute a private domain]? — No; as regards throwing⁴⁷ [into it from a public domain] one incurs guilt even if [the former had] only three walls,⁴⁸ [but in respect] of moving [objects within it] only⁴⁹ where there are four walls [is this permitted].⁵⁰

BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER A SIDE-POST OR A BEAM. Does this⁵¹ imply that Beth Hillel hold the view that Pentateuchally three partitions [are required to constitute a private domain]? No; as regards throwing [from a public domain into it] one incurs guilt even if [the former had] only two walls,⁵² [but in respect] of moving [objects within it], only where there are three walls [is this permitted].⁵⁰

R. ELIEZER RULED: TWO SIDE-POSTS. A question was raised: Does R. Eliezer mean two side-posts and a beam or is it likely that he means two side-posts without a beam? — Come and hear: It once happened that R. Eliezer went to his disciple, R. Jose b. Perida,

- (31) Lit., 'and nothing', and therefore, no mezuzah is required. In the former case, because (a) side-posts that are lower than three handbreadths, though four handbreadths apart, are regarded as the mere thickness of the ground beneath and (b) the remaining portion consisting of an arch is less than four handbreadths wide, so that no valid doorway exists; and in the latter case because the minimum height of a doorway must be ten cubits.
- (32) Sc. its lower section together with the arch.

at Obelin, and found him dwelling in an alley that had only one side-post. He said to him, 'My son, put up another side-post'. 'Is it necessary for me', the other asked: 'to close it up?' — 'Let it be closed up', the first replied: 'what does it matter?' R. Simeon b. Gamaliel stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel did not differ on [the ruling that] an alley that was less than four cubits [in width]¹ required no provision at all. They only² differed in the case of one that was wider than four, but narrower than³ ten cubits, in respect of which Beth Shammai ruled: Both a side-post and a beam, [are required] while Beth Hillel ruled: Either a side-post or a beam.⁴ At all events it was stated: 'Is it necessary for me to close it up' — Now, if you concede that both side-posts and a beam [are required]⁵ it is quite intelligible why he⁶ said: 'Is it necessary for me to close it up';⁷ but if you contend that side-posts without a beam [are sufficient], what [can be the meaning of] 'to close it up'? — It is this that he⁶ meant: Is it necessary for me to close it up with side-posts?

The Master said: 'R. Simeon b. Gamaliel stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel did not differ on [the ruling that] an alley that was less than four cubits [in width] required no provision at all'. Did we not learn, however, 'A DISCIPLE IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL STATED IN THE PRESENCE OF R. AKIBA: BETH SHAMMAI AND BETH HILLEL DID NOT DIFFER ON [THE RULING THAT] AN ALLEY THAT WAS LESS THAN FOUR CUBITS [IN WIDTH] MAY BE CONVERTED INTO A PRIVATE DOMAIN EITHER BY MEANS OF A SIDE-POST OR BY THAT OF A BEAM'? — R. Ashi replied: It is this that he⁸ meant: It⁹ required neither a side-post and a beam as Beth Shammai ruled¹⁰ nor two side-posts as R. Eliezer ruled,¹⁰ but either a side-post or a beam in agreement with the ruling of Beth Hillel.¹¹ And how much, [is the minimum]?¹² — R. Ahli, or it might be said R. Yehiel, replied: No less than¹³ four handbreadths.¹⁴

R. Shesheth, in the name of R. Jeremiah b. Abba, who had it from Rab stated: The Sages agree with R. Eliezer in the case of the side-posts of a courtyard.¹⁵ R. Nahman, however, stated:¹⁶ The halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eliezer¹⁷ in respect of the side-posts of a courtyard.

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Who [are they that] ‘agree’¹⁸ [with R. Eliezer]? Rabbi. [But since R. Nahman said,]¹⁹ ‘The halachah is’, it follows that some differ; who is it that differs from his view? — The Rabbis.²⁰ For it was taught: A courtyard may be converted into a permitted domain by means of one post, but Rabbi ruled: Only by two posts.²¹

R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: A courtyard requires two side-posts.²² Said R. Zera to R. Assi: Did R. Johanan give such a ruling? Did not you yourself state in the name of R. Johanan that the side-posts of a courtyard must have [a width of] four handbreadths?²³ And should you suggest [that the meaning is] four [handbreadths] on one side²⁴ and four on the other, surely [it may be retorted], did not R.²⁵ Adda b. Abimi recite in the presence of R. Hanina or, as some say, in the presence of R. Hanina b. Papi: [The ruling applies to a case where] the small courtyard was ten, and the large one eleven cubits?²⁶ — When R. Zera²⁷ returned from his sea travels,²⁸ he explained this [contradiction]: [A side-post] on one side [of an opening must have a width] of four handbreadths, [but side-posts] on the two sides [of an opening] need be no wider than a fraction each;²⁹ and that which R.³⁰ Adda b. Abimi recited is [the view of] Rabbi who holds the same view as R. Jose.³¹

R. Joseph laid down in the name of Rab Judah who had it from Samuel that a courtyard may be converted into a permitted domain by means of one side-post.³² Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Did Samuel lay down such a ruling? Did he not in fact say to R. Hananiah b. Shila, ‘Do not you permit the use³³ [of a courtyard]³⁴ unless [there remained] either the greater part of the wall or two strips of it’!³⁵ — The other replied: I³⁶ know only³⁷ of the following incident that occurred at Dura di-ra’awatha³⁸ where a wedge of the sea penetrated into a courtyard³⁹ and [when the question]⁴⁰ was submitted to⁴¹ Rab Judah, he required the gap⁴² [to be provided with] one strip of board only.⁴³ ‘You’, [Abaye] said to him, ‘speak of a wedge of the sea; but in the case of water, the Sages have relaxed the law.⁴⁴ As [you may infer from the question] which R. Tabla asked of Rab: Does a suspended partition convert a ruin into a permitted domain? And the other replied: A suspended partition can effect permissibility of use in the case of water only, because it is only in respect of water that the Sages have relaxed the law’.⁴⁵

Does not the difficulty⁴⁶ at any rate remain? — When R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua returned from the academy they explained it: [A side-post] on one side [of a gap] must be four [handbreadths wide but where there is one] on either side,⁴⁷ any width whatever is enough.⁴⁸

R. Papa said: If I had to point out a difficulty it would be this.⁴⁹ For Samuel said to R. Hananiah b. Shila, ‘Do not you permit the use [of a courtyard] unless [there remained] either the greater part of the wall or two strips of it’.⁵⁰ Now what was the need for ‘the greater part of the wall’? Is not a strip of four handbreadths [in width] enough? And should you reply that⁵¹ ‘the greater part of the wall' referred to a wall of seven [handbreadths in width] where four handbreadths constitute the greater part of the wall, [the objection might be raised,] why should it be necessary to have four handbreadths, when three and a fraction are enough, since R. Ahli, or it might be said R. Yehiel, ruled [that no provision was necessary where a gap is] less than⁵² four [handbreadths in width]? — If you wish I might reply: One ruling deals⁵³ with a courtyard and the other⁵³ with an alley.⁵⁴ And if you prefer I might reply: [The ruling] of R. Ahli himself [is a point in dispute between] Tannas.⁵⁵

Our Rabbis taught: From a wedge of the sea that ran into a courtyard⁵⁶ no water may be drawn⁵⁷ on the Sabbath unless it was provided⁵⁸ with a partition that was ten handbreadths high. This applies only where the breach was wider than ten cubits but [if it was only] ten [cubits wide] no provision whatever is necessary.⁵⁹ 'No water may be drawn' [you say]⁶⁰ but the movement of objects⁶¹ is inferentially permitted; [but why?] Has not the courtyard a gap that opens it out in full⁶² on to a forbidden domain?

(14) An alley with a narrower entrance requires no provision whatsoever.

(15) Sc. if the courtyard was exposed to a public domain by a gap in one of its walls, it cannot be regarded as a permitted domain unless little5 strips of the wall remained on either side of the gap forming a sort of side-post and imparting to the gap the character of a doorway.

leave for the other side no more than (6-4=) two handbreadths, which cannot be regarded as a valid side-post. It consequently follows that, according to R. Johanan, one side-post of the width of four handbreadths is enough. How then could it be said by R. Assi that R. Johanan required two side-posts?

Johanan, however, upholds the view of the Rabbis who require a side-post on one side of an opening to have a minimum width of four handbreadths while in the case of a side-post on either side, any width is sufficient.

Hence Samuel's instruction to R. Hananiah b. Shila. An alley, however, sc. one whose length exceeds its width, of which R. Ahli spoke, is treated as a permitted domain wherever the width of the gap is less than four handbreadths.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 12b

— Here we are dealing [with a fallen wall] stumps of which remained.¹

Rab Judah ruled: In the case of an alley [the residents of which] did not join together [in the provision of an 'erub],² the man who throws anything into it³ incurs guilt if its ritual fitness was effected by means of a side-post,⁴ but if its fitness was effected by means of a cross-beam, no guilt is incurred by the man who throws anything into it.⁵ R. Shesheth demurred against this: The reason then⁶ is that [the residents of the alley] did not join together [in the provision of an 'erub],⁷ but had they joined together [for the purpose], guilt would have been incurred even if its ritual fitness had been effected by a cross-beam only.⁸ Is it then this loaf⁹ that determines¹⁰ [whether it shall be] a private, or a public domain? Was it not in fact taught: In the case of common courtyards¹¹ and blind alleys,¹² whether the residents have joined together in the provision of an 'erub or whether they have not joined, guilt is incurred by anyone who throws anything into them [on the Sabbath from a public domain]?¹³ If the statement, however, was at all made, it must have been as follows: Rab Judah ruled: As to an alley that is unfit for a joint 'erub,¹⁴ guilt is incurred by the man who throws anything into it if its ritual fitness was effected by means of a side-post, but if its fitness was effected by a cross-beam no guilt is incurred by one who throws anything into it. Thus it is obvious that he is of the opinion that a side-post serves the purpose of a partition¹⁵ and a cross-beam that of a mere distinguishing mark. And so did Rabbah say: A side-post serves the purpose of a partition and a cross-beam that of a mere distinguishing mark. Raba, however, ruled: The one as well as the other¹⁶ only serves the purpose of a distinguishing mark.

R. Jacob b. Abba raised an objection against Raba: [Was it not taught:] A man who throws¹⁷ into an alley incurs guilt if it was provided with a side-post but is exempt if it had no side-post?¹⁸ — It is this that was meant: If it required only a side-post¹⁹ then the man who throws anything into it incurs guilt,²⁰ but if it required a side-post and something else,²¹ the man who throws anything into it is exempt.²²

He raised against him²³ a further objection: [Was it not taught:]²⁴ A more [lenient rule] than this did R. Judah lay down, [viz.] if a man had two houses on the two sides [respectively] of a public domain he may construct one side-post on the one side [of any of the houses] and another on the other side, or one cross-beam on the one side [of any of the houses] and another on its other side, and then he may move things about in the space between them; but they said to him: A public domain cannot be provided with an 'erub in such a manner.²⁵ [The explanation]²⁶ there is that R. Judah maintains that Pentateuchally, two partitions²⁷ [constitute a private domain].²⁸ Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: An alley whose length is equal to its width cannot be turned into a permitted domain²⁹ by a mere fraction of a side-post.³⁰ R. Hiyya b. Ashi said in the name of Rab: An alley whose length equals its width cannot be turned into a permitted domain by a cross-beam, [of the width of one] handbreadth.³¹ R. Zera³² remarked: How exact³³ are the traditions of the elders: Since an alley's length is equal to its width, it has [the status of] a courtyard which cannot be converted into a permitted domain³⁴ by means of a side-post or a cross-beam but only by means of a strip [of material of the width of] four handbreadths. If, however, R. Zera continued, I have any difficulty, it is this:³⁵ Why should not that side-post³⁶ be regarded as a fraction of a strip and thus convert [the alley] into a permitted domain? — He overlooked the following ruling, which R. Assi had laid down in the name of R. Johanan, that the strips of a courtyard must consist of a width of four [handbreadths].

R. Nahman stated: 'We have a tradition that if [the movement of objects in] an alley is to be permitted [on the Sabbath] by means of a side-post and a cross-beam, its length must exceed its width and houses and courtyards must open out into it;³⁷ and what kind of courtyard is it that cannot be converted into a permitted domain by means of a side-post and cross-beam but only by means of a strip of the width of four handbreadths? One that is square shaped'. Only³⁸ 'one that is square shaped' but not one that is round?³⁹ — It is this that he⁴⁰ meant: If its length exceeds its width, it is regarded as an alley, in which case a side-post and a cross-beam is sufficient, otherwise⁴¹ it is regarded as a courtyard.⁴² And [by] how much [must its length exceed its width]?⁴³ — Samuel intended to rule: By no less than⁴⁴ twice its width;⁴⁵ but Rab said to him: Thus ruled my uncle⁴⁶ 'Even by one fraction'.

A DISCIPLE, IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL, STATED ETC.

- (1) Lit., 'which has stumps', rising to a height of ten handbreadths but covered by the sea. As the stumps are a valid partition, movement within the courtyard is permitted (v. Rashi). The interpretation not being free from difficulties, other interpretations have been suggested (cf. Tosaf. s.v. tfv, a.l.).
 - (2) v. Glos.
 - (3) On the Sabbath, from a public domain.
 - (4) A side-post in the opinion of Rab Judah has the legal status of a partition and consequently converts the alley into a private domain.
 - (5) A cross-beam in his opinion is a mere distinguishing mark; and an alley cannot be regarded as a private domain unless, in accordance with the Pentateuchal law, it had four sides, or a valid partition at the entrance in addition to its three walls.
 - (6) Why no guilt is incurred by the man who throws anything from a public domain into an alley the entrance of which was provided with a cross-beam only.
 - (7) In consequence of which the alley cannot be regarded as a private domain.
 - (8) Sc. it would have assumed the character of a private domain the throwing into which from a public domain involves one in guilt.
 - (9) Of the 'erub. An 'erub is effected by means of a loaf of bread towards which all the residents contribute.
 - (10) Lit., 'makes it'.
 - (11) Lit., 'of many people', sc. into which a number of private houses open out. As each house is a strictly private domain while the courtyard, though also a private domain, is the common property of all the residents, it is forbidden to carry objects on the Sabbath from any of the houses into the courtyard as a preventive measure instituted by the Rabbis against the possible assumption that it is also permitted to carry from a private domain into a public domain. In the courtyard itself, however, the movement of objects is permitted. (Cf. Shab. 130b).

(12) Lit., 'that do not open out'.

(13) Which proves that the loaf of the 'erub alone does not determine the character of a domain.

(14) Sc. if it opened out into a public domain at either end.

(15) Hence it converts the alley into a private domain the throwing into which from a public domain involves one in guilt.

(16) Side-post as cross-beam.

(17) On the Sabbath, from a public domain.

(18) Since a side-post thus converts an alley into a private domain, it must obviously serve the purpose of a partition. How then could Raba maintain that it was merely a distinguishing mark?

(19) I.e., if it opened into a public domain on one side only.

(20) Even if not furnished with a side-post, since Pentateuchally a space enclosed by three walls is deemed to be a private domain.

(21) I.e., if it opened out into a public domain at its two ends and consequently required a side-post at one end and the shape of a doorway at the other.

(22) Though a side-post had been put up at one end, because a side-post serves merely as a distinguishing mark.

(23) R. Jacob b. Abba against Raba.

(24) V. supra 6a q.v. notes.

(25) V. loc. cit., infra 95a, Shab. 6a, 117a. Now since the Rabbis objected to the recognition of a side-post on the sole ground that a public domain cannot be so provided, it follows that in the case of an alley, even though it was open at both ends, a side-post is admissible as a valid partition. How then could Raba maintain supra that a side-post can only be regarded as a distinguishing mark, contrary to the unanimous opinion of R. Judah and the Rabbis?

(26) Why a side-post is recognized.

(27) Sc. the walls of two opposite houses, or rows of houses.

(28) So that the side-post only serves the purpose of a distinguishing mark. The Rabbis object even to such recognition of a side-post in the case of a public domain. Neither R. Judah nor the Rabbis, however, regard a side-post as a partition, in agreement with the view of Raba.

(29) As regards the movement of objects within it on the Sabbath.

(30) It must be furnished with one that is four handbreadths in width as is the case with a courtyard.

(31) Only in an alley whose length exceeds its width is such a beam admissible.

(32) In commenting on the rulings just reported in the name of Rab.

(33) Or 'well fitting with one another'.

(34) If it had a breach not exceeding ten cubits in the wall adjoining a public domain.

(35) Lit., 'this is difficult to me'.

(36) That was less than four handbreadths wide.

(37) Two courtyards must open into the alley and one house into each courtyard. Supra 5a q.v. notes.

(38) Lit., 'yes'.

(39) This, surely, is unlikely, since the roundness of shape could be no reason for admitting a fraction of a side-post as a valid strip.

(40) R. Nahman.

(41) Lit., 'and if not', if its length does not exceed its width.

(42) And a strip of material, four handbreadths in width, is required. The expression 'square shaped' was not intended to exclude a round shaped structure but one whose length exceeded its width.

(43) In order to be regarded as an alley that, unlike a courtyard, may be converted into a permitted domain by a fraction of a side-post.

(44) Lit., 'until'.

(45) Since it is in reality a courtyard, it does not lose its status with lesser dimensions.

(46) Or 'friend' ' Sc. R. Hiyya.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 13a

R. AKIBA MAINTAINED THAT THEY DIFFERED IN BOTH CASES etc. Is not R. Akiba expressing the very same view as the first Tanna?¹ — The difference between them is the ruling of R. Ahli or, as some said: R. Yehiel;² but it was not indicated [who maintained what].³

It was taught: R. Akiba said,⁴ 'It was not R. Ishmael who laid down this ruling but that disciple, and the halachah is in agreement with that disciple. 'Is not this self-contradictory? You first said: 'It was not R. Ishmael who laid down this ruling', from which⁵ it is obvious that the law is not in agreement with his⁶ view, and then you say: 'The halachah is in agreement with that disciple'? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: R. Akiba made that statement⁷ for the sole purpose of exercising the wits of the students.⁸ R. Nahman b. Isaac, however, replied: What was said⁹ was, '[His¹⁰ words] appear [quite logical].'¹¹

R. Joshua b. Levi stated: Wherever you find the expression, 'A disciple, in the name of R. Ishmael, stated in the presence of R. Akiba' [the reference is to] none other than R. Meir who attended¹² upon R. Ishmael and R. Akiba [successively]; for it was taught: R. Meir related, 'When I was with R. Ishmael I used to put vitriol¹³ into my ink¹⁴ and he told me nothing [against it], but when I subsequently came to R. Akiba, the latter forbade it to me.'

Is this, however, correct?¹⁵ Did not Rab Judah in fact state in the name of Samuel who had it from R. Meir: When I was studying under R. Akiba I used to put vitriol¹³ into my ink and he told me nothing [against it], but when I subsequently came to R. Ishmael the latter said to me, 'My son, what is your occupation?' I told him, 'I am a scribe', and he said to me, 'Be meticulous in your work, for your occupation is a sacred one;¹⁶ should you perchance omit or add one single letter, you would thereby¹⁷ destroy all the universe'.¹⁸ 'I have', I replied,¹⁹ 'a certain ingredient called vitriol, which I put into my ink'. — 'May vitriol', he asked me, 'be put into the ink? Has not the Torah in fact stated: "And he shall write",²⁰ "And he shall blot out"²⁰ [to indicate that] the writing [must be] such as can be blotted out?'²¹ (What [relation is there between] the question of the one²² and the reply of the other?²³ It is this that the latter meant: There is no need [for me to assure you] that I would make no mistakes in respect of words that are plene or defective, since I am familiar [with the subject], but [I have even taken precautions] against the possibility of a fly's perching on the crownlet of a dalet and, by blotting it out, turn it into a resh,²⁴ for I have a certain ingredient, called vitriol, which I put into the ink). Now, is there no contradiction in the sequence of the attendance²⁵ and in the authorship of the prohibition?²⁶ The contradiction in the sequence might well [be explained by the suggestion that] he first came to R. Akiba but, as he was unable to comprehend his teaching,²⁷ he went to R. Ishmael where he studied the traditional teachings,²⁸ and then returned to R. Akiba and engaged in logical discussion and argument; but the authorship of the prohibitions, surely, presents a difficulty, does it not? — This is so indeed.

It was taught: R. Judah stated: R. Meir laid down that vitriol may be put into ink intended for any purpose²⁹ except [that of writing]³⁰ the Pentateuchal section³¹ dealing with a suspected wife.³² R. Jacob, however, stated in his name: Except [that of writing] the Pentateuchal section dealing with a suspected wife in the Sanctuary.³³ What is the point of their disagreement?³⁴ — R. Jeremiah replied: The point of their disagreement is [whether the writing may] be blotted out for her sake from [a Scroll of] the Law.³⁵ And these Tannas³⁶ differ on the same question as the following Tanna. For it was taught: The scroll [that was written] for one suspected woman³⁷ is not³⁸ to be used for³⁹ another suspected woman, and R. Ahi b. Josiah ruled: The scroll is fit to be used for³⁹ another suspected woman.⁴⁰ R. Papa remarked: It is possible, [surely, that the question in dispute]⁴¹ is not [the same]? For the first Tanna⁴² may have maintained his view there only because once [the Scroll] had been set aside⁴³ for Rachel⁴⁴ it cannot subsequently be set aside for Leah,⁴⁵ but in the case of a [Scroll] of the Law which is written for no particular person [the writing] may well⁴⁶ be blotted out [for any suspected wife]⁴⁷! R. Nahman b. Isaac remarked: It is possible [that the question in dispute] is not [the same]. For R. Ahi b. Josiah may have maintained his view there only because [the scroll] was written at least for one⁴⁸ suspected wife, but in the case of [a Scroll of] the Law, which is written for the purpose of study, he⁴⁹ also [might well admit] that [it may] not [be used for the purpose of] blotting out! But does not R. Ahi b. Josiah uphold the following ruling? For have we not learnt: If a man wrote a Get⁵⁰ to divorce his wife [therewith]

(1) Of our Mishnah, according to whom also no distinction is drawn in the dispute of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel between a wider and a narrower alley.

(2) Supra 12a, the case of an alley that was less than four handbreadths wide. Either the first Tanna or R. Akiba maintains in this case that Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel agree that no provision whatever is needed, their dispute being restricted to the case of an alley that was no less than four handbreadths wide.

(3) Cf. '(the ruling) of R. Ahli himself (is a point in dispute between) Tannas' (supra 12a).

(4) In commenting on the ruling of the DISCIPLE IN THE NAME OF R. ISHMAEL.

(5) Since R. Akiba refused to attribute it to such a distinguished authority as R. Ishmael.

(6) The disciple's.

(7) That the halachah agrees with the disciple's view.

(8) Being struck by the contradiction, they would be stirred to a full and thorough discussion and investigation of the question.

(9) By R. Akiba.

(10) The disciple's.

(11) The halachah nevertheless is not in agreement with him.

(12) ana sc. studied not only the theory, but also the practice of Judaism.

(13) So Rashb. and Aruk (v. Tosaf. s.v. ou, bebe a.l.). Var. lec.: ou, beke or xu, beke, Gr.  used as an ingredient in the preparation of ink and of shoe-black. Rashi renders atramentum (cf. Jast. and Golds.).

(14) For use in the writing of sacred texts, such as Scrolls of the Law.

(15) Lit., 'this is not'.

(16) Lit., 'work of heaven'.

(17) Lit., 'thou art found'.

(18) Sc. commit an act of blasphemy. By omitting e.g., the t in , nt (truth), the word would be abbreviated to , n (dead), and by adding a u to rcshu the verb would change from the sing. to the pl. When such terms are applied to the Deity, the scribe in the latter case is guilty of acknowledging polytheism while in the former he denies the Living God.

(19) The meaning of this reply is explained in the parenthesis infra.

(20) Num. V, 23.

(21) Sot. 20a.

(22) R. Ishmael. Lit., 'what did he say to him?'

(23) R. Meir. Lit., 'and what did he reply to him?' The former spoke about plene and defective and the latter replied about the ingredients of his ink!

(24) The difference between the form of the S and the ʿ is only the crownlet or small projection on the right of the former. Should the dalet of sj t (one), e.g., in the sentence 'the Lord is one' (Deut. VI, 4) be changed into a resh the reading rj t (another) would imply the blasphemy that the Lord is 'another God'.

(25) Lit., 'attendance on attendance'. According to the first version, R. Meir attended first on R. Ishmael and later on R. Akiba, while according to the second version he attended on them in the reverse order.

(26) Lit., 'he forbade it on he forbade it'. In the first version it was R. Akiba, and in the second it was R. Ishmael who forbade the use of vitriol.

(27) Which was too deep and complicated for him. R. Akiba was famous for his dialectic powers.

(28) The Mishnahs which the Master received from his teachers.

(29) Lit., 'for all'.

(30) Whether in the Scroll of the Law or in the special scroll that is prepared for a sotah (v. Glos.).

(31) Num. V, 11ff

(32) Sotah; for the reason, stated supra, that 'the writing must be such as can be blotted out'. The expressions from which this ruling is derived occur in this section.

(33) I.e., the scroll specially prepared [or the trial of a sotah, in which case the writing had to be blotted out (v. Num. V, 23). Hence the prohibition against the use of vitriol in the ink. In a Scroll of the Law, however, the writing in which is not intended for blotting out, this section also may be written with indelible ink.

(34) Lit., 'what is between them'.

(35) According to R. Judah this is permitted; hence his prohibition to use vitriol even in the writing of a Scroll of the Law. According to R. Jacob this is forbidden; hence his limitation of the restriction on the use of vitriol to the actual scroll that is written specifically for a particular wife when she is tried in the Sanctuary.

(36) R. Judah and R. Jacob.

(37) Lit., 'her scroll'.

(38) If, e.g., it remained unused because the woman confessed her guilt before the writing was blotted out.

(39) Lit., 'to cause to drink with it'.

(40) R. Ahi, who permits the use of a scroll that was not specifically written for the woman, permits also, like R. Judah, the use for the same purpose of a Scroll of the Law. The first Tanna, however who requires the scroll to be written specifically for the woman in question forbids also, like R. Jacob, the use of a Scroll of the Law.

(41) Between the first and the second pair of Tannas respectively.

(42) Of the Baraita last cited.

(43) Lit., 'torn away'.

(44) Sc. the first woman for whom it was specifically written.

(45) I.e., for any other woman.

(46) Lit., 'thus also'.

(47) This Tanna then, contrary to the previous statement, does not necessarily hold the same view as R. Jacob.

(48) Lit., 'in the world'.

(49) Lit., 'thus'.

(50) v. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 13b

and then he changed his mind;¹ and a fellow townsman met him and [asked for the document] saying: 'Your name is the same as mine and your wife's name is the same as my wife's name',² [the document is] invalid for the purpose of divorcing therewith [the other man's wife]?³ — What a comparison!⁴ Concerning that case⁵ it is written in Scripture: And he shall write for her,⁶ hence it is required that the writing shall be expressly for her sake;⁷ but in this case⁸ it is written: And he shall execute upon her,⁹ hence it is required that the execution shall be expressly for her sake,⁷ and the execution in her case is the blotting out.

R. Aha b. Hanina said: It is revealed and known before Him Who spoke and the world came into existence, that in the generation of R. Meir there was none equal to him; then why was not the halachah fixed in agreement with his views? Because his colleagues could not fathom the depths¹⁰ of his mind, for he would declare the ritually unclean to be clean and supply plausible proof,¹¹ and the ritually clean to be unclean and also supply plausible proof.¹¹

One taught: His name was not R. Meir but R. Nehorai. Then why was he called 'R. Meir'? Because he enlightened¹² the Sages in the halachah. His name in fact was not even Nehorai but R. Nehemiah or, as others say: R. Eleazar b. Arak. Then why was he called 'Nehorai'? Because he enlightened the Sages in the halachah.¹³

Rabbi¹⁴ declared: The only reason¹⁵ why I am keener than my colleagues is that I saw the back of R. Meir,¹⁶ but had I had a front view of him I would have been keener still, for it is written in Scripture: But thine eyes shall see thy teacher.¹⁷

R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Johanan: R. Meir had a disciple of the name of Symmachus who, for every rule concerning ritual uncleanness, supplied forty-eight reasons in support of its uncleanness, and for every rule concerning ritual cleanness, forty-eight reasons in support of its cleanness.

One taught: There was an assiduous student at Jamnia¹⁸ who by a hundred and fifty reasons proved that a [dead] creeping thing was clean. Said Rabina: I also could by logical argument prove it to be clean. If a snake that kills [man and beast] and thus causes much uncleanness,¹⁹ is itself ritually clean,²⁰ how much more should a creeping thing, which does not kill [either man or beast] and consequently causes no uncleanness, be ritually clean. This, however, is no argument, since [the snake] is merely acting like a thorn.²¹

R. Abba stated in the name of Samuel: For three years there was a dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, the former asserting, 'The halachah is in agreement with our views' and the latter contending, 'The halachah is in agreement with our views'. Then a bath kol²² issued announcing, '[The utterances of] both²³ are the words of the living God, but the halachah is in agreement with the rulings of Beth Hillel'. Since, however, both are the words of the living God' what was it that entitled Beth Hillel to have the halachah fixed in agreement with their rulings? Because they were kindly and modest, they studied their own rulings and those of Beth Shammai,²⁴ and were even so²⁵ [humble] as to mention the actions²⁶ of Beth Shammai before theirs, (as may be seen from²⁷ what we have learnt: If a man had his head and the greater part of his body within the sukkah²⁸ but his table in the house,²⁹ Beth Shammai ruled [that the booth was] invalid but Beth Hillel ruled that it was valid. Said Beth Hillel to Beth Shammai, 'Did it not so happen that the elders of Beth Shammai³⁰ and the elders of Beth Hillel went on a visit to R. Johanan b. Hahoranith and found him sitting with his head and greater part of his body within the sukkah while his table was in the house?' Beth Shammai replied: From³¹ their proof [may be adduced for our view for] they indeed told him, 'If you have always acted in this manner you have never fulfilled the commandment of sukkah'). This³² teaches you that him who humbles himself, the Holy One, blessed be He, raises up, and him who exalts himself, the Holy One, blessed be He, humbles; from him who seeks greatness, greatness flees, but him who flees from greatness, greatness follows; he who forces time³³ is forced back by time³⁴ but he who yields³⁵ to time³⁶ finds time standing at his side.³⁷

Our Rabbis taught: For two and a half years were Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel in dispute, the former asserting that it were better for man not to have been created than to have been created, and the latter maintaining that it is better for man to have been created than not to have been created. They finally took a vote and decided that it were better for man not to have been created than to have been created, but now that he has been created, let him investigate his past deeds³⁸ or, as others say, let him examine his future actions.³⁹

MISHNAH. THE CROSS-BEAM OF WHICH THEY [THE RABBIS] SPOKE MUST BE WIDE ENOUGH TO HOLD AN ARIAH⁴⁰ WHICH IS HALF OF A LEBENAH⁴¹ OF THREE HANDBREADTHS. IT IS SUFFICIENT FOR A BEAM TO BE ONE HANDBREADTH WIDE IN ORDER TO HOLD THE WIDTH OF AN ARIAH.⁴² [THE BEAM MUST BE] WIDE ENOUGH TO HOLD AN ARIAH BUT ALSO STRONG ENOUGH TO SUPPORT SUCH AN ARIAH.⁴³ R. JUDAH RULED: [THE BEAM IS VALID IF IT IS SUFFICIENTLY] WIDE, ALTHOUGH IT IS NOT STRONG. IF⁴⁴ IT WAS MADE OF STRAW OR REEDS IT IS LOOKED [UPON AS THOUGH IT HAD BEEN MADE OF METAL; [IF IT WAS] CURVED⁴⁵ IT IS LOOKED UPON AS THOUGH IT WERE STRAIGHT; [IF IT WAS] ROUND⁴⁵ IT IS LOOKED UPON AS THOUGH IT WERE SQUARE. WHATSOEVER HAS A CIRCUMFERENCE OF THREE HANDBREADTHS IS ONE HANDBREADTH IN DIAMETER.⁴⁶

(1) Sc. he decided not to divorce her.

(2) And, as the town in which the parties lived was also the same, he desired to use that Get for divorcing his own wife.

(3) Sot. 20b, Git. 24a; from which it follows that a document cannot be used for a person for whom it was not originally intended. An objection against R. Ahi b. Josiah.

(4) Lit., 'thus now'.

(5) Lit., 'there', that of divorce.

(6) Deut. XXIV, 1, emphasis on the last three words.

(7) Lit., 'for her name'. The woman for whom it is to be used.

(8) Lit., 'here', the case of a suspected wife.

(9) Num. V, 30, emphasis on 'execute . . . her'.

- (10) Lit., 'to stand upon the end'.
- (11) Lit., 'show it a face'.
- (12) Lit., 'he makes the eyes of the Sages shine'. rhtn rt. rut Hif., 'to give light', 'to cause to shine'.
- (13) Cf. previous note, htruvb of the rt. rvb 'to shine'.
- (14) MS.M. 'Rab'.
- (15) Lit., , 'that'.
- (16) Rashi: When I studied under him my seat at the academy was in the row which had a back view of R. Meir.
- (17) Isa. XXX, 20.
- (18) Or Jabneh. The religious center and seat of the Sanhedrin after the destruction of Jerusalem.
- (19) A corpse is unclean and imparts uncleanness to those who come in contact with it.
- (20) Since it was not included among the eight unclean reptiles enumerated in Lev. XI, 29f.
- (21) The uncleanness which it causes has consequently no bearing on its own status. No inference a minori can, therefore, be drawn between snake and creeping thing.
- (22) v. Glos.
- (23) Lit., 'these and these'.
- (24) Cf., e.g., Ber. 10b.
- (25) Lit., 'and no more but'.
- (26) Lit., 'words', 'things', hence 'actions' (cf. infra n. 7).
- (27) Lit., 'like that'.
- (28) V. Glos. ; in which every Israelite must live during the Festival of Tabernacles.
- (29) Sc. the booth was so small that it could not contain more than the parts of the body mentioned.
- (30) Here Beth Hillel mention the action of Beth Shammai before theirs.
- (31) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ht 'if' or 'indeed'.
- (32) The privilege conferred upon Beth Hillel.
- (33) Sc. is over anxious to succeed and embarks in consequence on hazardous or perilous adventures.
- (34) His efforts lead him into disaster.
- (35) Lit., 'is pushed back'.
- (36) Or 'circumstances', sc. he does not aim above his means and does not overstrain his mental or physical powers.
- (37) He will succeed in due course.
- (38) And, if he find them at fault, make the necessary amends.
- (39) Before committing them. The underlying difference between the two versions is the interchange of pe for mem. Both apap and anan imply 'examination' but the former is more applicable to something actually done, the latter to something intended (cf. Rashi).
- (40) A half-sized brick.
- (41) A brick of full size.
- (42) Of one and a half handbreadths. Lit., 'to its width'. Var. lec. 'to its length', sc. the length of the ariah running the length of the beam.
- (43) In order that it may have the appearance of a firm structure on which it is possible to build.
- (44) This is a continuation of R. Judah's ruling.
- (45) So that no brick can rest upon it.
- (46) Approximately. The circumference of a round cross-beam must consequently be no less than three handbreadths.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 14a

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 14a

GEMARA. ONE HANDBREADTH! Is not a handbreadth and a half required?¹ — Since it is wide enough to hold [an ariah of the size of] one handbreadth one may provide a foundation² for the remaining half of the handbreadth by plastering [the beam] with clay, a little on one side³ and a little on the other,³ so [that the ariah can be] kept in position.

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: The cross-beam of which [the Rabbis] spoke must be strong enough to support an ariah;⁴ the supports⁵ of the beam, however, need not be so strong as to be capable of bearing the beam and the ariah.⁶ R. Hisda, however, ruled: They⁷ must be strong enough to support both the beam and the ariah.

R. Shesheth said: If one laid a beam across [an entrance to] an alley and spread a mat over it, raising [the lower end of the mat to a height of] three handbreadths from the ground, there is here neither valid cross-beam nor valid partition. There is here no valid cross-beam, since it is covered up; and no valid partition, since it is one through which kids can push their way.⁸

Our Rabbis taught: If a cross-beam projects from one wall and does not touch the wall opposite, and so also if two cross-beams one of which projects from one wall and the other from the wall opposite, do not touch one another, it is not necessary to provide⁹ another beam, [if the gap is] less than three handbreadths, [but if it was one of] three handbreadths it is necessary to provide another cross-beam. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: [if the gap was] less than four handbreadths it is not necessary to provide another cross-beam [and only where it was one of] four handbreadths it is necessary to provide another cross-beam. Similarly where there were two parallel cross-beams, neither of which was wide enough to hold an ariah, it is unnecessary to provide¹⁰ another cross-beam if the two together can hold the width of one handbreadth of an ariah, otherwise¹¹ it is necessary to provide another cross-beam. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: If they can hold an ariah of the length of three handbreadths it is unnecessary to provide¹⁰ another cross-beam, otherwise¹¹ it is necessary to provide another cross-beam. If they were [fixed] one higher than the other,¹² the higher one, said R. Jose son of R. Judah, is looked upon as if it lay lower¹³ or the lower one, as if it lay higher,¹³ provided only that the higher one was not higher than twenty cubits¹⁴ and the lower one [was not] lower than ten cubits.¹⁴

Abaye remarked: R. Jose son of R. Judah holds the same view as his father in one respect and differs from him in another. He 'holds the same view as his father in one respect' in that he also adopts the principle of 'IS LOOKED UPON'; 'and differs from him in another', for whereas R. Judah holds [that a cross-beam may be] higher than twenty cubits,¹⁴ R. Jose son of R. Judah holds [that it is valid] only within, but not above twenty cubits.

R. JUDAH RULED: [THE BEAM IS VALID IF IT IS SUFFICIENTLY] WIDE, ALTHOUGH IT IS NOT STRONG. Rab Judah taught Hiyya b. Rab in the presence of Rab, 'WIDE, ALTHOUGH IT IS NOT STRONG', when the latter said to him: Teach him, 'Wide and strong enough'. Did not, however, R. Ela'i state in the name of Rab, '[a cross-beam that is] four [handbreadths] wide [is valid] although it is not strong,?' — One that is four [handbreadths] wide is different [from one that is less than the prescribed width].

IF IT WAS MADE OF STRAW etc. What does he thereby teach us? That we adopt the principle of 'IS LOOKED UPON'?¹⁵ But, then, is not this exactly the same [principle as was already enunciated]?¹⁶ — It might have been assumed that [the principle] is applied only to one of its own kind¹⁷ but not to one of a different kind,¹⁸ hence we were taught [that any material is valid].

[IF IT WAS] CURVED IT IS LOOKED UPON AS THOUGH IT WERE STRAIGHT. Is not this obvious?¹⁹ — He taught us [thereby a ruling] like that of R. Zera, for R. Zera stated: If it²⁰ was within an alley and its curve without the alley, or if it was below twenty cubits²¹ and its curve above twenty, or if it was above ten cubits²¹ but its curve was below ten, attention must be paid [to this]:²² Whenever no [gap of] three handbreadths²³ would have remained if its curve had been removed, it is not necessary to provide another cross-beam; otherwise, another cross-beam must be provided. Is not this also obvious? — It was necessary [to enunciate the ruling in the case where the beam] was within the alley and its curve was without the alley. As it might have been presumed that the possibility must be taken into consideration that the residents might be guided by it;²⁴ hence we were informed [that no such possibility need be considered].

[IF IT WAS] ROUND IT IS LOOKED UPON AS THOUGH IT WERE SQUARE. What need again was there for this ruling?²⁵ It was necessary [on account of its] final clause: WHATSOEVER HAS A CIRCUMFERENCE OF THREE HANDBREADTHS IS ONE HANDBREADTH IN DIAMETER. Whence are these calculations²⁶ deduced? — R. Johanan replied: Scripture stated: And he made the 'molten sea of ten cubits from brim to brim, round in compass, and the height thereof was five cubits; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.²⁷ But surely there was [the thickness of] its brim?²⁸ — R. Papa replied: Of its brim, it is written in Scripture [that it was as thin as] the flower of a lily;²⁹ for it is written: And it³⁰ was a handbreadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, like the flower of a lily; it held two thousand baths.³¹ But there was [still] a fraction at least?²⁸ — When [the measurement of the circumference]³² was computed³³ it was that of the inner circumference.³⁴

R. Hiyya taught:³⁵ The sea that Solomon made contained one hundred and fifty ritual baths.³⁶ But consider: How much is [the volume of] a ritual bath? Forty se'ah,³⁷ as it was taught: And he shall bathe . . .

(1) To support an ariah of that size.

(2) ihckn particip. denom. of vbck, lit., he makes it a brick (foundation)'.

(3) To hold (a half of the half) a quarter of the handbreadth.

(4) For reason v. note in our Mishnah.

(5) Lit., 'that cause to stand', pegs for instance.

(6) It is sufficient if they can bear the weight of the beam alone, since in fact no ariah is ever put on the beam.

(7) Lit., 'the one as well as the other'.

(8) A suspended partition of such a character is invalid in an alley.

(9) Lit., 'to bring'.

(10) Lit., 'to bring'.

(11) Lit., 'and if not'.

(12) But are together wide enough to hold an ariah.

- (13) In the same level as the other beam.
- (14) From the ground (cf. Mishnah supra 2a ab init.).
- (15) Cf. our Mishnah.
- (16) In the previous clause: (THE BEAM IS VALID) . . . ALTHOUGH IT IS NOT STRONG. One that 'WAS MADE OF STRAW' is obviously not strong.
- (17) Sc. a frail beam of wood may be regarded as a strong beam of the same material, since weak as well as strong beams can be made of it.
- (18) As straw, for instance, is a material from which no strong beam can ever be made, it might have been deemed to be totally unfit.
- (19) Since it involves the same principle as that of the previous ruling. Why then the unnecessary repetition?
- (20) A cross-beam.
- (21) From the ground.
- (22) Lit., '(we) see'.
- (23) Between the two parts of the beam at which the curve begins.
- (24) Lit., 'he might come to be drawn after it'; and so use a section of the public domain as if it had been a part of their alley.
- (25) v. supra note 3.
- (26) Lit., 'things'. [This is the only instance where a doubt is raised in the Talmud in connection with a mathematical statement. This, as Zuckermann points out (Das Mathematische im Talmud, p. 23) proves that the Rabbis were well aware of the more exact ratio between the diameter and circumference and that the ratio of 1:3 was accepted by them simply as a workable number for religious purposes. Hence the question, 'Whence are these calculations deduced?' V. Feldman, Rabbinical Mathematics etc., p. 23].
- (27) I Kings VII, 23. As the molten sea which had a diameter of ten cubits was approximately thirty cubits in circumference, the ratio of a diameter to a circumference must consequently be 10:30 = 1:3 approx.
- (28) Which increased the diameter to more than ten cubits: so that the ratio between diameter and circumference was greater than 1:3.
- (29) Its thickness, therefore, amounted to very little and might be disregarded.
- (30) The lower portion of the sea.
- (31) I Kings VII, 26.
- (32) Of the molten sea.
- (33) As thirty cubits.
- (34) The diameter of which was exactly ten cubits.
- (35) So Bomb. ed. Cur. edd., 'it was taught'.
- (36) Lit., 'a gathering together for purification'.
- (37) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 14b

in water¹ implies, in water that is gathered together;² All his flesh³ implies, water in which all his body can be immersed;⁴ and how much is this? [A volume of water of the size of] a cubit by a cubit by a height of three cubits; and the Sages have accordingly estimated that the waters of a ritual bath must measure forty se'ah.⁵ Now how many [cubic units] were there [in the molten sea]? Five hundred [cubic] cubits.⁶ From three hundred [cubic cubits are obtained] a hundred [ritual baths],⁷ and from a hundred and fifty [cubic cubits] fifty [ritual baths are obtained]. [Would not then a volume] of four hundred and fifty [cubic cubits] be enough?⁸ — These calculations⁹ [apply only] to a square [shaped tank], while the sea that Solomon made was round.

But consider: By how much does [the area of] a square exceed that of a circle? By a quarter.¹⁰ Then of the four hundred [cubic cubits previously assumed]¹¹ one hundred [must be deducted], and of the hundred¹¹ [cubic cubits] twenty-five [must be deducted]. [Would not then¹² the number of ritual baths] be Only a hundred and twenty-five?¹² — Rami b. Ezekiel learned that the sea that Solomon made was square in its lower three cubits and round in its upper three.¹³

Granted that you cannot assume the reverse,¹⁴ since it is written in Scripture that its brim was round, [can you not] say, however, [that only] one [cubit of the height of the brim was round]?¹⁵ — This¹⁶ cannot be entertained at all, for it is written, it held two thousand baths;¹⁷ now how much is a bath? Three se'ah,; for it is written in Scripture: The tenth of the bath out of the kor [which is ten baths],¹⁸ so that the sea¹⁹ contained six thousand griva.²⁰ But Surely is it not written: It²¹ held three thousand baths?²² — This²³ [includes the addition] of the heap [in a dry measure].²⁴

Said Abaye: From this it may be inferred that the heap [of a measure]²⁵ is one third [of the entire quantity].²⁶ And so have we also learnt: A large box or chest, a cupboard, a large straw or reed basket,²⁷ and the tank of an Alexandrian ship, although they have flat bottoms and are capable of holding forty se'ah of liquid, which are [equal to] two kor of dry [commodities],²⁸ are levitically clean.²⁹

MISHNAH. THE SIDE-POSTS OF WHICH THEY [THE RABBIS] SPOKE [MUST BE NO LESS THAN] TEN HANDBREADTHS IN HEIGHT, BUT THEIR WIDTH AND THICKNESS MAY BE OF ANY SIZE WHATSOEVER. R. JOSE RULED: THEIR WIDTH [MUST BE NO LESS THAN] THREE HANDBREADTHS.

GEMARA. THE SIDE-POSTS OF WHICH THEY SPOKE etc. May it then³⁰ be asserted that we have here learnt an anonymous Mishnah in agreement with R. Eliezer who ruled that two side-posts are required?³¹ — No; the expression of³² SIDE-POSTS [refers to] side-posts in general.³³ If so,³⁴ should it not have been taught, in the case of the cross-beam also,³⁵ 'cross-beams', the plural referring to³⁶ cross-beams generally? — It is really this that was meant: The SIDE-POSTS concerning which R. Eliezer and the Sages are in dispute³⁷ [MUST BE NO LESS THAN] TEN HANDBREADTHS IN HEIGHT, BUT THEIR WIDTH AND THICKNESS MAY BE OF ANY SIZE WHATSOEVER.³⁸ And how much [was meant by] 'ANY SIZE WHATSOEVER'? — R. Hiyya taught: Even [if only] as that of the thread of a cloak.³⁹

A Tanna taught: If a man put up a side-post for a half of an alley⁴⁰ he may only use⁴¹ [the inner] half of the alley.⁴² Is not this⁴³ obvious?⁴⁴ — Rather read: He may use⁴⁵ a half of the alley.⁴⁶ Is not this,⁴⁷ however, also obvious?⁴⁸ — It might have been presumed that the possibility should be considered that⁴⁹ one might proceed to use all of it;⁵⁰ hence we were informed [that the inner half may be used].

Raba stated: If one constructed a side-post for an alley and raised it three handbreadths from the ground, or removed it three handbreadths from the wall, his act is invalid.⁵¹ Even R.⁵² Simeon b. Gamaliel, who holds [that in the case of gaps] we apply the rule of labud,⁵³ maintains his view⁵⁴ [only where the gap occurred] above,⁵⁵ but [where it was] below, since [the post] constitutes a partition through which kids can push their way, he did not uphold that view.

R. JOSE RULED: THEIR WIDTH [MUST BE NO LESS THAN] THREE HANDBREADTHS. R. Joseph stated in the name of Rab Judah who had it from Samuel: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Jose either in respect of 'brine'⁵⁶ or in that of 'SIDE-POSTS'. Said R. Huna b. Hinena to him: You told us this⁵⁷ concerning 'brine' but not concerning 'side-posts'. Now wherein does brine differ? Obviously because the Rabbis disagree with him; but do not they disagree with him in respect of side-posts also? — 'Side-posts', the other replied: 'are in a different category because Rabbi has taken up the same point of view.'⁵⁸

R. Rehumi taught thus: Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath stated in the name of Rab: The halachah does not agree with R. Jose either in respect of 'brine'⁵⁶ or in that of 'SIDE-POSTS'. 'Did you say it?' they asked him. 'No', he replied. 'By God!' Raba exclaimed, 'he did say it, and I learned it from him,' — Why then did he change his view? — Because R. Jose has always good reasons for his rulings.⁵⁹ Said Raba son of R. Hanan⁶⁰ to Abaye, 'What is the law?'⁶¹ — 'Go', the other told him, 'and see what is the usage of the people'.⁶²

There are some who teach this⁶³ in connection with the following: A man who drinks water on account of his thirst⁶⁴ must say⁶⁵ [the benediction], 'by whose word all things exist'.⁶⁶ R. Tarfon ruled [that the following benediction⁶⁵ must be said], 'who⁶⁶ createst many living beings with their wants, for all the means that thou has created'.⁶⁷ Said R. Hanan⁶⁸ to Abaye, 'What is the law?' — 'Go', the other told him, 'and see what is the usage of the people'.

(1) Lev. XV, 16. 'His flesh' is in cur. edd. enclosed in parenthesis. M.T. has 'all' before 'flesh'.

(2) Sc. it need not be spring water.

(3) Ibid.

(4) Lit., 'goes up in them'.

(5) V. supra 4b, notes.

(6) The calculation at the moment is based, for the sake of argument, on the imaginary assumption that the round sea like a square tank contained $10 \times 10 \times 5 = 500$ cubic cubits.

(7) Since each bath, as stated supra, contains $1 \times 1 \times 3 = 3$ cubic cubits.

(8) To make up a hundred and fifty ritual baths. An objection against R. Hiyya's statement.

(9) V. supra p. 91, n. 17.

(10) Since a diameter of one unit has a circumference of three units approx., and a square of one such unit has a perimeter of four such units.

(11) In the number of 'five hundred'. $500 - 400 = 100$.

(12) Since $400 - 100 = 300$, and $100 - 25 = 75$, the number of cubic cubits in the sea of Solomon was only 375. As each three cubic cubits produced one ritual bath, the sea could have contained no more than $375/3 = 125$ ritual baths. An objection again against R. Hiyya.

(13) The lower section contained $3 \times 10 \times 10 = 300$ cubic cubits. The upper section, being circular and by one quarter less than a square, contained $2 \times 10 \times 10 - 50 = 150$. The two sections together consequently contained $(300 + 150)/3 = 350$ ritual baths.

- (14) That the upper section of the sea was square shaped and its lower one round.
- (15) And the sea consequently contained more than a hundred and fifty ritual baths. On what ground then could R. Hiyya maintain that it contained only a hundred and fifty ritual baths?
- (16) That the sea contained more than the number given by R. Hiyya.
- (17) I Kings VII, 26.
- (18) Ezek. XLV, 14. A kor which is ten baths also equals thirty se'ah. Ten baths consequently equal thirty se'ah and one bath equals three se'ah.
- (19) Which held two thousand baths.
- (20) A griva = one se'ah. Since one bath = three se'ah, two thousand baths = $3 \times 2000 = 6000$ se'ah = $6000/40 = 150$ ritual baths. Hence R. Hiyya's figure.
- (21) Solomon's sea.
- (22) II Chron. IV, 5.
- (23) The higher figure.
- (24) While liquids can only reach the level of the top of the measure, dry commodities can be raised to a certain height above that level. The difference between the dry and liquid commodities that the sea could contain, explains the difference between the figures in I Chron., and I Kings respectively. For an attempt to reconcile Rami b. Ezekiel's solution with the more exact value of 'pie' v. Zuckermann, op. cit., p. 29 and Feldman, op. cit., p. 51.
- (25) Sc. the quantity above its level, if the ratio of its height to its length and width is the same as that of Solomon's sea.
- (26) One thousand being a third of three thousand.
- (27) Lit., 'receptacle', 'container'.
- (28) Two kor = 60 se'ah. The difference between the dry and the liquid is thus $60 - 40 = 20$ se'ah, and twenty is one third of sixty. This Mishnah thus supports Abaye's calculation.
- (29) Sc. are not susceptible to levitical uncleanness. Only vessels that are moved about both empty and full are so susceptible. Those mentioned here are large and not easily moved; hence they are not subject to the same susceptibility. Shab. 35a; Kel. XV, 1; Oh. VIII, 1, 3.
- (30) Since our Mishnah speaks of side-posts in the plural.
- (31) Mishnah Supra 11b. Is it likely, however, that an anonymous Mishnah, which as a rule represents the halachah, would agree with an individual opinion contrary to that of the majority?
- (32) Lit., 'what'.
- (33) Each individual alley, however, may require no more than one side-post.
- (34) That the plural was used to refer to side-posts in general.
- (35) In the previous Mishnah (supra 13b).
- (36) Lit., 'and what beams?'
- (37) The former requiring two and the latter one.
- (38) The use of the plural is consequently no proof that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eliezer.
- (39) kcrx cf. Gr. **.
- (40) I.e., instead of fixing the side-post at a point facing the entrance, he put it up within the alley at a point facing the middle of it.
- (41) Lit., 'he has not but'.
- (42) Tosef. 'Er. I.
- (43) That only the inner but not the outer half of the alley may be used.
- (44) Of course it is, since the outer part was not provided with any side-post.
- (45) Lit., 'he has'.
- (46) While it is obvious that the outer half could not be used, it is not so obvious that the inner part may be used.

Hence the necessity for the Tosef cited.

- (47) That the inner half may be used.
- (48) Since it was well provided with a side-post.
- (49) Were the use of the inner half to be permitted.
- (50) In consequence of which the use of the inner half also should be forbidden.
- (51) Lit., 'he did nothing'.
- (52) Lit., 'according to R.'
- (53) v. Glos.
- (54) Lit., 'these words'.
- (55) As, for instance, when a cross-beam projecting from one wall does not reach the wall opposite.
- (56) V. Shab. 108b.
- (57) That the halachah is not in agreement with R. Jose.
- (58) Supra 10a, 12a.
- (59) Lit., 'his depth (of reasoning) is with him'. V. Rashi a.l. and cf. Rashi infra 51a s.v. ueunhb.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 15a

It was stated: A side-post put up accidentally,¹ Abaye ruled, is a valid side-post, but Raba ruled: It is no valid side-post. Where [the residents] did not rely on it from the previous day,² no one disputes that it is no valid side-post. They differ only where [the residents] did rely upon it on the previous day.³ Abaye ruled: 'It is a valid side-post', since the residents relied on it from the previous day. But Raba ruled: 'It is no valid side-post', because owing to the fact that originally it was not made for that purpose,⁴ it cannot be regarded as a valid side-post.

It has been assumed⁵ that as they⁶ differed in the case of a side-post, so they differed in that of a partition.⁷ Come and hear:⁸ If a man made his sukkah⁹ among trees and the trees serve as its walls, it is ritually fit!¹⁰ Here we are dealing [with trees] that were originally planted for the purpose.¹¹ If so, is this¹² not obvious? — It might have been presumed that a preventive measure should be enacted as a precaution against the possibility of using the tree [for other purposes also],¹³ hence we were informed [that no such precaution was deemed necessary].

Come and hear: If there was present¹⁴ a tree or a wall or a fence of [growing] reeds it may be treated as a corner-piece!¹⁵ — Here also we are dealing with one that was originally intended for the purpose. If so, what need was there to tell us this? — We were told that a fence of reeds [is valid if the distance between] any two reeds was less than three handbreadths, as [was explained in] the enquiry that Abaye addressed to Raba.¹⁶

Come and hear: Where a tree overshadows the ground,¹⁷ it is permitted to move objects under it¹⁸ if [the top of] its branches is not higher than three handbreadths from the ground!¹⁹ — Here also we are dealing with one that was originally planted for the purpose. If so, it should be permissible to move objects under it in all cases; why then did R. Huna the son of R. Joshua state that movement of objects under it is permissible only [where its area was no larger than] two beth se'ah?²⁰ — Because it is a dwelling that serves the [outside] air²¹ and no movement of objects is permitted in a dwelling that serves the outside air unless [its area is no larger than] two beth se'ah.²²

Come and hear: If a man received the Sabbath²³ on a mound that was ten handbreadths high²⁴ and between four cubits and two beth se'ah in area, or²⁵ in the cleft [of a rock] that was ten handbreadths deep²⁶ and between four cubits and two beth se'ah in area, or reaped corn that was surrounded by [growing] ears,²⁷ he may walk in all the area,²⁸ and outside it for two thousand cubits!²⁹ And should you reply that there also it is a case where one had originally made them for the purpose, [your submission] might be quite agreeable as regards the corn;³⁰ what, however, could be said as regards the mound or the cleft?³¹ — The fact, however, is that in respect of partitions, no one³² disputes that [one put up accidentally] is a valid partition. They only differ in respect of a side-post — Abaye³³ follows his own point of view, for he has laid down that a side-post represents³⁴ a partition, and a partition set up accidentally is a valid partition. Raba, on the other hand, follows his own point of view, for he has laid down that a side-post serves³⁴ the purpose of a distinguishing mark,³⁵ and only where it is made for that purpose,³⁶ is it a distinguishing mark, otherwise³⁷ it is no distinguishing mark.

Come and hear: If stones³⁸ that project from a wall³⁹ are separated from each other by less than three handbreadths, no other side-post is required;⁴⁰ [if they are separated by] three handbreadths, another side-post is required!⁴¹ Here also it is a case where they were originally built for that purpose.⁴² If so, is not this⁴³ obvious?⁴⁴ — It might have been presumed that [projections] are made solely as building connections,⁴⁵ hence we were informed [that no other side-post is required].

Come and hear what R. Hiyya taught: A wall of which one side recedes more than the other, whether [the recess can be] seen from without and appears even from within or whether it can be seen from within and appears even from without, may be regarded as [being provided with] a side-post!⁴⁶ — Here also it is a case where it was originally constructed for the purpose. If so, what need was there to tell us [the obvious]? — It is this that we were informed: [If the recess can be] seen from without though it appears even from within, [the wall] may be regarded as [provided with] a side-post.

Come and hear [of the incident] where Rab was sitting in a certain alley and R. Huna sat before him when he said to his attendant, 'Go, bring me a jar of water'. By the time the latter returned, the side-post fell down and he motioned to him with his hand to remain in his place.⁴⁷ Said R. Huna to him, 'Is not the Master of the opinion that one may rely upon the palm-tree?'⁴⁸ 'This young Rabbi', he replied: 'seems to think that people cannot explain a ruling they have heard! Did we rely upon it since yesterday?⁴⁹ The reason then⁵⁰ is that no one had relied on it;⁵¹ but if they had relied on it,⁵¹ it would have been regarded as a valid side-post.⁵²

Might not one suggest that Abaye and Raba differed only where [the residents] did not rely on it,⁵³ but that where they did rely on it, it is regarded as a valid side-post?⁵⁴ — This cannot be entertained at all; for there was a certain piazza at the house of Bar Habu,⁵⁵ about which Abaye and Raba were always⁵⁶ in dispute.⁵⁷

MISHNAH. SIDE-POSTS MAY BE MADE OF ANYTHING, EVEN OF AN ANIMATE OBJECT, BUT R. MEIR⁵⁸ FORBIDS THIS. IT⁵⁹ ALSO CAUSES DEFILEMENT⁶⁰ AS THE COVERING OF A TOMB,⁶¹

(1) Lit., ‘that stands of itself’, sc. it was not put up in connection with the Sabbath ritual.

(2) Lit., ‘from yesterday’, sc. Friday, the day before the Sabbath; if, for instance, a proper side-post provided fell down on the Sabbath day.

(3) And, in consequence, provided no other side-post.

(4) To serve as a side-post in compliance with the Sabbath laws.

(5) By the students at the schoolhouse.

(6) Abaye and Raba.

(7) Sc. if a wall was put up, not for the ritual purpose for which it was desired to use it Abaye considers it valid and Raba does not.

(8) All objection against Raba.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) Suk. 24b; which proves that a wall is valid even if it was not originally made for the purpose. V. supra note 10.

(11) To serve as walls for the sukkah.

(12) That they are ritually valid walls

(13) And people would thus even pluck its fruit on the festival when this is forbidden.

(14) In close proximity to a watering station.

(15) Infra 19b; which shows that a wall is ritually valid though it had not been specially made for the purpose, and presents an objection against Raba. snuhs = sung uhs ‘two pillars’; cf. Gr. , ‘forked’. A deyomad, or corner-piece consists of two boards, or the like, meeting at their ends at right angles to one another and forming all L shaped construction. Four deyomads of the prescribed size, placed respectively at the four corners of a watering station, constitute a ritually valid partition within which it is permitted to carry on the Sabbath.

(16) Infra 19b ad fin.

(17) With its branches that grow from its trunk at a height of ten handbreadths.

(18) On the Sabbath.

(19) Infra 99b, Suk. 24b. An objection against Raba.

(20) V. Glos. Such a restriction is applicable to enclosures that are only partially valid (cf. infra 16b, 24a). Now if the tree in question had been planted for the purpose, its branches, surely, constitute a valid enclosure; why then should the restriction mentioned apply?

(21) I.e., to provide shelter for the watchmen of the surrounding fields. It is not one in which people usually live.

(22) As stated infra 22a.

(23) It is forbidden to walk on the Sabbath beyond two thousand cubits from one's home, the term being defined as the spot (four cubits by four), the house or the town where a person was at the time the Sabbath had set in. Within the four cubits, or within the house or town however big it may be, it is always permitted to walk.

(24) The minimum height of a private domain to which the rule of upward extension of its edges to form virtual walls is applied.

(25) Lit., 'and so'.

(26) And thus provided with walls of the height required to form a private domain.

(27) That were ten handbreadths high and formed a partition of the prescribed minimum height (cf. previous note).

(28) Since all the mound, the cleft or the space enclosed by the growing ears of corn is regarded as his 'home'.

(29) Suk. 25a; which proves that walls or partitions apparently not made for the purpose of satisfying the requirements of the Sabbath laws are nevertheless regarded as valid walls, and an objection thus again arises against Raba.

(30) It being possible that the reaping of the field was so planned as to leave an enclosure of ears of corn round the particular spot.

(31) Which are natural phenomena.

(32) Lit., 'all the world'.

(33) In declaring it valid.

(34) Lit., 'because of'.

(35) Supra 12b q.v. notes.

(36) Lit., 'with the hands'.

(37) Lit., 'and if not'.

(38) Lit., 'stones of a wall'.

(39) One above the other in a vertical line.

(40) To convert an alley at whose entrance they are situated, into a private domain. The projecting stones alone satisfy the requirements of a side-post.

(41) Thus it follows that the projecting stones, where the distance between them is less than three handbreadths, constitute a valid side-post though, apparently, they were not put there for that purpose. All objection against Raba.

(42) To serve as a side-post for the alley.

(43) That no other side-post is required.

(44) What need then was there to state it?

(45) To dovetail any new wall with the existing one; and consequently could not be regarded as a side-post even though they were so originally intended.

(46) Supra 9b, q.v. notes. The recession being presumably accidental, does not the recognition of the validity of the side-post present an objection against Raba?

(47) So according to MS.M. and R. Han. lh, fust oe 'remain in your place'. According to cur. edd., vh, fust oe 'he remained in his place', render, 'He motioned to him with his hand and (the latter) remained in his place'.

(48) That grew at the side of the entrance to the alley.

(49) They did not. Hence they could not treat the palm-tree as a valid side-post for the alley.

(50) Why the palm-tree could not be regarded as a side-post.

(51) Before the commencement of the Sabbath.

(52) This then proves that the law is in agreement with Abaye.

(53) A side-post of accidental origin.

(54) So that Rab's ruling would be in agreement with the opinion of both Abaye and Raba.

(55) And one of its supporting poles was situated at the entrance to an alley.

(56) Lit., 'all their years'.

(57) The former regarding it as a valid side-post and the latter denying its validity. From which it follows that the dispute between Abaye and Raba as to the validity of a side-post of accidental origin extends also to one upon which the residents had relied.

(58) Separate ed. of the Mishnah read: 'R. Jose'.

(59) Any object, even an animate one, that was used to close up a tomb.

(60) Even after it had been removed from the grave.

(61) kkud. Such a covering is subject to the same degree of levitical uncleanness as the corpse itself (cf. Hul. 72a).

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 15b

BUT R. MEIR RULED THAT IT WAS NOT SUSCEPTIBLE TO DEFILEMENT.¹ WOMEN'S LETTERS OF DIVORCE TOO MAY BE WRITTEN ON IT, BUT R. JOSE THE GALILEAN DECLARED IT TO BE UNFIT.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Meir ruled: No animate object may be used either as a wall for a sukkah,² or as a side-post for an alley, [or as one of the] partitions for watering stations or as a covering for a grave.³ In the name of R. Jose the Galilean it was laid down: Women's bills [of divorce] also may not be written on it.⁴ What is R. Jose the Galilean's reason? — Because it was taught: [From the Scriptural expression of] 'letter'⁵ one would only learn that⁶ a letter⁵ [may be used]; whence, however, [can it be deduced that] all other things are also included? [From] the explicit statement:⁷ That he writeth her⁸ [which implies:] On any object whatsoever.⁹ If so, why was the expression of 'letter' used? To tell you that as a letter is an inanimate object and does not eat, so must any other object [used for the purpose be] one that is inanimate and does not eat.¹⁰ And the Rabbis?¹¹ — Is it written: 'In a letter'?'¹² Surely only 'letter'¹³ is written, and this refers¹⁴ merely to the recording¹⁵ of the words.¹⁶

As to the Rabbis, however, what exposition do they make of the expression: That he writeth her?¹⁷ — They require that text [for the deduction that a woman] may be divorced only by writing¹⁸ but not by money.¹⁹ For it might have been presumed that since divorce²⁰ was compared with betrothal,²¹ as betrothal [may be effected] by means of money²² so may divorce [also be effected] by means of money;²³ hence we were informed [that only by writing¹⁸ can divorce be effected]. And whence does R. Jose the Galilean derive this logical conclusion?²⁴ — He derives it from [the expression of] 'A letter of divorcement'²⁵ [which implies:]²⁶ The letter causes her divorcement but no other thing may cause it.²⁷ And the Rabbis? — They require the expression of²⁸ 'A letter of divorcement'²⁵ to [indicate that the divorce must be] one that completely separates the man from the woman;²⁹ as it was taught: [Should a husband say to his wife,] 'Here is your divorce on condition that you never drink any wine' or 'on condition that you never go to your father's house' [such a divorce] is no complete separation;³⁰ [if he said,] 'During³¹ thirty days'³² is it regarded as a complete separation.³³ And R. Jose the Galilean?³⁴ — He derives it from [the use of] kerituth³⁵ [instead of] kareth.³⁵ And the Rabbis? — They base no expositions [on the distinction between] kareth and kerituth.³⁶

WHICH [IN ITS WIDTH DOES NOT EXCEED] TEN³⁹ CUBITS IS PERMITTED,⁴⁰ BECAUSE IT IS LIKE A DOORWAY. IF IT EXCEEDS THIS [MEASUREMENT] IT IS FORBIDDEN.⁴¹ GEMARA. It was stated: If the breaches [in an enclosure] are equal [in area to its] standing parts, the [movement of objects⁴² in the space within the enclosures], R. Papa ruled, is permitted, and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua ruled: It is forbidden. R. Papa ruled: 'It is permitted', because the All Merciful taught Moses⁴³ thus: 'Thou must not allow the greater part of a fence to consist of gaps'.⁴⁴ R. Huna the son of R. Joshua ruled, 'it is forbidden for it is this that the All Merciful taught Moses: 'Its greater part [must be] fence'.

We learned: AND THE GAPS DO NOT EXCEED THE BUILT-UP PARTS, but, [it follows, does it not, that if they were] equal to the built-up parts [movement of objects within the enclosure] is permitted?⁴⁵ — Do not infer: 'But [if they were] equal to the built-up parts [the movement of objects] is permitted', but infer: 'If the built-up parts exceed the gaps [the movement of objects] is permitted'. But [if the gaps are] equal to the built-up parts, what [is the law]? [Is the movement of objects]⁴² forbidden? If so, however, should not the reading have been, 'The gaps are not equal to the built-up parts'?⁴⁶ — This is indeed a difficulty.

Come and hear: If a man covered the roof⁴⁷ of his sukkah⁴⁸ with spits or with the long [sides] of a bed⁴⁹ [the sukkah is] valid if there is as much space between them as that of their own [width].⁵⁰ Here we are dealing [with such] as can be easily moved in and out.⁵¹ Is it, however, possible⁵² to be exact?⁵³ — R. Ammi replied: One might supply more [of the proper roofing].⁵⁴ Raba replied: If they⁵⁵ were placed crosswise, one puts the suitable material lengthwise, [and if they were placed] lengthwise, one puts it crosswise.⁵⁶

Come and hear: If a caravan camped in a valley and it was surrounded by camels, saddles,

(1) For the reason, v. Suk. 24a.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) If it was used, the wall, the side-post or the partition is invalid and the covering remains insusceptible to levitical uncleanness.

(4) Suk. 23a.

(5) Deut. XXIV, 1. רִפְּךָ 'book', 'letter' or 'scroll'.

(6) Lit., 'I have only'.

(7) Lit., 'it is taught to say'.

(8) Deut. XXIV, 1, emphasis on writeth.

(9) Lit., 'from any place'.

(10) Hence R. Jose's ruling that no letter of divorce may be written on an animate object.

(11) How, in view of this deduction, can they allow the use of an animate object as a writing material for a letter of divorce?

(12) רִפְּךָ (with prefix) which would have implied that the noun referred to the material on which the divorce is written.

(13) רִפְּךָ without any prefix.

(14) Lit., 'that it came'.

(15) , וּרְהִפְּךָ, lit., 'enumeration'.

(16) רִפְּךָ and , וּרְהִפְּךָ being of the same rt. The kind of material, however, on which the wording must be recorded was not prescribed. Hence the permissibility to use any writing material or any other object.

(17) From which it was deduced supra that a divorce may be written on any object. Since the expression sefer (rpX) has no bearing on the question of the writing material, it is obvious that any object is admissible for the purpose. What need then was there to use the expression of 'writeth' (Deut. XXIV, 1) when that of giveth (ibid.) viz., 'That he giveth her the letter of divorcement in her hand' etc., would have been sufficient?

(18) A written letter of divorce.

(19) By saying, on the analogy of the formula for betrothal, 'Be thou divorced from me by this money'.

(20) Lit., 'departing' (vtmhu); 'and she departeth' (Deut. XXIV, 2).

(21) Lit., 'becoming' (vhuv); 'and becometh' (ibid.).

(22) V. Kid. 2a'

(23) V. supra note 16.

(24) That a divorce cannot be effected except by means of a written document.

(25) , u, hrf rpX, Deut. XXIV, I.

(26) Since rpX ('letter') stands in close proximity to , u, hrf ('divorcement').

(27) v, ruf (rt. , rf 'to cut'), lit., 'cuts her off (from her husband)'.

(28) Lit., 'that'.

(29) Lit., 'that cuts (cf. supra n. 4) between him and her'.

(30) Since the woman might at any time throughout her life break the condition and consequently annul the divorce.

(31) Lit., 'all'.

(32) Sc. he set a limit to the period during which the woman should drink no wine or keep away from her father's house.

(33) From the moment the woman has received the document; because at the end of the specified period the divorce is free from all conditions and the separation between husband and wife is complete. Suk. 24b, Yoma 13a, Git. 21b, 83b.

(34) Whence does he derive this ruling?

(35) , u, hrf, in the opinion of R. Jose, is a longer or more forcible expression than , rf.

(36) Cf. previous note.

(37) Though each one is less than ten cubits.

(38) In their total area.

(39) So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'like ten'.

(40) Provided the area of the built-up parts exceeds that of the gaps.

(41) Though all the remainder of the fence is built up.

(42) On the Sabbath.

(43) When he imparted to him the laws concerning partitions (v. supra 4a).

(44) Lit., 'thou shalt not break its greater part'.

(45) An objection against R. Huna.

(46) From which it would have been obvious that if they were equal to, and much more so if they exceeded the built-up parts, the movement of objects would be forbidden; and all ambiguity would thus be avoided.

(47) Or 'laid the roof-beams'.

(48) v. Glos.

(49) Such objects, since they are proper 'instruments', are susceptible to levitical uncleanness and consequently unfit for the roof covering of a sukkah.

(50) Suk. 15a; because the intervening spaces can be filled up with suitable and ritually fit roofing. This Mishnah then seems to show that where the measurement of the suitable and the unsuitable parts are equal, the structure is valid; and, since the same principle would obviously apply also to the validity of an enclosure, in respect of the Sabbath laws, where its built-up parts equal its gaps, does not an objection arise against R. Huna?

(51) Lit., 'when it (freely) enters and goes out', sc. between the parts to be covered with the suitable roofing, so that the width of each spit or bed-side is inevitably less than that of each properly covered intervening space.

(52) So R. Han. Cur. edd., 'surely it is possible', is a different reading (as pointed out by Tosaf. s.v. xhrd har a.l.).

(53) Sc. is it possible that by supplying a quantity of suitable material equal in width to that of the unsuitable one, the air spaces intervening between the two materials will be duly covered? The answer obviously being in the negative, the question arises: How, in view of the fact that the space of the proper material does not even equal that of the improper one plus the intervening air spaces, could the sukkah be valid? This raises an objection against R. Huna but also against R. Papa (cf. Tosaf. l.c.).

(54) And thus cover up the intervening air spaces also.

(55) The spits etc.

(56) So that all the spaces between the improper material are fully covered with the proper one which, according to R. Papa, thus covers as much space as the improper one; and according to R. Huna, since the spits etc. can be easily moved in and out, the proper roofing covers the larger area.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 16a

saddle-cushions, saddlebags, reeds or stalks [it is permitted to] move objects within it, provided there is no more than the space of one camel between any two camels, that of one saddle between any two saddles, and that of one saddle-cushion between any two saddle-cushions!¹ — Here also [it is a case where each object can be easily] moved in and out.²

Come and hear: Thus³ you might say that there are three categories in the case of partitions. Wherever [in a reed fence the width of each reed is] less than three handbreadths, it is necessary⁴ that there shall be no [gap of] three handbreadths between any two reeds⁵ so that a kid could not leap headlong [through it].⁶ Wherever [the width of each reed is] three, or from three to four⁷ handbreadths, it is necessary⁸ that [the gap] between any two reeds⁹ shall not be as wide as the full width of a reed,¹⁰ in order that the gaps shall not be equal to the standing parts; and if the gaps exceeded the standing parts it is forbidden [to sow corn]¹¹ even over against the standing parts. Wherever [the width of each reed is] four handbreadths, or from four handbreadths to ten cubits,¹² it is necessary⁸ that [the gap] between any two reeds⁹ shall not be as wide as a reed,¹⁰ in order that the gaps shall not be equal to the standing parts; and if the gaps were equal to the standing parts it is permitted [to sow seed]¹¹ over against the standing parts and forbidden over against the gaps.¹³ If, however, the standing parts exceeded the gaps it is permitted¹⁴ [to sow seed] over against the gaps also. If there was a gap wider than ten cubits, [sowing]¹⁵ is forbidden. If forked reeds were there and a plait was made above them, [sowing] is permitted even [if the gaps between the reeds] exceeded ten cubits.¹⁶ In the first clause at any rate it was taught that [the fence is valid if the width of each reed was] from three to four handbreadths provided the gap between any two reeds was not as wide as a reed. Is not this¹⁷ an objection against R. Papa?¹⁸ — R. Papa can answer you: By the expression of 'as wide as' was meant¹⁹ [the width of the space through which the reed can be easily] moved to and fro.²⁰ Logical deduction also leads to the same conclusion. For, since it was stated: 'If the gaps exceeded the standing parts it is forbidden [to sow corn] even over against the standing parts', it follows that if they were equal to the standing parts [the sowing] is permitted. This proves it.

Must it then be assumed that this²¹ presents an objection against R. Huna the son of R. Joshua?²² — He can answer you: According to your line of reasoning [how will you] explain the final clause, ‘If, however, the standing parts exceeded the gaps it is permitted [to sow seed] over against the gaps also’, from which it follows that if it was equal to the gaps, [sowing] is forbidden?²³ Now then, the final clause is a contradiction to the ruling of R. Papa and the first one to that of R. Huna son of R. Joshua? — The final clause is really no contradiction to the ruling of R. Papa for, since the Tanna used the expression, ‘If the gaps exceeded the standing parts [it is forbidden]’²⁴ in the first clause, he used the expression, ‘If the standing parts exceeded the gaps [it is permitted]’ in the final clause.²⁵ The first clause presents no contradiction against R. Huna the son of R. Joshua for, as it was desired to state in the final clause, ‘If the standing parts exceeded the gaps [it is permitted]’,²⁶ it was also taught in the first clause²⁷ ‘If the gaps exceeded the standing parts [it is forbidden]’.²⁸

According to R. Papa²⁹ it is quite well, for this reason,³⁰ that the two cases³¹ were not included in one statement.³² According to R. Huna son of R. Joshua,³³ however, why should not the two cases be included in one statement thus:³⁴ Wherever [the width of a reed is] less than three, or [as much as] three, handbreadths it is necessary that [the gap] between any two reeds shall be less than three handbreadths? — Because the cause of the restriction³⁵ in the first clause is not like that in the second clause. The cause of the restriction in the first clause is that a kid shall not be able to leap headlong [through the gap]; while [the cause of] the restriction in the final clause is that the gaps shall not be equal to the standing parts.³⁶

Whose [view is expressed in the principle that the gap must be] less than three handbreadths? [Is it not] that of the Rabbis who laid down that [to a gap of] less than three handbreadths the law of labud³⁷ is applied but that to one of three handbreadths the law of labud is not applied?³⁸ Read, however, the final clause: ‘Where [the width of each reed is] three, or from three to four’.

(1) Which shows that where the gaps are equal to the built-up parts, the movement of objects is permitted. An objection against R. Huna.

(2) Cf. supra note 1 mutatis mutandis.

(3) Lit., ‘it is found’.

(4) if vines grow on one side of the fence and it is desired to sow corn in close proximity on the other side.

(5) Lit., ‘this to this’.

(6) The law of labud (v. Glos.) is applied in such a case even where the total area of the gaps exceeds that of the reeds. If a gap is wider than three handbreadths, a kid can leap headlong through it and the law of labud cannot consequently apply.

(7) But not actually four.

(8) V. p. 104, n. 10.

(9) Lit., ‘this to this’.

(10) Lit., ‘like its fullness’.

(11) If vines were planted on the other side of the fence in close proximity.

(12) Inclusive, but not wider.

(13) Thus we have three categories: (i) It is not necessary for each gap to be less in width than a reed where the reeds are less than three handbreadths in width; and even if a gap is as wide as or wider than a reed, provided it is not wider than three handbreadths, all the fence is valid. (ii) It is necessary for each gap to be less in width than a reed where the reeds are three, or from three to four handbreadths in width. A gap of three or more handbreadths destroys the validity of the entire fence even that of its standing parts. (iii) Where the standing parts of a fence are considerable, their validity is not affected by the gaps, though it is forbidden to sow over against one side of the gaps if vines grow on the other.

(14) In any of three cases enumerated.

(15) V. supra note 5.

(16) Tosef. Kil. IV; because a gap in the shape of a doorway, even if it is wider than ten cubits, does not impair the validity of a fence.

(17) The ruling that the fence is valid only when the gaps are less than the standing parts.

(18) Who ruled supra that even if the breaches in an enclosure were equal to its standing parts, the movement of objects within it on the Sabbath is permitted or, in other words, the fence of the enclosure is valid.

(19) Lit., 'what its fullness?'

(20) Lit., 'enters and goes out', so that a gap equal to that width is really wider than the actual width of the reed. Where, however, the gaps are exactly equal to the standing parts, the fence is valid in agreement with the view of R. Papa.

(21) The Baraitha just discussed which provides support for R. Papa's ruling.

(22) Who differed from R. Papa (supra 15b).

(23) In agreement with the ruling of R. Huna son of R. Joshua and contrary to that of R. Papa.

(24) An expression which was essential for the inference that if the gaps equalled the standing parts it is permitted to sow even over against the gaps.

(25) As an antithesis; although the ruling here was really unnecessary in view of the statement, 'The gaps shall not be equal to the standing parts', i.e., (as explained supra) the space through which the reeds can move freely to and fro, from which it follows that if the gaps and the standing parts are equal, and much more so if the latter exceed the former, this is permitted. As the final clause is this a mere antithesis, no inference from it may be drawn.

(26) A statement necessary for the purpose of the inference: But if they were equal to the gaps this is forbidden.

(27) As a mere antithesis.

(28) Though it was superfluous in view of the ruling that this is forbidden even where they were equal to the standing parts.

(29) Who recognizes the validity of a fence where gaps and standing parts are equal.

(30) V. previous note.

(31) Reeds of (i) less than three and (ii) of three handbreadths.

(32) Lit., 'he does not mix them and teach them', as, for instance, 'Wherever (the width of a reed is) three, or less than three, handbreadths it is necessary that the gap between any two reeds shall be less than three handbreadths'. Such a statement would be wrong since in the latter case (according to R. Papa) the gap may be three handbreadths wide.

(33) Who does not recognize the validity of a fence where its gaps and standing parts are equal.

(34) Lit., 'let him mix them and teach them'.

(35) Lit., 'disqualification', 'invalidity'.

(36) As the reasons are different the two rulings could not be joined into one statement.

(37) V. Glos.

(38) Apparently it is.

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 16b

Talmud - Mas. Eirubin 16b

Does not this represent the view of¹ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who laid down that the law of labud is applied [to a gap that is] less than four handbreadths?² For if [it represents the view of] the Rabbis [how could it be said], ‘from three to four’ where three and four are subject to the same law?³ Abaye replied: Since the first clause [is the view of] the Rabbis the final clause also [must be that of] the Rabbis, but⁴ the Rabbis admit that wherever [it is a question of] permitting [to sow corn] over against [a standing part], if it is four handbreadths wide it is deemed [a partition],⁵ but not otherwise. Raba replied: As the final clause is the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel the first clause also must be that of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, but⁴ it is only to [a gap] above⁶ that he applied the rule of labud but in the case of one below it is like a fence which kids can break through [to which the rule of] labud is not applied.

Come and hear: [The space enclosed by] such walls as consist mostly of floors and windows is permitted, provided the standing parts exceed the gaps.⁷ Now, is it possible to imagine [that the reading was] ‘mostly’?⁸ [The reading] then [must obviously be] ‘[The space enclosed by walls] in which many⁹ doors and windows were made is permitted, provided the standing parts exceed the gaps’. Thus it follows [that if the standing parts] equal the gaps it is forbidden. [Is not this then] an objection against R. Papa? — This is indeed an objection. The law, however, is in agreement with R. Papa. ‘An objection’ and ‘the law’!¹⁰ — Yes. Because the inference from our Mishnah is in agreement with his view. For we learned: THE GAPS DO NOT EXCEED THE BUILT-UP PARTS, from which it follows [that if they are] equal to the built-up parts it is permitted.

MISHNAH. [A CARAVAN IN CAMP]¹ MAY¹² BE SURROUNDED BY THREE ROPES,¹³ THE ONE ABOVE THE OTHER, PROVIDED [THE SPACE] BETWEEN THE ONE ROPE AND THE OTHER¹⁴ IS LESS THAN THREE HANDBREADTHS.¹⁵ THE SIZE OF THE ROPES [MUST BE SUCH] THAT THEIR [TOTAL] THICKNESS SHALL BE MORE¹⁶ THAN A HANDBREADTH, SO THAT THE TOTAL HEIGHT¹⁷ SHALL BE TEN HANDBREADTHS. [THE CAMP]¹⁸ MAY ALSO BE SURROUNDED¹⁹ BY REEDS,²⁰ PROVIDED THERE IS NO [GAP OF] THREE HANDBREADTHS²¹ BETWEEN ANY TWO REEDS. [IN LAYING DOWN THESE RULINGS,²² THE RABBIS] SPOKE ONLY OF A CARAVAN.²³ THIS IS THE VIEW OF R. JUDAH; BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN THAT THEY SPOKE OF A CARAVAN ONLY BECAUSE [IN ITS CASE THIS²⁴ IS] A USUAL OCCURRENCE.²⁵ ANY PARTITION THAT IS NOT [MADE UP OF] BOTH VERTICAL AND HORIZONTAL²⁶ [STAKES] IS NO VALID PARTITION;²⁷ SO R. JOSE SON OF R. JUDAH.²⁸ BUT THE SAGES RULED: ONE OF THE TWO²⁹ [IS ENOUGH]. GEMARA. Said R. Hamnuna in the name of Rab: Behold the Rabbis have laid down³⁰ that if the standing parts [of a partition made up] of vertical [stakes]³¹ exceed the gaps [the fence] is valid.³² What, however, asked R. Hamnuna, is the ruling in respect of horizontally [drawn ropes]³³ — Abaye replied: Come and hear: THE SIZE OF THE ROPES [MUST BE SUCH] THAT THEIR TOTAL THICKNESS SHALL BE MORE THAN A HANDBREADTH, SO THAT THE TOTAL HEIGHT SHALL BE TEN HANDBREADTHS. Now if [such a barrier]³⁴ were valid³⁵ what need was there³⁶ [for the TOTAL THICKNESS to be] MORE THAN A HANDBREADTH seeing that one could leave³⁷ [a distance slightly] less than three handbreadths and [stretch] a rope of any [thickness, and again leave a distance slightly] less than three handbreadths, and [stretch] a rope of any [thickness, and then again leave a distance slightly] less than four handbreadths and

[stretch] a rope of any thickness?³⁸ — But how do you understand this: Where could one leave³⁹ less than four [handbreadths of distance]? Were it to be left³⁹ below,⁴⁰ [the barrier] would be like a partition which kids can break through,⁴¹ were it to be left⁴² above,⁴³ the [unlimited] air space on the one side [of the rope]⁴⁴ and that on the other⁴⁵ would join⁴⁶ to annul its validity; and if one were to leave it in the middle,⁴⁷ the [virtually] standing parts⁴⁸ would be exceeding the gaps [only by combining the parts]⁴⁸ on its two sides;⁴⁹ or would you infer from this that where the standing parts [of a partition or barrier] exceed a gap in it [only by combining those] on its two sides they are nevertheless valid?⁵⁰ But⁵¹ it is this that R. Hammuna asked: [What is the ruling where one] brought for instance a mat that measured seven handbreadths and a fraction, and cut out in it [a hole of] three handbreadths leaving [untouched the remaining] four handbreadths⁵² and fraction,⁵³ and put it up within [a distance of] less than three handbreadths [from the ground]?⁵⁴

R. Ashi said: His⁵⁵ enquiry related to a suspended partition,⁵⁶ as did that which R. Tabla addressed to Rab: Does a suspended partition convert a ruin into a permitted domain? And the other replied: A suspended partition can effect permissibility only in the case of water⁵⁷ because only in respect of water did the Sages relax the law.

[THE CAMP] MAY ALSO BE SURROUNDED BY REEDS etc. Only in the case of A CARAVAN but not in that of all individual? But was it not taught: R. Judah stated: All [defective] partitions⁵⁸ in connection with the Sabbath [laws] were not permitted to an individual [if the space enclosed]⁵⁹ exceeded two beth se'ah?⁶⁰ — As R. Nahman (or [as] some say: R. Bibi b. Abaye) replied [elsewhere that the ruling] was only required [in respect] of allowing them all [the space] they required, [so may one] here also [explain that the statement]⁶¹ referred to the permissibility] of allowing them all [the space] they required.⁶²

Where was [the reply] of R. Nahman (or [as] some say, [that of] R. Bibi b. Abaye) stated?- In connection with what we learned: ANY PARTITION THAT IS NOT [MADE UP OF] BOTH VERTICAL AND HORIZONTAL [STAKES] IS NO VALID PARTITION; SO R. JOSE SON OF R. JUDAH. Now [it was objected] could R. Jose son of R. Judah have given such a ruling seeing that it was taught: 'An individual and a caravan are subject to the same law as regards [a barrier] of ropes.⁶³ But [then] what is the difference [in this respect]⁶⁴ between an individual and a caravan? One individual is allowed two beth se'ah, so are two individuals also allowed two beth se'ah, but three become a caravan and are allowed six both se'ah,' so R. Jose son of R. Judah. But the Sages ruled: Both an individual and a caravan are allowed all [the space] they require provided no area of two beth se'ah remains unoccupied'⁶⁵ [To this] R. Nahman (or some say: R. Bibi b. Abaye) replied: [This ruling]⁶⁶ was only required in respect of allowing them all [the space] they required.⁶⁷ R. Nahman in the name of our Master Samuel gave the following exposition: One individual is allowed two beth se'ah, two individuals are also allowed two beth se'ah, but three become a caravan and are allowed six beth se'ah. Do you leave the Rabbis⁶⁸ [he was asked] and act in agreement with R. Jose son of R. Judah? Thereupon R. Nahman appointed an Amora on the subject⁶⁹ and gave the following exposition: The statement I made to you was an error on my part; it is this indeed that the Rabbis have said: 'An individual is allowed two beth se'ah, two also are allowed two beth se'ah, but three become a caravan and are allowed all [the space] they require.

- (1) Lit., 'we came to'.
- (2) By making a distinction between four and less than four, in which latter case where the gap exceeds the standing part it is forbidden to sow even over against the standing part, whereas in the former it is permitted — the Mishnah presumably follows R. Simeon b. Gamaliel (Rashi).
- (3) Lit., 'is one'.
- (4) As to the objection raised.
- (5) Against which corn may be sown.
- (6) As in the case of a cross-beam,.
- (7) Supra 11a.
- (8) icira, lit., 'most of which'; obviously not, since the standing parts of such walls cannot possibly exceed the gaps.
- (9) vchra, lit., 'that he made many'.
- (10) Can the law be in agreement with the view of R. Papa when an objection has been raised against it?
- (11) Cf. Mishnah supra 15b of which this is a continuation.
- (12) In order that it may be permitted to move objects within it on the Sabbath.
- (13) Attached to reeds, or any stakes.
- (14) And between the lowest one and the ground.
- (15) A gap of less than three handbreadths being regarded by the rule of labud (v. Glos.) as non-existent, the height of the rope barrier is thus virtually nine handbreadths minus three small fractions (v. following two notes and text).
- (16) By the three fractions mentioned in the previous note ad fin.
- (17) Of the rope barrier.
- (18) V. supra note 1.
- (19) V. supra note 2.
- (20) Driven in the ground in a vertical position.
- (21) So that the rule of labud can be applied.
- (22) That a barrier of ropes drawn horizontally or a fence of reeds driven in the ground vertically is a valid enclosure in respect of the Sabbath laws.
- (23) In whose case the Rabbis relaxed the law, but not of an individual whose barrier or fence must be provided with both horizontal and vertical (v. our Mishnah infra) stakes, reeds or ropes.
- (24) The putting up of a barrier round the camp.
- (25) But the same laws apply also to camps of individuals.
- (26) Lit., 'warp and woof'.
- (27) Even in the case of a caravan.
- (28) Who differs from his father's view supra.
- (29) Either vertical or horizontal stakes or poles and the like.
- (30) In the Mishnah supra 15b.
- (31) And the like. The trappings of cattle (v. previous note) are usually arranged in a vertical position.
- (32) Lit., 'a standing'.
- (33) Is such a barrier valid where it contains gaps wider than three handbreadths to which, unlike the rope barrier spoken of in our Mishnah, the rule of labud cannot be applied?
- (34) V. previous note.
- (35) Lit., 'there is'.
- (36) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.
- (37) Lit., 'let him make'.
- (38) Two of the gaps, each being less than three handbreadths, would by the law of labud be deemed closed and this would, together with the ropes, provide a 'standing part' of six handbreadths that exceeds the third gap of four handbreadths. As this, however, was not permitted it may be concluded that in the case of horizontally drawn ropes, the barrier is invalid even where the standing parts exceed the gaps.

(39) Lit., 'set', 'place'.

(40) Between the lowest rope and the ground.

(41) Which, as a suspended partition, is invalid even if its properly standing parts are ten handbreadths high.

(42) Lit., 'set', 'place'.

(43) The other gaps; i.e., between the second rope from the ground and the topmost one.

(44) Its upper side.

(45) The space between this rope and the middle one.

(46) Lit., 'come'.

(47) Above the lowest, and under the middle rope.

(48) Sc. the spaces of three handbreadths each below it and above it to which the rule of labud is applied.

(49) Which, is not admissible.

(50) Lit., 'is a standing', but this is contrary to the law.

(51) The question in the present form being untenable.

(52) On one side of the gap.

(53) On its other side.

(54) With the fractional section below the gap in the mat and the four handbreadths one above it. In such a case the lowest gap (the distance between the ground and the fractional section of the mat) is regarded as labud (v. Glos.) while the three handbreadths gap in the mat is exceeded by the remaining four handbreadths of the mat all of which are on one side of the gap. The air spaces on the two sides of this section cannot annul its validity since it exceeds at least the air space on the one side below it.

(55) R. Hamnuna's.

(56) A mat measuring ten handbreadths, for instance, that was suspended at a distance of more than three, and less than ten handbreadths from the ground. Does the 'standing part' (the mat), R. Hamnuna asked, annul the distance between it and the ground because it exceeds it or not?

(57) I.e., as regards the permissibility of drawing water from a river or a lake on the Sabbath (cf. infra 87b).

(58) That were with difficulty allowed where a number of people were concerned.

(59) Though the enclosure was put up for the purpose of using its interior as a dwelling.

(60) V. Glos., but if it did not exceed this measurement such defective partitions were permitted to an individual also. How then is R. Judah's statement in the Baraitha to be reconciled with his statement in our Mishnah.

(61) Of R. Judah, that the Rabbis in our Mishnah SPOKE ONLY OF CARAVAN.

(62) Though it exceeded two beth se'ah. Where, however, such an area is not exceeded the same privilege is extended to an individual also.

(63) It is permissible in either case though no vertical stakes were put up.

(64) Where a barrier is defective as in this case (v. previous note).

(65) Sc. exceeded actual requirements. Now since R. Jose distinctly recognized here the validity of a barrier made of ropes without stakes how could he rule in our Mishnah to the contrary?

(66) Of R. Jose in our Mishnah, according to which a barrier of ropes is not admissible.

(67) The respective areas specified in the Baraitha however, are allowed even where the barrier was made only of horizontally drawn ropes.

(68) Who represent a majority.

(69) To expound to the public R. Nahman's discourse.

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. THE MEGILLAH¹ IS READ ON THE ELEVENTH, THE TWELFTH, THE THIRTEENTH, THE FOURTEENTH, AND THE FIFTEENTH [OF ADAR], NEVER EARLIER AND NEVER LATER.² CITIES³ WHICH HAVE BEEN WALLED SINCE THE DAYS OF JOSHUA SON OF NUN⁴ READ ON THE FIFTEENTH; VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS⁵ READ ON THE FOURTEENTH. THE VILLAGES, HOWEVER, MAY [SOMETIMES] PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY.⁶ HOW DOES THIS WORK OUT? IF [THE FOURTEENTH OF ADAR] FALLS ON MONDAY,⁷ THE VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS READ ON THAT DAY AND THE WALLED PLACES ON THE NEXT DAY: IF IT FALLS ON TUESDAY OR ON WEDNESDAY, THE VILLAGES PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY,⁸ THE LARGE TOWNS READ ON THE DAY ITSELF, AND THE WALLED PLACES ON THE NEXT DAY. IF [THE FOURTEENTH FALLS] ON THURSDAY, THE VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS READ ON THAT DAY AND THE WALLED PLACES ON THE NEXT DAY: IF IT FALLS ON FRIDAY, THE VILLAGES PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY⁹ AND THE LARGE TOWNS AND WALLED PLACES READ ON THE DAY ITSELF.¹⁰ IF IT FALLS ON SABBATH, THE VILLAGES AND LARGE TOWNS PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY.⁹ AND THE WALLED PLACES READ ON THE NEXT DAY.¹¹ IF IT FALLS ON SUNDAY, THE VILLAGES PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY,⁹ THE LARGE TOWNS READ ON THE SAME DAY, AND THE WALLED CITIES ON THE DAY FOLLOWING.

GEMARA. THE MEGILLAH IS READ ON THE ELEVENTH. Whence is this derived? — [How can you ask,] ‘Whence is this derived?’ Surely it is as we state further on,¹² ‘The Sages made a concession to the villages, allowing them to push the reading forward to the Court day, so that [they should have leisure to] supply food and water for their brethren in the large towns’? — What we mean [by our question] is this: Let us see now. All these dates were laid down by the Men of the Great Assembly.¹³ For if you should [deny this and affirm] that the Men of the Great Assembly laid down only the fourteenth and fifteenth, [is it possible that] the [later] Rabbis should have come and annulled a regulation made by the Men of the Great Assembly, seeing that we have learnt, ‘One Beth din cannot annul the ordinances of another unless it is superior to it in number¹⁴ and in wisdom’?¹⁵ Obviously, therefore, all these days must have been laid down by the Men of the Great Assembly, [and we ask therefore], where are they hinted [in the Scripture]? — R. Shaman b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture says, To confirm these days of Purim in their times.¹⁶ [which indicates that] they laid down many ‘times’ for them. But this text is required for its literal meaning?¹⁷ — If that were all, Scripture could say simply ‘at the [appointed] time’. What then is implied by ‘their times’? A large number of ‘times’! But still I may say that [the expression ‘their times’] is required to indicate that the time of one is not the same as the time of the other?¹⁸ — In that case, Scripture should say [simply], ‘their time’. Why does it say ‘their times’? So that you may infer from this all of them. But cannot I say that ‘their times’ means ‘numerous times’?¹⁹ — The expression ‘their times’ is to be interpreted in the same way as we should interpret ‘their time’: just as ‘their time’ would indicate two [days], so ‘their times’ indicates two [in addition].²⁰ But why not make these the twelfth and thirteenth? — For the reason given [elsewhere] by R. Samuel b. Isaac, that the thirteenth is a time of assembly for all,²¹ and no special indication is required for it in the text; so we may say here that the thirteenth day is a time of assembly and no special indication is required for it in the text. But why not say that the sixteenth and seventeenth are meant? — It is written, and it shall not pass.²²

R. Samuel b. Nahmani, however, explained thus. Scripture says. As the days wherein the Jews had rest from their enemies.²³ [The expression] ‘the days’ [would have sufficed] and we have ‘as the days’, to include the eleventh and the twelfth. But cannot I say rather the twelfth and thirteenth? — R. Samuel b. Isaac said: The thirteenth is a time of assembly for all, and does not require special indication. But cannot I say the sixteenth and the seventeenth? — It is written, ‘and it shall not pass’.

Why did R. Samuel b. Nahmani not derive the rule from the expression ‘in their times’? — He does not accept the distinction [made above between] ‘time’, ‘their time’ and ‘their times’. And why did R. Shaman b. Abba not derive the rule from the expression ‘as the days’? — He can say to you: This is meant to make the rule apply to future generations.

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: This [rule stated in the Mishnah] is the ruling of R. Akiba the anonymous authority,²⁴ who draws the distinction between ‘time’, ‘their time’ and ‘their times’, but according to the Sages the Megillah is to be read only on the proper day.²⁵ The following was adduced in refutation of this: ‘R. Judah said, When does this rule hold good? When the years are properly fixed²⁶ and Israel reside upon their own soil. But in these days, since people reckon from it,²⁷ the Megillah is to be read only on the proper day’. Now which authority is R. Judah here following? Shall I say, R. Akiba? This cannot be, because [according to him] the regulation²⁸ is in force in these days also. It must be then that he follows the Rabbis, and [even according to them] we read [on the other days] at any rate when the years are properly fixed and Israel reside on their own soil! Is not this a refutation of R. Johanan? — It is.

Some report as follows. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: This rule follows the ruling of R. Akiba the anonymous authority, but the Sages held that in these days, since people reckon from it, we read it only on the proper day. It has been taught to the same effect: ‘R. Judah said: When does this rule hold good? When the years are properly fixed and Israel reside upon their own soil, but in these days, since people reckon from it, it is read only on the proper day.’²⁹

R. Ashi noted a contradiction between two statements of R. Judah

(1) Lit., ‘scroll’. The scroll of the Book of Esther is meant (v. Introduction).

(2) Lit., ‘neither less nor more’.

(3) ihfrf (Sing. lrf). This word is generally applied to large centres of population with a more or less metropolitan character. In Mishnah Megillah, (cf. 19a), however, it seems to be used exclusively of walled towns, whatever their size.

- (4) The Gemara infra discusses what is meant by this.
- (5) , ukusd , urhhgu ohrpf . The expression ‘villages and large towns’ in the Mishnah here seems to be merely a periphrasis for ‘other places’, since, as appears from the Gemara, the distinction here is between places which were walled in the days of Joshua and places which were not. The epithet ‘large’ is added because the word rhg (or vrhg) is also often used of a small place, hardly distinguishable from a village.
- (6) Lit., ‘the day of assembly’, i.e. Monday or Thursday, when the Beth din sat in the towns, and the people came in from the villages. They were allowed to read the Megillah then because they were more likely to find someone who could read to them in the town than in their own village (Rashi). Another reason is also given in the Gemara infra.
- (7) Lit., ‘the second (day of the week)’. In the Talmud the days of the week are distinguished by the ordinal numbers.
- (8) I.e., the previous Monday.
- (9) I.e., the preceding Thursday.
- (10) Reading on the Sabbath was prohibited, for fear the scroll might be carried from place to place. V. infra.
- (11) On the Sunday.
- (12) V. infra p. 116.
- (13) Or ‘synagogue’. A name given to Ezra and his Beth din and their successors, up to the time of Simon the Just. V. Aboth, Sonc. ed. p. 1, n. 5. According to the Talmud, the Book of Esther was composed by or under the direction of the Men of the Great Assembly.
- (14) Of the members of the Beth din.
- (15) Cf. M.K. 3b; Git. 36a.
- (16) Esth. IX, 31. E.V. ‘their appointed times’. The plural form ‘times’ is stressed.
- (17) Lit., ‘for itself’; viz., the 14th and 15th mentioned in the text.
- (18) Viz., the time for the villages is not the same as that for the walled towns.
- (19) E.g., five or six.
- (20) To the fourteenth and fifteenth, viz., the eleventh and twelfth.
- (21) Rashi explains this to refer to the statement in the Scripture that on the thirteenth the Jews assembled and defended themselves. Asheri, however, points out that this has nothing to do with the reading of the Megillah, which was instituted to commemorate the resting, and he therefore prefers the explanation of R. Tam, that on the thirteenth the Jews assemble to observe the fast of Esther.
- (22) Ibid. 27. These words are interpreted to mean, ‘the observance shall not pass beyond the fifteenth day’. E.V., and it shall not fail.
- (23) Ibid. 22.
- (24) So called because Rabbi in compiling the Mishnah usually followed R Akiba when he mentioned no authority.
- (25) Viz., the fourteenth and fifteenth of Adar.
- (26) I.e., when there is a Beth din which fixes new moons and leap years as occasion arises.
- (27) I.e. count thirty days from Purim to Passover, since the new moon of Nisan will not be promulgated by the Beth din
- (28) That the Megillah may be read on the eleventh, twelfth, or thirteenth.
- (29) And there is now no contradiction between R. Johanan and Rabbi Judah.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 2b

, and therefore attributed the statement in the Baraita to R. Jose son of R. Judah. [He said]: Can R. Judah really have said that in these days, since people reckon from it, it is read only on the proper day? To this may be opposed the following:¹ R. Judah said, When [do they push forward the reading]? In places where the villagers go to town² on Monday and Thursday; but in places where they do not go to town on Monday and Thursday, it is read only on the proper day. But at any rate in places where they do go to town on Monday and Thursday it is read [on the earlier dates] even in these times? He accordingly ascribed the statement in the Baraitha³ to R. Jose son of R. Judah. And because he finds a contradiction between two statements of R. Judah, is he entitled to ascribe the one in the Baraitha to R. Jose son of R. Judah? — R. Ashi had heard some report the statement in the name of R. Judah and some report it in the name of R. Jose son of R. Judah, and to avoid making R. Judah contradict himself he said that the one who ascribed the statement to R. Judah was not [reporting] accurately, while the one who ascribed it to R. Jose son of Judah was [reporting] accurately.

CITIES WHICH HAVE BEEN WALLED SINCE THE DAYS OF JOSHUA SON OF NUN READ ON THE FIFTEENTH. Whence is this ruling derived? — Raba replied: Because Scripture says, Therefore do the Jews of the villages that dwell in the unwalled towns,⁴ etc. Since the villages [are to read] on the fourteenth, the walled towns [must read] on the fifteenth. But why not say that the villages [should read] on the fourteenth, and those in walled towns not at all?⁵ — But are they not also Israelites? And moreover is it not written, From India into Ethiopia?⁶ But why not say that the villages [should read] on the fourteenth and those in walled towns on both the fourteenth and fifteenth, as it is written, that they should keep the fourteenth day of the month of Adar and the fifteenth day of the same yearly?⁷ — If the text had said, ‘the fourteenth day and [we] the fifteenth’, you would have been right. Now, however, that it is written ‘the fourteenth day and [we-eth] the fifteenth — the eth⁸ comes and makes a distinction, so that the one set is on the fourteenth and the other set on the fifteenth. But why not say that the villages are on the fourteenth, and those surrounded [by a wall] can [celebrate] if they like on the fourteenth or if they like on the fifteenth? — The text says, in their seasons,⁹ the season of one is not the same as the season of the other. But why not say that they¹⁰ should celebrate on the thirteenth? — [They must do] as Susa [did].

We have accounted for the celebration [of Purim]; how do we know that the recital¹¹ [of the Megillah must be on these days]? — The text says, that these days should be remembered and kept;¹² ‘remembering’ is put on the same footing as ‘keeping’.

Our Mishnah does not take the same view as the following Tanna, as it has been taught: ‘R. Joshua b. Korha says: Cities which have been walled since the days of Ahasuerus read on the fifteenth’. What is the reason of R. Joshua b. Korha? — [They must be] like Susa: just as Susa has been walled since the days of Ahasuerus and reads on the fifteenth, so every city that has been walled since the days of Ahasuerus reads on the fifteenth. What then is the reason of our Tanna? — He draws an analogy between the two occurrences of the word perazi [villagers]. It is written here, Therefore the Jews of the villages [ha — perazim],¹³ and it is written in another place, beside the unwalled [ha — perazi] towns, a great many;¹⁴ just as there the reference is to towns which were [not] walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun, so here the reference is to towns which were [not] walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun.¹⁵

I can understand why R. Joshua b. Korha did not adopt the view of our Tanna; he does not accept the analogy of perazi and perazi.¹⁶ But why does not our Tanna accept the view of R. Joshua b. Korha? — [You ask] why does he not? Why, because he draws the analogy of perazi with perazi, of course! What the questioner meant was this: [On the view of our Tanna], whom did Susa follow?¹⁷ It followed neither the villages nor the walled towns!¹⁸ — Raba, or, as some say, Kadi,¹⁹ replied: Susa was an exception, because a miracle was performed in it.²⁰

We can understand according to the view of our Tanna why the text should say, city and city, town and town;²¹ ‘city and city’²² to make a distinction between those which were walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun and those which were walled in the days of Ahasuerus; ‘town and town’ likewise to distinguish between Susa and other towns.²³ But according to R. Joshua b. Korha, it is true we can account for ‘city and city’, as being intended to distinguish between Susa and other cities,²⁴ but what is the purpose of ‘town and town’? — R. Joshua b. Korha can answer: And can our Tanna explain the words satisfactorily? Since he draws the analogy between perazi and perazi,²⁵ why do we require the words ‘city and city’? The truth is that the text is inserted for a homiletical purpose, and to teach the rule laid down by R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: ‘A city²⁶ and all that adjoins it and all that is taken in by the eye with it is reckoned as city’.²⁷ Up to what distance? — R. Jeremiah, or you may also say R. Hiyya b. Abba, said: As far as from Hamthan²⁸ to Tiberias, which is a mil. Why not say [simply] a mil? — We learn from this what is the extent of a mil, namely, as far as from Hamthan to Tiberias.

R. Jeremiah — or you may also say R. Hiyya b. Abba — also said: The [alternative forms of the] letters M'N'Z'P'K²⁹ were prescribed³⁰ by the Watchmen.³¹ Do you really think so? Is it not written, These are the commandments,³² which implies that no prophet is at liberty to introduce anything new³³ henceforward? And further, R. Hisda has said: The Men and the Samek in the tablets

(1) Infra n. 4.

(2) Lit., ‘assemble’.

(3) The former of the statements quoted.

(4) Esth. IX, 19.

(5) Since no mention is made of walled towns in the context.

(6) These words occur in Esth. I, 1, and are used here loosely instead of the words in Esth. IX, 30. and he (Mordecai) sent letters to . . . the hundred and twenty — seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus.

(7) Ibid. 21.

(8) Eth is a sign of the accusative, and as its use is optional, it is usually interpreted as indicating something not specified in the text. The interpretation placed upon it here is rather unusual.

(14) Deut. III, 5, referring to the territory of Sihon conquered by the Israelites in the time of Moses.

(15) The word ‘not’ is not in the text of the original here, but is necessary for the sense. Rashi greatly simplifies the text by reading: ‘Just as there (the villages were such) from the days of Joshua, so here, (the villages must have been such) from the days of Joshua’.

- (16) I.e., he had not learnt this particular gezerah shawah from his teacher, and therefore could not reply upon it.

- (22) As much as to say, 'Some cities one way and some another'.
- (23) Susa also having been an unwalled town till the time of Ahasuerus.
- (24) Rashi here reads, 'to distinguish between those which were walled from the days of Ahasuerus and those which were not yet walled in the days of Ahasuerus', and this seems to be required by the sense.

remained in place by a miracle.¹ — That is so; they were in use, but people did not know which form came in the middle of a word and which one at the end, and the Watchmen came and ordained that the open forms should be in the middle of a word and the closed forms at the end. But when all is said and done, [we have the text] 'these are the commandments', which implies that no prophet was destined ever to introduce an innovation hereafter?² — What we must say therefore is that they were forgotten³ and the Watchmen established them again.

R. Jeremiah — or some say R. Hiyya b. Abba — also said: The Targum⁴ of the Pentateuch was composed by Onkelos the proselyte under the guidance⁵ of R. Eleazar and R. Joshua.⁶ The Targum of the Prophets was composed by Jonathan ben Uzziel under the guidance of Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi,⁷ and the land of Israel [thereupon] quaked over an area of four hundred parasangs by four hundred parasangs, and a Bath Kol⁸ came forth and exclaimed, Who is this that has revealed My secrets to mankind?⁹ Jonathan b. Uzziel thereupon arose and said, It is I who have revealed Thy secrets to mankind. It is fully known to Thee that I have not done this for my own honour or for the honour of my father's house, but for Thy honour I have done it, that dissension may not increase in Israel.¹⁰ He further sought to reveal [by] a targum [the inner meaning] of the Hagiographa, but a Bath Kol went forth and said, Enough! What was the reason? — Because the date¹¹ of the Messiah is foretold in it.¹²

But did Onkelos the proselyte compose the targum to the Pentateuch? Has not R. Ika said in the name of R. Hananel who had it from Rab: What is meant by the text, And they read in the book, in the law of God, with an interpretation. and they gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading?¹³ ‘And they read in the book, in the law of God’: this indicates the [Hebrew] text; ‘with an interpretation’: this indicates the targum,¹⁴ ‘and they gave the sense’: this indicates the verse stops; ‘and caused them to understand the reading’: this indicates the accentuation,¹⁵ or, according to another version, the massoretic notes?¹⁶ — These had been forgotten, and were now established again.

How was it that the land did not quake because of the [translation of the] Pentateuch, while it did quake because of that of the prophets? — The meaning of the Pentateuch is expressed clearly, but the meaning of the prophets is in some things expressed clearly and in others enigmatically. [For instance,] it is written, In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon,¹⁷ and R. Joseph [commenting on this] said: Were it not for the targum of this verse, we should not know what it means.¹⁸ [It runs as follows]: ‘On that day shall there be great mourning in Jerusalem like the mourning of Ahab son of Omri who was killed by Hadadrimmon son of Rimmon in Ramoth Gilead¹⁹ and like the mourning of Josiah son of Ammon who was killed by Pharaoh the Lame in the plain of Megiddo’.²⁰

And I, Daniel, alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, and they fled to hide themselves.²¹ Who were these ‘men’ — R. Jeremiah — or some say, R. Hiyya b. Abba — said: These were Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. They were superior to him [in one way], and he was superior to them [in another]. They were superior to him, because they were prophets and he was not a prophet.²² He was superior to them, because he saw [on this occasion] and they did not see. But if they did not see, why were they frightened? — Although they themselves did not see, their star saw.²³ Rabina said: We learn from this that if a man is seized with fright though he sees nothing, [the reason is that] his star sees. What is his remedy? He should recite the shema’.²⁴ If he is in a place which is foul,²⁵ he should move away from it four cubits. If he cannot do this, he should say this formula: ‘The goat at the butcher's is fatter than I am’.²⁶

Now that you have decided that the words ‘city and city’ have a homiletical purpose, what is the purpose of the words ‘family and family’ [in the same verse]? — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: This contains a reference to the families of the Priests and Levites, [and indicates] that they should desist from their [Temple] service in order to come and hear the reading of the Megillah. For so said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: The Priests at their [Temple] service, the Levites on their platform,²⁷ the lay Israelites at their station²⁸ — all desist from their service in order to hear the reading of the Megillah. It has been taught to the same effect: Priests at their [Temple] service, Levites on their platform, lay Israelites at their station — all desist from their service in order to come and hear the reading of the Megillah. It was in reliance on this dictum that the members of the house of Rabbi²⁹ were wont to desist from the study of the Torah in order to come and hear the reading of the Megillah. They argued a fortiori from the case of the [Temple] service. If the service, which is so important, may be abandoned, how much more the study of the Torah?

But is the [Temple] service more important than the study of the Torah? Surely it is written, And it came to pass when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold there stood a man over against him, . . . (and he fell on his face.³⁰ Now how could he do such a thing, seeing that R. Joshua b. Levi has said that it is forbidden to a man to greet another by night, for fear that he is a demon? — It was different there, because he said to him, ‘I am captain of the host of the Lord’. But perhaps he was lying? — We take it for granted³¹ that they do not utter the name of heaven vainly).³² He said to him: This evening you neglected the regular afternoon sacrifice, and now you have neglected the study of the Torah.³³ Joshua replied: In regard to which of them have you come? He answered, ‘I have come now’.³⁴ Straightway, Joshua tarried that night in the midst of the valley [ha-emek],³⁵ and R. Johanan said:

(1) According to tradition, the letters on the tablets of Moses were cut completely through the stone, and therefore a letter which was wholly closed could keep in place only by a miracle. Hence the mem to which R. Hisda refers must have been wholly enclosed; which shows that such a mem must have been used already by Moses. This objection against R. Jeremiah is valid only if we suppose him to have been speaking of the closed forms of the letters, which is not necessarily the case. Cf. Shab. 104.

(2) And the determining which letters should go in which place (in the Sefer Torah) was an innovation.

(3) Viz., the correct place of each.

(4) Apparently what is meant is the official Aramaic version of the Pentateuch used in the synagogue.

(5) Lit., ‘from the mouth of’.

(6) We know on good authority that a Greek translation of the Bible was composed under the guidance of R. Eleazar and R. Joshua by a proselyte named Aquilas. The Aramaic Targum probably took shape about the same time, but there is no authority except this passage for connecting it with anyone of the name of Onkelos. We may surmise therefore that we have here some confusion between the two translations. For the discussion and literature on the subject v. J.E. s.v. Targum, and Silverstone, E.A. Aquila and Onkelos.

(7) Jonathan b. Uzziel was a disciple of Hillel, so he can hardly have had any direct contact with the prophets mentioned. He may, however, have had traditions handed down from them (Maharsha).

(9) The Targum of Jonathan b. Uzziel is very paraphrastic, and applies many of the prophetic verses to the Messianic age.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 3b

This shows that he tarried in the depths ['umkah] of the halachah.¹ And R. Samuel b. Unia also said: The study of the Torah is greater than the offering of the daily sacrifices, as it says. 'I have come now' — There is no contradiction; in the one case² [the study] of an individual is meant, in the other³ that of the whole people.⁴ But is that of an individual unimportant? Have we not learnt: Women [when mourning] on a festival make a dirge⁵ but do not beat the breast. R. Ishmael says: If they are near the bier,⁶ they can beat the breast. On New Moon, Hanukkah and Purim they may make a dirge and beat the breast, but on neither the one nor the other do they wail;⁷ and in reference to this, Rabbah b. Huna said: The festival involves no restrictions in the case of a scholar, still less Hanukkah and Purim? — You are speaking of the honour to be paid to the Torah. The honour to be paid to the learning of an individual is important, the study of an individual is [comparatively] unimportant.

Raba said: There is no question in my mind that, as between the Temple service and the reading of the Megillah, the reading of the Megillah takes priority, for the reason given by R. Jose b. Hanina.⁸ As between the study of the Torah and the reading of the Megillah, the reading of the Megillah takes priority, since the members of the house of Rabbi based themselves [on the dictum of R. Jose].⁸ As between the study of the Torah and attending to a meth mizwah,⁹ attending to a meth mizwah takes precedence, since it has been taught: The study of the Torah may be neglected in order to perform the last rites or to bring a bride to the canopy. As between the Temple service and attending to a meth mizwah, attending to a meth mizwah takes precedence, as we learn from the text or for his sister,¹⁰ as it has been taught: 'Or for his sister. What is the point of these words? Suppose he was on his way to kill his Paschal lamb or to circumcise his son, and he heard that a near relative had died,¹¹ shall I assume that he should defile himself? You must say, he should not defile himself. Shall I assume then that, just as he does not defile himself for his sister, so he should not defile himself for a meth mizwah?¹² It says significantly, 'or for his sister,' it is for his sister that he may not defile himself, but he may defile himself for a meth mizwah.¹³ Raba propounded the question: As between the reading of the Megillah and [attending to] a meth mizwah, which takes precedence? Shall I say that the reading of the Megillah takes precedence in order to proclaim the miracle, or does perhaps [the burying of] the meth mizwah take precedence because of the respect due to human beings? — After propounding the question, he himself answered it saying, [Burying] the meth mizwah takes precedence, since a Master has said: Great is the [obligation to pay due] respect to human beings, since it overrides a negative precept of the Torah.¹⁴

The text [above states]: ‘R. Joshua b. Levi said: A city¹⁵ and all that adjoins it and all that is taken in by the eye with it is reckoned as city’. A Tanna commented: Adjoining, even if it is not visible, and visible even if it is not adjoining. Now we understand what is meant by ‘visible even though not adjoining’: this can occur for instance with a city situated on the top of a hill. But how can there be ‘adjoining but not visible’? — R. Jeremiah replied: If it is situated in a valley.

R. Joshua b. Levi further said: A city which was first settled and then walled is reckoned as a village.¹⁶ What is the reason? Because it is written, And if a man sell a dwelling house of a walled city,¹⁷ one, [that is,] which was first walled and then settled, but not first settled and then walled.

R. Joshua b. Levi also said: A city in which there are not ten men of leisure¹⁸ is reckoned as a village. What does he tell us? We have already learnt this: ‘What is a large town? One in which there are ten men of leisure. If there are less than this, it is reckoned as a village’. — He had to point out that the rule applies to a city,¹⁹ even though [leisured] people come there from outside.²⁰ R. Joshua b. Levi also said: A city which has been laid waste and afterwards settled is reckoned as a city. What is meant by ‘laid waste’? Shall I say, that its walls have been destroyed, in which case if it became settled²¹ it is reckoned as a city but otherwise not? [How can this be], seeing that it has been taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Jose says: [The text says], which has a wall;²² [which implies that it is to be reckoned as a city] even though it has not a wall now, provided it had one previously?²³ What then is meant by ‘laid waste’? Laid waste of its ten men of leisure.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 4a

Lod and Ono and Ge Haharashim¹ were walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun. But did Joshua build these? Was it not Elpaal who built them, as it is written, And the sons of Elpaal Eber and Misham and Shemed, who built Ono and Lod, with the towns there of?² — But on your showing³ Asa built them, as it is written, And he built fenced cities in Judah?⁴ — R. Eleazar replied: These places were walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun. They were laid waste in the days of the concubine of Gibeat,⁵ and Elpaal came and rebuilt them. They again fell, and Asa came and repaired them. There is an indication of this in the text also, as it is written, For he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities.⁶ From this we can infer that they had already been towns beforehand; and this may be taken as proved.⁷

R. Joshua b. Levi also said: Women are under obligation to read the Megillah, since they also profited by the miracle then wrought.⁸ R. Joshua b. Levi further said: If Purim falls on a Sabbath, discussions and discourses are held on the subject of the day. Why mention Purim? The same rule applies to festivals also,⁹ as it has been taught: Moses laid down a rule for the Israelites that they should discuss and discourse on the subject of the day — the laws of Passover on Passover, the laws of Pentecost on Pentecost, and the laws of Tabernacles on Tabernacles! — It was necessary to state the rule [separately] in the case of Purim. For you might suggest that we should forbid this for fear of breaking the rule of Rabbah.¹⁰ We are therefore told that this is not so.

R. Joshua b. Levi further said: It is the duty of a man to read the Megillah in the evening and to repeat it in the day, as it is written, O my God, I cry in the daytime, but thou answerest not, and in the night season and am not silent.¹¹ The students took this to mean that the [Megillah] should be read at night, and the Mishnah relating to it should be learnt in the morning.¹² R. Jeremiah, however, said to them: It has been explained to me by R. Hiyya b. Abba [that the word 'repeat' here has the same meaning] as when, for instance, men say, I will go through this section and repeat it. It has also been stated: R. Helbo said in the name of 'Ulla of Biri':¹³ It is a man's duty to recite the Megillah at night and to repeat it the next day, as it says, To the end that my glory may sing praise to thee [by day]. and not be silent [by night]. O Lord, my God, I will give thanks to thee for ever.¹⁴

THE VILLAGES, HOWEVER, MAY PUSH THE READING FORWARD TO THE COURT DAY. R. Hanina said: The Sages made a concession to the villages by allowing them to push the reading forward to the Court day, in order that they might furnish food and water to their brethren in the cities.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 4b

This would show [would it not] that the regulation is for the benefit of the cities; but we have learnt: 'If Purim falls on Monday, the villages and large towns read on that day'. Now if it is as you say, they should push the reading forward to the [previous] Court day? — This would bring it to the tenth, and the Sages did not fix the tenth [as a possible day].

Come and hear: 'If it falls on Thursday, the villages and large towns read on that same day'. Now if it is as you say, they should push the reading forward to the [previous] Court day which is the eleventh? — We do not shift it from one Court day to another. Come and hear [again]: 'R. Judah says: When [is the reading pushed forward]? In places where the villagers come into town on Mondays and Thursdays, but in places where they do not come into town on Mondays and Thursdays it is read only on the proper day'. Now if you assume that the regulation is for the benefit of the cities, because they do not come into town on Mondays and Thursdays; are the cities to be deprived of the benefit? — Do not read [in the dictum of R. Hanina] ‘in order that they may furnish food and water’, but read, ‘because they furnish food and water to their brethren in the cities’.¹

HOW [DOES THIS WORK OUT]? IF IT FALLS ON MONDAY, VILLAGES AND LARGER TOWNS READ ON THAT SAME DAY etc. How is it that in the first clause of the Mishnah² the dates of the month are mentioned and in the second³ the days of the week?⁴ — Since (in the second clause) the dates of the month would have to go backwards,⁵ the Mishnah prefers to mention the days.⁶ IF IT FALLS ON FRIDAY etc. Which authority does our Mishnah follow? — [You may say], either Rabbi or R. Jose. How Rabbi? — As it has been taught: ‘If it falls on Friday, villages and large towns push the reading forward to the Court day, and walled cities react on the day itself. Rabbi said: I maintain that towns should not have to shift their date,⁷ but both one and the other read on the day itself’. What is the reason of the First Tanna? — Because it is written, every year:⁸ just as every year towns read before cities, so in this case towns should read before cities. But why not argue thus: ‘Every year’: just as every year towns have not to shift their date, so here towns should not have to shift their date? — There is a special reason [for not reasoning thus here] since this is impracticable.⁹ What is Rabbi’s reason? — [It is written], ‘every year’: just as in most years the towns have not to shift their date, so here they should not have to shift their date. But why not reason thus: ‘every year’: just as in most years towns read before walled cities, so here towns should read before walled cities? — There is a special reason [for not arguing thus here], because this is impracticable.¹⁰

How R. Jose? — As it has been taught: ‘If it falls on Friday, walled cities and villages push the reading forward to the Court day, and large towns read on the day itself. R. Jose said: Walled cities do not read before towns, but both read on the day itself’. What is the reason of the First Tanna? — Because it is written, every year’: just as in most years towns react on the fourteenth and their time is not the same as the time of the walled cities, so here towns should read on the fourteenth and their time should not be the same as the time of the walled cities. But why not reason thus: ‘Every year’: just as in most years walled cities do not read before towns, so here walled cities should not read before towns? — Here the case is different, because it cannot be avoided. What is R. Jose’s reason? — [It says], ‘every year’: just as in most years walled cities do not read before towns, so here walled cities should not read before towns. But why not reason thus: ‘Every year’: just as in most years the time of one is not the same as the time of the other, so here the time of one should not be the same as the time of the other? — Here the case is different, because it cannot be avoided.

But did Rabbi really hold that towns should not shift their time to the Court day? Has it not been taught: ‘If it falls on Sabbath, villages push the reading forward to the Court day, and large towns read on Friday and walled cities on Sunday. Rabbi said: My view is that, since the towns have to shift their time, they may as well shift it to the Court day’?¹¹ — Are the two cases parallel? In this last case, the proper time is Sabbath, and since they must shift they can shift [further]; but in our case the proper time is Friday.

Whose authority is followed in this dictum enunciated by R. Helbo in the name of R. Huna: ‘If Purim falls on Sabbath, all shift the reading to the Court day'? 'All shift their reading', do you say? [How can this be] seeing that we have the walled cities which read on the Sunday? — What we should say is, 'All who are shifted are shifted to the Court day'. Which authority, [you ask]? — Rabbi.

But at any rate all agree that the Megillah is not to be read on Sabbath. What is the reason? — Rabbah replied: All are under obligation to read the Megillah, but not all are competent to read it, and there is therefore a danger that one may take the scroll in his hand and go to an expert to be instructed and [in doing so] convey it four cubits in a public domain. This is also the reason for [not blowing] the shofar on Sabbath and [for not carrying] the lulab.¹² R. Joseph said: It is because the poor are anxiously awaiting the reading of the Megillah.¹³ It has been taught to the same effect: 'Although it has been laid down that villages push the reading forward to the Court day, contributions are collected and distributed on the same day'. 'Although it has been laid down'! On the contrary, it is because it has been laid down!¹⁴ — Read therefore: Since it has been laid down that villages push the reading forward to the Court day, contributions are collected and distributed on the same day, because the poor are waiting anxiously for the reading of the Megillah, but

- (1) The concession was therefore made to them as a reward, but if they do not come into town there would be no concession in allowing them to read earlier.
 - (2) THE MEGILLAH IS READ ON THE ELEVENTH, THE TWELFTH etc.
 - (3) IF IT FALL, ON MONDAY etc.
 - (4) Lit., 'in the first clause he (the Tanna) takes the order of the months and in the second the order of the days'.
 - (5) If he specified the dates of the month instead of the days of the week, he would have to begin with the reading on the fourteenth, and then take the thirteenth and so on.
 - (6) Because as these go in regular order, it is easier to remember, and there is less danger of the Tanna making a mistake.
 - (7) Lit., 'towns should not be shifted from their place'.
 - (8) Esth. IX, 27.
 - (9) It is impracticable for towns to retain this date and also to read before the walled cities.
 - (10) It is impracticable for the towns to read before the walled cities and yet not shift their date.
 - (11) Lit., 'since they are shifted, let them be shifted to etc.'
 - (12) V. Glos.
 - (13) Because they expect to receive gifts immediately afterwards, and on Sabbath these could not be given.
 - (14) As otherwise they would receive them on the actual day of Purim.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 5a

rejoicing¹ is kept only at the proper season.

Rab said: On the actual day of Purim the Megillah can be read even by an individual, but on the alternative days² it should be read only in a company of ten. R. Assi, however, said: Whether on the actual day or on the alternative days, it should be read only in a company of ten. In a case which actually occurred, Rab gave weight to the opinion of R. Assi.³ But could Rab actually have said this?⁴ — Did not Rab Judah the son of R. Samuel b. Shilath say in the name of Rab: 'If Purim falls on Sabbath, Friday is the proper time'? — Friday the proper time! Surely Sabbath is the proper time! What Rab must have meant therefore is this: The alternative time is like the proper time.⁵ Just as at the proper time [the Megillah may be read] by an individual, so at the alternative time [it may be read] by an individual. — No. For the reading of the Megillah⁶ Rab requires ten. What then did he mean by saying 'Friday is the proper time'? His intention was to reject the opinion of Rabbi, who said that since the towns had to shift their time they might as well shift to the Court day. Here, therefore, Rab informs us that Friday is the proper day [to which they should shift].

MISHNAH. WHAT IS RECKONED A LARGE TOWN? ONE WHICH HAS IN IT TEN MEN OF LEISURE.⁷ ONE THAT HAS FEWER IS RECKONED A VILLAGE. IN RESPECT OF THESE⁸ IT WAS LAID DOWN THAT THEY SHOULD BE PUSHED FORWARD BUT NOT POSTPONED. THE TIME, HOWEVER, OF BRINGING THE WOOD FOR THE PRIESTS,⁹ OF KEEPING THE [FAST OF] THE NINTH OF AB,¹⁰ OF OFFERING THE FESTIVAL SACRIFICE,¹¹ AND OF ASSEMBLING THE PEOPLE¹² IS TO BE POSTPONED¹³ [TILL AFTER SABBATH] BUT NOT PUSHED FORWARD. ALTHOUGH IT WAS LAID DOWN THAT THE TIMES [OF READING THE MEGILLAH] ARE TO BE PUSHED FORWARD BUT NOT POSTPONED, IT IS PERMISSIBLE ON THESE [ALTERNATIVE] DAYS¹⁴ TO MOURN, TO FAST, AND TO DISTRIBUTE GIFTS TO THE POOR. R. JUDAH SAID: WHEN IS THIS?¹⁵ IN PLACES WHERE PEOPLE COME TO TOWN ON MONDAYS AND THURSDAYS. IN PLACES, HOWEVER, WHERE THEY DO NOT COME TO TOWN EITHER ON MONDAYS OR THURSDAYS, THE MEGILLAH IS READ ONLY ON ITS PROPER DAY.

GEMARA. [TEN MEN OF LEISURE]: A Tanna taught: The ten unoccupied men who attend synagogue.¹⁶

IN RESPECT OF THESE IT WAS LAID DOWN THAT THEY SHOULD BE PUSHED FORWARD BUT NOT POSTPONED. What is the reason? — R. Abba said in the name of Samuel: The text says, and he shall not go further.¹⁷ R. Abba further said in the name of Samuel: Whence do we know that years are not to be counted by days?¹⁸ Because it says, [It is the first to you] of the months of the year,¹⁹ [which implies] that you reckon a year by months but not by days. The Rabbis of Caesarea said in the name of R. Abba: How do we know that a month is not reckoned by its hours?²⁰ Because it says, until a month of days:²¹ you reckon a month by days, but you do not reckon a month by hours.²²

THE TIME, HOWEVER, OF BRINGING THE WOOD FOR THE PRIESTS, OF KEEPING [THE FAST OF] THE NINTH OF AB, OF OFFERING THE FESTIVAL SACRIFICE AND OF ASSEMBLING THE PEOPLE IS POSTPONED BUT NOT PUSHED FORWARD. [The reason for the Fast of] the ninth of Ab is that we do not hasten the approach of trouble. [The reason for] the festival sacrifice and the assembling of the people is that the time for their performance has not yet arrived.²³

A Tanna taught: 'The festival sacrifice and all the period of the festival sacrifice is to be postponed'. We understand what is meant by the festival sacrifice, namely, that if its day happens to be Sabbath we postpone it till after the Sabbath. But what is meant by the ‘period of the festival sacrifice’? — R. Oshaia replied: What is meant is this: The festival sacrifice [is postponed if its time] occurs on Sabbath, and the ‘burnt-offering of appearance’²⁴ is postponed even till after the festival day which is the proper time for a festival sacrifice.²⁵ Which authority does this follow? Beth Shammai, as we have learnt: ‘Beth Shammai say, Peace-offerings may be brought on the festival, but without laying on of hands; not, however, burnt-offerings; while Beth Hillel say, Both burnt-offerings and peace-offerings may be brought, and hands may be laid on’.²⁶ Raba said: [The meaning is]: The festival sacrifice may be postponed for the whole period of the festival sacrifice,²⁷ but not more, as we have learnt: ‘If one did not bring a festival sacrifice on the first day of the festival, he may go on to do so throughout the festival, including the last day. If the festival terminated without his having brought the festival sacrifice, he need not bring another in compensation’.²⁸ R. Ashi said: [It means that] the festival sacrifice may be postponed for the whole period of the festival sacrifice,²⁹ and even on Pentecost which is only one day it may be postponed [for seven days], as we have learnt: [Beth Hillel] agree that if Pentecost falls on Sabbath, the day for killing [the sacrifice] is after the Sabbath’.³⁰ and bathed in the [bathhouse of the] marketplace¹ of Sepphoris on the seventeenth of Tammuz² and sought to abolish the fast of the ninth of Ab, but his colleagues would not consent. R. Abba b. Zabda ventured to remark:³ Rabbi, this was not the case. What happened was that the fast of Ab [on that year] fell on Sabbath, and they postponed it till after Sabbath, and he said to them, Since it has been postponed, let it be postponed altogether, but the Sages would not agree. He festival peace-sacrifice (hagigah) may be brought, this offering is not brought till the intermediate days. [R. ELeazar] thereupon applied to himself the verse, Better are two than one.⁴

But how could Rabbi have planted a shoot on Purim seeing that R. Joseph has learnt: [We read in connection with Purim] gladness and feasting and a good day;⁵ 'gladness': this teaches that it is forbidden on these days to mourn; 'feasting': this teaches that it is forbidden on them to fast; 'a good day': this teaches that it is forbidden on them to do work? — The fact is that Rabbi belonged to a place which kept Purim on the fourteenth, and when he planted, it was on the fifteenth. Is this so?⁶ Was not Rabbi in Tiberias, and Tiberias was walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun? — The fact is that Rabbi was in a place which kept on the fifteenth, and when he planted it was the fourteenth. But was he certain that Tiberias was walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun, seeing that Hezekiah read the Megillah in Tiberias both on the fourteenth and on the fifteenth, being uncertain whether it had been walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun or not? Hezekiah was in doubt, but Rabbi was certain. But even supposing he was certain, was he permitted to do this, seeing that it is written in Megillath Ta'anith,⁷ 'The fourteenth day and the fifteenth day are the days of Purim on which there is to be no mourning', and Raba said, The only purpose of mentioning these days [in Megillath Ta'anith]⁸ was to make whatever is forbidden on the one forbidden on the other also? — This applies only to mourning and fasting, but for abstention from work one day and no more is prescribed. Is that so? Did not Rab see a man sowing flax on Purim, and curse him, so that the flax did not grow? — There he [the man] was doing it on the day which he ought to have kept. Rabbah the son of Raba said. You may even say [that Rabbi planted] on the day [which he ought to have kept]: [the Jews] bound themselves [in the days of Esther] to abstain from mourning and fasting, but not from work, since first it is written, 'gladness and feasting and a good day', but afterwards it is written, that they should make them days of feasting and gladness',⁹ and 'a good day' is not mentioned. Why then did Rab curse that man? — It was a case of 'things which are permitted but others make a practice of abstaining from them'; but in Rabbi's place this¹⁰ was not the practice. Or if you like I can say that they did in fact make a practice of this, and Rabbi planted a festive shoot, as we have learnt:¹¹ If these days¹² pass and they are still not answered, they abstain to a certain extent from business, from building and from planting, from betrothing and from marrying,¹³ and a Tanna taught: 'Building' here means festive building; 'planting' means festive planting. What is festive building? If one builds a wedding residence for his son [on the occasion of his marriage]. What is a festive planting? If one plants a royal abarnaki.¹⁴

The text [above state]: 'Hezekiah read in Tiberias on the fourteenth and on the fifteenth, being doubtful whether it had been walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun or not'. But could he have been in doubt about Tiberias, seeing that it is written, And the fortified cities were Ziddim-zer and Hamath and Rakath and Kinnereth,¹⁵ and it is generally agreed that Rakath is Tiberias? — The reason why he was doubtful was because one side is bounded by the lake.¹⁶ If so, why was he in doubt? It certainly was not walled, as it has been taught : Which has a wall,¹⁷ and not merely a fence of houses.¹⁸ Round about:¹⁹ this excludes Tiberias, the lake forming its wall!²⁰ In respect of the houses of a walled town he was not in doubt; where he was in doubt was in respect of reading the Megillah. [He asked]: What constitutes the difference between villages and walled towns which are mentioned in connection with the reading of the Megillah? Is it that the former are exposed and the latter are not exposed, [in which case] Tiberias [belongs to the former] being also exposed, or is it that the latter are protected and the former are not protected, [in which case] Tiberias [belongs to the latter], being protected? That was why he was in doubt.

R. Assi read the Megillah in Huza²¹ on the fourteenth and on the fifteenth, being in doubt whether it had been walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun or not. According to another report, R. Assi said: Huzal of the house of Benjamin was walled in the days of Joshua son of Nun.

R. Johanan said: When I was a boy, I made a statement about which I afterwards questioned the old men, and it was found that I was right: [I said:] Hamath is Tiberias. And why was it called Hamath? On account of the hot springs [hamme] of Tiberias. Rakath is Sepphoris, And why was it called Rakath? Because it slopes down like the bank [raktha] of a river. Kinnereth is Gennesaret. And why was it called Kinnereth? Because its fruits are sweet like the music of a harp [kinnor].¹ Raba said: Is there anyone who can maintain that Rakath is not Tiberias, seeing that when a man dies here [in Babylonia] they mourn for him there [in Tiberias] as follows: 'Great was he in Sheshach² and he has a name in Rakath',³ and when the coffin is taken there they mourn for him thus: 'Ye lovers of the remnants,⁴ dwellers in Rakath, go forth and receive the slaughtered of the depths'.⁵ When R. Zera departed, a certain mourner opened his dirge thus: 'The land of Shinar⁶ conceived and bore him, the beautiful land⁷ brought up her delight. Woe to me, saith Rakath, for her precious instrument is lost'.⁸ No, said Raba. Hamath is the hot springs of Gerar; Rakath is Tiberias; and Kinnereth is Gennesaret. Why is it called Rakath? Because even the least worthy⁹ of its inhabitants are full of religious performances like a pomegranate. R. Jeremiah said: Rakath is its proper name. And why is it called Tiberias? Because it is situated in the very centre¹⁰ of the land of Israel. Rabbah said: Rakath is its name. And why is it called Tiberias? Because its aspect is good.¹¹

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 6a

Zeira said: Kitron is Sepphoris. And why is it called Sepphoris? Because it is perched on the top of a mountain like a bird [zippor]. But is Kitron Sepphoris? Now Kitron was in the territory of Zebulun, as it is written, Zebulun drove not out the inhabitants of Kitron nor the inhabitants of Nahalol.¹² Now Zebulun complained of his portion, as it says, Zebulun was a people which shamed his soul to death.¹³ Why? Because Naphtali was on the high places of the field.¹⁴ Zebulun complained to the Holy One, blessed be he, saying: Sovereign of the Universe, to my brethren Thou hast given fields and vineyards and to me Thou hast given hills and mountains; to my brethren Thou hast given lands, and to me Thou hast given lakes and rivers. [God] replied: They will all require thee for the hilazon,¹⁵ as it says, and the hidden treasures of the sand,¹⁶ and R. Joseph learnt: 'Hidden' indicates the hilazon; 'treasures' indicates the tunny fish;¹⁷ 'sand' indicates white glass.¹⁸ Zebulun then said: Sovereign of the Universe, who will inform me?¹⁹ He replied: There they shall offer sacrifices of righteousness.²⁰ This shall be thy sign: whoever takes of thee without payment will not prosper in his business. Now if you assume that Kitron is Sepphoris, why did Zebulun complain of his portion, seeing that Sepphoris is an excellent spot? Nor can you say that it is not 'flowing with milk and honey'. For Resh Lakish has said: I have myself seen the trail of milk and honey²¹ round Sepphoris, and it is sixteen miles by sixteen miles. Nor can you say that [even so] his is not as good as his brothers, since Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan: I have myself seen the trail of milk and honey of the whole land of Israel, and it extends [altogether] about as far as from Be Kubi²² to the Fort of Tulbanke, twenty-two parasangs in length and six parasangs in breadth?²³ Even so, he preferred fields and vineyards. This is also indicated by the language of the text, as it says, 'Naphtali upon the high places of the field'. This is a proof.

R. Abbahu said: [It is written], Ekron shall be rooted up;²⁴ this is Kisri the daughter of Edom,²⁵ which is situated among the sands, and which was a thorn in the side of Israel²⁶ in the days of the Greeks. When the House of the Hasmoneans grew powerful and conquered them, they called it 'the capture of the tower of Shir'.²⁷

R. Jose b. Hanina said: What is meant by the text, And I will take away his blood out of his mouth and his detestable things from between his teeth, and he also shall be a remnant for our God?²⁸ 'And I will take away his blood out of his mouth': this refers to their sacrificial shrines.²⁹ 'And his detestable things from between his teeth': this refers to their oracles.³⁰ 'And he also shall be a remnant for our God': these are the synagogues and houses of learning in Edom.³¹ And he shall be as a chief in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite:³² these are the theatres and circuses³³ in Edom in which one day the chieftains of Judah shall publicly teach the Torah. R. Isaac said: Leshem is Pamias.³⁴ Ekron shall be rooted out: this is Caesarea, the daughter of Edom, which was a metropolis³⁵ of kings. Some say that this means that kings were brought up there, and others that kings were appointed from there. Caesarea³⁶ and Jerusalem [are rivals]. If one says to you that both are destroyed, do not believe him; if he says that both are flourishing, do not believe him; if he says that Caesarea is waste and Jerusalem is flourishing, or that Jerusalem is waste and Caesarea is flourishing, you may believe him, as it says, I shall be filled, she is laid waste;³⁷ if this one is filled, that one is laid waste, and if that one is filled, this one is laid waste. R. Nahman b. Isaac derived the same lesson from here: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people.³⁸ R. Isaac also said: What is the meaning of the verse, Let favour be shown to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness?³⁹ Isaac said in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, let mercy be shown to Esau. He replied: He is wicked. He said to Him; He has not learnt righteousness.⁴⁰ He replied: In the land of uprightness⁴¹ will he deal wrongfully.⁴² He said: If so, let him not behold the majesty of the Lord.⁴²

R. Isaac also said: What is meant by the verse, Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked, draw not out his bit,⁴³ so that they exalt themselves, selah?⁴⁴ Jacob said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, grant not to Esau the wicked the desire of his heart, draw not out his bit:

this refers to Germamia of Edom,¹ for should they but go forth they would destroy the whole world. R. Hama b. Hanina said: There are three hundred crowned heads in Germamia of Edom and three hundred and sixty-five chieftains in Rome,² and every day one set go forth to meet the other and one of them is killed, and they have all the trouble of appointing a king again.

R. Isaac also said: If a man says to you, I have laboured and not found, do not believe him. If he says, I have not laboured but still have found, do not believe him. If he says, I have laboured and found, you may believe him. This is true in respect of words of Torah,³ but in respect of business, all depends on the assistance of heaven. And even for words of Torah this is true only of penetrating to the meaning,⁴ but for remembering what one has learnt, all depends on the assistance of heaven.

R. Isaac also said: If you see a wicked man being favoured by fortune,⁵ do not contend with him, as it says, Do not contend with evildoers.⁶ Nor is this all, but he may even prosper in his undertakings, as it says, His ways prosper at all times.⁷ Nor is this all, but he may even be declared right, as it says, Thy judgments are far above out of his sight.⁸ Nor is this all, but he may even triumph over his enemies, as it says, As for all his adversaries, he puffeth at them.⁸ Is this so? Has not R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world, as it says, They that forsake the law praise the wicked, but such as keep the law contend with them.⁹ Also it has been taught: R. Dosethai b. Mathon says: It is permitted to contend with the wicked in this world. And if one should whisper to you saying, [As for the text] Do not contend with evildoers, neither be thou envious against them that work unrighteousness, one whose conscience smites him speaks thus, and the meaning is, Do not contend with the evildoer to be like evildoers, neither be envious of such as work unrighteousness; and so it says also, Let not thy heart envy sinners?¹⁰ — There is no contradiction; the one [piece of advice] refers to one's own affairs the other to religious matters.¹¹ Or if you like I may say that both refer to one's own affairs, and still there is no contradiction: the one is addressed to a man who is wholly righteous, and the other to one who is not wholly righteous,¹² as R. Huna said: What is the meaning of the verse, Wherefore lookest thou when they deal treacherously, and holdest thy peace when the wicked swalloweth up the man that is more righteous than he?¹³ He can swallow up one that is more righteous than himself, he cannot swallow up one that is completely righteous. Or if you like I can say that when fortune is smiling on him, the case is different.

'Ulla said: 'Greek Italy'¹⁴ is the great city of Rome,¹⁵ which covers an area of three hundred parasangs by three hundred. It has three hundred markets corresponding to the number of days of the solar year. The smallest of them is that of the poultry sellers, which is sixteen mil by sixteen. The king dines every day in one of them. Everyone who resides in the city, even if he was not born there, receives a regular portion of food from the king's household,¹⁶ and so does everyone who was born there, even if he does not reside there. There are three thousand baths in it, and five hundred windows the smoke from which goes outside the wall.¹⁷ One side of it is bounded by the sea, one side by hills and mountains, one side by a barrier of iron, and one side by pebbly ground and swamp.¹⁸

MISHNAH. IF THE MEGILLAH HAS BEEN READ IN THE FIRST ADAR AND THE YEAR HAS SUBSEQUENTLY BEEN PROLONGED,¹⁹ IT IS READ AGAIN IN THE SECOND ADAR. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE FIRST ADAR AND THE SECOND ADAR SAVE ONLY IN THE READING OF THE MEGILLAH AND THE DISTRIBUTION OF GIFTS TO THE POOR.²⁰

GEMARA. This [last statement] implies that in respect of the series of special portions²¹ they are on the same footing.²² Which authority does the Mishnah follow? [It would seem], neither the First Tanna nor R. Eliezer son of R. Jose nor R. Simon b. Gamaliel [in the following Baraita], as it has been taught: 'If the Megillah has been read in the first Adar and the year has then been prolonged, it is read in the second Adar, since all the precepts which are to be performed in the second Adar can be performed in the first,²³ except the reading of the Megillah'. R. Eliezer son of R. Jose says that it is not to be read [again] in the second Adar, because all precepts that are to be performed in the second Adar may be performed in the first. R. Simon b. Gamaliel says in the name of R. Jose that it is to be read again in the second, because precepts which are to be performed in the second Adar may not be performed in the first. They all however agree in regard to mourning and fasting, that they are forbidden on [the fourteenth and fifteenth of] both. Does not R. Simon b. Gamaliel here repeat the First Tanna? — R. Papa replied: They differ on the question of the series of special portions — the First Tanna holding that these should in the first instance be read in the second [Adar], but if they have been read in the first, this suffices. [But he also] excludes from this ruling the reading of the Megillah, [holding that], even though it has been read in the first [Adar], it must be read again in the second. R. Eliezer son of R. Jose on the other hand held that even the Megillah may in the first instance be read in the first [Adar], and R. Simon b. Gamaliel held that even the series of special portions, if they have been read in the first [Adar], must be read again in the second. Which authority then [does our Mishnah follow]? If [you say] the First Tanna, there is the difficulty of gifts.²⁴ If [you say] R. Eliezer son of R. Jose, there is the difficulty of the reading of the Megillah also. If [you say] R. Simon b. Gamaliel, there is the difficulty of the series of special portions! — In fact it is the First Tanna, and when he mentioned the reading of the Megillah, we suppose the same to apply to the gifts of the poor, since one depends on the other. Or if you like, I can say that in fact it is R. Simon b. Gamaliel, and there is an omission²⁵ in our Mishnah and what it means is this: 'There is no difference between the fourteenth of the first Adar and the fourteenth of the second Adar save in the matter of reading the Megillah and gifts to the poor'. from which we infer that in regard to mourning and fasting they are on the same footing, while in regard to the special portions no ruling is given.²⁶ R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah²⁷ is as laid down by R. Simon b. Gamaliel, who gave it in the name of R. Jose. R. Johanan said: Both of them [R. Simon and R. Eliezer son of R. Jose] based their opinions on the same text, in every year.²⁸ R. Eliezer son of Jose reasoned:

‘In every year’; just as in most years [we think of] Adar as the month which adjoins Shebat, so here [we keep the precepts] in the Adar which adjoins Shebat. R. Simon b. Gamaliel again reasoned: Just as in most years [we think of] Adar as adjoining Nisan, so here [we keep the precepts] in the Adar which adjoins Nisan. Now we understand R. Eliezer son of R. Jose taking the view he did, because it is inherently probable, it being a rule that we do not postpone the performance of religious precepts.²⁹ But what is the reason of R. Simon b. Gamaliel? — R. Tabi said: The reason of R. Simon b. Gamaliel is that more weight is to be attached to bringing one period of redemption close to another.³⁰ R. Eleazar said: The reason of R. Simon b. Gamaliel is derived from this verse: to confirm this second letter of Purim.³¹ And it was necessary for the text to write

Talmud - Mas. Megillah 7a

‘the second’ and also to write ‘in every year’. For if I had to base the rule on ‘every year’, I could raise the difficulty stated above: therefore it is written ‘second’.¹ And if I had been told only ‘second’, I might say that the Megillah is properly to be read both in the first and in the second. Therefore it says, in every year.² And what does R. Eliezer son of R. Jose make of this second? — He requires it for the statement enunciated by R. Samuel b. Judah. For R. Samuel b. Judah said: At first they [Mordecai and Esther] decreed the observance of Purim only in Susa, but afterwards³ throughout the world.

R. Samuel b. Judah said: Esther sent to the Wise Men saying, Commemorate me⁴ for future generations. They replied, You will incite the ill will of the nations against us.⁵ She sent back reply: I am already recorded in the chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia. Rab and R. Hanina and R. Johanan and R. Habiba record [the above statement in this form]: (in the whole of the Order Mo'ed, wherever this set of Rabbis is mentioned, R. Johanan is replaced by R. Jonathan):⁶ Esther sent to the Wise Men saying, Write an account of me for posterity. They sent back answer, Have I not written for thee three times⁷ — three times and not four?⁸ [And they refused] until they found a verse written in the Torah, Write this a memorial in a book,⁹ [which they expounded as follows]: ‘Write this’, namely, what is written here and in Deuteronomy;¹⁰ ‘for a memorial’, namely, what is written in the Prophets;¹¹ ‘in a book’, namely, what is written in the Megillah. The difference [between the first and second of these opinions] is also found between two Tannaim. ‘Write this’, what is written here.¹² ‘For a memorial’, namely, what is written in Deuteronomy. ‘In a book’, namely, what is written in the Prophets. So R. Joshua.¹³ R. Eliezer of Modi'im says: Write this’, namely, what is written here and in Deuteronomy; for a memorial’, namely, what is written in the Prophets; ‘in a book’, namely, what is written in the Megillah.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel; [The scroll] of Esther does not make the hands unclean.¹⁴ Are we to infer from this that Samuel was of opinion that Esther was not composed¹⁵ under the inspiration of the holy spirit? How can this be, Seeing that Samuel has said that Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit? — It was composed to be recited [by heart], but not to be written. The following objection was raised: ‘R. Meir says that [the scroll of] Koheleth¹⁶ does not render the hands unclean, and that about the Song of Songs there is a difference of opinion. R. Jose says that the Song of Songs renders the hands unclean, and about Koheleth there is a difference of opinion. R. Simeon says that Koheleth is one of those matters in regard to which Beth Shammai were more lenient and Beth Hillel more stringent, but Ruth and the Song of Songs and Esther [certainly] make the hands unclean'! — Samuel concurred with R. Joshua.¹⁷

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Menasia said: Koheleth does not render the hands unclean because it contains only the wisdom of Solomon.¹⁸ They said to him], Was this then all that he composed? Is it not stated elsewhere, And he spoke three thousand proverbs,¹⁹ and it further says, Add thou not unto his words.²⁰ Why this further quotation? — In case you might object that he composed very much, and what it pleased him to write he wrote and what it did not please him he did not write. Therefore it says,²¹ Add thou not to his words.²²

It has been taught: R. Eleazar said: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, And Haman said in his heart.²³ R. Akiba says: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, And Esther obtained favour in the eyes of all that looked upon her.²⁴ R. Meir says: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, And the thing became known to Mordecai.²⁵ R. Jose b. Durmaskith said: Esther was composed under the inspiration of the holy spirit, as it says, But on the spoil they laid not their hands,²⁶ Said Samuel: Had I been there,²⁷ I would have given a proof superior to all, namely, that it says, They confirmed and took upon them,²⁸ [which means] they confirmed above²⁹ what they took upon themselves below. Raba said: All the proofs can be confuted except that of Samuel, which cannot be confuted. [Thus,] against that of R. Eleazar it may be objected that it is reasonable to suppose that Haman would think so, because there was no one who was so high in the esteem of the king as he was, and that when he spoke at length,³⁰ he was only expressing the thought concerning himself. Against the proof of R. Akiba it may be objected that perhaps the fact is as stated by R. Eleazar, who said that these words show that to every man she appeared to belong to his own nation.³¹ Against R. Meir it may be objected that perhaps the fact is as stated by R. Hiyya b. Abba who said that Bigthan and Teresh were two men from Tarsis.³² Against the proof of R. Jose b. Durmaskith it may be objected that perhaps they³³ sent messengers. Against the proof of Samuel certainly no decisive objection can be brought. Said Rabina: This bears out the popular saying, Better is one grain of sharp pepper than a basket full of pumpkins. R. Joseph said: It³⁴ can be proved from here: And these days of Purim shall not fail from among the Jews.³⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac said, From here: Nor the memorial of them perish from their seed.³⁶

AND GIFTS TO THE POOR. R. Joseph learnt: And sending portions one to another³⁷ that means two portions³⁸ for one man. And gifts to the poor³⁹ that means two gifts to two men.⁴⁰ R. Judah Nesi'ah⁴¹ sent to R. Oshaia the leg of a third-born calf⁴² and a barrel of wine. He sent him back word saying,

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 7b

You have fulfilled in our person, O our teacher, the words, and sending portions one to another.¹ Rabbah sent to Mari b. Mar by Abaye a sackful of dates and a cupful of roasted ears of corn. Said Abaye to him: Mari will now say, 'If a countryman becomes a king, he does not take his basket off his neck'.² The other [Mari] sent him [Rabbah] back a sackful of ginger and a cup full of long-stalked pepper. Said Abaye: Now the Master [Rabbah] will say, I sent him sweet and he sends me bitter. Abaye said: When I went out of the Master's [Rabbah's] house, I was already full, but when I reached the other place³ they set before me sixty dishes of sixty different preparations, and I had sixty pieces from them. The last preparation was called pot-roast, and [I liked it so much that] I wanted to lick the dish after it. Said Abaye: This bears out the popular saying, The poor man is hungry and does not know it,⁴ or the other saying, There is always room for sweet things. Abaye b. Abin and R. Hananiah b. Abin used to exchange their meals with one another.⁵

Raba said: It is the duty of a man to mellow himself [with wine] on Purim until he cannot tell the difference between cursed be Haman' and 'blessed be Mordecai'.⁶

Rabbah and R. Zera joined together in a Purim feast. They became mellow, and Rabbah arose and cut R. Zera's throat.⁷ On the next day he prayed on his behalf and revived him. Next year he said, Will your honour come and we will have the Purim feast together. He replied: A miracle does not take place on every occasion. Raba said: If one eats his Purim feast on the night [of the fourteenth], he does not thereby fulfil his obligation. What is the reason? It is written, days of feasting and gladness.⁸ R. Ashi was sitting before R. Kahana. It grew late, and still the Rabbis did not arrive. He said to him, Why have not the Rabbis come? Perhaps they are busy with the Purim feast. He said to him: Could they not have had it last night? He replied: Is your honour not acquainted with the diction of Raba, 'If one eats his Purim feast on the night [of the fourteenth], he does not thereby fulfil his obligation'? He said to him; Did Raba really say so? (He replied Yes).⁹ He then repeated it after him forty times, until he had safely stored it in his mind.¹⁰

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FESTIVALS AND SABBATH SAVE ONLY IN THE MATTER OF [PREPARING] FOOD.¹¹

GEMARA . We can infer from this that in the matter of preliminaries for preparing food¹² they are on the same footing. The Mishnah then does not agree with R. Judah, as it has been taught: 'There is no difference between festivals and Sabbath save in the matter of [preparing] food'. R. Judah, however, permits [on the festivals] the preliminaries for preparing food.¹² What is the reason of the First Tanna? The Scripture says: [Save that which every man must eat], that only [shall be prepared].¹³ that and not its preliminaries. R. Judah, on the other hand, stresses the word for you:¹⁴ for you, which means, for all your requirements. Why then does not the other also admit this, seeing that it is written, 'for you'? — [This, he says, means], 'for you' and not for non-Jews; 'for you' and not for dogs. And [why does not] the other [adopt this view], seeing that it is written, 'that only'? [He replies]: It is written, 'that only', and it is written, 'for you'; we apply the one to preliminaries which can be attended to on the day before the festival, and the other to preliminaries which cannot be attended to on the day before the festival.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SABBATH AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT SAVE ONLY THAT THE DELIBERATE VIOLATION OF THE ONE IS PUNISHED BY A HUMAN COURT AND THE DELIBERATE VIOLATION OF THE OTHER BY KARETH.¹⁵

GEMARA. It is to be inferred from this that in respect of compensation¹⁶ they are on the same footing. Whose view does the Mishnah follow? — That of R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh, as it has been taught: R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh used to put the Day of Atonement on the same footing as Sabbath in respect of compensation: just as [one who deliberately breaks] Sabbath forfeits his life but is released from the obligation to make compensation,¹⁷ so [one who deliberately breaks] the Day of Atonement forfeits his life but is released from the obligation to make compensation.

We have learnt elsewhere: If any who have incurred the penalty of kareth are flogged — they become quit of their kareth, as it says, Then thy brother should be dishonoured in thine eyes;¹⁸ once he has been flogged, he is like thy brother.¹⁹ So R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel. Said R. Johanan: The colleagues of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel joined issue with him on this point. Raba said, They said in the school of Rab: We have [also] learnt [this]:²⁰ There is no difference between the Day of Atonement and Sabbath save that he who breaks the one is punished by a human court, while he who breaks the other is punished with kareth. Now if [R. Hananiah's opinion] is correct, then both are punished by the human court?²¹ — R. Nahman replied: Whose view is this?²² That of R. Isaac, who said that lashes are never inflicted on those who have incurred kareth, as it has been taught: Those who have incurred kareth are included in the general statement.²³ Why then is kareth specially mentioned in the case of [one who lies with] his sister?²⁴ To show that she is punished with kareth and not with lashes.²⁵ R. Ashi said: You may even say that it²⁶ is the view of the Rabbis:²⁷ in the case of the one [the breaker of Sabbath], the essential [punishment for] his presumption is inflicted by the human court, but in the case of the other, the essential punishment for his presumption consists in 'being cut off'.²⁸

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ONE WHO IS INTERDICTED BY VOW TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HIS NEIGHBOUR AND ONE WHO IS INTERDICTED BY VOW FROM HIS FOOD, SAVE IN THE MATTER OF SETTING FOOT [ON HIS PROPERTY] AND OF UTENSILS WHICH ARE NOT USED FOR [PREPARING] FOOD.¹

GEMARA. It is to be inferred from this that in the matter of utensils which are used for preparing food they are on the same footing.

SETTING FOOT. But people are not particular about this?² — Raba said: Whose view is this? R. Eleazar's, who said that [even] a thing which is usually excused³ is forbidden to one who vows to have no benefit.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN VOWS AND FREEWILL-OFFERINGS SAVE THAT VOWED OFFERINGS HAVE TO BE REPLACED⁴ BUT FREEWILL-OFFERINGS NEED NOT BE REPLACED.

GEMARA. It is to be inferred from this that in respect of 'not delaying'⁵ they are on the same footing.

We have learnt in another place: What is a vow? Where a man says, I take upon me the obligation to bring a burnt-offering. What is a freewill-offering? Where a man says, Behold this is [to be] a burnt-offering. What then is the [practical] difference between vows and freewill-offerings? — If vowed animals die or are stolen or lost, the one who offered is under obligation to replace them;⁶ if freewill-offerings die or are stolen or lost, he is not under obligation to replace them.⁷ Whence is this rule derived? — As our Rabbis have taught: And it shall be accepted for him to make atonement upon him:⁸ R. Simeon says: That which is 'upon him'⁹ he is under obligation to replace.¹⁰ How is it implied [that this substitute is upon him]? — R. Isaac b. Abdini replied: Since he has said '[I take] upon me', it is as if he had taken it upon his shoulder.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ONE SUFFERING FROM AN ISSUE WHO MAKES TWO OBSERVATIONS¹¹ AND ONE WHO MAKES THREE,¹² SAVE IN THE MATTER OF BRINGING A SACRIFICE.¹³

GEMARA. From this it is to be inferred that in the matter of [defiling] a bed or a seat¹⁴ and counting seven days¹⁵ they are on the same footing. Whence is this rule derived? — As our Rabbis have taught: ‘R. Simai says: The text specified two [observations]¹⁶ and designated the man as unclean, and also specified three¹⁷ and designated him as unclean’. How do we explain this? Two bring uncleanness but do not entail a sacrifice, three entail a sacrifice. But cannot I say that two bring uncleanness but do not entail a sacrifice, while three entail a sacrifice but no uncleanness?¹⁸ — To this you may answer that before he has three observations he must have two.¹⁹ Let me say then that two observations entail a sacrifice but not uncleanness,¹⁸ whereas three bring uncleanness also? — Do not imagine such a thing, since it has been taught: And the priest shall make atonement for him before the Lord from his issue;²⁰ this implies that some persons with an issue bring a sacrifice and some do not.²¹ How is this? if he has three observations, he brings a sacrifice, if only two, he does not bring. Or shall we expound differently and say that if he has two he brings the sacrifice, but if three he does not? — You can reply to this that before he has three he must have had two.²² And both the exposition of R. Simai and the text ‘from his issue’ are necessary [to prove this point]. For if I had only the dictum of R. Simai, I could raise against it the objection mentioned, and therefore I have recourse to ‘from his issue’. And if I had only ‘from his issue’, I should not know how many observations [are necessary for a sacrifice]; therefore I have the dictum of R. Simai.²³

Now, however, that you have assumed that the words ‘from his issue are to be used for a special exposition,²⁴ [I may ask], what lesson do you derive from the words and when he that hath an issue is cleansed from his issue?²⁵ That is required for the following lesson, as it has been taught: ‘And when he that hath an issue is cleansed’: that is to say, when the issue ceases.²⁶ ‘From his issue’: that is to say from his issue [only], and not from both his issue and his leprosy.²⁷ ‘Then he shall number’: this teaches us that one with an issue who has had two observations must count seven days [without issue]. But cannot this be deduced logically [as follows]?²⁸ If he defiles bed and seat, shall he not [all the more] be required to count seven days?

(1) The latter may take these liberties, the former may not.

(2) And therefore if one takes this liberty, he cannot be said to be deriving any benefit.

(3) ru, hu Aliter: ‘The (retailer's customary) addition (to exact measure)’, and the accenting of which is not counted as receiving a benefit.

(4) Lit., one is responsible for them’. V. infra.

(5) To fulfil the undertaking, in accordance with Deut. XXIII, 22.

(6) Because the vow still stands.

(7) Because the undertaking applied only to that particular animal.

(8) So lit. E.V, ‘for him’. Lev. I, 4.

(9) I.e., the vow.

(10) Apparently R. Simeon renders: ‘Any animal will be accepted so long as it is "upon him"’.

(11) On a single day or two successive days.

(12) On one day or three successive days or two on one day and one on the next.

(13) V. Lev. XV, 13-15.

(14) Ibid. 4-6.

(15) For his cleansing, after the cessation of the issue. Ibid. 13.

(16) Lev. XV, 2: When a man hath an issue out of his flesh, his issue is unclean.

- (17) Ibid. 3: And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness,
- (18) Viz., the stringent uncleanness of one with an issue (cf. nn. 3-4), but only the lighter uncleanness resulting from a discharge of semen. V. Deut. XXIII, 11-12.
- (19) And is already unclean as a zab.
- (20) Ibid. 15.
- (21) The proposition 'from' is stressed, as implying only part of these who have an issue.
- (22) And so already become liable for the sacrifice.
- (23) To show that it is three.
- (24) I.e., for some lesson not contained in the literal meaning of the words.
- (25) Ibid. 13.
- (26) V. next note.
- (27) If the one with an issue was also a leper, he need not wait for his counting till he is healed of his leprosy.
- (28) And why therefore is a text required?

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 8b

— This argument can be confuted by the case of the woman who is keeping day for day,¹ for such a one defiles bed and seat² but does not count seven days. And thus do not be surprised that this one also, although he defiles bed and seat, should not be obliged to count seven days. Therefore it says, 'from his issue, and he shall number', which implies that after part of his issue³ he shall number; this teaches² with regard to one with an issue who has had two observations that he is required to count seven days.

R. Papa said to Abaye: Why do we use the one text 'from his issue' to include⁴ one with an issue who has had two observations, and the other text 'from his issue' to exclude⁵ one with an issue who has had two observations? — He replied: If you should assume that the former text⁶ is for the purpose of excluding, then the text could simply omit the word. And should you say, we could then derive the rule [that he is to count seven days] by a logical deduction, such a deduction could be confuted by the case of the woman who counts day for day. And should you say that this word is required to show that the text refers to one who is cleansed of his issue [only] and not [of his issue and] his leprosy, — in that case the text should say, 'and when he that hath an issue is cleansed', and no more. Why do I require, 'from his issue'? This teaches that one with an issue who has two observations is required to count seven days.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER WHO IS UNDER OBSERVATION⁷ AND ONE DEFINITELY DECLARED SUCH⁸ SAVE IN THE MATTER OF LEAVING THE HAIR LOOSE⁹ AND RENDING THE GARMENTS.¹⁰ THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER WHO HAS BEEN DECLARED CLEAN⁸ AFTER BEING UNDER OBSERVATION¹¹ AND ONE WHO HAS BEEN DECLARED CLEAN⁸ AFTER HAVING BEEN DEFINITELY DECLARED A LEPER SAVE IN THE MATTER OF SHAVING AND [OFFERING] THE BIRDS.¹²

GEMARA. From this it is to be inferred that in the matter of being sent outside [the camp]¹³ and uncleanness¹⁴ they are on the same footing. Whence is this rule¹⁵ derived? — As R. Samuel b.

Isaac taught before R. Huna: Then the priest shall pronounce him clean; it is a scab; and he shall wash his clothes and be clean;¹⁶ which implies that he shall already have been [in a sense] clean¹⁷ from the first, not having been liable to rending the garments and loosening the hair. Said Raba to him. If that is so, then in regard to one with an issue, of whom it is written, and he shall wash his garments and be clean,¹⁸ how is it possible to say that he shall have been clean from the start? What it means then is, 'clean now so far as not to defile earthenware vessels by moving them',¹⁹ so that, even if he observes an issue again, he does not defile them retrospectively. So here, [the meaning is that] the leper is clean now to the extent of not defiling retrospectively by his entrance!²⁰ The fact is, said Raba, that we learn it from here: And the leper in whom the plague is;²¹ [that means] one whose leprosy is due to the state of his body, excluding this one²² whose leprosy is due to days.²³ Said Abaye to him: If that is so, then when it says, All the days wherein the plague is in him he shall be unclean,²⁴ are we to say that one whose leprosy is due to his state of body is required to be sent out of the camp, but one whose leprosy is not due to his state of body is not to be sent out of the camp? And should you reply that that is so, [how can this be] seeing that it states, THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER UNDER OBSERVATION AND ONE DEFINITELY DECLARED SUCH SAVE IN THE MATTER OF LOOSENING THE HAIR AND RENDING THE GARMENTS, from which it may be inferred that in the matter of being sent out [of the camp] and defiling by entrance they are on the same footing? — [The text might have said simply] 'the days', and it says, 'all the days', to bring a leper under observation within the rule of sending out [of the camp]. If that is the case, what is the reason that he is not required to shave and offer birds [which is not the case], as it states: THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A LEPER UNDER OBSERVATION AND ONE DEFINITELY DECLARED SUCH SAVE IN THE MATTER OF SHAVING AND OFFERING BIRDS? — Abaye replied: Scripture says: And the priest shall go forth out of the camp, and behold the plague of leprosy is healed in the leper;²⁵ this means, one whose leprosy is such because it requires healing,²⁶ and excludes one whose leprosy is such in virtue not of [requiring] healing but of days [of isolation].

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BOOKS [OF THE SCRIPTURE]²⁷ AND TEFILLIN AND MEZUZAH²⁸ SAVE THAT THE BOOKS MAY BE WRITTEN IN ANY LANGUAGE²⁹ WHEREAS TEFILLIN AND MEZUZAH²⁸ MAY BE WRITTEN ONLY IN ASSYRIAN.³⁰ R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS THAT BOOKS [OF THE SCRIPTURE] ALSO WERE PERMITTED [BY THE SAGES] TO BE WRITTEN ONLY IN GREEK.

GEMARA. [From this we infer] that for requiring [the sheets] to be stitched with sinews³¹ and for defiling the hands³² both are on the same footing.

BOOKS MAY BE WRITTEN IN ANY LANGUAGE. The following seems to conflict with this: '[A Scriptural scroll containing] a Hebrew text written³³ in Aramaic or an Aramaic text written in Hebrew,³⁴ or [either] in Hebraic script,³⁵ does not defile the hands;³⁶ [it does not do so] until it is written in Assyrian script upon a scroll and in ink'! — Raba replied: There is no contradiction;

(21) Lev. XIII, 45.

(22) The leper under observation.

(23) It is the seven days of his observation that cause him to be designated a leper, for should there be no change in the leper at the end of the seven days he is pronounced clean.

(29) Apparently what is meant is that official translations for use in the synagogue may be made in any language. We know actually of two such — the Aramaic translation known as Targum Onkelos, and the Greek translation of Aquilas made under the supervision of R. Eleazar and R. Joshua.

(30) 'Assyrian' is used as the equivalent of Hebrew written in the square characters used for religious writings. This script was called 'Assyrian', the reason being that it came into common use after the return of the Jews from the Babylonian exile; v. Sanh. 21b, Sonc. ed. pp. 119ff and notes.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 9a

the one statement [that of the Mishnah] speaks of [books written in] our script,¹ the other of [books written in] their script.² Said Abaye to him: How have you explained the other statement [that of the Baraitha]? As referring to their script. [If so], why should it say, 'A Hebrew text written in Aramaic or an Aramaic text written in Hebrew'? The same would apply even to a Hebrew text which is written in Hebrew or an Aramaic text which is written in Aramaic, since it goes on to say. 'till it is written in Assyrian on a scroll in ink'!³ No. [What you must say is], there is no contradiction: the one statement [in the Mishnah] represents the view of the Rabbis, the other that of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. But if it is the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, what about Greek?⁴ — No. What you must say is, there is no contradiction; the one statement [in the Mishnah] refers to scrolls, the other to tefillin and mezuzahs. What is the reason [why] tefillin, and mezuzahs [must be written in Assyrian]? — Because in reference to them it is written, and they shall be,⁵ which implies, they shall be as they originally were. What cases are there of Aramaic which can be written in Hebrew? I grant you we find in the Torah yegar sahadutha;⁶ but here [in the case of tefillin, and mezuzoth] what Aramaic is there? — No. What you must say is, there is no contradiction; the one statement [in the Baraitha] refers to the Megillah, the other to the other books [of the Scripture]. What is the reason in the case of the Megillah? — Because it is written In regard to it, according to their writing and according to their language.⁷ What case of Aramaic being written in Hebrew is possible here? — R. Papa said: And the king's pithgam⁸ shall be published;⁹ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: And all the wives shall give yekar¹⁰ to their husbands.¹¹ R. Ashi said: That statement [in the Baraitha] was made in reference to other books [of the Scripture], and it follows the view of R. Judah, as it has been taught: 'Tefillin and mezuzahs are to be written only in Assyrian, but our Rabbis allowed them to be written in Greek also'.¹² But is it not written, and they shall be? I must say therefore, 'Scrolls of the Scripture may be written in any language, and our Rabbis permitted them to be written in Greek'.¹³ They permitted! This would imply that the First Tanna forbade it! What I must say therefore is, 'Our Rabbis permitted them to be written only in Greek'. And it goes on to state, 'R. Judah said: When our teachers permitted Greek, they permitted it only for a scroll of the Torah'.¹⁴ This was on account of the incident related in connection with King Ptolemy,¹⁵ as it has been taught: 'It is related of King Ptolemy that he brought together seventy-two elders and placed them in seventy-two [separate] rooms, without telling them why he had brought them together, and he went in to each one of them and said to him, Translate¹⁶ for me the Torah of Moses your master.¹⁷ God then prompted each one of them and they all conceived the same idea and wrote for him, God created in the beginning,¹⁸ I shall make man in image and likeness,¹⁹ And he finished on the sixth day, and rested on the seventh day,²⁰ Male and female he created him²¹ [but they did not write 'created them'],²² Come let me descend and confound their tongues,²³ And Sarah laughed among her relatives;²⁴ For in their anger they slew an ox and in their wrath they digged up a stall,²⁵ And Moses took his wife and his children, and made them ride on a carrier of men;²⁶ And the abode of the children of Israel which they stayed in Egypt and in other lands was four hundred years,²⁷ And he sent the elect of the children of Israel;²⁸ And against the elect of the children of Israel he put not forth his hand;²⁹

(1) Even though in another language.

(2) The Scriptural text was transliterated into the characters of a foreign language.

- (3) This shows, according to Abaye, that the Baraitha is speaking of the language independently of the script.
- (4) According to Abaye the Baraitha, in saying, 'till it is written in Assyrian' forbids even Greek, which is allowed by R. Simeon.
- (5) Deut. VI, 8.

- (26) Ex. IV, 20: carrier of men' instead of 'ass', to save the dignity of Moses.
- (27) Ibid. XII, 40. The words 'and in other lands' are inserted because, according to the Biblical record, the Israelites were at the utmost 210 years in Egypt.
- (28) Ibid. XXIV, 5: 'elect' instead of 'young men', which is regarded as not suitable to the context.
- (29) Ibid. 11 : 'elect' instead of 'nobles'.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 9b

I have taken not one valuable of theirs;¹ Which the Lord thy God distributed to give light to all the peoples;² And he went and served other gods which I commanded should not be served.³ They also wrote for him 'the beast with small legs' and they did not write 'the hare',⁴ because the name of Ptolemy's wife was hare,⁵ lest he should say, The Jews have jibed at me and put the name of my wife in the Torah.

R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS THAT BOOKS [OF THE SCRIPTURE] ALSO ARE PERMITTED TO BE WRITTEN ONLY IN GREEK. R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan:

The halachah follows R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. R. Johanan further said: What is the reason of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? Scripture says, God enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem;⁶ [this means] that the words of Japheth⁷ shall be in the tents of Shem. But why not say [the words of] Gomer and Magog?⁸ — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied: The real reason is because it is written, Let God enlarge [yaft] Japheth: implying, let the chief beauty [yafyuth] of Japheth⁹ be in the tents of Shem.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A PRIEST ANOINTED WITH THE OIL OF ANOINTMENT AND ONE WHO [ONLY] WEARS THE ADDITIONAL GARMENTS¹⁰ SAVE IN THE MATTER OF THE BULLOCK WHICH IS OFFERED FOR THE [UNWITTING BREAKING OF] ANY OF THE COMMANDMENTS.¹¹ THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A REGULAR¹² [HIGH] PRIEST AND ONE WHO HAS PASSED THROUGH [THE OFFICE]¹³ SAVE IN RESPECT OF THE BULLOCK OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AND THE TENTH OF THE EPHAH.¹⁴

GEMARA. [BETWEEN THE PRIEST ANOINTED etc.]. From this we infer that in the matter of the bullock of the Day of Atonement and the tenth of the ephah they are on the same footing. The Mishnah, it appears, does not concur with R. Meir; for with regard to the view of R. Meir, it has been taught: 'One who wears the additional garments [without having been anointed] brings the bullock which is offered [by the High Priest] for the [unwitting breaking of] any of the precepts'. So R. Meir. The Sages, however, say that he does not offer it. What is the reason of R. Meir? — As it has been taught: [If the] anointed [priest shall sin]:¹⁵ this tells me only of one anointed with the oil of anointment. How do I know that it applies also to one who [merely] wears the additional garments? — Because it says, the 'anointed'.¹⁶ How have you explained [the Mishnah]? As not concurring with R. Meir. Look now at the next clause: THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A REGULAR HIGH PRIEST AND ONE WHO HAS PASSED THROUGH THE OFFICE SAVE IN THE MATTER OF THE BULLOCK OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AND THE TENTH OF THE EPHAH. We infer from this that in all other matters they are on the same footing; and so we come round to the view of R. Meir, as it has been taught: 'If something happened to disqualify him and another priest was appointed to take his place, when the first returns to his service the second is still liable to all the obligations of the high priesthood'.¹⁷ So R. Meir. R. Jose said: The first returns to his service whereas the second is qualified to act neither as a high priest nor as an ordinary priest. R. Jose further said: it happened with R. Jose b. Ulam¹⁸ from Sepphoris that a disqualification occurred to the high priest and they appointed him in his place, and the case eventually came before the Sages and they said: The first returns to his service. The second is qualified to act neither as a high priest nor as an ordinary priest: as a high priest, so as not to create enmity,¹⁹ as an ordinary priest, because we can raise to a higher grade of holiness but we never put down to a lower.²⁰ Are we then to say that the first clause [of the Mishnah] follows the Sages and the second R. Meir? — Said R. Hisda: Yes; the first clause follows the Sages and the second R. Meir. R. Joseph said: The whole gives the opinion of Rabbi, who combined the views of²¹ differing Tannaim.²²

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE²³ BETWEEN A GREAT HIGH PLACE²⁴ AND A SMALL ONE²⁵ SAVE IN THE MATTER OF THE PASCHAL LAMB OFFERING.²⁶ THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ANY ANIMAL WHICH IS THE OBJECT OF A VOW OR A

FREEWILL-OFFERING MAY BE BROUGHT ON A [SMALL] HIGH PLACE, ANY ANIMAL WHICH IS NOT THE OBJECT OF A VOW OR A FREEWILL-OFFERING MAY NOT BE BROUGHT ON A [SMALL] HIGH PLACE.

GEMARA. THE PASCHAL LAMB and nothing else²⁷ — We should say, things like the paschal lamb.²⁸ Whose view is this? — R. Simeon's, as it has been taught: 'The congregation also did not offer [on the large high place] anything save paschal lambs and obligatory sacrifices for which there is a fixed time; but obligatory sacrifices for which there is no fixed time²⁹ were not offered either on the one or the other'.

MISHNAH. THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SHILOH³⁰ AND JERUSALEM SAVE THAT IN SHILOH SACRIFICES OF LESSER SANCTITY³¹ AND SECOND TITHE³² COULD BE EATEN ANYWHERE WITHIN SIGHT [OF THE TOWN], WHEREAS IN JERUSALEM THEY HAD TO BE CONSUMED WITHIN THE WALLS. IN BOTH PLACES THE MOST HOLY SACRIFICES³³ WERE EATEN WITHIN THE CURTAINS.³⁴ AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF SHILOH

- (33) Viz., sin- and guilt-offerings, and congregational peace-offerings.
- (34) This expression applies strictly only to the Tabernacle at Shiloh. The corresponding place in the Temple at Jerusalem was the space within the walls of the Temple court.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 10a

THE HIGH PLACES COULD AGAIN BECOME PERMITTED, BUT AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF JERUSALEM THERE CAN BE NO SUCH PERMISSION.

GEMARA. R. Isaac said: I have heard that sacrifices may be offered in the Temple of Onias¹ at the present day.² He was of opinion that the Temple of Onias is not an idolatrous shrine, and that the first holiness [of Jerusalem] was conferred on it for the time being but not for all time,³ as it is written, For ye are not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance.⁴ 'Rest' here means Shiloh and 'inheritance' means Jerusalem, and 'inheritance' is put on the same footing as 'rest', [to show that] just as after the [destruction of the] 'rest' the high places were again permitted, so after the [destruction of the] 'inheritance' they will be permitted. They said to him: Do you really say so? He replied, No. Said Raba: By God! he did say it and I learnt it from him. Why then did he retract? On account of the difficulty raised by R. Mari. For R. Mari adduced the following in confutation: AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF SHILOH HIGH PLACES CAN AGAIN BE PERMITTED, BUT AFTER THE SANCTIFICATION OF JERUSALEM THERE CAN BE NO SUCH PERMISSION. We have also learnt further: After they [the Israelites] occupied Jerusalem, the high places were forbidden, and they were never permitted again, and it was the 'inheritance'. — There is a difference of Tannaim on this point, as we have learnt. 'R. Eliezer said: I have heard that when they were building the hekal⁵ [in the second Temple] they made curtains for the hekal and for the courtyard,⁵ the difference being that in the hekal they built [the walls] outside [the curtains]⁶ and in the courtyard they built [the walls] within [the curtains]. And R. Joshua said: I have heard that sacrifices may be brought even though there is no temple; that the most holy foods may be eaten, even though there are no curtains; and that foods of lesser sanctity and second tithe may be eaten even though there is no wall, because the first holiness was conferred on Jerusalem⁷ both for the time being and for all time.⁷ We infer from this⁸ that R. Eliezer was of opinion that it was not [at first] sanctified for all time.⁹ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: How can we draw this inference? Perhaps all agree that the first holiness was conferred upon it for the time being and for all time, and one Master reported what he had heard and the other what he had heard.

Should you ask, In that case, why were curtains needed according to R. Eliezer, we can answer that they were merely for privacy. Rather it is the following Tannaim who differ on this point as it has been taught: ‘R. Ishmael son of R. Jose said: Why did the Sages enumerate these?’¹⁰ Because when the exiles returned they found these cities [still walled] and sanctified them;¹¹ the others,¹² however, lost their privilege when the land lost its sanctity’. This shows that he was of opinion that the first holiness was conferred for the time being and not for the future. And a contradiction was pointed out with the following: ‘R. Ishmael son of R. Jose said: Were these all? Do we not find it said, Sixty cities, all the region of Argob,¹³ and it is written, All these were fortified cities with high walls?’¹⁴ Why then did the Sages enumerate these? Because when the exiles returned, they found these [still walled] and sanctified them’.¹⁵ They sanctified then,

(1) A shrine built at Leontopolis in Egypt by Onias IV, a high priest who fled from Jerusalem. c. 154 B.C.E., v. Josephus, Ant. XIII, iii, 1ff and Men. 109b.

(2) This must refer to the period of the originator of the dictum, as the Temple of Onias did not exist any longer in the time of R. Isaac.

(3) Lit., ‘for the future to come’. Hence after its destruction the high places would again be permitted.

(4) Deut. XII, 9.

(5) We assume for the present that the reason for the curtains was to invest the place with holiness enabling sacrifices to be offered and eaten pending the construction of the walls.

(6) [To prevent the builders from either penetrating into the hekal or gazing into it whilst engaged in their work. V. Rashi a.I. and Shebu. 16a.]

(8) From the fact that curtains were required to confer holiness.

(9) This shows that Tannaim differ on this point.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 10b

now, [say you]! Do we not say that they did not require to be sanctified?¹ What [you should say is], they found these and enumerated them. And not only in these alone, but in every one in regard to which you shall find a tradition from your ancestors that it was walled from the days of Joshua son of Nun, all these precepts² are to be observed, because the first holiness was conferred for the time being and for all future time. There is thus a contradiction between two statements of R. Ishmael! — Two Tannaim report R. Ishmael son of R. Jose differently. Or if you like, I can say that the latter dictum emanates from R. Eleazar b. Jose, as it has been taught: ‘R. Eleazar b. Jose says: That has [no] wall;³ even though it has not now, but it had in previous times.’

And it came to pass in the days of Ahasuerus.⁴ R. Levi, or some say R. Jonathan said: The following remark is a tradition handed down to us from the Men of the Great Assembly:⁵ wherever in the Scripture we find the term wa-yehi[and it was, and it came to pass], it indicates

[the approach of] trouble.⁶ Thus, and it came to pass in the days of Ahasuerus — there was Haman. And it came to pass in the days when the Judges judged⁷ — ‘there was a famine’. And it came to pass when man began to multiply⁸ — then ‘God Saw that the wickedness of man was great’. And it came to pass, as they journeyed east⁹ — then ‘they said, come let us build a city’. And it came to pass in the days of Amrafel¹⁰ — then ‘they made war’. And it came to pass when Joshua was in Jericho¹¹ — then ‘his [the angel’s] sword was drawn in his hand’.¹² And the Lord was [wa-yehi] with Joshua¹³ — then, ‘the children of Israel committed a trespass’, And there was a certain man of Ramathaim-Zophim¹⁴ — then, for he loved Hannah but the Lord had shut up her womb’. And it came to pass when Samuel was old¹⁵ — then, ‘his sons walked not in his ways’. And David had [wa-yehi] great success in all his ways¹⁶ — then, ‘And Saul eyed David’.¹⁷ And it came to pass when the king dwelt in his house¹⁸ — then, ‘Nevertheless thou shalt not build the house’.¹⁹ But is it not written, — And it came to pass on the eighth day,²⁰ and it has been taught, ‘On that day there was joy before the Holy One, blessed be He, as on the day when heaven and earth were created. For it is written, And it came to pass [wa-yehi] on the eighth day, and it is written in the other place, And there was [wa-yehi] one day’?²¹ Nadab and Abihu died on that day. But is it not written, And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year,²² And it came to pass when Jacob saw Rachel,²³ and it is also written, And there there was evening and there was morning one day, and there is the second day and the third, and there are many other cases? — R. Ashi replied: The fact is that ‘wa-yehi’ sometimes has this signification and sometimes not, but the expression ‘and it came to pass in the days of’ always indicated trouble. Five times we find the expression ‘and it came to pass in the days of’; viz., ‘And it came to pass in the days when the Judges judged’, ‘and it came to pass in the days of Amrafel’, ‘and it came to pass in the days of Ahaz’,²⁴ ‘and it came to pass in the days of Jehoiakim’.²⁵

R. Levi further said: The following is a tradition that we have from our ancestors, that Amoz²⁶ and Amaziah²⁷ were brothers. What does this tell us?²⁸ — It confirms what was said by R. Samuel b. Nahmani in the name of R. Jonathan: Every bride who is modest in the house of her father-in-law is rewarded by having kings and prophets among her descendants. How do we prove this? From Tamar, as it is written, And Judah saw her and thought her to be a harlot; for she had covered her face.²⁹ Now because she had covered her face did he think her to be a harlot? Rather, what it means is that because she had covered her face in the house of her father-in-law and he did not know her, she was rewarded by having among her descendants kings and prophets; kings from David, and prophets — as R. Levi said, ‘It is a tradition handed down to us from our ancestors that Amoz and Amaziah were brothers’, and it is written, The vision of Isaiah son of Amoz.³⁰

R. Levi further said: We have a tradition from our ancestors that the ark took up no room.³¹ It has been taught to the same effect: ‘The ark which Moses made had round it an [empty] space of ten cubits on every side’. Now it is written, And in front of the Sanctuary was twenty cubits in length [and twenty cubits in breadth],³² and it is also written, And the wing of the one cherub was ten cubits and the wing of the other cherub was ten cubits.³³ Where then was the ark itself? We must therefore conclude that it stood by a miracle [without occupying any room].³⁴

R. Jonathan prefaced his discourse on this section³⁵ with the text,³⁶ And I will rise against them, saith the Lord, and cut off from Babylon name and remnant’, and offshoot and offspring, saith the Lord,³⁷ [which he expounded as follows]: ‘Name’ means script; ‘remnant is language,’³⁸ ‘offshoot’ is kingdom, and ‘offspring’ is Vashti.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: Instead of the thorn shall come up the cypress, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle:³⁹ ‘Instead of the thorn’: instead of the wicked Haman who put himself up as an object of worship, as it is written, and upon all thorns and upon all brambles⁴⁰ ‘shall come up the cypress’: this is Mordecai who was called the chief of all spices, as it is said, And do thou take to thee the chief spices, flowing myrrh,⁴¹ which [last words] we translate [in Aramaic], mar deki.⁴² ‘Instead of the brier’: instead of the wicked Vashti, the daughter of the wicked Nebuchadnezzar who burnt the ceiling of the house of the Lord; as it is written, its top was gold,⁴³ ‘the myrtle shall come up’: this is the virtuous Esther who is called Hadassah,⁴⁴ as it is said, And he brought up Hadassah.⁴⁵ ‘And it shall be to the Lord for a name’: this is the reading of the Megillah; ‘and for an everlasting sign which shall not be cut off’: these are the days of Purim.

R. Joshua b. Levi introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: And it shall come to pass that as the Lord rejoiced over you to do you good, so the Lord will rejoice over you to cause you to perish.⁴⁶ Now does the Holy One, blessed be He, rejoice in the downfall of the wicked? Is it not written, as they went out before the army, and say, Give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth for ever’,⁴⁷ and R. Johanan said, Why are the words ‘for he is good’ omitted from this thanksgiving? Because the Holy One, blessed be He, does not rejoice in the downfall of the wicked? And R. Johanan further said, What is the meaning of the verse, And one came not near the other all the night?⁴⁸ The ministering angels wanted to chant their hymns, but the Holy One, blessed be He, said, The work of my hands is being drowned in the sea, and shall you chant hymns? — R. Eleazar replied: He himself does not rejoice, but he makes others rejoice. This is indicated also by the text, which writes yasis and not yasus,⁴⁹ which proves [what we said].

R. Abba b. Kahana introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: For to the man that is good in his sight he giveth wisdom, and knowledge and joy.⁵⁰ This, he said, is the righteous Mordecai. But to the sinner He giveth the task, to gather and to heap up;⁵⁰ this is Haman. That he may leave it to him, that is good in the sight of God,⁵⁰ this refers to Mordecai and Esther, as it is written, And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.⁵¹

Rabbah b. ‘Ofra introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: And I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy from thence king and princes.⁵² ‘King’ indicates Vashti, and ‘princes’ indicates Haman and his ten sons.

R. Dimi b. Isaac introduced his discourse on this section with the following text:

- (1) As it says presently, that all which are traditionally known to have been walled are sanctified.
 - (2) Of sending out a leper and reading the Megillah on the fifteenth and restoring a house to a vendor at the end of a year.
 - (3) Lev. XXV, 31. The kere means which has a wall’ and the kethib ‘which has no wall’, and R. Eleazar combines both meanings, he being of the opinion that the first holiness is retained for all times, in contradistinction to R.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 11a

For we are bondmen; yet hath God not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia.¹ When was this? In the time of Haman. R. Hanina b. Papa introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads, we went through fire and through water:² through fire in the days of the wicked Nebuchadnezzar, and through water in the days of Pharaoh. But thou didst bring us out into abundance,² in the days of Haman.

R. Johanan introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: He hath remembered his mercy and his faithfulness to the house of Israel, all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our Lord.³ When did all the ends of the earth see the salvation of our Lord? In the days of Mordecai and Esther.⁴

Resh Lakish introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: As a roaring lion and a ravenous bear, so is a wicked ruler over a poor people.⁵ 'A roaring lion': this is the wicked Nebuchadnezzar, of whom it is written, A lion is gone up from his thicket.⁶ 'A ravenous bear': this is Ahasuerus, of whom it is written, And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear',⁷ and R. Joseph learnt: These are the Persians, who eat and drink like bears, and are coated with flesh like bears, and are hairy like bears, and can never keep still like bears.⁸ 'A wicked ruler': this is Haman. 'Over a poor people': this is Israel, who are poor in [the observance of] precepts.

R. Eleazar introduced his discourse on this with the following text: By slothfulness he that lays beams⁹ becomes poor [yimak], and through idleness of the hands the house leaketh.¹⁰ Through the slothfulness in which Israel indulged, not busying themselves with the Torah, the enemy of¹¹ the Holy One, blessed be He, became poor. The meaning of 'mak' is poor, as it says, And if he is too mak for thy valuation,¹² and mekoreh means only the Holy One, blessed be He, as it says, Who layest the beams [ha-mekareh] of thy upper chambers in the waters.¹³

R. Nahman b. Isaac introduced his discourse on this section with the following text: A Song of Ascents: If it had not been for the Lord who was for us, let Israel now say If it had not been the Lord who was for us when a man¹⁴ rose up against us¹⁵ — 'a man' and not a king.¹⁶

Raba introduced his discourse on this section from here: When the righteous are increased the people rejoice, but when the wicked beareth rule the people sigh.¹⁷ 'When the righteous are increased the people rejoice' — this is illustrated by Mordecai and Esther, as it is written, and the city of Shushan shouted and was glad.¹⁸ 'But when the wicked beareth rule the people sigh' —

this is illustrated by Haman, as it is written, but the city of Shushan was perplexed.¹⁹ R. Mattenah made his introduction²⁰ from this verse: For what great nation is there that hath God so nigh to them.²¹ R. Ashi made it from this verse: Or hath God assayed etc.²²

And it came to pass [wa-yehi] in the days of Ahasuerus²³ etc. Rab said, [The word wa-yehi is equivalent to] ‘wai and hi’ [woe and mourning]. With reference to this it is written, and there ye shall sell yourselves unto your enemies for bondmen and for bondwomen, and no man shall buy you.²⁴

Samuel quoted: I did not reject them, neither did I abhor them to destroy them utterly.²⁵ ‘I did not reject them’ in the days of the Greeks; ‘neither did I abhor them’ — in the days of Nebuchadnezzar;²⁶ ‘to destroy them utterly’ — in the days of Haman; ‘and to break my covenant with them’ — in the days of the Persians;²⁷ ‘for I am the Lord their God’ — in the days of Gog and Magog.²⁸ In a Baraitha It was taught: ‘I have not rejected them’ — in the days of the Chaldeans, when I raised up for them Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah; ‘neither did I abhor them’ — in the days of the Greeks, when I raised up for them Simeon the Righteous and Hasmonai and his sons, and Mattathias the High Priest;²⁹ ‘to destroy them utterly’ — in the days of Haman, when I raised up for them Mordecai and Esther; ‘to break my covenant with them’ — in the days of the Persians,³⁰ when I raised up for them the members of the house of Rabbi and the Sages of the various generations. ‘For I am the Lord their God’ — in the time to come, when no nation or people³¹ will be able to subject them.

R. Levi introduced [his discourse] from this verse: But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land before you.³² R. Hiyya introduced [his discourse] from this verse: And it shall come to pass that as I thought to do unto them, so will I do unto you.³³

Ahasuerus: Rab said: He was [as his name implies], the brother of the head³⁴ and the counterpart of the head — ‘The brother of the head’: the brother of Nebuchadnezzar the wicked who was called head, as it is written, Thou art the head of gold.³⁵ ‘The counterpart of the head’: the one slew, the other sought to slay; the one laid waste, the other sought to lay waste, as it is written, And in the reign of Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.³⁶ Samuel said that [as his name indicates], the face of Israel was blackened³⁷ in his days like the sides of a pot. R. Johanan said that [his name indicates that] everyone who thought of him said ‘alas for my head’.³⁸ R. Hanina said, [it indicates that] all became poor³⁹ in his days, as it says, And the king Ahasuerus laid a tribute.⁴⁰

That [hu] is Ahasuerus. — [this means that] he persisted in his wickedness from beginning to end — [Similarly] this is [hu] Esau:⁴¹ the same in his wickedness from beginning to end. [Similarly], These are that [hu] Dathan and Abiram:⁴² the same in their wickedness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], this same [hu] king Ahaz:⁴³ the same in his wickedness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], Abram, the same [hu] is Abraham:⁴⁴ the same in his righteousness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], These are that [hu] Aaron and Moses:⁴⁵ the same in their righteousness from the beginning to the end. [Similarly], And David, he was [hu] the smallest;⁴⁶ he persisted in his humility⁴⁷ from the beginning to the end; just as in his youth he humbled himself before anyone who was his superior in Torah, so in his kingship he humbled himself before anyone who was his superior in wisdom.

Who reigned: Rab said: this indicates that he raised himself to the throne.⁴⁸ Some interpret this to his credit, and some to his discredit. Some interpret it to his credit, holding that there was no other man equally fitted for the throne. Others interpret it to his discredit, holding that he was not fitted for the throne, but that he was very wealthy, and by means of lavish distribution of money rose to the throne.

From Hodu to Cush.⁴⁹ Rab and Samuel gave different interpretations of this. One said that Hodu is at one end of the world and Cush at the other, and the other said that Hodu and Cush adjoin one another, and that [the meaning is that] as he ruled over Hodu and Cush, so he ruled from one end of the world to the other. A similar difference occurs with reference to the words, For he had dominion over all the region on this side of the River, from Tiphshah even unto Gaza.⁵⁰ Here again Rab and Samuel interpreted differently. One said that Tiphshah is at one end of the world and Gaza at the other, and the other said that Tiphshah and Gaza are near one another [and that what is meant is that] as he [Solomon] ruled over Tiphshah and over Gaza, so he ruled over the whole world.⁵¹ Seven and twenty and a hundred provinces. R. Hisda said: At first he ruled over seven, then over twenty [more], and finally over a hundred [more]. But if you interpret thus, what of the verse, And the years of the life of Amram were seven and thirty and a hundred years?⁵² What lesson will you derive from that? — There is a difference here, because the whole text is superfluous. See now: it is written, from Hodu to Cush. Why then do I require, seven and twenty and a hundred provinces? You must conclude that it is for a special lesson .

Our Rabbis taught: Three [potentates] ruled over the whole globe,⁵³ namely, Ahab, Ahasuerus and Nebuchadnezzar.⁵⁴ Ahab, as it is written, As the Lord thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee etc.⁵⁵ Now if he was not king over them, how could he make them take an oath? Nebuchadnezzar, as it is written: And it shall come to pass that the nation and the kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon and will not put their neck under the yoke of the King of Babylon.⁵⁶ Ahasuerus, as we have pointed out above

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 11b

(Mnemonic: Sh'S'D'K')¹ But are there no more? Is there not Solomon? — He did not retain his kingdom [till his death]. This is a sufficient answer for the one who holds that he was first a king and then a subject.² But for the one who holds that he was first a king, then a subject, and then a king again, what can we reply? — Solomon was in a different category, because he ruled over the denizens of the upper world³ as well as of the lower, as it says, And Solomon sat upon the throne of the Lord.⁴

But was there not Sennacherib, as it is written, Who are they among all the gods of these countries that have delivered their country out of my hand.⁵ — There was Jerusalem which he had not subdued.

But was there not Darius, as it is written, Then king Darius wrote unto all the peoples, nations and languages that dwell in all the earth, Peace be multiplied unto you?⁶ — There were the seven over which he did not rule, as it is written, It pleased Darius to set over the kingdom a hundred and twenty satraps.⁷ But there was Cyrus, of whom it is written, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdom of the earth hath the Lord given me?⁸ — There he was merely indulging in a boast.

In those days, when the king sat [on his throne].⁹ [How can this be] seeing that it says just afterwards, in the third year of his reign? — Raba said: What is meant by 'when he sat'? After he began to feel secure. He reasoned thus: 'Belshazar calculated and made a mistake; I have calculated and made no mistake' — What is the meaning of this? — It is written, After seventy years are accomplished for Babylon I will remember you,¹⁰ and it is written, That He would accomplish for the desolations of Jerusalem seventy years.¹¹ He reckoned forty-five years of Nebuchadnezzar and twenty-three of Evilmerodach and two of his own, making seventy in all. He then brought out the vessels of the Temple and used them. And how do we know that Nebuchadnezzar reigned forty-five years? — As a Master has said: 'They went into exile in the seventh year and they went into exile in the eighth year; they went into exile in the eighteenth year and they went into exile in the nineteenth year' — [That is to say], in the seventh year after the subjection of Jehoiakim¹² they underwent the exile of Jeconiah, this being the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar.¹³ In the eighteenth year from the subjection of Jehoiakim¹⁴ they underwent the exile of Zedekiah, this being the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar,¹⁵ as a Master has said, In the first year [of his reign] he [Nebuchadnezzar] overthrew Nineveh; in the second year he conquered Jehoiakim¹⁶ and it is written, And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month in the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evilmerodach King of Babylon, in the year of his reign, lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah and brought him forth out of prison.¹⁷ Eight and thirty-seven make forty-five of Nebuchadnezzar. The twenty-three of Evilmerodach we know from tradition. These with two of his own¹⁸ make seventy. He [Belshazar] said to himself, Now of a surety they will not be redeemed. So he brought out the vessels of the Temple and used them. Hence it was that Daniel said to him, but thou hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven, and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee.¹⁹ It is further written, In that night Belshazar the Chaldean king was slain,²⁰ and it is written, And Darius the Mede received the kingdom, being about threescore and two years old.²¹ He [Ahasuerus] said: He calculated and made a mistake,²² I will calculate and make no mistake. Is it written, ‘seventy years for the kingdom of Babylon?’²³ It is written, seventy years for Babylon. What is meant by Babylon? The exile of Babylon — How many years [is this reckoning] less [than the other]? Eight.²⁴ So in place of them he inserted one of Belshazar,²⁵ five of Darius and Cyrus,²⁶ and two of his own, which made seventy — When he saw that seventy had been completed and they were not redeemed, he brought out the vessels of the Temple and used them — Then the Satan came and danced among them and slew Vashti.

But he reckoned correctly? — He also made a mistake, since he ought to have reckoned from the destruction of Jerusalem.²⁷ Granted all this, how many years are short? Eleven. How long did he reign? Fourteen.²⁸ Consequently in the fourteenth year of his reign he ought to have rebuilt the Temple. Why then is it written, Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem?²⁹ — Raba replied: The years were not full ones.³⁰

It has been taught to the same effect: There was yet another year left to Babylon,¹ and Darius arose and completed it.

Raba said: Daniel also made a mistake in this calculation, as it is written, In the first year of his reign, I Daniel meditated in the books [etc.].² From his use of the words 'I meditated' we can infer that he [at first] made a mistake.

All the same, there is a contradiction between the texts [is there not]? It is written [in one], when there are accomplished for Babylon,³ and it is written [in the other], for the desolations of Jerusalem? — Raba replied: [The first term] was for visitation [pekidah] only, and this was fulfilled, as it is written, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of the earth hath the Lord, the God of the heavens, given to me, and he hath charged [pakad] me to build him a house in Jerusalem.⁴

R. Nahman son of R. Hisda gave the following exposition. What is the meaning of the verse, Thus saith the Lord to his anointed to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden.⁵ Now was Cyrus the Messiah? Rather what it means is: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to the Messiah: I have a complaint on thy behalf against Cyrus.⁶ I said, He shall build my house and gather my exiles,⁷ and he [merely] said, Whosoever there is among you of all his people, let him go up.

The army of Persia and Media, the nobles. And elsewhere it is written, [The chronicles] of the kings of Media and Persia.⁸ [How is this]? — Raba replied: They [the Medes and Persians] made a stipulation with one another, saying, if we supply the kings, you will supply the Governors, and if you supply the kings we will supply the Governors.

When he showed the riches of his glorious [tifereth] kingdom. R. Jose b. Hanina said: This shows that he arrayed himself in priestly robes. It is written here, 'the riches of his glorious [tifereth] kingdom', and it is written elsewhere [in connection with the priestly garments], for splendour and for glory, [tifereth].⁹

And when these days were fulfilled.¹⁰ Rab and Samuel interpreted this differently. One said he was a clever king, and the other said that he was a foolish king. The one who held he was a clever king said that he did well in entertaining¹¹ his distant subjects first, because he could win over the inhabitants of his own city any time he wished. The one who held that he was foolish says that he ought to have entertained the inhabitants of his metropolis first, so that if the others rebelled against him, these would have supported him.

R. Simon b. Yohai was asked by his disciples, Why were the enemies of Israel¹² in that generation deserving of extermination? He said to them: Do you answer. They said: Because they partook of the feast of that wicked one.¹³ [He said to them]: If so, those in Susa should have been killed, not those in other parts?¹⁴ They then said, Give your answer. He said to them: It was because they bowed down to the image.¹⁵ They said to him, Did God then show them favouritism?¹⁶ He replied: They only pretended to worship,¹⁷ and He also only pretended to exterminate them; and so it is written, For he afflicted not from his heart.¹⁸ In the court of the garden of the king's palace.¹⁹ Rab and Samuel gave different interpretations of this — One said that those who had the entree²⁰ of the court were [entertained] in the court, and those who had the entree of the garden in the garden, and those who had the entree of the palace in the palace. The other said: He first put them in the court, and it did not hold them — Then he took them into the garden and it did not hold them; and finally he had to take them into the palace, and he found room for them. In a Baraitha it was taught: He took them into the court and opened two doors for them, one into the garden and one into the palace.

White [hur], fine cotton [karpas] and blue.²¹ What is hur? — Rab said, fine lace-work. Samuel said: He spread for them, carpets of white silk. Karpas: R. Jose b. Haninah said: [this means] cushions of velvet.²²

Upon silver rods and pillars of marble; the couches were of gold and silver.²¹ It has been taught: R. Judah said: Silver for some and gold for others, according to their degree. Said R. Nehemiah to him: If that were so, there would have been²³ jealousy at the banquet! No; the couches themselves were of silver and their feet of gold.

Green [bahat] and white marble.²¹ R. Assi said: [This means] stones that flash back at their owner,²⁴ and so it says, as the stones of a crown, glittering over his land.²⁵

And shell [dar] and onyx marble [sohareth].²¹ Rab said: This means rows [dari] upon rows.²⁶ Samuel says: There is a precious stone in the seaports called darah. He put it in the midst of the guests, and it lit up the place as at midday [Sahara].²⁷ In the school of R. Ishmael it was taught: It means that he gave a remission of taxes [deror] to all who dealt in merchandise [sehorah].

And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, the vessels being diverse [shonim] one from another.²⁸ It should have said, in different vessels? — Raba said: A bath kol²⁹ went forth and said to them, Your predecessors³⁰ met their end on account of vessels, and yet you use them again [shonim]?³¹

And royal wine in abundance:²⁸ Rab said: This teaches that each one was given to drink wine older³² than himself.

And the drinking was according to law.³³ What is meant by ‘according to law’? — R. Hanan said in the name of R. Meir: According to the law of the Torah. Just as according to the law of the Torah the [quantity of] food exceeds the drink,³⁴ so in the feast of that wicked one there was more food than drink.

None did compel.³³ R. Eleazar said: This teaches that each one was given to drink from the wine of his own country.³⁵

That they should do according to every man's [ish, ish] pleasure.³³ Raba said: This means that they should do according to the will of Mordecai and Haman.³⁶ Mordecai [is called ‘man’] as it is written, A Jewish man;³⁷ and Haman, [as it is written], a man, an adversary and an enemy.³⁸

Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house.³⁹ It should have said, ‘the women's house’? — Raba said: Both of them [Ahasuerus and Vashti] had an immoral purpose. This bears out the popular saying, He with large pumpkins and his wife with small pumpkins.

On the seventh day, where the king's heart was merry with wine.¹ Was then his heart not merry with wine until then? — Rab said: The seventh day was Sabbath, when Israel eat and drink. They begin with discourse on the Torah and with words of thanksgiving [to God]. But the nations of the world, the idolaters, when they eat and drink only begin with words of frivolity. And so at the feast of that wicked one. Some said, The Median women are the most beautiful, and others said, The Persian women are the most beautiful. Said Ahasuerus to them, The vessel that I use is neither Median nor Persian, but Chaldean. Would you like to see her? They said, Yes, but it must be naked — (For man receives measure for measure.² This [remark] teaches you that the wicked Vashti used to take the daughters of Israel and strip them naked and make them work on Sabbath.³ So it is written, After these things when the wrath of the king Ahasuerus abated, he remembered Vashti and what she had done and what was decided against her.⁴ As she had done so it was decreed against her.)

And the queen Vashti refused.⁵ Let us see. She was immodest, as the Master said above, that both of them had an immoral purpose. Why then would she not come? — R. Jose b. Hanina said: This teaches that leprosy broke out on her. In a Baraita it was taught that Gabriel came and fixed a tail on her.⁶

And the king was very angry,⁵ Why was he so enraged? — Raba said: She sent him back answer: Thou son of my father's steward,⁷ my father drank wine in the presence of a thousand,⁸ and did not get drunk, and that man has become senseless with his wine. Straightway, his wrath burnt within him.⁵

And the king said to the wise men.⁹ Who are the wise men? — The Rabbis. Who knew the times:⁹ that is, who knew how to intercalate years and fix new moons. He said to them: Try her for me. They said [to themselves]: What shall we do? If we tell him to put her to death, to-morrow he will become sober¹⁰ again and he will require her from us. Shall we tell him to let her go? She will lose all her respect for royalty. So they said to him: From the day when the Temple was destroyed and we were exiled from our land, counsel has been taken from us and we do not know how to judge capital cases. Go to Ammon and Moab¹¹ who have remained in their places like wine that has settled on its lees. They spoke to him thus with good reason, since it is written, Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity. Therefore his taste remaineth in him, and his scent is not changed.¹² Straightway [he did so, as we read], and the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish [etc.].¹³ R. Levi said: Every name in this verse contains a reference to the sacrifices. Thus, Carshena: the ministering angels said to the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, did they ever offer before thee lambs of the first year [karim bene shanah] as Israel offered before Thee? Shethar: did they ever offer before Thee two pigeons [shte torim]? Admatha: did they ever build before Thee an altar of earth [adamah]? Tarshish: did they ever minister before Thee in the priestly garments, of which it is written [that they contained] a beryl [tarshish], an onyx and a jasper?¹⁴ Meres: did they ever stir [mersu] the blood [of the sacrifice] before Thee? Marsena: did they ever stir [mersu] the meal-offerings before Thee? Memucan: did they ever prepare [hekinu] a table before Thee?

And Memucan said.¹⁵ A Tanna taught: Memucan is the same as Haman, And why was he called Memucan? Because he was destined [mukan] for punishment. R. Kahana said: From here we see that an ordinary man always pushes¹⁶ himself in front.¹⁷

That every man should bear rule in his house.¹⁸ Raba said: Had it not been for these first letters, there would have been left no shred or remnant of the enemies of Israel.¹⁹ People said: What does he mean by sending us word that every man should bear rule in his own house? Of course he should! Even a weaver in his own house must be commander!²⁰

And let the king appoint officers.²¹ Rabbi said: What is the meaning of the verse, Even prudent man dealeth with forethought, but a fool unfoldeth folly?²² ‘Every prudent man dealeth with forethought’: this applies to David, of whom, it is written, Wherefore his servants said unto him, Let there be sought for my lord the king a young virgin:²³ every one who had a daughter brought her.²⁴ But a fool unfoldeth folly’: this applies to Ahasuerus, of whom it is written, and let the king appoint officers: whoever had a daughter hid her.²⁵

There was a certain Jew in Shushan the castle, etc. a Benjamite.²⁶ What is the point of this verse? If it is to give the pedigree of Mordecai, it should trace it right back to Benjamin!²⁷ [Why then were only these specified?] — A Tanna taught: All of them are designations [of Mordecai]. ‘The son of Jair’ means, the son who enlightened [he’ir] the eyes of Israel by his prayer. ‘The son of Shimei means, the son to whose prayer God hearkened [shama’]. ‘The son of Kish’ indicates that he knocked [hikkish] at the gates of mercy and they were opened to him. He is called ‘a Jew’ [yehudi] which implies that he came from [the tribe of] Judah, and he is called ‘a Benjamite’, which implies that he came from Benjamin. [How is this]? — R. Nahman said: He was a man of distinguished character.²⁸ Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: His father was from Benjamin and his mother from Judah. The Rabbis, however, said: The tribes competed with one another [for him]. The tribe of Judah said: I am responsible for the birth of Mordecai, because David did not kill Shimei the son of Gera, and the tribe of Benjamin said: He is actually descended from me. Raba said: The community of Israel explained [the two designations] in the opposite²⁹ sense: 'See what a Judean did to me and how a Benjamite repaid me!' What a Judean did to me viz., that David did not kill Shimei from whom was descended Mordecai who provoked Haman.

‘And how a Benjamite repaid me’, viz., that Saul did not slay Agag from whom was descended Haman who oppressed Israel. R. Johanan said: He did indeed come from Benjamin. Why then was he called ‘a Jew’? Because he repudiated idolatry. For anyone who repudiates idolatry is called ‘a Jew’, as it is written, There are certain Jews¹ etc.

R. Simon b. Pazzi once introduced an exposition of the Book of Chronicles as follows: ‘All thy words are one,² and we know how to find their inner meaning’. [It is written], And his wife the Jewess bore Jered the father of Gedor, and Heber the father of Socho, and Jekuthiel the father of Zanoah, and these are the sons of Bithya the daughter of Pharaoh, whom Mered took.³ Why was she [the daughter of Pharaoh] called a Jewess? Because she repudiated idolatry, as it is written, And the daughter of Pharaoh went down to bathe in the river,⁴ and R. Johanan, [commenting on this,] said that she went down to cleanse herself⁵ from the idols of her father's house. ‘Bore’: But she only brought him [Moses] up? — This tells us that if anyone brings up an orphan boy or girl in his house, the Scripture accounts it as if he had begotten him. ‘Jered’: this is Moses. Why was he called Jered? Because manna came down [yarad] for Israel in his days.⁶ ‘Gedor’: [he was so called] because he fenced in [gadar] the breaches of Israel. ‘Heber’, because he joined [hiber] Israel to their Father in heaven. ‘Socho’, because he was like a sheltering booth [sukkah] for Israel. ‘Jekuthiel’, because Israel trusted in God [kiwu le'el] in his days. ‘Zanoah’, because he made Israel abandon [hizniah] their iniquities. ‘Father of’, ‘father of’, ‘father of’: he was a father in Torah, a father in wisdom, a father in prophecy. ‘These are the sons of Bithya whom Mered took’. Was Mered his name? Was not Caleb his name?⁷ — The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let Caleb who rebelled [marad] against the plan of the spies come and take the daughter of Pharaoh who rebelled against the idols of her father's house.

Who had been carried away from Jerusalem.⁸ Raba said: [We understand this to mean] that he went into exile of his own accord.⁹

And he brought up Hadassah.¹⁰ She is called Hadassah¹¹ and she is called Esther. It has been taught: Esther was her proper name. Why then was she called Hadassah? After the designation of the righteous who are called myrtles,¹² for so it says, And he stood among the myrtle trees.¹³ R. Judah says: Hadassah was her name — Why then was she called Esther? Because she concealed [mastereth] the facts about herself, as it says, Ester did not make known her people or her kindred.¹⁴ R. Nehemiah says: Hadassah was her name. Why then was she called Esther? All peoples called her so after Istahar.¹⁵ Ben ‘Azzai said: Esther was neither too tall nor too short, but of medium size, like a myrtle. R. Joshua b. Korha said: Esther was sallow,¹⁶ but endowed with great charm.¹⁷

For she had neither father nor mother. [And it continues] and when her father and mother died.¹⁰ Why these last words?¹⁸ — R. Aha said: When her mother became pregnant with her, her father died; when she was born, her mother died.

And when her father and mother died, Mordecai took her for his own daughter.¹⁹ A Tanna taught in the name of R. Meir: Read not ‘for a daughter’ [le-bath], but ‘for a house’ [le-bayith].²⁰ Similarly it says: But the poor man had nothing save one little ewe lamb, which he had brought up and reared; and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own morsel, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.²¹ Because it lay in his bosom, was it like a daughter to him? Rather what it means is like a wife; so here, it means a wife.

And the seven maidens who were meet to be given to her.²² Raba said: [They were seven so that] she could count the days of the week by them.

And he changed²³ her and her maidens. Rab said: [This means that] he gave her Jewish food to eat. Samuel, however, said, it means that he gave her chine of pork²⁴ while R. Johanan said that he gave her pulse, and so it says, So the steward took away their food and gave them pulse.²⁵

Six months with the oil of myrrh.²⁶ What is the oil of myrrh? R. Hiyya b. Abba said, Satchet;²⁷ R. Huna said, Oil from olives not a third grown. It has been taught: R. Judah says that anpikinun²⁸ is oil of olives not a third grown. Why is it used for smearing? Because it removes hair and makes the skin soft.

In the evening she went and on the morrow she returned.²⁹ From the discreditable account of that wicked man we can learn something to his credit, namely, that he did not perform his marital office by day.

And Esther obtained favour.³⁰ R. Eleazar said: This informs us that every man took her for a member of his own people.

So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth:³¹ the month when body warms up body.³² And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and favour in his sight more than all the virgins.³³ Rab said: If he wanted to find in her the taste of a virgin he found it; if the taste of a married woman, he found it.

Then the king made a great feast.³⁴ He made a feast for her, and she did not tell him [who she was]. He remitted taxes,³⁵ and she did not tell him. He sent gifts,³⁶ and she [still] did not tell him.

And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, etc.³⁷ He went and took counsel of Mordecai who said, The way to rouse a woman is to make her jealous;³⁸ and even so she did not tell.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 13b

He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous?¹ In reward for the modesty displayed by Rachel, she was granted to number among her descendants Saul; and in reward for the modesty displayed by Saul, he was granted to number among his descendants Esther.² What was the modesty displayed by Rachel? — As it is written: And Jacob told Rachel that he was her father's brother.³ Now was he her father's brother? Was he not the son of her father's sister? What it means is this: He said to her, Will you marry me? She replied, Yes, but my father is a trickster, and he will outwit you.⁴ He replied, I am his brother in trickery. She said to him, Is it permitted to the righteous to indulge in trickery? He replied. Yes: with the pure thou dost show thyself pure and with the crooked thou dost show thyself subtle.⁵ He said to her, What is his trickery? She replied :

I have a sister older than I am, and he will not let me marry before her. So he gave her certain tokens. When night came, she said to herself, Now my sister will be put to shame. So she handed over the tokens to her. So it is written, And it came to pass in the morning that, behold, it was Leah.⁶ Are we to infer from this that up to now she was not Leah? What it means is that on account of the tokens which Rachel gave to Leah he did not know till then. Therefore she was rewarded by having Saul among her descendants — What modesty did Saul display? — As it is written, But concerning the matter of the kingdom whereof Samuel spoke he told him not.⁷ He was therefore rewarded by having Esther among his descendants.

R. Eleazar further said: When the Holy One, blessed be He, assigns greatness to a man, he assigns it to his sons and his sons' sons for all generations, as it says, [With kings on the throne:] He setteth them for ever and they are exalted.⁸ If, however, he becomes arrogant, God humiliates him, as it says. And if they be bound in fetters etc.⁹

For Esther did the commandment of Mordecai.¹⁰ R. Jeremiah said: [This means] that she used to show the blood of her impurity to the Sages.

Like as when she was brought up with him.¹⁰ Rabbah b. Lema said in the name of Rab: [This means] that she used to rise from the lap of Ahasuerus and bathe and sit in the lap of Mordecai.¹¹

In those days, while Mordecai sat in the king's gate, Bigthan and Teresh were wroth.¹² R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: The Holy One, blessed be He, [once] caused a master to be wroth with his servants in order to fulfil the desire of a righteous man, namely Joseph, as it says, And there was with us there a young man, a Hebrew, etc.;¹³ and servants with their master in order to perform a miracle for a righteous man, namely, Mordecai, as it is written, 'And the thing was known to Mordecai etc.' R. Johanan said: Bigthan and Teresh were two Tarseans¹⁴ and conversed in the Tarsean language. They said: From the day this woman came we have been able to get no sleep.¹⁵ Come, let us put poison in the dish so that he will die. They did not know that Mordecai was one of those who had seats in the Chamber of Hewn Stone,¹⁶ and that he understood seventy languages.¹⁷ Said the other to him, But are not my post and your post different?¹⁸ He replied: I will keep guard at my post and at yours. So it is written, And when inquisition was made, he was found,¹⁹ that is to say, they were not [both] found at their posts.

After these things.²⁰ After what? — Raba said: After God had created a healing for the blow [which was about to fall]. For Resh Lakish has said: The Holy One, blessed be He, does not smite Israel unless He has created for them a healing beforehand, as it says . When I have healed Israel, then is the iniquity of Ephraim uncovered.²¹ Not so, however, with the other nations: He smites them first, and then creates for them a healing, as it says: The Lord will smite Egypt, smiting and healing.²²

But it seemed contemptible in his eyes to lay hands on Mordecai alone.²³ At first he aimed at 'Mordecai alone', then at 'the people of Mordecai' — and who are these? The Rabbis; and finally at 'all the Jews'.

They cast pur, that is the lot.²⁴ A Tanna taught: When the lot fell on the month of Adar, he rejoiced greatly. saying, The lot has fallen for me on the month in which Moses died. He did not know, however, that Moses died on the seventh of Adar and was born on the sixth of Adar.

There is one people.²⁵ Raba said: There never was a traducer so skillful as Haman. He said to Ahasuerus, Come, let us destroy them. He replied: I am afraid of their God, lest He do to me as He did to my predecessors. He replied: They are 'negligent'²⁶ of the precepts. He said, There are Rabbis among them.²⁷ He replied. They are 'one people'.²⁸ Should you say that I will make a void²⁹ in your kingdom, [I reply], they are 'scattered abroad among the peoples'. Should you say. There is some profit in them, I reply, 'they are dispersed' [nifredu], like an isolated bough [peridah] that does not bear fruit. Should you say that they occupy one province, I reply, 'they are in all the provinces of thy kingdom'. 'Their laws are diverse from those of every other people': they do not eat of our food, nor do they marry our women nor give us theirs in marriage, 'Neither keep they the king's laws', since they evade taxes the whole year³⁰ by their loitering and sauntering.³¹ 'Therefore it profiteth not the king to suffer them', because they eat and drink and despise the throne. For if a fly falls into the cup of one of them, he throws it out and drinks the wine, but if my lord the king were to touch his cup, he would dash it on the ground and not drink from it. 'If it please the king, let it be written that they be destroyed, and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver': Resh Lakish said: It was well known beforehand to Him at whose word the world came into being that Haman would one day pay shekels for the destruction of Israel. Therefore He anticipated his shekels with those of Israel. And so we have learnt: 'On the first of Adar³² proclamation is made regarding the shekalim³³ and the mixed seeds'.³⁴

And the king said to Haman, The silver is given to thee and the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.³⁵ R. Abba said:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 14a

To what can we compare Ahasuerus and Haman at this point? To two men one of whom had a mound in the middle of his field and the other a ditch in the middle of his field. The owner of the ditch said, I wish I could buy that mound, and the owner of the mound said, I wish I could buy that ditch. One day they met, and the owner of the ditch said, Sell me your mound, whereupon the other replied, Take it for nothing, and I shall be only too glad.¹

And the king removed his ring.² R. Abba b. Kahana said: This removal of the ring was more efficacious than forty-eight prophets³ and seven prophetesses⁴ who prophesied to Israel; for all these were not able to turn Israel to better courses, and the removal of the ring did turn them to better courses.⁵

Our Rabbis taught: ‘Forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses prophesied to Israel, and they neither took away from nor added aught to what is written in the Torah save only the reading of the Megillah’. How did they derive it [from the Torah]? — R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Joshua b. Korha: If for being delivered from slavery to freedom we chant a hymn of praise, should we not do so all the more for being delivered from death to life? If that is the reason we should say Hallel⁶ also? — [We do not do so] because Hallel is not said for a miracle which occurred outside of the land of Israel. How then do we come to say it for the Exodus from Egypt which was a miracle which occurred outside the land of Israel? — As it has been taught: ‘Until they entered the land of Israel, all lands were counted as proper for chanting a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them] — After they had entered the land, other countries were not counted as proper for chanting a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them]. R. Nahman said: The reading of the Megillah is equivalent to Hallel. Raba said:⁷ There is a good reason in that case [of the Exodus from Egypt] because it says [in the Hallel], Praise ye O servants of the Lord, who are no longer servants of Pharaoh — But can we say in this case, Praise ye, servants of the Lord and not servants of Ahasuerus? We are still servants of Ahasuerus! Whether on the view of Raba⁸ or on the view of R. Nahman,⁹ there is a difficulty in what has been taught [above], that ‘after they had entered the land, other countries were not counted as proper for chanting a hymn of praise [for miracles done in them]’? — When the people went into exile, the other countries became proper as at first.

Were there no more prophets than these [forty-eight]? — Is it not written, How there was a man from Ramathaim-Zophim,¹⁰ [which we interpret], one of two hundred prophets [zophim]¹¹ who prophesied to Israel? — There were actually very many, as it has been taught, ‘Many prophets arose for Israel, double the number of [the Israelites] who came out of Egypt’, only the prophecy which contained a lesson for¹² future generations was written down, and that which did not contain such a lesson was not written.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: This [Ramathaim-Zophim] means, a man who came from two heights which faced one another.¹³ R. Hanin said: It means, a man who came from ancestors of the most exalted position.¹⁴ And who were they? The sons of Korah, as it says, And the sons of Korah did not die.¹⁵ A Tanna taught in the name of our Teacher:¹⁶ A special place was assigned¹⁷ to them in Gehinnom and they stood on it.

‘Seven prophetesses’. Who were these? — Sarah, Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, Abigail, Hulda and Esther. ‘Sarah’, as it is written, The father of Milkah and the father of Yiscah’,¹⁸ and R. Isaac said [on this]. Yiscah is Sarah; and why was she called Yiscah? Because she discerned [sakethah] by means of the holy spirit, as it is said, In all that Sarah saith unto thee, hearken to her voice.¹⁹ Another explanation is: because all gazed [sakin] at her beauty. ‘Miriam’, as it is written, And Miriam the prophetess the sister of Aaron.²⁰ Was she only the sister of Aaron and not the sister of Moses? — R. Nahman said in the name of Rab: [She was so called] because she prophesied when she was the sister of Aaron [only]²¹ and said, My mother is destined to bear a son who will save Israel. When he was born the whole house was filled with light, and her father arose and kissed her on the head, saying, My daughter, thy prophecy has been fulfilled. But when they threw him into the river her father arose and tapped her on the head, saying, Daughter, where is thy prophecy? So it is written, And his sister stood afar off to know;²² to know, [that is,] what would be with the latter part of her prophecy. ‘Deborah’, as it is written, Now Deborah a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth.²³ What is meant by a woman of flames²³ ? [She was so called] because she used to make wicks for the Sanctuary. And she sat under a palm tree²⁴ Why just a palm tree? — R. Simeon b. Abishalom said: [To avoid] privacy.²⁵ Another explanation is: Just as a palm tree has only one heart, so Israel in that generation had only one heart devoted to their Father in heaven. ‘Hannah’, as it is written, And Hannah prayed and said, My heart exulteth in the Lord, my horn is exalted in the Lord.²⁶ [She said], my horn is exalted’, and not, my cruse is exalted’, thus implying that the royalty of [the hour of] David and Solomon, who were anointed from a horn,²⁷ would be prolonged,²⁸ but the royalty of [the house of] Saul and Jehu,²⁹ who were anointed with a cruse, would not be prolonged.

There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beside thee.³⁰ R. Judah b. Menashia said: Read not bilteka, ‘beside thee’, but read lebalotheka [‘to survive thee’]. For the nature of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like that of flesh and blood. It is the nature of flesh and blood to be survived by its works, but God survives His works. Neither is there any rock [zur] like our God.³⁰

There is no artist [zayyar] like our God. A man draws a figure on a wall, but is unable to endow it with breath and spirit, inward parts and intestines. But the Holy One, blessed be He, fashions a form within a form and endows it with breath and spirit, inward parts and intestines.

‘Abigail’, as it is written, And it was so, as she rode on her ass and came down by the covert of the mountain.³¹ ‘By the covert [sether] of the mountain’? It should say from the mountain’! — Rabbah b. Samuel said: It means that she came with reference to blood that came from the hidden parts [setharim]. She brought some blood and showed it to him.³² He said to her: Is blood to be shown by night? She replied: Are capital cases tried at night?³³ He said to her:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 14b

He [Nabal] is a rebel against the king and no trial is necessary for him.¹ She replied; Saul is still alive, and your fame is not yet spread abroad in the world. Then he said to her: Blessed be thy discretion and blessed be thou, that hast kept me this day from bloodguiltiness.² The word damim [bloodguiltiness] is plural, to indicate two kinds of blood.³ The passage teaches that she bared her thigh⁴ and he went three parasangs by the light of it.⁵ He said, Listen to me. She replied, Let not this be a stumbling-block to thee.⁶ The word 'this' implies that something else would be, and what was that? The incident of Bathsheba; and so it was eventually.⁷ The soul of thy lord shall be bound up in the bundle of life.⁸ When she left him she said to him, and when the Lord shall have done good to my lord . . . then remember thy handmaid.⁹ R. Nahman said: This bears out the popular saying, While a woman talks she spins.¹⁰ Some adduce the saying: The goose stoops as it goes along, but its eyes peer afar.

'Hulda, as it is written, So Hilkiah the priest and Ahikam and Achbor etc.¹¹ But if Jeremiah was there,¹² how could she prophesy? — It was said in the school of Rab in the name of Rab: Hulda was a near relative of Jeremiah, and he did not object to her doing so. But how could Josiah himself pass over Jeremiah and send to her? — The members of the school of R. Shila replied, Because women are tender-hearted.¹³ R. Johanan said: Jeremiah was not there, as he had gone to bring back the ten tribes. Whence do we know that they returned? — Because it is written, For the seller shall not return to that which is sold.¹⁴ Now is it possible that after the Jubilee had ceased¹⁵ the prophet should prophesy that it will cease? The fact is that it teaches that Jeremiah brought them back.¹⁶ Josiah the son of Amon ruled over them, as it says, Then he said, What monument is that which I see? And the men of the city told him, It is the sepulchre of the man of God who came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar in Beth-el.¹⁷ Now what connection is there between Josiah and the altar in Bethel?¹⁸ What it teaches therefore is that Josiah reigned over them. R. Nahman said: We learn it from here: Also, O Judah, there is a harvest appointed for thee, when I would turn the captivity of my people.¹⁹

'Esther,' as it is written, Now it came to pass on the third day that Esther clothed herself in royalty.²⁰ Surely it should say, 'royal apparel'? What it shows is that the holy spirit clothed her. It is written here, 'and she clothed', and it is written in another place. Then the spirit clothed Amasai, etc.²¹

R. Nahman said: Haughtiness does not befit women. There were two haughty women, and their names are hateful, one being called a hornet²² and the other a weasel.²³ Of the hornet it is written, And she sent and called Barak,²⁴ instead of going to him. Of the weasel it is written, Say to the man,²⁵ instead of 'say to the king'.

R. Nahman said: Hulda was a descendant of Joshua. It is written here [in connection with Hulda]. The son of Harhas,²⁶ and it is written in another place [in connection with Joshua], In Timnath-Heres.²⁷ R. 'Ena Saba cited the following in objection to R. Nahman: 'Eight prophets who were also priests were descended from Rahab the harlot, namely, Neriah, Baruch, Serayah, Mahseyah, Jeremiah, Hilkiah, Hanamel and Shallum.' R. Judah says: Hulda the prophetess was also one of the descendants of Rahab the harlot. [We know this] because it is written here 'the son of Tikvah' and it is written elsewhere [in connection with Rahab]. 'the line [tikvath] of scarlet thread’!²⁸ — He replied: ‘Ena Saba’²⁹ — or, according to another report. ‘Black bowl’,³⁰ — the truth can be found by combining my statement and yours’.³¹ We must suppose that she became a proselyte and Joshua married her. But had Joshua any children? Is it not written, Nun his son, Joshua his son?³² — He had no sons, but he had daughters.

We admit that [some of] those [eight] mentioned above are expressly described [as prophets],¹ but how do we know that their fathers² [were prophets]? — From the dictum of ‘Ulla; for ‘Ulla said: Wherever a man's name is given along with that of his father as the author of a prophecy³ we know that he was a prophet son of a prophet. Where his own name is given but not that of his father, we know that he was a prophet but not the son of a prophet. Where his name and the name of his town are specified, we know that he came from that town — Where his name is given but not that of his town, we know that he was from Jerusalem — In a Baraita it was stated: If nothing is known about the character of a man or of his ancestors,⁴ and the Scripture mentions any one of them in connection with a praiseworthy action, as for instance, The word of the Lord which came to Zephaniah son of Cushi son of Gedaliah,⁵ we may know that he was a righteous man son of a righteous man; and wherever the Scripture mentions any one of them in connection with a reprehensible action, as for instance, And it came to pass in the seventh month that Ishmael the son...of Elishama came,⁶ we may know that he was a wicked man son of a wicked man.

R. Nahman⁷ said: Malachi is the same as Mordecai. Why was he called Malachi? Because he was next to the king.⁸ The following was cited in objection to this: 'Baruch the son of Neriah and Serayah the son of Mahseyah and Daniel and Mordecai, Bilshan, Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi all prophesied in the second year of Darius'! — This is a refutation.

It has been taught: R. Joshua b. Korha said: Malachi is the same as Ezra, and the Sages say that Malachi was his proper name. R. Nahman said: There is good ground for accepting the view that Malachi was the same as Ezra. For it is written in the prophecy of Malachi, Judah hath dealt treacherously and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem, for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord which he loveth and hath married the daughter of a strange God.⁹ And who was it that put away the strange women? Ezra, as it is written, And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam answered and said unto Ezra: We have broken faith with our God and have married foreign women.¹⁰

The Rabbis taught: There have been four women of surpassing beauty in the world — Sarah, Rahab, Abigail and Esther. According to the one who says that Esther was sallow,¹¹ Vashti should be inserted in place of Esther.

Our Rabbis taught: Rahab inspired lust by her name; Jael by her voice; Abigail by her memory; Mical daughter of Saul by her appearance. R. Isaac said: Whoever says. 'Rahab, Rahab', at once has an issue. Said R. Nahman to him: I say Rahab, Rahab, and nothing happens to me! He replied: I was speaking of one who knows her and is intimate with her.

Now when Mordecai knew all that was done¹² [etc.]. What [was his cry]? — Rab said: He said, 'Haman has raised himself above Ahasuerus'; Samuel said, 'The upper king has prevailed over the lower king'.¹³

And the queen was exceedingly pained [wa-tithhalhal],¹⁴ What is the meaning of wa-tithhalhal?¹⁵ — Rab said: It means that she became menstruous; R. Jeremiah said that her bowels were loosened.

And Esther called Hatach.¹⁶ Rab said: Hatach is the same as Daniel. Why was he called Hatach? Because he was degraded [hataku-hu] from his position.¹⁷ Samuel said, Because all affairs of state were decided [nehtakim] by his voice.

To know what this was and why this was.¹⁶ R. Isaac said: She sent to him saying. Perhaps Israel have transgressed the five books of the Torah, in which is written, On this side and on this they were written.¹⁸

And they told Mordecai Esther's words.¹⁹ But Hatach did not go to him on this occasion.²⁰ This shows us that a recalcitrant answer²¹ need not be taken back [by the messenger].²²

Go, gather together all the Jews . . . which is not according to the custom.²³ R. Abba said: It will not be [she said] according to the custom of every other day. Till now [I have associated with Ahasuerus] under compulsion, but now I will do so of my own will.

And if I perish, I perish.²³ As I am lost to my father's house so I shall be lost to thee.²⁴

And Mordecai passed [wa-ya'abor].²⁵ Rab said: This indicates that he made the first day of Passover pass²⁶ as a fast day. Samuel said: It indicates that he crossed a stream [on that day].²⁷ Now it came to pass on the third day that Esther put on royalty.²⁸ Surely it should say, 'royal apparel'? — R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: This tells us that the holy spirit clothed her. It is written here, 'and she put on', and it is written elsewhere, And a spirit clothed Amasai.²⁹

R. Eleazar b. Hanina also said: Let not the blessing of an ordinary man be lightly esteemed in thine eyes, for two men great in their generation received from ordinary men blessings which were fulfilled in them. They were, David and Daniel. David was blessed by Araunah, as it is written, And Araunah said unto the king, The Lord thy God accept thee.³⁰ Daniel was blessed by Darius, as it is written 'Thy God whom thou servest continually, He will deliver thee.'³¹ R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: Let not the curse of an ordinary man be lightly esteemed in thine eyes, because Abimelech cursed Sarah, saying, Behold he is to thee a covering of the eyes,³² and this was fulfilled in her seed, [as it says], And it came to pass that when Isaac was old his eyes were dim.³³

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: Come and observe that the way of the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like the way of flesh and blood — The way of flesh and blood is that a man places a pot on the fire and then pours water into it, but God first puts in the water and then fixes the pot, to fulfil what is written, At the sound of his giving a multitude of waters in the heavens.³⁴

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: Whoever reports a saying in the name of its originator brings deliverance to the world, as it says, And Esther told the king in the name of Mordecai.³⁵

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: When a righteous man dies, he dies only for his own generation.³⁶ It is with him as with a man who loses a pearl. Wherever it is, it remains a pearl,³⁷ and is lost only to its owner.

Yet all this availeth me nothing.³⁸ R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanina: Because he saw Mordecai sitting in the king's gate, was this any reason why he should say, 'All this availeth me nothing'? The explanation is in the dictum of R. Hisda; for R. Hisda said: The one came [to the court] as a counsellor³⁹ and the other as an envoy.¹ R. Papa said: They also called him, The slave that was sold for loaves of bread .²

Yet all this availeth me nought. This tells us that all the treasures of that wretch were engraved on his heart, and when he saw Mordecai sitting in the king's gate he said, Yet all this³ availeth me nought.

R. Eleazar further said in the name of R. Hanina: God will in the time to come be a crown on the head of every righteous man, as it is said, In that day shall the Lord of Hosts be for a crown of glory⁴ etc. What is meant by a 'crown of glory' [zebi] and a 'diadem [zefirath] of beauty'? For them that do his will [zibyono] and who await [mezapin] his glory. Shall He be so to all? [Not so]. since it says, 'unto the residue of [lish'ar] his people': that is, to whoever makes of himself a mere residue [shirayim]. 'And for a spirit of judgment': this indicates one who brings his inclination to trial.⁵ 'To him that sitteth in judgment': this indicates one who gives a true verdict on true evidence.⁶ 'And for strength': this indicates one who subdues his evil passions.⁷ 'That turn back the battle': this indicates those who thrust and parry⁸ in the war of the Torah. 'At the gate': these are the disciples of the wise who are early and late in synagogues and houses of study. Said the Attribute of Justice⁹ before the Holy One, blessed be He: Why this difference between these and the others? The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: Israel busy themselves with the Torah, the other nations do not busy themselves with the Torah — He replied to Him, But these also reel through wine, and stagger through strong drink, they totter in judgment¹⁰ [paku peliliyah]; and 'paku' contains a reference to Gehinnom, as it says, that this shall be no stumbling-block [pukah] to thee;¹¹ and 'peliliyah' contains a reference to the judges, as it says. and he shall pay as the judges determine [bi-felilim].¹²

And stood in the inner court of the king's house.¹³ R. Levi said: When she reached the chamber of the idols, the Divine Presence left her. She said, My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me.¹⁴ Dost thou perchance punish the inadvertent offence¹⁵ like the presumptuous one, or one done under compulsion like one done willingly? Or is it because I called him 'dog', as it says. Deliver my soul from the sword, mine only one from the power of the dog?¹⁶ She straightway retracted and called him lion, as it says. Save me from the lion's mouth.¹⁷

And it was so when the king saw Esther the queen.¹⁸ R. Johanan said: Three ministering angels were appointed to help her at that moment; one to make her head¹⁹ erect, a second to endow her with charm²⁰ and a third to stretch the golden sceptre. How much [was it stretched]? — R. Jeremiah said: It was two cubits long and he made it twelve cubits — Some say, sixteen, and some again twenty-four. In a Baraitha it was stated, sixty. So too you find with the arm of the daughter of Pharaoh,²¹ and so you find with the teeth of the wicked, as it is written, Thou hast broken [shibarta] the teeth of the wicked,²² and Resh Lakish said in regard to this, Read not shibarta but shirbabta [Thou hast prolonged]. Rabbah b. 'Ofra said in the name of R. Eleazar who had it from his teacher, who had it from his teacher, [that the sceptre was stretched] two hundred [cubits].

And the king said to her, What wilt thou, queen Esther? For whatever thy request, even to the half of the kingdom, it shall be given thee.²³ 'Half the kingdom', but not the whole kingdom. and not a thing which would divide the kingdom.²⁴ What could that be? The building of the Temple.

Let the king and Haman come unto the banquet.²⁵ Our Rabbis taught: What was Esther's reason for inviting Haman? — R. Eleazar said, She set a trap for him, as it says. Let their table before them become a snare.²⁶ R. Joshua said: She learnt to do so from her father's house, as it says. If thine enemy be hungry give him bread to eat, etc.²⁷ R. Meir said, So that he should not form a conspiracy²⁸ and rebel. R. Judah said: So that they should not discover that she was a Jewess.²⁹ R. Nehemiah said: So that Israel should not say, We have a sister in the palace, and so should neglect³⁰ [to pray for] mercy. R. Jose said: So that he should always be at hand for her.³¹ R. Simeon b. Menassiah said: [She said], Perhaps the Omnipresent will notice³² and do a miracle for us. R. Joshua b. Korha said: [She said], I will encourage him so that he may be killed, both he and I.³³ Rabban Gamaliel said: [She said]. Ahasuerus is a changeable king.³⁴ Said R. Gamaliel: We still require the Modean,³⁵ as it has been taught: R. Eliezer of Modi'im says, She made the king jealous of him and she made the princes jealous of him. Rabbah said: [She said], Pride goeth before destruction.³⁶ Abaye and Raba gave the same reason, saying: [She said], With their poison I will prepare their feast.³⁷ Rabbah b. Abbuha came across Elijah and said to him, Which of these reasons prompted Esther to act as she did? He replied: [All] the reasons given by all the Tannaim and all the Amoraim.

And Haman recounted unto them the glory of his riches and the multitude of his children.³⁸ How many are indicated by 'the multitude of his children'? — Rab said: Thirty. Ten died, ten were hung, and ten were reduced to beggary. The Rabbis, however, said: Those who were reduced to beggary numbered seventy, as it says, They that were full [sebe'im] have hired themselves out for bread.³⁹ Read not sebe'im, but shib'im [seventy]. Rami b. Abba said: In all they were two hundred and eight, as it says, And the multitude [we-rob] of his sons. But we-rob in gematria⁴⁰ is two hundred and fourteen?⁴¹ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The word is written defectively.⁴²

On that night the sleep of the king was disturbed.⁴³ R. Tanhun said: The sleep of the King of the Universe was disturbed. The Rabbis, however, say: Those above⁴⁴ were disturbed and those below⁴⁵ were disturbed. Raba said: It means literally 'the sleep of king Ahasuerus. A thought occurred to him: What is the meaning of Esther inviting Haman? Perhaps they are conspiring⁴⁶ against me to kill me? He thought again: If that is so, is there no man who is my friend and who would tell me? Then he thought again: Perhaps there is some man who has done me a good turn and I have not rewarded him; and therefore men refrain from informing me. Straightway, he commanded to bring the book of records of the chronicles.⁴³

And they were read.⁴³ This [form of expression]⁴⁷ indicates that they were read of themselves.

And it was found [being] written.⁴⁸ It should say, a writing [kethab] was found? — This shows that Shamsai¹ kept on erasing and Gabriel kept on writing. R. Assi said: R. Shila, a man of Kefar Temarta,² drew a lesson from this, saying: If a writing on earth which is for the benefit of Israel cannot be erased, how much less a writing in heaven!³

There is nothing done for him.⁴ Raba said: [They answered him thus] not because they loved Mordecai but because they hated Haman.

He had prepared for him.⁵ A Tanna stated: [This means], he had prepared for himself.⁶

And do even so to Mordecai etc.⁷ Haman said to him: Who is Mordecai? He said to him: 'The Jew'. He said: There are many Mordecais among the Jews. He replied: 'The one who sits in the king's gate'. Said Haman to him: For him [the tribute] of one village or one river is sufficient! Said Ahasuerus: Give him that too; 'let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken'.

Then took Haman the apparel and the horse.⁸ He went and found [Mordecai with] the Rabbis sitting before him while he showed them the rules of the 'handful'.⁹ When Mordecai saw him approaching and leading the horse, he became frightened and said to the Rabbis, This villain is coming to kill me. Get out of his way so that you should not get into trouble with him.¹⁰ Mordecai thereupon drew his robe round him and stood up to pray. Haman came up and sat down before them and waited till Mordecai had finished his prayer. He said to him: What have you been discussing? He replied: When the Temple stood, if a man brought a meal-offering he used to offer a handful of fine flour and make atonement therewith. Said Haman to them: Your handful of fine flour has come and displaced my ten thousand talents of silver. Said Mordecai to him: Wretch, if a slave acquires property, whose is the slave and whose is the property?¹¹ Haman then said to him: Arise and put on this apparel and ride on this horse, for so the king desires you to do. He replied: I cannot do so until I have gone into the bath and trimmed my hair, for it would not be good manners to use the king's apparel in this state. Now Esther had sent and closed all the baths and all the barbers' shops. So Haman himself took him into the bath and washed him, and then went and brought scissors from his house and trimmed his hair. While he was doing so, he sighed and groaned. Said Mordecai to him: Why do you sigh? He replied: The man who was esteemed by the king above all his nobles is now made a bath attendant and a barber. Said Mordecai to him: Wretch, and were you not once a barber in Kefar Karzum?¹² (For so a Tanna stated: Haman was a barber in Kefar Karzum twenty-two years.) After he had trimmed his hair he put the garments on him, and said to him, Mount and ride. He replied: I am not able, as I am weak from the days of fasting. So Haman stooped down and he mounted [on his back]. When he was up he kicked him. He said to him: Is it not written in your books,¹³ Rejoice not when thine enemy faileth?¹⁴ He replied: That refers to an Israelite, but in regard to you [folk] it is written, And thou shalt tread upon their high places.¹⁵

And proclaimed before him, This shall be done to the man whom the king delighted to honour.¹⁶ As he was leading him through the street where Haman lived, his daughter who was standing on the roof saw him. She thought that the man on the horse was her father and the man walking before him was Mordecai. So she took a chamber pot and emptied it on the head of her father. He looked up at her and when she saw that it was her father, she threw herself from the roof to the ground and killed herself. Hence it is written . . .¹⁷

And Mordecai returned to the king's gate. R. Shesheth said: This indicates that he returned to his sackcloth and fasting. But Haman hastened to his house, mourning and having his head covered; mourning for his daughter, and with his head covered on account of what had happened to him.

And Haman recounted unto Zeresh his wife and all his friends, etc. They are first called 'his friends' and then they are called 'his wise men'. R. Johanan said: Whoever says a wise thing even if he is a non-Jew¹⁸ is called 'wise'.

If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews. They said to him: If he comes from the other tribes, you can prevail over him, but if he is from the tribe of Judah or of Benjamin, Ephraim or Manasseh, you will not prevail over him. 'Judah', as it is written, Thy hand shall be on the neck of thine enemies.¹⁹ The others, because it is written of them, Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy might.²⁰

But falling thou shalt fall.²¹ R. Judah b. Ila'i drew a lesson from this verse, Saying: Why are two fallings mentioned here? Haman's friends said to him: This people is likened to the dust and it is likened to the stars. When they go down, they go down to the dust, and when they rise they rise to the stars. Came the king's chamberlains and hastened [wa-yabhilu] to bring Haman.²² The use of this word [wa-yabhilu]²³ tells us that they brought him all in confusion [behalah].

For we are sold, I and my people etc . . . For the adversary care²⁴ not that the king is endamaged.²⁵ She said to him: This adversary cares not for the damage of the king. He was angry with Vashti and killed her,²⁶ and he is angry with me and wants to kill me.

Then said the king Ahasuerus, and he said to Esther the queen.²⁷ Why 'said' and again 'said'? R. Abbahu replied: He first spoke to her through an intermediary.²⁸ When she told him that she came from the house of Saul,²⁹ forthwith, 'he said to Esther the queen'.

And Esther said, An adversary and an enemy, even this wicked Haman.³⁰ R. Eleazar said: This informs us that she was pointing to Ahasuerus and an angel came and pushed her hand so as to point to Haman.³¹

And the king rose in his wrath...and the king returned out of the palace garden.³² His returning is put on the same footing as his arising. Just as the arising was in wrath, so the returning was in wrath. For he went and found ministering angels in the form of men who were uprooting trees from the garden. He said to them, What are you doing? They replied: Haman has ordered us. He came into the house, and there 'Haman was falling³³ upon the couch'. 'Falling'? It should say, 'had fallen'? — R. Eleazar said: This informs us that an angel came and made him fall on it. Ahasuerus then exclaimed: Trouble³⁴ inside, trouble outside!

'Then said the king, Will he even force the queen before me in the house? Then said Harbonah, etc.' R. Eleazar said: Harbonah also was a wicked man and implicated in that plot.³⁵ When he saw that his plan was not succeeding, he at once fled, and so it is written, And he cast upon him and did not pity, from his hand he surely fleeth.³⁶

Then the king's wrath was assuaged.³⁷ Why are there two assuagings here?³⁸ — One of the [wrath of the] King of the Universe,³⁹ and the other of Ahasuerus. Others say, one [of the wrath] on account of Esther and the other on account of Vashti.

To all of them he gave to each man changes of raiment but to Benjamin he gave five changes of raiment.⁴⁰ Is it possible that that righteous man⁴¹ should fall into the very mistake from which he himself had suffered?

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 16b

For Raba b. Mehasia said in the name of R. Hami b. Guria, who said it in the name of Rab: Through two sela's weight of fine silk which Jacob gave to Joseph over what he gave to his brothers, a ball was set rolling and our ancestors eventually went down to Egypt! — R. Benjamin b. Japhet said: He gave him a hint that a descendant would issue from him who would go forth before a king in five royal garments, as it says, And Mordecai went forth from the presence of the king in royal apparel of blue etc.¹

And he fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck.² How many necks³ had Benjamin? — R. Eleazar said: He wept for the two Temples which were destined to be in the territory of Benjamin⁴ and to be destroyed. And Benjamin wept upon his neck:² he wept for the tabernacle of Shiloh which was destined to be in the territory of Joseph and to be destroyed.

And behold your eyes see and the eyes of my brother Benjamin.⁵ R. Eleazar said: He said to them: Just as I bear no malice against my brother Benjamin who had no part in my selling, so I have no malice against you.

That it is my mouth that speaketh unto you. As my mouth is, so is my heart.

And to his father he sent in like manner ten asses laden with the good things of Egypt.⁶ What are ‘the good things of Egypt’? R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar: He sent him [old] wine which old men find very comforting.⁷

And his brethren also went and fell down before him.⁸ R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar: This bears out the popular saying, A fox in its hour — bow down to it. [You compare Joseph to] a fox! Where was his inferiority to his brothers? Rather if this was said [by R. Eleazar] it was applied as follows: And Israel bowed down upon the bed's head.⁹ R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar; A fox in its hour — bow down to it.¹⁰

And he comforted them and spoke kindly to them.¹¹ R. Benjamin b. Japhet said in the name of R. Eleazar: This tells us that he spoke to them words which greatly reassured them,¹² [saying], If ten lights were not able to put out one, how can one light put out ten?

The Jews had light and gladness and joy and honour.¹³ Rab Judah said: ‘Light’ means the Torah,¹⁴ and so it says. For the commandment is a lamp and the Torah is a light.¹⁵ ‘Gladness’ means a feast day; and so it says, And thou shalt be glad in thy feast.¹⁶ ‘Joy’ means circumcision; and so it says, I rejoice at thy word.¹⁷ ‘Honour’ means the phylacteries, and so it says, And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the Lord is called upon thee, and they shall be afraid of thee;¹⁸ and it has been taught: R. Eleazar the Great says that this refers to the phylactery of the head.

And Parshandatha . . . the ten sons of Haman.¹⁹ R. Adda from Joppa said: The ten sons of Haman and the word ‘ten’ [which follows] should be said²⁰ in one breath. What is the reason? Because their souls all departed together. R. Johanan said: The waw of waizatha must be lengthened like a boat-pole of the river Libruth.²¹ What is the reason? Because they were all strung on one pole. R. Shila, a man of Kefar Temarta, drew a lesson from this saying, All the songs [in Scripture] are written in the form of a half brick over a whole brick,²² and a whole brick²² over a half brick,²³ with the exception of this one and the list of the kings of Canaan²⁴ which are written in the form of a half brick over a half brick and a whole brick over a whole brick.²⁵ What is the reason? So that they should never rise again from their downfall.

And the king said to the queen, In Shushan the castle the Jews have slain . . .²⁶ The mode of expression informs us that an angel came and slapped him on his mouth.²⁷

But when she came before the king, he said along with the letter.²⁸ ‘He said’? It should be, ‘she said’! — R. Johanan said: She said, Let there be said by word of mouth what is written in the letter.²⁹

Words of peace and truth.³⁰ R. Tanhum said: [or, according to some, R. Assi]: This shows that the Megillah requires to be written on ruled lines, like the true essence of the Torah.³¹ And the ordinance of Esther confirmed.³² Only the ordinance of Esther and not the words of the fastings? — R. Johanan said: We must read thus: The words of the fastings [and their cry] and the ordinance of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim.³³

For Mordecai the Jew was next unto king Ahasuerus, and great among the Jews and accepted of the majority of his brethren.³⁴ Of the majority of his brethren but not of all his brethren; this informs us that some members of the Sanhedrin separated from him.³⁵

R. Joseph said: The study of the Torah is superior to the saving of life. For at first Mordecai was reckoned next after four, but afterwards next after five. At first it is written, Who came with Zerubabel, [namely] Jeshua, Nehemiah, Seraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan,³⁶ and subsequently it is written, Who came with Zerubabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bilshan.³⁷

Rab — or, some say. R. Samuel b. Martha — said: The study of the Torah is superior to the building of the Temple, for as long as Baruch b. Neriah was alive Ezra would not leave him to go up to the land of Israel.³⁸ Rabbah said in the name of R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha: The study of the Torah is superior to the honouring of father and mother. For, for the fourteen years that Jacob spent in the house of Eber, he was not punished, since a Master has said:

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 17a

Why are the years of Ishmael mentioned? So as to reckon by them the years of Jacob, as it is written, And these are the years of the life of Ishmael, a hundred and thirty and seven years.¹ How much older was Ishmael than Isaac? Fourteen years, as it is written, And Abram was fourscore and six years old when Hagar bore Ishmael to Abram,² and it is also written, And Abraham was a hundred years old when his son Isaac was born to him,³ and it is written, And Isaac was threescore years old when she bore them.⁴ How old then was Ishmael when Jacob was born? Seventy-four. How many years were left of his life? Sixty-three; and it has been taught: Jacob our father at the time when he was blessed by his father was sixty-three years old. It was just at that time that Ishmael died, as it is written, Now Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob...so Esau went unto Ishmael and took Mahlath the daughter of Ishmael Abraham's son the sister of Nebaioth.⁵ Now once it has been said, 'Ishmael's daughter' do I not know that she was the sister of Nebaioth? This tells us then that Ishmael affianced her and then died, and Nebaioth her brother gave her in marriage.⁶ Sixty-three and fourteen till Joseph was born⁷ make seventy-seven, and it is written, And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh.⁸ This makes a hundred and seven. Add seven years of plenty and two of famine,⁹ and we have a hundred and sixteen, and it is written, And Pharaoh said unto Jacob, How many are the days of the years of thy life? And Jacob said unto Pharaoh, The days of the years of my sojournings are a hundred and thirty years.¹⁰ But [we have just seen that] they were only a hundred and sixteen? We must conclude therefore that he spent fourteen years in the house of Eber,¹¹ as it has been taught: 'After Jacob our father had left for Aram Naharaim two years.¹² Eber died'. He then went forth from where he was¹³ and came to Aram Naharaim. From this¹⁴ it follows that when he stood by the well he was seventy-seven years old. And how do we know that he was not punished [for these fourteen years]? As it has been taught: 'We find that Joseph was away from his father twenty-two years.¹⁵ just as Jacob our father was absent from his father'. But Jacob's absence was thirty-six years?¹⁶ It must be then that the fourteen years which he was in the house of Eber are not reckoned. But

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. AN IRRIGATED FIELD¹ MAY BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL² [WEEK] OR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR³ BOTH FROM A NEWLY-EMERGING SPRING AND FROM A SPRING THAT IS NOT JUST EMERGED, BUT NOT WITH WATER FROM STORED RAIN, NOR FROM A SWIPE-WELL;⁴ NOR MAY SMALL BASINS⁵ BE FORMED ABOUT THE VINES. R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH SAYS THAT A [WATER] CHANNEL MAY NOT BE NEWLY MADE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], NOR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR; BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT A CHANNEL MAY BE NEWLY MADE IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR AND ONE THAT HAS GOT OUT OF ORDER MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. AND IMPAIRED WATER WORKS⁶ IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN MAY BE REPAIRED OR CLEANED OUT; AND ROADS, BROADWAYS AND [RITUAL] POOLS⁷ MAY BE PUT IN ORDER. AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED,⁸ AND GRAVESIDES MAY BE MARKED,⁹ AND [PUBLIC COMMISSIONERS] MAY SET OUT ALSO¹⁰ TO INSPECT DIVERSE¹¹ SEED-CROPS.

GEMARA. Now, one might argue that after [having permitted] watering FROM A NEWLY EMERGING spring — which is apt to come along tearing up [the soil]¹² — need further mention be made of [drawing from] A SPRING THAT IS NOT NEWLY EMERGING—which is unlikely to come tearing up [the soil]?¹³ — I may answer that it is necessary [to mention the latter]; for if [the Tanna] had mentioned only the newly emerging spring I might have said that only here [where it is] for an irrigation plot it is permitted — but not for a Baal-plot,¹⁴ because it is apt to come tearing up [the soil]; but [on the other hand], from a spring that is not newly emerging, which is unlikely to come tearing up [the soil], I might say that even a Baal-plot [may be watered]; therefore he informs us¹⁵ that there is no difference; be it a spring newly emerging, or a spring not newly emerging, an irrigation plot may be watered therefrom, but a Baal-plot may not be.¹⁶

And whence [know we] that the term BETH HA-SHELAHIN¹⁷ denotes a ‘thirsty’¹⁸ field? — It is written: When thou wast faint and weary,¹⁹ and we render the word ‘faint’ [in Aramaic] by meshalhi.²⁰ And whence [know we] that Beth ha-Baal²¹ denotes ‘settled’ soil? — It is written: For as a man be the husband [yib'al] of a maiden, so shall thy sons be as husbands unto thee²² and we render [in Aramaic], ‘Behold as a young man settles down with a maiden, thy sons shall become settled²³ in the midst of thee’.

Who may be the [unnamed] Tanna²⁴ who maintains that [work²⁵ to prevent] loss is allowed,²⁶ but [to augment] profit²⁷ is not allowed; and that even in [averting] loss we should not do any laborious work?²⁸ Said R. Huna: It is [the view of] R. Eliezer b. Jacob, as we learned:²⁹ R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Water may be trained along from tree to tree, provided that one does not water thus the entire field.³⁰

I grant³¹ you may understand R. Eliezer [b. Jacob]³² to disallow exertion to enhance profit,³³ but could you also understand him [from here] to disallow exertion [even] where loss is [involved]? Rather, said R. Papa, (whose view is it)?³⁴ It is R. Judah's, as it is taught: 'A spring newly emerging may be [used for] watering even (a field that is)³⁵ a Baal-plot. So R. Meir; R. Judah³⁶ says, None but (a field that is)³⁵ a 'languid plot' that has dried up may be watered [therefrom]. R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah says, Neither one nor the other.³⁷ R. Judah³⁸ went even further and said, 'A person may not clean out a water channel³⁹ and [with the dredging] water his garden of debris — [heap]⁴⁰ during the festival week'. [Now] what is [meant by a 'languid plot'] that dried up?⁴¹ If you say, literally dried up' what is the good of watering it? — Said Abaye, It means that this [old] spring has run dry⁴² and another has [just] emerged [instead].⁴³ 'R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, Neither one nor the other'. [By this he means to say that] it makes no difference whether the [old] spring has run dry or has not run dry, a newly emerging spring is not to be used.

But how [do you arrive at this conclusion]? Perhaps when R. Judah said that a languid plot may be watered from a newly emerging spring and a Baal-plot may not be,

- (1) ihj kav , hc means lit. 'a house of channels', i.e., a plot of land which owing to situation or climate or nature of the soil requires to be watered artificially. It is often a laborious process and at times of vital importance to the crop.
- (2) I.e., during the middle period of the two longer Feasts, namely, the 'Feast of Unleavened Bread' (Passover) and that of Tabernacles, v. Introduction.
- (3) Lit., 'the seventh year'. Every seventh year in the Jubilee cycle was ordained to be a year of remission, or sabbath for the land, when the regular processes of agriculture for its improvement were to be suspended. V. Ex. XXIII, 10-11; Lev. XXV, 2ff and infra 3a.
- (4) iukhe the Greek , a mechanical contrivance for raising water by water-wheel or bucket from a deep well, like the shadoof in Egypt and the denkli or paecottah in India. The reason for the objections is stated in the Gemara.
- (5) Circular depressions made about the stem of the vine, or a small trench drawn about a group of vines to retain the water. V. infra 4b.
- (6) Broken wells, cisterns or aqueducts; pools that have become muddy puddles, or blocked drains. hkuekhe _ Latin cloaculae, Baneth).
- (7) For priests and pilgrims to purify themselves ritually or their vessels that have met with defilement. Cf. Lev. XI, 24-40; XXII, 1-7.
- (8) E.g., removing rubbish and thorns, levelling the road and footways, mending bridges, etc. Cf. infra 5a.
- (9) With whitewash of lime to warn passers-by against defilement. Cf. infra 5a.
- (10) [MS.M. omits 'ALSO' which is difficult to explain. V. Tosaf. Yom Tob].
- (11) Lev. XIX, 19: Thou shall not sow thy field with two (or more kinds of) seeds (promiscuously). They are neither to be sown nor preserved by active process. Infra 2b, 6a and cf. Kil. I, 1, 9; Shek. I, 1, a.
- (12) I.e., by erosion, necessitating immediate repair of the damage during the restricted period.
- (13) Running on its habitual course.
- (14) kgc , hc , lit., 'Baal's area', or field — an old pagan denomination of a fertile soil, i.e., a soil favoured by 'Baal Lord of the heavens', Baal-Shamen, with fertilizing rain and sunshine. V. Cooke's N.S.I. p. 45, n. 1 etc. and Robertson Smith's Religion of the Semites (ed. 1894) pp. 96-97. Cf. Isa. LV, 10 and Ta'an. 6b: 'Rain is earth's husband'; also Krauss, TA II, p. 546, n. 115.
- (15) From here to the end of the sentence is not in DS., being seemingly a gloss from 2b.
- (16) From a new or old spring.

- (17) Rendered 'AN IRRIGATED FIELD'.
- (18) Or 'a languid track.' The term ihj ka (channels) is here explained by popular etymology as derived from hvkā (the gutturals V and j interchanging), 'weary', 'exhausted'. V. n. 2.
- (19) Deut. XXV, 18. Han. and Aruch s.v. vka (VIII, 80b) quote more appropriately Gen. XXV, 29 referring to Esau's exhaustion and thirst. Cf. Isa. XXIX, 8 and Ps. LXIII, 2.
- (20) A participle Shafel from hvk meaning 'exhausted'. This derivation is grammatically unsound. In B.B., Sonc. ed. p. 271 it is more correctly connected with the root in the sense of sending water across the fields in channels. Cf. Ezek. XXXI, 4; Ps CIV, 10; Job V, 10. It is surmised that the name of the Pool of Siloam (j ak) is derived from the same root. V. Krauss, TA. II, p. 547, n. 117.
- (21) V. supra p. 2, n. 7.
- (22) Isa. LXII, 5.
- (23) Cf. our expressions husbandry and husbandman.
- (24) In the first clause of the Mishnah.
- (25) During the Festival week.
- (26) I.e., watering a languid soil.
- (27) E.g., watering a fertile field to make it still more productive.
- (28) Lit., 'excessive trouble', e.g., to use rainwater or raise water by swipe.
- (29) V. infra 6b, Mishnah.
- (30) To water the whole field in that manner is all exertion to be avoided during the Festival week.
- (31) Lit., 'say'.
- (32) So correctly, R. Han., DS.
- (33) As he forbids watering the entire field, presumably thinking it unnecessary to give it an extra watering to increase its fertility.
- (34) Omitted in DS.
- (35) A doublet occurring also in the texts given in the next note.
- (36) J.M.K. I, 1 (81a) and Tosef., I, I read here, 'and the Sages say' instead, showing that it is R. Judah's view that has been adopted in the Mishnah. Obviously, the Babylonian teachers engaged in this critical discussion did not have that reading.
- (37) I.e., that a newly emerging spring may not be used either for a generally nourished field (again at R. Meir's view), nor in a 'languid field' even where it has replaced a dried-up old spring (against R. Judah's view).
- (38) He went further in his restrictions, even in the case of a 'languid field'. (Tosaf. v. Ritba).
- (39) A running brook or ditch which has become muddy and shallow, which he may clean out under certain conditions discussed infra 4b.
- (40) Used as a vegetable garden or bed for nurslings. V. Tosaf. Lit., 'his garden and his ruin'.
- (41) I.e., that is waste.
- (42) Lit., 'it is dried up from this spring'.
- (43) [All of which shows that R. Judah does not permit any laborious work even in order to avert loss, as in the case of the old spring having dried up, whereas R. Judah permits watering from the new spring that has emerged but not from rain-water or a swipe-well, which is in agreement with our Mishnah].

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 2b

he was referring only to a newly emerging spring since it may come along tearing up [the soil]; but a spring that is not just newly emerging and which is unlikely to come along tearing up [the soil] he might allow even for a Baal-plot?¹ If [you take it] thus, then whom does our Mishnah represent?² The fact is that according to R. Judah it makes no difference, whether it be a newly emerging spring, or a spring not just newly emerging; in either case a languid plot may be watered [therefrom], but a Baal-plot may not be. And the reason why it states the ‘newly emerging’ spring³ is [merely] to show how far R. Meir is prepared to go, [namely], that even a newly emerging spring may be used for watering and even for a Baal-field!

It was stated: ‘If one is [seen] weeding or watering his seedlings on the Sabbath,⁴ under what category [of the offence] should he be cautioned?’⁵ — Rabbah said, [It comes] under the category of ploughing. R. Joseph said, under the category of sowing. Said Rabbah, My view seems the more reasonable, for what is the object of the plougher? To loosen the soil; here too, he loosens the soil. Said R. Joseph, My view seems the more reasonable, for what is the object of the sower? To promote the growth of the produce; here too, he promotes the growth of the produce.

Said Abaye to Rabbah, Your view presents difficulty and R. Joseph's view presents difficulty. Your view presents difficulty, for does the act come [only] under the category of ploughing [and] not under that of sowing [only]? R. Joseph's view presents difficulty, for does it come [only] under the category of sowing [and] not under that of ploughing also? And should you rejoin that where there are two [possible categories], the offender is liable only on one count, [this cannot be] for did not R. Kahana say that if one [incidentally] pruned [his tree] in cutting it for wood⁶ he is liable on two counts, one under the category of planting⁷ and one again under that of reaping?⁸ — This is a difficulty.⁹

R. Joseph, thereupon, put an objection to Rabbah from [the following]: One who weeds or covers [with earth] diverse-seeds¹⁰ receives [judicial] flogging. R. Akiba says, Also one who preserves [them].¹¹ Now this is in perfect accord with my view, as I say that [he who weeds is to be cautioned] under the category of sowing, which [explains the penalty] because sowing is [explicitly] forbidden in connection with diverse-seeds; but according to your view who say that [he is to be cautioned] under the category of ploughing, is ploughing forbidden in connection with diverse-seeds? — Said he [Rabbah] to him, [He¹² is flogged] under the category of preserving [them]. But surely, since the last clause states ‘R. Akiba says, Also one who preserves [them]’, may we not infer that according to the first Tanna the penalty is not on account of preserving [them]? — The entire statement is [to be taken as] recording R. Akiba's view, and the latter clause is explanatory: ‘On what ground does one who weeds or covers [with earth] diverse-seeds receive a flogging? Because he comes under the category of preserving, for R. Akiba says, Also he who preserves [them]’. What is R. Akiba's reason? — It is taught: — Thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed’.¹³ This tells me about ‘sowing’, whence [the prohibition against] preserving [what is already sown]? — From the instructive wording kil'ayim [diverse-seeds] in thy field not.¹⁴ We learned: AN IRRIGATED FIELD MAY BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] OR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR. This [permission] is perfectly correct in regard to the festival [week] where [the prohibition is] merely to avoid exertion, but where loss is [threatened]¹⁵ the Rabbis have allowed it. But in regard to the sabbatical year, whether on the view that [watering] comes under the category of sowing¹⁶ or on the view that it comes under that of ploughing,¹⁷ is either sowing or ploughing permitted in the sabbatical year?¹⁸ — Said Abaye, Our Mishnah is speaking of the sabbatical year in the present time and it [expresses] the view held by Rabbi,¹⁹ for it is taught: Rabbi says, [It is written] And this is the manner of the release; release [by every creditor of that which he hath lent to his neighbour];²⁰ the text speaks here of two forms of release, one the release of the soil [from tillage]²¹ and the other the release of money²² [the juxtaposition of] which tells us that so long as you must release the soil [from tillage], you must release the money [debt], but when you do not release the soil, you need not release the money!²³ Said Raba [not necessarily], you may even say [it voices] the view of the Rabbis²⁴ and that they²⁵ are the principal [types of work] that the Divine Law has forbidden [explicitly],

(1) Whereas our Mishnah forbids watering a Baal-plot from a newly emerging spring. Consequently it will not represent the view of R. Judah.

(2) Lit., 'to whom will you throw (trace the view of) our Mishnah'.

(3) In the cited Baraitha: the spring might as well have been left undefined, as either is allowed for a languid plot by R. Judah.

(4) Ritba reads on a festival, which is preferred by R. Moses Sofer. Cf. Mak., Sonc. ed., p. 149.

(5) An offender doing an act which is explicitly forbidden in Holy Writ had to be duly and accurately cautioned by two witnesses against that particular act, and informed of the exact penalty it involved, before he could be judicially punished by a duly constituted tribunal. Ploughing, sowing and mowing are of the thirty-nine main categories of work forbidden (Scripturally) on Sabbath or Festivals. For the list v. Shab. VII, 2 and Shab. 73aff.

(6) Lit., 'he prunes and requires the wood'. Shab. 73b. Work on the Sabbath is to be purposive, whether intended or not. If one did what he desired to do, without knowing that such a thing was not to be done on the Sabbath, or forgetting for the moment that it was the Sabbath day, he would not be punishable, but would have to bring a sin-offering in Temple times.

(7) Pruning promotes growth and is therefore another form of sowing or planting.

(8) Having a definite purpose for the cuttings.

(9) Var. lec. omit this final admission. [The statement of R. Kahana, being of an Amora, is not deemed sufficiently authoritative to refute the views of Rabbah and R. Joseph. V. Tosaf. s.v. chj .]

(10) Weeding and covering with earth diverse-seeds are here made punishable as sowing, v. Lev. XIX, 19 (cf. Deut. XXII, 9).

(11) Fencing in the plot to prevent cattle from trampling them out or feeding on the young blades. Cf. A.Z. 64a (Rashi and Tosaf.).

(12) He who weeds diverse-seeds.

(13) Lev. XIX, 19.

(14) Some explain a section of the Hebrew text of Lev. XIX, 19, namely, ohtkf grz, tk lsa ohtkf, as it were two interlocked sentences, (i) tk lsa ohtkf i.e., 'Kil'ayim in thy field not', (which forbids the presence and the preservation of diverse-seed crops in the field); and (ii) ohtkf grz, tk lsa i.e., 'Thy field thou shalt not sow kil'ayim' (which forbids sowing). This explanation, however, is very strained, as the variations in the parallel passages show, having puzzled the commentators. The readings ohtkf tk k", and tk ohtkf k", are both correct and to the same effect. It is the import of the wording rather than the form of the text that R. Akiba stressed. It is the diverse mixing or crossing — 'kil'ayim' — that is emphatically forbidden, be it of animal, or field, or raiment (Lev. XIX, 19) and fiercest of all in the (oliveyard or) vineyard (Deut. XXII, 9). Have no share by your action in producing kil'aym!

(15) As shown above.

(16) R. Joseph, above.

(17) Rabbah, above.

(18) Sowing, pruning, gleaning and reaping are directly forbidden in Lev. XXV, 4-5. Ploughing, however, is forbidden only indirectly, by implication from a positive law in Ex. XXIII, 11; XXXIV, 21. Note this point.

(19) R. Judah ha-Nasi, compiler of the Mishnah.

(20) Deut. XV, 2.

(21) I.e., let the soil lie fallow and the crops free and unguarded against the poor, Ex. XXIII, 11.

(22) Let slip the money debts owing to you.

(23) The interpretation is based on the ground that since the Nation, Israel as a whole, is no longer in possession of the Holy Land as his inheritance, the land laws relative to the sabbatical year and Jubilee re-distributions, which are made contingent on Israel's entry and possession (Lev. XXV, 2, 10ff; cf. ibid. XXVI, 34-35, and Deut. XXXI, 10-13) are of necessity in abeyance, for the time being. [This according to Rabbi, since the prohibition of tilling the soil on the sabbatical years nowadays is merely Rabbinical, it is not enforced where a loss is involved; hence the ruling of our Mishnah.]

(24) That the operation of the sabbatical year nowadays is Biblical.

(25) Those that are specified in the text of Holy Writ.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 3a

but derivative¹ operations it has not forbidden, for it is written: But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land..., thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of itself of thy harvest thou shalt not reap and the grapes of thy undressed vine thou shalt not gather.² Now, since pruning comes within the general process of sowing³ and grape-gathering within the general process of reaping,⁴ what law then did the All-Merciful desire to inculcate by inserting these [secondary processes] into the text? To indicate that only for these secondary processes [specified in the text] is one [to be] held liable⁵ and for [any] other [secondary processes] one is not [to be] held liable.⁶ Indeed not? Surely it has been taught: Thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard,⁷ that only forbids me sowing or pruning; whence is forbidden weeding or hoeing or the trimming of wilted parts? From the instructive [form of the] text: Thy field thou shalt not... thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field; no manner of work in thy vineyard. [Likewise] whence [is derived the rule] not to cut back shoots, or thin twigs or put up props for supporting [fruit trees]? From the [same] instructive text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. [Similarly] whence [is derived the rule] not to manure,⁸ or remove stones, or dust [with flower of sulphur]⁹ or fumigate the tree? From the instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not, that is, no manner of work in the field, no manner of work in the vineyard. Shall I say that one should not [even] stir the soil under the olive trees, nor use the hoe under the vines, nor fill the gaps [under the olive trees]¹⁰ with water nor make drills¹¹ for the vines? There is the Instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not sow [nor thy vineyard shalt thou prune]. Now, as 'sowing' was already embraced in the general terms of the ordinance,¹² why then was it singled out [for mention]? To provide ground for an analogy, namely that just as sowing has the special quality of being a work common to field and orchard,¹³ so is every [other] work that is common to field and orchard [forbidden]!¹⁴ — [That is only] Rabbinically; and the text is adduced merely as a support.¹⁵ But, is it permitted to stir the soil [under the olive tree] in the sabbatical year? Surely [is it not taught]: It is written, But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie fallow;¹⁶ 'let it rest' — not to hoe; and '[let it] lie fallow — not to remove stones? — Said R. 'Ukba b. Haba, there are two sorts of hoeing, one for strengthening the [olive] tree, and another to close up fissures; that for strengthening the tree is forbidden, whereas that for closing up fissures is allowed.¹⁷

It has been stated:¹⁸ — If one ploughed in the sabbatical year,¹⁹ R. Johanan and R. Eleazar²⁰ [took opposite views]. One said that he is flogged²¹ and the other said that he is not flogged.²² Might I suggest that the issue turns on the dictum of R. Ela as reported by R. Abin? For R. Abin reported R. Ela to have stated that wherever a general [proposition] is stated in the form of a positive command and a particular [specification] in the form of a negative injunction,²³ the hermeneutical rule of General-Particular-General²⁴ does not apply to it.²⁵ [Accordingly], the one who says the offender is flogged, did not agree with that dictum of R. Abin in the name of R. Ela,²⁶ while the other who says that the offender is not flogged did agree with the dictum of R. Abin [in the name of R. Ela]?²⁷ — Not [necessarily]. It can be maintained that nobody agrees with the dictum of R. Ela, as reported by R. Abin. As to the one who says that the offender is flogged²⁸ it of course is in order, while the other who says the offender is not flogged may tell you thus:²⁹ Consider: pruning comes within [the general process of] sowing and grape-gathering within [the general process of] reaping, what rule did the All-Merciful intend to inculcate by inserting these [secondary processes] into the text? To indicate that only for these secondary processes [specified in the text] is one [to be] held liable, but for any other secondary process³⁰ he is not [to be] held liable. But is he not? Surely it is taught: Thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard, this only forbids me sowing or pruning; whence is forbidden weeding, hoeing, or the trimming of wilted parts? From the instructive [form of] the text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field; no manner of work in thy vineyard. Whence [is derived the rule] not to cut back shoots, or thin twigs or put up props for [fruit] trees? From the [same] instructive text: thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. Whence [is derived the rule] not to manure, or remove stones, [or dust] or fumigate the trees? From the instructive text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [that is], no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. Am I then to say that one may not stir the soil under the olive trees, nor use the hoe under the vines, nor fill the [open] gaps [under the olives] with water, nor make drills for the vines? There is the instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not sow and thy vineyard thou shalt not prune. Now, sowing was already embraced in the general terms of the ordinance, why then was it singled out [for mention]? For the purpose of providing [ground for] an analogy, that just as sowing has the special quality of being a work common to field and vineyard, so is any other work that is common to field and orchard [forbidden]? — [That is only] rabbinically; and the text is [adduced] as a mere support.³¹

(1) Or secondary processes which are not unspecified.

(2) Lev. XXV, 4-5.

(3) Or planting, as explained above by R. Kahana.

(4) V. Shab. 73a.

(5) To a judicial flogging.

(6) I.e., scripturally (even according to the Rabbis) though reprehensible rabbinically.

(7) The order of the Hebrew words in the text is: 'Thy field thou shalt not sow nor thy vineyard shalt thou etc.'

(8) Yalkut reads: 'remove excrescences' or 'warts'.

(9) Thus J. Sheb. II, 2; Aruch explains 'remove dust from the foliage' and Rashi here takes it as covering with dust the exposed roots. The context seems to favour the first explanation here adopted.

(10) After thinning olive trees, by lifting some to give more room for the other young trees, the gap left in the soil would ordinarily be filled with manure and olive trees need much water. Cf. Sheb. IV, 5, and Sifra Behar Rabad's Commentary.

(11) Or small ridges with furrows on top between the vines. V. loc. cit.

(12) Lev. XXV, 4: But the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a sabbath unto the Lord, in direct contrast to verse 3; there was therefore no further need to continue with specific instances of the prohibition, such as sowing the field and pruning the vineyard.

(13) I.e., common to both, agriculture and horticulture.

(14) [Excluding the last mentioned processes which are not common to both field and vineyard. At all events this teaching shows that a number of processes though of the secondary type are forbidden in the sabbatical year].

(15) I.e., mnemotechnical and Biblically only sowing, pruning, reaping and gleaning are forbidden explicitly. The inclusion of ploughing, digging, hoeing or watering in the prohibition is purely Rabbinic. Thus the ruling of the Mishnah that an irrigated field may be watered . . . in the sabbatical year has now been explained: by Abaye on the basis of Rabbi's view, namely, that the restrictions of the sabbatical year are not operative nowadays; and, on the other hand by Raba, on the view of the other Rabbis (who do not concede Rabbi's interpretation of Deut. XV, 2), by pointing out that 'watering' is, strictly speaking, not textually forbidden, it being a 'derivative' (secondary) process, and hence allowed by the Rabbis in the sabbatical year where damage (loss of crop) is likely.

(16) Ex. XXIII, 11.

(17) The former is for enhancing profit and the latter is prevention of loss, namely, to save the tree from bleeding or rotting.

(18) The same question is again discussed from a different angle in Palestinian schools.

(19) After having been duly cautioned.

(20) B. Pedath.

(21) As having offended against a Biblical prohibition.

(22) Because 'ploughing' is not distinctly forbidden, but is only an implied offence, for which no judicial flogging can be given.

(23) E.g., in Lev. XXV, 2-5. We have first a general ordinance in positive terms: The land shall keep a sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow . . . prune . . . gather in the produce thereof, but the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest unto the Lord (cf. Ex. XXIII, 11); then follow the particulars in negative terms. Thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of itself thou shalt not reap and the grapes of thy undressed vines thou shalt not gather (Lev. XXV, 4-5). Then follows a general rule again in positive form: It shall be a year of solemn rest for the land.

(24) According to this rule, the particulars are in such a case considered typical as illustrations serving to include in the general rule all such items as are similar to the particulars. E.g. in Ex. XXII, 8 the text first states that an oath can be judicially imposed 'for every matter of trespass' (General term). This is followed by: 'for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment' (particulars), which again is followed finally by: 'for any manner of lost thing' (General). We infer from this that an oath can be imposed for things like those specified as typical instances, but not in the case of a dispute about land, being immovable property, or in the case of sanctuary-property, as it being not one's neighbour's property, or in the case of dispute about a slave, as being a (human) chattel, or about documents, as not being 'property', but merely instruments of evidence. Similarly in the case of the sabbatical year, if the particulars are typical of the general rule, one who does any of these would break the law.

(25) But it is treated merely as a general proposition which is followed only by a particularization, in which case the general proposition does not go beyond what has actually been specified by the particularization that follows it.

(26) I.e., he interprets the Sabbatical Ordinance as a pure instance of a General-Particular-General form and takes sowing, pruning, reaping and gleaning as typical illustrative instances and, accordingly, considers 'ploughing' as included in the general terms of the Ordinance and hence as a punishable offence.

(27) I.e., that the Sabbatical Ordinance cannot be treated as a pure form of General-Particular-General, it being negative in the particulars, which amounts to saying, 'Not a, not b, not c; these, I mean, precisely, and no others'. 'Ploughing' therefore is not included among the forbidden processes and hence is not a punishable offence.

(28) For ploughing in the sabbatical year.

(29) In interpreting the import of the wording of the text, to show that there is no penalty for ploughing, although the application of the General-Particular-General rule would indicate to the contrary.

(30) I.e., ploughing.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 3b

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said [the discussion went on]: Possibly, you might say that the offender be flogged [even] for the 'extension'? But the teaching was concluded¹ to prove that he was exempt. But [said he], I know not which was the teaching, nor what was [actually] meant by 'extension'.

R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] said that the 'extension' had reference to [the inclusion of] 'ploughing' [as a punishable offence], and the argument proceeded thus: Possibly [you might say] that he should be flogged for 'ploughing' [in the sabbatical year], the rule being inferred by [treating the sabbatical ordinance as a case of] General-Particular-General; then the teaching was concluded to prove exemption. For, if it [the flogging] were correct, what is the [legal] import of all those particulars [set out in the text]?

R. Johanan said [that the 'extension' had reference to] the extra days [of restriction] which the sages had added prior to New Year; and the argument proceeded thus: Possibly [you might say] that he should be flogged for [ploughing during] the extended extra period prior to New Year which is based on the text: 'In ploughing time and in reaping time thou shalt rest.'² Then the teaching was concluded to prove exemption [from a flogging], as we shall seek to explain presently.

What is meant by 'the days [of restriction] prior to New Year'? — According to what we learned: 'Up to what date may ploughing be done in a tree field [orchard] in the pre-sabbatical year? Beth Shammai say, As long as it is for the benefit of the fruit; Beth Hillel say, Up to the Feast of Weeks; and the [practical effect of] one ruling is much the same as that of the other.'³ And up to what date may they plough a "white field"⁴ in the pre-sabbatical year? Up to when the moisture gives out and as long as people till for planting their cucumber and gourd beds. Said R. Simeon, If that is so, you have handed over the Torah for every individual to determine for himself the right time! No: [I say], a "white field" [they may till] up to Passover and a tree field up to the Feast of Weeks'.⁵ (And Beth Hillel say up to Passover.)⁶

And⁷ R. Simeon b. Pazzi reported in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who had it from Bar Kappara that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din took a vote on these two [terminal] periods⁸ and abrogated them. Said R. Zera to R. Abbahu, some say, Resh Lakish said to R. Johanan: How could Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogate a measure instituted by Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel? Surely we learned: 'No Beth din has power to nullify the words [ruling] of another Beth din unless it be superior to it in learning and number'⁹ 'He was astonished for a while';¹⁰ then he replied: I say, they thus have stipulated among themselves that whoever might thereafter wish to abrogate that [measure] could come and abrogate it.¹¹ But was it their measure? Was it not an [ancient] halachah of Moses from Sinai?¹² As [in fact] R. Assi reported R. Johanan to have said in the name of R. Nehuniah¹³ a man hailing from the valley of Beth Hauran,¹⁴ that the [laws of] 'Ten Saplings,'¹⁵ the 'Willow'¹⁶ and the 'Water Libation'¹⁷ were 'halachah' of Moses from Sinai! — Said R. Isaac, When we received on tradition that law [of extra restriction] as [an ancient] halachah, It was only in reference to 'thirty days prior to the New Year'; thereafter came those [of Beth Shammai and Hillel] and instituted [the cessation] from Passover¹⁸ and the Feast of Weeks,¹⁹ and [at the same time] they stipulated with reference to their [measure] that whoever might [thereafter] wish to abrogate [them] might come and abrogate them.²⁰

But were these [termini] merely halachah [-usages]? Were they not [based on Biblical] texts? For is it not taught: [Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest]: in ploughing time and in reaping time thou shalt rest.²¹ Says R. Akiba,²² There is no need to be told [in the second clause] to desist from ploughing or reaping in the seventh year, since it is already stated [elsewhere at length]: thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard: [that which groweth of itself thou shalt not reap].²³ [It can be taken] only [to debar] ploughing in the pre-sabbatical year

(1) Lit., 'the Talmud took it up'. (3) As explained above. (4) The sabbatical year began with the New Year. It was necessary to stop tillage before that date; when, and where, did it originate? On what authority? These are the points to be discussed now at length.

(2) Ex. XXXIV, 21 The exposition of this follows presently.

(3) Sheb. I, 1.

(4) Preparing for a grain crop, i.e., of cereals or legumina. A white field=a sown field, not planted with trees that cast a shadow.

(5) Ibid. II, 1.

(6) This bracketed part is a meaningless gloss.

(7) [So MS. M. Cur. edd. insert 'And'].

(8) Passover (Nisan) and the Feast of Weeks (Sivan); after these were abrogated, tillage was again permitted down to New Year (Tishri).

(9) 'Ed. I, 5.

(10) A phrase from Daniel IV, 16. R. Abbahu or R. Johanan was for the moment puzzled for a reply.

(11) Should the exigencies of the time demand it.

(12) I.e., a rule of immemorial practice, whose origin is unknown. Cf. our expression 'as old as the hills'. Cf. 'Ed. VIII, 7; Yad. Malachi No. 663 and W. Bacher's Tradition und Tradenten etc. (1914) p. 33ff.

(13) Also Hunya, Huna or Huna. Bacher ibid. p. 38 sect. 11.

(14) A high plain S.E. of Damascus mentioned by Ezekiel, XLVII, 18, among the boundaries of Palestine (cf. R.H. 22b). Herod established there a protectorate under Zamaris, a Babylonian Jew who offered military safety to the Babylonian pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem. V. Josephus, Antiquities XVII, 11, 1-2.

(15) A young plantation in a field of fifty by fifty cubits in dimension with at least ten saplings may be tilled entirely for their benefit, down to the edge of the sabbatical year which began with New Year's day, the first of Tishri. This implies that with old trees tilling must cease before New Year.

(16) V. infra. Willows were carried in procession once round the altar during the first six days of Tabernacles and then fixed at the side of the altar. On the seventh day the circuit was made seven times. V. Suk. 45a, where Abbahu suggests a Biblical indication, Ps. CXVIII, 27.

(17) On the same occasions the grand celebration of the water libation took place in the Temple, a golden flagon being filled with water from Siloam, was brought amidst trumpet blasts to the Temple and poured on the altar by the High Priest.

(18) For a 'white field', growing cereals and legumina.

(19) For a tree field, an orchard.

(20) And it is only these two earlier terms, Passover and Feast of Weeks, up to thirty days before New Year that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogated. Cf. J. Sheb. I, 5.

(21) Ex. XXXIV, 21.

(22) As all manner of work is forbidden on the sabbath day, the particular stress on ploughing and reaping suggested a connection between the sabbath-day and the sabbath-year.

(23) Lev. XXV, 4-5.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 4a

[which may have beneficial effects] extending into the seventh year and [likewise] to the reaping of the seventh year's crops which mature in the post-sabbatical year.¹ Says R. Ishmael, [It is purely a Sabbath law]; as the ploughing [here forbidden on Sabbath] is optional ploughing,² so is the reaping [here mentioned] optional reaping; outside this [law] is the reaping [of the new barley] for the 'omer'³ which is a religious duty [by ordinance]!⁴ — In fact said R. Nahman b. Isaac, when we received on tradition [that the pre-sabbatic restrictions had their origin in] halachah [-usage], this had reference to the permission [of tilling for the benefit] of saplings;⁵ whereas the texts are for the prohibition of old trees.⁶ But since 'halachah [-usage] allowed [tillage down to New Year] for saplings, it is not obvious that old trees were forbidden? — What we must say therefore is, the halachah [-usage] as basis for the prohibition is [necessary] according to R. Ishmael,⁷ whereas the texts [serve as basis] according to R. Akiba.

But R. Johanan said that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogated those [restrictions] on Biblical authority. What was the reason? He deduced it by equating the term 'Sabbath' common to both⁸ the Sabbath-year and the Sabbath of Creation⁹ [thus]: Just as in the case of the Sabbath Day [work is forbidden] on the day itself, but on the day before and on the day after it is allowed, so [likewise] in the Sabbath Year [tillage is forbidden] during the year itself, but in the year before and in the year after it is allowed.

To this R. Ashi demurred: On the view that it [the restriction] is a halachah [-usage] can a gezerah shawah [deduction]⁸ come and eradicate a halachah [-usage]; and [likewise] on the view that it is [based on] a Biblical text, can a gezerah shawah⁸ come and eradicate a text! — But no, said R. Ashi, Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din concurred with R. Ishmael who held that [the presabbatical restrictions] were based on a halachah-usage. And when did the tradition of such halachah-usage [apply]? During the time when the Temple was still standing, like that of the water libation,¹⁰ but in times when the Temple is no longer standing the tradition of this halachah-usage does not apply.¹¹

BUT IT MAY NOT BE WATERED FROM [STORED] RAIN NOR BY THAT OF A SWIPE-WELL. It is quite correct [to prohibit water] from a swipe-well, because that is a rather extra trouble; but rain water-what trouble is there [in using it]? — Said R. Ela, reporting R. Johanan: Rain water is prohibited as a precaution on account of the swipe-well.¹² R. Ashi said: Rain water itself may [sometimes] come to be [just as difficult to draw¹³ as] the water of a swipe-well. And they differ on [the statement of] R. Zera; for R. Zera said that Rabbah b. Jeremiah, citing Samuel, said that rivers drawing from [adjoining] water pools may be used for watering during the festival week.¹⁴ One Master¹⁵ is in agreement with [the statement of] R. Zera, while the other¹⁶ is not in agreement with [the statement of] R. Zera. The text [above stated]: ‘R. Zera said that Rabbah b. Jeremiah, citing Samuel, said that rivers drawing from [adjoining] water pools may be used for watering during the festival week’. R. Jeremiah put all objection to him [R. Zera]: BUT... NOT WATERED FROM [STORED] RAIN NOR BY THAT OF A SWIPE-WELL!¹⁷ — Said R. Zera to him: Jeremiah, my son, these Babylonian pools are like water [pools] that do not fail.¹⁸

Our Rabbis taught: Ditches and pools¹⁹ [even though] filled with water on the day before the festival are debarred from being used for watering during the festival week,²⁰ but if a canal passes between them they may be used. Said R. Papa: This is only provided that the greater part of that field obtains its supply from that canal.²¹ R. Ashi said that [they may be used] even if the greater part of that field does not obtain its supply [from that canal], because since its flow is continuous [the owner] says. if it [the field] does not get enough drink on [this] one day, it will [soon] get its drink in two or three days.’²² Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a pool gets tricklings from²³ an irrigated field [higher up], it may be used for watering another field’.²⁴ But is it not going [ultimately] to give out? — Said R. Jeremiah: For the present at any rate it is still trickling! Said Abaye: This is [permitted] only so long as the first source has not given out.²⁵

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Menassia says: Where two cultivated beds lie one above the other, one should not²⁶ draw from the [supply of the] lower to water the upper. R. Eleazar b. Simeon went even further, saying: Even in one bed, if half of it is low and the other half higher one should not draw from the low-lying part to water the upper part.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘One may raise [medallin]²⁷ for the vegetables if they are to be eaten; but if it is to improve their appearance it is forbidden’. Rabina and Rabbah of Thospia²⁸ were [once] walking on the road when they saw a certain man drawing buckets of water during the festival week.²⁹ Said Rabbah of Thospia to Rabina: Come, Sir, put a ban³⁰ on him. Said Rabina to him, But is it not taught: ‘One may raise³¹ for vegetables to be eaten’? — Replied Rabbah, Do you think that this medallin means one may raise water [in buckets]?³² [No], what medallin means is

(1) Accordingly ‘ploughing’ is Biblically forbidden in the pre-sabbatical extension and the offender would be liable to a flogging were it not for the inferences derived from the other text of Lev. XXV, 4-5, as expounded above, 3a. Cf. Tosaf. 3b s.v. hrva and Han.

(2) I.e., not ordained to be done on any particular day.

(3) ‘The sheaf of the first fruit of your (barley) harvest’. V. Lev. XXIII, 10ff. R. Ishmael holds that this may be reaped even on Sabbath. R. Ishmael's statement is for the moment irrelevant, though it comes in later. R. Akiba's dictum shows that the extension, i.e., the pre-sabbatical bar on tillage, is not merely a pristine halachah-usage, but has textual basis.

(4) Cf. M. Sheb. I, 4 and Mak., Sonc. ed. p. 48.

(5) Down to New Year's eve.

(6) Thirty days before New Year, which prohibition was extended by Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel to Passover and Feast of Weeks, according to the field.

(7) Who, unlike R. Akiba, uses that text for another point, namely, as permitting reaping the barley for the 'omer even on a Sabbath, if that is the date.

(8) Gezerah shawah (V. Glos.) which some admit and others do not.

(9) I.e., Ex. XXXIV, 21 taken with Lev. XXV, 2 ('a Sabbath-rest year-unto the Lord').

(10) Mentioned together with the tradition regarding the ten saplings, supra 3b.

(11) With the fall of the Temple and the Jewish State many of the laws appertaining to the Temple and the Land fell into abeyance owing to the force of circumstances. Recently, I. S. Zuri has attempted to establish that Rabban Gamaliel's abrogation was enacted soon after May 215 C.E. when Caracalla entered Antioch and thence marched his armies through Palestine on his way to Egypt, when the people had to pay 'annonae' to feed the armies. V. his sguvu , uthabv iuyka I, Vol. III, 58-59.

(12) If stored rain water is permitted, one will also work a shadoof.

(13) When much of it has been drawn off he will have to go deep down with his bucket, with almost as much exertion as from a shadoof.

(14) [And we do not apprehend the possibility of the pool drying up when he might go and fetch water from another river, with all the extra trouble it involves.]

(15) R. Ashi.

(16) R. Johanan, who prohibits rain water on account of a swipe-well.

(17) [Presumably because we apprehend lest he may go deep down with his bucket should the water be drawn off and the same should apply to the case of R. Zera.]

(18) And there is no likelihood of leading to exertion during the Festival Week.

(19) The former rough-cut and the latter well-made (Commentators on Alfasi). J.M.K. I, 1 reads vfhrcvu ihexhpv, which points to the Latin piscina, reservoir, swimming bath or fish-tank.

(20) Because their supply comes from a distance and may entail exertion should the supply fail.

(21) I.e., if the supply is plentiful.

(22) Because he will get what he may and if not enough will readily wait for a day or two for another chance, without going to exertion during the festival week.

(23) [So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'trickles water (which one gets) from'].

(24) Tosef M.K. I, 1; J.M.K. I, 1.

(25) But once the trickling has ceased the pool has lost its supply and becomes like a swipe-well or stored rain water likely to entail exertion.

(26) During the festival week.

(27) [ihksn either (i) 'medallin' (from vks), 'raise water by means of buckets', hence irrigate; or (ii) madlin (from kks) 'to lift (vegetables)' for thinning the beds. At present the first rendering is assumed].

(28) The capital of the Armeman district Thospitis.,

(29) To water his vegetables.

(30) t, na cf. infra 17a.

(31) ihksn or ihksn from vks to raise, draw water with bucket (hks).

(32) In the course of the festival week.

to pull out [vegetables],¹ as we learned:² 'If one is [engaged in] thinning³ vines, just as he may thin his own, so also he may thin those due to the poor;⁴ so R. Judah. R. Meir says: He is permitted [to attend] to his own but not to those of the poor'.⁵ Said Rabina: But it is taught [explicitly]: 'One may raise water for vegetables if they are to be eaten'! — Said Rabbah [of Thospia] to Rabina: If it is thus taught, that settles the matter.⁶

NOR MAY SMALL BASINS [‘UGIOTH] BE FORMED ABOUT THE VINES. What is meant by ‘ugioth?⁷ — Said Rab Judah, [What we call] banki.⁸ It is also taught thus: These are ‘ugioth; light hoeing done about the roots of olives and at the roots of vines.⁹ [But] this is not so, for did not Rab Judah allow the family of Bar-Zittai¹⁰ to make banki in their vineyards? — This is not difficult: The one statement [in the Mishnah] refers to fresh [trenchings], the other [Rab Judah's] refers to re-trenching.¹¹

R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH SAYS A [WATER] CHANNEL MAY NOT BE NEWLY MADE [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK, NOR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR; BUT THE SAGES SAY].¹² It is perfectly in order in regard to the festival week, because he performs laborious work, but what reason can there be [against making a channel] in the sabbatical year? — R. Zera and R. Abba b. Memel differ in the matter: One says [it is forbidden] because [the digger] seems to be doing spading [in his field]; the other says, because he is [thereby] preparing the banks for sowing. What is the [practical] difference between the two [explanations]? — There is a difference where water comes along forthwith; according to the one who says that [it is] because he is preparing the banks for sowing, there is [still an objection], but according to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be doing spading, there is none.¹³ But, the one who objects on the ground that he seems to be doing spading, should he not likewise object on the ground that he seems to be preparing the bank for sowing? — Rather, the [practical] difference between them is where he takes [the mould] from the trench and throws it outside. According to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be preparing the banks for sowing, there is no objection, whereas according to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be spading, there is [still an objection]. But, he who takes the view that he seems to be preparing the banks for sowing, should he not likewise admit the objection that he seems to be doing spading? — [No,] because one who does spading, as soon as he takes up a spadeful he puts it down again in its place.

Amemar taught this [clause of the] Mishnah with the explanation [that R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah forbids making a channel] ‘because he seems to be doing spading [in his field]’¹⁴ but felt some difficulty about it in view of another statement of R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah. Could R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah [said he] have held the view that wherever one seems to be spading [his field],¹⁴ it is forbidden? And he contrasted that with the [statement in the] following [Mishnah]:¹⁵ One may lay up a store of manure [in his field].¹⁴ R. Meir says he may not until he places it either three handbreadths below or three handbreadths above [the surface]. If he had some small quantity [already there] he may go on adding thereto. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah says [even then] he may not until he puts it down either three handbreadths below, or raises it three handbreadths above [the surface],¹⁶ or places it on a rock!’ — R. Zera and R. Abba b. Memel [explained this seeming discrepancy], one said: [The latter Mishnah means where], for instance, he has had the place excavated; the other said: [The reason there is because] the manure heap itself attests his intention.¹⁷

AND [A CHANNEL] THAT HAS GOT OUT OF ORDER MAYBE RE-PAIRED. What is meant by OUT OF ORDER? — Said R. Abba:¹⁸ ‘It means that if it is [now, for instance] but one handbreadth in depth, he may restore it to [a depth of] six handbreadths’. It is obvious that [to restore it] from half a handbreadth to [the original] three, seeing that there was [originally] scarcely any flow of water, it is nothing at all;¹⁹ [to deepen it] from two handbreadths to [the original] twelve²⁰ which involves extra exertion,²¹ is not [allowed]. What about [deepening it] from two [handbreadths] to [the original] seven? [Do we argue that] as in the first instance [it was explained above] he deepens it by five handbreadths, [from one to six], so here he deepens it by five handbreadths [from two to seven];²² or, maybe that as in this instance he [actually] deepens the channel by an extra handbreadth there is extra exertion, and hence it is forbidden? — It stands undecided.

Abaye allowed the people of Harmek to clear away²³ [the growths obstructing]²⁴ the canal.²⁵ R. Jeremiah allowed the people of Sacutha to dredge the canal that had become blocked.²⁶ R. Ashi allowed the people of Matha-Mehasia to clear obstructions from the river Barnis, saying that as the public obtained their drinking water from it it was virtually a [pressing] public need, and we learn: AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED.

AND IMPAIRED WATER-WORKS¹ IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN MAY BE REPAIRED AND CLEANED OUT. [That is to say only] to repair, but not to be dug [afresh]. Said R. Jacob as reporting R. Johanan: This was taught only where there is no public need; but where there is public need² for it even [fresh] digging is allowed.

And where there is a public need is digging allowed? Surely it is taught: 'Wells,³ ditches or caverns of a private person may be cleaned out, and needless to say, those of the public; but wells, ditches or caverns of the public may not be dug and still less those of a private person'.⁴ Does not that mean that [digging is not allowed] even where the public has need of it? — No, [only] where the public has no need of it. Then similarly the reference to a private person is where the private person has no need of it, but in that case is 'cleaning out' allowed? Surely it is taught: 'Wells, ditches or caverns of a private person may have water run into them, but they may not be cleaned out, nor have their cracks plastered; but those of the public may be cleaned out and their cracks may be plastered'? — But what else [are we to say] but that the private person has need of it; in which case [the references to the public is similarly where the public has need of it? But where the public has need of it, is digging forbidden? Surely it is taught: 'Wells, ditches or caverns of a private person may have water run into them or be cleaned out; but their cracks may not be plastered, nor may the scourings be put into them,⁵ nor may they be plastered with cement. But those of the public may be dug and plastered with cement'.⁶ But [if so], the first [Baraita] is difficult. Explain it thus: 'Wells, [ditches or caverns] of a private person [may be cleaned out]' — providing he has need of them, 'and needless to say those of the public' — when the public has need of them, as then, even digging is allowed.⁷ 'But wells, ditches or caverns of the public are not to be dug' — when the public has no need of them, 'still less, those of a private person', as when a private person has no need of them, even cleaning out is not allowed. R. Ashi remarked: Our own Mishnah is also precisely worded [to the same effect] as it states AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED. What is the force of ALL? Is it not meant to include digging? — No; it is to include [other instances] such as are taught [in the following]: 'They [Public Commissioners] go forth to clear the roads of thorns, to mend the broadways and [main] highways and to measure the [ritual] pools; and if any [ritual] pools be found short of forty [cubic] se'ahs of water⁸ they train a continuous flow into it [to ensure] forty se'ahs'. And whence do we know that if they did not go forth and attend to all these [public needs], then if any blood be shed there [through] this neglect [Scripture] lays [blame] on them, as if they themselves had shed it? From the instructive text, And so blood be upon thee.⁹ But surely [the Mishnah does] state these instances expressly: AND ROADS, BROADWAYS AND [RITUAL] WATER POOLS AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED! What else [then] may be included under this word ALL? Is it not digging [afresh if required by the public]? This proves it.

AND GRAVESIDES MAY BE MARKED. R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: Where is an indication in the Torah that gravesides should be marked? In the instructive text: [And when they pass through . . . the land] and one seeth a man's bone then shall he set up a sign by it.¹⁰ Said Rabina to R. Ashi, But who told us that¹¹ before Ezekiel came? — [Said the other]: Accepting your view, with regard to the statement made by R. Hisda¹² [namely]: This point we do not learn from the law of our Master Moses; we learn it from the words of [prophet] Ezekiel the son of Buzi: No alien, uncircumcised in heart and uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into My Sanctuary.¹³ [We might equally ask], who had told us that before Ezekiel came and stated it? Only, that was first learnt by oral tradition and then Ezekiel came and gave us a textual basis for it; here too, it was first learnt as an oral tradition and then Ezekiel came and gave us a textual basis for it. R. Abbahu suggested that it may be derived from this [text]: And he shall cry, 'Unclean! Unclean!'¹⁴ [That is], impurity cries out [to the passer-by] and tells him, 'Keep off!' And R. 'Uzziel, the grandson of the elder R. 'Uzziel said the same, [that] impurity cries out and tells him, 'Keep off!' But was this [text] intended for this lesson? It is required for what has been taught: And he shall cry 'Unclean! Unclean!'; [this teaches that] one must needs make his distress known to many, that many pray for mercy on his behalf? — If that be so, let the text read 'Unclean' [but once]; why has it 'Unclean', 'Unclean' [twice over]? Infer [from it] the two points. Abaye said [that the rule¹⁵ may be derived] from here: And put not a stumbling-block before the blind.¹⁶ R. Papa said: And he will say, Cast ye up, cast ye up, clear the way.¹⁷ R. Hinena suggested, Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of My people.¹⁷ R. Joshua the son of R. Idi said: And thou shalt show them the way wherein they must walk.¹⁸ Mar Zutra said: And ye shall separate the Children of Israel from their uncleanness.¹⁹ R. Ashi said: And they shall have charge of My charge,²⁰ [which implies], make safeguards to My charge. Rabina said: And to him who ordereth²¹ [we-sam] his way will I show the salvation of God.²²

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, Whoever appraises [ha-sham] his ways [in this life]²³ becomes privileged to behold the salvation of the Holy One, blessed be He, for it is said: '[And to him] who ordereth his way'.²² Read not [we-sam]²⁴ who sets [his way], but [we-sham]²⁵ who appraises the worth [of his way], him will I show the divine salvation. R. Jannai had a certain disciple who daily raised critical points [at his college]²⁶ but refrained from raising any critical points at the periodic lectures of the Festival Sabbaths²⁷

. He [R. Jannai] applied to him the text: And to him who ordereth his way will I show the salvation of God.¹

Our Rabbis taught: 'No markings are made to indicate [the presence of] a piece of flesh² [from a corpse] no larger than an olive, nor of [human] bone no larger than a barley-corn,³ nor of any [human] remains which do not diffuse defilement under 'tent'.⁴ But markings are made to indicate [the presence of] a [human] spine, a skull or the major members of a skeleton or the major number of lesser bones thereof.⁵ And the markings are not made in cases of certainty⁶ but [only] in cases of uncertainty. These are [instances of] uncertainty: Leafy bowers,⁷ jutting ledges⁸ and a Peras-area.⁹ And the markings are not placed on the site of the impurity [itself], in order to avoid wasting what is [preserved as] pure;¹⁰ nor is the marking placed far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting any space¹¹ of the Land of Israel'.¹² But does not flesh of an olive's size from a human body diffuse defilement under a tent? For we learned: 'The following diffuse defilement by tent [overspreading]: Flesh of an olive's size from a human dead body . . .!' — Said R. Papa, We speak here of an olive's size precisely which after all shrinks [to less]: far better is it that terumah and other meats that are pure¹³ should be burnt [unnecessarily] on one occasion¹⁴ than that they should be burnt continuously.¹⁵

And these are [instances] of uncertainty: Leafy bowers and jutting ledges.¹⁶ 'Leafy bowers' [means] a tree which overspreads the ground¹⁷ and 'jutting ledges' are [stones]¹⁸ projecting from wall enclosure.¹⁷ ‘And a Peras-area’: as we learned: ‘One who runs a plough over a grave makes the site a Peras-area’; and how much thereof has he thus affected? The full length of a furrow, one hundred cubits [each way].¹⁹ But does a Peras-area convey defilement by tent? Surely, Rab Judah, citing Samuel, said that one [a pilgrim] may walk across a Peras-area cautiously fanning his way [in front of him]!²⁰ Moreover, R. Judah b. Ammi, in the name of ‘Ulla, said that a Peras-area which has been [much] trampled is [considered as] clean?²¹ — Said R. Papa: ‘This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]. The former statement refers to a field where a grave has become lost;²² whereas the latter refers to a field where a grave had been run over by the plough’.²³ But is a field where a grave has been lost²⁴ [correctly] called a Peras-area? — Yes [indeed], for we learned: ‘There are three kinds of Peras-areas — [a] a field where a grave has been lost²⁵ [b] a field where a grave has been run over by the plough²⁶ and [c] the weepers’ field’.²⁷ What is the weepers’ field? — R. Joshua²⁸ b. Abba explained in the name of ‘Ulla that it is a field where they bid final farewell²⁹ to the dead. And wherefore [is it held as a defiling area]? — Said [R. Hisda, as reporting]³⁰ Abimi, [It is] because there is here a possibility³¹ of abandoned ownership.³² But does not a field where a grave has been run over by the plough require to be marked? Surely it is taught: ‘If one came upon a marked field without knowing its character,³³ then if there are trees on it, it is thereby indicated that a grave in it had been run over by the plough;³⁴ if there are no trees, it is thereby indicated that a grave has been lost in it.’³⁵ R. Judah says: [The presence of trees is no criterion] until there is some elder or disciple [to attest it], for not all are well versed on the subject [of proper markings]’! — Said R. Papa: What is taught in this [latter Baraita] refers to a field in which a grave had been lost, and which had [consequently] been marked. If there are trees on it, it is thereby indicated that a grave had been run over by the plough [subsequently]; if there are no trees on it, it is indicated that a grave had been lost in it.³⁶ But is there not a danger that the trees are situate within the field and the grave was outside?³⁷ — as ‘Ulla said [elsewhere that we speak of a case where]³⁸ the trees are situate on the boundaries [of the field] here likewise they were situate on the boundary line.³⁹

(2) As flesh soon shrinks to less than its (traditional) minimum size of an olive and is then impotent to cause defilement without direct contact, Num. XIX, 13-16; Ohal. II, 3.

(3) Which is (traditionally) the minimum size for human bone to cause defilement by direct contact. V. references in previous note and Tosaf. s.v. omg.

(4) Anything extending to one handbreadth over dead human remains represents the ‘tent’ of Num. XIX, 14, to diffuse defilement without contact, unless it is less than the minimum size.

(5) Any of these enumerated defile under cover without coming into direct contact with the object or grave. Any covering to the extent of one handbreadth, say his coat tail or sleeve spread, or hanging down over the spot, is enough to defile him, even if neither he nor his garment touch the unclean thing or spot.

(6) As people take care of their own accord not to run the risk of personal defilement or the loss of sacred meats.

(7) Lit., ‘coverings’, arbours, groves, avenues or single trees whose thick branches are full of foliage, constitute a ‘tent’, to spread the defilement to the walker; cf. Tosaf. s.v. ikht.

(8) E.g., stone copings, boards and ledges projecting from cemetery walls each way within and without, constitute a ‘tent’. These are doubtful, as one is not certain whether there is a corpse near by within.

(9) Defined lower down. On the term v. Pes., Sonc. ed. p. 492, n. 4.

(21) And need not be marked or avoided. (Han.).

(22) And, as it cannot be located, the whole field is considered a place of defilement.

(23) The plough, we assume, crushes the bones rendering them impotent to communicate tent-defilement.

(34) For the sake of the trees, this shows that a field in which a grave had been run over by the plough is marked.

(39) And since dead are not buried on the road, the grave must be among the trees and has been run over by the plough, when the field has been tilled for the good of the trees.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 6a

But perhaps the defilement lies within the field while the trees stand on the outer sides [of it]?¹ — They were planted irregularly.² Or, if you like, I may explain by what was said above: Nor is the marking placed far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting any space of the Land of Israel.³

'R. Judah says [the presence of trees is no criterion] until there be some elder or disciple [to attest that it has been ploughed], for not all are well versed in the subject [of markings]'. Said Abaye: You may infer from here, that when a scholar is resident in a place, all local matters devolve upon him.

Said Rab Judah: If one comes across a [single] stone which is marked [with lime], the space under it is defiled; if two stones [with markings] then if there is lime on the space between them, the space between is defiled, and if there is no lime between them, the intervening space is clean, even though there is no [sign of] tilling [there]. But surely it is taught: 'If one comes upon one stone which is marked, the space under it is defiled, if on two stones, if there is tilling between them, the intervening space is clean, if not, it is defiled'? — Said R. Papa. Here [it is a case where] the lime had been poured on top of the stones and got spread here and there. [Now] if there is any tilling [in the space] between them, [the space] between is clean, because it may be presumed that the [splashed] lime had got peeled off by the tilling; whereas if there is not [any trace of tilling] the lime is intended to mark the space between and it is 'defiled'.

Said R. Assi:⁴ If one boundary is marked, that side [alone] is 'defiled', but the rest of the entire field is 'clean'. If two [are marked] those [alone] are 'defiled', but the rest of the entire field is 'clean'; if three [are marked], those are 'defiled', but the rest of the entire field is clean; if the four [boundaries are marked] they are clean and the entire field [within] is 'defiled', for the Master⁵ said: 'Nor is the marking place far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting space of the Land of Israel'.⁶

AND [PUBLIC COMMISSIONERS] SET OUT [ALSO] TO INSPECT DIVERSE SEED-CROPS. But do we set out for inspecting seed-crops during the festival week? This is contradicted by the [following]: On the first of Adar announcements are made about the [contribution of] shekels and about the diverse crops. On the fifteenth thereof the scroll [of Esther] is read in the [ancient] walled cities and [commissioners] go forth to clear the roads of thorns, mend the broadways, measure the [ritual] water-pools and to perform all public needs, and they mark the gravesides and go forth to inspect the diverse seed-crops?⁷ — R. Eleazar and R. Jose b. Hanina [gave differing explanations], One said, The latter statement speaks of earlier crops,⁸ the other of later⁹ crops; the other said, In one case⁸ [they go out to attend] to grain crops, in the others to vegetable crops.

R. Assi, reporting R. Johanan said: The rule laid down [in the Mishnah] applies only when the sproutings [of the season are late and] had not become recognizable¹⁰ [before then]; but where the sproutings had become recognizable [before], they went forth about them [even earlier].

Why do we particularly set out during the festival week? R. Jacob reporting R. Johanan explained that it was because the wages given for labour are then low with us.¹¹

R. Zebid, or some say, R. Mesharsheya said: From the afore — mentioned [explanation] you may infer that when pay was given,¹² it was given them out of the Terumah of the [Shekel] Chamber;¹³ for if you should suppose that they [the owners of the fields] themselves paid, what difference does it make to us? Let them pay whatever they ask.¹⁴

And how much [constitutes an admixture]:¹⁵ Said R. Samuel b. Isaac, The same as we learned:¹⁶ Every se'ah of seeds that contains one quarter [of a kab]¹⁷

- (1) And the grave has not been disturbed at all. What is the indication of the trees in such a case?
- (2) Not in even rows, but promiscuously and thus the whole site had to be disturbed by the ploughing.
- (3) [And since the marking is in proximity to the trees, it is evident that the defilement lay between the trees].

- (15) What quantity of diverse seeds necessitate; the pulling up of the (offensive) crop?
- (16) In reference to initial sowing, Kil. II, 1.
- (17) A se'ah contains six kabs and a quarter of a kab's admixture is therefore one twenty-fourth of the se'ah, or enough seed to be sown in a field of 50 X 50 cubits.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 6b

of another kind must be reduced.¹ But it is taught: They [the authorities] introduced a rule that they should declare ownerless the [crop of the] entire field? — That is not difficult [to explain]. The former [Mishnah] states the practice before the [new] rule, while the latter [of the Baraitha] gives the practice after the [introduction] of the rule, as it is [distinctly] taught: Formerly they [the public commissioners] used to uproot [the diverse-crop], throwing it to the cattle, at which the owners were doubly pleased, for one thing that they weeded their fields for them, and again that they threw [the forbidden crop] to the cattle; thereupon they made a [new] regulation that they should pull up [the forbidden crop] and cast it on the road. And still the owners were greatly pleased, because they weeded their fields. Thereupon they instituted that they should declare ownerless the crop of the entire field.²

MISHNAH. R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS: WATER MAY BE DRAWN FROM [ONE] TREE TO [ANOTHER] TREE,³ PROVIDED THE WHOLE FIELD IS NOT WATERED IN THIS WAY.⁴ SEEDS⁵ THAT HAVE NOT HAD [ANY] DRINK BEFORE THE FESTIVAL WEEK MAY NOT BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK.⁶ THE SAGES HOWEVER ALLOW IT IN BOTH THE ONE CASE AND THE OTHER.⁷

GEMARA. [NOT...THE ENTIRE FIELD]. Said Rab Judah,⁸ If the field has a clayey⁹ soil he may [water it].¹⁰ It is likewise taught:¹¹ When they said¹² that it is forbidden to water them during the festival [week], they referred only to seeds that had not drunk before the festival; but seeds that had drunk before the festival may [again] be watered during the festival [week]; and if the field was a clayey soil, it is allowed [to water it]. And a bare¹³ field is not watered during the festival [week]; but the Sages allow it¹⁴ in the one case and in the other. Said Rabina: You may infer from here that a garden plot may be sprinkled¹⁵ in the festival week. For in the case of a bare field, why is it [permitted]?¹⁶ Because it just quickens a tardy soil; here too, it just quickens a tardy soil.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘A white field may be sprinkled¹⁷ in the sabbatical year, but not during the festival [week]’. But it has been taught: It may be sprinkled either in the sabbatical year or during the festival [week]?¹⁸ — Said R. Huna, This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]; the former [quotation] states the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob¹⁹ and the latter that of the Rabbis.²⁰

Another [Baraita] taught: A white field may be²¹ sprinkled in the pre-sabbatical year so that the greens may sprout in the sabbatical year. Nay, more, a white field may be²¹ sprinkled in the sabbatical year, so that the greens may sprout [better] in the post-sabbatical year.

MISHNAH. MOLES AND MICE MAY BE TRAPPED IN A TREE-FIELD OR WHITE FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY²² DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR: BUT THE SAGES²³ SAY, IN THE TREE-FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY AND IN THE WHITE FIELD NOT IN THE USUAL WAY: AND A BREACH MAY BE BLOCKED UP DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR ONE MAY BUILD IN THE USUAL WAY.

GEMARA. What is ESHUTH?²⁴ — Said Rab Judah: [It is] a creature which has no eyes. Raba b. Ishmael, some say, R. Yemar b. Shelemia, said, What [may be the] text [for this]? — ‘Let them [the wicked] be as a snail which melteth and passeth away; like the young mole [esheth]²⁵ which hath not seen the sun.’²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: Moles and mice may be trapped in a white field and in a tree-field in the usual way and ants’ holes may also be destroyed. How are they destroyed? Rabbah Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Earth is fetched from one hole and put into another and they²⁷ strangle each other. R. Yemar b. Shelemia said in the name of Abaye, That is [effective] only if [the nests are] situate on two sides of the river; and that [again], if there is no bridge; and that [again], if there is not [even] a [crossing] plank; and that [again], if there is not even a rope [to cross by].

(1) Or when already sown and sprouting the admixture is to be pulled up.

(2) As a deterrent, s.v. Shek. 1, 3.

(3) If the fruit-trees need it.

(4) I.e., under this pretext.

(5) Grain crops, white and leguminous, in contrast to fruit-trees.

(6) Either because they then require fuller attention, entailing greater exertion, or to discourage leaving the task for this week of leisure.

(7) The Sages disagree in both clauses of the Mishnah, i.e., that they do allow watering the entire orchard by training from tree to tree, and allow watering seeds even if they had not been watered before the festival.

(15) By hand, jug or watering pot but not by regular irrigation, I.e., running the water into the field by ridges or channels.

(17) Of cereals and legumina. Rashi here takes it as a Baal-field, i.e., one favourably situated as regards rain and sunshine.

(18) This is in agreement with Rashi and Tosaf. according to the reading in our text. Var. lec.: 'May not be sprinkled... neither in the sabbatical year nor during the festival (week)'. V. Han. (21) Tosef. Sheb. II, 1 reads 'a field'.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 7a

How much [apart]? — Up to a parasang.¹

R. JUDAH² SAYS: IN THE TREE-FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY AND IN THE WHITE FIELD NOT IN THE USUAL WAY. Our Rabbis taught: How is the usual way? He digs a hole and suspends a trap in it. How is the unusual way? He drives a stake [into the spot] or strikes it with a pick and flattens out the soil underneath.³ It is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar⁴ says, When they⁵ said, ['And in the white field not in the usual way'], they said it only in reference to a white field situate near the city; but in a white field that is situate near a tree-field [they may trap them] even in the usual way, lest these [pests] come away from the white field and destroy the tree-field.

AND A BREACH IS BLOCKED UP DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. How is it 'blocked up'? — Said R. Joseph: With [a hurdle made of] twigs and daphne stakes. In a Baraita it is taught: 'Loose rubble is piled up without being plastered with clay.'⁶ Said R. Hisda, This⁷ is taught only with regard to a garden wall,⁸ but the wall of a court⁹ is built in the usual way. Might one suggest that the following supports him: A wall that is bulging out into the public domain may be pulled down and built in the usual way, because it constitutes a danger [to the passers-by]!¹⁰ — [Not necessarily]. There the reason is as stated: ‘Because it constitutes a danger’. Some [put the argument] as follows: Come and hear: A wall that is bulging out into the public domain may be pulled down and built in the ordinary way, because it constitutes a danger. That is, where it constitutes a danger he may, but if it is not a danger he may not build. May we see in this a confutation of R. Hisda? — [Not necessarily], as R. Hisda might reply: There¹¹ he may ‘pull down and build’, whereas here¹² he may build¹³ but not pull down. Then let one in that case¹¹ likewise [merely] pull down¹⁴ and not build!¹⁵ — If so, he might refrain even from pulling down.¹⁶ R. Ashi said: Our Mishnah, here, gives an indication to the same effect,¹⁷ for it states: BUT IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR, ONE BUILDS IN THE ORDINARY WAY. Now of what is it [that he may block up the breach]? If it means [the wall of] his courtyard, does this need to be stated?¹⁸ It can only be, therefore [a breach in] his garden [wall] although he might seem to be doing it in order to safeguard his fruits.¹⁹ You can infer it [from this].

MISHNAH.²⁰ R. MEIR SAYS: AN [INITIAL]²¹ INSPECTION OF LEPROUS SYMPTOMS MAY BE MADE [DURING THE FESTIVAL ‘WEEK’]²² FOR [THE PRIEST TO MAKE] A LENIENT PRONOUNCEMENT²³ [ON THE FINDINGS], BUT NOT TO MAKE A SEVERE²⁴ PRONOUNCEMENT; BUT THE SAGES SAY: [IT IS TO BE MADE] NEITHER FOR A LENIENT NOR FOR A SEVERE PRONOUNCEMENT.²⁵

GEMARA. It is taught: R. Meir says that an inspection is made [during the festival week] to make a lenient pronouncement but not for a severe one. R. Jose says: Neither for making a lenient nor a severe pronouncement;²⁶ as, if you arrive at the necessity of having to make a lenient pronouncement [on the findings] you are [likewise] bound to make a severe pronouncement. Said Rabbi: R. Meir's statement seems appropriately applied to the case of an [observational] detention²⁷ and R. Jose's to that of a decided leper.²⁸

Said Raba, In the case of one who is [as yet nominally] ‘clean’,²⁹ all are agreed that he is not examined.³⁰ In regard to one under preliminary [observational] detention, all agree that he is examined;³¹ where a difference of opinion arises is

- (15) During the festival week, as in the other private case.
- (16) It is therefore ultimately a case of public need which may be performed during the festival week. Cf J.M.K. a.l., 'R. Hananiah in the name of R. Johanan (said), They permitted the last act thereof by reason of the first (the danger)'.
- (17) As R. Hisda's interpretation.
- (18) That he may build it in the ordinary way (cf. the discussion above).
- (19) 'Yet he may in the usual way in the Sabbatical year, but not in Festival week'.
- (20) The technical points involved in the discussion of this Mishnah bearing on the diagnosis of the symptoms of (biblical) leprosy and the treatment of the patient are the following: (a) The diagnosis may be made by any expert, priest or layman, 'save that the pronouncement of "cleanness" or "uncleanness" is assigned to the priest: if the priest be told that the man is "clean", he pronounces him clean; if he be told the man is "unclean", he pronounces him unclean'. Neg. III, 1. (b) On the findings of the first inspection the priest pronounced the patient either (i) as 'clean' and discharged, or as 'unclean', to be isolated; and (ii) in some cases of doubt, to be remanded for seven days' observational detention. Cf. Lev. XIII, 2-4ff; Neg. III, 3-4. (c) After a second inspection in doubtful cases, the priest pronounced the patient either 'clean' or 'unclean' as before, or if still in doubt a further remand for seven days' observational detention. Cf. Lev. ibid. 5-8; 13-17; Neg. ibid. 5-6. (d) On the third and final inspection he declared him 'clean' and discharged or 'unclean' to be isolated, until he recovered from his affection. During these periods the patient was allowed to consort with his wife. (e) On his recovery the patient went through two ritual purifications, (i) a preliminary, outside the town and returned home for seven days, during which, however, he was not to consort with his wife; cf. Lev. XIV, 2-8; Neg. XIV, 1-2. He then went through a second ritual purification which admitted him to the sanctuary for the sacrificial rites. Lev. XIV, 9ff; Neg. ibid. 3 and 7ff.
- (21) vkj , C seems best omitted here, as seems apparent from Raba's comment infra, and other ancient texts, e.g., Asheri and commentaries of Alfasi, although our editions of Alfasi as well as the Mishnah texts (Babylonian and Palestinian) have it. - (22) This (bracketed) expression is in the Mishnah text and is essential here.
- (23) If the findings warrant it, to pronounce him 'clean'; and if not, to withhold the adverse pronouncement pending the festival.
- (24) If the symptoms are unfavourable, to order an observational detention (first or second), or his isolation as a confirmed 'unclean' leper. Cf. supra, n. 11, b, c, and d.
- (25) I.e., no inspection is to be made during the festival week.
- (26) I.e., the view adopted by the Sages (in the Mishnah).
- (27) V. p. 35, n. 3.
- (28) After the first or second detention. V. the following discussion by Raba.
- (29) I.e., who has not yet submitted to an inspection.
- (30) During the festival.
- (31) If he is pronounced 'clean' he is happy; if he is remanded for a second period he is no worse off.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 7b

in the case of one under a second [observational] detention: one Master [R. Meir] considers that it is left to [the discretion of] the priest, so that if the patient is [found] 'clean' he declares him 'clean', and if he is [found] 'unclean' he holds his peace; while the other Master [R. Jose] considers that, [since] it is written: [This is the law of the plague and leprosy. . .], to pronounce it clean or unclean,¹ [the priest has no choice].²

The Master said: Said Rabbi, R. Jose's statement seems appropriately applied to the case of a decided leper³ and R. Meir's to one under [observational] detention.⁴ But the reverse⁵ is taught [elsewhere]? — Both versions are [variant] tannaitic interpretations of Rabbi's observation. One [authority]⁶ is of the opinion that the patient prefers the company of the world at large⁷ [during the Festival], while the other [authority]⁸ holds that he prefers to retain his wife's company.⁹

Is that to say that [according to Rabbi]¹⁰ a confirmed leper may have the use of the [conjugal] bed? — [Yes], it is taught: But he shall dwell outside his tent seven days,¹¹ [that is] he shall be¹² precluded from the use of the [conjugal] bed; for 'tent' means nothing but [living with] his wife, as it is said: Go, say unto them, return ye unto your tents.¹³ R. Judah says:¹⁴ [It is written,] [And after he is cleansed] they shall reckon for him seven days,¹⁵ [which implies that he is precluded only] while counting his seven days ['after he is cleansed] but not while he is a confirmed leper'. R. Jose b. Judah says: '[I take it to mean he is precluded] while counting seven days [and] all the more so while he is a confirmed leper'. 'And' 'said R. Hiyya: 'I argued on this point before Rabbi'. Our Master! [said I], You taught that [King] Jotham could not have been born unto Uziah¹⁶ save during the time that he was a confirmed leper,¹⁷ [to which] Rabbi replied, 'and I said so too'.¹⁸

Wherein do they differ? — R. Jose b. Judah argues that as the All Merciful has plainly indicated¹⁹ that a convalescent leper ['shall dwell outside his tent']²⁰ while counting his seven days [of preliminary ritual purification] it is all the more [to be expected that he be apart from his wife] while being in the state of a confirmed leper; and the [other] Master [Rabbi] argues that what has been plainly indicated is [to be kept as] indicated and what has not been indicated is not [to be assumed as] indicated.²¹

[Reverting to Raba's explanation above], do you mean to say that [the postponement of an unfavourable pronouncement or of the time of inspection]²² is [solely] dependent on the discretion of the priest?²³ — Yea, indeed, as it is taught [in the following]: And on a day when [raw flesh] shall be seen in him [he shall be unclean; and the priest shall lood on the raw flesh and pronounce him unclean],²⁴ which means that there is a day when you do see it in him as well as a day when you do not see it in him. Hence said they [the Sages] that if a groom developed symptoms of leprosy they grant him [delay of inspection to the end of] the seven days of the [marriage] feast,²⁵ whether it be his person, or his house²⁶ or his garment²⁷ [that is affected]; and likewise [if the symptoms developed] during a festival they grant him [the patient] all²⁸ the seven days of the festival: thus R. Judah. Rabbi says: There is no need [to resort to this text] as it says: And the priest shall command that they empty the house²⁹ [before the priest goes in to see the plague that all that is in the house be not made unclean].³⁰ Now if [the inspection is] here delayed for his convenience, which is just an optional [matter],³¹ may it not all the more be deferred for his [due observance of a] religious obligation?³² What is the [actual] issue between them? — Said Abaye: Merely the different expository results obtained by each from his text. And Rab said, it is the delay of inspection in an optional [matter]³³ that is the issue between them, R. Judah [holding] that from the [other] text [cited above by Rabbi]³⁴ we cannot learn [this],³⁵ as it is an anomaly,³⁶

- (2) And he must declare one or the other, according to his findings.
- (3) To make no inspection so as to avoid the adverse decision being given in the festival week.
- (4) The order of the statements is reversed but not the substance.
- (5) Viz., that R. Jose's ruling is appropriate to a case under second observation and R. Meir's to that of a confirmed leper.
- (6) The second Baraitha which regards the view of R. Meir as appropriate to a confirmed leper and that of R. Jose to a case under second detention.
- (7) Thus: R. Meir, having in mind a confirmed leper, says: 'Inspect him now to mitigate his plight. If he is still a leper, he loses nothing. If he is found cured, he can at once get back to the town by beginning his first ritual cleansing; and although he has thereupon to part from his wife for seven days, he does not mind it as he prefers to get back to his friends in town'. And R. Jose, thinking of the case of a second detention, says: 'No inspection! For if you find him a leper you must confirm him as such and send him into complete isolation, right away from everybody (save from his wife)'.
- (8) The first Baraitha quoted.
- (9) Thus: R. Jose, thinking of a confirmed leper says: 'No inspection! For if you examine and find him clean" (cured), he must at once begin counting seven days of his ceremonial cleansing (referred to infra) and live apart from his wife. Leave him alone, therefore, just now; he prefers his wife's company to getting back to the town'. And R. Meir, thinking of a case of second observation, says: 'Examine him to ease his plight. If you find him "clean" (cured) he is happy with the favourable decision; if "unclean", (make no pronouncement just yet, or) even if you declare him a confirmed leper and he had to be strictly isolated, he will not be much worse off, as he still retains his wife's company'.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 8a

inasmuch as wood and stones elsewhere are not subject to [ceremonial] uncleanness whereas here [in a house affected by leprosy] they are [made] subject to uncleanness. And [on the other hand] Rabbi says [that this text] is also needed.¹ For had the All Merciful prescribed [only], 'And on a day when [raw flesh] shall be seen in him . . .' I might have said that postponement [of inspection or pronouncement on the findings] is granted only for the [due observance of a] religious obligation, but not for the sake of an optional [matter]; therefore did the All Merciful prescribe also, 'And the priest shall command'. Again, had the All Merciful prescribed only 'And the priest shall command that they empty the house . . .', I might have said that [postponement is granted] in the case of these effects [of the house] because the uncleanness is not that of a person, but where the uncleanness is that of a person I might say that the priest should inspect him, [without delay]: therefore it is necessary [to have both texts].

The Master said: 'There is a day when you do see it in him and there is a day when you do not see it in him. How is this implied? — Said Abaye, If it is just so,² the Divine Law should have written: 'On a day [when]'; what then is the [import of] 'And on a day [when]'? From this you infer that there is 'a day' when you see in him . . . and there is 'a day' when you do not see . . . in him. Raba said: The whole text³ is redundant altogether for if it be just so,⁴ Divine Law might have had 'And when [raw flesh] is seen [in him]'. What then is the import of the [amplification] 'And on a day'?⁵ From this infer that there is a day when you do see it in him and there is a day when you do not see it in him.⁶ And Abaye?⁷ He needs that [to teach that the inspection is held] by 'day', and not at night.⁸ And whence derives Raba this [point] 'by day and not at night'? — It is derived by him from, 'According to all the sight of the eyes of the priest'.⁹ And Abaye? — He needs that [text] to exclude a person blind in one eye [inspecting a leper]. But does not Raba also require this text for that same point? — Yea, [he does] so also. But then, whence [does he derive the point] 'by day but not at night'? — He derives it from, 'Like as a plague was seen by me in the house',¹⁰ [that is, seen] by me, not by [the aid of] my [candle] light. And Abaye?¹¹ — If he did learn from there, I might have said that these [restrictions] obtain [only] where the uncleanness is not personal [of one's body]; but where uncleanness is that of the body, [it may be inspected] also by one's [candle] light. [Therefore] the [original] text¹² conveys it to us [best].

MISHNAH. FURTHERMORE R. MEIR SAID, A MAN MAY GATHER¹³ HIS FATHER'S AND MOTHER'S BONES,¹⁴ SINCE THIS IS [AN OCCASION] 'OF JOY' FOR HIM;¹⁵ R. JOSE SAYS, IT IS AN [OCCASION] 'OF MOURNING'¹⁶ FOR HIM. A PERSON SHOULD NOT STIR UP WAILING¹⁷ FOR HIS DEAD, NOR HOLD A LAMENTATION¹⁸ FOR HIM THIRTY DAYS BEFORE A FEAST.

GEMARA. AS IT IS A JOY FOR HIM. [The following] was cited in contrast to this: 'One who gathers his father's or mother's bones holds himself in mourning for them all the day,¹⁹ but in the evening he does not hold himself in mourning for them [any longer].' And R. Hisda commented thereon, even if he had them by him tied up in a sheet.²⁰ Said Abaye, I should suggest [it means], 'because the joyousness of the feast prevails with him'.²¹

A PERSON SHOULD NOT STIR UP A WAILING FOR HIS DEAD: What is the meaning of 'stirring up a wailing for one's dead'? Rab said: In Palestine [it is customary that] whenever a professional lamenter comes round people say, 'Let all those who are sore at heart weep with him.

THIRTY DAYS BEFORE A FEAST. Why [just] thirty days? R. Kahana said that Rab Judah as reporting Rab told him that once it happened that a man saved money to 'go up for the feast'²² [to Jerusalem] when a [professional] lamenter came and stopped at his door and the wife took her husband's savings and gave them to him, and so he was prevented from going. Then it was that they [the Rabbis] said, One should not stir up a wailing for his dead, nor hold a [funerary] lament for him thirty days before a Feast; but Samuel gave another reason, namely,

(1) I.e., although Rabbi holds that delay is afforded in the case of body leprosy even for the sake of an optional matter on the analogy of leprosy of houses etc., yet he requires the verse quoted by R. Judah.

(2) To be read just ordinarily.

(3) The word 'on a day'.

(4) To be read just ordinarily.

(5) Which suggests, 'yet another day'.

(6) Cf. Yeb. 72b.

(7) Why does he not explain thus the redundant phrase 'on a day'?

(8) Cf. Shab. 132a.

(9) Lev. XIII. 12, so lit. This implies that it must be held by day when it can be seen well.

(10) Ibid. XIV, 35.

(11) Why does he not derive it from this latter text.

(12) 'And on a day etc.' that there is a time when you see etc.

(13) During the festival (week).

(14) It was an ancient custom to give first a temporary burial, and after the flesh had decayed to transfer the bones to a reserved tomb or mausoleum, where they were kept in cedar or marble coffins. Cf. Sem. XII.

(15) To perform a filial duty while he is free to go and 'bring them home' to their assigned resting place. There is another possible meaning, see the discussion later.

(16) And should not be undertaken during the festival week.

(17) The meaning apparently is (as explained by Rab later) to join others in lamenting their dead and resuscitate ones own old grief on the occasion. A funeral in the town or village provided a good occasion for such a renewed lament, when professional funerary orators, 'lamenters' and female dirge-singers, were available.

(18) I.e., The ceremonial lament for an individual at the time of his death and funeral.

(19) Contrary to R. Meir who allows it during the festival week and furthermore says, 'it is a joy for him'.

(20) Even if he had not gathered them himself that day, their presence is mournful enough and it is surprising that R. Meir allowed transference and even said 'it was a joy for him'.

(21) Not that it is an occasion of joy, but that the joy of the festive season prevails in dispensing with formal mourning. Or, that the performance of his filial duty will afford him a sense of satisfaction throughout the remaining festival days (J.M.K.).

(22) On one of the three pilgrim feasts. V. Deut. XVI, 16. Cf. Ex. XXIII, 14ff. ibid. XXXIV, 23. The festival atmosphere is introduced by the study and discussion of its laws thirty days before. Pes. 6b.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 8b

because the dead cannot be put out of mind and heart for [at least] thirty days. What practical difference is there between the two [explanations]? — There is [a difference] between them, where [say], the [professional] lamenter does it without a charge.¹

MISHNAH. KUKIN² AND BURIAL PLACES³ MAY NOT BE DUG IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: BUT KUKIN MAY BE ADAPTED⁴ DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND A NIBREKETH⁵ MAY BE MADE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND A BOX, WITH THE DEAD [BODY] CLOSE BY IN THE COURT [YARD]: R. JUDAH FORBIDS, UNLESS THERE ARE SAWN BOARDS AT HAND.

GEMARA. What are KUKIN and what are BURIAL PLACES? — Said Rab Judah, kukin are [recesses made] by excavation and 'burial-places' [are structures made by] building. It is [actually] taught thus: 'These are kukin and these are burial places: Kukin, are [niches made] by excavation and 'burial places' are [structures made] by building'.

BUT KUKIN MAY BE ADAPTED. How are they adapted? — Rab Judah said: If [for instance] one is [too] long it may be shortened. A. Tanna taught: 'He lengthens or shortens [the recess] within⁶ [the cave]'.

AND THEY [MAY] MAKE A NIBREKETH⁷ . . . What is NIBREKETH?⁸ — Rab Judah said: It is [the same as] bekia'.⁹ But then, is it not taught: 'The nibreketh and the bekia' [etc.]?¹⁰ — Abaye, or as some say R. Kahana, replied [They have the same relation as] a trough and a troughlet.¹¹

AND A RON WITH THE DEAD [BODY] CLOSE BY IN THE COURT [YARD]. We learn here what our Rabbis taught [elsewhere]: 'They [may] do all that the dead requires, they cut his hair and wash a garment for him and make him a box of boards that had been sawn on the day before the Festival. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, they [may] even bring trees and he saws them [into] boards in his house, behind closed doors'.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT TAKE A WIFE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], WHETHER A VIRGIN OR A WIDOW, NOR EFFECT A LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,¹² AS IT IS A REJOICING FOR THE GROOM; BUT ONE MAY REMARRY HIS DIVORCED WIFE. AND A WOMAN MAY MAKE HER ADORNMENTS IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. R. JUDAH SAYS, SHE MAY NOT USE LIME,¹³ AS THAT IS A [TEMPORARY] DISFIGUREMENT TO HER. AN ORDINARY PERSON SEWS IN THE USUAL WAY; BUT A CRAFTSMAN SEWS A TUCK-STITCH.¹⁴ AND THE CORDS¹⁵ IN BED-FRAMES MAY BE INTERLACED. R. JOSE SAYS, THEY MAY [ONLY] BE TIGHTENED. GEMARA. [A REJOICING FOR THE GROOM]. And if it is a rejoicing for him, what is amiss? — Said Rab Judah, as reporting Samuel, and so said R. Eleazar, as reporting R. Oshaia — and some say, R. Eleazar, as reporting R. Hanina: — It is [barred], because one ‘rejoicing’ may not be merged in another ‘rejoicing’.¹⁶ Rabbah son of R. Huna said: It is [barred] because he abandons the ‘rejoicing’ of the festival and busies himself with that of his wife. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: That explanation of Rabbah son of R. Huna is the same as that given by Rab. For R. Daniel b. Kattina reporting Rab, said, Whence [is the ruling] that ONE MAY NOT TAKE A WIFE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]? For it is said, And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast,¹⁷ [that is,] in ‘thy feast’, but not with thy [new] wife [instead]. ‘Ulla said, [It is] because of the exertion [it occasions]. R. Isaac b. Nappaha said, Because it may cause a decline in marriage and parenthood.¹⁸

An objection was raised: ‘All those who have been declared to be forbidden to take wives during the festival [week]

(1) According to the former view (of Rab), even if performed gratis it may not be held, as the bitterness and grief are thereby being roused too near the festive time. Cf. Tosaf. s.v. tes.

(2) ihfuf (plural of luf) are loculi, or recesses, excavated in the sides of a sepulchral cave. V. B.B. 100bff, (Sonc. ed. p. 421ff.)

(3) A sepulchral tomb, mausoleum, built above the ground.

(4) I.e., one of the loculi already excavated may be adapted to receive a particular corpse during the festival week.

(5) , frcb seems to denote a kind of (stone) tank, or trough used by fullers in which they soaked and cleansed soiled woollens. Cf. B.B. 19a. (Sonc. ed. p. 96). From the context however, it is quite obvious as Ritba points out — that here it is not the fuller's trough or tank, but the dead man's sarcophagus, a stone, clay or wooden coffin (box) that is allowed, such as the labella-troughs used as coffins.

(6) Tosef. M.K. I, 9.

(7) V. p. 42, n. 5.

(8) This word (connected with vfrc — the fuller's trench or pool in Isa. VII, 3) is most probably of Assyrian origin as the form with initial N instead of M suggests, cf. , cfrn with narkabtu. V. J.H.

(9) A small hollow creek.

(10) Which shows that they are not identical.

(11) Lit. , ‘son of a trough’.

(12) The marriage of a deceased's brother's widow, if the deceased had died absolutely childless. This was an obligation on the brother to keep his deceased brother's memory alive. Deut. XXV, 5ff.

(13) As a depilatory.

(14) Or with irregular stitches, like a dog's teeth. It means here that a craftsman should not do skilled work, only what is barely needed for the festival week.

(15) Or girths that support the bedding.

(16) I.e., the festival will lose its own significance in the marriage festivities.

(17) Deut. XVI, 14.

(18) Lit., '(the precept of) being fruitful and multiplying. If marriages were to be deferred till the festival season when people are free, there would be a likelihood that some might never take place at other times, apart from the congestion that such a practice might cause; and others might come to nothing because of the delay through innumerable other causes. Marriage and parenthood are a primary duty of man and should receive every consideration. Cf. Gen. I, 27-28; II, 18, 24; IX, 1; Isa. XLV, 18.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 9a

are free to marry on the day previous to the festival', which presents a difficulty to all those authorities. — There is no difficulty: As to one who states [that it is forbidden] because of the 'rejoicing', [it may be said that] the main rejoicing [of a marriage celebration] lasts mainly one day.¹ As to the one who states [that it is] because of the exertion [it occasions here too] the main exertion falls on one day.¹ As to the one who says [that it is] because it may lead to a decline in marriage and parenthood, [it may be said] that for the sake of one day² a person would not put himself off [indefinitely].³ Whence do we derive the principle that 'rejoicing should not be merged in rejoicing'? From the text: So Solomon made the feast at that time and all Israel with him, a great congregation from the entrance of Hamath unto the Brook of Egypt, before the Lord our God seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.⁴ Now, if it is the fact that one rejoicing may be merged in another rejoicing, he should have kept back the consecration ceremony [of the Temple] for the time of the feast and then have held it for seven days [concurrently], for both one and the other.⁵ Maybe that the rule is [only] that we should not [deliberately keep a marriage] for the time of a festival,⁶ but where it so turns out to be [opportune], we might as well hold it then? — [If so], Solomon should have left some small part [unfinished].⁷ But perhaps this could not be done because we brook no delay in the building of the Temple!⁸ — Then he could have left [say], an ell of the Ravens' Scare Palisade.⁹ [But, it may be asked,] The ell of the Ravens' Scare Palisade was an essential part of the Temple building!¹⁰ Rather [it is derived] from [the fact that] the text is redundant. Consider, it is written 'fourteen days', wherefore the need of 'seven days and seven days'? Infer from this that these [first] seven days and those [second] seven days were distinct from each other.

R. Parnak, reporting R. Johanan, said that that year Israel did not observe the Day of Atonement, whereat they were perturbed, saying, that perhaps the enemies of Israel¹¹ had thereby incurred their doom;¹² whereat a Bath Kol¹³ came forth and announced to them: 'All of you are destined for the life of the world to come.'¹⁴ What was the basis of their exposition? — They argued a fortiori [thus]: If within the Tabernacle, the sanctity of which was not to be in perpetuity,¹⁵ yet an individual's sacrificial gifts¹⁶ were allowed [at the consecration] to be offered on the Sabbath day,¹⁷ which [ordinarily] is an offence punishable by stoning¹⁸ to death; all the more is it the case [that it is permitted] with the Temple, the sanctification of which is to be for ever, and with public¹⁹ offerings, and that on the Day of Atonement, whose desecration is an offence punished only by kareth! But then, why were they perturbed? — Because there [in the former case] the offerings were brought as dues to the Supreme Being;²⁰ whereas here, they were brought for their [own] common needs.²¹ Then here too, should they not have made their offerings without partaking [on that day] of any meat or drink?²² — There is no joyous celebration without eating and drinking.²³

Whence do we know that at [the consecration of] the Tabernacle the Sabbath restrictions were suspended? Shall I say because it is written, ‘On the first day [So-and-so offered] . . . on the seventh²⁴ day [So-and-so offered], then [say I], maybe it means the seventh day [in the order] of the offerings?’²⁵ Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: The text says, ‘On the day of the eleventh, day’²⁶ just as a day is continuous, so were the eleven days continuous.²⁷ But perhaps, it means [continuous] on days appropriate?’ — Then there is yet another such text, On the day of the twelfth day,²⁸ — just as a day was continuous, so had the whole twelve days been entirely continuous. But that too, maybe means only continuous on days appropriate? — If that be so, why do I require two [peculiarly worded] texts?

Again, whence do we know that during the consecration of the Temple the restrictions of the Day of Atonement were suspended? — Shall I say because it is written, ‘even fourteen days’, maybe it means days appropriate?²⁹ — That is learnt from the analogy between the repeated word ‘day’ here and in the other place.³⁰

‘Whereat a Bath kol came forth and announced to them: "All of you are destined for the life of the world to come".’ And whence know we that pardon was granted them? — For R. Tahlifa taught: [It is written], On the eighth day he sent the people away and they blessed the king and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the Lord had shown unto David His Servant and to Israel His people.³¹ ‘To their tents’, that is, they went [home] and found their wives in [a state] of purity³² [to receive their husbands]; joyful’, that is, that they had enjoyed the radiance of the Shechinah,³³ ‘and glad of heart’, that is, each man's wife conceived and bore him a male child. ‘For all the goodness’ that is, a Bath kol had come forth and announced to them: ‘All of you are destined for the life of the world to come ; That the Lord had shown unto David His servant and to Israel His people’: It is perfectly clear [as to what is referred to] by ‘all the goodness shown to Israel His people’, as indicating that God had granted them pardon for their sin against [the non-observance of] the Day of Atonement; but what is the point of ‘the goodness shown unto David His servant’? — Said Rab Judah, as reporting Rab; At the moment when Solomon wanted to bring the Ark into the Temple, the gates held fast together. Solomon recited [a prayer of] four and twenty [expressions of] intercession³⁴ but had no response. He began [anew] and said: lift up your heads, O ye gates³⁵ and again he had no response. As soon as [however] he said: [Now therefore arise, O Lord God . . . Thou and the Ark of Thy strength . . .] O Lord, turn not away the face of Thine anointed, remember the good deeds of David Thy servant,³⁶ he was answered forthwith.³⁷ At that moment the faces of David's foes turned [livid] like the [blackened] sides of a pot and all became aware that the Holy One, blessed be He, had pardoned David that misdeed.³⁸

R. Jonathan b.'Asmai³⁹ and R. Judah son of proselyte parents were studying the section of ‘Vows’⁴⁰ at the school of R. Simeon b. Yohai. They had taken leave from him in the evening, but in the morning they came and again took leave from him. Said he to them: But did you not take leave of me yesternight? Said they to him: Our Master, You taught us, a disciple who had taken leave from his Master and remained overnight in the city must needs take leave from him once again, for it is said: ‘On the eighth day⁴¹ he [King Solomon] sent the people away and they blessed the King,⁴² and [then] it is written: ‘And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away’.⁴³ Hence we learn from here that a disciple who had taken leave from his Master and remained overnight in the city must needs take leave from him once again. Said he to his son, ‘These are men of countenance,⁴⁴ go along with them, that they may bless you’. He went and found them comparing text with text: It is written: Balance the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established;⁴⁵ and it is written: Lest thou shouldst balance the path of life?⁴⁶ It is not difficult [to explain]: the former text applies where an obligation can be discharged through another person:⁴⁷

the latter where the obligation cannot be discharged through another person.¹ Again they were sitting and enquiring [into the following]: It is written: She [Wisdom]² is more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her',³ [which implies] that heaven's demands [of you] are comparable to Her,⁴ Again it is written: And all things desirable are not to be compared unto Her,⁵ [which means] that even things that are of Heaven's desire are not comparable to Her?⁶ The former text applies where the duty can be discharged through others, the latter — where the Duty cannot be discharged through others. Then [turning to him] they said: 'What is your business here?'⁷ He replied: 'Father told me, "Go along with them that they may bless you".⁸ Said they to him: 'May it be [Heaven's] pleasure that you sow and mow not; that what you bring in go not out; that what goes out you bring not in; that your house be desolate and your inn be inhabited; that your board be disturbed and you behold not a new year'. 'When he came home to his father, he said to him: 'So far were they from blessing me that they [even] distressed me sorely⁷. His father asked him: 'What did they say to you?' — They said thus and thus. Said the father to him: 'Those are all blessings. That "you sow and mow not [means], that you beget children and they do not die. That "what you bring in go not out" [means], that you bring home daughters-in-law and your sons do not die, so that their wives need not leave again. "What goes out you bring not in" [means], that you give your daughters [in marriage] and their husbands do not die so that your daughters need not come back. "That your house be desolate and your inn be inhabited" [means], that this world is your inn and the other world⁷ is a home, as it is written, Their grave is their house for ever;⁸ reading not "their inward thought" [Kirbam] but "their grave (Kibram) is their house for ever, and their dwelling places be for generations."⁸ "That your board be disturbed" [that is]; by sons and daughters and "that you behold not a new year [means] that your wife do not die and you have not to take you a new wife'.⁹

R. Simeon b. Halafta took his leave from Rabbi.¹⁰ Said Rabbi to his son: 'Go along with him that he may bless you' — Said [the parting Rabbi] to him: 'May it be [Heaven's] pleasure that you be not put to shame nor feel ashamed yourself'.¹¹ When he came to his father, he asked him: 'What did he say to you?' — He replied: 'He made some commonplace remark¹² to me — Said [Rabbi] to his son: 'He blessed you with the blessing with which the Holy One [blessed be He] blessed Israel twice over; for it is written: And ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied and shall praise the name of the Lord your God . . . And My people shall never be ashamed. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and there is none else; and My people shall never be ashamed.¹³

AND A WOMAN MAY MAKE HER TOILET DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. Our Rabbis taught: These are [permitted in] woman's adornment. She [plaits her hair]¹⁴ treats her [eyes] with kohl; fixes a parting,¹⁵ [trims her hair and nails¹⁴ and] puts rouge on her face; some say she may use a razor for her privy parts. R. Hisda's wife made her toilet in front of her daughter-in-law.¹⁶ R. Hina b. Hinena sat before R. Hisda;¹⁷ as he sat he said that the instances [mentioned in the Mishnah] applied only to a young woman, but not to an elderly woman. Said R. Hisda to him: God! even to your mother, even to your mother's mother, yea even if she be standing at the [brink of the]¹⁸ grave, as the saying goes: 'At sixty as at six; the sound of a timbrel makes her nimble'.¹⁹

R. JUDAH SAYS SHE SHOULD NOT USE LIME. It is taught: R. Judah says, a woman should not use lime, as it is a disfigurement to her. R. Judah concedes, however, that [if it is] a lime [preparation] that can be peeled off during the festival week she may apply it during the festival week, because, although it is irksome to her at the moment, It is a pleasure to her afterwards. But does R. Judah hold this view? Surely we learned [elsewhere]: 'R. Judah said, Debts may be recovered [from pagan creditors during their festivals] as it is irksome to them'. They said to him, Although it is irksome [for them] at the moment, they feel pleased afterwards?²⁰ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, Do not cite the rules for the festival week, as they all derive from the principle 'that though [the task] is irksome for the moment, it gives satisfaction afterwards'.²¹ Rabina remarked that [the recovery of debts is allowed because] to a pagan the payment of a debt is always irksome.

Rab Judah [reporting Rab_J²² said: The daughters of Israel, who attain puberty before the [normal] age,²³ if they are poor, put on a cosmetic preparation made of lime; richer girls put on fine-flower,²⁴ and the wealthy²⁵ girls put on oil of myrrh, as it is said: ‘Six mouths with the oil of myrrh’.²⁶ What is this ‘oil of myrrh’? — Said R. Huna b. Hiyya, [It is what is called] stacte.²⁷ R. Jeremiah b. Ammi²⁸ said, It is oil obtained from olives that have reached but a third of their [normal] growth. It is taught: ‘R. Judah says omphacinon²⁹ is an oil made of [unripe] olives that have reached but a third of their [normal] growth’ — And why do they put it on? Because it is a depilatory and softens the flesh [skin].³⁰ R. Bebai had a dark-skinned³¹ daughter; he applied to her that unguent one limb at a time and this brought her a husband with four hundred zuzim.³² There was a pagan neighbour of his who had a daughter, and he applied it all over her at once [and] she died; [whereupon] he said, Bebai killed my daughter. Said R. Nahman: ‘R. Bebai drinks beer, therefore his daughters needed unguents; [but as] we do not drink beer, our daughters need no unguents’.³³

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 10a

AN ORDINARY PERSON SEWS IN THE USUAL WAY. How do we define 'an ordinary person'? — At the school of R. Jannai they said, [It means] anyone who cannot draw a needful during their festivals, as the means afforded them by the Jew may go to enhance the heathen celebrations. The settlement of a debt leaves the debtor with an easy mind. of stitches in one sweep. R. Jose b. Hainna said, [It means] anyone who cannot sew an even seam on the hem of his tunic.

BUT A CRAFTSMAN MAY SEW A TUCK-STITCH. What is meant by sewing a 'tuck-stitch'? — R. Johanan said, [It means] 'overstepping'.¹ Rabbah b. Samuel said, [It means that the stiches resemble] dogs' teeth.²

AND THE CORDS MAY BE INTERLACED IN BED-FRAMES. [R. JOSE SAYS THEY MAY ONLY BE TIGHTENED]. What is meant by 'interlacing' and what by 'tightening'? When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said that R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi had different views on this, both reporting in the name of Hezekiah and R. Johanan. One said that 'interlacing' meant [interlacing] both the warp and the woof, and that 'tightening' meant putting in the warp without the woof;³ while the other said that 'interlacing' meant putting in the warp without the woof, and 'tightening' meant that he may tighten a girth cord if it has become slack.

But this cannot be [correct], for R. Tahlifa⁴ b. Saul taught: 'And all agreed that no cords may be let in afresh'. Now this is perfectly in accord with the one who says that the 'interlacing' [permitted in the Mishnah] means interlacing both the warp and the woof, and that the 'tightening' [that R. Jose permitted] means putting in the warp without the woof; hence R. Tahlifa could say: 'And all agreed that no cords may be let in afresh' — But, according to one who says that 'interlacing' means putting in the warp without the woof and that 'tightening' means that he may tighten a cord if it has become slack, [how do you explain R. Tahlifa b. Saul's statement? For,] if you say that interlacing the warp and the woof is forbidden, need one [at all state] that cords are not to be let in afresh? — This is a difficulty. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to R. Hiyya b. Abin: Is there anybody who applies the term 'Interlacing' to inserting a warp without the woof? For surely we learned:⁵ R. Meir says: A bed [frame] is not [subject to ritual defilement] until three warp spaces in it have been crossed? The fact is that when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said that all agree that 'interlacing' means interlacing the warp and woof; but where the difference arose was on the interpretation of 'tightening'; one Master held that the 'tightening' [that was permitted] was inserting the warp without the woof, and the other Master held [that what was allowed was] the tightening of a cord which has become slack. An objection was raised:

Bed-frames may be interlaced [during the festival week] and needless to say that they may be tightened: these are the words of R. Meir. R. Jose says: They may be tightened, but not interlaced and ‘Some say’⁶ that tightening may not be done at all — Now here [the several views are] perfectly [understandable] according to the one who says that by ‘tightening’ is meant ‘inserting the warp without the woof’, as then, ‘Some’ come and express their dissent [on that kind of mending]. But according to the one who says that by the ‘tightening’ [which is allowed] is meant that when a cord has become slack one may make it taut, then according to the view of ‘Some’ not even this [simple adjustment] is allowed! — Yes, indeed; because, since it is possible [temporarily] to fill [the sag] with bedclothes, we should not go to [further] exertion [during the festival week].

MISHNAH. AN OVEN STOVE⁷ OR MILL MAY BE SET UP [IN POSITION] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; R. JUDAH SAYS, A PAIR OF MILLSTONES IS NOT TO BE COMPRESSED FOR THE FIRST TIME [IN THE FESTIVAL WEEK].

GEMARA. What is meant by ‘compressing’? — Rab Judah said that [it means] chiselling⁸ the millstones; R. Jehiel said, It means [fixing] an eye-hole.⁹ An objection was raised: An oven or stove [or mill] may be set up in the festival [week], provided that the work is not entirely completed; these are the words of R. Eliezer; but the Sages say, It may even be finished off. R. Judah, speaking in his¹⁰ name says: A new one may be set up and an old [mill] compressed, and ‘Some’¹¹ say compressing may not be done at all. Now this accords well with the one who says that ‘compressing’ means scoring the mill [stones], hence this process is applicable in the case of an old mill; but according to the one who says that it means [fixing] an eye-hole, what fixing of an eye-hole does an old mill need?¹² — I may say, for instance, that it needs widening a little more. R. Huna [once] hearing someone scraping his millstones during the festival week said: ‘Who is that? May he himself suffer desecration that desecrates the festival week!’ He [evidently] held the view of ‘Some say’ [cited above]. R. Hama expounded:¹³ ‘One [may] scrape millstones during the festival [week]’. In the name of our Master¹⁴ they said: One [may] trim the hoofs of the horse he rides or the ass he rides during the festival week;

(1) Like a baste stitch, hot contiguous but in and out on either side of the material, alternatively.

(2) Irregular in form, or unevenly. Cf. n. 9. on the Mishnah, supra 8b, p. 43.

(3) I.e., putting in a cord or webbing in one direction only.

(5) Kei. XVI, 1: ‘Straight wooden frames, such as are used for litter or cradle, are not subject to ritual contamination until they are rubbed smooth with a fish-skin; R. Meir says, not (even then) until (the cords have been let in) and three spaces have been crossed by the woof cord’.

(6) Representing the view of R. Nathan the Babylonian. V. Hor., Sonc. ed. p. 104.

(7) Probably of clay.

(8) Scoring the grooves or scraping and removing the sediment of flour dust to make the two stones fit closely together.

(9) Of the upper stone, the runner, through which the grain is poured in.

(10) R. Eliezer's: he often cites R. Eliezer's views, which were stricter, as being of the Shammaite school.

(11) R. Nathan the Babylonian. V. p. 54, n. 2.

(12) Surely an old mill has an eye-hole already.

but not those of the ass turning the mill.¹ Rab Judah² declared it permissible to trim the hoofs of the ass turning the mill or to set up the mill or build a mill, or to construct a base for the mill or build a horse stable. Rab³ declared it permissible to curry horses and to construct a bed⁴ or make a mattress-box.⁵ Raba allowed bleeding of cattle during the festival week. Said Abaye to him: There is a Tanna who supports you: Cattle [may] be bled and no curative means are [to be] withheld from an animal during the festival week'. Raba allowed fulled clothes⁶ to be rubbed.⁷ On what ground? It is an ordinary unskilled process. Said R. Isaac b. Ammi, as citing R. Hisda: To pleat sleeve-ends⁸ is forbidden; on what ground? Because that is a craftsman's process.

Raba said: [With regard to] a man who levels up his ground, if it is to even [the slope of] the threshing floor⁹ it is allowed; if merely to level the soil, it is forbidden. How can one tell? If he takes up heaped [soft] soil to heap on [soft] soil, or stiff soil to lay on stiff soil, it shows that [it is done] for [improving] the threshing floor; but if he takes up heaped [soft] soil and casts it on the stiff soil, this shows that it is for [improving] the ground.¹⁰

Raba said: With regard to one who clears his field [of chips of wood], if it is for gathering [fire] wood, it is allowed; if for clearing the ground, it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he picks up the larger pieces and leaves the smaller, this shows that it is to gather [fire] wood; but if he picks up both large and small, this shows that it is to clear the field. Raba said also: With regard to one who opens [sluices] to let water run off into his field, if it be to get the fish,¹¹ it is permitted; if it is to water the soil, it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he opens two flood-gates one above¹² and another below,¹³ this shows that it is for getting the fish; but if only one gate, it is [obviously] for watering the soil. Raba further said: With regard to one who trims his palm,¹⁴ if it is for the [benefit of his] beasts it is allowed; but if for the [benefit of the] palm it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he trims one side only, this shows that it is for the beasts; if both one side and the other, it is for the [benefit of the] palm, and it is forbidden. And furthermore said Raba: Those [unripe] tauhla¹⁵ dates one may pick, but to press them is not permitted. R. Papa remarked that as [if these are left] the worms get at them, they are on the same footing as a business deal¹⁶ [the postponement of which] would entail loss,¹⁷ and therefore may be [pressed during the festival week]. Raba also said: Any business transaction whatsoever is forbidden. R. Jose b. Abin said: And if there be a risk of loss, it is permitted. Rabina had some deal on hand which would have fetched six thousand zuzim;¹⁸ he deferred the sale till after the festival and sold at twelve thousand. Rabina had advanced some money to the people living at Akra di-Shanutha.¹⁹ He came to consult R. Ashi and said: 'What about going over to them just now [during the festival week]?' — Said R. Ashi to him: 'As they had ready cash just then which they might not have later, it is [practically] like a deal [the postponement of which] would entail loss, and [accordingly] is allowed'. It is also similarly taught with reference to heathens: One may go to a heathen fair and buy cattle, male and female slaves, houses, fields and vineyards, and draw up contracts and have them registered at their Registry Offices,¹ because it is [practically] like rescuing something of which they [the heathens] had got possession. Rab permitted R. Hiyya b. Ashi to mend basket-traps² during the festival week. What is the reason? — It is ordinary [unskilled] work; but [to mend] mesh-nets is forbidden. What is the reason? It is work of craftsmanship. Rab Judah allowed Ammi the ovenmaker to put up ovens and Rabbah b. Ashbi he allowed to plait sieves. But this cannot be [correct], as Rabbah b. Samuel learned: And all [authorities] are agreed that an oven may not be set up for the first time [during the festival week]! — There is no difficulty [here]: The former ruling obtains during the 'warm season'³ while the latter ruling obtains in the 'rainy season'.⁴

MISHNAH. A PARAPET MAY BE PUT ROUND A ROOF OR [A RAILING ROUND] A GALLERY ROUGHLY BUT NOT IN FINISHED STYLE.⁵ PLASTER MAY BE SMEARED ON THE CREVICES⁶ AND FLATTENED DOWN WITH A ROLLER,⁷ WITH HAND OR FOOT, BUT NOT WITH RAMMING TOOLS.⁸ PIVOTS AND SOCKETS,⁹ LINTELS, LATCHES,¹⁰ BOLT-LOCKS AND DOOR-HANDLES¹⁰ THAT HAVE GIVEN WAY MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], ONLY THEY MUST NOT BE LEFT PURPOSELY FOR THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; AND ALL PRESERVES THAT MAY BE

EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE.

GEMARA. What, for instance, is meant by putting up a parapet or railing ‘roughly’? — R. Joseph explained: [Something like a fence of] palm-leaves and daphne-stakes.¹¹ A Tanna taught: One may pile up rubble without daubing with clay. PLASTER MAY BE SMEARED ON THE CREVICES AND FLATTENED DOWN WITH A ROLLER, WITH HAND OR FOOT, BUT NOT WITH RAMMING TOOLS. Now, if you say it is allowed to flatten down with a roller, need one [be told] ‘with hand or foot’? — What it means is: One may smear [plaster on] the crevices and flatten down as with a roller, by hand or foot, but not with ramming-tools.

PIVOTS AND SOCKETS, LINTELS, LATCHES, BOLT-LOCKS AND DOOR-HANDLES THAT HAVE GIVEN WAY MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. Some contrasted this with [the following]: ‘Up to his days,¹² the hammer was beating in Jerusalem during the festival [week] . . .’, [that is], ‘up to his days’, but not thereafter!¹³ — [Said R. Huna]¹⁴ that is not difficult [to explain]; the reference there is to the smith's [hammer],¹⁵ while here [the tool allowed] is the joiner's [mallet].¹⁶ R. Hisda demurred to this [explanation] as according to this some will say that a loud din is forbidden, [but] a faint sound is allowed. No, said R. Hisda, it is not difficult [to explain]: One [the tool allowed here] is the bill-hook¹⁷ and the other [which is not allowed] is an adze.¹⁸ R. Papa said that in one statement we have the [older view held] before the restriction [had been introduced] and in the other the [later] view held after the restriction [was introduced]. R. Ashi said that one [Mishnah] expresses R. Judah's view¹⁹ and the other R. Jose's; for R. Isaac b. Abdimi said: ‘Who may be the [anonymous] Tanna that [holds] that work must be done in a different way from the ordinary²⁰ [in working] during the festival [week] even where its [postponement would entail] loss? Not R. Jose’.²¹ Rabina said, Whose ruling do we follow nowadays when we raise the pivot-cups²² of the doors during the festival week? — R. Jose's. AND ALL PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE. On Baditha Luba,²³ everybody engaged in fishing and they brought in fish,²⁴ and Raba allowed to put them in salt. Said Abaye to him: But [why]? We learned: PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE? — Said he [Raba] to him, Since they brought them home with the intention of eating them and if they leave them [uneaten] they will be spoiled, it is similar to [a case of] business that might be lost and is therefore permitted.²⁵ And some say that Raba [actually] allowed them to him, But surely we learned: PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE go fishing,²⁶ fetch the fish home and put them in salt. Said Abaye to IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE! — Said he [Raba] to him, These may be eaten [also] by means of ‘pressing’, as was the case with Samuel when they applied pressure [to the fish in salt] sixty times²⁷ and he ate [thereof]. When Raba [himself] once happened to be at the house of the Exilarch,²⁸ they prepared for him [a dish of fish] pressed sixty times and he ate it. Rab was [on a festival week] once at Bar-Shappir²⁹ [Perissabora?] where they put before him some kind of fish [which was] a third boiled, a third salted and a third broiled. Rab said, Adda the fisherman told me that a fish is at its best when it is about to turn putrid. Rab also said this, Adda the fisherman told me: Broil the fish with his brother [salt], plunge it into its father [water], eat it with its son [sauce] and drink after it its father [water]. This too Rab said: Adda the fisherman told me: [After eating] fish, cress and milk occupy your body, don't occupy your couch.³⁰ And furthermore said Rab, Adda the fisherman told the: [After] fish, cress and milk drink [rather] water, not mead,³¹ mead and not wine. CHAPTER I I MISHNAH. IF ONE HAD [ALREADY] TURNED HIS OLIVES¹ WHEN MOURNING² OR SOME HINDRANCE BEFELL HIM, OR WORKMEN DISAPPOINTED HIM, HE MAY [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK] PUT ON THE BEAM FOR THE FIRST TIME AND LEAVE IT [THUS] UNTIL AFTER THE FESTIVAL; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. JOSE SAYS, HE MAY DRAW OFF [THE OIL] AND COMPLETE THE PROCESS³ AND BUNG⁴ [THE JARS] IN HIS USUAL WAY [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK].

GEMARA. The Mishnah begins with mourning and finally [only] deals with the festival [week]⁵ — Said R. Shisha⁶ son of Idi: This implies that things one is permitted [to do] during the festival [week] are forbidden him during [the week of] his mourning.⁷ R. Ashi says, [Not so], this wording is cast in the form of, ‘No need to say’ . . .,⁸ no need to say [that he may put on the beam for the first time] during [the week of] his mourning when [the restriction on work] is but rabbinical, but even during the festival [week], when [work] is restricted on Scriptural grounds, the Rabbis still permit it where loss is involved.

It was taught⁹ in the sense of R. Shisha son of Idi: These are the things they may do for the mourner during his [week of] mourning: If his olives had been turned they may put on for him [the beam for the first time], or if his wine [cask] is to be bunged, or his flax is to be lifted from the retting, or his wool is to be lifted from the dye-bath; and they may besprinkle his field¹⁰ for him when his turn for water-rights arrives. R. Judah says they may even sow for him the ploughed field or the field awaiting a flax-crop. Said they [the Rabbis] to him: [Not so], if the field is not sowed in the early season it could be sowed in the latter season and if It cannot be sowed with flax let it be sowed with some other kind [of crop].¹¹ Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, If his olives had been turned and there is no skilled worker save himself, or his cask is [ready] for bunging and there is no skilled worker save himself, or his flax is [ready] for lifting from the retting or his wool for lifting from the dye-bath and there is no skilled worker save himself, such a one may perform [his task] behind closed doors. Furthermore, said Rabban Gamaliel, if he is a skilled worker engaged in the service of the public, or a hairdresser or a bath-attendant in the service of the public, and the Festival is close at hand and there is no skilled worker save him, such a one may do the work. Farmkeepers,¹² tenant-farmers¹³ and contractors of labour may have others doing work for them.¹⁴ Ass-drivers, camel-drivers and bargemen may not work;¹⁵ but if they were [already] engaged on the job or were [just then] in the hire of others, they [themselves] may do their work.¹⁴ A daily worker¹⁶ may not work, even in another town.¹⁷ One who has others’ work in hand,¹⁸ even if it is a contract job,¹⁹ he may not do it. [You say,]’ Even if it is a contract job’, [which implies] and all the less so if it is not a contract job. On the contrary, a contract job is like his own [work]!²⁰ Rather, whether it is a contract job or not a contract job he may not do it. If his work²¹ was placed in the hand of others, they may not do it in his own house, but in another house they may do it.

Marion the son of Rabin and Mar the son of R. Aha the son of Raba had a yoke of oxen²² between them, when a misfortune²³ befell Mar the son of R. Aha the son of Raba; he broke up the team [and did not send his animal to work]. Said R. Ashi, A great man like Mar the son of R. Aha acting in such a manner! Granted that he minds not his own loss [of earning], is he not concerned about the loss [caused] to others? Surely it is taught: 'But if they were [already] engaged [on the job] or were [just then] in the hire of others, these may do their work'?²⁴ — He [Mar] however held the view that [the case of] a prominent man is different.²⁵

Samuel said: '[If non-Jews] take work on contract they may not [work for a Jew]¹ within the [limits of the Sabbath] boundary;² but outside the boundary they may'. Said R. Papa, Even outside the boundary we do not say [they may] save where there is no town in the Vicinity; but where there is a town near by, it is forbidden. Said R. Mesharshaya: And even if there be not a town close by we [still] do not say [they may carry on the work] save on Sabbaths and festivals when there are not frequent [Jewish] passers-by, but during the festival week when people are often passing to and from the place it is forbidden. Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman had a mansion erected for himself by [non Jewish] contractor [builders] outside the boundary.³ R. Safra and R. Huna b. Hinena happened to come thither and did not enter his house; and some report that he [R.

Nahman] himself did not enter the building. But did not Samuel say that contractors may not carry on their work within the boundary, but outside the boundary they may? — [The case of] a prominent man is different. Some say [his servant]⁴ had assisted then with straw. R. Hama allowed the Exilarch's table-stewards to do their work⁵ during the festival week; he said that as they received no remuneration they only intend to benefit him⁶ which concerns us nought.

Our Rabbis taught: Contracts may be made during the festival [week for work] to be executed after the festival [week]; but [to do it] during the festival [week] is forbidden. The general principle on this point is that whatever one may do himself he may tell a non-Jew to do; and what he himself may not do, he may not tell a non-Jew to do. Another [Baraita] taught: Contracts may be made during the festival [week] to be executed after the festival [week], only that one should not measure, weigh or count [quantities] after the manner in which this is done on an ordinary day.

Our Rabbis taught: One may not bring a sire to mate during the festival week. Similarly, a 'first-born, sire should not⁷ be [used to] mate,⁸ nor a votive beast that has become disqualified.⁹ Another [Baraita] taught: They may not bring a sire to mate during the festival week. R. Judah says, Where an ass is hankering [for the male] they may bring her the jackass to mate lest she become chilled. All other beasts are [merely] brought into the stalls.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: Sheep may not be turned out to graze in a hurdled enclosure¹¹ on Sabbaths, festivals, or in the festival week, but if they come [and do it] of their own accord,¹² it is allowed; and they may not be assisted [to it]. Nor may a watchman be assigned [to the shepherds] to move the sheep about.¹³ If [the herdsman was] engaged by the week, month, year or septennate, assistance may be given to these¹⁴ and a watch may be assigned to them to move the sheep about. Rabbi¹⁵ says, [This may be done] on the Sabbath by way of favour, on the festival for meals and during the festival [week] for payment. R. Joseph stated that the law is according to Rabbi.

MISHNAH. LIKEWISE IF ONE HAD HIS WINE [ALREADY] RUN INTO THE CISTERN THEN MOURNING BEFELL HIM, OR [SOME OTHER] HINDRANCE, OR WORKMEN DISAPPOINTED HIM, HE MAY DRAW OFF [THE WINE], COMPLETE THE PROCESS AND BUNG [THE CASKS] IN HIS USUAL WAY: THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JOSE; R. JUDAH SAYS, HE [MERELY] COVERS [THE CISTERN] WITH SHINGLES TO PREVENT IT TURNING SOUR.

GEMARA. [LIKEWISE IF ONE HAD etc.] And this [wine clause] is necessary. Because, if [the Tanna] had told us the first [clause alone], we might have argued that only in that case did R. Jose say [he may complete the process] as the loss on oil is considerable, whereas in the case of wine, where the loss is not much, one might presume that he concurred with the [stricter] view of R. Judah. And if [the Tanna] had told us the latter [clause alone], we might have argued that only in this case [of wine] did R. Judah say [he may not do more], whereas in that [former case of oil], one might presume that he concurred with the more [lenient] view of R. Jose: [therefore] it was necessary [to enunciate both clauses]. Said R. Isaac b. Abba,¹⁶ Who is the Tanna who requires that work [if done] should be done with a difference during the festival [week] where loss is threatened? It is not R. Jose.¹⁷ R. Joseph said, The halachah is according to R. Jose.

Some [scholars] asked of R. Nahman b. Isaac: Is it permitted to coat a mead-cask [with resin]¹⁸ in the festival week? — Said he to them: Sinai¹⁹ stated that the halachah is according to R. Jose. Supposing that R. Jose said [one may] in the case of wine, [does it follow] that he said [that one may] also in the case of mead? — [Indeed,] for what is the reason [that he allows] in the case of wine? [It is] because the loss on it is considerable; it is also considerable In the case of mead, as Abaye said, Mater²⁰ told me: ‘Better a coated cask of Six se’ahs than an uncoated cask of eight se’ahs’.²¹

R. Hama b. Guria citing Rab said: The halachoth²² appertaining to the festival [week] are like the halachoth regulating the dealings with Kuthites.²³ What is the legal import [of this dictum]? — Said R. Daniel son of R. Ketina, It is to say that they are ‘sterile’²⁴ [regulations] and communicate nought²⁵ to each other, as [for instance] Samuel said that they [may] coat a jug with pitch but may not coat a cask; while R. Dimi of Nehardea said that they [may] coat a cask with pitch but they may not coat a jug; one master being solicitous to avert loss,²⁶ the other master being solicitous to avoid exertion²⁷ [during the festival week]. Said Abaye, We have it as tradition²⁸ that the halachoth appertaining to the festival [week] are like the halachoth appertaining to the Sabbath:

- (1) People might say that they were given the work on the Sabbath.
 - (2) On a Sabbath or Festival (Rash). V. however, Asheri.
 - (3) On a Sabbath or a Festival.
 - (4) Han. and other texts.
 - (5) He allowed these non-Jewish servants to mend or improvise extra tables for the guests of the Exilarch. R. Hama is mentioned with Mar zutra in B.B. 7a.
 - (6) By working for the Exilarch during the festival week.
 - (7) At any time. Cf Tosef. M.K. II.
 - (8) ‘Firstborn’ males of ‘clean’ animals are from birth dedicated to the altar and as such claimed by the priest (v. Num. XVIII, 15, 17). These may not be worked, nor shorn for fleece, nor milked (v. Deut. XV, 19-20). Cf. Mak. 22a, (Sonc. ed. p. 155) and Bek. 15a.
 - (9) Having become blemished, it is unfit for the altar and may be redeemed for ordinary slaughter but not for any other use. V. Bek. 15b.
 - (10) To mate without assistance.
 - (11) To manure the field.
 - (12) I.e., if the non-jewish herdsmen drive the cattle into the field without any Instruction or request from the owner of the field.
 - (13) I.e., to use means whereby to expedite the discharge of excrements of the flock on the spot to be manured. V. Jast. s.v. rgb, II.
 - (14) As these non-jewish herdsmen carry out their own work according to undertaking.
 - (15) J. Sheb. III, 3 reads here Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, besides other variations. Also cf. Tosef. Sheb. end of Chapter li and Tosef. Shab. XVIII, 16.
 - (16) It is Isaac b. Abdimi on 11b.
 - (17) Since R. Jose holds that he can complete the process in the usual way.
 - (18) Or pitch, to make it air-tight. V. A.Z. 33a (Sonc. ed. p. 162). Han. takes it as sealing the stopper, by smearing it over with clay or pitch to prevent the wine or mead becomingapid. The mead made from the syrup of dates was a Babylonian beverage, cf. Pes. 107a and 113b.

(19) A complimentary appellation of R. Joseph as an eminent authority on the body of Baraitha-comments (on the Mishnah), in contrast to Rabbah b. Nahmani, his great contemporary and predecessor as Principal of the Academy at Pumbeditha, who was called 'Uprooter of Mountains', a title descriptive of his method of acute analysis. V. Ber. 64a and Hor. 14a, (Sonc. ed. p. 105).

(20) Abaye was a posthumous child and his mother died in childbirth. He was brought up by a foster mother whose instructive sayings he frequently quotes as here. V. Kid. 31b.

(21) A se'ah is about two and a third gallons.

(22) Traditional rules of practice.

(23) The Samaritans who, when friendly, were treated as observant Jews, and when hostile and making common cause with the heathens in persecuting Jews and jeering at their religious practices, were treated as heathens. The attitude towards them, therefore, varied from time to time, according to circumstances.

(24) Some texts have , usieg 'tethered', i.e., inapplicable as 'rules in practice' owing to their frequent variability.

(25) Serving no purpose as definite instances from which to argue any definite principle.

(26) There is more loss involved in neglecting a cask than a jug, which is much smaller.

(27) The exertion entailed in coating a cask is greater than with a jug.

(28) Abaye often uses that expression.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 12b

some acts involve no penalty, though forbidden,¹ while other acts are allowed ab initio.

R. Huna had his harvest reaped during the festival [week], whereupon Rabbah put an objection to R. Huna [from the following]: They may mill flour during the festival [week] for the requirements of the festival; what is not required for the festival is forbidden. A thing that is perishable in the festival [week] is permitted to be done; a thing that is not perishable in the festival [week] is forbidden. When does this [rule] obtain?² In the case of something that is [already] severed from the soil, but where [the crop is still] attached to the soil, even if all of it perish it is forbidden; but if he have not food to eat, he may reap, gather into sheaves, thresh, winnow, clean and mill,³ only that he shall not thresh with cows?⁴ — He replied: That [Baraitha] is but an individual⁵ opinion, and is not generally accepted by us, as it has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel stated a general rule in the name of R. Jose, Whatever is [already] severed from the soil, even though only part of it might perish, yet may it be worked; while that which is [still] attached to the soil, even though it might all perish, is forbidden. But if [as you say] that [anonymous] Baraitha be R. Jose's opinion, then he should also be allowed to thresh with cows!⁶ For Surely R. Isaac b. Abba said: 'Who is the Tanna that demands some variation In the working during the festival [week] where loss is involved? It is not R. Jose!⁷ — [Said R. Huna],⁸ He [R. Jose] might reply:⁹ 'Yea indeed, so; yet as one does not usually¹⁰ thresh with cows, threshing without them [during the festival week] would be no variation now.¹¹

Our Rabbis taught: Flour may be ground during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if not for the requirements of the festival [week], it is forbidden. If, however, one ground¹² and had some flour over, he is allowed to use it.¹³ Trees may be cut down during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival, but if it is not for the needs of the festival it is forbidden; if one, however, had cut down¹² and had some over, it is permitted.¹³ [The ingredients] for brewing mead¹⁴ may be put in during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if it is not needed for the festival it is forbidden; and if one put in [the ingredients]¹² and had some [brew] left over, it is permitted,¹³ provided only that there is no guile.¹⁵ A contradiction was raised [from the following]: ‘They may put in [ingredients for brewing] mead during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival, but what is not for the needs of the festival is forbidden, be it a brew of dates or a brew of barley, and even though one have some old [brew] he may act with guile and drink of the new’?¹⁶ — There is a difference among Tannaim as was taught: There should be no resort to guile in such matters; R. Jose son of R. Judah says, One may act with guile [sometimes].¹⁷

Rab [once] had his harvest gathered for him in the festival week. Samuel heard [of it] and was annoyed. Might one suggest that Samuel concurred with the view of the individual authority?¹⁸ — No, it was a crop of wheat which [if left a while] would not have deteriorated. What is the reason that Rab acted thus? — He had not then [enough] to eat; and as for Samuel, he had not been fully informed [of the circumstances]. Or, [maybe he thought that the case of] a prominent person is different.

R. Judah the Prince¹⁹ [once] went out [on the Sabbath] wearing an amethyst²⁰ signet and [once] drank water which an Aramean [non-Jewish] cook²¹ had heated. R. Ammi hearing of it was annoyed. Said R. Joseph: What is the reason he was annoyed? Was it on account of the amethyst signet? Why, it is taught: Chains, earrings and rings are like all articles of dress that may be worn in the courtyard!²² [Again], if because he drank water which an Aramean had made hot? Why, Samuel b. Isaac, citing Rab, stated that whatever can be eaten raw is not [debarred] as in the category of heathen-cooked food! — [The case of] a prominent person is different.²³

R. Hananel, citing Rab, said that one may lop off branches from a palm tree during the festival [week] even though he needs only the chips.²⁴ Abaye denounced²⁵ this [dictum] vehemently. R. Ashi had a wood in Shelania. He went to cut it down during the festival week. Said R. Shela of Shelania to R. Ashi, What is your ground [for acting thus]? Is it because of what R. Hananel, citing Rab, said, that one may lop branches from a palm during the festival [week] even though he needs only thee chips?²⁴ But surely Abaye denounced it vehemently! — Said he [R. Ashi] to him: ‘I heard it not’, as much as to Say, ‘I do not concur [with Abaye's view]’. The hatchet then slipped threatening to cut off his leg. He then abandoned his task and came again.²⁶

Rab Judah permitted pulling up flax, picking hops and pulling up sesame crops. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: It is quite correct to do this in the case of flax, as if may be used for covering [fruits]; in the case of hops, as they may be used for [brewing] beer; but sesame — to what [immediate] use can it be put? — [It may be picked] on account of the seeds²⁷ it contains. R. Jannai had an orchard²⁸ that had become ripe for picking during the festival week [and] he picked it. The year [after] all the people kept their orchards waiting for the festival week. R. Jannai [thereupon] renounced his [proprietary rights in the] orchard that year.²⁹

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY BRING HIS FRUITS INDOORS FOR FEAR OF THIEVES AND PULL HIS FLAX OUT OF RETTING TO PREVENT IT SPOILING, PROVIDED HE DOES NOT PURPOSELY HOLD THE WORK OVER TILL THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE DELIBERATELY HAD THEIR WORK HELD OVER FOR THE

FESTIVAL [WEEK] SHALL HAVE IT DESTROYED.³⁰

GEMARA. BRING INDOORS. A Tanna taught: Provided only that he bring them into his house privily. R. Joseph had some beams of timber which he brought in during daylight. Said Abaye, But it is taught: 'Provided only that he bring them into his house privily'! — He replied, The [requisite] privacy for these is [attained best] during daylight, since at night more men would be needed and torchbearers too would be required, making much ado.³¹

AND PULLS HIS FLAX OUT OF RETTING. R. Jeremiah asked of R. Zera: If a man keeps work over for the festival [week] and dies, should his children be penalized after him? Should you cite³² [the case of],

- (1) Cf. rules of Ulpian: 'An in imperfect law is one which forbids something to be done, and yet if it be done, neither rescinds it nor imposes a penalty on him who has acted contrary to the Law'. I, 1.
 - (2) That which is perishable may be attended to in the festival week.
 - (3) I.e., one may do anything and everything that is necessary.
 - (4) I.e., he must introduce some variation. This Baraitha forbidding to reap except in the case where he has no food to eat, refutes R. Huna who, it is assumed, was not short of ready food.
 - (5) R. Jose's view which is given in the citation that follows and which is, however, not generally accepted.
 - (6) Which, however, is distinctly debarred in the anonymous Baraitha, above.
 - (7) As may be seen from his attitude in the first and second Mishnah (11b and 12a) in contrast to that of R. Judah in regard to both oil and wine. Whereas, In the anonymous Baraitha ascribed to him he distinctly stipulates not to thresh with cows, insisting on a variation.
 - (8) To explain that there is really no contradiction in the discrepancy.
 - (9) SBH reads better: 'Said he, R. Huna, to him (to Raba)'.

 - (12) During the festival week for the needs of the festival.
 - (13) After the festival.
 - (14) Or beer.
 - (15) To prepare which under the guise of forgetfulness or mistake for the needs of the festival with the intention of having some left over after the festival.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 13a

'One who had [craftily] clipped the ear of his first-born beast', and whose son is penalized after him,¹ [I can reply that] that is because that is [an offence against] a Scriptural prohibition. Or should you cite [the case of], 'One who sold his [non-Jewish] slave to a non-Jew', and whose son was penalized after him, [I can say that] that is because he debarred him daily from the [performance of] religious duties.² Here, what do we say? That the Rabbis' intention was to penalize the man personally and he is no more, or, maybe that it was only to impose a pecuniary penalty [on his estate] and that is to be had? — R. Zera replied, You learned it [in the Mishnah]: 'A field that has been cleared of thorns³ during the seventh year may be sowed in the post-sabbatical year; if it had been well improved⁴ or manured⁵ by hurdling cattle⁶ on it, it may not be sowed in the post-sabbatical year',⁷ and [on this Point] R. Jose b. Hanina said: 'We have it on tradition that if one had well improved his field and died, his son may Sow it'. This shows that our Rabbis did [intend to] penalize him,⁸ but his son the Rabbis did not [intend to] penalize; here too, then, it is the man himself that they would penalize, but his son the Rabbis would not have penalized. Said Abaye, We have it on tradition that if a man has defiled his fellow's clean [produce]⁹ and dies they do not penalize his son after him [to pay for the damage caused]. What is the reason? 'Imperceptible damage¹⁰ is not in the category of [legal] damage';¹¹ the man himself the Rabbis would have penalized, but his son the Rabbis would not have penalized.

MISHNAH. HOUSES, [STONES],¹² SLAVES AND CATTLE MAY NOT BE BROUGHT SAVE FOR THE NEEDS OF THE FESTIVAL, OR THE NEED OF A VENDOR WHO HAS NOT [ENOUGH] TO EAT. GEMARA. Raba asked of R. Nahman: What about [affording] 'earning-jobs'¹³ in aid of one who has not [enough] to eat? — He replied: We learned: OR THE NEED OF A VENDOR WHO HAS NOT [ENOUGH] TO EAT. What is this [relative] clause, 'Who has not enough to eat' intended to cover?¹⁴ Is it not to include such [casual] 'earning-jobs'? — Not [necessarily]; it is an explanatory clause.¹⁵ Thereupon Abaye pointed out to him an objection: 'One should not write credit-bills during the festival [week]; but if [the creditor] does not trust [the person] or he [the clerk] has not [enough] to eat, one may [then] write'.¹⁶ What is the clause, 'Or he has not [enough] to eat' intended to cover here? Is it not to include [casual] 'earning-jobs'?¹³ — [Yes], you may infer that.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: 'And the Sages say, Three craftsmen [may] do work until midday on the day preceding the [Feast of] Passover,¹⁷ [namely], tailors, hairdressers and fullers; tailors, for the same reason that a private person may do [some] sewing in his usual way during the festival [week]; hairdressers and fullers, for the same reason that persons returning home from abroad,¹⁸ or coming out of prison may crop their hair and wash their clothes during the festival [week].¹⁹ Now, if you presume that ‘earning-jobs’ are allowed²⁰ where one has not [enough] to eat, then also all [other] work should have been allowed here,²¹ because ‘earning-jobs’ are permitted²⁰ where one has not [enough] to eat! R. Papa demurred to this [argument]: Then accordingly, building [work should] be allowed,²² just as ‘a wall which is bulging outward into the public domain, may be pulled down and rebuilt in the usual way,²³ because it is a [public] danger’!²⁴ Rabina also demurred to this [argument]: Accordingly then, a scrivener²⁵ should be allowed [to work]²² just as one may ‘write marriage deeds,²⁶ bills of divorcement²⁷ and receipts’!²⁸ Said R. Ashi:²⁹ [How] can you argue thus from regulations governing the festival [week] to those governing the fourteenth of Nisan? Those governing the festival [week] are based on [the avoidance of] exertion and where loss is threatened the Rabbis have allowed [exertion]; whereas the regulations governing the fourteenth of Nisan are based on the exigencies of the Festival; anything which is required for the Festival our Rabbis have permitted and anything that is not required for the Festival our Rabbis have not permitted.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT REMOVE [EFFECTS] FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE,³⁰ BUT ONE MAY REMOVE THEM TO HIS COURT. WARES³¹ MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN. IF ONE IS ANXIOUS ABOUT THE THINGS,³² HE MAY REMOVE THEM TO ANOTHER COURT.³³

GEMARA. [BUT ONE MAY REMOVE THEM TO HIS COURT]. But you said at first that one's effects may not be removed at all? — Said Abaye, The latter part comes to [tell] us that [to another] house in that [same] court he may [remove his effects].³⁴

AND WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN. Said R. Papa: Raba [once] gave us a test: We learned, ‘WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN’ and this he contrasted [with the following]: ‘Wares may be conveyed [to]³⁵ and brought home from the house of the craftsman, even though they be not needed for the festival’!³⁶ And we replied to him: The latter [Baraita] refers to the fourteenth of Nisan, while here it refers to the festival week. Or, if you like, I might suggest that both [passages] refer to the festival week, [but that the ruling] here [obtains] where he trusts him³⁷ [and] the latter [ruling obtains] where he does not trust him.³⁸

(1) The firstborn male of ‘clean’ animals is from birth ‘dedicated’ or destined for the altar and its flesh is the priests’ due (Num. XVIII, 15-18). It may not be used for work or be shorn, unless it be born blemished or becomes accidentally permanently maimed, when it is no longer fit for sacrifice (Deut. XV, 19-22; cf. Lev. XXII, 18ff). If the owner cunningly contrives to get it injured either to avoid the trouble and expense of keeping it or to have the flesh, he is penalized to have it buried and is mulcted to half its value for the loss he caused to a priest. V. Shul. ‘Ar. Yor. De’ah. 309-310.

(2) Non-Jewish male slaves who (with their consent) had been circumcised (cf. Gen. XVII. 12-13) and (male and female) ritually received into the household, enjoyed the privileges of resting on the Sabbaths (Ex. XX, 10) and Feasts (Deut. XII, 12, 18) and to partake of holy meats (ibid. XVI, 11) even in the priest's household (Lev. XXII, 11) and to perform such Jewish religious observances as they chose. (Cf. Ber. 20a and Suk. 20b). By selling him to a non-Jew he debarred the slave from the religious observances he learned to love and enjoy, and for this heartless act the offending master was penalized by the loss of his monetary gain.

- (3) Merely picked up, cleared, lifted from the soil by the first superficial ploughing which did not constitute working the soil, forbidden Scripturally.
- (4) By regular harrowing or deeper or cross ploughing. V. Tosaf. s.v. vchhyb and commentary of R. Samson of Sens on M. Sheb. IV, 2.
- (5) By bringing cartloads of manure and methodically spreading it over the field.
- (6) Methodically, instead of just letting cattle roam about on it.
- (7) M. Sheb. IV, 2.
- (8) For clearing thorns by harrowing, manuring and hurdling cattle on the field, are not of the processes explicitly forbidden in Scripture (Lev. XXV, 1-5); and though some included even such 'secondary processes' under the Scriptural prohibition (cf. supra 3a), the Rabbis did not press the penalty against the dead man's son.
- (9) Which had been carefully guarded by the owner from contamination, if the malefactor spitefully threw (for instance) a dead reptile on the heap of washed corn or among the gathered olives or grapes (cf. Lev. XI, 29-34). Priests' due of these could not be eaten, but might only be burnt as fuel. Pious lay-people would not buy such produce.
- (10) As there is no visible change in the produce that has been thus deteriorated, he can say that all is still as it was.
- (11) MS. M. and in parallel passages add here: 'The penalty (imposed) is rabbinical (in origin) '.
- (12) V. D.S. Other texts add also 'fields'.
- (13) I.e., find a poor man some odd, unnecessary job to do, as a chance of earning something wherewith to buy provisions for the Festival.
- (14) It is assumed that the words THE NEED OF A VENDOR imply that he has not enough to eat.
- (15) Explaining the phrase THE NEED OF A VENDOR. But there is no indication according to this interpretation of the Mishnah — to have any unnecessary job done in the festival week.
- (16) During the festival week, plainly allowing it as a means of helping the borrower or the (professional) scribe.
- (17) The fourteenth of Nisan, when from early afternoon the people began the preparation of the Paschal Lambs. Cf. pes. V, 1, 5ff.
- (18) Lit., 'from the maritime province', generally denoting the Diaspora.
- (19) V. Pes. 55b and cf. with the Mishnah 55a on the variations in the text.
- (20) During the festival week.
- (21) On the fourteenth of Nisan, instead of limiting the permission to three crafts only, because there may be other craftsmen who may be in need of money for food. But, as there is no mention of such a contingency there, it shows that even in such a case, unnecessary odd 'earning-jobs' may not be given in the festival week.
- (22) On the fourteenth of Nisan.
- (23) During the festival week.
- (24) V. supra 7a.
- (25) Lat. librarius.
- (26) The terms of the marriage contract agreed to by the parents, the bride and bridegroom.
- (27) To end an unhappy marriage all the sooner, it is allowed even in the festival week.
- (28) V. infra 18b.
- (29) There is a flaw in K. Shesheth's argument.
- (30) Either (i) from one house to another in the same court, or (ii) from another's house into his own, as this is gratifying to him. V. Han., Asheri and Ritba.
- (31) ohkf ; the term covers articles of household furniture, utensils, clothing and bedding; but obviously not tools, etc.
- (32) Fearing they might be stolen.

(33) To ensure their safety.

(34) Cf. p. 75. n. 9 (ii).

(35) So SBH. p. 62. In our text as it stands, both here and pes. 55b ihfhkun might possibly refer to the conveyance of larger, unportable objects, while ihthcn refers to smaller, portable things. The concluding words of this discussion, however, do not take note of this possibility.

(36) V. pes. 55b.

(37) The craftsman, and may leave his things with him safely to avoid all unnecessary 'exertion'.

(38) Fearing they might be stolen.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 13b

And [in fact] it is taught [thus]: 'Wares may be brought [home] from the house of the craftsman, for instance, jugs from the jug maker's and tumblers from the glass maker's, but not wool from the dyer's nor articles from the house of the craftsman; but if he has not [enough] to eat one gives him his pay [in advance] and leaves the object with him, if however he does not trust him he leaves It In a house near him¹ and if he is anxious about the things lest they be stolen he² brings them home privily'.³ You have thus explained⁴ [the discrepancy] about 'bringing home', [but] the discrepancy about 'conveying' still remains a difficulty; for when it states WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME, [it follows] much less may one convey [wares to the house of the craftsman]! Hence [obviously] the explanation given at first⁵ is the correct one. MISHNAH. FIGS [WHILE DRYING] MAY BE COVERED WITH STRAW;⁶ R. JUDAH SAYS, THEY MAY EVEN BE PILED UP [IN HEAPS].⁷ VENDORS OF FRUITS, CLOTHING AND [OTHER] WARES MAY SELL Privily FOR THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. FISHERMEN, GROATS-POUNDERS AND GRIST GRINDERS⁸ PLY THEIR TRADE PRIVILY FOR THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. R. JOSE SAYS, THEY HAVE IMPOSED A RESTRICTION ON THEMSELVES.⁹

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi differ [in their interpretation] both in the name of Hezekiah and R. Johanan.¹⁰ One says that the [former expression], they MAY BE COVERED, MEHAPPIN, means [covering but] lightly, and [the latter] MAY EVEN BE PILED UP, ME'ABBIN, means [spreading the straw] closely; the other says that MAY BE COVERED, means [spreading the straw] lightly or densely, while [the latter expression], MAY EVEN BE PILED UP, means making a sort of pile.¹¹ It is also taught thus: 'May be piled up [me'abbin] — making a sort of pile: these are the words of R. Judah'.

VENDORS OF FRUITS, CLOTHING AND [OTHER] WARES MAY SELL PRIVILY. The question was asked: Does THEY HAVE IMPOSED A RESTRICTION ON THEMSELVES, mean that they do not work at all, or perhaps that they do it privily? Come and hear: 'Vendors of fruits, clothing and [other] wares sell privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; R. Jose says, The Tiberian traders have imposed a restriction on themselves not to sell at all. Deerstalkers, fowlers and fishermen catch privily for the requirements of thee festival [week]; it. Jose says, The catchers of Acra have imposed a restriction on themselves not to catch at all. Groats-pounders make hilka¹² [coarse meal], tragus¹³ [pulse-porridge] and tisana¹⁴ [pearl-barley] privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; R. Jose says, The gristpounders of Sepphoris have imposed a restriction on themselves not to pound at all'. Abaye explained:¹⁵ Hilka means [groats of] one [grain broken] in two;¹⁶ tragus, one into three;¹⁷ tisana, one into four.¹⁸ When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: [All these are] kuntha [spelt].

An objection was raised: Hilka, tragus and tisana are [considered as] ‘tainted’¹⁹ everywhere.²⁰ Now this harmonizes well with the explanation that it is one [grain broken] in two, three or four; they are [considered] ‘tainted’ everywhere, because they have been rendered ‘fit’ [liable to take the taint of impurity]; but according to the explanation that they are all ‘spelt’, why then are they taken as ‘tainted’ everywhere, for these have not [necessarily] been rendered ‘fit’ [by damping]? [Sometimes they are], for instance, where the groats are [made of] peeled [spelt]; because, unless the grain had been soaked in water it would not peel. And why is it called hilka? Because it has had its ‘tunic’²¹ [husk] taken off. An objection was raised: ‘One who vowed [to abstain] from dagan²² is debarred even from [partaking of] the Egyptian bean²³ when dry, but is allowed to eat it when fresh [green];²⁴ and he is permitted rice,²⁵ hilka, tragus and tisana.²⁶ Now, this harmonizes well with the explanation that these [varieties] are so called because one [grain] is broken into two, three or four; it is Proper [to allow him to eat] because these [being now meal] no longer belong to the [category] of dagan [grain]; but according to him who says that hilka is [what we call] ‘spelt’, it is [still] properly [designated as] dagan! — This is a difficulty.

R. Huna²⁷ permitted vendors of Pot-herbs²⁸ to go and sell in the festival week in the market Place in the ordinary way. R. Kahana thereupon put an objection to him [from the following]: ‘A shop which opens into a colonnade may be opened and closed in the ordinary way; if it opens into the public domain, [the shopkeeper] may open one door and close one; and on the day preceding the last day of the Feast [of Tabernacles]²⁹ he may bring out fruit and decorate the markets all round the town in honour of the last day of the Feast’. [That is to say], ‘In honour of the last day of the Feast, [he may open]; but if not in honour of the last day of the Feast, he may not [open]! That is not difficult [to explain]: This latter prohibition refers to the sale of fruits, whereas in the former case it is the sale of seasoning [pot-herbs that is allowed].

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. AND THESE [MAY] CROF³⁰ [THEIR HAIR] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: ONE ARRIVING [HOME] FROM ABROAD,³¹ OR FROM A PLACE OF CAPTIVITY OR ONE COMING OUT OF PRISON, OR ONE UNDER A BAN³² TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION. AND LIKEWISE ONE WHO APPLIED TO A SAGE³³ AND WAS ABSOLVED [BY HIM], AND A NAZIRITE³⁴ OR A LEPER ON EMERGING FROM HIS [STATE OF RITUAL] IMPURITY TO [BEGIN] HIS PURIFICATION.³⁵

AND THESE [MAY] WASH [THEIR GARMENTS] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: ONE ARRIVING [HOME] FROM ABROAD,³¹ OR FROM THE PLACE OF [HIS] CAPTIVITY, OR COMING OUT OF PRISON

(1) The craftsman.

(2) The owner takes the things into his house.

(3) V. supra n. 3.

- (4) Lit., 'straightened out'.
- (5) Namely that the Baraita ruling (cf. Pes. 55b) refers to the fourteenth of Nisan while our Mishnah refers to the festival week. Cf. R. Ash's reply, above. For further notes on this passage v. pes., Sonc. ed. p. 276.
- (6) During the festival week, to protect them from rain. , ughme are split figs, which are sun-dried and pressed into cakes. V. commentaries on Alfasi 's text and Krauss, TA II, 246.
- (7) The figs, or the covering straw. V. Gemara.
- (8) Coarse and fine.
- (9) V. Gemara.
- (10) All four were Palestinian teachers (Tiberias).
- (11) Supra n. 2.
- (12) Latin halica, alicia. Cf. Martial, Epigr. XIII, 9: 'Villio est alicia, carior illa faba'. It is mentioned there with the fine Egyptian lentil (Niliacam . . . lentem).
- (13) Lat. tragus, pulse, porridge.
- (14) Lat. pitsana, barley crushed and cleansed from the husks.
- (15) By popular etymology.
- (16) Derived from ekj 'divide' (into halves).
- (17) From the Greek  in three parts.
- (18) Greek  four.
- (19) Literally (ritually) defiled, potentially or actually, by the grain being washed before the milling. Fruits, grain and vegetables are not subject to ritual defilement until washed or sprayed or have Purposely been left exposed to get damped by rain or dew. After that deliberate damping these take ritual defilement by contact with defiling objects. Cf. Lev. XI, 34. 37-38 with commentaries of Rashi and Nahmanides and B.M. 22a-b, (Sonc. ed. p. 138-9).
- (20) M. Maksh. VI, 2, and cf. Pes 40a.
- (21) Another popular derivation from eukj a shirt or tunic.
- (22) Means 'cereal' in the (final) form of grain.
- (23) V. supra p. 77, n. 7.
- (24) When it is not called a 'cereal' but a 'vegetable' and 'in vows we follow the (meaning of terms in) popular parlance', Ned. 49a; cf. 55a (top) commentaries.
- (25) Or hirse. V. Pes. 35a.
- (26) V. Ned. 55b; Tosef. Ned. IV, 1, ZM. p. 279. 17-18.
- (27) Of Sura, Rab's disciple and successor. Many texts (v. D.S. and SBH) read here Rab Judah at Pumbeditha, also a disciple of Rab, as was also R. Kahana, mentioned next.
- (28) And other ingredients for food seasoning or 'cornchandlers'. V. Tosaf. s.v. ihkc, c and t, hhpurf (sing. t, hhpurf), probably connected with the Greek **
- (29) The bracket is omitted in the Tosefta (M.K. II, 13) and other texts and rightly so, as the addition confines the permission only to the last part of Tabernacles, whereas there is no reason to exclude that of Passover.
- (30) Lit., 'shave'.
- (31) Lit., 'From a maritime province'.
- (32) Lit., 'repelled' for some flagrant breach of discipline, a religious or moral offence. The matter is discussed fully infra 16aff. The 'repelled' person was expected to go about in sorry apparel, with disordered hair during the time of disgrace. as if in mourning.
- (33) A hakam, an ordained Rabbi, to absolve him of a vow to go unkempt for a period, which is found to have been made rashly and is now extremely inconvenient or impossible of fulfillment. Cf. e.g., Ned. IX, 6; 66a.
- (34) V. Num. VI, 1-21. If he became defiled by contact with a corpse he had first to be ritually purified and shaved (ibid 6-9); or, on the completion of his Nazirite period (13, 18).

(35) He had likewise to be shaved and to wash his garments. Lev. XIV, 8-9.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 14a

, OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION. AND LIKEWISE ONE WHO APPLIED TO A SAGE AND WAS ABSOLVED [BY HIM]. HAND-TOWELS, BARBERS' TOWELS AND BATH-TOWELS [MAY BE WASHED]. MEN OR WOMEN [AFFECTED] WITH 'THE FLUX'¹ OR MENSTRUANTS,² OR WOMEN AFTER CHILDBIRTH³ AND ALL THOSE EMERGING FROM [A STATE OF RITUAL.] IMPURITY⁴ TO [BEGIN] THEIR PURIFICATION ARE ALLOWED [TO WASH THEIR GARMENTS]; BUT ALL OTHER MEN ARE FORBIDDEN.

GEMARA. What is the reason that all other men are forbidden? — As we learned: 'Members of the ward on duty⁵ and [communal] Deputies at their Posts⁶ are forbidden [during their turn] to crop [their hair] or wash [their garments]. But on Thursday they are allowed, in honour of the Sabbath'. Now Rabbah b. Bar-Hana reporting R. Eleazar [as commenting on this] said: 'What is the reason [they may on Thursday]? So that they should not enter [on the duty of] their Ward in a state of untidiness'. Here also the reason is that they do not enter upon the festival in a state of untidiness.

R. Zera inquired: Suppose one had lost something on the day before the festival? [Do we say], since he was prevented [from attending to himself before] he may,⁷ or perhaps, as the reason is not obvious, he may not? — Said Abaye: [Obviously not], as people would then say: '[So] all Syrian [fancy] loaves are forbidden, but the Syrian [fancy] loaves of Boethus are allowed'⁸ But admitting your argument [against], yet what about it. Assi's statement? who citing R. Johanan said: 'Anybody who has but one tunic⁹ is allowed to wash it during the festival week'. Would not people say in that case, too: '[So] all Syrian [fancy] loaves are forbidden, but the Syrian [fancy] loaves of Boethus are allowed'? — Surely it has been stated in this connection: 'Said Mar son of R. Ashi, His girdle¹⁰ proves his plight'.¹¹ R. Ashi's comments on our Mishnah were [in this form]: R. Zera enquired, What if a craftsman¹² had lost something on the day before the festival? Do we say that since he is a craftsman, the reason [why he is allowed] is obvious, or since the reason is not so obvious as in those other cases [mentioned in the Mishnah], he may not [attend to himself in the festival week]? Let this question stand [adjourned].¹³

[ONE ARRIVING HOME] FROM ABROAD [MAY CROP]. [The anonymous view of] our Mishnah is not that of R. Judah. For it is taught: R. Judah says, One arriving [home] from abroad may not crop himself [during the festival week] because he had set out [on his voyage] without the approval [of the Rabbis].¹⁴ Said Raba: 'If he merely went on a tour all [authorities] are agreed that he is forbidden;¹⁵ if to seek his bread, all are agreed that he is allowed.¹⁵ Difference of opinion arises only in the case of a voyage for business profits, one master looking upon it as equivalent to [mere] travelling, and the other master looking upon it as equivalent to seeking his bread'.

An objection was raised: 'Said Rabbi: R. Judah's opinion seems apposite where he had set out without approval and the Sages' opinion seems apposite where he had set out with approval'.

Now, what is 'without approval'? If I say for going on a tour, did you not say that all are agreed that he is forbidden?¹⁵ Again [should it mean] for seeking [his] bread; surely did you not say that [if with this object] all are agreed that he is allowed?¹⁶ It is obvious therefore that it means for profit-seeking.¹⁷ Now consider the latter clause: 'And the Sages' opinion seems apposite where he had set out with approval'; what is meant by 'with approval'? If I say [approval to set out] for earning his bread, have you not said that all are agreed that he is allowed?¹⁶ Again, should it [rather] mean for profit [seeking]; but surely then, did you not say that' R. Judah's [adverse] opinion seems apposite in this case [that he is forbidden]?¹⁸ — This is what he [Rabbi] meant to say: The Rabbis accept R. Judah's opinion where he had started out 'without approval', and what means it? For going on a tour; because, even the Sages disagree with him only on [the question of a voyage] for gaining profit, whereas in regard to going on a tour they concur with him.¹⁹ And again, R. Judah accepts the Rabbis' opinion [that he may attend to himself]¹⁶ where he had set out 'with approval', and what means it? For seeking his bread; because even R. Judah disagrees with them only on [the question of a voyage] for gaining profit, whereas in regard to going out for seeking his bread he concurs with them.²⁰

Samuel said: 'If an infant is born during the festival [week] it is allowed to cut his hair²¹ during the festival [week] because there is no imprisonment²² more real than this'. [That is, only 'if . . . born] during the festival [week]' it may be done, but [if born] before then, it is [presumably] not allowed.²³

R. Phineas raised all objection: 'Every one of those mentioned [by the Sages] as being permitted to crop his hair during the festival [week] may [likewise] crop his hair during the [thirty]²⁴ days of his mourning';²⁵ [which means conversely] that every one of those who is forbidden to crop his hair during the festival [week] is [likewise] forbidden to crop his hair during the [thirty]²⁶ days of his mourning.

(6) Ma'amad, v. Glos. Palestine was divided into twenty-four stations or districts which sent their deputies of priests, Levites and lay Israelites to represent the community at the Temple service and they served for a week. While on duty the Deputies observed a daily fast during the day, from Monday to Thursday and in a side chapel recited Holy Writ. V. Ta'an. IV, 1; Talm. 26a and 27a.

(7) Trim himself and wash his garments during the festival week.

(8) A proverbial expression, protesting against discrimination. The origin of the proverb is found in Pes. 37a where it is objected to fancy-shaped loaves for Passover use, as the shaping of the piece of dough may delay the baking to the point of leavening. R. Boethus b. Zonin suggested that the use of moulds might easily obviate this fear, which evoked the (proverbial) retort.

(9) Or shirt.

(10) Or loin cloth.

(11) While washing his shirt, he is either girded with a loin cloth or wears his outer garment fastened by the belt to avoid exposure of his body.

(12) A barber or bath attendant who is permitted to work on the fourteenth of Nisan, who mislaid or lost one of his tools, and his customers see him worried and hindered in his work.

(13) For a future adequate solution.

(14) Quoted in J.M.K. I, 1: 'For R. Judah said it is forbidden to set out on a voyage on the great sea'. The reason for his disapproval is probably on account of the risk of not arriving home in time for the festival. Cf. Shab. 19a and J. Shab. 1, 3.

(15) To attend to his personal appearance during the festival week.

(16) To attend to his personal appearance during the festival week.

(17) I.e., R. Judah does not approve of a sea voyage for mere gain or profit.

(18) All of which shows that the difference cannot be as stated on the question of a voyage for profit.

(19) That he is to be penalized if his homecoming was delayed, and not allowed to trim himself during the festival week.

(20) The accepted view is that a voyage for profit is an extenuating circumstance. V. Han., Asheri and Codes.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 14b

Now if you say that there is a difference here in the case of the infant,¹ you are thus implying that [the observance of] mourning obtains in the case of a minor, whereas it is taught: 'A minor's garment is rent out of grief of soul'?² R. Ashi said [that the negative inference is faulty, for] does it [actually] state 'but those who are forbidden'?³ Perhaps [it means to state] that some there are who are forbidden⁴ and some others who are permitted.⁵

Amemar, or some say. R. Shisha son of R. Idi, taught thus: 'Samuel said: "An infant may be cropped in the festival [week]: it makes no difference whether he was born during the festival [week] or was born before".' Said R. Phineas: We learned this also [indirectly] from [the following]: 'Every one of those mentioned [by the Sages] as being permitted to crop during the festival [week] may likewise crop his hair during the [thirty] days of his mourning'; which means conversely, but every one of those who is forbidden to crop during the festival [week] is likewise forbidden to crop during the [thirty] days of his mourning. Now if you say that a [newly-born] infant is forbidden [to be cropped] you find yourself [implying] that [the observance of] mourning obtains in the case of a minor; whereas it is taught [distinctly]: 'The garment of a minor is rent [merely] out of grief of soul'? — Said R. Ashi: [That negative inference is faulty for] does it [actually] state, 'But he who is forbidden [in the festival week] is also forbidden during his [thirty] days of mourning? Probably it means that some there are who are forbidden and some others who are permitted.

A mourner does not deport himself as one in mourning during a festival, as it is said: And thou shalt rejoice in the feast.⁶ [For], if his mourning began before [the festival], a positive precept incumbent on the community⁷ overrides one incumbent on him as an individual;⁸ and if his mourning began just then [during the festival], an individual's function cannot come and put off that of the public.

Now what about one separated [under a ban]? Should he deport himself as one in 'separation' during a festival? — Said R. Joseph: Come and hear: 'They [the Courts] deal with capital offenses, with [offenses involving judicial] floggings⁹ and monetary suits,¹⁰ [during the festival week]'. [This implies that] if one heeds not the [court's] decision, we put him under a ban.¹¹ Now if you presume that he should not deport himself during the festival like one under 'separation', [then] seeing that where one is already fallen under a ban, the festival comes and suspends [the ban],¹² shall we pronounce him banned in the first instance [during the festival]? Abaye replied: Perhaps [the object of the adjudication is] to examine the charge against him.¹³ For, should you not say thus, then 'capital offenses' therein mentioned would likewise mean indeed that they would have him slain; but surely thereby they [the judges] themselves would be debarred from 'rejoicing in the feast' [as is Scripturally ordained], as it is taught:¹⁴ Says R. Akiba: Whence may it be shown that a Sanhedrin [Court] that put a [sinning] soul to death do not taste [food] all that day? From the instructive text 'Ye shall not eat on the blood'.¹⁵ Therefore [I say] it must be only to examine the charge against him, and likewise here it is only to examine the charge against him. Said R. Joseph to him: If [you explain it] so, the result is that you delay the execution of his sentence [which is forbidden]?¹⁶ But [I take it], they come early in the morning and examine the charges against him; then they go home and eat and drink all that day¹⁷ and, coming back with the setting sun, they do give a final decision and [also] have him put to death.¹⁸

Said Abaye: Come and hear:¹⁹ OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE GRANTED ABSOLUTION.²⁰ Said Raba: Does it state: 'Whom the Sages granted absolution'? It says: OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION, [that is] where he [the offender] went and appeased the plaintiff and then came before our Rabbis²¹ and they then set him free [from restraints].²²

What about a leprous person; does he deport himself as a leper during the festival?²³ — Said Abaye: 'Come and hear: AND [ALSO] A NAZIR OR LEPER EMERGING FROM HIS [STATE OF] IMPURITY TO [BEGIN] HIS PURIFICATION [may crop his hair and wash his garments],²⁴ which implies that during the days of his impurity he does deport himself [as a leper]! — [No]; the Tanna considered that this goes without saying [and is to be understood thus]: It goes without saying that he does not deport himself [as a leper] during the festival.²⁵ But when [he is emerging] into his state of cleanness we might [be inclined to] restrict him, in case he might defer²⁶ making his [preliminary] offerings [of purification].²⁷ Therefore he informs us [that he may, nevertheless].²⁸ Said Raba: Come and hear:²⁹ '[It is taught]: And the leper. [in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent and the hair of his head shall be loose . . .],³⁰ that is meant to include a High Priest [in this rule]'. Now [we learned] a High Priest all through the year is on a par with any other person on a festival, as we learned: The High Priest may make sacrifice [on the altar] even when he be onen,³¹ without however eating thereof! From this [latter restriction of even a High Priest] you can infer [about the former] that he should deport himself as a leper during the festival. — Infer that.

A mourner is forbidden to cut his hair, because since the Divine Law ordained the sons of Aaron:³² Let not the hair of your heads go loose,³³ we infer that for everybody else [cutting the hair] is forbidden

- (1) Whether the infant was born during or before the festival, in which latter case he must not be cropped, and consequently on the principle just enunciated he may not be cropped on his days of mourning.
 - (2) V. infra 26h. It is done, not as an obligatory observance on the part of the child, but merely to deepen the poignancy of grief among the mourners by including the young, unknowing child in the sorrow.
 - (3) 'But those who are forbidden to crop their hair during the festival (week) are (likewise) forbidden to do it during the (thirty) days of mourning'.
 - (4) In the case of adults.
 - (5) In the case of minors.
 - (6) Deut. XVI, 14.
 - (7) The divine charge, an 'ordinance' to the community to observe the joyous celebration of the festival.
 - (8) The observance of mourning.
 - (9) Of thirty-nine stripes, for a well-attested breach of a Scriptural prohibition after due warning. V. Deut. XXV, 1-3; Mak., Sonc. ed. p. 90, n. 1.
 - (10) Claims or fines. So Tosef. M.K. II, 11.
 - (11) Shammetha, to enforce public discipline.
 - (12) I.e., his disabilities of seclusion and wearing a mourner's garb as in the case of the mourner.
 - (13) Without pronouncing judgment.
 - (14) Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 430.
 - (15) Lev. XIX, 26.
 - (16) Cf. Aboth. V, II and Shab. 33a.
 - (17) In fulfillment of the precept of rejoicing on the Festival.
 - (18) [Since after all a final decision is given on the festival week, it follows that the ban is necessarily imposed on the disobedient and consequently proves that the regulations of the ban are in force on the festival week.]
 - (19) In support of my view.
 - (20) The relative clause is at present assumed to mean that one who is banned is automatically released by the Sages on the festival from the disabilities of a ban.
 - (21) During the festival week.
 - (22) Otherwise he remains under his disabilities during the festival.
 - (23) I.e., to remain isolated, let his hair remain long and wear torn or soiled clothes as a leper, during the festival week.
 - (24) Cf. Mishnah supra 13b.
 - (25) I.e., it is immaterial either way so long as he is still an unclean leper, as he, in any case, has to resume his disabilities after the festival. V. Ritba.
 - (26) I.e., after having trimmed himself and changed his clothes during the festival he might postpone the offerings and bring them on the last day of the festival when a private sacrifice may not be offered.
 - (27) I.e., taking two live birds and spring water for the ritual sprinkling with the hyssop, as prescribed in Lev. XIV, 2-8, after which he washed his clothes and shaved his body and was to return to the camp' (home) and after another seven days to complete his 'purification and atonement by sacrifice at the Temple.
 - (28) Crop his hair and cleanse or change his torn clothes during the festival week.

(29) That the leper deports himself as a leper in the festival week also.

(30) Sifra on Lev. XIII, 45 where by laying stress on 'And the' together with the descriptive clause 'in whom the plague is' still, the wording is taken to include especially the otherwise exceptional person of the High Priest, who may never grow long hair or wear torn clothes, even when a mourner. Lev. XXI, 10.

(31) I.e., on the day of poignant grief, when the death of his near and dear occurred. This law is based on the sad experience of Aaron who lost two of his sons on the day of his induction as High Priest. He then offered up the sacrifices, but did not partake of the holy meat. V. Lev. X, 16; 16-20. Cf. Hor., Sonc. ed. pp. 90 and 93. Any other priest may not officiate during the state of onen, except on festivals when the law of onen does not apply.

(32) When Nadab and Abihu died.

(33) I.e., keep it in trim. V. Lev. X, 6 and cf, Ezek. XLIV, 20.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 15a

. What about those 'separated' [under a ban], and [segregated] lepers in regard to cutting [their hair] during the festival week? — Come and hear. 'Those "separated" [under a ban] and [segregated] lepers are forbidden to cut [their hair] and wash [their garments]. If one "separated" [under a ban] died,¹ the Beth din stone his coffin; R. Judah says, not that they set up a heap of stones over him like the heap of Achan,² but the Beth din send [commissioners]³ and have a large stone⁴ placed on his coffin, which teaches you that if anyone is placed under a ban and dies in his "separation", the Beth din stone his coffin'.⁵

A mourner is obliged to muffle his head. Since the All Merciful enjoined Ezekiel: And cover not thine upper lip,⁶ we infer that everybody else is obliged [to do so].⁷ What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to muffling the head? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: 'And they⁸ muffle themselves and sit as men "separated" [under a ban] and like mourners until Heaven grants them mercy'. Said Abaye: Perhaps it is different with one who is 'separated' [under a ban] by displeasure of Heaven⁹ [as it were]; for that is [more] serious [than being in disfavour with man]!

What about a leper, in regard to muffling the head? — Come and hear: And he shall cover his upper lip;¹⁰ we infer from this that he is obliged to muffle his head. — Infer that.

A mourner is forbidden to put on tefillin.¹¹ Since the All Merciful ordained Ezekiel: Bind thy headdress upon thee,¹² this implies that everybody else is forbidden [to do so in deep mourning]. What about one 'separated' [under a ban], in regard to tefillin? — It stands [adjourned].

What about a leper, in regard to [putting on] tefillin? — Come and hear: [Holy Writ prescribes], 'And the leper';¹³ this [amplification] is to include [even] a High Priest [in this law];¹⁴ 'his clothes shall be perumim',¹⁵ that is, they shall be torn. 'And [the hair of] his head shall be parua'.¹⁶ 'Parua' means only letting the hair grow long;¹⁷ these are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Akiba explains [otherwise]: 'Shall be' is stated in connection with the leper's head;¹⁸ and 'shall be' is stated in connection with the leper's garment.¹⁹ [Therefore] just as 'shall be' stated in connection with the garment refers to something external to the body [clothes],²⁰ so also 'shall be' stated in connection with the head refers to something external to the body.²¹ What then [is to be discarded]? Is it not the reference to tefillin? — Said R. Papa, [Not necessarily these], it may refer to [not putting on] a cap or sudarium.²²

A mourner is forbidden to give the usual greeting [of wellbeing],²³ because the All Merciful said to Ezekiel: Sigh in silence.²⁴ What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to [abstaining from] the usual greeting?²³ — R. Joseph said, Come and hear: And in regard to greeting one another 'with peace', as man to man, they [that are fasting]²⁵ behave like persons who are 'separated' [under a ban] by the Omnipresent.²⁶ Said Abaye to him, Perhaps [the case of] the 'separated' [as under a ban] by displeasure of Heaven is different because it is [more] serious.

What about a leper in regard to [abstaining from] greeting one 'with peace'? — Come and hear: [It is written]: And he shall cover his upper lip,²⁷ that is, his lips shall be compressed together, that he should behave like one 'separated' [under a ban] and like a mourner, and he is forbidden to greet one 'with peace' Infer that. Then why not solve now²⁸ [the above question] about one 'separated' [under a ban]?²⁹ — Said R. Aha b. Phineas in the name of R. Joseph: Does it [actually] state that he [the leper] is forbidden [to greet one 'with peace' like one 'separated']? It only states that he behaves like one 'separated' or like a mourner with reference to other things and at the same time that he is also forbidden to greet one 'with peace'.

A mourner is forbidden [to engage] in the words of the Torah, because the All Merciful said to Ezekiel: 'Sigh in silence'.³⁰ What about one 'separated' [under a ban engaging in] the words of the Torah? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: One 'separated' [under a ban] may teach [others] and others may teach him; he may be hired [for work] and others may be hired by him. One under anathema³¹ neither teaches others, nor do others recite it to him; he is not hired [for work] nor are others [to be] hired by him; but he recites to himself in order that he does not interrupt his study;³² and he makes a small stall for himself [as a means] for 'his livelihood'.³³ Whereat Rab³⁴ remarked, [As for instance] selling water at the pass of Araboth.³⁵ Infer from that.³⁶ What about a leper [engaging] in the words of the Torah? — Come and hear: [It is written], And make them known³⁷ unto thy children and thy children's children; the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb. [that they may learn to fear Me all the days . . . and that they may teach their children],³⁸ that is, just as [they heard God's word] then [at Sinai] with awe, fear, trepidation and perspiration;³⁹ [so be it now studied with awe, fear, trepidation and perspiration]. Hence sad they [the Sages], that men who are [affected] with flux,⁴⁰ lepers, or such as [in error] consorted with their wife while in separation⁴¹ are allowed to read [Scripture] out of the Torah [Pentateuch], the Prophets or the Hagiographa⁴² or to recite [orally] Mishnah,⁴³ Midrash,⁴⁴ Gemara,⁴⁵ Halachah or Aggadah;⁴⁶ while those who have night pollutions are forbidden.⁴⁷ You may infer it from that.

A mourner is forbidden to wash his clothes, for it is written, And Joab sent to Tekoa and fetched thence a wise woman and said unto her: 'I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner and put mourner apparel, I Pray thee and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead'.⁴⁸ What about the 'separated' [under a ban] and the lepers washing their clothes? — Come and hear: Persons 'separated' [under a ban] and lepers are forbidden to cut [their hair] or wash [their clothes]. You may infer it from here.

A mourner is in duty bound to rend [his garments], because the All Merciful enjoined the sons of Aaron, 'Neither rend [your clothes]'.⁴⁹ From here you infer that everyone else is bound to do it. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] rending his garments? It stands [adjourned].

What about the leper rending his garments? — Come and hear: 'His clothes shall be perumim'⁵⁰ which means they shall be rent. [Yes], infer it.

A mourner is bound to overturn his couch, because Bar Kappara taught:

(1) Sem. V, 11 adds: 'he requires a stoning'.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 15b

'[God says], "I have set the likeness of mine image on them and through their sins have I upset it; let your couches be overturned¹ on account thereof".' What about one 'separated' [under a ban] and a leper overturning couches? Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden to engage in work, for it is written: And I shall turn your feasts into mourning;² [hence we say] that just as it is forbidden to engage in work during a Feast [festival], so is it forbidden to engage in work during mourning. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to doing work? — Said R. Joseph: 'Come and hear: "When the Sages said that it is forbidden them³ to engage in work, [about themselves, bathe, don shoes. . .], they laid this down only for the daytime, but at night it is all permitted and [the same restrictions] you find also in the case of one 'separated' and a mourner."⁴ Does not this refer to all those [restrictions]?' — No, it is only to the other things, [but not to work].

Come and hear: 'One "separated" [under a ban] teaches [others] and others teach him; he is hired [for work] and others are hired by him'.⁵ You may infer from that. What about a leper engaging in work? — Let this stand [adjourned]. A mourner is forbidden to wash himself, as it is written, And anoint not thyself with oil,⁶ and bathing is implied in anointing.⁷ What about one 'separated' [under a ban] bathing? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: 'When the Sages said that it is forbidden then, to wash [on the fast day] they meant only in regard to washing the whole body, but one is permitted to wash one's face, hands or feet, and [the same restrictions] you find also in the case of one "separated" [under a ban] and a mourner'⁸. Now, does not this refer to all the restrictions? — No, [only] to the others [but not to bathing]. What about the leper washing himself? — Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden to put on sandals [shoes], as the All Merciful ordained Ezekiel, And put thy shoes upon thy feet,⁹ which implies that for everyone else it is forbidden [to do so]. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] putting on sandals? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: 'When the Sages said that it is forbidden then, [on the fast day] to put on sandals, they meant only in town, but on the road it is permitted. When, for instance? When one sets out on the road he puts on [shoes], on entering town, he takes them off: and [the same] you find also in the case of one "separated" [under a ban]'.⁸ Now, does not this refer to all those [restrictions]?¹⁰ — No, [only] to the other.¹¹ What about the leper putting on sandals? — Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed, as it is written: And David comforted Bath-Sheba his wife and went in unto her,¹² which implies that before then¹³ it was forbidden [him]. What about one 'separated' [under a ban] in regard to the use of the [conjugal] bed? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: All those years that Israel spent in the wilderness they were 'separated' [under a ban]¹⁴ yet they used their [conjugal] beds.¹⁵ Said Abaye: But, maybe, the case of those who are 'separated' by [displeasure] of Heaven is different because it is less serious? [You say], 'less serious'! But you argued [before]¹⁶ that it was more serious? — He is uncertain on the point; [if you] go [and argue] this way, he rebuts it, and if you go [and argue] the other way, he [again] rebuts it. What about a leper, in regard to the use of the [conjugal] bed? — Come and hear, for it is taught: '[It is written], But [he] shall dwell outside his tent seven days',¹⁷ that is, he shall be like one 'separated' [under a ban] and like a mourner; and he is forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed, as '[outside] his tent' means only [apart from] his wife, as it is said: Go say to them: Return ye to your tents.¹⁸ You may infer it from that. Then could not one now by this [conclusion] solve the above question [on this point] about one 'separated' [under a ban]? — Said R. Huna¹⁹ son of Phineas in R. Joseph's name: Does it state [categorically] that he [the leper] is forbidden [like one 'separated']? It only states that he is like one 'separated' [under a ban] and like a mourner in respect of other things and that he be [also] forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed.²⁰

A mourner does not send his sacrifices [to the Temple], for it is taught: Says R. Simeon, [It is written, And thou shalt sacrifice] peace-offerings²¹ and eat there,²² and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God,²³ that is, one offers 'peace-offerings' [only] at times when one is untroubled,²⁴ but not at a time when one is onen,²⁵ What about one 'separated' [under a ban], should he [then] send his offerings? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: All those years that Israel spent in the wilderness they were 'separated' [under a ban]²⁶ and [yet] they sent their offerings [to the Tabernacle]. Said Abaye to him: But perhaps one ‘separated’ by [the displeasure of] Heaven is different, because it is not so serious? [You say], ‘Not so serious’! But you argued [before] that it was more serious! — [Abaye] being uncertain on the point rebutted it [either way]. What about a leper, may he send his [sacrificial] offerings? — Come and hear: And after he [a defiled priest] is cleansed²⁷ — [that is, cleansed]²⁸ after coming away from his dead near of kin — they shall reckon unto him seven days²⁹ — those are the seven days which he has to count³⁰ — and in the day that he goeth into the Sanctuary,³¹ into the inner court,³² to minister in the Sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering³³

VII, 29-34), the worshippers with their family group ate the remainder of the sacrificial meat in a state of ritual purity as joyous celebrants (Deut. XII, 6-7; 17-19; XXVII, 7).

(28) V. verse 25; about the ritual sprinkling after being defiled by the dead (before one may enter the sanctuary), Num. XIX, 11-13; 19-20.

(29) The (above) ritual sprinkling from defilement by contact with the dead was done on the third and seventh days after having separated from the corpse; but the use of the phrase ‘they shall reckon seven days’ instead of ‘they shall sprinkle upon him’ is taken to be reminiscent of the seven days for a leper on his recovery and his preliminary ritual cleansing, before leaving his place of Isolation (Lev. XI V, 1-8), which were followed by another seven days of ritual purification before he may proceed on the eighth day with his final purification and atonement. (Ibid. 8-11). Accordingly, the case of a leprous priest is read into the text of Ezekiel. For obviously it would be useless to cleanse a leprous priest (or layman) from his defilement by the dead while still being unclean as a leper, and as such unfit to enter the camp or sanctuary.

— which is his [own meal-oblation¹ consisting of] one tenth part of an ephah [of fine flour]: These are the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, [the wording:] And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary [into the inner court to minister in the sanctuary], he shall offer his sinoffering² [implies that only] when he is fit to go into the sanctuary he is fit to offer up [his own oblation]: and when he is not fit to go into the sanctuary, he is not fit to offer up [his own oblation].³ Raba said: Whence do we know⁴ the regulation that we send a messenger of the Court?⁵ — From what is written: And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab.⁶ And whence do we know that we summon⁷ him to attend [in person]? — From what is written, And Moses said to Korah, Be thou and all thy congregation before the Lord, thou and Aaron [tomorrow].⁸ [Whence, to appear] 'before a great personage'? — From what is written, Before the lord.⁸ [To name both parties], 'thou and So-and-so'? — From what is written, Thou and they [that are with thee] and Aaron.⁸ That we fix a time? — As it is written, To-morrow.⁸ Time and again?⁹ — As it is written: They called there,¹⁰ Pharaoh the king of Egypt [the author of] 'commotion'; he hath let the appointed time pass by. [As I live, saith the King, the Lord of Hosts, surely like Tabor among the mountains and like Carmel by the sea, so shall he come].¹¹ And whence do we know that if one behaves insolently towards the Court's messenger and the latter comes and reports it, this is not deemed slander [on his part]? — As it is written: [And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab]; And they said: [We will not come up]⁶ . . . Wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? [We will not come up].¹² Whence do we derive that we [may] pronounce a shammetha¹³ [imprecation]? — From the text: Curse ye Meroz.¹⁴ Whence do we derive that it must be according to the considered opinion of some prominent person? — From the text: [Curse ye Meroz] said the angel of the Lord¹⁴ [to Barak]. And whence do we derive that we pronounce the herem?¹⁵ — Front the [same] text: Curse ye a cursing.¹⁶ Whence do we derive that [it falls on one who] eats and drinks with the offender or stands within four cubits of him? — From the same text: [Curse ye a cursing] the inhabitants thereof.¹⁷ Whence do we derive that we publish the details of his offence? — From the [same] text: Because they [the denizens of Meroz] came not to the help of the Lord. And, said 'Ulla, Barak pronounced the shammetha¹⁸ against Meroz with [the blast of] four hundred horns. Some say that Meroz was [the name of] a great personage;¹⁹ others say that it was [the name of] a star,²⁰ as it is written [there]: They fought from Heaven, the stars in their courses fought against Sisera.²¹ Whence do we derive that his property may be forfeited?²² — From the text: And whosoever come not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity.²³ Whence do we derive that we may quarrel [with an offender], curse him, smite him, pluck his hair and put on him an oath?²⁴ — From the text: And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them and plucked off their hair and made them swear by God.²⁵ Whence do we derive that we may fetter, arrest and prosecute them? — From the text: [Let judgment be executed upon him with all diligence], whether it be unto death, or to uprooting, or to confiscation of goods or to imprisonment.²⁶ What is meant by ‘uprooting? Said [R.] Adda Mari, reporting Nehemiah b. Baruch, who said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Abin, who had it from Rab Judah, it mean the hardafah.²⁷ What is denoted by hardafah? — Said Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shelath in the name of Rab: It means, They declare him ‘separated’²⁸ forthwith; then [if he still persists] they repeat [the same declaration] after thirty days,²⁹ and finally they pronounce the herem on him after sixty days. Said R. Huna b. Hinena, This is what R. Hisda said: They [first] warn him on Monday, [then] on the Thursday³⁰ [following] and [again on the] Monday. This rule applies if he disregards a monetary judgment; but in a case of sheer contumacy the ban is imposed forthwith. When a certain butcher had been insolent to R. Tobai b. Mattena, Abaye and Raba were appointed³¹ to investigate and they pronounced the shammetha on him. In the end, the fellow went and appeased his litigant.³² Said Abaye, What is one to do? Should we absolve him now? The shammetha had not lasted [its] thirty days.³³ Shall we not absolve him? The Rabbis want to go in to him!³⁴ Said lie to R. Idi b. Abin: ‘Have you [perchance] heard aught bearing on this?’ He replied: ‘Thus said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi as reporting Samuel: "A toot³⁵ binds and a toot releases!"' [Said Abaye] to him, Yea, but this obtains only in the case of disregarding a monetary decision, but in a case of contumacy [it holds] until it has rested on him for thirty days! Anyhow, that shows that Abaye was of opinion that if three people had pronounced the shammetha on a man three others cannot come and release him!³⁶ For the question was raised: If three people had pronounced the shammetha on a man, can three others come and remit it for him? — Come and hear: ‘One who has been "separated" [under a ban] by the master is [deemed as] "separated" from the disciple;³⁷ but one who has been "separated" by the disciple is not [considered as] "separated" from the master. One who is "separated" by his own town is also "separated" from another town; but one who is "separated" by another town is not [considered] "separated" from his own town. One who is "separated" by the Nasi [Prince] is "separated" in all Israel; but one who is "separated" by all Israel is not [thereby] "separated" from the "Prince". Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that if one of the disciples had "separated" someone and died, his part is not nullified’. From this you derive three points: — [a] That if a disciple ‘separated’ someone in [defence of] his personal dignity,³⁸ the ‘separation’ lies, and you infer [b] that each person revokes his own part, and you infer [c] that if a body of three have pronounced a shammetha on a person, three others may not come and release him.³⁹

Amemar said: ‘The rule in practice is, that if a body of three have laid a shammetha on a person, a body of three others [can] come and release him’. Said R. Ashi to Amemar, But it is taught: ‘Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that if one of the disciples "separated" someone and died, his part is not nullified’! Does not this mean, that it cannot be nullified at all? — No, [it means] not until a body of three others come and release him.

Our Rabbis taught: No ‘separation’ ban holds less than thirty days and no ‘reproof’⁴⁰ holds less than seven days; and although there is no direct proof on that point, there is an [indirect] ‘indication’ of it: If her father had but spit in her face, should she⁴¹ not hide in shame seven days?

[Let her be shut up without the camp seven days and after that he shall be brought in again].⁴²

R. Hisda remarked, 'Our "separation" [in Babylon] corresponds to their "reproof" [in Palestine]'. But is their 'reproof' of only seven days' duration, not more? Is it not a fact that R. Simeon, Rabbi's son, and Bar Kappara were once sitting rehearsing the lesson together when a difficulty arose about a certain passage⁴³ and R. Simeon said to Bar Kappara, 'This [matter] needs Rabbi [to explain it]', and Bar Kappara replied: 'And what forsooth can Rabbi [have to] say on this?' He went and repeated it to his father, [at which] the latter was vexed, and [when] Bar Kappara next presented himself before Rabbi, he said: 'Bar Kappara, I have never known you!'⁴⁴ He realized that he [Rabbi] had taken the matter to heart and submitted himself to the [disability of a] 'reproof' for thirty days. Again, on one occasion, Rabbi issued an order that they should not teach disciples in the open public market place. (What was his exposition?⁴⁵ — How beautiful are thy steps in sandals, O prince's daughter!⁴⁶ The roundings of thy thighs are like the links of a chain [the work of the hands of a skilled workman].⁴⁷ As the thigh is covered

(1) If he is a common priest, after full purification and re-admission into the inner court of the priests, he might on that very day officiate and offer up his own free-gift oblation (v. Men. 73-74a). This proves that as long as he is unclean, whether through contact with dead or through leprosy, he cannot bring his offerings.

(2) Ezek. XLIV, 27.

(3) That is, R. Simeon does not allow a leper and common priest or a layman to send his offerings to the Temple until after his purification and atonement by sacrifices. For a leper had to attend in person to be purified by the stated ceremony (Lev. XIV, 11, 14-18, 20).

so the [discussions on the] words of the Torah are also [to be] under cover.)¹ — R. Hiyya went out and taught the sons of his two brothers in the [open] marketplace, Rab and Rabbah son of Kar Hana. Rabbi heard [of this and] was vexed. [When] R. Hiyya [next] presented himself before him, Rabbi said to him, 'Iyya!² Who is calling you outside?' He realized that he [Rabbi] had taken the matter to heart, and submitted himself to [the disability of] a 'reproof' for thirty days. On the thirtieth day Rabbi sent him a message saying 'Come!' Later he sent him a message not to come! (What³ was his idea in sending the first [message] and what in sending the second? At first he thought 'part of the day may be deemed equivalent to the whole day' and in the end he thought, we do not say part of the day may be deemed equivalent to the whole day'.)⁴ In the end he came. Said Rabbi to him, Why have you come? R. Hiyya replied: 'Because you, Sir, sent for me to come'. But then I sent to you not to come! He replied: 'The one [messenger] I saw and the other I have not seen'. Thereupon he [Rabbi] cited [as appropriate] the text: When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.⁵ Wherefore, Sir, [asked Rabbi] did you act thus [contrary to order]? — Because, replied R. Hiyya, it is written: Wisdom crieth aloud it, the street: [She uttereth her voice in the broad places; she calleth at the head of the street; at the entrance of the gates, in the city she uttereth her words].⁶ Said Rabbi to him: 'If you read Holy Writ [once], you have not read it a second time; if you have read it a second time, you have not read it a third time; and if you have read it a third time, they [who taught you] have not explained it to you'.⁷ [The text] 'Wisdom crieth aloud in the streets' is [to be taken] in the sense in which Raba [explained it];⁸ for Raba said: 'If one studies the Torah indoors, the Torah proclaims his merit abroad'. But then is it not written [otherwise]: 'From the beginning I have not spoken in secret'?⁹ — That has [special] reference to the 'Kallah' days.¹⁰ And what [use] does R. Hiyya make of the text — 'The roundings of thy thighs'? — He explained it in reference to the dispensing of charity and acts of lovingkindness.¹¹ Thus¹² [you see] the disability of their 'reproof' [in Palestine] lasts thirty days! — The 'reproof' of a Nasi is different. And our 'reproof', how long [is its disability]? — One day [only], as in the case of Samuel and Mar 'Ukba.¹³ When they were sitting together [at the College] engaging in the revision of some theme, Mar 'Ukba sat before him¹⁴ at a distance of four cubits; and when they sat together at a judicial session, Samuel sat before him¹⁴ at a distance of four cubits and a place was dug out¹⁵ for Mar 'Ukba where he sat on a matting so that what he¹⁶ said should be heard. Every day Mar 'Uba accompanied Samuel to his house. One day he¹⁶ was [rather] engrossed in a suit, and Samuel walked behind him. When he¹⁶ had reached his house, Samuel said to him: 'Haven't you been rather a long time at it?'¹⁷ Take up now my case!¹⁸ He¹⁶ then realized that he [Samuel] felt aggrieved and submitted himself to the [disability of a] 'reproof' for one day.

There was a certain woman who sat sprawling on the footway fanning the husks out of her barley groats, and when a Collegiate was walking past her she did not make way for him. He said, 'How impudent is this woman!' She came before R. Nahman. Said he to her, Did you hear him utter the shammetha?¹⁹ She replied [she had] not. Said he to her, Go and submit yourself to the [disability of a] 'reproof' for one day.¹⁹ Zutra b. Tobiah was [once] expounding a Scriptural lesson in the presence of Rab Judah. Coming to the verse: And these are the last words of David,²⁰ he said to R. Judah. 'Last words': this implies that there were former words; which are those former [words]? He [Rab Judah] kept silent, without saying anything. Again said the former: 'Last words! This implies there were former words; which are those former [words]?' — He [then] replied: What, think you that one who does not know an explanation of that text is not an eminent man? He [Zutra] realized that he [Rab Judah] had taken the matter to heart [and] submitted himself to the [disability of a] 'reproof' for one day. Now, however, that we have come upon this question: "'Last words", this implies that there were former words', what were they? — [These:] And David spoke unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies and out of the hand of Saul.²¹ The Holy One, blessed 'be

He, said to David, David do you compose a song on the downfall of Saul? Had you been Saul and he David, I would have annihilated many a David out of regard for him. Hence it is written, ‘Shiggaion²² of David, which he said unto the Lord, concerning Cush a Benjamite.²³ Was Cush that Benjamite’s name? And was not his name Saul? — But, just as a Cushite [Ethiopian]²⁴ is distinguishable by his skin, so was Saul distinguished by his deeds. In like manner you explain: ‘[And Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses] because of the Cushite woman that he had take,; to wife.²⁵ Was she a Cushite [woman]? Was not her name Zipporah? But as a Cushite woman is distinguishable by her skin so was also Zipporah distinguished by her deeds. In like manner you explain: Now Ebed-Melek the Cushite . . . heard.²⁶ Now was his name Cushite? Was not his name Zedekiah?²⁷ But as the Cushite is distinguishable by his skin so was Zedekiah distinguished by his deeds. In like manner you explain: Are ye not as the children of the Cushites unto me, O children of Israel, saith the Lord?²⁸ Now is their name [children of] Cushites? Was not their name [children of] Israel? The truth is that as the Cushite is distinguishable by his skin, so are Israel distinguished by their ways²⁹ from all other nations.³⁰

R. Samuel b. Nahmani citing R. Jonathan. explained: [And these tire the last words of David], The saying of David the son of Jesse and the saying of the man raised on high,³¹ [means, it is] the saying of David the son of Jesse who established firmly the yoke [discipline] of repentance.³² [The spirit of the Lord spoke by the and His word was upon ny tongue]. The God of Israel said, The Rock of Israel spoke to me: Ruler over man shall be the righteous, even he that ruleth through the [reverent] fear of God.³³ What does this mean? — Said R. Abbahu, It means this: ‘The God of Israel said, to the [David] spake the Rock of Israel; I rule man; who rules Me? [It is] the righteous: for I make a decree and he [may] annul it’.³⁴

And these tire the names of the mighty of David: Josheb-basshebeth a Tahchemonite [etc.].³⁵ What does this mean? — Said R. Abbahu, It means: And these are the mighty deeds of David: ‘Josheb-basshebeth’ — [which means], sitting at the session;³⁶ [that is], When David sat at the College Session he was not seated on cushions and coverlets but on the [bare] ground.³⁷ For all the time that his Master, Ira the Jairite,³⁸ was alive he taught the Rabbis whilst being himself seated on cushions and coverlets; when his soul found rest David used to teach the Rabbis being himself seated on the ground.³⁹ Said they [the Rabbis] to him: ‘Sit, sit on the cushions and coverlets’; but he would not accede to their request.

‘Tahchemoni’.⁴⁰ Rab explained: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him [to David], ‘Since you have humbled yourself you shall be like Me [that is], that I make a decree and you [may] annul it’. ‘Chief of the Captains’,⁴¹ [that is] you be chief next to the three Fathers. He is Adino⁴² the Eznite,⁴³ [that is] when he was sitting engaged in the [study of] Torah he rendered himself pliant as a worm, but when he went marching out to [wage] war he hardened himself like a lance. ‘On eight hundred slain at one time’, [that is] when he threw a javelin he felled eight hundred slain at one time and moaned for the [shortage of] two hundred, for it is written: How one should chase a thousand.⁴⁴ But an echo came forth and said: ‘Save only for the matter of Uriah the Hittite’!⁴⁵

Said R. Tanhuni son of R. Hiyya a man of Kefar Acco as citing R. Jacob b. Aha who reported R. Simlai; and some say, R. Tanhun, said as reporting R. Huna; and again some say, R. Huna

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 17a

if a disciple 'separates' someone in [defence of] his personal dignity his 'separation' is an [effective] . For it is taught: 'One who has been "separated" [as under a ban] by the Master is [deemed] "separated" from the disciple; but one who has been "separated" by the disciple is not [deemed] "separated" from the Master'.¹ [That means], not 'separated' from the Master; but in regard to everybody else he is ['separated']. [Now let us see; 'separated'] for what [offence]? If [it was imposed] for some offence towards Heaven, then there is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord!² Therefore [presumably] it is only so³ [where a disciple had pronounced it] in [defence of] his personal dignity. R. Joseph said that a Collegiate⁴ may enforce his own rights in a matter where he is perfectly certain [as to the law]. There was once a certain Collegiate whose reputation was objectionable. Said Rab Judah, How is one to act? To put the shammetha on him [we cannot], as the Rabbis have need of him [as an able teacher]. Not to put the shammetha on him [we cannot afford] as the name of Heaven is being profaned. Said he to Rabbah b. Bar Hana, Have you heard alight on that point? He replied: 'Thus said R. Johanan: What means the text, For the priest's lips should keep knowledge and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts?⁵ [It means, that] if the Master is like unto a messenger of the Lord of Hosts, they should seek the law at his mouth; but if [he be] not , they should not seek the law at his mouth'. [Thereupon] Rab Judah pronounced the shammetha on him. In the end Rab Judah became indisposed. The Rabbis came to enquire about him and that man came along with them. When Rab Judah beheld him he laughed. Said the man to him: Not enough for him that he put upon that man [me] the shammetha, but he even laughs at me! Replied he [Rab Judah]: I was not laughing at you: but as I am departing to that World [beyond] I am glad to think that even towards such a personage as you I showed no indulgence. Rab Judah's soul

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. ON THE EVENING [OR]¹ OF THE FOURTEENTH [OF NISAN] A SEARCH IS MADE FOR LEAVEN² BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP.³ EVERY PLACE WHEREIN LEAVENED BREAD IS NOT TAKEN DOES NOT REQUIRE SEARCHING, THEN IN WHAT CASE DID THEY RULE, TWO ROWS OF THE WINE CELLAR [MUST BE SEARCHED]?⁴ [CONCERNING] A PLACE WHEREIN LEAVEN MIGHT BE TAKEN,⁵ BETH SHAMMAI MAINTAIN: TWO ROWS OVER THE FRONT OF THE WHOLE CELLAR;⁶ BUT BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: THE TWO OUTER ROWS, WHICH ARE THE UPPERMOST.⁷

GEMARA. What is OR? — R. Huna said: Light [naghe]; while Rab Judah said: Night [lele]. Now it was assumed [that] he who says light means literally light;⁸ while he who says night means literally night.⁹ An objection is raised: As soon as the morning was light [or], the men were sent away,¹⁰ which proves that 'or' is day? — Is it then written, The 'or' was morning: [Surely] 'the morning was or' is written, as one says, Morning has broken forth. And [this verse is] in accordance with what Rab Judah said in Rab's name. For Rab Judah said in Rab's name: A man should always enter [a town] by day,¹¹ and set out by day.¹²

An objection is raised: As the light of [or] the morning, when the sun riseth,¹³ which proves that 'or' means the daytime? — Is it then written, 'or is morning': surely it is written, 'as the light of [or] the morning', and this is its meaning: 'and as the light of the morning' in this world so shall the rising of the sun be unto the righteous in the world to come.¹⁴

An objection is raised: And God called the light [or] Day¹⁵ which proves that or is daytime? — This is its meaning: the advancing of light¹⁶ He called Day.¹⁷ If so, 'and the darkness He called Night' means [similarly], the advancing of darkness He called Night:¹⁸ but surely it is an established principle that it is day until the appearance of the stars?¹⁹ Rather this is its meaning: The Merciful One summoned the light and appointed it for duty by day, and He summoned the darkness and appointed it for duty by night.²⁰

An objection is raised: Praise him all ye stars of light [or],²¹ which proves that 'or' is evening? — This is its meaning: praise him all ye stars which give light. If so, are only the stars that give light to praise [Him], while those which do not give light need not praise — yet surely It is written, Praise ye him, all his host?²² Rather he [the Psalmist] tells us this: the light of the stars too is [designated] light. What is its practical bearing? In respect of one who vows [not to benefit] from light. For it was taught: If one vows [not to benefit] from light, he is prohibited the light of stars.

An objection is raised: The murderer riseth with the light [or], he killeth the poor and needy, and in the night he is as a thief.²³

- (1) rit. This is the meaning finally assigned in the Gemara to OR after a considerable discussion.
- (2) Heb. mnj, hamez. Two words are employed in the Bible: (i) hamez, leavened stuff v. infra 42a and (ii) se'or, leaven, i.e., dough so greatly leavened as to act as a leavening agent for other dough. In this Tractate hamez will generally be translated 'leaven' except where it is necessary to distinguish it from se'or.
- (3) So that there shall be none in the house during Passover, which commences on the fifteenth.
- (4) Seeing that leaven is not generally taken into a wine cellar.
- (5) A private cellar from which supplies are drawn for table. The servant sometimes enters it while eating bread.
- (6) Must be searched.
- (7) V. infra 8b.
- (8) I.e., daybreak or morning.
- (9) Rashi deletes this, since that is so, in fact.
- (10) Gen. XLIV, 3.
- (11) Lit., 'when it is good', the allusion being to Gen. I, 4: and God saw the light, that it was good.
- (12) Thus the brethren waited for daybreak before setting out.
- (13) II Sam. XXIII, 4.
- (14) Though at sunrise in this world it is still rather dark, yet in the future world it shall be as light as when the morning is advanced in this world (R. Tam). Rashi's explanation is slightly different.
- (15) Gen. I, 5.
- (16) Lit., 'that which proceeds to grow light'.
- (17) I.e., the moment when light begins to appear marks the commencement of day. On this translation or is not a noun but a gerund: the lighting up.
- (18) The moment when darkness begins to fall marks the commencement of night.
- (19) Though darkness begins to fall earlier.
- (20) Thus wayikra is translated: and he summoned, not, 'and he called (designated)', as in E.V.
- (21) Ps. CXLVIII, 3.
- (22) Ibid. 2.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 2b

Now since he states, 'and in the night he is as a thief,' it follows that 'or' is day? — The meaning there is this: if the matter is as clear as light to you that he [the thief] comes [even] to take life, he is a murderer, and he [the victim] may be saved at the cost of his [the thief's] life; but if you are doubtful about it, like [the darkness of] the night, you must regard him [only] as a thief, and he [the victim] must not be saved at the cost of his life.¹

An objection is raised: Let the stars of the twilight thereof be dark: let him look for light [or], but have none; neither let it behold the eyelids of the morning.² Since he says, 'let him look for light, but have none, it follows that 'or' is day? — There Job indeed curses his destiny³ and exclaims, Heaven grant that that man [sc. himself] look for light, but have none.⁴

An objection is raised: If I say, Surely the darkness shall overwhelm me, and the light [or] about me shall be night:⁵ this proves that 'or' is day?⁶ — There David said thus: I thought, surely darkness shall overwhelm me in the future world, which resembles day; but now, even this world, which resembles night,⁷ is light about me.

An objection is raised: R. Judah said: We search [for leaven] in the evening ['or'] of the fourteenth, in the morning of the fourteenth, and at the time of removal:⁸ Now since R. Judah says, 'We search in the evening ['or'] of the fourteenth and in the morning of the fourteenth,' it follows that 'or' is evening. This proves it.

An objection is raised: From when is work forbidden on the fourteenth [of Nisan]? R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: From the time of the 'or';⁹ R. Judah said: From the [first] sparklings of the [rising] sun. Said R. Eliezer b. Jacob to R. Judah: Where then do we find a day during part of which work is forbidden while during [the other] part it is permitted? He replied, Let that [day] itself prove [this possibility], for during part of it the eating of leaven is permitted, whereas during the other part it is forbidden.¹⁰ Now since R. Judah maintains, From the [first] sparklings of the [rising] sun, it follows that by 'or' R. Eliezer b. Jacob means evening? No; what does 'or' mean? The morning dawn. If so, when he says to him, 'Where then do we find a day during part of which work is forbidden while during [the other] part it is permitted,' let him answer himself: surely there is the night, which is permitted?¹¹ — R. Eliezer b. Jacob argues thus: As for my view, it is well; we find that the Rabbis drew a distinction between night and day, for it was taught in respect of a public fast: Until when may one eat and drink? Until the commencement¹² of dawn: this is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's view. R. Simeon maintained: Until cockcrow.¹³ But on your view: where do we find that the Rabbis drew a distinction in the day itself? [To which] he replied, Let that [day] itself prove it, for during part thereof the eating of leaven is permitted while during part thereof it is forbidden? R. Judah answers R. Eliezer rightly?¹⁴ R. Eliezer says thus to him: I speak to you of work, which is [prohibited] by the Rabbis, while you answer me about leaven [on the fourteenth day], which is [prohibited] by Scripture; thus far¹⁵ the Divine Law permits, and from then Scripture forbids. And the other?¹⁶ — The [additional] hours are Rabbinical.¹⁷ And the other? — The Rabbis [merely] erected a safeguard for a Scriptural law.¹⁸

An objection is raised: Bonfires are lit only for a new moon that is visible in its [due] time, in order to sanctify it.¹⁹ And when were the bonfires lit? on the evening ['or'] following the intercalated day.²⁰ This proves that 'or' is evening. This proves it.

An objection is raised: If he [the priest] was standing all night and offering [the fats of sacrifices] on the altar, at daybreak [orah] he must wash his hands and feet:²¹ this is Rabbi's view?²² — Orah is [a] different [word].

Mar Zutra raised an objection:

(1) V. Ex. XXII, 1; the present verse lays down the conditions for the law stated there to be applicable.

(2) Job. III, 9.

(3) Mazzal is the constellation which controls one's destiny.

(4) But 'light' there is not parallel to or synonymous with morning.

(5) Ps. CXXXIX, 11.

(6) Since it is contrasted with night.

(7) By contrast, with the next; but not absolutely, Judaism being far too robust and optimistic a religion for such a view; cf. Hertz, Genesis, Additional Note A, III, p. 57.

- (8) When the leaven must be destroyed.
- (9) But even if it is the practice in a community to cease work earlier, this has no binding force; v. infra 50a.
- (10) V. infra 11b.
- (11) Though night is part of the day.
- (12) Lit., ‘ascending’.
- (13) The prohibition of work on the fourteenth is likewise merely Rabbinical.
- (14) Surely he must have perceived the answer himself!
- (15) Up to a certain hour.
- (16) Does he not admit the distinction?
- (17) V. infra 11b Mishnah. Thus they permit the first four hours and forbid the following two.
- (18) Lest the day is cloudy and one does not know exactly when it is midday; therefore they added two hours. But when the law is entirely Rabbinical, they would not apply it to part of the day only.
- (19) The Jewish month, which is lunar, consists of either twenty-nine or thirty days. During the early Talmudic age
- (20) The additional day is the thirtieth, whereby the month is full; the bonfire is lit on the evening of the thirty-first.
- (21) Lit., ‘he needs the sanctification of his hands and feet (from the laver)’, v. Ex. XXX, 17.
- (22) Thus ‘orah’ denotes daybreak, and it is now assumed that ‘or’ and ‘orah’ are identical.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 3a

If a woman miscarries on the evening [or] of the eighty-first day; Beth Shammai exempt her from a sacrifice, whereas Beth Hillel declare her liable.¹ Said Beth Hillel to Beth Shammai: Wherein does the evening [‘or’] of the eighty-first differ from the day of the eighty-first; seeing that it was assimilated thereto in respect of uncleanness,² shall one not assimilate it thereto in respect of sacrifice? Now since Beth Hillel say to Beth Shammai, ‘Wherein does the evening [or] of the eighty-first differ from the day of the eighty-first,’ it follows that ‘or’ is evening. This proves it.

New Moon was fixed by direct observation, not calculation, and communities at a distance from Jerusalem were informed by bonfires. These were lit only if the New Moon appeared ‘in its (due) time,’ i.e., it was fixed for the thirtieth day, the previous month thus consisting of twenty-nine days only; in that case too Beth Din formally sanctified this day. But if observation fixed it for the thirty-first day, no bonfires were lit, since the absence of bonfires on the previous day would be a sufficient signal; further, New Moon was not formally sanctified by Beth Din (Rashi). An objection is raised: one might think that it³ may be eaten on the evening [‘or’] of the third day [from sacrifice], and it is logical: Sacrifices⁴ are eaten on one day,⁵ while peace-offerings are eaten on two days: just as there the night follows the day,⁶ so here too the night should follow the day. Therefore it is stated, It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if aught remain until the third day [it shall be burnt with fire]:⁷ teaching, it may be eaten only during the day, but it may not be eaten during the evening [‘or’] of the third day. One might think that it must be burnt immediately;⁸ and this is logical: Sacrifices⁴ may be eaten one day and one [sc. the following] night, while peace-offerings may be eaten two days and one [sc. the intermediate] night: just as there, immediately after [the time allowed for] eating there is burning, so here too immediately after [the time allowed for] eating there is burning. Therefore it is stated, But that which remaineth of the flesh of the sacrifice, on the third day it shall be burnt with fire:⁹ teaching, you must burn it by day, but you must not burn it by night. Since he states, . . . it may be eaten in the evening [‘or’] of the third day,’ it follows that or is evening. This proves it.

Come and hear: on the evening [‘or’] of the Day of Atonement one recites seven [benedictions] and confesses; in the morning service he recites seven and confesses; in the additional service¹⁰ he recites seven and confesses; at minhah¹¹ he recites seven and confesses; (at ne’ilah — the concluding service — he recites seven and confesses);¹² in the evening service he recites [one benediction] embodying the eighteen; R. Hanina b. Gamaliel said on the authority of his fathers: He must recite the eighteen [benedictions] in full, because he must pronounce habdalah¹³ in [the benediction] ‘Thou dost graciously grant knowledge’.¹⁴ This proves that ‘or’ is evening. This proves it.

Come and hear: For the School of Samuel¹⁵ learned: ‘In the evening¹⁶ of the fourteenth leaven is searched for by the light of a lamp’; thus proving that ‘or’ is evening!¹⁷ The fact is both R. Huna and Rab Judah are alike, agreeing that ‘or’ is evening, and there is no controversy: each Master [speaks] in accordance with his locality. In R. Huna's town they called it naghe,¹⁸ while in Rab Judah's town it is called night [lele].

And our Tanna, why does he not employ lele?¹⁹ — He employs a refined expression, and in accordance with R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: one should not utter a gross expression with his mouth, for lo! the Writ employs a circumlocution of eight letters²⁰ rather than utter a gross expression, for it is said, of every clean beast . . . and of the beasts that are not clean.²¹ R. Papa said: Nine, for it is said, If there be among you any man, that is not clean by reason of that which chanceth by night.²² Rabina said: Ten, [including] the waw of tavor.²³ R. Aha b. Jacob said: Sixteen, for it is said, for he thought, Something hath befallen him he is not clean; surely he is not clean.²⁴

The School of R. Ishmael taught: one should always discourse in decent language, for lo!, the case of a zab²⁵ it is called riding, while in connection with a woman it is called sitting;²⁶ and it is said, and thou shalt choose the tongue of the subtle;²⁷ and it is said, and that which my lips know they shall speak purely.²⁸ Why [quote] ‘and it is said [etc.]’?²⁹ — [For] should you object, that is only in the case of Scripture,³⁰ but not in the case of Rabbinical [discussions], then come and hear, ‘and it is said, and thou shalt choose the tongue of the subtle’.³¹ Yet should you [still] object, that is only in reference to Rabbinical [discussions] but not secular matters, — then come and hear, ‘and it is said, and that which my lips know they shall speak purely’.

Now, is riding not written in connection with a woman, but surely it is written, And Rebekah arose, and her damsels, and they rode upon the camels?³² — There it was natural through fear of the camels.³³ But it is written, and Moses took his wife and his sons, and made them ride upon an ass?³⁴ — There

(1) A woman must bring a sacrifice eighty-one days after the birth of a daughter (v. Lev. XII, 2.6). This sacrifice suffices also for a miscarriage within the eighty days, i.e., before it was due, but not for a miscarriage (or viable birth) from the eighty-first day and onwards, since by then it was already due on account of the first birth. Now, by the evening of the eighty-first day eighty days have already passed; on the other hand, since there are no sacrifices at night, she could not offer hers until the following morning. Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel accordingly differ as to whether that miscarriage entails a sacrifice or not.

(2) A discharge of blood on the eighty-first, whether in the evening or during the day, renders her unclean, — this is agreed by all. — A discharge between the fifteenth and the eightieth inclusive does not make her unclean; v. ibid. 5.

(3) Sc. the flesh of a peace-offering.

(4) Viz. the thanksoffering.

(5) I.e., only on the day they are brought.

(6) The thanksoffering may be eaten during the night following the day in which it is sacrificed.

(7) Lev. XIX, 6.

(8) After the expiration of the time allowed for its eating, i.e., on the evening of the third day.

(9) Lev. VII, 17.

(10) There is an additional service (musaf) on all Sabbaths and Festivals, corresponding to the additional sacrifices of those days.

(11) v. Glos.

(12) The bracketed passage is absent in our text but is supplied from Yoma 87b and Nid. 8b.

(13) V. Glos.

(14) The 'Prayer' par excellence on weekdays comprises eighteen (subsequently increased to nineteen) statutory benedictions; on Sabbaths and Festivals the first three and the last three only are recited, the intermediate twelve being omitted and replaced by one bearing on the nature of the day. A feature of all the services on the Day of Atonement is the 'confession', a recital of sins committed, not necessarily by the individual but by the people as a whole, for which reason it is couched in the plural — 'we have sinned'. The evening following the Day of Atonement is of course non-holy, but the first Tanna permits one benediction comprising the eighteen to be recited. Each of the benedictions bears a name, indicating its main subject: the fourth is designated, 'Thou dost graciously grant knowledge', as it is a prayer for knowledge and understanding, and on the termination of Sabbaths and Festivals habdalah is inserted in this benediction. For a full discussion of these benedictions v. J.E. art. Shemoneh 'Esreh; v. also Elbogen, J.G., 149f.

(15) The reading infra 7b is: the School of R. Ishmael.

(16) Lele — the very term employed by Rab Judah to define 'or' in our Mishnah.

(17) In refutation of R. Huna.

(18) Jast.: 'night-break'. Margin: light employed as a euphemism for darkness in the same way that a blind person is called a man with too much light.

(19) V. n. 3.

(20) I.e., uses eight letters more than is necessary.

(21) Gen. VII, 2; a single word, 'unclean', would save eight letters in the Hebrew text.

(22) Deut. XXIII, 11. Here too a single word 'unclean' would save nine letters in the Hebrew text.

(23) Tahor (rivy) is written plene, i.e., with a waw, and that makes a difference of ten letters.

(24) I Sam. XX, 26.

(25) V. Glos.

(26) The reference is to Lev. XV, 9 and 20: And what saddle (or, carriage) soever he that hath issue rideth upon shall be unclean. Everything also that she sitteth upon shall be unclean. Actually the conditions of defilement are the same in both cases; nevertheless, Scripture did not speak of a woman's riding, because sitting is a more modest and decent conception.

(27) Job. XV, 5.

(28) Ibid. XXXIII, 3.

(29) What is the purpose of the additional quotations, seeing that the first verse proves his statement?

(30) Owing to its great sanctity.

(31) This is regarded as a positive injunction to speak subtly, i.e., with a due sense of the proprieties.

(32) Gen. XXIV, 61.

(33) A woman would ride properly, not merely sit on the side, through fear of falling down from the camel's high back.

(34) Ex. IV, 20.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 3b

it was natural on account of his sons. But it is written, And it was so, as she rode on her ass?¹ — There it was natural through fear of the night. Alternatively, there was no fear of the night, but there was fear of David. Another alternative: there was no fear of David either, but there was the fear of the mountain. Yet is not 'unclean' written in Scripture?² Rather wherever they are equal[ly convenient], [Scripture] discourses in a refined language; but wherever more words would be required, the shorter phraseology is employed. As R. Huna said in Rab's name — others say, R. Huna said in Rab's name on R. Meir's authority: one should always teach his pupil in concise terms. And where they are equal he discourses in refined speech? Yet surely 'riding' [rokebeth] and 'sitting' [yoshebeth] are alike [in length], yet 'riding' [rokebeth] is stated? — Rakebeth is stated.³

Two disciples sat before Rab. one said, This discussion has made us [as tired] as an exhausted swine;⁴ while the other said, This discussion has made us [as tired] as an exhausted kid; and Rab would not speak to the former.

There were two disciples who sat before Hillel, one of whom was R. Johanan b. Zakkai-others state, before Rabbi, and one of them was R. Johanan: One said, Why must we vintage [grapes] in cleanness, yet need not gather [olives] in cleanness? While the other said: Why must we vintage in cleanness, yet may gather [olives] in uncleanness?⁵ I am certain that the latter will be an authorized teacher⁶ in Israel, he observed; and it did not take long before⁷ he was an authorized teacher in Israel.

There were three priests: one said, I received as much as a bean [of the shewbread]; the second said, I received as much as an olive; while the third said, I received as much as a halta'ah's tail.⁸ They investigated his pedigree⁹ and found a blemish of unfitness in him.¹⁰ But we learned: one must not investigate from the altar and above?¹¹ — Do not say, a blemish of unfitness, but a baseness which made him unfit.¹² Alternatively, there it was different, because he impaired his status himself.

A certain Syrian [i.e., non-Jew] used to go up and partake of the Passover sacrifices in Jerusalem, boasting: It is written, there shall no alien eat thereof. . . no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof,¹³ yet I eat of the very best. Said R. Judah b. Bathyra to him: Did they supply you with the fat-tail? No, he replied. [Then] when you journey up thither say to them, Supply me with the fat-tail. When he went up he said to them, Supply me with the fat-tail. But the fat-tail belongs¹⁴ to the Most High!¹⁵ they replied. Who told you [to do] this? they inquired. R. Judah b. Bathyra. answered he. What is this [matter] before us? they wondered. They investigated his pedigree, and discovered that he was a Syrian, and killed him.¹⁶ Then they sent [a message] to R. Judah b. Bathyra: 'Peace be with thee,¹⁷ R. Judah b. Bathyra, for thou art in Nisibis¹⁸ yet thy net is spread in Jerusalem.'

R. Kahana fell sick. [So] the Rabbis sent R. Joshua son of R. Idi, instructing him, Go and find out what is wrong with him.¹⁹ He went and found him dead.²⁰ Thereupon he rent his garment and turned the rent behind him²¹ and went along weeping. He has died? asked they of him. I have not said it, he answered, 'for he that uttereth evil tidings is a fool'.²² Johanan of Hukok²³ went out to some villages.²⁴ on his return he was asked, 'Has the wheat crop been successful?'²⁵ 'The barley crop has been successful,' he replied.²⁶ 'Go out and tell it to horses and asses,' they retorted, 'for it is written, Barley also and straw for the horses and swift steeds.'²⁷ What then should he have said? — Last year the wheat crop was successful; or, the lentil crop is successful.

(2) It occurs many times. The circumlocution employed in the cited instances merely serves to indicate that delicate phraseology is a matter which must also enter into consideration, v. Rashi.

(3) I.e., rokebeth is written defectively, without a waw, which makes it shorter than yoshebeth. Yoshebeth could not be written defectively, as the defective form of yoshebeth has always a special meaning (Tosaf.). R. Han. reverses it: the full form of yoshebeth is required, as a particular deduction is made from it.

(4) Lit., 'something else' — the unmentionable. The rendering 'exhausted' is Rashi's. R. Han. renders differently.

(8) This is a gross expression. Halta'ah is a species of lizard (Jast.).

(11) Once a priest has officiated at the altar the purity of his descent must be assumed, as priests were not allowed to officiate without full investigation in the first place.

(12) They found his own character too vile for officiating on the altar. According to this emendation, the literal translation 'after him' must be retained in the text.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 4a

Rab was the son of R. Hiyya's brother and the son of his sister.¹ When he went up thither² he [R. Hiyya] asked him, 'Is Aibu alive?' '[Ask me whether] my mother is alive,' he replied. 'Is your mother alive?' asked he. 'Is then Aibu alive?' he replied.³ [Thereupon] he [R. Hiyya] said to his servant, 'Take off my shoes and carry my [bathing] things after me to the baths.' From this three [laws] may be inferred: [i] A mourner is forbidden to wear shoes; [ii] on a delayed report [of death]⁴ it [sc. mourning] is observed for one day only;⁵ and [iii] part of the day is as the whole of it.⁶

A certain man used to say, 'Judge my case'.⁷ Said they, This proves that he is descended from Dan, for it is written, Dan shall judge his people, as one of the tribes of Israel.⁸ A certain man was wont to go about and say, 'By the sea shore thorn-bushes are fir-trees.'⁹ They investigated and found that he was descended from Zebulun, for it is written, Zebulun shall dwell at the haven of the sea.¹⁰ And now that it is established that all agree that 'or' means evening, consider: according to both R. Judah and R. Meir,¹¹ leaven is forbidden from six hours¹² and onward only, then let us search in the sixth [hour]? And should you answer, The zealous are early [to perform] religious duties, then let us search from the morning? For it is written, and in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised,¹³ and it was taught: The whole day is valid for circumcision, but that the zealous are early [to perform] their religious duties, for it is said, And Abraham rose early in the morning!¹⁴ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [It was fixed] at the hour when people are found at home, while the light of a lamp is good for searching.¹⁵ Abaye observed: Therefore a scholar must not commence his regular session in the evening of the thirteenth breaking into the fourteenth, lest his studies absorb him¹⁶ and he come to neglect his religious duty.

R. Nahman b. Isaac was asked: If one rents a house to his neighbour from the fourteenth, upon whom [rests the duty] to make the search? [Does it rest] upon the landlord, because the leaven is his; or perhaps upon the tenant, because the forbidden matter exists in his domain? Come and hear: If one rents a house to his neighbour, the tenant must affix a mezuzah!¹⁷ - There, surely R. Mesharsheya said: The mezuzah is the inhabitant's obligation; but how is it here? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to them, We learned it: If one rents a house to his neighbour, if the fourteenth occurs before he delivers him the keys, the landlord must make the search; while if the fourteenth occurs after he delivers the keys, the tenant must make search.

R. Nahman b. Isaac was asked: If one rents a house to his neighbour on the fourteenth, does it stand in the presumption of having been searched or not? What difference does it make? Let us ask him! — He is not present to be asked: hence what about troubling this one [the tenant]?¹⁸ — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to them, We have a teaching:¹⁹ All are believed concerning the removal of leaven, even women, even slaves, even minors.²⁰ Now why are they believed?

(1) Aibu, his father, was R. Hiyya's paternal brother, while Rab's mother was R. Hiyya's sister on his mother's side.

- (2) To Palestine.
- (3) Thus he intimated that they were both dead (Rashi). Tosaf. explains it differently on the strength of a different reading.
- (4) I.e., which one receives after thirty days.
- (5) Instead of the usual seven.
- (6) The latter two follow from his order to take his bathing things to the baths. Thus he intended to observe mourning for a short while only and then proceed to the baths.
- (7) In every dispute he insisted on going to law.
- (8) Gen. XLIX, 16. Perhaps it is here translated: Dan shall enter into judgment with his people.
- (9) Even the thorn-bushes there are as valuable as fir-trees elsewhere — an exaggerated way of expressing his love for the coast. Rashi offers another explanation: By the sea-shore would I build my palaces.
- (10) Ibid. 13.
- (11) v. Mishnah infra 11b.
- (12) The day was reckoned from sunrise to sunset, hence six hours was about noon.
- (13) Lev. XII, 3.
- (14) Gen. XXII, 3.
- (15) Hence the evening was appointed instead of the morning.
- (16) Lit., 'draw him away'.
- (17) v. Glos. Presumably the same principle applies here!
- (18) Must we put him to the trouble of making a search?
- (19) Lit., 'we have learned it'.
- (20) Their testimony that the owner duly made a search is accepted.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 4b

Is it not because it stands in the presumption of having been searched, [the Tanna] holding, All are haberim¹ in respect to the searching of leaven.² For it was taught: If a haber dies and leaves a store-house full of produce [crops], even if they are but one day old,³ they stand in the presumption of having been tithed.⁴ How so: perhaps it is different here⁵ because they [the woman, slave or minor] state it? — Has then the statement of these any substance?⁶ What then [will you assume]? It stands in the presumption of having been searched? Then it should state, 'All houses stand on the fourteenth in the presumption of having been searched'? — What then [will you assume]? It is because of the statement of these⁷ [that the house is assumed to have been searched], but if these did not say [that it had been searched], it is not so? Then solve from this [teaching] that it does not stand in the presumption of having been searched! — No. In truth I may tell you [that generally]⁸ it does stand in the presumption of having been searched; but what we discuss here⁵ is a case where we know for certain that he [the owner] did not search, but these⁷ affirm. We searched it. You might say, Let not the Rabbis believe them. Therefore it informs us [that] since the search for leaven is [required only] by Rabbinical law, for by Scriptural law mere nullification suffices for it, the Rabbis gave them⁹ credence in [respect to] a Rabbinical [enactment].

The scholars asked: What if one rents a house to his neighbour in the presumption of its having been searched, and he [the tenant] finds that it has not been searched? Is it as an erroneous bargain¹⁰ or not? — Come and hear! For Abaye said: It is unnecessary [to say] of a town, where payment is not made [to others] for searching that a person is pleased to fulfil a precept personally;¹¹ but even in a town where payment is made for searching [it is not an erroneous bargain], because [it is to be assumed that] one is pleased to fulfil a precept with his money.¹²

We learned elsewhere: R. Meir said: one may eat [leaven] the whole of the five [hours]¹³ and must burn [it] at the beginning of the sixth.¹⁴ R. Judah said: one may eat until four [hours],¹⁵ hold it in suspense the whole of the fifth,¹⁶ and must burn it at the beginning of the sixth.¹⁷ Thus incidentally all agree that leaven is [Scripturally] forbidden from six hours [i.e., noon] and onwards: whence do we know it? — Said Abaye, Two verses are written: Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses;¹⁸ and it is written, even [ak] the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses.¹⁹ how is this [to be understood]?²⁰ It must include the fourteenth [as the day] for removal.²¹ Yet say that it includes the night of the fifteenth [as the time] for removal; for one might argue, ‘days’ is written, [implying] only days but not nights: hence it [the verse] informs us that even nights [are included in the interdict]?²² — That is unnecessary,

(1) Plur. of haber; lit., ‘associates’. It denotes members of an association (haburah) who undertake to be very scrupulous in their religious observance, particularly in regard to uncleanness and tithes.

(2) I.e., all men are regarded as haberim in the matter under discussion, as it was universally observed.

(3) Only that day had they arrived at the stage when tithing etc. is obligatory. The stage is reached when the harvested produce is stacked up.

(4) Lit., ‘properly prepared’ — it may be assumed that the priestly and Levitical dues have been rendered. Similarly it is to be presumed that the landlord had searched the house before renting it.

(5) In the cited teaching.

(6) Their testimony is invalid where testimony is required.

(7) I.e., the woman, slave or minor.

(8) I.e., in a case such as submitted to R. Nahman b. Isaac. (12) A declaration by the owner that all leaven in the house is null and has no value whatsoever in his eyes.

(9) I.e., the woman, slave or minor.

(10) On the strength of which the tenant can retract.

(11) There the tenant is certainly unable to retract, as it is assumed that he, like all the others, is glad of this opportunity to fulfil personally a religious obligation.

(12) And even had he known beforehand that the house was not searched he would not have refrained from renting it; hence he cannot retract now.

(13) I.e., until 11 a.m.

(14) But may not wait until the end of the sixth, i.e., noon (by which time it is Scripturally forbidden to have leaven in the house), because one can err in the time.

(15) Until 10 a.m.

(16) I.e., in that hour it may neither be eaten, nor need it be burned, but it can be given to animals.

(17) V. infra 11b.

(18) Ex. XII, 19.

(19) Ibid. 15.

(20) If the leaven is only put away on the first day, as the latter verse implies, there are not seven full days without leaven, as is intimated by the former verse.

(21) I.e., ‘first’ must mean the first (immediately) preceding day before the seven; cf. infra 5a.

(22) Thus ‘yet at the first day’, etc., may mean that at the very beginning of the seven days, i.e., on the evening of the fifteenth, all leaven must be removed, but there is no prohibition for any part of the fourteenth.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 5a

for the putting away of leaven is assimilated to [the prohibition of] eating leavened bread,¹ and the eating of leavened bread to the [precept of] the eating of unleavened bread. The putting away of leaven [is assimilated] to [the prohibition of] the eating of leavened bread, for it is written, seven days shall there be no leaven in your houses,² for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, that soul shall be cut off.² And [the prohibition of] the eating of leavened bread [is likened] to the [precept of] eating unleavened bread, because it is written, Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread;³ and in respect to unleavened bread it is written, at even ye shall eat unleavened bread.⁴ Yet perhaps it is to include the night of fourteenth [as the time] for removal?⁵ — ‘The day’ is written. Then say [that it must be removed] from the morning?⁶ — ‘Ak’ divides [it].⁷

The School of R. Ishmael taught: We find that the fourteenth is called the first, as it is said, on the first, on the fourteenth day of the month.⁸ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: ‘The first’⁹ [rishon] means the preceding, for the Writ saith, Wast thou born, before [rishon] Adam?¹⁰ If so, and ye shall take you out the first [rishon] day,¹¹ — does ‘rishon’ here too mean the preceding? — There it is different, because it is written, and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days:¹² just as the seventh [means] the seventh of the Festival, so the first [means] the first of the Festival. [But] here too it is written, even the first day [rishon] ye shall put away leaven out of your houses. Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread?¹³ — If so, let Scripture write ‘first’ [‘rishon’]; why ‘the first [ha-rishon]’? Infer from this [that it is required] for what we have stated. If so, there too¹² what is the purpose of ‘the first’ [‘ha-rishon’]? Moreover, when it is written there, on the first day shall be a solemn rest, and on the eighth day shall be a solemn rest,¹⁴ say that rishon implies the preceding? There it is different, because Scripture saith, ‘and on the eighth day shall be a solemn rest’: just as ‘eighth’ means the eighth of the Festival, so ‘first’ means [the] first of the Festival. [But still] what is the purpose of ‘the first’ [ha-rishon]?¹² — In order to exclude the Intermediate days of the Festival.¹⁵ [But the exclusion of] the Intermediate days of the Festival is derived from ‘first’ and ‘eighth’? — It is [nevertheless] required: you might argue, since the Divine Law writes, and on the eighth day, the waw [‘and’] indicates conjunction with the preceding subject, so [as to include] even the Intermediate days of the Festival too;¹⁶ hence ha-rishon informs us [otherwise]. Then let Scripture write neither the waw nor the heh?¹⁷ Moreover, when it is written there, In the first day [ha-rishon] ye shall have an holy convocation,¹⁸ does ‘rishon’ mean the preceding?¹⁹ Rather, these three [instances of] ‘rishon’ [‘first’] are necessary for what the School of R. Ishmael taught. For the School of R. Ishmael taught: As a reward for [the observance of] the three ‘firsts’²⁰ they [Israel] merited three firsts:²¹ to destroy²² the seed of Esau; the building of the Temple; and the name of the Messiah. ‘To destroy the seed of Esau,’ of whom it is written, And the first came forth red, all over like an hairy garment;²³ and ‘the building of the Temple’, whereof it is written, A glorious throne, set on high from the first²⁴ is the place of our sanctuary;²⁵ ‘and the name of Messiah,’ for it is written, First unto Zion, behold, behold them.²⁶

Raba said, [It²⁷ is deduced] from here: Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread.²⁸ [that means,] thou shalt not kill the passover sacrifice while leavened bread is still in existence.²⁹ Then perhaps each person [must remove his leaven] when he kills [his sacrifice]?³⁰ Scripture meant the time for killing.³¹

It was taught likewise: '[Even] the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses': [this means] on the eve of the Festival. Yet perhaps that is not so, but [rather] on the Festival itself? — Therefore it is stated, 'thou shalt not offer the blood of thy sacrifice with leavened bread,' [i.e.,] thou shalt not kill the Passover sacrifice while leavened bread still exists [in thy, house]: that is R. Ishmael's view. R. Akiba said, That is unnecessary: lo, it is said, 'Even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses', and it is written, no manner of work shall be done in them;³² while we find that kindling is a principal labour.³³ R. Jose said, It is unnecessary: lo, it is said, 'Even [ak] on the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses': [that means,] from the eve of the Festival. Or perhaps it is not so, but rather on the Festival? Therefore is stated, 'Ak', which serves to divide;³⁴ hence if [it means] on the Festival itself, can [part of it] be permitted? Surely the putting away of leaven is likened to [the prohibition of] eating leavened bread, while the prohibition of eating leavened bread is likened to [the duty of] eating unleavened bread.³⁵

Said Raba:

- (1) Immediately the latter comes into force the former is obligatory.
 - (2) Ex. XII, 19.
 - (3) Ibid. 20. Hence from the very moment that the latter is operative the former is too, and consequently by then the leaven must already be removed.
 - (4) Ibid. 18. Hence no verse would be necessary to show that as soon as evening commences the leaven must be put away; therefore the verse quoted supra can only refer to the fourteenth.
 - (5) Since we see that leaven is to be removed on the fourteenth, perhaps it must be done at the beginning of the fourteenth, Sc. in the evening.
 - (6) As soon as day commences, not from midday.
 - (7) It is a general principle in Talmudic exegesis that ak and rak (only) imply limitations; thus ak divides the day, showing that the putting away takes place in the middle of the day, not at the beginning.
 - (8) Ibid.
 - (9) In verse 18.
 - (10) Job. XV, 7 (E.V.: Art thou the first man that was born). Hence Ex. XII, 15 is translated: yet on the preceding day — i.e., the fourteenth — ye shall put away, etc.
 - (11) Lev. XXIII, 40.
 - (12) Lev. XXIII, 40.
 - (13) By the same argument 'rishon' means first, not preceding. — Actually the order is reversed in Scripture.
 - (14) Ibid. 39.
 - (15) Lit., 'the weekday (portion) of the Festival'. It teaches that these days enjoy semi-sanctity only, and work of an urgent nature is permitted.
 - (16) That work thereon is forbidden.
 - (17) The heh is the def. art. 'the' (ha). According to the present argument the heh (ha) merely neutralizes the possible teaching of the waw: then both should be omitted.
 - (18) Ibid. 7; the reference is to Passover.
 - (19) Surely not.
 - (20) The 'first' of Passover, the 'first' of Tabernacles, and the taking of the four species (v. 40) on the 'first' day of Tabernacles.

(21) Three things in connection with which 'first' is written.

(22) Lit., 'cut off'.

(23) Gen. XXV, 25.

(24) E.V. beginning.

(25) Jer. XVII, 12.

(26) Isa. XLI, 27.

(27) Sc. that leaven is forbidden from midday on the fourteenth.

(28) Ex. XXXIV, 25.

(29) And since the sacrificing commences immediately after noon, it follows that the leaven must already be removed by then.

(30) Thus if he kills it at 4 p.m., leaven is permitted to him until that hour.

(31) When it is time to kill the sacrifice there must be no leaven in the house, as it is inconceivable that there should be no fixed hour applicable to all.

(32) Ibid. XII, 16.

(33) Forbidden on the Sabbath, and likewise on Festivals, save when required for the preparation of food. The leaven was burnt.

(34) V. Supra p. 15, n. 8.

(35) Supra.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 5b

Three things may be inferred from R. Akiba: [i] There is no [other] removal of leaven save [by] burning.¹ [ii] Kindling was singled out to indicate separation.² [iii] We do not say, since kindling was permitted when it is necessary [for the preparation of food], it was also permitted when it is unnecessary.³

Our Rabbis taught: Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your house:⁴ why is this stated, seeing that it is already said, and there shall no leavened bread be seen unto thee, neither shall there be leaven seen unto thee, in all thy borders?⁵ Because it is said, Neither shall there be leaven seen unto thee, [implying] thine own thou must not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High.⁶ One might think that one may hide [leaven] or accept bailments [of leaven] from a Gentile:⁷ therefore it is stated, it shall not be found [in your houses],⁸ Now, I know this only of a Gentile who is not in your power⁹ or does not dwell with you in the [same] court-yard; how do I know it of a Gentile who is in your power and dwells with you in the [same] court-yard? Because it is stated, [leaven] shall not be found in your houses. I know this only of that which is your houses; how do I know it of [leaven] in pits, ditches and cavities?¹⁰ Because it is stated, [neither shall there be leaven seen with thee,] in all thy borders.¹¹ Yet I might still argue, [indeed on account of leaven] 'in houses' one transgresses the injunction against it being seen, found, and against hiding it and receiving [it as] bailments from a Gentile; whereas in [respect to leaven in] 'thy borders' [we say,] thine own thou must not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High. How do we [however] know to apply that which is stated in this [verse] to the other, and vice versa?¹² Therefore leaven is stated twice¹³ for a gezerah shawah.¹⁴ [Thus:] leaven is stated in connection with houses: 'no leaven shall be found in your houses', and leaven is stated in connection with the borders; 'neither shall there be leaven seen with thee [in all thy borders]': just as with the leaven which is stated in connection with houses, one transgresses the injunctions, it shall not be seen, it shall not be found, it shall not be hidden nor accepted as bailments from Gentiles, so with the leaven which is stated in connection with the borders, one violates the injunctions, it shall not be seen, it shall not be found, it shall not be hidden nor accepted as bailments from a Gentile. And just as with the leaven which is stated in connection with the borders, [only] thine own thou must not see, but thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High, so with the leaven which is stated in connection with the houses, [only] thine own thou mayest not see, but thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High.

The Master said: 'I know this only of a Gentile who is not in your power or does not dwell with you in the [same] court-yard; how do I know it of a Gentile who is in your power or who dwells with you in the [same] court-yard? Because it is stated, [Leaven] shall not be found [in your houses].' Whither does this tend?¹⁵ — Said Abaye: Reverse it. Raba said: In truth you must not reverse it, but it refers to the first clause: 'Thine own thou mayest not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High.' I know this only of a Gentile who is not in your power or who does not dwell with you in the [same] court-yard.¹⁶ How do I know it of one who is in your power or who dwells with you in the [same] court-yard? Because it is stated, 'there shall not be found'. But this Tanna seeks permission yet cites a verse intimating a prohibition?¹⁷ — Because 'unto thee' 'unto thee' is stated twice.¹⁸ The Master said: 'one might think that one may hide [leaven] or accept bailments [of leaven] from a Gentile; therefore it is stated, [leaven] shall not be found [in your houses].' But you said in the first clause, 'thine own thou mayest not see, yet thou mayest see that belonging to others and to the Most High?' — There is no difficulty: the one is meant where he [the Israelite] accepts responsibility [for same]; the other, where he does not accept responsibility.¹⁹ Just as Raba said to the townspeople of Mahuza:²⁰ Remove the leaven belonging to the troops from your houses:

power or who lives with you in the same court-yard is more likely to be meant than he who is independent or living away from you. since the former is more like yourself. Whereas here the latter is taken for granted, while proof is sought for the former. since it stands in your possession if lost or stolen, and you must requite [the loss], it is as yours and is forbidden.²¹ Now, that is well on the view that that which causes [liability] for money is as money.²² But on the view that it is not as money, what can be said? — Here it is different, because Scripture saith, 'There shall not be found'.²³ Others say, That is well on the view that that which causes [liability] for money is not as money:

(1) For if it can be destroyed in any other way, his proof falls to the ground.

(2) In Ex. XX, 10 work is forbidden on the Sabbath; this is repeated in XXXV, 2 and 3, with a special prohibition against kindling a fire. Now, kindling is prohibited by the general law of Ex. XX, 10: why then is it singled out? There are two views on this: (i) In order to teach that whereas other labours are punishable by death, this is merely punishable like any other negative precept, viz., by flagellation. (ii) To teach that if one does a number of separate acts on the Sabbath, e.g., seething, reaping, and threshing, they are accounted as separate offences, just as kindling was stated as a separate offence, and a sacrifice must be offered on account of each. Now the first view postulates that kindling is not a principal labour like the rest (v. Mishnah on Shab. 73a); hence R. Akiba must agree with the second view.

- (3) There is such a view in Bez. 12b; if R. Akiba held it, his argument would lose its basis.
- (4) Ex. XII, 19.
- (5) Ex. XIII, 7. Though this is in a further chapter, the phrase, 'seeing that it is already said', is employed because it is a Talmudic principle that the written order of the Torah is not necessarily chronological.
- (6) I.e., the sanctuary, this being the meaning of 'unto thee' (E.V.: with thee).
- (7) For in the former case it cannot be seen, while in the latter it is not his property.
- (8) It must not be there at all.
- (9) Lit., 'whom you have not subjugated'.
- (10) Different shaped pits are connoted by these three words.
- (11) Ex. XIII, 7.
- (12) 'For there shall not be found' is written only in connection with 'your houses', while 'unto thee' is mentioned only in connection with 'borders'; how do we know that the implications of the one verse hold good in respect of the other?
- (13) Lit. 'leaven, leaven'.
- (14) V. Glos.
- (15) Or, towards the tail! I.e., when you say that you must not accept deposits from a Gentile, obviously he who is in your
- (16) He certainly comes under the category of 'others'.
- (17) According to Raba's explanation. when the Tanna says. 'how do I know', etc., his purpose is to show that there too it is permitted; while 'there shall not be found' intimates a more extended prohibition.
- (18) Rashi: 'Unto thee' is written twice, once in the verse already quoted, and once in Deut. XVI, 4: and there shall be no leaven seen unto (E.V. with) thee in all thy borders seven days. Here too 'unto thee' is linked with seeing; since, however, it is superfluous in this connection, on account of the verse first quoted, it is applied to 'there shalt not be found', which is made to read: there shall not be found unto thee, 'unto thee' being a permissive limitation, and it is this which the Tanna quotes. — It is a principle of exegesis that if a word or phrase is superfluous in its own context, it is applied elsewhere. (The fact that 'unto thee' is written twice in Ex. XIII, 7 is not counted, since one refers to leaven and the other to leavened bread. — V. Bez. 7b.) R. Han. interprets it differently and more simply.
- (19) If the Jew accepts responsibility for the bailment and must identify the owner against loss, it is as his own and must not be found in his house.
- (20) A large Jewish commercial town on the Tigris. where Raba had his academy; v. obermeyer. pp. 169ff.
- (21) Gentile troops were billeted in Jewish houses together with their food stores, for which the Jews were responsible.
- (22) Hence though the leaven does not belong to the Jew, yet since it throws a financial responsibility upon him it is regarded as his, i.e., as his money or property.
- (23) Which implies even if it is not his own and it can be applied only to such a case, since 'unto thee' excludes leaven in which he has no financial interest at all.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 6a

hence 'there shall not be found' is necessary. But on the view that it is as money. what is the purpose of 'there shall not be found'?¹ — It is necessary: you might argue, since if in existence it is returned as it is,² it does not stand in his possession.³ Hence he informs us [otherwise].

Raba was asked: Is cattle liable to arnona⁴ subject to the law of firstlings or not?⁵ Wherever one can put him off with money.⁶ we do not ask, for he is [certainly] liable.⁷ our problem arises where he cannot put him off with money: what then? He replied: It is not subject [thereto]. But surely it was taught: It [the animal] is subject [thereto]?-There it is a case where he can put him off with money. others state, Raba said: Cattle liable to arnona is not subject to the law of firstlings. even when he can put him off with money.⁸ A dough [made of flour] liable to arnona⁹ is subject to hallah.¹⁰ What is the reason? [The facts about] cattle are generally known;¹¹ [the facts about a dough] are not generally known.¹²

Our Rabbis taught: If a Gentile enters an Israelite's court-yard with [leavened] dough in his hand,¹³ he [the Israelite] is not obliged to remove it¹⁴ if he deposits it with him, he is obliged to remove it;¹⁵ if he assigns a room to him [for the dough], he is not obliged to remove it, because it is said, '[Leaven] shall not be found'. What does he [the Tanna] mean?¹⁶ — Said R. Papa: He refers to the first clause, and says thus: If he deposits it with him, he is obliged to remove it, because it is said, '[Leaven] shall not be found'. R. Ashi said: After all it refers to the second clause, and he says thus: If he assigned a room to him he is not obliged to remove it, because it is said, '[Leaven] shall not be found in your houses,' and this is not his [house], for when the Gentile carries in [the leaven], he carries it into his own house. Shall we say that renting confers a title?¹⁷ But surely we learned: Even in the place where they [the Sages] permitted renting [to a heathen], they did not permit [renting] for a dwelling-house, because he [the heathen] introduces [his] idols therein.¹⁸ Now if you should think that renting confers a title, when he introduces [the idols] he introduces [them] into his own house? — Here it is different, because the Divine Law expresses it in the form of 'there shall not be found', [implying] that which is found in your hand [is forbidden], which excludes this [case], since it is not found in your hand.

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: If one finds leaven in his house during the Festival, he overturns a vessel upon it.¹⁹ Raba said: If dough partly owned by a non-Jew; nevertheless this dough is subject to hallah, as explained in the text. it is of hekdesch,²⁰ this is unnecessary. What is the reason? He does indeed hold aloof from it.²¹

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: Leaven belonging to a Gentile,²² he [the Israelite] must set up a partition of ten handbreadths around it as a distinguishing mark;²³ but if it belongs to hekdesch this is unnecessary. What is the reason? People hold aloof from it.

Rab Judah also said in Rab's name: He who sets sail, and he who sets out in a [caravan] company, before thirty days [prior to Passover], is not bound to remove [the leaven]; if within thirty days, he is bound to remove [it]. Abaye observed: When you say, if within thirty days he is bound to remove it, we said this only where his intention is to return [during Passover]; but if it is not his intention to return, he is not bound to remove [it]. Said Raba to him: But if his intention is to return, even [if he sets out] on New Year too?²⁴ Rather, said Raba: When you say. if before thirty days he is not bound to remove it, we said this only where it is not his intention to return; but if his intention is to return, even [if he sets out] on New Year too. Now Raba is consistent with his view. For Raba said: If one turns his house into a granary²⁵ before thirty days [prior to the Passover], he is not bound to remove [the leaven];²⁶ if within thirty days, he is bound to remove it;²⁷ and even before thirty days too, we said this only when it is not his intention to clear it [the store of provisions] away; but if his intention is to clear it away, even before thirty days too he is bound to remove it.

What business have these thirty days?²⁸ — As it was taught: Questions are asked and lectures are given on the laws of Passover for thirty days before Passover. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Two weeks. What is the reason of the first Tanna?

- (1) It is obviously forbidden, since it is just like his own!
 - (2) I.e., not lost or stolen or destroyed.
 - (3) In regard to the prohibition 'there shall not be found'.
 - (4) Tax from crops and cattle paid in kind.
 - (5) Where a non-Jew has a share in an animal it is definitely not subject thereto; the question here is as explained in the text.
 - (6) I.e., the king, to whom the tax is payable, will accept money instead of the animal.
 - (7) The owner is bound to render it as a firstling.
 - (8) Because until he does pay him off the non-Jew has a claim upon it.
 - (9) I.e., a dough from which arnona is paid.
 - (10) V. Glos. and Num. XV, 20f: of the first of your dough ye shall offer up a cake for an heave-offering . . . of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the Lord an heave-offering throughout your generations. Here too 'your' excludes
 - (11) Lit., 'an animal has a sound (voice)' — i.e., it will be known that it belongs to a herd liable to arnona.
 - (12) The on-looker does not know that the dough is made of flour subject to arnona and may suspect him of violating the law.
 - (13) On the fourteenth of Nisan after noon, when leaven is forbidden.
 - (14) Since it is not his, v. supra 5b.
 - (15) Where he accepts responsibility for same.
 - (16) If anything the quotation intimates the reverse.
 - (17) So that the house becomes legally the non-Jew's.
 - (18) A.Z. 21a.
 - (19) It must not be handled and carried out, because it is mukzeh (v. Glos.), since it cannot be put to any use, all benefit from leaven being forbidden during Passover. He therefore covers it over with a vessel and burns it in the evening on the termination of the Festival.
 - (20) V. Glos.
 - (21) In any case, since it is hekdesch.
 - (22) In a Jew's house.
 - (23) The reference here is to the fourteenth, and the partition is needed lest he forget himself and eat it, The overturning of a vessel upon it does not suffice here lest he might remove it in the course of the seven days.
 - (24) He must still remove it, since he will be in the house on Passover.
 - (25) I.e., he stores provisions in it, and under them lies leaven.
 - (26) By being buried under his provisions it is as though it were removed.
 - (27) Because the obligation to remove it becomes operative in this period, and one cannot remove it thus at the very outset.
 - (28) Why is the matter dependent on this period?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 6b

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 6b

Because lo! Moses was standing on the First Passover and giving instructions about the Second Passover,¹ as it is said, Moreover, let the children of Israel keep the passover in its appointed season;² and it is written, And there were certain men, who were unclean by the dead body of a man.³ And R. Simeon b. Gamaliel?⁴ — He answers you: Because he was engaged in the laws of Passover, he instructed them⁵ in all the laws of Passover. What is R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's reason? Because lo! Moses was standing at the beginning of the month and giving orders about the Passover, as it is said, This month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first month of the year to you.⁶ And it is written, Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to their father's houses, etc.⁶ But how do you know that he was standing at the beginning of the month; perhaps he was standing on the fourth or the fifth of the month? Rather, said Rabbah b. Shimi in Rabina's name, [It is deduced] from here: And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year;⁷ and it is written, Moreover let the children of Israel keep the passover in its appointed season.⁸ But here too, how do you know that he was standing at the beginning of the month: perhaps he was standing on the fourth or the fifth of the month? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [The implication of] 'wilderness' [here] is learned from 'wilderness' [elsewhere]. Here it is written, 'in the wilderness of Sinai,' while there it is written, And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the tent of meeting, on the first day of the second month:⁹ just as there [it was] at the beginning of the month, so here too at the beginning of the month.

Now, let [the events of] the first month be written first, and then that of the second month?¹⁰ — Said R. Menasia b. Tahlifa in Rab's name: This proves that there is no chronological order¹¹ in the Torah. R. Papa observed: This was said only of two subjects; but in the same subject what is earlier is earlier and what is later is later. For should you not say thus, [how, then, apply the principle that] when a general proposition is followed by a particular specification the general proposition comprises only what is contained in the particular specification; perhaps it is a particular specification followed by a general proposition! Moreover, [it is a principle that] when a particular specification is followed by a general proposition, the generalization becomes an addition to the specification,¹² [here too] perhaps it is a generalization followed by a particularization! But if so, the same [question] applies even to two subjects? Now, that is well on the view that [when] a generalization and a specification [are] at a distance from each other, we do not interpret¹³ them as a generalization followed by a specification, then it is correct. But on the view that we do interpret [them thus], what can be said?¹⁴ — Even on the view that we do interpret, that is only [when they occur] in the same subject; but [when] in two subjects we do not interpret [them thus].

Rab Judah said in Rab's name: He who searches [for leaven] must [also] declare it null.¹⁵ What is the reason? Shall we say [it is] because of crumbs¹⁶ — but they are of no value?¹⁷ And should you answer, since they are guarded in virtue of his house,¹⁸ they are of account, surely it was taught: [If there are in a man's field] late figs, while he guards his field on account of the grapes; or if there are late grapes, while he guards his field on account of his cucumbers and gourds,¹⁹ when the owner is particular about them, they are forbidden [to a stranger] as theft and are subject to tithes; when the owner is not particular about them, they are not forbidden as theft and are exempt from tithe!²⁰ — Said Raba: It is a preventive measure, lest he find a tasty loaf²¹ and [set] his mind upon it.²² Then let him annul it when he finds it? — He may find it after the interdict [commences], and then it does not stand in his ownership and [so] he cannot annul it. For R. Eleazar said: Two things are not in a man's ownership, yet the Writ regarded them as though they were in his ownership. And these are they: a pit in public ground²³ and leaven from six hours²⁴ and onwards.²⁵ Then let him annul it at the fourth or the fifth [hour]?²⁶ — Since it is neither the time of the prohibition nor the time of searching, he may transgress and not annul it.

(1) I.e., the Passover celebrated on the fourteenth of the second month by those who were unable to celebrate it at the proper time.

(2) Num. IX, 2.

(3) Ibid. 6. The narrative relates how Moses gave instructions about the second Passover, vv. 9 seq.

(4) How does he refute this proof?

(5) Lit., 'completed for them'.

(6) Ex. XII, 2f.

(7) Num. IX, 1.

(8) And from the beginning of the month until Passover is two weeks.

(9) Num. I, 1.

(10) Num. I, 1ff is chronologically a month later than IX. 1ff; why is it not written in that order?

(11) Lit., 'earlier and later'.

(12) So as to include all things implied in the generalization.

(13) Lit., 'judge'.

(14) v. B.K. 85a.

(15) I.e., of no account and valueless and free to all.

(16) Which may escape his search.

(17) They are therefore null in any case.

(18) When he guards his house he ipso facto guards these crumbs.

(19) The late figs and grapes which remain after the harvest never fully ripen. Here they are in a field which is guarded from intruders not for their sake but because it contains other crops yet to be gathered.

(20) Because they are regarded as ownerless, and such are exempt from tithe. Thus though they are incidentally guarded, that does not give them any value, and the same should apply here.

(21) texukd, a loaf made from a special brand of white flour.

(22) To keep it until after Passover.

(23) He who digs a pit in public ground is responsible for any damage it may cause, as though it were his property, though actually it is not.

(24) I.e., noon.

(25) One is culpable for its presence in his house then, though technically speaking it is no longer his.

(26) I.e., any time in the morning before noon, when it is still his. Why particularly the preceding evening, when he is making the search?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 7a

Then let him annul it in the sixth [hour]?¹ — Since the Rabbinical interdict is upon it,² it is like a Scriptural [interdict] and does not stand in his ownership, hence he cannot annul it. For R. Gidal said in R. Hiyya b. Joseph's name in Rab's name: He who betroths from the sixth hour and onwards, even with wheat of Cordyene,³ we have no fear of his betrothal.⁴

But, is he unable to annul it after the prohibition [commences]? Surely it was taught: If he is sitting in the Beth Hamidrash and recollects that he has leaven at home, he annuls it in his heart, whether it is the Sabbath or the Festival. Now as for the Sabbath, it is well: this is possible where the fourteenth [of Nisan] falls on the Sabbath;⁵ but the Festival is after the prohibition [commences]⁶ — Said R. Aha b. Jacob: We treat here of a disciple sitting before his master, and he recollects that he has a rolled dough⁷ at home and fears that it may turn leaven; [therefore] he anticipates and annuls it before it turns leaven. This may be proved too: for it states, 'If he is sitting in the Beth Hamidrash'.⁸ This proves it.

Rabbah the son of R. Huna said in Rab's name: If a loaf went mouldy, if mazzah⁹ exceeds it [in quantity], it is permitted.¹⁰ How is it meant? Shall we say that he [the owner] knows that this [loaf] is leaven, what then matters it if the mazzah does exceed it?¹¹ Again if we do not know whether it is leaven or mazzah, then why particularly if the mazzah exceeds it; even if the mazzah does not exceed it too, let us go after the last?¹² Did we not learn: Money found in front of cattle dealers at all times is [accounted as] tithe; on the Temple Mount, it is hullin;⁹ in [the rest of] Jerusalem, at any other part of the year, it is hullin; at the Festival season, it is tithe.¹³ And R. Shemaia b. Zera observed thereon: What is the reason? Because the streets of Jerusalem¹⁴ were swept daily. This proves that we assume: the earlier[losses] have gone, and these [coins] are different ones. So here too let us say: the earlier[bread] has gone and this is of the present?¹⁵ — Here it is different, because its mouldiness proves its status.¹⁶ If its mouldiness proves its status, what does it matter if the mazzah exceeds it? — Said Rabbah. Do not say, 'if the mazzah exceeds it', but say, 'many days of mazzah have passed over it'.¹⁷ If so, it is obvious? — This is necessary only where it is very mouldy; you might argue, since it is very mouldy it is clear that it is certainly true leaven; therefore he informs us that since many days of mazzah have passed over it we say: every day hot mazzah¹⁸ was baked and thrown thereon, and that made it very mouldy.

Yet do we follow the last? Surely it was taught. R. Jose b. Judah said: If a chest was used for money of hullin and money of tithe,¹⁹ if it was mostly hullin, it [the money found therein] is hullin; if mostly tithe, it is tithe. But why so? let us go after the last?—Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: of what do we treat here? E.g., where it was used for money of hullin and money of tithe, and one does not know which was last. R. Zebid said: E.g., where it was used for separate packages.²⁰ R. Papa said: E.g., if it was found in a pit.²¹ of peace-offerings; when one could not stay long enough in Jerusalem to expend all his tithe money, he would distribute it among the poor or give it to his friends in Jerusalem. Consequently, if money is found in front of cattle dealers, whatever the time of the year, it is assumed to be of the second tithe. On the other hand, if it is found on the Temple Mount, we assume it to be hullin, even at Festival time, when most of money handled is tithe, because the greater part of the year is not Festival, and then ordinary hullin is in circulation and this money might have been lost before the Festival. But if found in the streets of Jerusalem, a distinction is drawn, as stated in the text. Rab Judah said: He who searches [for leaven] must pronounce a benediction. What benediction does he pronounce? R. Pappi said in Raba's name: '[. . . who hast commanded us] to remove leaven'. R. Papa said in Raba's name: '[. . . who hast commanded us] concerning the removal of leaven'. As for [the phrase] 'to remove,' there is no disagreement at all that it certainly implies in the future.²²

- (1) He is not likely to forget it then, since he is engaged in burning it.
 - (2) On all views, v. supra 4b.
 - (3) A district lying to the east of the river Tigris, south of Armenia. — That wheat is very hard and does not easily become leaven; nevertheless if moisture had fallen upon it after being harvested it is regarded as leaven.
 - (4) The betrothal is definitely invalid, because the wheat has no value because of the Rabbinical interdict, whereas for betrothal something of value is required (v. Kid. 2a). — Thus although the interdict at that hour is only Rabbinical, the leaven is regarded as completely valueless; hence not under his ownership.
 - (5) And he recollects before the sixth hour.
 - (6) How can he annul it then?
 - (7) I.e., a dough kneaded but not baked. He cannot leave the Beth Hamidrash to attend to it out of respect to his Master.
 - (8) If it is already leaven, what does it matter where he is; even if he were at home he could do nothing else?
 - (9) V. Glos.
 - (10) This is now assumed to mean: if there is more mazzah in the bin than this mouldy loaf, the whole is permitted.
 - (11) Surely a loaf known to be leaven cannot be permitted on that account?
 - (12) I.e., let us assume that this loaf is of the latest batch which was put there, i.e., it is mazzah, since a bread bin is cleared out every day, in order to prevent the bread from going mouldy — a necessary precaution in the hot eastern countries — and particularly so in this case, when there had been a search for leaven before the Festival.
 - (13) Shek. VII, 2. If money is found in Jerusalem, the question arises, what is its status — is it ordinary secular coins (hullin) or tithe money? This was because the second tithe (v. Deut. XIV, 22ff this was designated second-tithe) had to be eaten in Jerusalem or its monetary equivalent expended there, which money likewise was governed by the law of second tithe. Now, most of the flesh eaten in Jerusalem was bought with second-tithe money, and generally took the form
 - (14) But not the Temple Mount.
 - (15) I.e., unleavened.
 - (16) It must have been there a considerable time, hence it is leaven.
 - (17) I.e., several days of Passover have gone, and so this had had time to go mouldy even if baked as mazzah at the beginning of the Festival.
 - (18) Lit., 'bread'.
 - (19) And now we find money in it and do not know which it is.
 - (20) Of money, some being hullin and others tithe, and both were there on the same day.
 - (21) We cannot assume that the earlier coins had been removed while these were of the most recent deposit, because it might have been overlooked in a pit.
 - (22) I.e., it implies that the removal is still to be done. This phraseology is therefore certainly admitted, because a benediction is always recited prior to the actual performance of the precept to which it refers.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 7b

They differ only in respect of 'concerning the removal': one Master holds that it implies in the past;¹ while the other Master holds: It implies in the future.

An objection is raised: ‘Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning circumcision’?² — How [else] should he say [it] there? Shall he say, ‘to circumcise’ — is it imperative that he should circumcise?³ Then what can be said of the father of the infant?⁴ — Then indeed it is so.⁵

An objection is raised: ‘Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning shechitah’?⁶ — There too, how [else] shall he say it: shall he say ‘to slaughter,’ — is it imperative that he should slaughter? Then what can be said of the Passover sacrifice and [other] sacrifices?⁷ — [There] indeed it is so.⁸

An objection is raised: If one prepares a lulab⁶ for himself, he recites the blessing, ‘. . . who hast kept us in life and hast preserved us and hast suffered us to reach this season’. When he takes it in order to fulfil his obligation therewith,⁹ he recites: ‘. . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning the taking of the lulab’?¹⁰ There it is different, because in the [very] moment that he lifts it up his duty is fulfilled.¹¹ If so, [instead of stating] ‘in order to fulfil his obligation therewith,’ he should say, ‘having fulfilled his obligation therewith?’ — That indeed is so, but because he desires to teach ‘to sit in the sukkah’¹² in the second clause, he also states in the first clause, ‘to fulfil his obligation therewith’ — For he teaches in the second clause: He who makes a sukkah for himself recites: ‘Blessed art thou, O Lord . . . who has kept us in life and hast preserved us and hast enabled us to reach this season’. When he enters to sit therein he recites: ‘Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us to sit in the sukkah.’¹³ And the law is: [He recites,] ‘concerning the removal of leaven’.¹⁴

Now incidentally all agree that we must recite the benediction beforehand:¹⁵ how do we know it? — Because Rab Judah said in Samuel’s name: For all precepts a benediction is recited prior [‘ober] to their being performed — Where is it implied that this [word] ‘ober connotes priority? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, Because Scripture saith, Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the Plain and overran [wa-ya’abor] the Cushite.¹⁶ Abaye said, [It follows] from this: and he himself passed over [‘abar] before them;¹⁷ alternatively, from this: and their king is passed on [wa-ya’abor] before them, and the Lord at the head of them.¹⁸

The School of Rab said: Except [for] a ritual bath and shofar.¹⁹ As for a ritual bath, it is well, because the person is not yet fit;²⁰ but what is the reason for the shofar? And should you say, because he may sound the blast [teki’ah] incorrectly;²¹ if so, the same applies even to shechitah, and circumcision too? Rather, said R. Hisda: Except for a ritual bath alone was stated. It was taught likewise: When one has a ritual bath and ascends [from the bath], on his ascending he recites: Blessed [art Thou] . . . who hast sanctified us with Thy commandments and hast commanded us concerning tebillah’.

BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP, etc. How do we know this? — Said R. Hisda: By deriving [the meaning of] ‘finding’ from ‘finding’ and ‘finding’ from ‘searching’, and ‘searching’ from ‘searching’, and ‘searching’ from ‘lamps’, and ‘lamps’ from ‘lamp’:²² [Thus:] ‘finding’ from ‘finding’: here it is written, seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses,²³ while elsewhere it is written, and he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found [in Benjamin's sack].²⁴ 'Finding' [is learned] from 'searching' [mentioned] in its own connection.²⁵ And 'searching' from 'lamps', as it is written, And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with lamps.²⁶ And 'lamps' from 'lamp', for it is written, The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, searching all the innermost parts of the belly.²⁷

The School of R. Ishmael taught: In the evening of the fourteenth leaven is searched for by the light of a lamp. Though there is no proof of this, there is an allusion to it, because it is said, 'seven days shall there be no leaven [in your houses]'; and it is said, 'and he searched, and began at the eldest, and left at the youngest: and the cup was found [in Benjamin's sack]'; and it is said, 'And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with lamps'. and it is said, 'The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, searching [all the innermost parts of the belly]'. What is the purpose of the additional quotations?²⁸ And should you answer, this 'at that time' is a statement of lenient treatment by the Merciful One, [viz.,] 'I will not search Jerusalem with the light of a torch, which gives much light, but only with the light of a lamp, the light of which is much smaller, so that great wrongdoing will be found out but petty wrongdoing will not be found out,²⁹ — then come and hear! 'The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, [searching. etc.]'.³⁰

Our Rabbis taught: one may not search either by the light of the sun or by the light of the moon, or by the light of a torch, save by the light of a lamp,

(1) I.e., the removal has already been done. Hence this formula is inadmissible.

(2) Not, 'to circumcise'.

(3) Lit., 'is there no way that he should not circumcise'? — i.e., the obligation does not rest primarily upon the circumciser, but upon the father, whereas if the former said 'to circumcise', it would imply that it is his personal duty in every case.

(4) What if the father circumcises?

(5) He must say 'to circumcise'.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) Lit., 'sacred (animals)'. The obligation of slaughtering a sacrifice rests primarily upon its owner.

(8) He must say 'to slaughter'.

(9) V. Lev. XXIII, 40.

(10) But not 'to take the lubab'.

(11) Hence he is reciting the blessing after performing the precept, and so he cannot say 'to take'; v. Supra.

(12) V. Glos.

(13) And there the future is required because it is an obligation during the whole week of Tabernacles.

(14) That too implies the future. Consequently, this form is used by all in circumcision and shechitah.

(15) Before actually performing the precept.

(16) II Sam. XVIII, 23. I.e., he passed in front of him, and similarly 'ober, which is derived from the same root as wa-ya'abor, means in front of, i.e., prior to'

(17) Gen. XXXIII, 3.

(18) Mic. II, 13.

(19) V. Glos. Here the benediction is recited after the fulfilment of the precept.

(20) E.g., one who is unclean through nocturnal pollution may not recite a blessing; hence he is obviously unfit to recite the blessing until after the ritual bath, and all others requiring a ritual bath were treated likewise (Rashi).

- (21) In which case the obligation is not fulfilled and the benediction was unnecessarily recited, which is prohibited.
- (22) As explained in the text.
- (23) Ex. XII, 19.
- (24) Gen. XLIV, 12.
- (25) I.e., in the verse just quoted 'finding' and 'searching' are linked together.
- (26) Zeph. I, 12.
- (27) Prov. XX, 27. By comparing all these verses we learn that in order that leaven may not be found in the house it must be searched out by lamplight.
- (28) Lit., 'what is (the purpose of) "and it is said"?'
- (29) But this verse does not prove that the searching for leaven too may be carried out merely with a lamp — perhaps a torch is required.
- (30) Thus a single lamp suffices for a search.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 8a

because the light of a lamp is suitable for searching. And though there is no proof of the matter yet there is a hint of it, for it is said, 'seven days shall there be no leaven found [in your houses]'; and it is said, 'and he searched, and began at the eldest, [etc.]'; and it is said, 'and it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with lamps'; and it is said, 'The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord, searching all the innermost parts of the belly'.

This light of the sun, where is it meant? Shall we say, in a courtyard, — but Raba said: A court-yard does not require searching, because birds frequent it.¹ While if in a hall,² — but Raba said: A hall is searched by its own light? — This is meant only in respect of a skylight in a room. But [then] what part of it? If [that which is] opposite the skylight, then it is the same as a hall? — Rather, it means [the part of the room] at the sides.

And not [by the light of] a torch? Surely Raba said, What is the meaning of the verse, And his brightness was as the light; he had rays coming forth from his hand: and there was hiding of his power?³ To what are the righteous comparable in the presence of the Shechinah? To a lamp in the presence of a torch.⁴ And Raba also said: [To use] a torch for habdalah⁵ is the most preferable [way of performing this] duty? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: The one⁶ can be brought into holes and chinks [in the wall], whereas the other⁷ cannot be brought into holes and chinks. R. Zebid said: The one⁶ [throws] its light forward, whereas the other⁷ [throws] its light behind.⁸ R. Papa said: Here [with a torch] one is afraid, whereas there [with a lamp] one is not afraid.⁹ Rabina said: The light of the one⁶ is steady. whereas that of the other⁷ is fitful.¹⁰ EVERY PLACE WHEREIN LEAVEN IS NOT TAKEN, etc. What does EVERY PLACE add? — It adds the following taught by our Rabbis: The topmost and the nethernmost holes of a room,¹¹ the roof of the verandah,¹² the roof of a turret,¹³ a cow's stable, hen-coops, a shed for straw, and store-houses of wine and oil do not need searching.¹⁴ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A bed which makes a division in a room,¹⁵ and leaves a space¹⁶ needs searching. But the following contradicts it: A hole [lying] between a man and his neighbour,¹⁷ this one searches as far as his hand reaches and that one searches as far as his hand reaches,¹⁸ and the rest he annuls in his heart. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A bed which makes a division in a room, timber and stones being arranged under it, and it leaves a space.¹⁹ does not require searching. Thus [the rulings on] a bed are contradictory and [those on] holes are contradictory? [The rulings on] holes are not contradictory: the one refers to the topmost and the nethermost;²⁰ the other to [holes in] the middle [of the wall]. [The rulings on] a bed are not contradictory: here it is raised; there it is low down.²¹

But, do not store-houses of wine require searching? Surely it was taught. Store-houses of wine need searching; stores of oil do not need searching? — The case we discuss here is where one draws his [immediate] supplies [from it].²² If so, oil too? — As for oil, there is a limit to eating; but [in respect to] wine, there is no limit to drinking.²³ R. Hiyya taught: Stores of beer in Babylonia were made the same as stores of wine in Palestine, where one draws his supplies from them.²⁴

R. Hisda said: A fish pantry does not require searching. But it was taught [that] they require searching? — There is no difficulty: the one treats of large [fish]; the other of small.²⁵ Rabbah son of R. Huna said: Salt sheds and wax sheds²⁶ need searching.²⁷ R. Papa said: Storehouses for fuel²⁸ and storehouses for dates need searching. A Tanna taught: We do not oblige him to insert his hand into holes and chinks and search [there], on account of the danger. Which danger? Shall we say. the danger of a snake, — then when he used it, how could he use it? — This arises only where it [the wall] collapsed.²⁹ But if it collapsed, why do I need searching [at all]? Surely we learned: If ruins collapsed on leaven, it is regarded as removed? — There [the circumstances are] that a dog cannot search it out; here, that a dog can search it out. But R. Eleazar said: Those sent [to perform] a religious duty do not suffer harm? — Said R. Ashi: He may have lost a needle and come to look for it.³⁰ But is it not [regarded as the fulfilment of] a religious duty in such a case? Surely it was taught: If one declares, ‘This sela’³¹ be for charity in order that my son may live,’ or, ‘that I may merit the future world,’³²

(1) And eat up all crumbs.

(2) vrsxft is a pillared hall or a piazza, open on top, running in front of large houses.

(3) Hab. III, 4.

(4) Even as the light of a lamp pales before that of a torch, so does the light of the righteous before that of the Almighty. Thus a torch gives more light, and therefore it is even better than a lamp.

(5) V. Glos. A blessing is pronounced over fire for which a light must be kindled.

(6) A lamp.

(7) A torch.

(8) Therefore it is not suitable for searching.

(9) The great flame of a torch may set fire to the house; therefore his preoccupation with this fear will hinder a man from a proper search.

(10) A torch throws an unsteady, wavering light.

(11) I.e., those which are very high up or very low down in the wall, so that it is inconvenient to use them.

(12) A balcony with a sloping roof, which could not be used; other parts of the house had a flat roof.

(13) A kind of safe in which food and utensils were kept. The inside had to be searched but not the roof.

(14) No leaven is taken, into any of these.

(15) I.e., it stands in the centre, dividing the room into two parts used for separate purposes.

(16) There is a space between it and the floor, as it stands on legs.

(17) I.e., in a wall separating two rooms or houses tenanted by different people. the hole passing right through from one side of the wall to the other.

- (18) E.g., when the wall is very thick.
- (19) Between the bottom of the bed and the timber.
- (20) V. p. 33. n. 7.
- (21) If the bottom of the bed is well raised from the ground the space beneath it can be used quite easily. But if it is low down, even if a space is left it is not easy to use it, hence it need not be searched.
- (22) E.g., a private wine cellar. The servant may enter to take wine for the table while holding bread in his hand.
- (23) How much oil is to be consumed at a meal can be gauged beforehand, and further supplies will not be required. But one cannot determine beforehand how much wine will be drunk.
- (24) They must be searched.
- (25) If large fish are stored there it will be unnecessary to bring more to the table during the meal; but in the case of small fish this may be necessary, and so it must be searched.
- (26) I.e., the places where these are kept.
- (27) Salt and candles being sometimes unexpectedly required during the meal.
- (28) Wood-chips, twigs, etc.
- (29) Snakes are often found among debris, hence only the top of the ruins must be searched, but one need not investigate below the surface.
- (30) While searching for the leaven. He is, not being exclusively engaged on a religious task, exposed to danger.
- (31) A coin.
- (32) Lit., 'that I may be a son of the future world'. On the 'future world' v. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 601, n. 3.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 8b

he is completely righteous.¹ — Perhaps after he searched [for the leaven] he will come to look for it. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: [It means] on account of the danger of Gentiles, this agreeing with Pelimo. For it was taught: [In the case of] a hole between a Jew and a Syrian [i.e., a Gentile], he must search as far as his hand reaches, and the rest he annuls in his heart. Pelimo said: He does not search it at all, on account of the danger. [Now] what is the danger? Shall we say, the danger of witchcraft,² — then when he used it, how did he use it? — There when he used it it was day and there was light, therefore [the Gentile] would not suspect anything;³ but here it is night and a lamp [is used]; hence he will suspect. But R. Eleazar said: Those sent [to perform] a religious duty do not suffer harm?⁴ — Where the injury is probable it is different, for it is said, And Samuel said, How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the Lord said, Take a heifer with thee, etc.⁵

Rab was asked: Scholars who reside out of town, can they come in the early morning or after nightfall to the academy?⁶ — He replied: Let them come, [the risk be] upon myself and my neck. What about returning?⁷ I do not know, he answered them. It was stated: R. Eleazar said: Those sent [to perform] a religious duty will not suffer hurt, neither in their going nor in their returning. With whom [does this agree]? — With this Tanna: for it was taught. Issi b. Judah said: Seeing that the Torah said, no man shall desire thy land [when thou goest up to appear before the Lord thy God . . .],⁸ it teaches that your cow will graze in the meadow and no [wild] beast will hurt it; your fowl will go scratching in the dungheap and no weasel will injure it. Now does this not furnish an argument a minori? If these, whose nature it is to be hurt, will not be hurt; then human beings, for whom it is not natural to be hurt, how much more so!⁹ I know it only in respect of going: how do I know it of returning? Because it is stated, and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go [back] unto thy tents:¹⁰ this teaches that you will go and find your tent in peace. But since [he is safe] even on [his] return, why [intimate it] in respect of going?¹¹ — [That is necessary] for R. Ammi's [teaching]. For R. Ammi said: Every man who owns land must make the Festival pilgrimage; but he who does not own land need not make the Festival pilgrimage.¹²

R. Abin son of R. Adda said in R. Isaac's name: Why are there no fruits of Gennesaret¹³ in Jerusalem? So that the Festival pilgrims should not say. 'Had we merely ascended in order to eat the fruits of Gennesaret in Jerusalem it would have sufficed us,' with the result¹⁴ that the pilgrimage would not be for its own sake. Similarly R. Dosehai son of R. Jannai said: Why are the thermal springs of Tiberias not [found] in Jerusalem? So that the Festival pilgrims should not say. 'Had we merely ascended in order to bathe in the thermal springs of Tiberias, it would have sufficed us,' with the result that the pilgrimage would not be for its own sake. THEN IN WHAT CASE DID THEY RULE, TWO ROWS OF THE WINE CELLAR [etc.]? Who has mentioned anything about a wine cellar? — This is what he [the Tanna] says: EVERY PLACE WHEREIN NO LEAVEN IS TAKEN DOES NOT REQUIRE SEARCHING, and stores of wine and stores of oil do not require searching either. THEN IN WHAT CASE DID THEY RULE, TWO ROWS OF THE WINE CELLAR [MUST BE SEARCHED]? [CONCERNING] A PLACE WHEREIN LEAVEN MAY BE TAKEN, which is one whence [private] supplies are drawn.

BETH SHAMMAI MAINTAIN: TWO ROWS, etc. R. Judah said: The two rows which they [Beth Shammai] specified [mean] from the ground up to the very ceiling;¹⁵ but R. Johanan said: [It means] a single row in the shape of a right angle.¹⁶ It was taught in accordance with Rab Judah; [and] it was taught in accordance with R. Johanan. It was taught in accordance with Rab Judah: Beth Shammai maintain: Two rows over the front [surface] of the whole cellar, and the two rows which they specified [means] from the ground up to the very ceiling. It was taught in accordance with R. Johanan: Two rows over the face of the whole cellar, [i.e.,] the outer one which looks upon the door, and the upper one which faces¹⁷ the ceiling; but that which is within this and below this does not require searching.

BETH HILLEL MAINTAIN: THE TWO OUTER ROWS, WHICH ARE THE UPPERMOST. Rab said: [That means] the upper row and the one beneath it;¹⁸ while Samuel said: [That means] the upper row and the one on the inside of it. What is Rab's reason? — Because he emphasizes: OUTER. But it [also] teaches: UPPERMOST? — That is to exclude those beneath the lower one.¹⁹ While Samuel says: 'The upper row and the one on the inside of it.' What is the reason? Because he emphasizes: UPPERMOST. But it [also] states: OUTER? — That is to exclude the inside of the inner.²⁰ R. Hiyya taught in accordance with Rab, while all tannaim recited as Samuel. And the law is as Samuel.²¹

(1) In respect of his action, notwithstanding his selfish motives. Hence in the case under discussion the same holds good.

(2) Sc. the Gentile may suspect him of witchcraft when he sees him rummaging in the hole.

(3) Lit., 'bring it up on his mind'.

(4) To be the object of these suspicions is to suffer harm.

(5) 1 Sam. XVI, 2. Thus Samuel was afraid though engaged on a Divine mission, because it was naturally dangerous.

- (6) Do they run a risk in going over the fields at such times?
- (7) After nightfall.
- (8) Ex. XXXIV, 24.
- (9) They are certainly immune from danger when going to carry out a religious duty, to which the present verse refers.
- (10) Deut. XVI, 7.
- (11) Surely that follows a fortiori.
- (12) This follows from the fact that the Almighty assures the pilgrim that his land will be safe in his absence, which proves that the command refers only to those who possess land.
- (13) A lake so named from the fertile plain lying on its western side. In the O.T., it is called Yam Kinnereth or Kinneroth; Num. XXXIV. 11; Josh. XII, 3. On its western shore lay Tiberias. — Its fruit was particularly delicious.
- (14) Lit , ‘and it would be found’.
- (15) I.e., the two outer rows of barrels from top to bottom, over their entire area.
- (16) Gam, the shape of the Grk. Gamma . I.e. , the front row and the whole of the upper layer.
- (17) Lit., ‘sees’.
- (18) In the outermost row facing the door.
- (19) I.e., all rows from the third from the top and downwards.
- (20) Those within the second row of the top layer.
- (21) From the fact that all post-Talmudic authorities accept Rab's view, however, it would appear that this passage was absent from their texts; [v. Tosaf. Yom Tob on our Mishnah and MS.M. R. Hananel, however, has this passage and accepts Samuel's ruling.]

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 9a

MISHNAH. WE HAVE NO FEAR THAT A WEASEL MAY HAVE DRAGGED [LEAVEN] FROM ONE ROOM TO ANOTHER OR FROM ONE SPOT TO ANOTHER.¹ FOR IF SO, [WE MUST ALSO FEAR] FROM COURT-YARD TO COURT-YARD AND FROM TOWN TO TOWN, [AND] THE MATTER IS ENDLESS.

GEMARA. The reason is that we did not see it take [leaven]; but if we saw it take [it] we do fear, and it requires a [re-]search. yet why so; let us assume that it ate it? Did we not learn: The dwellings of heathens are unclean,² and how long must he [the heathen] stay in a dwelling so that it should need searching?³ Forty days, even if he has no wife. But in every place where a weasel or a swine can enter no searching is required!⁴ — Said R. Zera, There is no difficulty: one treats of flesh, the other of bread: in the case of flesh it [the weasel] leaves nothing, [whereas in the case of bread it does leave [something] — Raba said: How compare! As for there, it is well: it is [a case of mere] ‘say’: say that there was [a burial there], say that there was not.⁵ And if you assume that there was, say that it [e.g., a weasel] ate it. But here that we see for certain that it has taken [leaven], who is to say that it ate it? Surely it is a doubt [on the one hand] and a certainty [on the other], and a doubt cannot negative a certainty. But cannot a doubt negative a certainty? Surely it was taught: If a haber⁶ dies and leaves a store-house full of produce [crops]. even if they are but one day old, they stand in the presumption of having been tithed.⁷ Now here these crops were certainly liable to tithe, and there is a doubt whether they have been tithed or not tithed, yet the doubt comes and negatives the certainty?—There it is one certainty against another certainty, as [we presume that] they have certainly been tithed, in accordance with R. Hanina of Hozae.⁸ For R. Hanina of Hozae said: There is a presumption concerning a haber that he does not let anything untithed⁹ pass out from under his hand. Alternatively: it is a doubt [on the one hand] and a doubt [on the other]; perhaps from the very beginning say that it was not liable to tithe, in accordance with R. Oshaia. For R. Oshaia said: one may practise an artifice with his produce and take it in its husks, so that his cattle may eat thereof and it be exempt from tithes.¹⁰

But cannot a doubt negative a certainty? Surely it was taught, R. Judah said: It once happened that the bondmaid of a certain oppressor¹¹ in Rimon¹² threw her premature-born child into a pit,

(1) I.e., after a room has been searched and cleared of leaven a weasel may have brought leaven into it from elsewhere.

(2) Because they used to bury their premature births in their houses.

(3) For a buried body, before a Jew may live there.

(4) If a baby were thrown there these would eat it, Oh. XVIII, 7. — Thus the same should apply to leaven.

(5) I.e., the presence there of a dead child is merely conjectured as a possibility.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) V. Supra 4b.

(8) A province of S. W. Persia, now known as Khuzestan; Obermeyer. pp. 204ff.

(9) Lit., 'unprepared'.

(10) Produce is not liable to tithes unless it is taken into the house through the front door when its work is completed, not through the roof or the backyard. If grain is brought in in its husks its work is not complete, as this is still to be separated, and it is not liable to tithe, and need not be tithed by Scriptural law; a human being may then make a light meal of it, while cattle may eat their fill. Thus there it may never have become liable to tithe at all. Though a human being may not make a meal of it, that is only a Rabbinical law and is certainly nullified here by the presumption that the haber had tithed it. But in its essence we see that it is doubt against doubt; the doubt whether it was liable to tithe at all offset by the doubt that it may have been tithed.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 9b

and a priest came and looked down it to see whether it was a male or a female;¹ and when the matter came before the Sages they declared him² clean, because weasels and martens³ were to be found there.⁴ Now here, she had certainly thrown it in, while it is doubtful whether they had dragged it away or not by that time, yet the doubt comes and negatives the certainty? — Do not say that she threw a premature child into a pit, but say, 'she threw something like a premature child into a pit', so that it is a doubt against a doubt.⁵ But it states: 'In order to see whether it was a male or a female'⁶ — This is what it says: To know whether she had aborted wind⁷ or a premature child; and should you say that it was a premature child, to see whether it was a male or a female. Alternatively. there it is a certainty against a certainty; since weasels and martens are to be found there they had certainly dragged it away by that time; [for] granted that they may have left over,⁸ yet they certainly had dragged it away by that time.

But do we say, we leave no fear that a weasel may have dragged [leaven], etc.? Surely the second clause states:⁹ What he leaves over¹⁰ he must put away in a hidden place, so that it should not require a search after it?¹¹ Said Abaye. There is no difficulty: the one [refers to a search] on the fourteenth; the other, on the thirteenth. [If one searches] on the thirteenth, when bread is [yet] to be found in all houses, it [a weasel] does not hide [leaven]; on the fourteenth, when bread is not to be found in all houses, it does hide [it]. Said Raba: Is then a weasel a prophet to know that it is the fourteenth now and people will not bake until the evening, so that it should leave [some] over and hide [it]? Rather said Raba: What one leaves over he must put away in a hidden place lest a weasel seize it in his presence and it require a search after it. It was taught in accordance with Raba: If one wishes to eat leaven after the search, what shall he do? Let him put it away in a hidden place, lest a weasel come and seize it in his presence and it require a search after it. R. Mari said: It is for fear that he may leave ten¹² and [only] ‘find nine.’¹³

If there are nine packages of mazzah and one of leaven, and a mouse comes and steals [a package], and we do not know whether it took mazzah or leaven,¹⁴ that is [similar to the case of] nine shops.¹⁵ If [one package] was separated¹⁶ and a mouse came and stole it, that is [similar to] the second clause. For it was taught: If there are nine shops all selling meat of [ritually] slaughtered [animals], and there is one shop selling meat of nebelah,¹⁷ and a man buys [meat] from one of them, but he does not know from which [shop] he bought the [meat in] doubt is prohibited; but in the case of [meat] found, we follow the majority.¹⁸

If there are two packages, one of mazzah and the other of leaven, and before them are two rooms, one searched and the other unsearched, and two mice came, one took mazzah and the other took leaven, and we do not know which [mouse] entered which [house], that is the case of two baskets. For we learned: If there are two baskets, one containing hullin¹⁹ and the other containing terumah,¹⁹ and in front of them are two se'ahs [of provisions], one of hullin and the other of terumah, and these fell into those, they [sc. the contents of the baskets] are permitted, for I assume: The hullin fell into hullin and the terumah fell into terumah.²⁰ Perhaps we say ‘I assume’

(11) For otherwise a weasel may drag it away.

(12) E.g., rolls.

(13) For then it would be certain that one had been removed, and this would necessitate a further search.

(14) V. p. 33. n. 3. If mazzah, no further search is required; if leaven, it is required.

(15) Explained infra.

(16) But we do not know whether this separated package was leaven or mazzah.

(17) V. Glos.

(18) And assume it to have come out of one of the nine. In the first instance the forbidden meat is in a fixed place; technically this is called kabu'a (fixed), and it is shown in Sanh. 79b that we must then regard the doubt as equally balanced, i.e., as though there were an equal quantity of both, and we are therefore stringent. But in the second case the forbidden meal has left its fixed place and is somewhere in the street; the ordinary rule is then followed that the majority decides.

(19) V. Glos.

(20) By a similar assumption the house already searched does not need to be searched anew.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 10a

in the case of terumah [only], which is merely Rabbinical;¹ but do we say thus in the case of leaven, which is Scriptural?² — Is then the searching for leaven Scriptural; surely it is [only] Rabbinical, for by Scriptural law mere annulment is sufficient.³

If there is one package of leaven, and in front of it are two houses which have been searched, and there came a mouse and seized it, and we do not know whether it entered this [house] or that, that is [similar to] the case of two paths. For we learned: If there are two paths, one clean and the other unclean,⁴ and a person went through one of them and then touched⁵ clean [food], and then his neighbour came and went through the other and he touched clean [food], — R. Judah said: If they each enquire separately, they are clean;⁶ if both together, they are unclean. R. Jose said: In both cases they are unclean. Raba — others say. R. Johanan — said: If they came together, all agree that they are unclean; if consecutively, all agree that they are clean. They differ only where one comes to enquire about himself and his neighbour: R. Jose compares it to [both coming] together.⁷ while R. Judah likens it to each coming separately.⁸

If it is doubtful whether it [the mouse] entered or not,⁹ that is [similar to] the case of a plain, and [there we are involved] in the controversy of R. Eleazar and the Rabbis.¹⁰ For we learned: If a man enters a plain¹¹ in winter,¹² and there is uncleanness¹³ in a particular field,¹⁴ and he states: I walked in that place, but do not know whether I entered that field or not, — R. Eleazar declares him clean, while the Sages declare him unclean. For R. Eleazar ruled: If there is a doubt about entering, he is clean: if there is a doubt of contact with uncleanness, he is unclean.¹⁵

If it [the mouse] entered [with the leaven], and he [the master] searched but did not find it, [in like case] there is a controversy of R. Meir and the Rabbis. For we learned: R. Meir used to say: Everything which is in the presumption of uncleanness always [remains] in its uncleanness until it is known to you whether its uncleanness is gone; while the Sages rule: one searches until he reaches a rock or virgin soil.¹⁶

If it [the mouse] entered [with leaven] and he searched and found [leaven].¹⁷ — [in like case] there is a controversy of Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For it was taught: If a grave was lost in a field,¹⁸ he who enters therein is unclean. If a grave is [subsequently] found in it, he who enters therein is clean, for I assume: the grave which was lost is the same grave which was found: this is Rabbi's view. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The whole field must be examined.¹⁹ If a man left nine [pieces of leaven] and found ten, there is a controversy of Rabbi and the Rabbis. For it was taught: If he left a maneh²⁰ and found two-hundred [zuz],²¹ hullin and second tithe are intermingled,²² this is Rabbi's view. But the Sages maintain: It is all hullin.²³ If he left ten and found nine, that is [analogous to] the second clause. For it was taught: If he deposited two hundred and found one maneh, [he assumes], one maneh was left lying and one maneh was taken away:²⁴ this is Rabbi's view. But the Sages maintain: It is all hullin.

(1) Nowadays.

(2) When doubt arises in a Rabbinical law we are naturally lenient; but where the law is Scriptural we are strict.

(3) Supra 4b.

(4) E.g., there is a lost grave in one of them, but we do not know in which.

(5) Lit., 'made'.

(6) Each is given the benefit of the doubt; consequently the food remains clean.

(7) Since the question is asked on behalf of both.

(8) Since there is only one man asking. — It is a principle that if a doubt of uncleanness arises in public ground, it is clean; if in private ground, it is unclean. Here the paths are public ground; hence when they come separately each is declared clean. But we cannot rule thus when they come together. since one is certainly unclean. The same principles apply mutatis mutandis to the searched houses.

(9) A mouse was seen to take a package of leaven, but we do not know whether or not it entered a room already searched.

(10) [This clause is omitted in MS.M., cf. p 43. n. 2.]

(11) Many fields together constitute a plain.

(12) It is then private ground, because the seed has already started sprouting.

(13) I.e., a grave.

(14) The field is known.

(15) For in the first case there is really a double doubt: firstly, whether he entered the field at all, and secondly, even if he did enter, whether he passed over the grave. — In our problem, however, even the Rabbis agree that a re-search is not necessary; since the search is only Rabbinical, we make the more lenient assumption (Rashi). [Apparently Rashi did not read, 'and in the controversy. . . Rabbis', cf. p. 42, n. 10.]

(16) If a pile or heap contains a portion of a corpse, so that it is unclean, while there are two other clean piles, and we do not know now which is which; if one is examined and found to be clean, that is clean, while the others are treated as unclean; if two are found to be clean, they are clean and the third is unclean; but if the three are examined and found to be clean, they are all unclean in R. Meir's opinion, unless we know definitely whether the defilement has disappeared. But the Sages maintain that he examines the ground until he reaches a rock or virgin soil which has obviously never been touched, and if it is not found we assume that a bird has flown off with it. — But in the present problem even R. Meir agrees that we are lenient, since the search is only a Rabbinical requirement (Rashi). V. however Tosaf.

(17) But he does not know whether it is the same.

(18) We do not know where it is.

(19) It may not be the same grave. Here too, presumably, even R. Simeon b. Gamaliel is lenient; cf. n. 3.

(20) Of second title.

(21) I.e., two manehs.

(22) We assume that the original maneh was left and an unknown person added another. It will therefore be necessary to redeem one maneh by exchanging it for another.

(23) For the original manehs may have been taken away. The Rabbis will make a similar assumption here and therefore the house must be searched for the nine pieces.

(24) Hence the present maneh is treated as second tithe.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 10b

If a man left [leaven] in this corner and finds [leaven] in another corner, there is a controversy of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel and the Rabbis. For it was taught: If an axe is lost in a house, the house is unclean, for I assume: An unclean person entered there and removed it. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The house is clean, for I assume, He lent it to another and forgot, or he took it from one corner and placed it in another corner and forgot. Who mentioned anything about a corner?¹ The text is defective, and is thus taught: If an axe is lost in a house, the house is unclean, for I say: An unclean person entered there and took it. Or if he leaves it in one corner and finds it in another corner the house is unclean, for I assume, An unclean person entered there and took it from one corner and placed it in another corner. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: The house is clean, for I say. He lent it to another and forgot, or he took it from one corner and placed it in another corner and forgot.²

Raba said: If a mouse enters [a room] with a loaf in its mouth and he [the owner] enters after him and finds crumbs, a [fresh] search is necessary,³ because it is not a mouse's nature to make crumbs.⁴ Raba also said: If a child enters [a room] with a loaf in his hand, and he [the owner] enters after him and finds crumbs, a [fresh] search is not necessary, because it is a child's nature to make crumbs.

Raba asked: What if a mouse enters with a loaf in its mouth, and a mouse goes out with a loaf in its mouth: do we say, the same which went in went out; or perhaps it is a different one? Should you answer, the same which went in went out, — what if a white mouse entered with a loaf in its mouth, and black mouse went out with a loaf in its mouth? now this is certainly a different one; or perhaps it did indeed seize⁵ it from the other? And should you say, mice do not seize from each other, — what if a mouse enters with a loaf in its mouth and a weasel goes out with a loaf in its mouth? now the weasel certainly does take from a mouse; or perhaps it is a different one, for had it snatched it from the mouse, the mouse would have [now] been found in its mouth? And should you say, had it snatched it from the mouse, the mouse would have been found in its mouth, what if a mouse enters with a loaf in its mouth, and then a weasel comes out with a loaf and a mouse in the weasel's mouth? Here it is certainly the same; or perhaps, if it were the same, the loaf should indeed have been found in the mouse's mouth; or perhaps it fell out [of the mouse's mouth] on account of [its] terror, and it [the weasel] took it? The question stands over.

Raba asked: If there is a loaf on the top rafters, need he [take] a ladder to fetch it down or not? Do we say, our Rabbis did not put him to all this trouble, [for] since it cannot descend of its own accord he will not come to eat it;⁶ or perhaps it may fall down and he will come to eat it? Now should you say, it may fall down and he will come to eat it, — if there is a loaf in a pit, does he need a ladder to fetch it up or not? Here it will certainly not happen that it will ascend of its own accord; or perhaps he may happen to go down to perform his requirements and come to eat it? Should you say that he may happen to go down for his purposes and come to eat it, — if a loaf is in a snake's mouth, does he need a snake-charmer to take it out or does he not need [one]? [Do we say,] our Rabbis put him to personal trouble, but they did not put him to trouble with his money; or perhaps there is no difference? The questions stand over.

MISHNAH. R. JUDAH SAID: WE SEARCH [FOR LEAVEN] ON THE EVENING OF THE FOURTEENTH, AND⁷ IN THE MORNING OF THE FOURTEENTH, AND AT THE TIME OF REMOVAL. BUT THE SAGES MAINTAIN: IF HE DID NOT SEARCH IN THE EVENING OF THE FOURTEENTH, HE MUST SEARCH ON THE FOURTEENTH; IF HE DID NOT SEARCH IN [THE MORNING OF] THE FOURTEENTH, HE MUST SEARCH AT THE APPOINTED TIME;⁸ IF HE DID NOT SEARCH AT THE APPOINTED TIME, HE MUST SEARCH AFTER THE APPOINTED TIME.⁹ AND WHAT HE LEAVES OVER¹⁰ HE MUST PUT AWAY IN A HIDDEN PLACE, SO THAT HE SHOULD NOT NEED SEARCHING AFTER IT.

GEMARA. What is R. Judah's reason? — R. Hisda and Rabbah son of R. Huna both say, It [the threefold searching] corresponds to the three 'puttings away' mentioned in the Torah: and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee;¹¹ seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses;¹² and even on the first day shall ye put away leaven out of your house.¹³ R. Joseph objected: R. Judah said: He who has not searched at these three periods can no longer search, which proves that they differ only in respect of from now and henceforth!¹⁴ Mar Zutra recited it thus: R. Joseph objected: R. Judah said: He who has not searched at one of these three periods can no longer search, which proves that they differ in [whether] he can no longer search? — Rather R. Judah too means, where he has not searched,¹⁵ and here they differ in this: one Master¹⁶ holds, only before it is forbidden;¹⁷ but not after it is forbidden, as a preventive measure, lest he come to eat of it; while the Rabbis hold that we do not preventively forbid. But did R. Judah preventively forbid lest he come to eat thereof, — surely we learned: As soon as the 'omer¹⁸ has been offered, they used to go out and find the markets of Jerusalem filled with flour and parched corn,¹⁹

(1) We are discussing the case where it is lost.

(2) Thus here too, according to the Rabbis we fear that mice have been about, and consequently we also fear that the leaven he now finds is not the same which he left, so that a re-search is required. But on R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's view we do not fear this.

(3) To find leaven with which the mouse was seen to enter.

(4) Therefore these are not merely the loaf crumbled up.

(5) Lit., 'throw'.

(6) Therefore he may leave it there, and merely annul it.

(7) So presumably; v. Gemara.

(8) Sc. of removal, i.e., in the sixth hour (11 a.m. — noon).

(9) From noon until nightfall (Rashi). Tosaf. explains differently: 'within the mo'ed', from noon on the fourteenth until the end of Passover, translating mo'ed as festival, which meaning it generally bears; 'after the mo'ed, after Passover, for leaven kept in the house during Passover is forbidden after Passover.

(10) 'After the search in the evening, for the following morning's meal' (R. Nissim).

(11) Ex. XIII, 7.

(12) Ibid. XII, 19.

(13) Ibid. 15. — ‘Seen’ ‘found’ and ‘put away’ all mean in practice that the leaven must be put away, and corresponding to each expression there must be a search.

(14) I.e., after the time of removal, R. Judah holding that there is no searching then, while the Sages maintain that there is. But before that all agree that only one search is necessary. R. Judah meaning either in the evening or in the morning etc., the waw (translated ‘AND’ in the Mishnah) being disjunctive, or.

(15) In the evening; then he must search in the morning.

(16) R. Judah.

(17) Must one search then.

(18) V. Glos.

(19) Of the new harvest; v. Lev. XXIII, 9-14. Of course, in order to have it ready for sale on the same day the vendors must have prepared it before, and thus they handled it while it was yet prohibited.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 11a

[but] not with the consent of the Sages:¹ this is R. Meir's opinion. R. Judah said: They acted with the consent of the Sages.² Thus R. Judah did not preventively forbid lest one come to eat thereof? — Said Raba:³ Hadash is different: since you permit it to him only by means of plucking,⁴ he remembers.⁵ Said Abaye to him: That is well at the time of plucking, [but] what can be said of the grinding and sifting?⁶ — That is no difficulty: grinding [is done] with a handmill; sifting [is done] on top of the sieve.⁷ But as to what we learned: ‘one may reap an artificially irrigated field and [the corn] in the valleys,⁸ but one may not stack [the corn],’⁹ and we established this as [agreeing with] R. Judah, what can be said?¹⁰ — Rather, said Abaye: From hadash one holds aloof;¹¹ but one does not hold aloof front leaven.¹² Raba demurred: R. Judah is self-contradictory. while the Rabbis are not self-contradictory?¹³ — Rather, said Raba: R. Judah is not self-contradictory, as we have answered. The Rabbis too are not self-contradictory: he himself is seeking it in order to burn it, shall he then eat thereof!¹⁴ R. Ashi said: R. Judah is not self-contradictory, [for] we learned,¹⁵ ‘flour and parched corn’,¹⁶ But this [answer] of R. Ashi is a fiction:¹⁷ this is well from [the time when it is] parched ears and onwards; ‘but from the beginning until it is parched corn, what can be said?’¹⁸ And should you answer, [It is gathered] by plucking,¹⁹ as Raba [answered], then what can be said of [what we learnt that] ‘one may reap an artificially irrigated field and [the corn in] the valleys’, which we established as [agreeing with] R. Judah?²⁰ Hence R. Ashi's [answer] is a fiction.

But, wherever one does not [normally] hold aloof, did R. Judah preventively forbid? Surely we learned: A man may not pierce an eggshell, fill it with oil, and place it over the mouth of a [burning] lamp in order that it should drip,²¹ and even if it is of earthenware; but R. Judah permits it!²² — There, on account of the strictness of the Sabbath he will indeed keep aloof. Then [one ruling] of the Sabbath can be opposed to [another ruling] of the Sabbath. For it was taught: If the cord of a bucket is broken, one must not tie²³ it [together] but merely make a loop [slip-knot]; whereas R. Judah maintains: He may wind a hollow belt or a fascia²⁴ around it, providing that he does not tie it with a slip-knot.²⁵ [Thus] R. Judah's [views] are self-contradictory. and similarly the Rabbis'? — The Rabbis' [views] are not self-contradictory: oil [from one source] can be interchanged with oil [from another],²⁶ whereas looping cannot be mistaken for²⁷ knotting. R.

Judah's [views] are not self-contradictory; R. Judah's reason is not that he forbids looping on account of knotting, but because looping itself is [a form of] knotting. Now, the Rabbis may be opposed to the Rabbis. For we learned: A bucket [over a well] may be tied with a fascia but not with a cord;²⁸ but R. Judah permits it.²⁹ Now what cord is meant: Shall we say an ordinary [bucket] cord: [how does it state] 'R. Judah permits it', — surely it is a permanent knot, for he will certainly come to abandon it?³⁰ Hence it is obvious that a weaver's [rope³¹ is meant]. and [yet] the Rabbis preventively forbid a weaver's cord on account of an ordinary cord? — Even so: one rope may be mistaken for another, [whereas] looping cannot be mistaken for knotting.

But, wherever one [normally] holds aloof from it, does not R. Judah preventively forbid? Surely we learned: If a firstling is attacked with congestion, even if it should die [otherwise]. we must not bleed it: this is R. Judah's view;³² but the Sages rule: He may bleed [it], providing that he does not inflict a [permanent] blemish upon it? — There, because one is excited

(1) Lest they eat of it while preparing it.

(2) V. Men. 67b.

(3) Bah emends to Rabbah, which is the reading in Men. 67b.

(4) The new corn may not be reaped at all before the bringing of the 'omer', but must be plucked by hand.

(5) That it may not be eaten.

(6) There is nothing to remind him then of the interdict.

(7) The sieve is reversed. The unusual ways in which these are done serve as reminders.

(8) In the usual way, before the 'omer.

(9) V. Men. 71a.

(10) There is nothing there to remind one of the prohibition.

(11) As it is forbidden at all times until the 'omer, when it ceases to be hadash. Thus he is accustomed to abstain from it and is not likely to forget himself.

(12) During the year, and thus may possibly eat of it when the prohibition is already in force.

(13) That you seek to reconcile R. Judah's views only. Yet surely the Rabbis too need harmonizing, for whereas the Rabbis do not preventively forbid in the case of leaven, they do so here, as R. Meir states, 'They did not act with the consent of the Sages'.

(14) Surely we need not entertain that fear.

(15) In the above cited Mishnah.

(16) Which are not fit for eating.

(17) †, USC, V. B.M., Sonc. ed. p 47. n. 1.

(18) In the intermediate stages it is fit for eating! How could it then be handled.

(19) Which serves as a reminder.

(20) Though there is nothing there to serve as a reminder, v. infra.

(21) And replenish the contents of the lamp during Sabbath.

(22) The reason of the Rabbis is lest he take the oil for eating, which, constitutes extinguishing. R. Judah permits it, though one does not normally abstain from oil, v. Shab. 29a.

(23) The tying of a permanent knot constitutes one of the thirty-nine principal classes of forbidden work on Sabbath.

(24) A band or fillet.

(25) V. Shab. 113a.

(26) Just as he consumes oil from elsewhere, so may he come to draw supplies from this eggshell, seeing no difference.

(27) Lit., 'interchanged with'.

(28) On the Sabbath. The first is certainly only temporary, but the second may be left there, and thus a permanent knot will have been tied on the Sabbath.

(29) V. Shab. 113b.

(30) I.e., leave it there as a thing having no other purpose than this.

(31) Which is not usually used for drawing water, and will not consequently be left there.

(32) One must not inflict a permanent blemish on a firstling. R. Judah rules that the animal must not be bled even without inflicting a permanent blemish upon it, lest one come to do so even by making a permanent blemish. Thus R. Judah forbids preventively, though people do hold aloof from sacred animals, to which category a firstling belongs.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 11b

about his property, if you permit him [to bleed it] in a place where a blemish is not inflicted, he will come to do it in a place where a blemish is inflicted. But the Rabbis [argue]: if you do not permit him at all, he is all the more likely to come to act [thus].

Yet do we say according to R. Judah. A man is excited over his property? Surely we learned: An animal may not be carried on Festivals, because it makes a bruise [wound], but you may scrape it; but the Sages maintain: It may neither be carried nor scraped. Now it was taught: What is currying and what is scraping? Currying is with a small-toothed strigil. and it makes a wound; scraping is with a large-toothed strigil and does not make a wound?¹ — There, since it will die if left alone, we say. a man is excited about his property; here, if he leaves it there is merely discomfort, we do not say, a man is excited about his money. Now as to R. Judah; wherein is the difference that he preventively prohibits in the case of leaven but does not preventively forbid in the case of scraping? — One bread can be mistaken for another bread, [but] currying cannot be mistaken for scraping.

MISHNAH. R. MEIR SAID: ONE MAY EAT [LEAVEN] THE WHOLE OF THE FIVE [HOURS] AND MUST BURN [IT] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH. R. JUDAH SAID: ONE MAY EAT THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR [HOURS]. KEEP IT IN SUSPENSE THE WHOLE OF THE FIFTH, AND MUST BURN IT AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH.² R. JUDAH SAID FURTHER: TWO UNFIT LOAVES OF THE THANKSOFFERING USED TO LIE ON THE ROOF³ OF THE [TEMPLE] IZTABA:⁴ AS LONG AS THEY LAY [THERE] ALL THE PEOPLE WOULD EAT [LEAVEN]; WHEN ONE WAS REMOVED, THEY WOULD KEEP IT IN SUSPENSE, NEITHER EATING NOR BURNING [IT]; WHEN BOTH WERE REMOVED, ALL THE PEOPLE COMMENCED BURNING [THEIR LEAVEN].⁵ R. GAMALIEL SAID: HULLIN MAY BE EATEN THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR [HOURS] AND TERUMAH THE WHOLE OF THE FIVE [HOURS]. AND WE BURN [THEM] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH [HOUR].⁶

GEMARA. We learned elsewhere: If one [witness] deposes [that it took place] on the second day of the month,⁷ and another deposes, on the third of the month, their testimony is valid, because one knows of the intercalation of the [preceding] month⁸ while the other does not know of the intercalation of the month.⁹ If one deposed, on the third, while the other deposed, on the fifth, their testimony is null. If one said: During the second hour, and the other said: During the third hour, their testimony is valid.¹⁰ If one said, during the third hour, and the other said, during the fifth, their testimony is null: this is R. Meir's view. R. Judah maintained: Their testimony stands. If one deposed, during the fifth [hour], while the other deposed, during the seventh, their testimony is null, because during the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, whereas in the seventh it is in the west. Abaye observed: When you examine the matter, you find that on R. Meir's ruling a man does not err [in the time] at all, [while] on R. Judah's ruling a man may err in half an hour. [Thus:] on R. Meir's ruling a man does not err at all: the event [to which they testify] happened at the end of the second and the beginning of the third [hour], and when one says, during the second, [he means] at the end of the second [hour], and when the other says, during the third hour, [he means] at the beginning of the third hour.¹¹ On R. Judah's ruling a man may err in half an hour: the event happened in the middle of the fourth hour, and he who says in the third hour[meant] at the end of the third hour, and he errs in [being] half an hour before; while he who testified, in the fifth hour, [meant] at the beginning of the fifth hour, and he errs in half an hour behind.

Others say, Abaye observed: When you examine the matter, you find that on R. Meir's ruling a man may err in [just] a little, while on R. Judah's ruling a man may err in slightly more than an hour.¹² On R. Meir's ruling a man may err in [just] a little: the event occurred either at the end of the second or at the beginning of the third [hour], and one of them erred a little. On R. Judah's ruling a man may err in slightly more than an hour: the event happened either at the end of the third or at the beginning of the fifth,

(1) The animal is scraped to free it of mud, mire, etc. Thus R. Judah does not argue that if you permit one the other will be used, because a man is anxious to keep his property in good condition.

(2) V. supra 4b for notes.

(3) This is the reading of MS.M. and in the printed ed. of the Mishnah.

(4) V. Gemara.

(5) Forty loaves were brought with a thanks-offering, ten of which were leaven; two leaven loaves which had become unfit (the Gemara discusses how) were publicly exposed on the portico and served as a signal.

(6) By Biblical law leaven is permitted until midday. But people often erred in the matter of time (there were, of course, no clocks or watches in those days), and the controversy here is in respect of the extent of possible or likely errors.

(7) E.g., a murder.

(8) I.e., that it consisted of thirty days. The thirtieth day is said to be intercalated.

(9) Thinking that it consisted of twenty-nine days. This holds good only when they agree on other matters, including what day of the week it was.

(10) Because one can err in an hour.

(11) Thus there is no contradiction at all. But if it is shown that there is a contradiction, even in half an hour, one is assumed to be false and their evidence is null.

(12) Lit., 'an hour and a little'.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 12a

and one of them erred in just over an hour.

R. Huna the son of R. Judah went and reported this discussion before Raba. Said he: now what if we carefully examined these witnesses [and found] that the one who testified [that it took place] in the third [hour] meant at the beginning of the third hour, while he who testified [that it took place] in the fifth [meant] at the end of the fifth, so that it would be a confuted testimony and we would not execute [the accused]; shall we then arise and execute him through a doubt,¹ whereas the Merciful One has ordered, then the congregation shall judge . . . and the congregation shall deliver?² Rather said Raba: on R. Meir's ruling a man may err in two hours less a trifle, while on R. Judah's ruling a man may err in three hours less a trifle. On R. Meir's ruling a man may err in two hours less a trifle: the incident happened either at the beginning of the second or at the end of the third [hour], and one of them erred in two hours less a trifle. On R. Judah's ruling a man may err in three hours less a trifle: the incident occurred either at the beginning of the third or at the end of the fifth [hour], and one of them erred in three hours less a trifle.

We learned: They³ were examined with seven hakiroth:⁴ In which septennate [was the crime committed], in which year, in which month, on what day of the month, on what day [of the week]. at which hour and in which place? And 'ye [further] learned: What is the difference between hakiroth and bedikoth?⁵ In hakiroth, if one of them [the witnesses] replied. 'I do not know', their testimony is null; in bedikoth, even if both declare, 'We do not know', their testimony is valid. Now we questioned this: Wherein this difference between hakiroth and bedikoth? And we answered: In hakiroth, if one declares, 'I do not know', their testimony is null, because it is a testimony which cannot be rebutted;⁶ whereas with respect to bedikoth it is [still] a testimony which can be rebutted.⁷ Now if you say that a man may err in so much, then the hakiroth of which hour also [leaves] testimony which cannot be rebutted, for they can assert, 'We did indeed err'? — We allow them [the benefit of] the whole of their [possible] error: according to R. Meir we allow them from the beginning of the first hour until the end of the fifth; and logically we should give them even more at the beginning, but that people do not err between day and night. While according to R. Judah we allow them from the beginning of the first hour until the end of the sixth; and logically we should give them more at the beginning,

(1) I.e., just because we do not examine the witnesses to find out exactly what they meant.

(2) Num. XXXV. 24, 25; i.e. , the accused must be given the benefit of doubt.

(3) The witnesses in a murder trial.

(4) Lit., 'searching questions'. Two types of questions were asked, called hakiroth and bedikoth (examinations); v. Sanh. 40a.

(5) As stated, hakiroth dealt with time and place; bedikoth dealt with accompanying circumstances of the crime, e.g., the weapon, the clothes worn, etc.

(6) The Hebr. word VNZV used always denotes rebutting by proving that the witnesses themselves were elsewhere at the time of the alleged crime, in which case the law of retaliation applies that the witnesses are subject to the punishment which they sought to fasten upon the accused; v. Deut. XIX, 18f. This is obviously impossible unless the witnesses state the exact time and place, whereas the possibility of rebuttal is essential for the validity of testimony.

(7) Even if the witnesses are not clear on the accompanying circumstances.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 12b

but that people do not err between day and night; and logically we should give them more at the end,¹ but that in the fifth hour the sun is in the east while in the seventh the sun is in the west.²

We learned: R. MEIR SAID: ONE MAY EAT [LEAVEN] THE WHOLE OF THE FIVE [HOURS] AND MUST BURN [IT] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH. R. JUDAH SAID: ONE MAY EAT THE WHOLE OF THE FOUR [HOURS]. KEEP [IT] IN SUSPENSE THE WHOLE OF THE FIFTH, AND MUST BURN [IT] AT THE BEGINNING OF THE SIXTH. Now according to Abaye who maintains that on R. Meir's view a man does not err at all, let us eat [leaven] for the whole of the six [hours]?³ And even on the version which asserts [that] a man may err slightly, let us eat until the end of the sixth hour?⁴ And according to Abaye on R. Judah's view, who maintains [that] a man may err in half an hour, let us eat [leaven] until half of the sixth hour; and even on the version in which you say. A man may err in an hour and a trifle, let us eat until the end of the fifth hour? — Said Abaye: Testimony is committed to careful men,⁵ [whereas] leaven is committed to all.⁶ Now according to Raba who maintains [that] on R. Meir's view a man may err in two hours less a trifle, let us not eat [leaven] from the beginning of the fifth [hour]? — In the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, while in the seventh the sun is in the west.⁷ If so, let us eat during the sixth [hour] too? — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: In the sixth the sun stands in the meridian.⁸ And according to Raba who maintains on R. Judah's view [that] a man may err in three hours less a trifle, let us not eat from the beginning of the fourth [hour]? — In the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, while in the seventh it is in the west, and all the more so in the fourth. If so, let us also eat in the fifth [hour]? — Abaye answered this on Raba's view: Testimony is committed to men of care, [whereas] leaven is committed to all.⁹ But Raba said: Now this is R. Judah's reason, but R. Judah follows his opinion. for he maintains, There is no removal of leaven save by burning; the Rabbis therefore gave him one hour in which to collect fuel.¹⁰ Rabina raised an objection to Raba: R. Judah said: When is this?¹¹ before¹² the time of removal;¹³ but at the time of removal its 'putting away' is with anything.¹⁴ Rather said Raba: It is a preventive measure on account of a cloudy day.¹⁵ If so, let us not eat even during the four hours? — Said R. Papa: The fourth [hour] is the general mealtime.¹⁶ Our Rabbis taught: The first hour [of the day] is the mealtime for gladiators;¹⁷ the second is the mealtime for robbers;¹⁸ the third is the mealtime for heirs;¹⁹ the fourth is the mealtime for labourers;²⁰ the fifth is the mealtime for scholars; the sixth is the general mealtime.²¹ But R. Papa said: The fourth [hour] is the general mealtime? — Rather reverse it: The fourth is the general mealtime; the fifth is for labourers; and the sixth is for scholars. After that it is like throwing a stone into a barrel.²² Abaye said: That was said only if nothing at all is eaten in the morning; but if something was eaten in the morning. we have nought against it.

R. Ashi said: As there is a controversy in respect of testimony. so is there a controversy in respect of leaven.²³ But it is obvious? That is precisely what we have said!²⁴ This is what he informs us: the answers which we gave are [correct] answers, and you need not say that it is dependent on Tannaim.²⁵

R. Simi b. Ashi said: They learned this²⁶ only in respect of hours;²⁷ but if one testified [that the crime was committed] before sunrise and the others testified, after sunrise, their testimony is void. That is obvious? — Rather [say] if one testified [that it was] during sunrise, their testimony is void. That too is obvious? You might say, Both testified to the same thing, while he who said

[that it was]

- (1) Lit., 'forward'.
- (2) According to R. Meir: if A testified that the crime was committed in the second hour, and B that it took place in the third, their testimony is valid (v. Supra 11b), unless they are rebutted over the whole period in which an error is possible. Thus A, if rebutted, can plead that he erred, and that the crime actually took place either in the first hour or in the third or fourth. He should also be able to plead that it took place within the hour before sunrise, since R. Meir allows for an error of nearly two hours, but that he would never mistake night for day. Similarly B, if rebutted, can plead that he erred, and that the crime took place at any time between the first and the fifth hour. Hence they are liable to be rebutted over the whole of this time; i.e., C and D testify that they were elsewhere from the first until the fifth hour, and such rebuttal is designated a rebuttal in respect of hours, and therefore the evidence, if unrefuted, is valid. By the same reasoning, according to R. Judah, who allows for a margin of nearly three hours' error, the period is from the first until the sixth hour, the seventh being disregarded, as explained in the Gemara. — This wide latitude is granted only in so far that the witnesses will not be subject to retaliation (v. p. 53, n. 4) otherwise, but the evidence none the less may be void. E.g., if it is necessary to assume that B erred in two hours and that he really meant the fifth hour, A's testimony cannot be reconciled with it on any reasoning, and as we are left with one witness only the accused cannot be condemned.
- (3) I.e., right until midday, when it is forbidden by Scriptural law.
- (4) I.e., until just before midday.
- (5) A man does not come to testify without being very careful on the question of time, as he knows that he will be cross-examined.
- (6) Every man uses his own judgment, and therefore a far wider margin of error is possible.
- (7) And the interdict of leaven commences in the seventh only; hence there is no possibility of error.
- (8) Lit., 'between the corners', — equidistant from the east and the west, and so an error is possible.
- (9) Hence in the matter of leaven people may err between the fifth and the seventh hours, in spite of the difference in the sun's position. Nevertheless, they would not err from the fourth to the seventh.
- (10) Hence the fifth hour is kept in suspense, for if one were permitted to eat then he might forget about collecting fuel.
- (11) That burning is the only form of removal.
- (12) Lit., 'not at'.
- (13) I.e., during the sixth hour, before there is the Scriptural injunction to put away leaven.
- (14) It can be destroyed in any fashion. — Then why keep it in suspense? if he forgets to collect fuel he can destroy it in another way.
- (15) When the position of the sun cannot be clearly ascertained.
- (16) Hence everybody knows it.
- (17) Whose diet requires special attention (Jast.); or perhaps, circus attendants.
- (18) Rashi: Both are rapacious, hence they eat so early; but robbers, being awake all night, sleep during the first hour of the day.
- (19) Not having to earn their living, they have their main meal earlier than others.
- (20) In the field.
- (21) Lit., 'the mealtime of all (other) men'.
- (22) No benefit is derived.
- (23) Just as R. Meir and R. Judah differ in the possible errors of time in respect to evidence, so in respect of the prohibition of leaven.
- (24) The whole of our discussion assumes that the two subjects are completely analogous.

(25) For though the views of R. Meir and R. Judah are apparently self-contradictory, they have been reconciled. R. Ashi informs us that it is unnecessary to assume that they actually represent irreconcilable opinions. there being a controversy of Tannaim as to the views of R. Meir and R. Judah.

(26) That a margin of error, perhaps up to nearly three hours, is allowed in testimony.

(27) I.e., when the witnesses state the hour of the day.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 13a

during sunrise was standing in the glow [before sunrise] and what he saw was merely the glare; hence he informs us [that it is not so]. R. Nahman said in Rab's name: The halachah is as R. Judah.¹ Said Raba to R. Nahman, Yet let the Master say [that] the halachah is as R. Meir, since a Tanna taught anonymously in agreement with him. For we learned: As long as it is permitted to eat [leaven] he may feed [animals with it]?² That is not anonymous. because there is the difficulty of 'it is permitted'.³ Then let the Master say [that] the halachah is as R. Gamaliel, since he makes a compromise?⁴ — R. Gamaliel does not make a compromise but states an independent view.⁵ Alternatively. Rab rules as this Tanna. For it was taught: If the fourteenth falls on the Sabbath, everything [sc. leaven] must be removed before the Sabbath, and terumoth,⁶ whether unclean, or in suspense.⁷ or clean, are burnt, and of the clean [terumah] food for two meals is left over, so as to eat until four hours:⁸ this is the ruling of R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartotha⁹ which he stated in R. Joshua's name. Said they to him: Clean [terumoth] should not be burnt, in case eaters may be found for them?¹⁰ — He replied: They have already sought [eaters] but not found [them].¹¹ They may have spent the night without the [city] wall? said they to him¹² — Then on your reasoning, he retorted, even those in suspense should not be burnt, lest Elijah come and declare them clean?¹³ — Said they to him, it has long been assured to Israel that Elijah will come neither on the eve of the Sabbath nor on the eve of Festivals, on account of the trouble.¹⁴ It was said:¹⁵ They did not stir thence until they decided the halachah in accordance with R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartotha which he stated in R. Joshua's name. Does that not mean even in respect of eating?¹⁶ Said R. Papa in Raba's name: No, [only] in respect of removing.¹⁷

Now Rabbi too holds this [view] of R. Nahman. For Rabin son of R. Adda related: It once happened that a certain man deposited a saddle-bag full of leaven with Johanan of Hukok,¹⁸ and mice made holes in it, and the leaven was bursting out. He then went before Rabbi.¹⁹ The first hour he said to him, 'Wait'; the second, he said to him, 'Wait'; the third he said to him, 'Wait';²⁰ the fourth he said to him, 'Wait'; at the fifth he said to him, 'Go out and sell it in the market'. — Does that not mean to Gentiles, in accordance with R. Judah?²¹ — Said R. Joseph: No, to an Israelite, in accordance with R. Meir.²² Said Abaye to him: If to an Israelite, let him take it for himself? — [He could not do this] because of suspicion.²³ For it was taught: When the charity overseers have no poor to whom to distribute [their funds], they must change the copper coins with others, not themselves.²⁴ The overseers of the soup kitchen,²⁵ when they have no poor to whom to make a distribution, must sell to others, not to themselves, because it is said, and ye shall be guiltless towards the Lord, and towards Israel.²⁶ R. Adda b. Mattenah said to R. Joseph:²⁷ You explicitly told us [that he said]. 'Go out and sell it to Gentiles,' in accordance with R. Judah.

R. Joseph said: With whom does this ruling of Rabbi agree?²⁸ With R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For we learned: If a man deposits produce with his neighbour. even if it is suffering loss,²⁹ he must not touch it. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: He must sell it by order of the court, on account of returning lost property.³⁰ Said Abaye to him, Yet was it not stated thereon, Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in R. Johanan's name: They learned this only

(1) In our Mishnah.

(2) Conversely, when he may not eat leaven he may not feed his cattle with it. But in R. Judah's view he may not eat it during the fifth hour, and yet he may give it to his cattle. Hence this must agree with R. Meir. It is a general principle that an anonymous Mishnah states the halachah.

(3) V. infra 21a. In order to answer that difficulty the Mishnah is explained as being R. Gamaliel's view.

(4) V. Mishnah on 11b. It is a general rule that the view representing a compromise is the halachah.

(5) Lit., 'a reason of his own'. R. Gamaliel's view would be a compromise if R. Meir and R. Judah mentioned terumoth and hullin, R. Meir explicitly stating that even hullin may be eaten the whole of the five hours, and R. Judah stating that even terumah may only be eaten up to four hours. This would show that they recognize that in logic a distinction might be drawn between hullin and terumah. R. Gamaliel, in thus making the distinction, would be effecting a compromise. But they do not rule thus: hence his distinction is an entirely independent one.

(6) Plur. of terumah.

(7) I.e., when it is in doubt whether they are clean or unclean.

(8) I.e., one meal Friday evening and one Saturday morning.

(9) In Upper Galilee.

(10) E.g., guests who are priests may arrive.

(11) I.e., it is impossible to have unexpected guests, for these cannot arrive from without the town on the Sabbath, while one knows who is in town.

(12) And thus arrive unexpectedly.

(13) One of the functions ascribed to Elijah was the clearing up of all doubts.

(14) His coming then would be inopportune.

(15) Lit. — 'they said'.

(16) And he states that leaven may be eaten until four hours, even if it is terumah. This is the basis of Rab's ruling, the question being a rhetorical one.

(17) Viz., that even the clean terumoth must not be kept for Sabbath morning but must be burnt before the Sabbath. But it is possible that terumah may be eaten until the fifth hour.

(18) In Northern Palestine.

(19) It was Passover eve.

(20) The owner may come.

(21) Who holds that it is forbidden to Jews then.

(22) Who holds that a Jew may eat it during the fifth hour.

(23) E.g., that he had undervalued it.

(24) Copper coins were unsuitable for keeping a long time, being liable to tarnish and mould. Therefore they would be exchanged for silver ones.

(25) חֲמֵצָה, ; actual food was collected for this purpose, not money, and it was distributed to those in immediate need of a meal. V. B.B. 8b.

(26) Num. XXXII, 22. I.e., one must avoid even the appearance of suspicion.

(27) R. Joseph had forgotten his learning owing to an illness, and his disciples would often have to remind him of his teachings. v. Ned. 41a.

(28) Lit., 'as whom does it go'?

(29) Through mildew or mice.

(30) I.e., it is like returning lost property to its owner.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 13b

when there is the normal rate of decrease; but when [the loss] exceeds the normal rate of decrease, [all agree that] he must sell it by a court order. How much more so here that it is entirely lost.¹

R. JUDAH SAID FURTHER: TWO [UNFIT] LOAVES, etc. A Tanna recited before Rab Judah: on the top [gab] of the [Temple] iztaba.² Said he to him: Does he then need to hide them?³ Learn: on the roof of the [temple] iztaba [portico]. Rehaba said in R. Judah's name:⁴ The Temple Mount consisted of a double colonnade.⁵ It was taught likewise: The Temple Mount consisted of a double colonnade. R. Judah said: It was called istewawnith,⁶ [being] a colonnade within a colonnade.

UNFIT etc., why UNFIT? — Said R. Hanin: Since they were many they became unfit through being kept overnight. For it was taught: A thanksoffering may not be brought during the Feast of Unleavened Bread on account of the leaven therein.⁷ But that is obvious? — Said R. Adda b. Ahabah: We treat here of the fourteenth. and he [the Tanna] holds: Sacred food may not be brought to unfitness.⁸ Hence everybody brought it on the thirteenth, and since they were numerous they became unfit through being kept overnight. In R. Jannai's name it was said: They were fit, yet why are they called unfit? Because the sacrifice had not been slaughtered for them.⁹ Then let us slaughter [it]? — The sacrifice was lost. Then let us bring another sacrifice and slaughter [it]? — It is a case where he [the owner] had declared: 'This [animal] is a thanksoffering and these are its loaves,' this being in accordance with Rabbah. For Rabbah said: If the loaves are lost, other loaves may be brought. If the thanksoffering is lost, another thanksoffering may not be brought — What is the reason? The loaves are subsidiary¹⁰ to the thanksoffering, but the thanksoffering is not subsidiary to the loaves. Then let us redeem and free them as hullin?¹¹ — But in truth it is a case where the sacrifice was slaughtered for them, but the blood was poured out.¹² And with whom [does this agree]? With Rabbi, who said: The two things which permit, promote [to sanctity] without each other.¹³ For it was taught: The lambs of Pentecost¹⁴ sanctify the loaves only by shechitah.¹⁵ How so? If he kills them for their own purpose¹⁶ and sprinkles their blood for their own purpose, he [thereby] sanctifies the loaves. If he kills them for a purpose that is not theirs and sprinkles their blood for a purpose that is not theirs, he does not sanctify [thereby] the loaves — If he kills them for their own purpose but sprinkles their blood for a purpose that is not theirs, the bread is sanctified and not sanctified;¹⁷ this is Rabbi's ruling. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said: The bread always remains unsanctified until he kills [the lambs] for their own purpose and sprinkles their blood for their own purpose.¹⁸ — [No,] you may even say [that it agrees with] R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon; but the case we discuss here is where the blood was caught in a goblet and then spilled, while R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon holds as his father, who maintained: That which stands to be sprinkled is as though it were sprinkled.¹⁹ A Tanna taught: In R. Eleazar's name it was said: They [the loaves] were fit. As long as they [both] lay [there], all the people ate [leaven]; when one was removed, they kept [the leaven] in suspense, neither eating nor burning [it]; when both were removed, all commenced burning [their leaven].

It was taught, Abba Saul said:

- (1) If unsold before it becomes interdicted.
 - (2) The word may denote a bench or a portico. The reading 'on the top' (gab) implies the former rendering. Hence the question that follows, v. Rashi.
 - (3) Surely they are intended to be exposed for public gaze.
 - (4) V. Bez., Sonc. ed. p. 54, n. 9.
 - (5) [GR. . For a description of the Temple porticoes v. Josephus, Wars v, 5.3 v. also Derenbonrg, Essai p. 51.
 - (6) Lit., 'a double colonnade'. [kupf uhyx == GR.  of Josephus, Wars V. 5.2. v. Hollis, F. J. Herod's Temple p. 15.]
 - (7) Forty loaves accompanied the offering, ten of which were leaven.
 - (8) A thankoffering may be eaten on the day that it is brought and the following night. But if it is brought on the fourteenth of Nisan the loaves of leaven may be eaten only until noon, and this Tanna holds that a sacrifice may not be brought at a time when the normal period for its consumption is lessened, so that it is likely to become unfit.
 - (9) I.e., we need not assume that the reference is to loaves which were in fact unfit through having been kept overnight, but even if the sacrifice had not been slaughtered they are also so designated, because the loaves may not be eaten until the thankoffering is killed on their behalf.
 - (10) Lit. , 'on account of'.
 - (11) For the loaves in that case can be redeemed.
 - (12) The loaves cannot be redeemed then.
 - (13) The slaughtering and the sprinkling of the blood are both required before the loaves may be eaten; on the other hand, one alone suffices to promote them to that degree of sanctity ('intrinsic sanctity, as opposed to 'monetary' sanctity); from which they cannot be redeemed.
 - (14) Lit., 'the solemn assembly' — the term without further qualification always refers to Pentecost.
 - (15) V. Glos. It is stated in Lev. XXIII, 19f: And ye shall offer . . . two he-lambs . . . and the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first fruits (i.e., the 'two wave loaves' mentioned in v. 17, q.v.) for a wave offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest. In Men. 46a it is shown that these loaves are sanctified only by the ritual slaughter of the sacrifice.
 - (16) Lit., 'for their name — I.e., as the Pentecost sacrifices.
 - (17) The loaves are sanctified in that they become unfit if taken without the sacred precincts and that they cannot be redeemed, for they are now intrinsically holy. Yet they are unsanctified in the sense that they may not be eaten.
 - (18) Thus the statement that our Mishnah refers to a case where the offering had been slaughtered but its blood was not sprinkled and thereby the loaves were sanctified, would appear to agree with Rabbi only.
 - (19) In the sense that the animal is unfit as a sacred offering which has become unfit. Yet it may not be eaten unless the blood is sprinkled.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 14a

Two cows used to plough on the Mount of Anointing:¹ as long as both were ploughing. all the people ate; when one was removed, they kept [the leaven] in suspense, neither eating nor burning [it]; when both were removed, all the people began burning [their leaven]. MISHNAH. R. HANINA. THE SEGAN² OF THE PRIESTS, SAID: DURING THE DAYS OF THE PRIESTS THEY NEVER REFRAINED FROM BURNING [SACRIFICIAL] FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED BY A DERIVATIVE UNCLEANNESS WITH FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED BY A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS, THOUGH UNCLEANNESS IS ADDED TO

ITS UNCLEANNESS.³ R. AKIBA ADDED AND SAID: DURING [ALL] THE DAYS OF THE PRIESTS THEY DID NOT REFRAIN FROM LIGHTING OIL⁴ WHICH HAD BEEN RENDERED UNFIT⁵ BY A TEBUL YOM⁶ IN A LAMP WHICH HAD BEEN MADE UNCLEAR BY THAT WHICH [OR, ONE WHO] IS UNCLEAR THROUGH A CORPSE, THOUGH UNCLEANNESS IS ADDED TO THEIR UNCLEANNESS.⁷ SAID R. MEIR: FROM THEIR WORDS WE LEARN THAT WE MAY BURN CLEAN TERUMAH TOGETHER WITH UNCLEAR TERUMAH ON PASSOVER.⁸ R. JOSE SAID: THAT IS NOT AN ANALOGY.⁹ AND R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA ADMIT THAT EACH IS BURNT SEPARATELY; WHERE DO THEY DIFFER? IN RESPECT OF DOUBTFUL [TERUMAH]¹⁰ AND UNCLEAR [TERUMAH]. R. ELIEZER RULING, EACH MUST BE BURNT SEPARATELY, WHILE R. JOSHUA RULES, BOTH TOGETHER.

GEMARA. Consider: Flesh which was defiled by a derivative uncleanness, what is it? A second degree. When it is burnt together with flesh which was defiled by a principal defilement, what is it? A second degree:¹¹ [thus] it was a second degree [before] and [is] a second degree [now], then what adding of uncleanness to its uncleanness is there?—Said Rab Judah: We treat here of the derivative of a derivative, so that it¹² is a third degree, and he holds that a third may be raised to a second. But food cannot defile food, for it was taught: You might think that food should defile food, therefore it is stated, But if water be put upon the seed, and aught of their carcass fall thereon, it is unclean:¹³ it is unclean, but it does not render that which is similar thereto unclean?¹⁴ Now it is well according to Abaye who maintained: They learned this only of hullin, but in the case of terumah and sacred food they can render what is similar thereto [unclean]. And also according to R. Adda b. Ahabah in Raba's name, who maintained: They learned this only of hullin and terumah, but in the case of sacred food it does not render its like [unclean], it is correct. But according to Rabina in Raba's name, who said: The Writ states an unqualified law,¹⁵ there is no difference whether it is hullin, terumah, or sacred food, it cannot render its like [unclean], what is there to be said? — We treat here of a case where there is liquid together with the flesh, so that it is defiled on account of the liquid.¹⁶ If so, [instead of] this [phrase] ‘TOGETHER WITH FLESH WHICH HAD BEEN DEFILED WITH A PRINCIPAL UNCLEANNESS, he should state, TOGETHER WITH FLESH and liquid’ [etc.]? Rather, [reply] granted that food cannot defile food by Scriptural law, by Rabbinical law it can nevertheless defile [it].¹⁷

R. AKIBA ADDED AND SAID: DURING [ALL] THE DAYS OF THE PRIESTS THEY DID NOT REFRAIN FROM LIGHTING, etc. Consider: When oil is rendered unfit through [contact with] a tebul yom, what is it? A third degree [of defilement]; and when it is lit in a lamp which was defiled by that which [or, one who] was defiled through a corpse, what does it become? A second degree.¹⁸ [Thus] what he does inform us is that a third degree may be raised to a second; then it is the identical [teaching]?¹⁹ Said Rab Judah: We treat here of a metal lamp, for the Divine Law said,

(1) I.e., the Mount of Olives.

(2) Chief of the priests and deputy High-Priest, v. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 97. n. 1.

(3) The following degrees of defilement are distinguished: (i) The super principal (lit., ‘father of fathers’) of defilement, which is that borne by a corpse; (ii) principal (lit., ‘the father of’) defilement, which is that of a human being or a utensil ‘defiled by a corpse; (iii) derivative (lit., ‘offspring of’) defilement, borne by a human being, utensil or food which is contaminated by a principal defilement — this is also known as the first degree or ‘beginning’ of defilement; (iv) the second degree of defilement, which is that of food contaminated by a principal defilement. In hullin there is nothing further, and if hullin comes into contact with something unclean in the second degree it remains clean. Terumah, however, is liable to (v) a third degree, but no further. Sacred food, i.e., the flesh of sacrifices, is liable to (vi) a fourth degree of defilement. Third degree terumah and fourth degree sacred flesh are called ‘unfit’ but not unclean, because they cannot communicate uncleanness to their own kind, i.e., to terumah and sacred flesh respectively.

(4) of terumah.

(5) V. n. 2.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) In all these cases something of a lower degree of uncleanness comes into contact with something else of a higher degree of uncleanness when they are burnt together, and their own uncleanness is increased, as explained in the Gemara.

(8) I.e., on the eve of Passover, when leaven must be burnt. R. Meir reasons that since a higher degree of uncleanness may be imposed upon terumah and sacred flesh when they must be burnt in any case, the same holds good for leaven, even if one is not unclean at all.

(9) You cannot deduce one from the other.

(10) Lit., ‘in suspense’.

(11) For the latter is a first degree and its contact renders this flesh a second degree.

(12) The flesh which is defiled thereby.

(13) Lev. XI, 38.

(14) Then what increase of uncleanness can there be in the Mishnah?

(15) Lit., ‘a full verse’.

(16) When the flesh was defiled there was water upon it, which is still there when it is burnt with the flesh defiled in a lower degree. The uncleanness of the latter is raised through contact with the water.

(17) Thus the Mishnah likewise treats of a Rabbinically enhanced defilement.

(18) The lamp being unclean in the first degree.

(19) of R. Hanina.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 14b

[And whosoever . . . toucheth] one that is slain by the sword,¹ [which intimates], the sword is as the slain;² hence it is a principal defilement, and he [R. Akiba] thus holds that a third may be raised to a first.³ Yet what compels Rab Judah to relate it to a metal lamp? Let him relate it to an earthen lamp, and [as to the question], what does he [R. Akiba] add? [We can reply]. For whereas there [in the first clause] it was unclean and is [now] unclean, here it was unfit and is [now] unclean?⁴ — Said Raba, Our Mishnah presents a difficulty to him: Why does it particularly state, A LAMP WHICH HAD BEEN MADE UNCLEAR BY THAT WHICH WAS UNCLEAR THROUGH A CORPSE? Let it state, which had been defiled by a sherez!⁵ Now what thing is there whose uncleanness is differentiated between the uncleanness of a corpse and [that of] a sherez? Say, that is metal.⁶

Raba said: This proves that R. Akiba holds, The uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling others is Scriptural; for if you should think that it is Rabbinical [only], then consider: how does this lamp affect the oil? If by rendering that itself unfit, surely it is already unfit?⁷ Whence [does this follow]: perhaps [it affected it by enabling it] to defile others by Rabbinical law?⁸ — If by Rabbinical law [only], why particularly [state when it was defiled] by a principal uncleanness? Even if [it was defiled] by a first or second degree it is still a first.⁹ For we learned: Whatever renders terumah unfit defiles liquids, making them a first, except a tebul yom?¹⁰ Hence this must prove that it is Scriptural.

SAID R. MEIR: FROM THEIR WORDS WE LEARN etc. From whose words? Shall we say, from the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests, — are they alike? There it is unclean and unclean, whereas here it is clean and unclean. Again, if from the words of R. Akiba, — are they then alike? There it is unfit and unclean, whereas here it is clean and unclean? Must we [then] say¹¹ that R. Meir holds [that] our Mishnah treats of a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness by Rabbinical law,¹² which by Scriptural law is completely clean;

(1) Num. XIX, 16.

(2) In its degree of defilement. For otherwise, why specify how the person was slain? This is then understood as a general law that any metal vessel or utensil which becomes defiled through a corpse, whether at first hand or not, bears the same degree of defilement as that which contaminates it.

(3) For the oil, by contact with the lamp, is raised from a third to a first.

(4) V. p. 62, n. 2. The flesh, even in a third degree, being sacred, was definitely unclean, since there can be a fourth degree. But the oil of terumah was only unfit, without power to contaminate, whereas now by being raised to a second degree it becomes unclean. Thus this statement goes beyond R. Hanina's. — The reference must be to oil of terumah. For though there was also sacred oil, viz. 'the oil used in meal-offerings, and there a third degree is unclean in that it defiles by contact, nevertheless when unclean it cannot be used for lighting but must be burnt, like all other sacrifices which had been, invalidated for any reason, so that by burning it together with the derivative of uncleanness and rendering it thereby second, he does not increase the power of defilement.

(5) Lit., 'a creeping thing'. This too is a principal defilement, just like a man defiled by a corpse. Rashi omits 'by a sherez', the question being, what need is there for the Mishnah to define at all the source of principal defilement from which the lamp became contaminated.

(6) The rule that a metal vessel bears the same degree of defilement as that which contaminated it applies only to corpse defilement.

(7) And what does it matter whether it is of the third degree or of the first? Hence we must assume that it can now contaminate even by Scriptural law, which it could not do before.

(8) Which power it previously lacked.

(9) Lit. 'beginning' — another designation for a first degree.

(10) 'What renders terumah unfit' is anything which is unclean in the second degree. By Rabbinical law this in turn defiles liquids and actually inflicts a higher degree of uncleanness than that borne by itself, rendering them unclean in the first degree. Thus if R. Akiba were treating of Rabbinically enhanced contamination, it would be unnecessary to speak of the lamp, which bears a principal degree of uncleanness, but of anything which bears even a second degree of uncleanness.

(11) Since R. Meir derives his law from the preceding statements.

(12) E.g. if a utensil was defiled by a liquid and in its turn defiled flesh. The second defilement is only Rabbinical, for by Scriptural law liquid cannot defile a utensil.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 15a

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 15a

and what does FROM THEIR WORDS mean? From the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests?¹ — Said Resh Lakish in Bar Kappara's name: our Mishnah treats of a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness according to Scripture;² and what does FROM THEIR WORDS mean? From the words of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.³ Which [teaching of] R. Joshua? Shall we say, the following [teaching of] R. Joshua? For we learned: In the case of a cask of terumah wherein a doubt of uncleanness is born,⁴ — R. Eliezer said: If it is lying in an exposed place it must be laid in a hidden place, and if it was uncovered, it must be covered.⁵ R. Joshua said: If it is lying in a hidden place, one may lay it in an exposed place, and if it is covered it may be uncovered!⁶ How compare: there it is mere indirect action, whereas here it is [defiling] with [one's own] hands? — Rather it is this [ruling of] R. Joshua. For we learned: If a cask of [wine of clean] terumah in the upper part is broken,⁷ while [in] the lower part there is unclean hullin. R. Eliezer and R. Joshua agree that if a rebi'ith⁸ thereof can be saved in purity, one must save it. But if not, R. Eliezer ruled: Let it descend and be defiled, yet let him not defile it with [his own] hands: R. Joshua said: He may even defile it with his own hands.⁹ If so, [instead of] this [phrase] 'FROM THEIR WORDS, he should state, 'FROM his WORDS'? — This is what he means: From the controversy of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua we learn [etc.] — This may be proved too,¹⁰ because he states [further]: R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA AGREE [etc.].¹¹ This proves it. And thus said R. Nahman in Rabbah b. Abbuha's name [too]: our Mishnah refers to a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness according to Scripture, and what does FROM THEIR WORDS mean? From the words of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

Raba raised an objection to R. Nahman: R. Jose said [to R. Meir]: The conclusion¹² is not similar to the premise. For when our Masters testified, about what did they testify? If about flesh which was defiled through a derivative uncleanness, that we burn it together with flesh which was defiled through a principal uncleanness, [then] this is unclean and that is unclean!¹³ If about oil which was rendered unfit by a tebul yom,¹⁴ that it is lit in a lamp which was defiled by one unclean through the dead, one is unfit and the other is unclean. So we too admit in the case of terumah which was defiled through a derivative uncleanness, that we may burn it together with terumah which was defiled by a principal uncleanness. But how can we burn that which is in suspense together with that which is unclean? Perhaps Elijah will come and declare it [the former] clean!¹⁵

(1) And the analogy is thus: just as Rabbinically unclean flesh may be burnt together with Scripturally unclean flesh, though the former is Scripturally clean, so may clean terumah be burnt together with unclean terumah during the sixth hour, though the former is then only Rabbinically forbidden, since by Scriptural law the interdict of leaven does not commence until the seventh hour, while the latter is already Scripturally forbidden for use on account of its defilement.

(2) The other hypothesis being a forced one.

(3) Thus R. Meir does not refer to the Mishnah at all but to the rulings of some other Sages. Strictly speaking therefore this Mishnah is irrelevant in its present position, but it is included because the subject of burning unclean together with clean is dealt with there.

(4) E.g., if there is a doubt whether an unclean person touched it.

(5) In spite of the doubt one must still protect it from certain defilement.

(6) I.e., since a doubt has arisen you are no longer bound to protect it and may even place it where the risk of contamination is greater than at present. Thus R. Joshua holds that since it is only fit for lighting one may cause it to become unclean, and this furnishes the basis for R. Meir's analogy.

(7) And the contents thereof are running down into the lower part of the vat.

(8) A quarter of a log.

(9) If the clean terumah runs into the hullin, it becomes unclean too, and then the mixture is forbidden to priest and lay Israelite alike, unless there is one hundred times as much hullin as terumah. In the present case only unclean vessels are ready to hand to catch the terumah, which would save the hullin below. Both agree that if there is time to go, procure clean vessels and save at least a rebi'ith of the terumah, this must be done, though in the meantime some terumah will descend and render all the hullin forbidden. But where there is no time to save even a rebi'ith, we have a controversy. R. Eliezer holds that even so it must be permitted to descend, though it will thereby be defiled in any case, rather than that we should deliberately defile it by catching it in unclean vessels. But R. Joshua maintains that since it will all be defiled in any case, we may defile it ourselves, in order to save the hullin below. R. Meir's ruling in the Mishnah is based on R. Joshua's.

(10) That R. Meir refers to R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(11) This would be irrelevant if he had not already referred to them.

(12) R. Meir's.

(13) Whereas R. Meir deals with unclean and clean.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) How then may we defile them with our hands by burning them together?

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 15b

As to piggul,¹ nothar,² and unclean [sacrificial flesh]. — Beth Shammai maintain: They must not be burnt together;³ while Beth Hillel rule: They may be burnt together.⁴ Now if you think that R. Meir argues from the words of R. Joshua, why does R. Jose answer him from [the view] of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests? — Said R. Nahman to him: R. Jose did not comprehend his [R. Meir's] reasoning, for he thought [that] R. Meir was arguing from R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests, thereupon he said to him, I state [this law by deduction] from R. Joshua — But he answered him, Even on R. Joshua's [view] this is no true analogy, for R. Eliezer and R. Joshua admit that one must burn this separately and that separately. Yet why is this not a [true] analogy. Surely it is a perfect analogy?⁵ — There it is different, because there is a loss of hullin.⁶ To this R. Jeremiah demurred: [Surely] in our Mishnah too there is the loss of wood?⁷ — Said a certain old man to him: They cared about a substantial loss, but they did not care about a slight loss.

R. Assi said in R. Johanan's name: The controversy is [only] in respect of the sixth [hour], but in the seventh all agree⁸ that we burn them [together].⁹ R. Zera said to R. Assi: Shall we [then] say that R. Johanan holds that our Mishnah treats of a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness by Rabbinical law, and that what 'FROM THEIR WORDS' means is from the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests?¹⁰ — Yes, he replied. It was stated likewise: R. Johanan said: our Mishnah refers to a principal uncleanness according to Scripture and a derivative uncleanness by Rabbinical law, and what does 'FROM THEIR WORDS' mean? From the words of R. Hanina, the Segan of the Priests; and the controversy is [only] in respect of the sixth [hour], but in the seventh all agree that we burn them together.

Shall we say that we can support him: As to piggul, nothar and unclean sacrificial [flesh] — Beth Shammai maintain: They must not be burnt together; while Beth Hillel rule: they may be burnt together?¹¹ — There it is different, because they possess uncleanness by Rabbinical law. For we learned: Piggul and nothar defile the hands.¹² Shall we say that this supports him: If a loaf goes mouldy and is unfit for human consumption, yet a dog can eat it, it can be defiled with the uncleanness of eatables, if the size of an egg,¹³ and it may be burnt together with an unclean [loaf] on Passover?¹⁴ — [No]: there it is different because it is merely dust.¹⁵ If so,¹⁶ what does [THEY] ADMIT mean?¹⁷ — R. Jose says thus to R. Meir: Even according to R. Joshua, who is lenient, he is lenient only in connection with doubtful and unclean [terumah],¹⁸ but not in the case of clean and unclean.¹⁹ If so,²⁰ why is it not a true analogy? Surely it is a perfect analogy?²¹ — Said R. Jeremiah: Here²² we treat of flesh which was defiled by a liquid which was defiled through a creeping thing, and R. Meir is consistent with his view, while R. Jose is consistent with his view: R. Meir [is consistent] with his view, for he maintains, The uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling others is [only] Rabbinical; while R. Jose [is consistent] with his view, for he maintains: The uncleanness of liquids in respect of defiling others is Scriptural.²³ For it was taught:

(1) Lit., 'abomination'. The flesh of a sacrifice which the priest offered with the express intention of consuming it after the permitted time.

(2) 'Left over', flesh not consumed within the permitted period.

(3) Because the first two, though forbidden, are not unclean Biblically, and when they are burnt together they become defiled.

(4) This last portion of the Baraitha dealing with piggul, etc., is irrelevant, and is quoted merely in order to complete the Baraitha.

(5) For the wine in the cask is quite clean, yet since it is fated to be lost we may deliberately defile it.

(6) If the terumah is not deliberately defiled and allowed to flow into the lower part of the vat, v. Supra p. 67. n. 2.

(7) For fuel, if two fires must be made instead of one.

(8) Even R. Jose.

(9) Since they are then Scripturally forbidden, even the clean terumah is certainly the same as unclean.

(10) Thus: just as that which is only Rabbinically unclean may be burnt together with what is Scripturally unclean, so in the sixth hour, the terumah of leaven is then only Rabbinically forbidden, and may be burnt with unclean terumah which is Scripturally forbidden. This seems to be R. Han's interpretation. Rashi and Tosaf. on the basis of another reading explain it rather differently.

(11) This teaching was cited by R. Jose in his argument with R. Meir, he apparently agreeing with the view of Beth Hillel (v. supra and notes). Thus since piggul and nothar are Scripturally forbidden, they may be burnt together with unclean flesh, though they are thereby contaminated; and the same applies to clean terumah of leaven in the seventh hour.

(12) I.e., Rabbinically. v. infra 120a.

(13) Since it was once fit for human food, it can be defiled as food unless it becomes unfit even for a dog.

(14) I.e., even if it is terumah. Now this must certainly be R. Jose's view, for R. Meir permits them to be burnt together even if the loaf is fresh. This proves that R. Jose agrees where it is quite unfit for human consumption, and the same applies to clean terumah of leaven in the seventh hour.

(15) When it is unfit because of its mouldiness, it is worse than unclean, having no intrinsic value whatsoever.

(16) That R. Meir learns from R. Hanina.

(17) Surely R. Jose's argument that R. Eliezer and R. Joshua admit etc., is irrelevant, seeing that R. Meir is not concerned with them at all?

(18) In the two cases cited supra 15a.

(19) With which R. Meir deals.

(20) Again, that R. Meir learns from R. Hanina.

(21) For in the sixth hour the leaven is Rabbinically forbidden, and on R. Johanan's view, there is no difference according to R. Jose between what is unclean and what is forbidden for any other reason (since he maintains that in the seventh hour R. Jose agrees that they may be burnt together because both are then Scripturally forbidden) and the same principle should apply equally to R. Meir.

(22) In our Mishnah.

(23) Hence according to R. Meir this flesh is clean by Scriptural law, yet it is burnt together with flesh Scripturally unclean, and by analogy the same applies to terumah. But in R. Jose's view this flesh too was of uncleanness, and therefore it cannot be compared to terumah in the sixth hour, when it is only Rabbinically forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 16a

Doubtful [cases of uncleanness with] fluids,¹ in respect of becoming unclean themselves, are unclean; in respect of defiling others,² they are clean; this is R. Meir's view, and thus did R. Eleazar too rule as his words. R. Judah said: It is unclean in respect of everything. R. Jose and R. Simeon maintain: In respect of eatables, they are unclean; in respect of utensils they are clean.³ But does R. Eleazar hold that liquid is at all susceptible to uncleanness,⁴ surely it was taught: R. Eleazar said: Liquids have no uncleanness at all [by Scriptural law]; the proof is that Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah⁵ testified⁶ that the stag-locust⁷ is clean [fit for food], and that the fluids⁸ in the [Temple] slaughter-house are clean.⁹ Now, there is no difficulty according to Samuel's interpretation that they are clean [only] in so far that they cannot defile other [objects], but that nevertheless they are unclean in themselves, then it is well; but according to Rab who maintained that they are literally clean,¹⁰ what can be said? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [He refers] to one [ruling only].¹¹ But he states: as his words', implying that they are many; moreover, he teaches, 'and thus [etc.]'?¹² That is [indeed] a difficulty.

The [above] text [states]: 'Rab said, They are literally clean: while Samuel maintained, They are clean [only] insofar that they cannot defile other [objects], but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves'. 'Rab said: They are literally clean'. He holds that the uncleanness of liquids is Rabbinical, and when did the Rabbis decree thus? [only] in respect of liquids in general, but there was no decree in respect of the liquids of the slaughter-house.¹³ 'While Samuel maintained, They are clean [only] in so far that they cannot defile other [objects], but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves'. He holds that the uncleanness of liquids themselves is Scriptural, [but] in respect of defiling others, Rabbinical; and when did the Rabbis decree? In respect of liquids in general, but in respect of the liquids of the slaughter-house there was no decree; again, when did the Rabbis refrain from decreeing [concerning the liquids of the slaughter-house]? In respect to the defiling of other [objects], but they possess uncleanness in themselves.¹⁴

R. Huna b. Hanina said to his son: When you come before R. Papa, point out a contradiction to him: Did then Samuel say, 'They are clean in so far that they cannot defile other [objects], but nevertheless they are unclean in themselves', — read here, and the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten?¹⁵ Said R. Shisha the son of R. Idi: Let it be compared to the fourth degree in the case of sacred [food].¹⁶ To this R. Ashi demurred: A fourth degree in the case of sacred [food] is not designated unclean, [whereas] this is designated unclean? — This is a difficulty. Come and hear: And all drink that may be drunk in any vessel shall be unclean?¹⁷ —

What does 'it shall be unclean' mean? It makes [solid foodstuffs] fit [to become unclean].¹⁸ [You say]. 'It makes [solids] fit'; this you know from the beginning of the verse: All food which may be eaten [that on which water cometh, shall be unclean]? — one refers to detached [liquid], and the other to attached [liquid],¹⁹ and both are necessary: for if we were informed of detached, that is because he [the owner of the eatables] assigned importance to them;²⁰ but as for attached, I would say that it is not so. And if we were informed of attached, [that may be] because it [the liquid] stands in its place it has value; but as for detached, I would say that it is not so. Thus they are necessary.

Come and hear: Nevertheless a fountain or a pit wherein is a gathering of water shall be clean?²¹ — What does 'shall be clean' mean? From his [or, its] uncleanness.²²

But can detached [liquid]²³ make [eatables] fit [to become unclean]; surely R. Jose b. R. Hanina said: The liquids of the [Temple] slaughter-house, not enough that they are clean, but they cannot [even] make [eatables] fit [to become unclean]?²⁴ Interpret this as referring to the blood,²⁵ for R. Hiyya b. Abin said in R. Johanan's name: How do we know that the blood of sacrifices does not make [anything] fit [to become defiled]? Because it is said, thou shalt pour it out [sc. the blood] upon the earth as water:²⁶ blood which is poured out as water²⁷ makes fit;

(1) E.g. . if an unclean person, whose touch defiles liquids, puts his hand into a vessel, and it is not known whether he actually touched the liquid there or not.

(2) E.g., if unclean liquid fell near food and it is unknown whether it actually touched it or not.

(3) The general principle is this: when a doubt arises in a Scriptural law, we are stringent; in a Rabbinical law, we are lenient. Now liquid can become defiled by Scriptural law (Lev. XI, 34), hence in doubt it is unclean. But there is a controversy as to whether it can defile other objects by Scriptural law. R. Meir holds that it cannot defile either food or utensils; R. Judah that it defiles both; while R. Jose and R. Simeon hold that it defiles food but not utensils.

(4) Even in respect of itself.

(5) V. Cambridge Bible I Kings XI, 26.

(6) On the historic occasion when as a result of a dispute between R. Gamaliel and R. Joshua the former was deposed from the Patriarchate and R. Eliezer b. 'Azariah appointed in his stead. An examination was then made of scholars' traditions, and they were declared valid or otherwise; v. 'Ed., Sonc. ed., Introduction, xi.

(7) Heb. ayil, of doubtful meaning.

(8) Sc. blood and water.

(9) Even by Rabbinical law. This postulates that the general uncleanness of liquids is Rabbinical only, and it was therefore not imposed in the Temple, so as not to defile the flesh of sacrifices. — The language of this Mishnah is Aramaic whereas all other laws in the Mishnah are couched in Hebrew. Weiss, Dor, I, 105 sees in this a proof of its extreme antiquity.

(10) Even in respect of themselves.

(11) R. Eleazar agrees with R. Meir that it is clean in respect of other objects, but not that it is unclean in respect of itself.

(12) Both imply that he fully agrees with R. Meir

(13) V. n. 5.

(14) I.e., the Rabbis could not free them from the uncleanness which they bear by Scriptural law.

(15) Lev. VII, 19. Hence if the liquid is unclean, the sacrificial flesh which touches it may not be eaten.

(16) I.e. , sacrifices. V. p. 62, n. 2. Thus there too it is unfit itself through defilement, yet cannot defile other flesh of sacrifices.

(17) Lev., XI, 34. This shows that liquids contract defilement.

(18) For solids cannot be defiled unless moisture has previously been upon them. The words, 'it shall be unclean' thus refer to 'of all the food etc. 'with which the verse begins.

(19) If rain falls upon produce it renders it susceptible to defilement only if the owner of the produce desired it to fall upon something. E.g., if he put out a basin so that the rain should wash it, and subsequently produce fell into the water, it is henceforth susceptible. We are informed here that whether the water is detached from the soil, i.e., whether the rain falls into something detached from the soil, e.g., a bath (as denoted by the words 'in any vessel'), or into something attached, i.e., forming part of the soil, e.g., a pit, and then eatables receive moisture from that rain, they are now ready to be defiled. In the latter case the produce is rendered susceptible only if it comes into contact with the water with the owner's desire; in the former, even against the owner's desire. V. Hul. 16a and Rashi a.l. s.v. rafv ihbgk.

(20) By the mere fact that he desired that the water should fall there or by pouring it into the vessel.

(21) Lev. XI, 36. This shows that only attached water is clean, but not detached.

(22) The verse refers to one who is unclean, and states that if he takes a ritual bath (tebillah) in the water of a fountain or a pit he shall be clean, but not in the water of a bath (technically called 'drawn water'). But it does not refer to the cleanness of the water itself.

(23) Rashi: this difficulty refers to water, which can be attached too. But all other liquids are essentially detached.

(24) This proves that the power of detached liquids in this respect is only Rabbinical; for if it were Scriptural, the Rabbis have no power to make an exception in this case.

(25) But not the water.

(26) Deut. XII, 24.

(27) I.e. , the blood of non-sacrifices

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 16b

blood which is not poured out as water¹ does not make fit. To this R. Samuel b. Ammi demurred: Behold the last-drained blood,² which is poured out like water,³ yet it does not make fit? — Said R. Zera to him, Leave the last-drained blood alone, which does not make fit even in the case of hullin. R. Samuel b. Ammi received it [the reason] from him, because the Divine Law saith, Only be sure that thou eat not the blood; for the blood is the life:⁴ blood wherewith life goes out is called blood; blood with which life does not go out is not called blood.⁵

Come and hear: If blood became unclean and he [the priest] sprinkled it unwittingly, it [the sacrifice] is accepted; if deliberately, it is not accepted?⁶ — It was Rabbinically [unclean], this not being in accordance with R. Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah.⁷

Come and hear: For what does the headplate propitiate?⁸ For the blood, flesh, and the fat which were defiled, whether in ignorance or deliberately, accidentally or intentionally,⁹ whether in the case of an individual or of the community.¹⁰ [It was defiled] by Rabbinical law [only], this not being in accordance with Jose b. Jo'ezer of Zeredah.¹¹

Come and hear: And Aaron shall bear the iniquity of the holy thing:¹² now what iniquity does he bear? If the iniquity of piggul,¹³ surely it is already said, it shall not be accepted?¹⁴ If the iniquity of nothar, after the first violent rush, The life and vitality pass out with the first blood, not with the last. surely it is already said, neither shall it be imputed [unto him that offereth it]?¹⁵ Hence he bears nought but the iniquity of defilement, which is inoperative¹⁶ in opposition to its general rule, in the case of a community.¹⁷ Does that not mean the defilement of the blood? — Said R. Papa: No: the defilement of the handfuls.¹⁸

Come and hear: If one bear unclean [kodesh] flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be defiled? And the priests answered and said, No.¹⁹

(1) I.e., the blood of sacrifices, which is sprinkled on the altar.

(2) I.e., the blood which flows out slowly

(3) It is not fit for sprinkling.

(4) Deut. XII, 23.

(5) And consequently not in category of liquids (v. Rashi).

(6) Lit. 'make acceptable'. The language is the Biblical, cf. Lev. I, 4: and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him i.e., the sacrifice is efficacious for its purpose. Now by Biblical law it is accepted whether the sprinkling was done deliberately or in ignorance of its uncleanness, and the flesh may be eaten by the priests, but the Rabbis penalized the priests by not permitting the flesh to be eaten in the former case, though another sacrifice is not required (v. Git. 54a). Incidentally we see that blood can become unclean, and thus liquids in general, which contradicts Rab.

(7) Who testified that the Rabbinical decree of uncleanness was not applied to the liquids of the Temple slaughter-house. This Tanna obviously holds that it was.

(8) The reference is to Ex. XXVIII, 38, q.v. 'That they may be accepted before the Lord is understood to mean that the head plate makes sacrifices acceptable and procures atonement in spite of certain irregularities.

(9) This appears to contradict the preceding statement, but v. infra 80b on the discussion of this passage.

(10) Thus here too it is stated that the blood becomes defiled.

(11) V. n. 5.

(12) Ibid. 'Shall bear' means shall make atonement for.

(13) V. Glos.

(14) Lev. XIX, 7.

(15) Lev. VII, 13.

(16) Lit., 'permitted'.

(17) Public sacrifices, or private sacrifices which the entire community had to bring. e.g., the Passover, were permitted even in defilement. For notes v. Yoma, Sonc. ed. p. 27, notes.

(18) Of meal which were burnt on the altar, v. Lev. II. 2. This burning was the equivalent of the sprinkling of the blood in the case of an animal sacrifice, atonement being dependent thereon.

Talmud - Mas. Pesachim 17a

Whereon Rab said: The priests erred?¹ — Is this view [propounded] against any but Rab? Rab learned, 'the liquids of the slaughter-house'; but the liquids of the altar² can be defiled.³ [To turn to] the main text: 'Rab said: The priests erred; but Samuel maintained, The priests did not err'.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 2a

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. THERE ARE FOUR NEW YEARS.¹ ON THE FIRST OF NISAN² IS NEW YEAR FOR KINGS³ AND FOR FESTIVALS.⁴ ON THE FIRST OF ELUL⁵ IS NEW YEAR FOR THE TITHE OF CATTLE.⁶ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, PLACE THIS ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI.⁷ ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI⁸ IS NEW YEAR FOR YEARS,⁴ FOR RELEASE AND JUBILEE YEARS,⁹ FOR PLANTATION¹⁰ AND FOR [TITHE OF] VEGETABLES.¹¹ ON THE FIRST OF SHEBAT¹² IS NEW YEAR FOR TREES,¹³ ACCORDING TO THE RULING OF BETH SHAMMAI; BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, PLACE IT ON THE FIFTEENTH OF THAT MONTH.

GEMARA. FOR KINGS. Why this law?¹⁴ — R. Hisda said: For dealing with documents,¹⁵ as we have learnt: 'Bonds if antedated are invalid,¹⁶ but if postdated are valid'.

Our Rabbis learnt: If a king ascended the throne on the twenty-ninth of Adar, as soon as the first of Nisan arrives¹⁷ he is reckoned to have reigned a year. If on the other hand he ascended the throne on the first of Nisan, he is not reckoned to have reigned a year till the next first of Nisan comes round.

The Master has said, 'If a king ascends the throne on the twenty-ninth of Adar, as soon as the first of Nisan arrives he is reckoned to have reigned a year.'

(1) I.e., the year is reckoned to commence at different dates for different purposes, as the Mishnah goes on to specify.

(2) The first month of the Jewish calendar (in Biblical times known as 'the month of Abib', or the springing corn), commencing in the latter half of March or the earlier part of April.

(3) If a document is dated with a certain year in a king's reign, the year is reckoned to have commenced in Nisan, no matter in what month the king came to the throne. The Gemara discusses what kinds of kings are meant — whether Israelitish or other.

(4) The meaning of this is discussed infra in the Gemara.

(5) The sixth month of the Jewish calendar.

(6) For purposes of tithing it was necessary to specify the year in which cattle were born, because cattle born in one year could not be given as tithing for cattle born in another, v. Lev. XXVII, 32.

(7) So that according to these authorities there were only three New Years.

(8) The seventh month.

(9) I.e., from the first of Tishri in these years ploughing and similar operations were forbidden. V. Lev. XXV, 4, 11.

(10) For reckoning the years of 'uncircumcision'. V. Lev. XIX, 23.

(11) I.e., those gathered after this date could not be used as tithing for those gathered before. Cf. n. 6.

(12) The eleventh month.

(13) For tithing the fruit. V. notes 6 and 11.

(14) Why should we not be content to reckon the year of the king from the day on which he ascended the throne?

(15) I.e., to enable us to determine which are antedated.

(16) If a man borrowed money in Tishri and the bond was dated in Tammuz (the fourth month of the Jewish calendar) the bond is invalid and does not give the lender any right to seize property which the borrower may have sold even subsequent to Tishri. This is a fine for having conspired to seize by means of the bond property which had been sold prior to the making of the loan. Now if the reigning king came to the throne some time between Tammuz and Tishri, then if we reckoned his years from the date of his accession, Tishri would always come before Tammuz, and the document should therefore be valid. To prevent this leading to confusion, it was consequently ordained that the king's year should always be regarded as commencing with Nisan. Tosaf. point out that it is very difficult to conceive of an instance where this might actually lead to confusion, as scribes can usually be trusted to remember the year of the reign; the example Tosaf. give is where the king came to the throne on the first of Nisan and a scribe has to write a document on the first of Nisan in the following year. In such a case the scribe might easily think that the king came to the throne on the second of Nisan, and so, but for the regulation, might date the document a whole year wrong.

(17) I.e., on the next day.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 2b

This teaches us that Nisan is the New Year for kings, and that one day in a year is reckoned as a year. 'But if he ascended the throne on the first of Nisan he is not reckoned to have reigned a year till the next first of Nisan comes round'. This surely is self-evident? — It had to be stated in view of the case where his election to the throne was determined upon¹ in Adar. You might think that in that case we should reckon him [by the next first of Nisan] to have reigned two years. We are therefore told [that this is not so].

Our Rabbis learnt: If [a king] died in Adar and was succeeded by another in Adar, we can designate [the rest of] the year [up to the first of Nisan] as belonging to either.² If he died in Nisan and was succeeded by another in Nisan, we can date the year by either.³ If he died in Adar and was succeeded by another in Nisan, the earlier year is dated by the first and the later by the second.

The Master has here said, 'If he died in Adar and was succeeded by another, we can date the year by either'. Surely this is obvious? — You might think that we never date the same year by two kings;⁴ hence we are told [that this can be done]. 'If the first died in Nisan and was succeeded by another in Nisan, the year may be dated by either'. This also seems to be obvious? — You might think that when we lay down that a day in the year is reckoned as a year we mean only at the end of the year but not at the beginning;⁵ therefore we are told [that this is not so]. 'If the first died in Adar and he was succeeded by another in Nisan, the earlier year is dated by the first and the later by the second'. This surely is obvious? — It had to be stated in view of the case where his election was determined upon from Adar and he is succeeding his father.⁶ In that case you might think that we should reckon two years to him. We are therefore told [that this is not so].

R. Johanan said: How do we know [from the Scripture] that the years of kings' reigns are always reckoned as commencing from Nisan? Because it says, And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month of Ziv which is the second month.⁷ Here

Solomon's reign is put side by side with the exodus from Egypt,⁸ [to indicate that] just as [the years from] the exodus from Egypt are reckoned from Nisan, so [the years of] Solomon's reign commenced with Nisan.

But how do we know that the years from the exodus from Egypt itself are reckoned as commencing with Nisan? Perhaps we reckon them from Tishri?⁹ — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, And Aaron the priest went up into Mount Hor at the commandment of the Lord, and died there, in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fifth month,¹⁰ on the first day of the month,¹¹ and it is further written, And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month,¹² on the first day of the month, that Moses spoke, etc.¹³ Now since the text when referring to Ab places it in the fortieth year and again when referring to [the following] Shebat places it also in the fortieth year, we may conclude that Tishri is not the beginning of the year.¹⁴ [This, however] is not conclusive. I grant you that the former text states explicitly that [the year spoken of was] ‘from the going forth from Egypt’; but how do we know that [the year mentioned in] the latter text is reckoned from the exodus?¹⁵ Perhaps it is from the setting up of the Tabernacle?¹⁶ — [We may reply to this] on the model of R. Papa, who said [in another connection]¹⁷ that the occurrence of the expression ‘twentieth year’ in two contexts provides us with a gezerah shawah:¹⁸ so here, [I may say that the occurrence of] the expression ‘fortieth year’ in the two contexts provides us with a gezerah shawah, [showing that] just as in the one case¹⁹ [the date is reckoned] from the Exodus, so in the other case²⁰ also.

But how do you know that [in respect of these two incidents] that of Ab was prior? Perhaps that of Shebat was prior?²¹ — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written [in connection with the latter], ‘After he had smitten Sihon’;²² and when Aaron died Sihon was still alive, as it is written

(1) By the notables of the State. Lit. ‘they (i.e., their votes) have been counted for him’.

(2) I.e., we can regard the remaining days of the year as belonging either to the last year of the late king or the first year of the new king.

(3) And similarly if the second ascended the throne in any other month of the year.

(4) But reckon the whole as belonging to the one who has died.

(5) E.g., if the first king died after only reigning a few days in the year.

(6) This point is mentioned here because we have already been told above that his mere election does not affect the dating.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 3a

And the Canaanite the king of Arad heard.¹ What was the report that he heard? He heard that Aaron had died and that the clouds of glory had departed, and he judged that it was now permitted to attack Israel; and this is intimated in the verse, And all the congregation saw [wa-yiru] that Aaron was dead,² [commenting on which] R. Abbahu said, Do not read wayiru, but wa-yerau [and they were seen],³ [the next word⁴ being translated] in accordance with the dictum of Resh Lakish; for Resh Lakish said, Ki has four significations — 'if', 'perhaps', 'but' 'for'.⁵ [In objection to this it may be asked], Are the two things alike?⁶ [The verse] there speaks of Canaan, whereas [here] it [speaks of] Sihon? — It has been taught: Sihon, Arad, and Canaan are all one. He was called Sihon as resembling a sayyah [foal] of the wilderness, he was called Canaan after his kingdom; and as for his real name, this was Arad. According to other authorities, he was called Arad as resembling an 'arad [wild ass] of the wilderness, and Canaan after his kingdom, while as for his real name, this was Sihon.

But can I not suppose that New Year is in Iyar?⁷ — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, And it came to pass in the first month in the second year on the first day of the month that the tabernacle was reared up,⁸ and it is written elsewhere, And it came to pass in the second year in the second month . . . that the cloud was taken up front over the tabernacle of the testimony.⁹ Seeing that the text when referring to Nisan places it in the second year and when referring to Iyar places it also in the second year, we may conclude that Iyar is not New Year. Can I suppose then that New Year is in Sivan?¹⁰ — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, In the third month after the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt;¹¹ and if Sivan is New Year, it should say, 'In the third month in the second year after the children of Israel etc.' But why not say that New Year is in Tammuz,¹² in Ab,¹³ in Adar?¹⁴ — Rather, said R. Eleazar, we learn [that Nisan is New Year] from here: And he began to build in the second month in the second¹⁵ in the fourth year of his reign.¹⁶ What [is here meant by] 'in the second'? Does not [the superfluous word] mean the second by which his reign is reckoned? Rabina strongly demurred to this. Why not, [he said], suppose it to mean the second day of the month? — In that case it would have said distinctly, 'on the second day of the month'.¹⁷ But may I not suppose it means on the second day of the week? [This cannot be for two reasons.] One is that we never find the second day of the week mentioned in Scripture, and the other is that the second 'sheni' [second] is put on the same footing as the first sheni, [indicating that] just as the first sheni refers to a month, so the second sheni refers to a month.

It has been taught in accordance with R. Johanan: How do we know [from the Scripture] that the years of kings' reigns are always reckoned as commencing from Nisan? Because it says, 'And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt etc.,’ and it is further written, ‘And Aaron the priest went up to Mount Hor at the commandment of the Lord, etc.,’ and it is further written, ‘And it came to pass in the fortieth year in the eleventh month’,¹⁸ and it is further written, ‘After he had smitten Sihon etc.,’ and it is further written, ‘And all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead etc.,’ and it is further written, ‘And it came to pass in the first month in the second year etc., and it is further written, ‘And it came to pass in the second year in the second month etc.,’ and it is further written, ‘In the third month after the children of Israel were gone forth out of the land of Egypt etc.,’ and it is further written, ‘And he began to build etc.’

R. Hisda said: The rule [that New Year for kings is in Nisan] was only meant to apply to the kings of Israel, but the years of non-Israelitish kings are reckoned from Tishri,¹⁹ as it says, The words of Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. Now it came to pass in the month of Kislev,²⁰ in the twentieth year²¹ etc., and it is written further, ‘And it came to pass in the month of Nisan in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes.’²² Now since when speaking of Kislev he places it in the twentieth year and when speaking of Nisan he places it also in the twentieth, we may conclude that New Year is not in Nisan. [This, however, is not conclusive]. In the latter text, it is true, it is expressly stated that [it was the twentieth year] of Artaxerxes, but in the former how do we know that the reign of Artaxerxes is referred to? Perhaps some other system of dating is adopted? — R. Papa replied: The occurrence in each text of the expression ‘twentieth year’ provides us with a gezerah shawah,¹ [indicating that] just as in the latter case it means ‘of the reign of Artaxerxes’, so in the former. But how do you know that the incident of Kislev was prior? Perhaps the incident of Nisan was prior?² — Do not imagine such a thing, since it has been taught: The things that Hanani told Nehemiah in Kislev were related by Nehemiah to the king in Nisan. ‘The things that Hanani told Nehemiah’, as we read, The words of Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. Now it came to pass in the month of Kislev, in the twentieth year, as I was in Shushan the castle, that Hanani, one of my brethren, came out of Judah, he and certain men; and I asked them concerning the Jews that had escaped, that were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem. And they said unto me: The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach; the wall of Jerusalem also is broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire.³ These things ‘were related by Nehemiah to the king in Nisan,’ as we read, And it came to pass in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes the king, when wine was before him, that I took up the wine and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been beforetimes sad in his presence. And the king said unto me, Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou are not sick? This is nothing else but sorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid. And I said unto the king, Let the king live for ever; why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my fathers’ sepulchres, lieth waste and the gates thereof are consumed with fire? Then the king said to me: For what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of heaven. And I said unto the king: If it please the king and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldst send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers’ sepulchres, that I may build it. And the king said unto me, the queen also sitting by him, For how long will thy journey be and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me; and I set him a time.⁴

(1) Num. XXXIII, 40. (V. Tosaf. s.v. gnahu). The text continues in the E.V., of the coming of the children of Israel, but the Talmud renders (more in accordance with the original), ‘when the children of Israel came’. The text thus does not state what he heard and so leaves room for the exposition which follows.

R. Joseph sought to disprove [the statement that the years of non-Israelitish kings are reckoned from Tishri, as follows]: [It is written], In the four and twentieth day of the month, in the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king,⁵ and it is further written, In the seventh month in the second year in the one and twentieth day of the month.⁶ Now if it is [as you say], then we should have here ‘in the seventh month in the third year’! — R. Abbahu replied: Cyrus was a worthy king,⁷ and therefore they reckoned his years like those of the kings of Israel.⁸

R. Joseph demurred strongly against this [last notion]. For one thing [he said, if this is so,] then there is a contradiction between two biblical texts. For it is written, And the house⁹ was finished on the third day of the month of Adar, which was the sixth year of Darius the king,¹⁰ and in connection with this it has been taught: ‘At that period, in the year following,¹¹ Ezra went up from Babylon along with his band of exiles’. Now it is written further, And he [Ezra] came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king; and if it is [as you say], it should be ‘in the eighth year’? Further, is there any connection [between your answer and the question]? You speak of Cyrus and the text¹² speaks of Darius! — It has been taught: ‘Cyrus,¹³ Darius, and Artaxerxes¹⁴ were all one. He was called Cyrus because he was a worthy king;¹⁵ Artaxerxes after his realm;¹⁶ while Darius was his own name. All the same, the contradiction still remains?¹⁷ — There is no contradiction. The one verse¹⁸ speaks of him before he degenerated,¹⁹ the other after he degenerated.

R. Kahana strongly demurred to this [saying], Did he indeed degenerate? Is it not written,

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 4a

And that which they have need of, both young bullocks and rams and lambs, for burnt-offerings to the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine and oil, according to the word of the priests that are in Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail?¹ — Said R. Isaac to him: [Here is something] out of your own package:² That they may offer sacrifices of sweet savour unto the God of heaven, and pray for the life of the king and of his sons.³ But even so, is not the action still a meritorious one, seeing that it has been taught: 'If a man says, I offer this sela' for charity in order that my children may live and in order that through it I may merit the future world, he may still be a wholly righteous man?' — There is no contradiction; this statement applies to Israelites, there we speak of heathens.⁴

Alternatively I may say that we know he deteriorated because it is written, with three rows of great stones and a row of new timber, and let the expenses be given out of the king's house.⁵ Why did he make these conditions? He thought to himself, If the Jews revolt against me, I will burn it with fire. But did not Solomon do the same thing, as it is written, three rows of hewn stone and a row of cedar beams?⁶ — Solomon placed the wood above and he placed it below; Solomon sunk it in the building and he did not sink it in the building; Solomon plastered it over and he did not plaster it over.

R. Joseph, (or, as some say, R. Isaac) said: Whence do we know that he deteriorated? From here: And the king said unto me, the shegal also sitting by hint.⁷ What is 'shegal'? Rabbah b. Lema said In the name of Rab, a she-dog.⁸ But if that is so, what are we to make of the verse, But hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven, and they have brought the vessels of His house before thee, and thou and thy lords, thy shegaloth and thy concubines have drunk wine in them.⁹ Now how can 'shegal' here be a dog? Do dogs drink wine? — This is no difficulty, as [we can suppose that] it was taught to drink. But what of the verse where it is written, Kings' daughters are among thy favourites, at thy right hand doth stand the shegal in gold of Ophir?¹⁰ Now if 'shegal' is a dog, what promise is the prophet bringing to Israel? — What he means is this: Because the Torah is as dear to Israel as a 'shegal' to the heathens, you have earned as your reward the gold of Ophir. Alternatively I may say that 'shegal' does as a rule mean 'queen', but in this case Rabbah b. Lema had a tradition [that it means 'dog'], and the reason why [in the text] it is called 'shegal' is because it was as dear to him¹¹ as a queen; or, possibly, because he put it on the queen's seat.

Alternatively I may say that we know he deteriorated from here: Unto a hundred talents of silver and to a hundred measures of wheat and to a hundred baths of wine and salt without prescribing how much.¹² At first there was no limit, but now he made a limit. But perhaps at first he simply had not decided on the limit? The truth is that the best explanation is that which was given first.

AND FOR FESTIVALS. How can [New Year] for the festivals be on the first of Nisan? It is surely on the fifteenth of Nisan?¹³ — R. Hisda said: What it means is that the festival which occurs in it is the New Year for the festivals. The legal import of this rule is for determining when one who makes a vow transgresses the precept of 'not delaying'.¹⁴ and R. Simeon is here followed, as it has been taught: Whether a man makes a vow, or sanctifies,¹⁵ or makes a valuation,¹⁶ as soon as three festivals elapse [before he carries out his word], he transgresses the precept of 'not delaying'. R. Simeon says: The three festivals must be in order, with Passover first. So too R. Simeon b. Yohai used to say: The festivals [referred to] are sometimes three [in number], sometimes four, sometimes five. For instance, if a man made a vow before Passover, they are three, if before Pentecost five, if before Tabernacles four.

Our Rabbis taught: Those who are liable for a money valuation,¹⁷ for a valuation,¹⁸ for a herem,¹⁹ for consecrations,²⁰ for sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, charity contributions, tithes, firstborn and tithe of cattle, paschal lamb, gleanings, forgotten sheaves and corners of the field,¹ as soon as three festivals have elapsed transgress the precept of 'not delaying'. R. Simeon said: The three festivals must be in order, with Passover first. R. Meir said: As soon as one festival has passed, he transgresses the precept of 'not delaying'. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: As soon as two festivals have elapsed, he transgresses the precept of 'not delaying'. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: As soon as the feast of Tabernacles has passed, he transgresses the precept of 'not delaying'.

What is the reason of the First Tanna?² — Let us see, [he says]: The text³ has been speaking of them⁴ [the three festivals]. Why then does it repeat,⁵ on the feast of unleavened bread, on the feast of weeks, and on the feast of tabernacles? We must understand it to be laying down the rule for 'not delaying'.⁶ R. Simeon again says that there was no need [even so] to repeat 'on the feast of tabernacles', of which the text was just speaking.⁷ Why then was it mentioned? To show that this one must be the last. What is R. Meir's reason?⁸ — Because it is written, And thither thou shalt come and thither ye shall bring.⁹ What do the Rabbis [say to this]? — They say that this constitutes only a positive injunction.¹⁰ What has R. Meir [to say to this]? — [He says that] since the All-Merciful told him to bring and he did not bring, automatically he has transgressed the precept of 'not delaying'. What is the reason of R. Eliezer b. Jacob?¹¹ Because it is written, These ye shall offer unto the Lord in your appointed seasons;¹² the minimum of 'seasons' is two. What do the Rabbis [say to this]? — [They say] that this word is required for the exposition of R. Jonah; for R. Jonah said,¹³ All the festivals are put on the same footing with one another, to show that all¹⁴ atone for the uncleanness of the Sanctuary and its holy things.¹⁵ What is the reason of R. Eleazar son of Simeon?¹⁶ As it has been taught: R. Eleazar son of Simeon said: There was no need for the feast of Tabernacles to be mentioned in this verse,¹⁷ as the text was already speaking of it. Why then was it mentioned? To show that this one is the determining factor. What exposition then do R. Meir and R. Eliezer b. Jacob give of the words 'on the feast of unleavened bread and on the feast of weeks and on the feast of tabernacles'? — They require them for the same purpose as R. Eleazar b. Oshaia. For R. Eleazar b. Oshaia said: How do we know that [a sacrifice due but not brought on] Pentecost¹⁸ can be made up for during the next seven days? Because it says, On the feast of unleavened bread and on the feast of weeks and on the feast of tabernacles. Just as [a sacrifice not brought on the first day of] the feast of Passover can be made up for during the next seven days,¹⁹ so [a sacrifice not brought on] the Feast of Weeks can be made up for during the next seven days.

But why should not the Feast of Weeks be put on the same footing [in this respect] as the feast of Tabernacles, so that just as in that case [the duration of the festival is] eight days, so here eight days [should be allowed]? — The eighth day [of Tabernacles] is a separate festival.²⁰ I can still say that we call the eighth day a separate festival in respect of P'Z'R' K'SH'B',²¹ but that in the matter of compensation all agree that this can be made on it for the first day, as we have learnt: If one did not bring his festival sacrifice on the first day of Tabernacles, he can bring during the whole of the festival, including the last day of the festival? — If you grasp a lot you cannot hold it, if you grasp a little you can hold it.²²

But what injunction the²³ did the All-Merciful indicate by mentioning the festival of Tabernacles [in this verse]? — [It is mentioned] in order to be put on the same footing as the feast of Passover [in this respect]:

(festival); the eighth day is no longer termed 'Tabernacles' but is known as 'the eighth day of solemn assembly'. K == Korban (offering); the sacrifice of the day (one bullock, one ram and seven sheep) was quite different from that of the days of Tabernacles. SH == shir (song); the psalm chanted by the Levites was not the same as that for Tabernacles. B == berakah (blessing); on this day, in the time of the Monarchy, a blessing was said for the king, in memory of the dedication of the Temple, when, as we read, on the eighth day the people blessed the king (I Kings, VIII, 66) Cf. (22) A proverbial saying, indicating here that Pentecost should be put on a level in this respect with Passover which has the smaller number of days, not with Tabernacles.

(23) If the Feast of Weeks is not to be put on the same footing as Tabernacles.

just as on the feast of Passover [the celebrant is] required to stay overnight¹ [in Jerusalem], so on the feast of Tabernacles he is required to stay overnight. How do we know this in the case of Passover? — Because it is written,² And thou shalt turn in the morning and go unto thy tents.³

But whence then do the First Tanna and R. Simeon⁴ derive the rule of compensation for the Feast of Weeks? — They derive it from the statement of Rabbah b. Samuel; for Rabbah b. Samuel stated: The Torah said, Count days⁵ and sanctify the new moon,⁶ count days and sanctify the Feast of Weeks,⁷ [indicating that] just as the new moon [is sanctified for the period corresponding with the unit of time] by which it is counted,⁸ so the Feast of Weeks [is sanctified for the period corresponding with the unit of time] by which it is counted.⁹ [In that case] I should say that [the compensation period of] the Feast of Weeks is only one day?¹⁰ — Raba replied: Do we count only days to the Feast of Weeks and not weeks [also]? Has not a Master said, It is a mizwah to count days and it is also a mizwah to count weeks?¹¹ And further, we read in the text, 'the feast of weeks'.¹²

But can the paschal lamb¹³ be offered on any of the festivals? The paschal lamb [surely] has a fixed date:¹⁴ if it is brought then, well and goods but if not, it is rejected?¹⁵ — R. Hisda replied: The paschal lamb is mentioned incidentally. R. Shesheth said: 'Paschal lamb' here means the peace-offering [brought] in lieu of the paschal lamb.¹⁶ But if that is so, this is covered by the term peace-offerings?¹⁷ — Our authority mentions the peace-offering [which is brought] in lieu of the paschal lamb and he also mentions the peace-offerings which are brought for their own sake. You might be inclined to think that [the former] being brought in lieu of the paschal lamb

(1) I.e., the first night of the intermediate days (Rashi).

(2) In connection with the paschal lamb.

(3) Deut. XVI, 7. The morning of the first day of the festival obviously cannot be meant, as on that day the celebrant had to bring his festival offering.

(4) Who require the whole of this verse for the rule of 'not delaying'.

(5) As it is written. Ye shall not eat it one day, nor two days, nor five days, nor ten days, nor twenty days, but a whole month (Num. XI, 19, 20).

(6) By sacrifices, v. Num. XXVIII, 11.

(7) V. Lev. XXIII, 15. [Read with R. Hananel, Count weeks and sanctify the Feast of Weeks, v. Lev. XXIII, 15].

(8) It is counted by days and is sanctified for one day.

- (9) It is counted by weeks and is sanctified for one week.
- (10) Since it also says, 'Ye shall count fifty days'. Ibid. 16.
- (11) To say, e.g., 'seven days which are one week to the 'omer'.
- (12) Deut. XVI, 16.
- (13) Mentioned above (p. 11) among the objects to which the rule of 'not delaying' applies.
- (14) Viz., the fourteenth of Nisan.
- (15) Lit., 'pushed away'.
- (16) Lit., 'peace-offerings of the paschal lamb'. If the paschal lamb was not brought at the proper time through being lost, another was declared to be a peace-offering in its place, and this came under the rule of 'not delaying'.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 5b

is on the same footing as the paschal lamb.¹ Therefore we are told [that this is not so].

What is the authority [in the Scripture] for these rules? — As our Rabbis have taught: 'When thou shalt vow a vow:² this tells me only [the rule for] a vow; how do I know that a freewill-offering³ is also included? We have here the term 'vow' and in another place⁴ we find the expression if a vow or a free will-offering; just as there a freewill-offering goes with the vow, so here, a freewill-offering goes with it. To the Lord thy God: this indicates money valuations, valuations, devoted things, and consecrated things.⁵ Thou shalt not be slack to pay it: it, but not its substitute.⁶ For he will surely require it: this indicates sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.⁷ The Lord thy God: this indicates charity contributions, tithes and firstborn.⁸ From thee: this indicates gleanings, forgotten sheaves and corners of the field. And it will be sin in thee; but not sin in thy offering.⁹

The Master has [just] said: "'Thou shalt not be slack in paying it"; It and not its substitute'. Substitute for what? If the substitute for a burnt-offering or a peace-offering is meant, this is actually offered.¹⁰ If the substitute for a sin-offering, this is allowed to perish.¹¹ How then are we to understand 'its substitute'? — The substitute for a thanksgiving-offering, as R. Hiyya taught: If a thanksgiving offering became mixed up with its substitute and one of them died, there is no remedy for the other,¹² For what is he [the owner] to do? Shall he offer it and offer the bread¹³ with it? Perhaps it is the substitute.¹⁴ Shall he offer it without the bread? Perhaps it is the original thank-offering. But [if that is so,] seeing that it cannot be offered, why do I require a text to exclude it? — R. Shesheth replied: In point of fact, [the intention of the verse is] to exclude the substitutes for burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and we are dealing here with the case of one which was kept over during two festivals and then became blemished and the owner made it profane by substituting another and this was kept over one festival. You might imagine in this case that since it takes the place of the first, it is as if it had been kept over for three festivals; therefore we are told that this is not so. But on the view of R. Meir who said that as soon as one festival has been allowed to elapse there is a transgression of the precept 'not to delay', what can be said? — Raba replied: Here we are dealing with a case where the animal became blemished during the festival and he declared it profane [by substituting another], and this was kept over the festival. You might imagine that since it takes the place of the first it is as if it had been kept over during the whole of the festival.¹⁵ Therefore we are told [that this is not so].

"And it will be sin in thee," but not sin in thy offering'. Do we derive this lesson from here? Surely it is derived from the text adduced by the 'Others', as it has been taught: 'Others say, I might say that a firstling after a year has passed¹⁶ is like consecrated things that have become disqualified¹⁷ and so is disqualified. Therefore it says, And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God the tithe of thy corn and of thy wine and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herd and of thy flock.¹⁸ Here firstling is mentioned alongside of tithe, [to indicate that] just as tithe is not disqualified by being kept from one year to another,¹⁹ so a firstling is not disqualified by being kept from one year to another.' — It was still necessary [to learn the lesson in the other way]. For you might have imagined that this applies only to a firstling, which is not for appeasement, but consecrated²⁰ things which are for appeasement²¹ will not appease [if kept over]. Therefore I am told that this is not so.

But still [I may object that]

- (1) And the transgression of 'not delaying' is incurred with the passing of one festival (Rashi).
 - (2) Deut. XXIII, 22.
 - (3) In making a vow a man said, 'I undertake to bring such-and-such an offering'; in making a freewill-offering he said, 'I undertake to bring this animal as an offering'.
 - (4) Lev. VII, 16.
 - (5) V. supra p. 11 nn. 5-8. Because all these went for the repair of the Temple and not to the priests.
 - (6) This is explained below.
 - (7) All these as distinct from the vow and freewill-offerings were an obligation the fulfilment of which could be demanded. The burnt-offerings and peace-offerings referred to are those which were brought as an additional offering on the festival. If they had been already set aside, they could be brought on a subsequent festival (V. Tosaf., s.v. uk̄t).
 - (8) The words 'the Lord thy God' here are strictly speaking superfluous, and can therefore be used for an exposition.
 - (9) I.e., the offering is not disqualified thereby.
 - (10) If the original animal was lost and another substituted and then the first was found, both are offered and the substitute also comes under the rule of 'not delaying'.
 - (11) And never offered.
 - (12) I.e., it must be allowed to perish.
 - (13) V. Lev. VII, 12, 13.
 - (14) And according to Men. 79b, bread was not to be brought with the substitute of a thanksgiving-offering.
 - (15) And thus, according to R. Meir, is the rule of 'not delaying' transgressed.
 - (16) A firstling has to be sacrificed within its first year, v. Deut. XV, 20.
 - (17) For being offered on the altar.
 - (18) Deut. XIV, 23.
 - (19) Because it says, At the end of every three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe etc., Deut. XIV, 28.
 - (20) E.g., burnt — and sin-offerings.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 6a

the lesson is derived from the exposition of Ben ‘Azzai, as It has been taught: Ben ‘Azzai said: What is the point of the word otho [it]?¹ Since it says, Thou shalt not be slack in paying it,² I might think that a vow which is delayed also fails to appease. Therefore it says, ‘it’: this one fails to appease, but a delayed vow does not fail to appease! — No; [what we must say is], “in thee a sin”, but not in thy wife a sin’. For you might think that, since R. Johanan [or, as some say, R. Eleazar] has said, ‘A man's wife dies only because money is [rightfully] demanded of him and he has it not,³ as it says, Why should he take thy bed from under thee’?⁴ and so I would say that his wife will die also because of this transgression of ‘not delaying’. We are therefore told [that this is not so].

Our Rabbis taught: ‘That which is gone out of thy lips:⁵ this is an affirmative precept.⁶ Thou shalt observe: this is a negative precept. And do: this is an injunction to the Beth din to make thee do, According as thou hast vowed: this means a vow. To the Lord thy God: this means sin-offerings and trespass-offerings, burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.⁷ A freewill-offering:⁸ this has its literal meaning. Even that which thou hast promised: this means things sanctified for the repair of the Temple. With thy mouth: this means charity.’

The Master has here said that “that which is gone out of thy lips” implies an affirmative precept’. Why do I require the words for this purpose? This lesson can be derived from the words, and thither thou shalt come and thither ye shall bring.⁹ “Thou shalt observe”; this implies a negative precept’. Why do I require these words? This lesson can be derived from ‘thou shalt not be slack in paying it’.¹⁰ “And do”: this is an injunction to the Beth din to make thee do’. Why do I require these words? This lesson can be derived from he shall bring it,¹¹ as it has been taught: He shall bring it: this teaches us that he is to be constrained¹² [if necessary]. I might say, even against his will. Therefore it says, of his own will.¹³ What is to be done then? We constrain him until he says ‘I am willing’. [What is the answer?] — The one [set of texts¹⁴ deal with the case] where he had pledged himself but had not yet set aside the animal, the other with the case where he had set it aside but had not yet offered it. And both are required. For if the rule had been laid down only for the case where he had pledged himself but had not yet set aside the animal, [I might say that the reason is] because he has not yet carried out his word, but where he has set it aside but not yet offered it I might argue that wherever it is, it is in the treasury of the All-Merciful. These texts therefore were necessary. And if again the rule had been laid down only for the cases where he has set the animal aside but not yet offered it, I might say that the reason is because he is keeping it by him, but if he has pledged himself without having yet set it aside I might argue that his mere word counts for nothing. Therefore these texts are also necessary.

But how can you say that [one set of texts is] where he has pledged himself but not yet set aside, seeing that ‘freewill-offering’ is mentioned, and we have learnt, What is a vow? When a man says, I pledge myself to bring a burnt-offering. What is a freewill-offering? Where a man says, I declare this to be a burnt-offering. What is the difference [in practice] between a vow and a freewill-offering? If [an animal set aside to perform] a vow dies or is stolen, he has to replace it, but if a freewill-offering dies or is stolen he is not bound to replace it! — Raba replied: You can find a freewill-offering of this kind¹⁵ in the case where he said, ‘I pledge myself to bring a burnt-offering on condition that I shall not be obliged to replace it’.

“With thy mouth”: this is charity’. Raba said: For [paying] charity-offerings one becomes liable at once. What is the reason? Because the poor are waiting.¹⁶ Surely this is obvious? — [Not so, since] you might think that, as charity is mentioned in the passage dealing with offerings, [it need not be paid] till three festivals have elapsed, as in the case of offerings. We are therefore told that this is not so. Only the others [the offerings] were made by the All-Merciful dependent on the festivals, but this [charity] is not so, because the poor are waiting.¹⁷

Raba said: As soon as one festival has elapsed, he transgresses an affirmative precept. The following objection was raised:¹⁸ R. Joshua and R. Pappias testified regarding the offspring of a peace-offering¹⁹ that it should also be brought as a peace-offering. R. Pappias said: I testify that we had a heifer which was sacrificed as a peace-offering, and we ate it on Passover, and we ate its young as a peace-offering on the Festival.²⁰ Now I can understand why it was not offered on Passover, the ground being that it was still too short-lived.²¹ But how could the young be kept over Pentecost, which would involve the transgression of an affirmative precept? — R. Zebid said in the name of Raba: It may have been that it was sick on Pentecost. R. Ashi said: What is meant by the statement ‘we ate its young as a peace-offering on the Festival’? it means, the Feast of Weeks. What says the other to this? — [He says that] wherever [Pentecost] is mentioned in connection with Passover, it is called ‘Assembly’

[‘azereth].¹

Raba said: As soon as three festivals have elapsed, he transgresses every day the precept of ‘not delaying’. The following was cited in objection to this: [The rule] both for a firstling and for all consecrated animals is that so soon as they have been kept back a year [even] without three festivals,² or three festivals even it less than a year, the precept of ‘not delaying’ is transgressed. What objection is there here?³ — R. Kahana said: The objection is a sound one.⁴ See now: the Tanna is looking for prohibitions; let him then state, ‘he transgresses the precept of "not delaying" every day’.⁵ What says the other to this? — [He says that] the Tanna is only anxious to stamp the act as forbidden;⁶ he does not look for extra prohibitions.⁷

[To revert to] the [above] text: ‘[The rule] both for a firstling and for all consecrated animals is that so soon as they have been kept back a year even without three festivals or three festivals even if less than a year, the precept of "not delaying" is transgressed’. I grant that three festivals without a year are possible; but how is a year possible without three festivals? And I still grant that this is possible for one who requires the three festivals to be in order, but for one who does not require them to be in order how is it possible? And I still grant that this is possible for Rabbi in a leap year, since it has been taught, [It is written] ‘a complete year’⁸ : Rabbi says, he [the seller] reckons three hundred and sixty-five days, which is the number of days in the solar year, while the Sages say that he reckons twelve months from day to day,⁹ and if it is a leap year he gets the benefit.¹⁰ — It is possible for Rabbi [to have a year without three festivals] in the case where one sanctified the animal after¹¹ the festival of Passover, since when the end of the next second Adar¹² comes round the year is completed but the number of festivals is not completed. But for the Rabbis how is it possible? — [It is possible] on the basis of what R. Shemaiah learnt: Pentecost is sometimes on the fifth of the [third] month, sometimes on the sixth, and sometimes on the seventh. For instance, if both of them¹³ are full,¹⁴ it is on the fifth;¹⁵ if both of them are defective,¹⁶ it is on the seventh; if one is full and the other defective, it is on the sixth.¹⁷ Who is the Tanna who takes a different view from R. Shemaiah?¹⁸ It is the ‘Others’, as it has been taught: Others say that between Pentecost and Pentecost, between New Year and New Year there is always an interval of four days [of the week],¹⁹ or, in a leap year, five.²⁰

R. Zera asked: Does the rule of ‘not delaying’ apply to an heir?²¹ [Do we reason that] the All-Merciful has said ‘When thou shalt vow a vow’, and he has not made a vow, or [perhaps we apply the text], and thither thou shalt come and thither shall ye bring,²² and he also is liable?²³ — Come and hear, since R. Hiyya has taught: ‘From thee [me’imak]’:²⁴ this excludes the heir. But this ‘me’imak’ is required to bring under the rule gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and corners of the field?²⁵ — I expound ‘imak, and I expound me’imak.²⁶

R. Zera also asked: Does the rule of ‘not delaying’ apply to a woman? Do we reason that she is not obliged to appear [at Jerusalem on the festivals]²⁷ or perhaps do we reason that she is enjoined to rejoice?²⁸ — Abaye replied: Is not the answer provided by the fact that she is enjoined to rejoice? But could Abaye say this, seeing that Abaye has said that a woman is made joyful by her husband?²⁹ Abaye was answering R. Zera on his own premises.

The question was raised: From what day is the year of the firstling reckoned? — Abaye said,

From the hour of its birth; R. Aha b. Jacob said, From the time when it can be used for appeasement.³⁰ Nor is there any conflict of opinion between them; one speaks of an animal without blemish,³¹

, the other of an animal with a blemish.¹ Can a blemished animal be eaten [on the day of birth]?²
[We speak of one] of which we know for certain that it has not been born prematurely.³

Our Rabbis taught: On the first of Nisan is New Year for months,⁴ for leap-years,⁵ and for the offering of shekalim,⁶ some say, also for the renting of houses.⁷

‘New Year for months’: whence do we know this? — Because it is written, This month shall be unto you the beginning of months, it shall be the first month of the year to you. Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel saying, In the tenth day of this month they shall take unto then: every man a lamb, according to their fathers’ houses, a lamb for a household. . . and ye shall keep it until the fourteenth day of the same month, and they shall kill it⁸ etc. It is also written [elsewhere],⁹ Observe the month of Abib¹⁰ [springing corn]. Now which is the month in which there is springing corn? You must say this is Nisan; and this is called ‘first’. But cannot I say that it is Iyar? — We require springing corn’, and there is none. But cannot I say that it is Adar? — We require the bulk of the springing corn, and this we have not [in Adar]. But does the text say, ‘the bulk of the springing corn’? Rather, said R. Hisda; we learn it from here: Howbeit on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruits of the land.¹¹ What is the month in which there is ‘gathering in’?¹² You must say that this is Tishri, and the text calls it ‘seventh’. But cannot I say that it is Marheshvan, and by ‘seventh’ is meant the seventh to Iyar? — We require ‘gathering in’, and this we have not [in Marheshvan]. But cannot I say that it is Elul, and by seventh’ is meant seventh to Adar? — We require the bulk of the ingathering, which we have not [in Elul]. But does the text say, ‘the bulk of the ingathering’? — The fact is, said Rabina, that we cannot learn this from the Torah of Moses our teacher, but we have to learn it from the later Scriptures,¹³ [viz.,] Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Shebat.¹⁴ Rabbah b. ‘ulla said, [We learn it] from here: So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in the tenth month which is the month Tebeth.¹⁵ R. Kahana said: [We learn it] from here, In the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Kislev.¹⁶ R. Aha b. Jacob said, [We learn it] from here: Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the third month which is the month of Sivan.¹⁷ R. Ashi said, [We learn it] from here: They cast pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day and from month to month to the twelfth month, which is the month Adar.¹⁸ If you prefer, I can learn it from here: In the first month which is the month Nisan.¹⁹ Why did not all the others derive it from here?²⁰ — Perhaps ‘first’ here means, ‘first in relation to his [Haman's] affair’.²¹

Why did not our Tanna²² [reckon the first of Nisan as the New Year for months]? — Our Tanna speaks only of years, he does not speak of months.

‘For leap years’. Do we reckon [a New Year] for leap years from Nisan?²³ Has it not been taught: ‘A leap year is not decreed²⁴ before New Year,²⁵ and if such a decree is issued it is not effective. In cases of emergency,²⁶ however, the decree may be issued immediately after New Year, and even so the intercalary month must be [the second] Adar’!²⁷ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: What is meant here by ‘leap years’? The closing of a leap year, as we have learnt: ‘They testified that the year may be declared a leap year throughout the whole of Adar, since others asserted that this could be done only until Purim.’²⁸ What was the reason of those who held that this could be done only until Purim? — Since a Master has stated that ‘enquiries are made regarding the laws of Passover for thirty days before Passover,²⁹ People might be led into neglecting the rules of leaven.³⁰ What says the other to this? — He says that people know that a leap year depends on calculation, and they say to themselves that the Rabbis have only now got the calculation right.³¹

What of our Tanna?³² — He speaks only of commencements, not of terminations.

‘And for the offering of shekalim’.³³ How do we know this [from Scripture]? — R. Josiah said: The Scripture says, This is the burnt-offering of each month in its month throughout the months of the year.³⁴ The Torah here enjoins:³⁵ ‘Renew [the year] and bring an offering from the new contributions’. That the ‘year’ here commences with Nisan is learnt by analogy with the text,³⁶ It is the first to you of the months of the year.³⁷ But why not suppose it is Tishri from the analogy of, From the beginning of the year?³⁸ — To a year with which months are mentioned we apply the analogy of a year with which months are mentioned, but to a year with which months are not mentioned, we do not apply the analogy of a year with which months are not mentioned.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: It is proper to bring the congregational sacrifices that are offered on the first of Nisan from the new contributions. If, however, they are brought from the old, the duty has been performed,³⁹ but not in the most appropriate manner.⁴⁰ It has been taught to the same effect: ‘It is proper to bring the congregational sacrifices which are offered on the first of Nisan from the new contributions; if, however, they were brought from the old, the duty has been performed, but not in the most appropriate manner. If a private person has offered them from his own property, they are unexceptionable, provided he hands them over to the congregation’. Surely this is self-evident? — You might think that we should have some scruples [in accepting them], in case he has not transferred them with all his heart.¹ We are told therefore [that this is not necessary].

Why does our Tanna [not reckon New Year for shekalim]? — Since it is laid down that if the sacrifices are brought [from the old contributions] the duty is still performed, he was not certain [whether this should be counted a New Year].

'Some say, Also for the renting of houses'. Our Rabbis have taught: 'If a man lets a house to another for a year, he reckons it as twelve months from day to day.² If, however, he stipulates "for this year", then even if the tenant only entered into occupation³ on the first of Adar, as soon as the first of Nisan arrives,⁴ a year has been completed.' And even according to those who say that one day in the year is reckoned as a year, this does not apply here, because a man would not trouble to rent a house for less than thirty days. But why should I not say that Tishri [is the New Year for letting houses]?⁵ — It is taken for granted that when a man takes a house [in Tishri], he takes it for the whole of the rainy season. Why do the first Tanna of the Baraitha and our Tanna [not reckon the renting of houses]? — In Nisan also there is often cloudy weather.⁶

ON THE FIRST OF ELUL IS NEW YEAR FOR THE TITHE OF CATTLE. Who is the authority for this? — It is R. Meir, as it has been taught: ‘R. Meir says, On the first of Elul is New Year for the tithing of cattle’. Who is the authority in respect of festivals? It is R. Simeon,⁷ Now look at the succeeding clause: R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON SAY, ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI. [Am I to say that] the first and third statements here follow the authority of R. Simeon and the middle one that of R. Meir? — R. Joseph said: The authority here is Rabbi, and he decides now in accordance with one, now with another Tanna. In respect of festivals he concurs with R. Simeon, and in respect of tithing of cattle he concurs with R. Meir. If that is so, how can he say FOUR [New Years]? There are five?⁸ — Raba replied: There are four according to all authorities. There are four according to R. Meir, excluding the festivals,⁹ and four according to R. Simeon, excluding the tithing of cattle.¹⁰ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: [The meaning of our Mishnah is], There are four months in which there are a number of New Years.¹¹

An objection was raised: ‘The sixteenth of Nisan is the New Year for the ‘Omer;¹² the sixth of Sivan is the New Year for the two loaves’.¹³ Now [this being so], according to Raba the Mishnah should say six, and according to R. Nahman b. Isaac five? — R. Papa said: In fixing the number, [the Tanna] reckons only such [New Years] as commence with the evening,¹⁴ he does not reckon those that do not commence with¹⁵ the evening.¹⁶ But what of festivals which [in respect of vows] do not commence with the evening¹⁷ and yet are reckoned? — Since he has to bring [his vow], he becomes guilty [of ‘delaying’] from the very commencement [of the festival].¹⁸ But what of Jubilees which do not commence with the evening,¹⁹ and yet are reckoned in? — This follows the view of R. Johanan b. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka, who said that the Jubilee commences with the New Year. R. Shisha the son of R. Idi said: In fixing the number, [the Tanna] reckoned only New Years that are not inaugurated with some ceremony,²⁰ but he does not reckon those that are inaugurated with a ceremony.²¹ But what of festivals, which [in respect of vows] are inaugurated with a ceremony,²² and yet are not reckoned? — The [transgression of] ‘not delaying’ comes automatically.²³

(1) Lit., ‘very well’.

(2) I.e., from a date in one month to the same date in the same month next year.

(3) Lit., ‘stood’.

(4) I.e., as soon as thirty days have passed.

(5) So that, if a man rents a house on the first of Elul for a year, he takes it only to the first of Tishri.

(6) And therefore at no time would a man if he took a house for a year mean merely thirty days.

(7) As explained above, that R. Simeon requires three festivals in order in the matter of vows, and he is therefore the authority for the first statement in the Mishnah, that there is a New Year for festivals.

(8) The New Year for festivals being on the fifteenth of Nisan.

(9) Since R. Meir is of the view that the transgression is involved after the lapse of one festival. V. supra 4b.

(10) I.e., the first of Elul as a separate New Year; since R. Simeon places it on the first of Tishri which is in any case a new year.

(11) There being two in Nisan, and these are counted as one.

(12) I.e., for making permissible the new corn. Lev. XXIII, 14.

(13) For bringing meal-offerings from the new corn. Ibid. 17.

(14) E.g., the New Year for kings commences with the evening of the first of Nisan.

(15) Lit., ‘full’.

(16) As instanced presently.

(17) It being assumed that the precept of 'not delaying' is not transgressed till the hour arrives when the animal vowed may be offered, i.e., till the perpetual offering of the morning is brought.

(18) Even though he is unable to bring the sacrifice till the morning.

(19) But which are ushered in with a blast of the shofar on the Day of Atonement, in the daytime.

(20) Lit. 'depend on an act'. I.e., the New Years which begin with the advent of the day itself.

(21) The prohibition of the new corn for personal consumption and for offerings respectively is raised only by the offering of the Omer and the two loaves.

(22) No sacrifice could be offered before the bringing of the daily morning sacrifice.

(23) As soon as the Festival sets in.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 8a

But what of Jubilees?¹ — This follows the authority of R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka. R. Ashi said: [The meaning of our Mishnah is,] There are four New Years which fall on four firsts of the month.² [Do you then reckon] the first of Shebat [as one and so] follow Beth Shammai?³ — He [R. Ashi] meant it in this way: There are three according to all authorities; with regard to the first of Shebat there is a difference of opinion between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON SAID, ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI. R. Johanan said: They both based their opinions on the same verse, viz., The rams have mounted the sheep⁴ and the valleys also are covered over with corn, they shout for joy, yea, they sing.⁵ R. Meir reasoned: When do the rams mount the sheep? At the time when the valleys are covered over with corn. And when are the valleys covered over with corn? In Adar. The sheep conceive in Adar and bear in Ab,⁶ and their New Year is in Elul. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon said: When do the rams mount the sheep? At the time when they [the ears of corn] shout for joy and sing.⁷ When do the ears of corn burst into song? In Nisan. They conceive in Nisan and bear in Elul, and their New Year is in Tishri. How then does the other [R. Meir] account for the words, 'they shout for joy, yea they sing'? — This refers to the late ones, whose conception takes place in Nisan. But how then does the other [R. Eleazar] account for the words, the valleys are covered with corn? — That refers to the early ones, whose conception takes place in Adar. Now according to R. Meir, there is no difficulty; the text says, 'The rams mount the sheep', to wit at the time when 'the valleys are covered with corn', but there are some also [which do not conceive till] they shout aloud and sing'. But on the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, the clauses should be reversed, thus: 'The rams mount the sheep', to wit, at the time when the ears of corn 'shout for joy and sing', but there are some which do so [already] 'when the valleys are covered with corn'? — The fact is, said Raba, that all authorities hold that the rams mount the sheep at the time when the valleys are covered with corn, which is in Adar, but where they differ is in the exposition of the following text, viz., Thou shalt surely tithe,⁸ [in regard to which we have learnt that] the Scripture speaks of two tithes, the tithe of cattle and the tithe of corn. Now R. Meir was of opinion that the tithe of cattle is put on the same footing as the tithe of corn in this way: just as corn becomes liable to tithe, soon after it reaches completion,⁹ so cattle becomes liable to tithe soon after it reaches completion.¹⁰ R. Eleazar and R. Simeon again held that the tithe of cattle is put on the same footing as the tithe of corn in this way: just as the New Year for the tithe of corn is in Tishri, so the New Year for the tithe of cattle is in Tishri.

ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI IS NEW YEAR FOR YEARS. What legal bearing has this? — R. Papa said: For [determining the validity of] documents, as we have learnt, ‘Bonds if antedated are invalid, but if postdated are valid’.¹¹ But we have learnt, ON THE FIRST OF NISAN IS NEW YEAR FOR KINGS, and we asked, What is the legal bearing of this, and R. Hisda replied, For [determining the validity of] documents?¹² — There is no contradiction; the one statement refers to kings of Israel, the other to kings of other nations. What then of the dictum of R. Hisda, ‘This statement refers only to the kings of Israel, but for the kings of other nations we reckon from Tishri’; was R. Hisda telling us only something that we already know from a Mishnah? — No; R. Hisda wanted to tell us the import of some Scriptural verses.¹³ If you like I can say that R. Hisda explains the Mishnah here in the same way as R. Zera, since R. Zera said [that it¹⁴ means], for reckoning cycles,¹⁵ in this following the view of R. Eleazar, who said that the world was created in Tishri.¹⁶ R. Nahman b. Isaac [explained the Mishnah to refer] to the Divine judgment ‘as it is written, From the beginning of the year to the end of the year,¹⁷ [which means], From the beginning of the year sentence is passed as to what shall be up to the end of it. How do we know that this takes place in Tishri? — Because it is written, Blow the horn at the new moon, at the covered time [keseh]¹⁸ for our feastday.¹⁹ Which is the feast

(14) The statement ON THE FIRST OF TISHRI IS THE NEW YEAR FOR YEARS.

(15) I.e., the cycle of Tishri is the first of the four cycles of the year, v. infra p. 43, n. 9. The year is divided into four cycles called Tekufoth, the Tekufah of Nisan (Vernal Equinox); Tammuz (Summer Solstice); Tishri (Autumn Equinox); Tebeth (Winter Solstice). The term Tekufah is also applied to the season itself.

on which the moon is covered over [mithkaseh]? You must say that this is New Year;¹ and it is written [in this connection], For it is a statute for Israel, an ordinance for the God of Jacob.²

Our Rabbis taught: 'For it is a statute for Israel, an ordinance for the God of Jacob': this teaches that the heavenly Beth din does not assemble for judgment until the Beth din on earth has sanctified the month'.

Another [Baraitha] taught: 'For it is a statute for Israel'; this tells me only that Israel [are judged]; how do I know that this applies also to the [other] nations of this world? Because it is written, an ordinance for the God of Jacob'. If that is the case, what is the point of saying, For it is a statute for Israel?³ — It teaches that Israel are brought up for trial first. And this is in harmony with the [following] saying of R. Hisda. For R. Hisda said: Where a king⁴ and a community appear together, the king is brought up for judgment first, as it says, the judgment of his servant [Solomon] and the judgment of his people.⁵ What is the reason? — If you like I can say, because it is not seemly that the king should stand outside, and if you like I can say, [the king is tried] before [the Divine] wrath becomes really fierce.⁶

FOR RELEASE YEARS. How do we know this [from the Scripture]? — Because it is written, And in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land,⁷ and that this commences with Tishri we learn from the analogy with the word 'year'⁸ in from the beginning of the year.⁹ But let us learn that it is Nisan from analogy with the word 'year' in the text, it is the first to you of the months of the year?¹⁰ — We draw an analogy to a year with which months are not mentioned from a year with which months are not mentioned, but we do not draw an analogy to a year with which months are not mentioned from a year with which months are mentioned.¹¹

AND FOR JUBILEE YEARS. [is the New Year for] Jubilees on the first of Tishri? Surely [the New Year for] Jubilees is on the tenth of Tishri, as it is written, on the day of atonement shall ye make proclamation with the horn?¹² — What authority is here followed? R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka, as it has been taught: And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year.¹³ What is the point of these words? [It is this]. Since it says, On the day of atonement [ye shall make proclamation],¹² I might think that the year is sanctified only from the Day of Atonement onwards. Therefore it says, And ye shall sanctify the fiftieth year. This teaches that it is sanctified from its inception. On this ground R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka laid down that from New Year to the Day of Atonement slaves were neither dismissed to their homes nor subjected to their masters, but they ate and drank and made merry, wearing garlands on their heads.¹⁴ When the Day of Atonement came, the Beth din sounded the horn; slaves were dismissed to their homes and fields returned to their original owners. And the Rabbis [— what do they make of this verse]? — [They say it teaches that] you are to sanctify years but not months.¹⁵

Another [Baraitha] taught: 'It is a Jubilee.'¹⁶ What is the point of these words? — Since it says, And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year,¹³ I might think that, just as it is sanctified from its inception onwards, so it remains sanctified [for a time] after its termination. And there would be nothing to wonder at in this, seeing that we [regularly] add from the profane on to the holy.¹⁷ Therefore it says, it is a Jubilee to you, the fiftieth year, [to show that] you are to sanctify the fiftieth year, but not the fifty-first year.¹⁸

And the Rabbis [— what do they make of these words]?¹ — [They say]: You are to count the fiftieth year, but you are not to count the fifty-first,² to exclude the view of R. Judah, who said that the fiftieth year is reckoned both ways.³ We are here told that this is not so.

And how do we know [from the Scripture] that we add from the profane on to the holy?⁴ — As it has been taught: In plowing time and in harvest time thou shalt rest.⁵ R. Akiba, [commenting on this,] said: There was no need [for Scripture] to specify the ploughing and harvest of the Sabbatical year, since this has already been mentioned [in] thy field thou shalt not sow etc.⁶ What must be meant therefore is the ploughing of the year before the seventh which is passing into the seventh,⁷ and the harvest of the seventh year which is continuing into the period after the seventh year.⁸ R. Ishmael said: Just as ploughing is optional,⁹ so the harvest [here referred to] is an optional one, excluding the harvesting of the 'Omer, which is a religious duty.¹⁰ Whence then does R. Ishmael derive the rule that an addition is to be made from the profane on to the holy? — From what has been taught: And ye shall afflict your souls on the ninth day:¹¹ I might think [literally] on the ninth day. It therefore says, In the evening.¹² if in the evening, I might think, after dark? It therefore says, 'or, the ninth day'.¹³ What then am I to understand? That we begin fasting while it is yet day; which shows that we add from the profane on to the holy. I know this [so far] only in regard to the inception [of the holy day]; how do I know it in regard to its termination? Because it says, from evening to evening.¹² So far I have brought only the Day of Atonement under the rule; how do I know that it applies to Sabbaths also? Because it says, ye shall rest.¹⁴ How do I know that it applies to festivals? Because it says, your Sabbath.¹⁴ How am I to understand this? That wherever there is an obligation to rest, we add from the profane on to the holy.

What then does R. Akiba make of this, ‘and ye shall afflict your souls on the ninth day’? — He requires it for the lesson learnt by R. Hiyya b. Rab from Difti.¹⁵ For R. Hiyya b. Rab from Difti learnt: ‘And ye shall afflict your souls on the ninth day’. Do we then fast on the ninth day? Is it not on the tenth day that we fast? [We do]; but [the use of this word] indicates that if a man eats and drinks on the ninth day, the Scripture accounts it to him

(1) They have no need of this lesson, seeing that they do not consider the year sanctified from its inception. (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. ibcru 8b).

(2) Lit. ‘the year fifty and first’. So our texts, the meaning being, according to Rashi, that you are not to reckon the fiftieth year as fiftieth to the Jubilee and first to the next septennate. Tosaf., by a slight change of wording, renders: ‘You are to count the fiftieth year (as fiftieth to the Jubilee), but you are not to count the fiftieth year as one (to the following septennate)’, which is a smoother reading.

(3) As fiftieth to the Jubilee and first to the next septennate.

(4) I.e., add a little from the ordinary week-day on to the holy day.

as if he fasted on both the ninth and the tenth days.¹

Our Rabbis taught: It is a Jubilee² — ‘A Jubilee’³ even though they did not observe the release of fields, even though they did not observe the blowing of the trumpet.⁴ I might say [that it is still a Jubilee] even though they did not observe the dismissal of slaves. Therefore it says, ‘it is’.⁵ So R. Judah. R. Jose said: ‘It is a Jubilee’, — ‘A Jubilee’³ even though they did not release fields, even though they did not dismiss slaves. I might think [that it is still a Jubilee] even if they did not blow the trumpet. It therefore says, ‘it is’. Now⁶ since one text brings some cases under the rule and another text excludes others from it, why should I expound: ‘A Jubilee’,⁷ even though they did not dismiss, but it is not a Jubilee unless they blew the trumpet? Because it is possible that there should be no [opportunity for]⁸ dismissing slaves, but it is not possible that there should be no [opportunity for] blowing the trumpet.⁹ Another explanation is that the performance of the latter depends on the Beth din, but the performance of the former does not depend on the Beth din.¹⁰ What need is there for the alternative explanation? — Because you might argue that it is impossible that there should not be someone in some part of the world who has not a slave to dismiss. Therefore I say that the one depends on the Beth din but the other does not depend on the Beth din.

I understand R. Jose's point of view, his reason being as he stated. But what is R. Judah's reason? — The text says, And ye shall proclaim liberty throughout the land,¹¹ and he holds that a text may be expounded in connection with the clause immediately preceding it, but not with the one before that.¹²

All authorities agree that the word *deror*¹³ means freedom. What does this tell us? — As it has been taught: The word deror means freedom. R. Judah said: What is the significance of the word deror? [The freedom of] one who dwells [medayyer] where he likes¹⁴ and can carry on trade in the whole country.

R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: The views given above are those of R. Judah and R. Jose, but the Sages say that [the neglect of] any of these three ceremonies renders the Jubilee inoperative. Their view was that a text can be expounded in connection both with the clause immediately preceding it and with the one before that and with the one that follows it.¹⁵ But it is written 'Jubilee'?¹⁶ — This is to show that it must be kept even outside of Palestine. But it is written 'throughout the land'?¹⁷ — This means that when liberation is carried out in the land it is carried out abroad, and when it is not carried out in the land it need not be carried out abroad.

AND FOR PLANTATION. How do we know this [from the Scripture]? — Because it is written, Three years [it shall be] uncircumcised,¹⁸ and it is written, and in the fourth year,¹⁹ and we learn that this year commences with Tishri from the analogy of the word 'year' in the text from the beginning of the year.²⁰ But why not conclude that it commences with Nisan from the analogy of the word 'year' in It is the first to you of the months of the year? — We draw an analogy to a year with which months are not mentioned from a year with which months are not mentioned, but we do not draw an analogy to a year with which months are not mentioned from a year with which months are mentioned.

Our Rabbis taught: 'If one plants or bends over²¹ or grafts a tree in the year before²² the Sabbatical year thirty days before New Year — in all three cases, [by New Year] a year has passed for him,²³ and he can preserve the growth during the seventh year. [If he does so] less than thirty days before New Year, the interval [up to New Year] does not count as a year for him and he may not preserve the growth in the Sabbatical year

(1) Because the eating and drinking on the ninth day is called in the text 'fasting'.

(2) Lev. XXV, 11.

(3) Added by Bah.

(4) The superfluous word 'Jubilee' shows that even in these cases the year is observed as a Jubilee for the abstaining from sowing etc.

(5) thv This word having a limiting force.

(6) This is a continuation of R. Jose's statement.

(7) So Bah; cur. edd. 'It is a Jubilee'.

- (8) Lit., 'it is possible for the world'. E.g.. if no Israelite had a slave.
- (9) It is hardly possible that there should be no trumpet.
- (10) Because the Beth din may not be able to compel all persons to dismiss their slaves.
- (11) Just before the words 'it is a Jubilee'.
- (12) Hence we apply the limiting force of the words 'it is' to the dismissal of slaves, but not to the blowing of the trumpet, which does not immediately precede.
- (13) In Lev. XXV, 10. E.V. 'liberty'.
- (14) [trhhs hc , Lit., 'in a dwelling place'. MS.M.; trhhs (carrier). As a carrier carries (or, goes round with) his load everywhere he likes].

- (16) This should cancel the limiting force of 'it is'.
- (17) So how can you say that it should be kept outside of Palestine?
- (18) Lev. XIX, 23.
- (19) Ibid. 24.
- (20) V. supra p. 31.

- (23) I.e., the thirty days count as one of the years of 'uncircumcision'.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 10a

. The fruit of such a plantation is forbidden until the fifteenth of Shebat,¹ whether as "uncircumcised" in [the year of] "uncircumcision", or as fourth year fruit in the fourth year,² What is the ground for this ruling? — R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan (though some trace it back to the authority of R. Jannai): Scripture says, And in the fourth year. . . and in the fifth year.³ There are occasions when fruit appears in the fourth year and it is still forbidden on account of 'uncircumcision', and there are occasions when fruit appears in the fifth year and it is still forbidden on account of 'fourth year'.

Shall I say that that is not [in agreement with] R. Meir,⁴ since R. Meir has affirmed⁵ that one day in the year is reckoned as a year, as it has been taught: 'Par [bullock] is mentioned in the Torah without further qualification and means an animal twenty-four months and one day old. So R. Meir. R. Eleazar says, it means an animal twenty-four months and thirty days old. For R. Meir used to say: Wherever 'egel [calf] is mentioned in the Torah without further qualification, it means of the first year; ['egel]⁶ ben bakar [young ox] means, of the second year; par [bullock] means, of the third year'! — You may still say [it is in agreement with] R. Meir. When R. Meir said that one day in a year is counted as a year, he meant at the end of a period,⁷ but not at the beginning.⁸

Raba said: Cannot we apply here an argument a fortiori,⁹ [to wit]: Seeing that in the case of a niddah,¹⁰ though the beginning of the [seventh] day is not reckoned as concluding her period,¹¹ the end of the [first] day yet counts for the beginning of her period,¹² in the case of [a period of] years where one day is counted [as a whole year] at the end,¹³

- (10) A menstruous woman.
- (11) Her period of uncleanness ending only at nightfall on the seventh day, and not at any hour earlier in the day.
- (12) I.e., if she begins counting in the middle of a day, as soon as nightfall arrives she is reckoned as having completed one day. [The reference here is to Niddah who according to Biblical law was allowed to cleanse herself when seven days had passed from her first menstrual flow, provided it ceased on the seventh day before sunset. This law was later replaced by the more stringent Rabbinic rule necessitating a period of seven clean days after a single blood issue.]

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 10b

does it not follow that one day should be counted [as a year] at the beginning? — What then? Will you say [that the passage quoted¹ follows] R. Eleazar? [How can this be, seeing that] R. Eleazar requires thirty days and thirty days,² as we have learnt: 'It is not allowed to plant nor to bend over nor to graft in the year before the Sabbatical year less than thirty days before New Year, and if one did plant or bend over or graft, he must uproot the plant. So R. Eleazar. R. Judah said: If a grafting does not take within three days, it will not take at all. R. Jose and R. Simeon said that it takes two weeks',³ and [commenting on this] R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: On the view that thirty days are the period [for taking] we require thirty days and thirty;⁴ on the view that three days are the period, thirty-three days are required; on the view that two weeks are the period, two weeks and thirty days are required. Now even if [we accept the view of] R. Judah, thirty-three days are required? — The truth is [that the statement in question follows] R. Meir, and when it says thirty days, it means the thirty days of taking. In that case it should say thirty-one days?⁵ — He held that the thirtieth day counts both ways.

R. Johanan said: Both of them [R. Meir and R. Eleazar] based their views on the same verse, viz., And it came to pass in the one and six hundredth year, in the first month, on the first day of the month.⁶ R. Meir reasoned: Seeing that the year was only one day old and it is still called a year, we can conclude that one day in a year is reckoned as a year. What says the other to this? — [He says that] if it were written, 'In the six hundred and first year', then it would be as you say. Seeing, however, that it is written, 'In the one and six hundredth year', the word 'year' refers to 'six hundred', and as for the word 'one', this means 'the beginning of one'.⁷ And what is R. Eleazar's reason? — Because it is written, 'In the first month on the first day of the month. Seeing that the month was only one day old and it is yet called 'month', we can conclude that one day in a month is reckoned as a month; and since one day in a month is reckoned as a month, thirty days in a year are reckoned as a year, a month being reckoned by its unit and a year by its unit.

(We infer from what has just been said that both [R. Meir and R. Eleazar] were of opinion that the world was created in Nisan.)⁸

It has been taught: R. Eliezer says: In Tishri the world was created; in Tishri the Patriarchs⁹ were born; in Tishri the Patriarchs died; on Passover Isaac was born; on New Year Sarah, Rachel and Hannah were visited;¹⁰ on New Year Joseph went forth from prison

(1) Where it says that less than thirty days does not count for planting etc.

(2) To elapse before a year is completed for 'uncircumcision' — thirty days for the 'taking' and thirty for the addition from the profane on to the holy (Rashi).

(3) Sheb. II, 6.

(4) To count for a year of 'uncircumcision'. V. p. 37, n. 11.

(5) Thirty days for taking and one for the addition.

(6) Gen. VIII, 13.

(7) I.e., it merely gives the date, but gives no indication that a day can be counted as a year.

(8) Because both agree that 'the first day of the first month' in the text marks the beginning of another year. Rashi points out that both might equally well hold that the 'first month' here means Tishri, it being so called as first month to the creation and he therefore rejects this sentence. But v. Tosaf. s.v. kkfn.

(9) Abraham and Jacob.

(10) I.e., remembered on high.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 11a

; on New Year the bondage of our ancestors in Egypt ceased;¹ in Nisan they were redeemed and in Nisan they will be redeemed in the time to come. R. Joshua says: In Nisan the world was created; in Nisan the Patriarchs were born; in Nisan the Patriarchs died; on Passover Isaac was born; on New Year Sarah, Rachel and Hannah were visited; on New Year Joseph went forth from prison; on New Year the bondage of our ancestors ceased in Egypt; and in Nisan they will be redeemed in time to come.

It has been taught: 'R. Eliezer says: Whence do we know that the world was created in Tishri? Because it says, And God said, Let the earth put forth grass, herb yielding seed, and fruit-tree.² Which is the month in which the earth puts forth grass and the trees are full of fruit? You must say that this is Tishri. That time was the season of rainfall,³ and the rain came down and the plants sprouted, as it says, And a mist went up from the earth.⁴

R. Joshua says: Whence do we know that the world was created in Nisan? Because it says, And the earth brought forth grass, herb yielding seed after its kind, and tree bearing fruit.⁵ Which is the month in which the earth is full of grass and trees [begin to] produce fruit? You must say that this is Nisan. That time was the period when cattle, beasts and fowls copulate with one another, as it says, The rains have mounted the sheep etc.⁶ And how does the other explain the text, 'tree bearing fruit'? — This signifies a blessing for future generations. And what does the other make of the words 'fruit-tree'? — This is to be explained in accordance with the dictum of R. Joshua b. Levi; for R. Joshua b. Levi said: All creatures of the creation were brought into being with their full stature, their full capacities, and their full beauty, as it says, And the heaven and the earth were finished, and all the host of them [zeba'am]. Read not zeba'am, but zibyonam [their beauty].

R. Eliezer said: Whence do we know that the Patriarchs were born in Tishri? Because it says, And all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto King Solomon, at the feast in the month Ethanim;⁷ that is, the month in which the mighty ones [ethanim] of the world were born. How do you know that this word ethan means 'mighty'? — Because it is written, Thy dwelling-place is firm [ethan],⁸ and it also says, Hear, ye mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye mighty rocks [ethanim] the foundations of the earth.⁹ It also says, The voice of my beloved, behold he cometh, leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills,¹⁰ [where] 'leaping upon the mountains' means, for the merit of the patriarchs, and 'skipping upon the hills' means, for the merit of the matriarchs.

R. Joshua said: Whence do we know that the patriarchs were born in Nisan? Because it says, and it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year in the month of Ziv¹¹ — that is, the month in which the brilliant ones [zewthane] of the world were born. But how does he explain the expression 'month of Ethanim'? — It means, [the month] which is strong in religious duties.¹² What does the other make of the expression 'in the month of Ziv'? — It means, the month in which there is splendour for the trees, for so Rab Judah has said: When a man goes abroad in the days of Nisan and sees trees blossoming, he should say, 'Blessed is He that hath not left His world short of anything and has created therein goodly creatures and goodly trees to rejoice mankind'.

He who holds that they were born in Nisan holds that they died in Nisan, and he who holds that they were born in Tishri holds that they died in Tishri, as it says, I am a hundred and twenty years old this day.¹³ The word 'this day' seems here superfluous. What then is the point of it? [As much as to say], This day my days and years have reached full measure, which teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, sits and completes the years of the righteous from day to day and from month to month, as it says, The number of thy days I will fulfil.¹⁴

Whence do we know that Isaac was born on Passover? — Because it is written, On the [next] festival¹⁵ I will return unto thee.¹⁶ Now when was he [the angel] speaking?¹⁷ Shall I say [he was speaking] on Passover and referring to Pentecost? Could she bear in fifty days?¹⁸ Shall I say then that [he was speaking on] Pentecost and was referring to Tishri? Even in five months could she bear? I must suppose then that he was speaking on Tabernacles and referring to Passover.¹⁹ Even so, could she bear in six months? — It has been taught that that year was a leap year. All the same, if the Master deducts the days of uncleanness,²⁰ the time is too short? — Mar Zutra replied: Even those who hold that when a woman bears at nine months she does not give birth before the month is complete²¹ admit that if she bears at seven months she can give birth before the month is complete, as it says, And it came to pass after the cycle of days;²² the minimum of cycles is two, and the minimum of days is two.

'On New Year Sarah, Rachel and Hannah were visited'. Whence do we know this? — R. Eliezer said: We learn it from the two occurrences of the word 'visiting', and the two occurrences of the word 'remembering'. It is written concerning Rachel, And God remembered Rachel,²³ and it is written concerning Hannah, And the Lord remembered her,²⁴ and there is an analogous mention of ‘remembering’ in connection with New Year, as it is written, a solemn rest, a remembering of the blast of the trumpet.²⁵ The double mention of visiting [is as follows]. It is written concerning Hannah, For the Lord had visited Hannah,²⁶ and it is written concerning Sarah, And the Lord visited Sarah.²⁷

‘On New Year Joseph went forth from the prison’. Whence do we know this? — Because it is written, Blow the horn on the new moon, on the covering day for our festival . . .

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 11b

He appointed it for Joseph for a testimony when he went forth¹ etc.

‘On New Year the bondage of our ancestors ceased in Egypt’. It is written in one place, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians,² and it is written in another place, I removed his shoulder from the burden.³ ‘In Nisan they were delivered’, as Scripture recounts. ‘In Tishri they will be delivered in time to come’. This is learnt from the two occurrences of the word ‘horn’. It is written in one place, Blow the horn on the new moon,⁴ and it is written in another place, In that day a great horn shall be blown.⁵ ‘R. Joshua says, In Nisan they were delivered, in Nisan they will be delivered in the time to come’. Whence do we know this? — Scripture calls [the Passover] ‘a night of watchings’,⁶ [which means], a night which has been continuously watched for from the six days of the creation. What says the other to this? — [He says it means], a night which is under constant protection against evil spirits.⁷

R. Joshua and R. Eliezer are herein consistent [with views expressed by them elsewhere], as it has been taught: ‘In the sixth hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, on the seventeenth day of the month.’⁸ R. Joshua said: That day was the seventeenth day of Iyar, when the constellation of Pleiades sets at daybreak and the fountains begin to dry up, and because they [mankind] perverted their ways, the Holy One, blessed be He, changed for them the work of creation and made the constellation of Pleiades rise at daybreak and took two stars from the Pleiades and brought a flood on the world. R. Eliezer said: That day was the seventeenth of Marheshvan, a day on which the constellation of Pleiades rises at daybreak, and [the season] when the fountains begin to fill

, and because they perverted their ways, the Holy One, blessed be He, changed for them the work of creation, and caused the constellation of Pleiades to rise at daybreak and took away two stars [from it] and brought a flood on the world’.¹ Now accepting the view of R. Joshua, we can understand why the word ‘second’ is used;² but on R. Eliezer's view, what is meant by ‘second’? — [It means], the second to [the day of] judgment.³ Again, on R. Joshua's view we see what change there was in the work of creation; but on R. Eliezer's view what change was there?⁴ — The answer is found in the dictum of R. Hisda; for R. Hisda said: With hot liquid they sinned and with hot liquid they were punished. ‘With hot liquid they sinned’, namely, in [sexual] transgression. ‘With hot liquid they were punished’: it is written here⁵, and the waters assuaged,⁶ and it is written elsewhere, and the wrath of the king was assuaged.⁷

Our Rabbis taught: ‘The wise men of Israel follow R. Eliezer in dating the Flood⁸ and R. Joshua in dating the annual cycles,⁹ while the scholars of other peoples follow R. Joshua in dating the Flood also’.

AND FOR VEGETABLES. A Tanna taught: 'For vegetables and for tithes and for vows'. What is meant by vegetables? The tithes of vegetables? But this is the same as 'tithes'? — [The Tanna] mentions first a tithes prescribed by the Rabbis and then those prescribed by the Torah.¹⁰ But let him mention those prescribed by the Torah first? — Since he was specially pleased with the others,¹¹ he mentions them first. And our Tanna [— why does he not mention tithes]? — He mentions a tithes prescribed by the Rabbis,¹² and [leaves us to infer] a fortiori those prescribed by the Torah. Why does not the Tanna here say simply 'tithes' [in the singular]? — He desires to include both the tithes of cattle and the tithes of cereals. Then why does he not say 'vegetable' [in the singular]? — He refers to two kinds of vegetables, as we have learnt: '[Tithes is to be given from] vegetables which are commonly made up into bundles, from the time they are so made up, and from those which are not commonly so made up, from the time when he fills a vessel with them.

Our Rabbis taught: If one¹³ gathered herbs on the eve of New Year before sunset, and then gathered some more

(1) There seems to be some confusion in the text here. To make it astronomically correct we should read (with the Seder Olam) in the dictum of R. Joshua, 'When Pleiades rises at daybreak', and in the dictum of R. Eliezer, 'sets at daybreak'.

(2) Because we find Nisan called the first month in the Torah.

(3) Which is also recognized by Scripture as the beginning of a year in the text, 'The eyes of the Lord are upon it (the Land of Israel) from the beginning of the year'.

(4) Seeing that it was the season of rain.

(10) Tithes for all other kinds of produce apart from vegetables are derived by the Rabbis from biblical texts. But v. Tosaf. s.v. tb, .

(11) Because they were a rabbinic innovation.

(12) I.e., tithes for vegetables.

(13) Apparently a non-Jew is meant (Tosaf.).

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 12b

after sunset, terumah¹ and tithes are not given from one lot for another, because terumah and tithes are not given from the new for the old nor from the old for the new. If it was at the meeting point of the second and third years² [of the septennial cycle], from that [which is plucked in] the second year first and second tithes³ [have to be given], [and from that which was plucked in] the third year, first tithes and the tithes of the poor.

Whence this rule? — R. Joshua b. Levi says: [It is written], When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase in the third year, which is the year of the tithes.⁴ This means the year in which there is only one tithe.⁵ How is then one to act? [He gives] the first tithe and the tithe of the poor, and the second tithe is omitted. Is this correct, or should the first tithe also be omitted? — [Not so], because it says, Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithe which I have given you from them for your inheritance.⁶ The text here compares the tithe [of the Levites] to an inheritance, [to signify that] just as an inheritance is to be held uninterruptedly, so their tithe is to be given without interruption. It has been taught to the same effect: ‘When thou hast made an end of tithing etc.’ [This means] a year in which there is only one tithe. How is one to act? [He gives] first tithe and tithe of the poor, and the second tithe is omitted. Should perhaps the first tithe also be omitted? — [Not so], because it says, and the Levite shall come,⁷ which means to say, every time he comes give him.⁸ So R. Judah. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: We have no need [to appeal to this text].⁹ It says, Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites and say unto them, When ye take from the children of Israel the tithe which I have given you from them for your inheritance.¹⁰ The text here compares the tithe to an inheritance, to signify that just as an inheritance is held uninterruptedly, so the tithe is to be given without interruption.

AND FOR VOWS. Our Rabbis taught: If one is interdicted by vow to have no benefit from another person for a year, he reckons twelve months from day to day. If he said ‘for this year’, then even if he made the vow on the twenty-ninth of Elul, as soon as the first of Tishri arrives a year is completed for him; and this even on the view of those who say that one day in a year is not counted as a year. For he undertook to mortify himself, and he has mortified himself. But why not say [that his year ends in] Nisan? — In respect of vows, follow the ordinary use of language.¹¹

We have learnt elsewhere: ‘Fenugrec¹² [becomes liable to tithe] from the time when it grows;¹³ produce¹⁴ and olives, from the time when they have grown a third’. What is meant by ‘from the time when it grows’? — From the time when it grows sufficiently for resowing.¹⁵ ‘Produce and olives from the time when they are a third grown’. Whence this rule? — R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan (some trace it back to the name of R. Jose the Galilean): Scripture says: At the end of every seven years, in the set time of the year of release, in the feast of Tabernacles.¹⁶ Now how comes the year of release to be mentioned here? The feast of Tabernacles is already the eighth year? It is in fact to intimate to us that if produce has grown a third in the seventh year before New Year, the rules of the seventh year are to be applied to it in the eighth year.¹⁷

Said R. Zera to R. Assi:

(1) V. Glos.

(2) Lit., ‘if the second entered into the third’. In the second year a tithe was taken to Jerusalem to be consumed there; in the third year a tithe was given to the poor, but not taken to Jerusalem. The first tithe which went to the Levites was given every year. v. infra.

(3) I.e., tithe of the Levites and tithe for Jerusalem.

(4) Deut. XXVI, 12.

(5) I.e., one of the two regular tithes.

(6) Num. XVIII, 26.

(7) Deut. XIV, 29.

(8) In the third year also.

(9) R. Eliezer apparently was not completely satisfied with the proof from this text, because it speaks of the Levite as in the category of the poor.

(10) Num. XVIII, 26.

(11) And men ordinarily talk of the year as beginning in Tishri.

(12) Or 'fenugreek', a leguminous plant allied to clover.

(13) I.e., its year is determined by the time of its growth and not of its gathering, as in the case of vegetables.

(14) vtuc, v It is a question whether this includes grapes or not. V. Tosaf.

(15) Cf. Tosaf. s.v. j nm, an.

(16) Deut. XXXI, 10.

(17) Tosaf. (s.v. dvbn) points out that this would seem to come under the rule already given above of adding from the profane on to the holy, and answers that from this verse we should learn only that the produce if harvested must be treated as seventh-year produce e.g. in respect of trading interest, but not that it is forbidden to harvest it.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 13a

But perhaps even though it has not begun to ripen at all, the All-Merciful has still laid down that it is to be left alone until the feast of Tabernacles? — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, and the feast of ingathering [asif] at the end of the year.¹ Now what is 'ingathering'? Shall I say it means the feast which comes at the time of ingathering? This is already signified in the words when thou gatherest in.² What then must be meant here by asif? Harvesting;³ and the Rabbis take it for granted that all produce which is harvested by Tabernacles must have grown to a third by New Year, and Scripture applies to it the words at the end of the year.⁴ Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zera: And were the Rabbis certain that there is this distinction between a third and less than a third?⁵ He replied to him: Am I not always telling you not to let yourself go beyond the established rule? All the measurements laid down by the Sages are of this nature. In forty se'ahs [of water] a ritual bath may be taken; in forty se'ahs less a kurtub⁶ it may not be taken. [A quantity of food equal to the] size of an egg can be rendered unclean as foodstuff; if it is short of that quantity by a grain it cannot be rendered unclean. [A piece of cloth] three handbreadths by three can be rendered unclean by being trodden on,⁷ less than this quantity by one hair is not so rendered unclean. R. Jeremiah subsequently said: What I said is of no account. For R. Kahana was asked by members of the college, Whence did the Israelites bring the omer which they offered on their entry into the Land [of Israel]? If you say, it grew⁸ while still in the possession of the heathen, [this cannot be, since] the All Merciful prescribed your harvest⁹ and not the harvest of the stranger. (But how do we know that they [the Israelites] offered it at all? Perhaps they did not offer it at all? — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, And they did eat of the produce of the land on the morrow after the Passover.¹⁰ On the morrow after the Passover they ate, but not before, [which shows that] they brought the omer and only then ate. Whence then did they obtain it?) — He [R. Kahana] replied to them: All that had not grown to a third while in the possession of the stranger [was fitting for their use]. Now [it might be argued here also that] perhaps it had grown [in the possession of the stranger] and they were not certain. The fact, however, [that they ate it] shows that they were certain. So here,¹¹ the Rabbis are certain. But perhaps [the Israelites brought the omer from] corn which had not commenced to grow [when they entered the land], but where it had grown to a quarter they were not certain about the difference between a third and less than a third?¹² — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, And the people went up from the Jordan on the tenth of the month.¹³ Now if you assume that by then the corn had not grown at all, could it become ripe in five days? But [on your assumption] that it had grown to a fourth or a fifth, could [such corn] become ripe in five days? What you consequently have to answer [even on this assumption] is that the land of Canaan is called 'the land of the hind';¹⁴ so [on the other assumption] you can answer that it is called 'the land of the hind'.

R. Hanina objected strongly to the statement made above. Can you, he said, maintain that this 'asif' is 'harvesting', seeing that it is written, when thou gatherest in from thy threshing floor and from thy wine press,¹⁵ and [commenting on this] a Master has said, The verse speaks of the waste of the threshing floor and the wine press?¹⁶ Said R. Zera: I thought I was sure of this,¹⁷ and now R. Hanina has come and put a spoke in my wheel.¹⁸ How then do we know [this rule about a third]? — As it has been taught: R. Jonathan b. Joseph says: And it shall bring forth produce for the three years;¹⁹

(1) Ex. XXIII, 16.

(2) Ibid.

(3) The verse meaning that the harvest gathered in at this season belongs to the year going out.

(4) Which shows that it is regarded as belonging to the year which is going out.

(5) Viz., that what is grown to a third belongs to one year, and what is less grown to another year. This seems to R. Jeremiah rather arbitrary.

(6) A small liquid measure equal to 1/64 of a log.

read not lishlosh [for three], but lishlish [to a third].¹ But this text is required for its literal meaning?² It is written in another verse, And ye shall sow for the eighth year and eat of the produce, the old store, until the ninth year.³

We have learnt elsewhere:⁴ 'Rice, millet, hanie⁵ and sesame,⁶ if they have taken root by New Year, are for purposes of tithe counted⁷ as belonging to the year before [the New Year],⁸ and are permitted in the seventh year.⁹ Otherwise they are forbidden in the seventh year,⁹ and are reckoned for tithe as belonging to the next year.¹⁰ Rabbah said: The Rabbis have laid down that [the tithe year of] a tree is determined by its blossoming, that of produce and olives by their becoming a third grown, that of vegetables by their ingathering. In which class have these been placed by the Rabbis? — Rabbah answered himself by saying: Since they are gathered for shelling as required,¹¹ the Rabbis made the taking root the determining factor.¹²

Said Abaye to him: Can he not collect the whole crop in a heap,¹³ so that ex post facto he will have set aside from the new crop in it for the new crop in it, and from the old crop in it for the old crop?¹⁴ Has it not been taught:¹⁵ ‘R. Jose b. Kippar says in the name of R. Simeon Shezuri: If Egyptian beans have been sown for seed and part takes root before New Year and part after, terumah and tithe must not be given from one lot for another, because terumah and tithe are not given from the new for the old nor from the old for the new. How then is one to manage? He collects the whole crop in a heap, so that in the end he gives terumah and tithe from the new crop in the heap for the new crop in the heap, and from the old crop in the heap for the old crop in the heap! — He replied to him: You cite R. Simeon Shezuri. R. Simeon Shezuri held that mixing can be relied on,¹⁶ whereas the Rabbis held that mixing cannot be relied on.

R. Isaac b. Nahmani said in the name of Samuel: The halachah follows the ruling given by R. Jose b. Kippar in the name of R. Simeon Shezuri. R. Zera strongly demurred to this. Did Samuel, he asked, really say this? Has not Samuel said: Mixing is not relied on for anything save wine and oil? — R. Zera overlooked the following dictum of Samuel: The determining factor is in all cases the full ripening.¹⁷

(1) Meaning that it is considered ripe when it has grown a third.

(2) And how therefore can you use it for a deduction?

(3) Ibid. 22. This shows that the produce of the sixth year will last three years, and therefore the other verse is not required to tell us this and may be used for a deduction.

(4) Sheb. II, 7.

(5) A species of millet.

(6) These are all counted as varieties of pulse.

(7) In an ordinary year.

(8) Second or third as the case may be. V. p. 44, n. 6.

(9) Viz. , those that take root in the sixth.

(10) V. Sheb. II, 7.

(11) I.e., some before New Year and some after. [The phrase ihfrp ihfrp ihuag is difficult. Rashi renders: They (their gathering) are made (as they are needed) for shelling. R. Hananel reads ihdrp (‘beds’) and renders, They ripen (at different times) in different beds, even though they may ‘take’ at the same time].

(12) Because otherwise it would be difficult to keep the old and the new separate for tithing purposes without great inconvenience.

(13) Lit., ‘heap up his threshing-floor in the middle of it’.

(14) Abaye holds that if the whole crops old and new, is well mixed together, then when he sets aside terumah and tithe from it, the proportion of old and new in the terumah and tithe will be the same as the proportion of old and new in the whole crop.

(15) Tosef. Sheb. II.

(16) To produce old and new in proper proportions in the tithe. Lit., 'there is mixing'.

(17) And therefore in fact tithe is given from Egyptian beans all together, whether they took root in the outgoing or in the incoming year, which is as R. Simeon Shezuri said, in so far that the two crops can be tithed together, although according to each for a different reason. For on the view of Samuel the whole is regarded as belonging to the incoming year, which is not what R. Simeon said.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 14a

And all three dicta of Samuel are necessary.¹ For if he had told us only that the law follows R. Simeon b. Shezuri, I should have said that his reason was because we can rely on mixing; he tells us therefore that mixing is not to be relied on for anything. And if he had told us that mixing is not to be relied on for anything, I should have said that he holds with the Rabbis;² therefore he tells us that the halachah follows R. Simeon Shezuri. If again we had only these two dicta, I should have said that Samuel contradicts himself;³ he therefore tells us that the determining factor is in all cases the full ripening.⁴ And if he had told us [only] that the determining factor is in all cases the full ripening, I should have said that this applies also to produce and olives. Therefore he tells us that the halachah follows R. Simeon Shezuri where he expresses a different view.⁵ [But if so], let him indicate [only] these two points; why does he tell us that mixing is not in all cases to be relied on? — His object is to tell us that for wine and oil mixing is to be relied on.

It has been taught: R. Jose the Galilean says: After that thou hast gathered in from thy threshing-floor and from thy wine press:⁶ [this tells us that] just as the [produce brought to the] threshing floor and the wine press have this special feature, that they are nurtured by the waters⁷ of the outgoing year and are [consequently] tithed for the outgoing year, so all products which are nurtured by the waters of the outgoing year are tithed for the outgoing year. This excludes vegetables, which are nurtured by the waters of the current year⁸ and are [consequently] tithed for the current year. R. Akiba said: 'After that thou hast gathered it, from thy threshing-floor and thy wine press:' just as [the products brought to the] threshing-floor and wine press have this special feature that they are nurtured by rain water⁹ and [consequently] are tithed for the outgoing year, so all products that are nurtured by rain water are tithed for the outgoing year. This excludes vegetables, which are nurtured by all kinds of water¹⁰ and are consequently tithed for the current year. Where do they [R. Jose and R. Akiba] differ in practice? — R. Abbahu said: They take different views with regard to seedless onions and Egyptian beans, as we have learnt:¹¹ Seedless onions and Egyptian beans which have been kept without water for thirty days before New Year [and are gathered after New Year] are tithed for the outgoing year and are permitted in the Sabbatical year. Otherwise they are forbidden in the Sabbatical year and are tithed for the current year.¹²

ON THE FIRST OF SHEBAT IS NEW YEAR FOR TREES. What is the reason? — R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Oshaia: Because [by then] the greater part of the year's rain has fallen¹³ and the greater part of the cycle¹⁴ is still to come. What is the sense of this? What it means is this: 'Although the greater part of the cycle is still to come, yet since the greater part of the year's rain has fallen, [therefore etc.]'.

Our Rabbis taught: 'It is recorded of R. Akiba that he once plucked a citron tree on the first of Shebat and gave two tithes from

- (1) For making clear to us his point of view.
- (2) So that if old and new have become mixed together, tithe for both parts of the mixture must proportionately be given from some other quarter.
- (3) By saying on the one hand that the law follows R. Simeon, which would imply that mixing can be relied on, and on the other that mixing cannot be relied on.
- (4) And this is the reason why the law follows R. Simeon.
- (5) From the Rabbis. That is, only in the case of beans etc. but not of produce, where Samuel would hold that the decisive factor is the growth of a third. [R. Hananel reads 'where they (R. Simeon b. Shezuri and the Rabbis) differ'].
- (6) Deut. XVI, 13.
- (7) This apparently includes both rain water and irrigation.
- (8) Lit., 'the year that covers'. The year in which they are gathered.
- (9) Lit., 'most (kinds of) water'.
- (10) Including irrigation.
- (11) Sheb. II, 9.
- (12) Rashi gives two views as to what is implied in this. According to one opinion, if these vegetables have been kept without water for the last thirty days of the outgoing year, then R. Jose would hold that they must have been nurtured by the rain water of that year, and so are to be tithed for that year; whereas R. Akiba would hold that their growth is due in part to irrigation. and so they would be tithed for the next year; and the Mishnah quoted follows R. Jose. The other opinion is that as they have not been irrigated for thirty days, it is R. Akiba and not R. Jose who would hold that they have been nurtured by the rain of the outgoing year, and the Mishnah therefore follows R. Akiba. It was customary to withhold water from these two species for thirty days before plucking them so as to harden them.
- (13) And the trees now begin to blossom.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 14b

it,¹ one² in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai and one³ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel.⁴ R. Jose b. Judah said: He did not follow the [two] rulings of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, but the [two] rulings of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, as we have learnt:⁵ 'A citron tree follows the rule of a tree in three respects and of a vegetable in one respect. It follows the rule of a tree in three respects — for 'uncircumcision,'⁶ for fourth-year fruit, and for the Sabbatical year. It follows the rule of a vegetable in one respect, its tithe [year] being determined by its plucking. So Rabban Gamaliel. R. Eliezer, however, says that a citron follows the rule of a tree in all respects.⁷

But is it right to adopt the harder rule from both sides?⁸ Has it not been taught: 'As a general principle, the halachah follows Beth Hillel. If one prefers, however, to adopt the rule of Beth Shammai, he may do so, and if he desires to adopt the rule of Beth Hillel he may do so. One, however, who adopts the more lenient rulings of both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel [on the same subject] is a bad man, while to one who adopts the more stringent rulings of both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel may be applied the verse, But the fool walketh in darkness.'⁹ No; either one must follow Beth Shammai both where they are more severe and more lenient or Beth Hillel both where they are more severe and more lenient’? — [The answer is that] R. Akiba was doubtful about the tradition, and did not know whether Beth Hillel fixed [the New Year for trees] on the first of Shebat or on the fifteenth of Shebat.¹⁰

‘R. Jose b. Judah said: He did not adopt the two rulings of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, but of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer [But would R. Jose hold that] in respect of the first of Shebat he adopted the ruling of Beth Shammai?’¹¹ — R. Hanina (or some say R. Hananiah) said: The case here is one of a citron which had blossomed before the fifteenth of Shebat of the previous year,¹² and R. Akiba might equally well have done the same thing at all earlier date,¹³ but this happened to be the actual date. Rabina said: Combine¹⁴ the two statements. It was not the first of Shebat but the fifteenth of Shebat,¹⁵ and he [R. Akiba] did not adopt the two rulings of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel but of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer.

Rabbah son of R. Huna said: Seeing that Rabban Gamaliel has said that the tithe year of a citron tree is determined by its plucking like that of a vegetable, its New Year [like that of a vegetable] must be the first of Tishri. The following was cited in objection to this: ‘R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: If a man plucked the fruit of a citron tree on the eve of the fifteenth of Shebat before sunset, and then plucked some more after sunset, terumah and tithe must not be given from one lot for the other because terumah and tithe are not given from the new for the old nor from the old for the new. [If it was at the meeting point of the third and] fourth years, [from the fruit of] the third year he gives first tithe and the tithe of the poor, and from the fruit of the fourth year the first tithe and the second tithe’.¹⁶

- (1) The second tithe for the second year and the poor tithe for the third.
 - (2) The poor tithe.
 - (3) The second tithe.
 - (4) Who say that the New Year begins only on the fifteenth of Shebat.
 - (5) Bek. II, 6.
 - (6) ‘Orlah, v. Glos.
 - (7) And its tithe-year is determined by its blossoming. Being in doubt whether to follow R. Gamaliel or R. Eliezer, R. Akiba gave two tithes.
 - (8) Where two authorities give each two rulings with regard to a certain subject, one being more stringent in respect of one point and the other in respect of the other. For instance, Beth Shammai rule that the lack of one vertebra in a human spine still leaves it capable of defiling by ‘overshadowing’ (v. Glos. s.v. ohel) but does not make an animal trefa (v. Glos.) whereas Beth Hillel says that it makes an animal trefa but leaves it incapable of defiling by overshadowing. Here Beth Shammai are more stringent in the matter of defilement and Beth Hillel in the matter of trefa (v. ‘Er. 6b). So here, R. Akiba took on himself two burdens when one would have sufficed.
 - (9) Eccl. II, 14.
 - (10) And he followed Beth Hillel only.
 - (11) [For according to Beth Hillel, even if the tithe is determined by the blossoming he would still not be liable to the tithe of third year, which would not begin before the fifteenth of Shebat.]
 - (12) When the third year began, and the fruit had been left on the tree. A citron can remain on the tree for several years.
 - (13) R. Akiba following Beth Hillel and the two rulings of R. Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, the blossoming having taken place in the second year.

(14) In R. Jose's statement.

(15) When unquestionably a New Year would have commenced for trees.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 15a

Now which authority is reported to make plucking the determining factor? Rabban Gamaliel; and he says here Shebat?¹ — The statement should have been reported differently,² [thus]: Rabbah b. bar Huna said: Although Rabban Gamaliel said that [the tithe-year of] a citron tree is determined by its plucking like [that of] a vegetable, yet its New Year is Shebat.

Why in the former statement³ is the expression used, 'if it was the meeting point of the second and third years', and in this statement the expression, 'if it was the meeting point of the third and fourth years'? — This points out to us incidentally that the citron tree suffers from being handled, and since everybody handles it in the seventh year,⁴ it does not yield fruit till the third year [after blossoming].

R. Johanan inquired of R. Jannai: When is the New Year of the citron tree? — He replied: In Shebat. Do you mean [he asked further] Shebat of the calendar⁵ or Shebat of the cycle?⁶ — He replied: Shebat of the calendar.⁷

Raba inquired of R. Nahman (or, according to others, R. Johanan inquired of R. Jannai): Suppose it was a leap year, what is the rule?⁸ — He replied: Do as in ordinary years.⁹

Rabbah said: A citron tree which has blossomed in the sixth year and ripened in the seventh¹⁰ is not liable to tithe and not liable to clearance;¹¹ while one which has blossomed in the seventh year and produced fruit in the eighth is not liable to tithe but is liable to clearance. Said Abaye to him: Your second clause is unobjectionable, because [you can say that] you take the more stringent view.¹² But your first clause [surely involves a contradiction]? [For you say], 'It is not liable to clearance'. Why so? Because we say, Make the blossoming the determining factor.¹³ But if so, it should surely be liable to tithe? — He replied to him: Everybody handles it, and you say it should be liable to tithe! R. Hamnunah, however, said: A citron tree which blossoms in the sixth year and ripens in the seventh is always reckoned as belonging to the sixth, and one which blossoms in the seventh and ripens in the eighth is always regarded as belonging to the seventh. The following was cited in objection: 'R. Simeon b. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon: A citron tree which blossoms in the sixth year and ripens in the seventh is not liable to tithe and not liable to clearance, since no fruit is liable to tithe which has not both grown and been plucked in a period of liability.¹⁴ A citron tree which blossoms in the seventh year and ripens in the eighth year is not liable either to tithe or to clearance, since no fruit is liable to clearance which has not both grown and been plucked in the seventh year'. Now the first part of this statement seems to contradict R. Hamnunah,¹⁵ and the second part both Rabbah and R. Hamnunah?¹⁶ — There is a difference of Tannaim on this point,¹⁷ as it has been taught: 'R. Jose said: Abtolmus testified in the name of five elders that a citron is determined by its plucking in the matter of tithe. Our teachers, however, took a vote in Usha and decided that it is determined by its plucking for purposes both of tithe and of Sabbatical year'. How does Sabbatical year come to be mentioned here? —

- (1) And not Tishri.
 - (2) Lit., 'if the statement was made it was stated thus'.
 - (3) In the Tosef. quoted on 12a ad fin.
 - (4) Since, like all other trees, it is common property in that year.
 - (5) I.e., the lunar month Shebat-thirty days from the first of Tebeth.
 - (6) Thirty days from the cycle of Tebeth (Winter Solstice, usually Dec. 22).
 - (7) In spite of the fact that fructification is due to the action of the sun.
 - (8) Do we make the New Year in Shebat which comes next to Tebeth, or in First Adar which takes the place of Shebat in this year?
 - (9) Lit., 'follow most of the years'. I.e., adhere to Shebat.
 - (10) Lit., 'the daughter of the sixth which enters into the seventh'.
 - (11) In the third and sixth years of the Septennate. V. Deut. XXVI, 13.
 - (12) I.e., the view which is more stringent in this case, viz., that we go by the blossoming and not by the plucking. And since we do this for purposes of clearance, we also do it for purposes of tithes, although this means taking the more lenient view. (V. Tosaf s.v. tnkac).
 - (13) And so it belongs to the sixth year.
 - (14) And the seventh year is not a period of liability for tithe.
 - (15) Who holds that if it blossoms in the sixth it is liable to tithe.
 - (16) Who both hold that if it blossomed in the seventh year it is liable to clearance.
 - (17) As to whether we go by the plucking or the blossoming for purposes of the Sabbatical year.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 15b

There is an omission in the statement, which should read as follows: '[Abtolmus testified that] a citron tree is determined by its plucking for purposes of tithe and by its blossoming for purposes of the Sabbatical year.¹ Our teachers, however, took a vote in Usha and decided that it is determined by its plucking for purposes both of tithe and of Sabbatical year'.

It has been stated: R. Johanan and Resh Lakish both lay down that a citron tree which blossoms in the sixth year and ripens in the seventh year is always reckoned as belonging to the sixth year.² When Rabin came [from Palestine], he said in the name of R. Johanan: A citron which blossomed in the sixth year and ripened in the seventh, even though [at the beginning of the seventh] it was no bigger than an olive and it subsequently became as big as a loaf, can render one guilty of breaking the rule of tebel.³

Our Rabbis taught: If the fruit of a tree blossoms before the fifteenth of Shebat, it is tithed for the outgoing year; if after the fifteenth of Shebat, it is tithed for the incoming year. R. Nehemiah said: This rule applies only to trees which produce two broods in a year.⁴ (Two broods,⁵ do you say? — He should say, as it were two broods).⁶ Trees, however, which produce only one brood, like date trees, carob trees and olive trees, even though they blossom before the fifteenth of Shebat are tithed for the incoming year.

R. Johanan said: In regard to carob trees, it has become the general custom to follow the rule of R. Nehemiah. Resh Lakish sought to confute R. Johanan from the following: 'As regards wild fig-trees, their seventh year is the second year [of the Septennate] because [after blossoming] their fruit takes three years to grow'.⁷ — He made no answer.⁸ Said R. Abba the priest to R. Jose: Why did he make no answer? He could have said to him, I give the view of R. Nehemiah, and you bring against me the view of the Rabbis! — [He could not have answered him thus], because Resh Lakish could have retorted: Do you abandon the Rabbis and follow R. Nehemiah? — But he could have said to him, I speak to you of the general custom, and you speak to me of a prohibition?⁹ — [He could not answer thus], because he could have said to him: Where a prohibition applies, even if there is a general custom, do we allow it? — But he could have said to him: I speak to you of the tithe of carobs, which is Rabbinical, and you speak to me of the Sabbatical year, which is Pentateuchal! — The truth is, said R. Abba the priest, I wonder whether Resh Lakish put this question. Whether he put this question? But we are distinctly told that he did so! — What R. Abba should say is, whether he [R. Johanan] admitted the difficulty or not.¹⁰

(1) And this is the view taken by Rabbah and R. Hamnunah in respect of the law of clearance. For the purposes of tithes, however, Rabbah is of the opinion that although Abtolmus makes the plucking the decisive factor, he would nevertheless exempt from tithe a citron tree which blossomed in the sixth year and ripened in the seventh, for the reason that it is handled by everybody (Rashi).

(2) Whether for purposes of the Sabbatical year or tithes.

(3) V. Glos. If it was consumed before tithe was given for it, R. Johanan being of the opinion that we go by the blossoming.

(4) R. Nehemiah's statement is here interrupted while the use of the strange word 'broods' is explained.

(5) Heb. , ufhrc , a word strictly applicable only to broods of birds.

(6) I.e., their fruit is not all gathered at one time; e.g.. figs; cf. supra 13b, the rule in the case of beans.

(7) Sheb. V, 1 . Which would show that the blossoming is the determining factor in all trees, even those which are all plucked at one time.

(8) Lit. 'he was silenced'.

(9) The prohibition to determine the year by the plucking.

(10) I.e. , whether his silence was due to the fact that he had no answer, or to the fact that he thought it obvious that tithe of carobs, which is Rabbinical, could not be put on the same footing as produce of the Sabbatical year which is Pentateuchal.

Talmud - Mas. Rosh HaShana 16a

MISHNAH. AT FOUR SEASONS [DIVINE] JUDGMENT IS PASSED ON THE WORLD:¹ AT PASSOVER IN RESPECT OF PRODUCE; AT PENTECOST IN RESPECT OF FRUIT; AT NEW YEAR ALL CREATURES PASS BEFORE HIM [GOD] LIKE CHILDREN OF MARON,² AS IT SAYS, 'HE THAT FASHIONETH THE HEART OF THEM ALL, THAT CONSIDERETH ALL THEIR DOINGS',³ AND ON TABERNACLES JUDGMENT IS PASSED IN RESPECT OF RAIN.

GEMARA. Which produce is referred to? Shall I say, the produce which is already grown?⁴ If so, then when were the hardships decreed which it has already suffered? It must be then the produce which is to be sown later.⁵ You assume then that only one judgment is passed. But it has been taught: 'If some calamity or misfortune⁶ happens to produce before Passover, it is in virtue of a judgment passed on the previous Passover, if after Passover, of a judgment passed at the Passover which has just gone.⁷ If a calamity or misfortune happens to a man before the Day of Atonement, it is in virtue of a judgment passed on the last Day of Atonement, if just after the Day of Atonement, of a judgment passed on the one just gone'! — Raba replied: This shows that two judgments are passed on the produce.⁸ Abaye remarked: Therefore if a man sees that the slow-maturing seed⁹ is doing well he should sow the quick-maturing seed¹⁰ in good time, so that it may be well grown before the time comes to judge it.¹¹

Our Mishnah seems to agree neither with R. Meir nor with R. Judah nor with R. Jose nor with R. Nathan. For it has been taught: 'All are judged¹² on New Year and their doom is sealed on the Day of Atonement. So R. Meir. R. Judah says: All are judged on New Year and the separate dooms are sealed each in its time — on Passover in respect of produce, on Pentecost in respect of fruit, on Tabernacles judgment is passed in respect of rain, and man is judged on New Year and his doom is sealed on the Day of Atonement. R. Jose says: Man is judged every day, as it says, And thou dost visit him every morning.¹³ R. Nathan says: Man is judged every moment, as it says, Thou dost try him every moment'.¹⁴ Should you maintain that it is after all in accordance with Rabbi Judah, [the seasons] mentioned in our Mishnah referring to the final doom, we may retort that if so there is a difficulty with the case of man!¹⁵ — Raba replied: This Tanna [of our Mishnah] follows the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, since it has been taught in the school of R. Ishmael: 'At four seasons judgment is passed on the world, on Passover in respect of produce, on Pentecost in respect of fruit, on Tabernacles judgment is passed in respect of rain, and man is judged on New Year and his doom is sealed on the Day of Atonement'. The statements of the Mishnah must then be taken to refer to the preliminary judgment.

R. Hisda said: What is the reason of R. Jose? — [How can you ask this?] Surely it is as he has stated, [viz., the text], 'And thou dost visit him every morning'! — What we mean is this: What is his reason for not taking the same view as R. Nathan? — 'Trying' merely means scrutinizing. But 'visiting' also merely means scrutinizing? The truth is, said R. Hisda, that R. Jose's reason is to be found in this text: To do the judgement of his servant and the judgement of his people Israel, as every day shall require.¹⁶

R. Hisda further said: If a king and a people present themselves together, the king stands his trial first, as it says, To do the judgement of his servant and the judgement of his people Israel.¹⁶ What is the reason? — If you like, I can say, because it is not proper that a king should remain outside, or if you like I can say, [so that he may be judged] before the [divine] anger waxes hot.¹⁷

R. Joseph said: Whose authority do we follow nowadays in praying [daily] for the sick and for the ailing?¹⁸ — Whose authority? That of R. Jose.¹⁹ Or if you like I can say that it is after all that of the Rabbis,²⁰ but that at the same time we follow the counsel of R. Isaac. For R. Isaac said: Supplication²¹ is good for a man whether before the doom is pronounced or after it is pronounced.²²

It has been taught: R. Judah said in the name of R. Akiba: Why did the Torah enjoin on us to offer an 'Omer on Passover? Because Passover is the season of produce. Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, said, Bring before Me an 'Omer' on Passover so that your produce in the fields may be blessed.²³ Why did the Torah enjoin on us to bring two loaves on Pentecost? Because Pentecost is the season for fruit of the tree. Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, said: Bring before Me two loaves on Pentecost so that the fruit of your trees may be blessed.²⁴ Why did the Torah enjoin on us to pour out water on Tabernacles?²⁵ The Holy One, blessed be He, said, Pour out water before Me on Tabernacles, so that your rains this year may be blessed. Also recite before Me on New Year [texts making mention of] kingship, remembrance, and the shofar-kingship, so that you may proclaim Me king over you; remembrance, so that your remembrance may rise favourably before Me; and through what? Through the shofar.²⁶

R. Abbahu said: Why do we blow on a ram's horn? The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Sound before Me a ram's horn so that I may remember on your behalf the binding of Isaac the son of Abraham,²⁷ and account it to you as if you had bound yourselves before Me.

R. Isaac said: Why do we sound the horn on New Year? — [You ask], why do we sound? The All-Merciful has told us to sound!²⁸ — What he means is, why do we sound a teru'ah?²⁹ [You ask] why do we sound a teru'ah? The All-Merciful has proclaimed 'a memorial of teru'ah!³⁰ — What he means is, why do we sound a teki'ah and teru'ah!³⁰ — sitting and then again sound a teki'ah and teru'ah standing? — It is so as to confuse the Accuser.¹

R. Isaac further said: If the shofar is not sounded² at the beginning of the year, evil will befall at the end of it. Why so? Because the Accuser has not been confused.

R. Isaac further said: Every year which is poor³ at its opening becomes rich before it ends, as it says, From the beginning of the year — where the word is spelt meroshith⁴ — 'unto the end'; such a year is destined to have a 'latter end'.⁵

R. Isaac further said: Man is judged only according to his actions up to the time of judgment,⁶ as it says, God hath heard the voice of the lad as he is there.⁷

R. Isaac further said: Three things call a man's iniquities to mind, namely, a shaky wall,⁸ the scrutinizing of prayer,⁹ and calling for [Divine] judgment on one's fellow man. For R. R. Isaac further said: Four things cancel the doom of a man, namely, charity, supplication, change of name and change of conduct. Charity, as it is written, And charity delivereth from death.¹² Supplication, as it is written, Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses.¹³ Change of name, as it is written, As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her name Sarai, but Sarah shall her name be;¹⁴ and it continues, And I will bless her and moreover I will give thee a son of her. Change of conduct, as it is written, And God saw their works, and it continues, and God repented of the evil which he said he would do unto them and he did it not.¹⁵ Some say that change of place [also avails], as it is written, Now the Lord said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and it proceeds, and I will make of thee a great nation.¹⁶ And the other [— why does he not reckon this]? — In that case it was the merit of the land of Israel which availed him.

R. Isaac further said: It is incumbent on a man to go to pay his respects to his teacher on festivals, as it says, Wherefore wilt thou go to him today? It is neither new moon nor sabbath,¹⁷ from which we infer that on New Moon and Sabbath¹⁸ one ought to go.¹⁹

R. Isaac further said: A man should purify himself for the festival, as it says, and their carcasses ye shall not touch.²⁰ It has been taught to the same effect: ‘And their carcasses ye shall not touch’. I might think that [ordinary] Israelites are cautioned not to touch carcasses. Therefore it says, Say unto the priests the sons of Aaron;²¹ [which shows that] the sons of Aaron are cautioned but ordinary Israelites are not cautioned. May we not then argue a fortiori: Seeing that in the case of a serious uncleanness,²² while the priests are cautioned Israelites are not cautioned, how much less [are they likely to be cautioned] in the case of a light uncleanness!²³ What then am I to make of the words, ‘and their carcasses ye shall not touch’? — On the festival.

R. Kruspedai said in the name of R. Johanan: Three books are opened [in heaven] on New Year, one for the thoroughly wicked,²⁴ one for the thoroughly righteous, and one for the intermediate. The thoroughly righteous are forthwith inscribed definitively in the book of life; the thoroughly wicked are forthwith inscribed definitively in the book of death;²⁵ the doom of the intermediate is suspended from New Year till the Day of Atonement; if they deserve well, they are inscribed in the book of life; if they do not deserve well, they are inscribed in the book of death. Said R. Abin, What text tells us this? — Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous.²⁶ ‘Let them be blotted out from the book — this refers to the book of the wicked. ‘Of life — this is the book of the righteous. ‘And not be written with the righteous’ — this is the book of the intermediate. R. Nahman b. Isaac derives it from here: And if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written,²⁷ ‘Blot me, I pray thee’ — this is the book of the wicked. ‘Out of thy book’ — this is the book of the righteous. ‘Which thou has written’ — this is the book of the intermediate.

It has been taught: Beth Shammai say, There will be three groups at the Day of Judgment²⁸ — one of thoroughly righteous, one of thoroughly wicked, and one of intermediate. The thoroughly righteous will forthwith be inscribed definitively as entitled to everlasting life; the thoroughly wicked will forthwith be inscribed definitively as doomed to Gehinnom, as it says. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to reproaches and everlasting abhorrence.²⁹ The intermediate will go down to Gehinnom

[The Shofar on New Year is blown twice: once at the close of the morning prayer and the reading of the Law when the congregation is seated, and again during the Musaf prayers while the people stand. According to J.R.H. CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. THE CARRYINGS OUT¹ OF THE SABBATH² ARE TWO WHICH ARE FOUR WITHIN, AND TWO WHICH ARE FOUR WITHOUT.³ HOW SO? THE POOR MAN STANDS WITHOUT AND THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE WITHIN: [i] IF THE POOR MAN STRETCHES HIS HAND WITHIN AND PLACES [AN ARTICLE] INTO THE HAND OF THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE, OR [ii] IF HE TAKES [AN ARTICLE] FROM IT AND CARRIES IT OUT, THE POOR MAN IS LIABLE,⁴ AND THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE IS EXEMPT.⁵ [AGAIN] [i] IF THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE STRETCHES HIS HAND WITHOUT AND PLACES [AN OBJECT] IN THE POOR MAN'S HAND, OR [ii] TAKES [AN OBJECT] THEREFROM AND CARRIES IT IN, THE MASTER IS LIABLE, WHILE THE POOR MAN IS EXEMPT.⁶ [iii] IF THE POOR MAN STRETCHES HIS HAND WITHIN AND THE MASTER TAKES [AN OBJECT] FROM IT, OR PLACES [AN OBJECT] THEREIN AND HE CARRIES IT OUT, BOTH ARE EXEMPT; [iv] IF THE MASTER STRETCHES HIS HAND WITHOUT AND THE POOR MAN TAKES [AN OBJECT] FROM IT, OR PLACES [AN ARTICLE] THEREIN AND HE CARRIES IT INSIDE, BOTH ARE EXEMPT.⁷

GEMARA, We learnt elsewhere:⁸ [False] oaths are two which are four:⁹

(1) Lit., 'outgoings'.

(2) i.e., the acts of transporting objects from private to public ground or vice versa, which are forbidden on the Sabbath, Tosaf. observes that the phraseology, 'outgoings,' utmh instead of the more usual 'carryings out' , utmv is based on Ex. XVI, 29: let no man go out of his place on the seventh day.

(3) I.e., by Biblical law two acts of carrying out are interdicted to the person standing in a private domain ('within') and two to the person standing in public ground ('without'); to each two the Rabbis added another two, thus making 'TWO WHICH ARE FOUR.' Tosaf. is much exercised with the question why this is taught at the beginning of the Tractate, instead of in the seventh chapter, where all the principal forbidden acts of the Sabbath, including this, are enumerated, and offers various answers. L. Blau in MGWJ.,1934 (Festschrift), P. 124f maintains that this was originally part of the Mishnah of Shebu. I, 1, which is quoted at the beginning of the Gemara (infra), where a number of subjects, having no inner connection, are grouped together by the catch phrase 'two which are four.' As an aid to the memory each subject was then put at the head of the Tractate to which it refers.

(4) For desecrating the Sabbath.

(5) Because the poor man performs the two acts which together constitute 'carrying out' in the Biblical sense, viz., he removes an object from one domain and replaces it in another. (When he withdraws the object into the street, holding it in his hand, he is regarded as having deposited it in the street.) The master, on the other hand, is quite passive, performing no action at all.

(6) In both cases here the master performs the two acts, the poor man being passive. Thus there are two Biblically forbidden acts for each.-'Liable' means to a sin-offering, if the acts are committed unwittingly, or to death (in theory, hardly in practice) if committed knowingly, and can apply here only to a Biblical interdict.

(7) In iii and iv each performs one act only, either removing from one domain or depositing in another. This is Rabbinically forbidden, and involves no liability. (When the master places an object into the poor man's outstretched hand, which is already in the house, he, and not the poor man, is regarded as having removed it from the private domain.)

(8) Shebu. I, 1.

(9) In Lev. V, 4-7 (q.v.) a variable sacrifice (vv. 6-7) is imposed for taking a false oath (v. 4 is so explained). 'To do evil, or to do good,' is interpreted as meaning that one swears, 'I will eat,' or 'I will not eat,' which are the two referred to, viz., a positive or a negative oath relating to the future. These are further increased to four by including similar oaths relating to the past: 'I ate,' or 'I did not eat.'

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 2b

the forms of consciousness of uncleanness are two which are four;¹ the appearances of leprosy are two, which are four;² the carryings out of the Sabbath are two which are four.³ Now, why is it taught here, TWO WHICH ARE FOUR WITHIN, AND TWO WHICH ARE FOUR WITHOUT; whereas there it is [simply] stated, 'two which are four,' and nothing else? — Here, since the Sabbath is the main theme, [both] principal [forms of labour] and derivatives are taught;⁴ but there, since the main theme is not the Sabbath, principal labours only are taught, but not derivatives. What are the principal labours? — carryings out! But the carryings out are only two?⁵ And should you answer, some of these involve liability, and some do not involve liability⁶ — surely it is taught on a par with the appearances of leprosy: just as there all involve liability,⁷ so here too all involve liability?—Rather said R. Papa: here that the Sabbath is the main theme, acts of liability and non-liability are taught;⁸ there, since the Sabbath is not the main theme, only acts of liability are taught, but not of exemptions.⁹ Now, what are the cases of liability-carryings out? But the carryings out are [only] two?¹⁰ — There are two forms of carrying out and two of carrying in. But 'carry ings out' are taught?—Said R. Ashi: The Tanna designates carrying in' too as 'carrying out.'¹¹ How do you know it? — Because we learnt: If one carries out [an object] from one domain to another, he is liable. Does this not mean even if he carries [it] in from the public to a private domain, and yet it is called 'carrying out.' And what is the reason? — Every removal of an article from its place the Tanna designates 'carrying out.' Rabina said: Our Mishnah too proves it, because CARRYINGS OUT are taught, yet straightway a definition of carrying in is given; this proves it. Raba said: He [the Tanna] teaches [the number of] domains; the domains of the Sabbath are two.¹²

R. Mattenah objected to Abaye: Are there eight?¹³ but there are twelve!¹⁴ — But according to your reasoning, there are sixteen!¹⁵ Said he to him, That is no difficulty: as for the first clause, it is well:

(1) In Lev. V, 2f, 5-7 a variable sacrifice is also decreed for transgressing through uncleanness. According to the Talmud (Shebu. 7b) this refers to the eating of holy food, e.g., the flesh of sacrifices, and entering the Temple while unclean. Further, liability is contracted only if one was originally aware of his uncleanness, forgot it, and ate sacred food or entered the Temple, and then became conscious of it again. Thus there are two, viz., forgetfulness of uncleanness when eating sacred food, and same when entering the Temple. To these another two are added: forgetfulness of the sacred nature of the food and forgetfulness of the sanctity of the Temple while being aware of one's uncleanness.

(2) The two are 'a rising' and 'a bright spot' (Lev. XIII, 2), which, in order to be unclean, must be snowy white and white as wool respectively. To these the Rabbis added, by exegesis, the whiteness of the plaster of the Temple and the whiteness of the white of an egg respectively—in each case a darker shade.

(3) Bah, on the basis of the text in Shebu. I, 1, reverses the order of the last two.

(4) Labours forbidden on the Sabbath are of two classes: (i) principal labours (aboth, lit., ‘fathers’) and (ii) derivatives (toledoth, lit., ‘offsprings’), which are prohibited as partaking of the nature of the principal labours. Both are regarded as Biblical. Carrying out from private into public ground is a principal labour, while the reverse is a derivative thereof (infra 96b).

(5) Viz., that of the poor man who takes an article from the houseowner’s hand, and that of the master of the house who puts an article into the poor man’s hand. Where then are the ‘two which are four?’

(6) I.e., two carryings out impose liability, as in preceding note, and another two are forbidden yet do not involve liability. Viz., if the poor man stretches his hand within, receives an article, and withdraws it; likewise, if the master of the house puts forth his hand with an object which the other takes, as explained on p. 1, n. 5 on the Mishnah. — Thus there are ‘two which are four,’ all referring to carrying out.

(7) To the purificatory sacrifices of a leper (Lev. XIV).

(8) V. notes on Mishnah.

(9) Two instances of carrying out, and two of carrying in, as explained in the Mishnah.

(10) Though there is liability for carrying in, the Mishnah in Shebu. speaks only of ‘carryings out.’

(11) Employing ‘carrying out’ in the wider sense of transporting between private and public ground.

(12) I.e., in respect of the Sabbath we recognize two domains, public and private, carrying between which is prohibited. On account of these two four acts are forbidden to a person standing within and four to a person standing without, and that is the meaning of ‘TWO WHICH ARE FOUR,’ both here and in Shebu. (Rashi). Riba explains it differently. — Actually four domains are distinguished (infra 6a), but these are the principal two.

(13) ‘TWO WHICH ARE FOUR WITHIN, AND TWO WHICH ARE FOUR WITHOUT.’

(14) In addition to the four acts which involve liability, there are eight which do not. Viz., two acts of removal by the poor man without depositing, i.e., if he stretches his hand into the house and the master takes an object from him, or the master puts his hand without and the poor man places an object in it. Reversing these, we have two acts of depositing by the poor man without removal. These four, again, are also to be viewed from the standpoint of the master of the house, which gives eight in all.

(15) For the two actions which involve liability for the poor man are likewise to be regarded from the standpoint of the master of the house, and vice versa, which yield another four.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 3a

he does not teach what involves no liability and is [also] permitted.¹ But the last clause, where no liability is involved, yet it is forbidden, is indeed difficult.² (But is there in the whole [of the laws relating to] Sabbath [an action described as involving] no liability [yet] permitted: did not Samuel say: Everything [taught as] involving no liability on the Sabbath, involves [indeed] no liability, yet it is forbidden, save these three, which involve no liability and are [also] permitted: [viz.,] the capture of a deer,³ the capture of a snake, and the manipulation of an abscess?⁴ — Samuel desires to say this only of exemptions where an act is performed; but as for exemptions where no act [at all] is done, [of such] there are many?)

Yet still there are twelve? — Non-liable acts whereby one can come to the liability of a sin-offering are counted; those whereby one cannot come to the liability of a sin-offering are not counted.⁵

‘BOTH ARE EXEMPT?’ But between them a [complete] action is performed! — It was taught: [And if anyone] of the common people sin unwittingly, in doing [any of the things etc.]:⁶ only he who performs the whole of it [a forbidden action], but not he who performs a portion thereof. [Hence] if a single person performs it, he is liable; if two perform it, they are exempt. It was stated likewise: R. Hiyya b. Gamada said: It emanated⁷ from the mouth of the company⁸ and they said: ‘In doing’: if a single person performs it, he is liable: if two perform it, they are exempt.

Rab asked Rabbi: If one's neighbour loads him with food and drink, and he carries them without, what is the law? Is the removing⁹ of one's body like the removing of an article from its place, and so he is liable; or perhaps it is not so? He replied: He is liable, and it is not like his hand.¹⁰ What is the reason? — His body is at rest¹¹ whereas his hand is not at rest.¹²

(1) E.g., if the man without extends his hand and places an article into the hand of the man within, the latter commits no action at all, being passive throughout, and, as far as the Sabbath is concerned, he does nothing forbidden.

(2) Why these are not counted as separate actions, as explained in n. 4.

(3) V. infra 106b end and 107a.

(4) V. infra 107a.

(5) Stretching out one's hand with an article from a private to a public domain or vice versa may involve a sin-offering, viz., by depositing the said article in the new domain. But acceptance can never lead to this (Riba).

(6) Lev. IV, 27.

(7) Lit., ‘it was cast forth’.

(8) Of scholars — i.e., it was generally ruled.

(9) Lit., ‘uprooting’.

(10) For, as stated in the Mishnah, if an article is placed in one's hand and he withdraws it, he is exempt.

(11) Hence the article upon his body is likewise at rest, and he effects its removal,

(12) On the ground: hence he does not actually remove the article from its place.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 3b

Said R. Hiyya to Rab: Son of illustrious ancestors! Have I not told you that when Rabbi is engaged on one Tractate you must not question him about another, lest he be not conversant with it. For if Rabbi were not a great man, you would have put him to shame, for he might have answered you incorrectly.¹ Still, he has now answered you correctly, for it was taught: If one was laden with food and drink while it was yet day,² and he carries them out after dark, he is culpable, because it is not like his hand.³

Abaye said: I am certain that a man's hand is neither like a public nor like a private domain:⁴ it is not like a public domain [this follows] from the poor man's hand;⁵ it is not like a private domain — [this follows] from the hand of the master of the house.⁶ Abaye propounded: Can a man's hand become as a karmelith:⁷ did the Rabbis penalize him not to draw it back to himself, or not? — Come and hear: If one's hand is filled with fruit and he stretches it without — one [Baraitha] taught: He may not draw it back; another taught: He may draw it back. Surely they differ in this: one Master holds that it [the hand] is like a karmelith, and the other holds that it is not? [No.] All agree that it is like a karmelith, yet there is no difficulty: the one [refers to a case where it is] below ten [handbreadths], and the other [where it is] above ten [handbreadths].⁸ Alternatively, both [Baraitas refer] to [a hand) below ten, and [hold that] it is not like a karmelith, yet there is no difficulty: one [speaks of a case] while it is yet day; the other, when it is already dark [the Sabbath has commenced]. [If he stretches out his hand] while it is yet day, the Rabbis did not punish him;⁹ if after sunset, the Rabbis punished it. On the contrary, the logic is the reverse: [if he stretches out his hand] by day, so that if he throws it [the article] away he does not come to the liability of a sin-offering,¹⁰ let the Rabbis penalize him; but if [he does it] after nightfall, so that if he throws it away he incurs the liability of a sin-offering, the Rabbis should not punish him. Now, since we do not answer thus,¹¹ you may solve R. Bibi b. Abaye's [problem]. For R. Bibi b. Abaye asked: If a person places a loaf in an oven,¹² do the Rabbis permit him to remove it before he incurs the liability of a sin-offering, or not?¹³ Now you may deduce that they do not permit it!¹⁴ That is no difficulty, and indeed solves it! Alternatively, you cannot solve it, after all: [and reply thus],¹⁵ The one Baraita refers to an unwitting, the other to a deliberate act. Where it is unwitting, the Rabbis did not punish him¹⁶ for it; where it is deliberate, they punished.¹⁷ Another alternative: both [Baraitas] refer to an unwitting act, but here they differ as to whether they [the Rabbis] punished an unwitting [offender] on account of a deliberate one: one Master holds that they did punish an unwitting [offender] on account of a deliberate one; the other, that they did not punish an unwitting [offender] on account of a deliberate one. Another alternative: after all, they did not punish [the one on account of the other], yet there is no difficulty. The one [Baraita] means into the same courtyard; [

(1) Lit., 'he would have given you an answer which is not an answer.'

(2) I.e., before sunset on Friday.

(3) As explained above.

(4) If a man stands in one and stretches out his hand into the other, the hand is not accounted the same as his body, to have the legal status of the domain in which the body is.

(5) For the Mishnah states that if the Master takes an article from the poor man's hand stretched within he is exempt.

(6) If the poor man takes an object from it, he is not liable.

(7) V. infra 6a. A karmelith is part of a public domain which is but little frequented, therefore regarded as neither public nor private ground; by Rabbinical law one may not carry from a karmelith to a public or a private domain, or vice versa. Now, as we have seen, when one stretches out his hand into another domain, it does not enjoy the body's status. Yet does it occupy the intermediate status of a karmelith, and since it holds an object, its owner shall be forbidden to withdraw it until the termination of the Sabbath?

(8) V. infra 100a. If the hand is within ten handbreadths from the ground it is in a public domain, and therefore the Rabbis ordered that he must not withdraw it. But if it is above, it is in a place of non-liability; hence he is not penalized.

(9) Lit. 'it' sc. his hand. They did not compel him to keep his hands stretched out till the termination of the Sabbath.

(10) Since he does not perform a complete forbidden act on the Sabbath.

(11) This reversed answer.

(12) Lit., 'sticks a loaf to (the wall of) an oven.'

(13) If it remains in the oven until baked he incurs a sin-offering for baking on the Sabbath. On the other hand, it is Rabbinically forbidden to remove bread from the oven on the Sabbath. How is it here?

(14) Since the reverse answer is not given, we see that the Rabbis do not abrogate their interdict even when it leads to a liability to a sin-offering.

(15) To reconcile the two Baraitas.

(16) V.n.1.

(17) Thus this has no bearing on R. Bibi b. Abaye's problem.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 4a

the other, into a different courtyard.¹ Even as Raba asked R. Nahman: If a person holds a handful of produce in his hand and he extends it without,² may he withdraw it into the same courtyard? He replied, It is permitted. And what about another courtyard? Said he to him, It is forbidden. And what is the difference? — When you measure out a measure of salt for it!³ There his intention is not carried out; here his intention is carried out.⁴

[To revert to] the main text: 'R. Bibi b. Abaye propounded: If one places a loaf of bread in an oven, do they permit him to remove it before he incurs the liability of a sin-offering or not?' R. Aha b. Abaye said to Rabina: What are the circumstances? Shall we say [that he did it] unwittingly and he did remind himself;⁵ then whom are they to permit?⁶ Hence it must surely mean that he did afterwards become aware thereof,⁷ but then would he be liable? Surely we learnt: All who are liable to sin-offerings are liable only if the beginning and end [of the forbidden action] are unwitting. On the other hand, if his problem refers to a deliberate action, he should have asked [whether he may remove it] before he comes to an interdict involving stoning!⁸ -R. Shila said: After all, it means unwittingly; and [as to the question] 'whom are they to permit?', [the reply is], Others. R. Shesheth demurred: Is then a person told, 'Sin, in order that your neighbour may gain thereby?'⁹ Rather, said R. Ashi, after all it refers to a deliberate act; but say [in the problem], before he comes to an interdict involving stoning.¹⁰ R. Aba son of Raba recited it explicitly: R. Bibi b. Abaye said: If one places a loaf in an oven, he is permitted to remove it before he comes to an interdict involving stoning.

IF THE POOR MAN STRETCHES OUT HIS HAND. Why is he liable? Surely removal and depositing must be from [and into] a place four [handbreadths] square,¹¹ which is absent here?¹² — Said Rabbah: The author of this [Mishnah], is R. Akiba, who maintains: We do not require a place four by four. For we learnt: If one throws [an article] from one private domain to another and public ground lies between: R. Akiba holds him liable; but the Sages hold him not liable. R. Akiba holds: We say, An object intercepted by [air] is as though it rested there;¹³ While the Rabbis maintain: We do not say, An object intercepted by [air] is as though it rested there. Shall we say that Rabbah is certain that they differ as to whether an object intercepted is considered at rest,

(1) When one stands in a courtyard, which is private ground, and stretches his laden hand into the street, he may withdraw it into the same courtyard, but not into an adjoining one and drop the article there.

(2) I.e., into the street.

(3) A jesting remark: then I will tell you the difference.

(4) If he stretches out his hand into the street he wants to remove the produce from that courtyard. Hence he may draw it back into the same, when his intention remains unfulfilled, but not into an adjoining courtyard, whereby his intention would be carried out.

- (5) Before it was completely baked, that it was the Sabbath, or that baking on the Sabbath is forbidden.
- (6) Being unaware of anything wrong, he does not come to ask.
- (7) Before it was baked.
- (8) Which is the penalty for the deliberate desecration of the Sabbath, and not 'before he incurs the liability of a sin-offering'?
- (9) Can one be told to infringe the minor injunction of removing bread from an oven in order to save his neighbour from the greater transgression of baking on the Sabbath?
- (10) From this it is obvious that R. Bibi's original question was merely whether he is permitted to remove it or not. 'Before he incurs etc.,' was a later addition, which R. Ashi emends. The same assumption must be made in similar cases. V. Kaplan, Redaction of the Talmud, Ch. XIII.
- (11) Removal from one domain and depositing in the other necessitates in each case that the object shall rest upon a place four handbreadths square.
- (12) A person's hand does not fulfil this condition.
- (13) Hence when it crosses public ground it is as though it rested there, and so liability is incurred.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 4b

and when it [crosses the public domain] within ten handbreadths [of the ground]?¹ But surely Rabbah asked a question thereon. For Rabbah propounded: Do they disagree when it is below ten, and they differ in this: R. Akiba holds, An object intercepted is as though it rested, while the Rabbis hold that it is not as though it rested; but above ten all agree that he is not liable, all holding that we do not derive throwing from reaching across?² Or perhaps they disagree when it is above ten, and they differ in this: R. Akiba holds, We derive throwing from reaching across, while the Rabbis hold, We do not learn throwing from reaching across; but below ten all agree that he is liable. What is the reason? We say that an object intercepted is as though it rested?—That is no difficulty: after propounding, he solved it that R. Akiba holds that an object intercepted is as though it rested.³

But perhaps he [R. Akiba] does not require depositing [on a place four handbreadths square], yet he may require removal [from such a place]?⁴ Rather, said R. Joseph, the author of this [Mishnah] is Rabbi. Which [ruling of] Rabbi [intimates this]? Shall we say, This [ruling of] Rabbi: If one throws [an object]⁵ and it comes to rest upon a projection,⁶ of a small size,⁷ Rabbi holds him liable; the Sages exempt him? [But] surely there, as we will state below, it is in accordance with Abaye. For Abaye said: The reference here is to a tree standing in private ground while its branch inclines to the street, and one throws [an article] and it comes to rest upon the branch,⁸ Rabbi holding, We say, cast the branch after its trunk;⁹ but the Rabbis maintain; We do not rule, Cast the branch after its stock? — Rather it is this [ruling of] Rabbi. For it was taught: If one throws [an article] from public to public ground, and private ground lies between: Rabbi holds him liable; but the Sages exempt him. Now, Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: Rabbi imposed a twofold liability, one on account of carrying out and one on account of carrying in:¹⁰ this proves that neither removal nor depositing requires a place four by four. But surely it was stated thereon, Rab and Samuel both assert,

(1) For the space above ten does not rank as public ground.

(2) If one reaches over an object from private to private ground across public ground, even if it is above ten handbreadths, he is liable.

(3) Var. lec.:... he solved it. Granted that R. Akiba holds, An object intercepted is as at rest, yet perhaps (etc., continuing text as in next paragraph).

(4) This objection reverts to Rabbah's answer that our Mishnah agrees with R. Akiba.

(5) In the street.

(6) A bracket moulding, or anything which projects from the wall of a house; both the house and the projection are private ground.

(7) Lit., 'whatever (size) it is'. I.e., very small, less than four square.

(8) Which is a projection of the tree.

(9) Hence it is private ground, and therefore liability is incurred. — The tree as a whole is regarded, and so we have 'a place four by four.'

(10) When the object enters the air space in a private domain, there is 'carrying in' from public to private ground; when it leaves it and re-enters the public domain, there is 'carrying out' from private to public ground. Since the man's act has caused both, he is liable twice over.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 5a

Rabbi imposed liability only in the case of a covered-in private domain, for we say that a house is as though it were full,¹ but not in one which is uncovered. And should you answer, Here too [in our Mishnah it speaks of] it as covered, [I might retort] that is well of a covered private ground, but is one liable for a covered public ground? Did not R. Samuel b. Judah say in the name of R. Abba in the name of R. Huna in Rab's name: If one carries an article four cubits in covered public ground, he is not liable, because it is not like the banners of the wilderness?² — Rather, said R. Zera, the authority of this is the 'others.'³ For it was taught: Others say: If he stands still in his place and catches it, he [the thrower] is liable; if he moves from his place and catches it, he [the thrower] is exempt.⁴ [Now it states], 'If he stands in his place and catches it, he [the thrower] is liable', — but surely there must be depositing on an area four [handbreadths square], which is absent! Hence this proves that we [i.e., 'others'] do not require a place four by four. Yet perhaps only depositing [on such an area] is not required, but removal [from such] may be necessary? And even in respect to depositing too: perhaps it means that he spread out his garment and caught it, so that there is also depositing [on such an area]? — Said R. Zera: Our Mishnah also means that he removes it [the article] from a basket and places it in a basket, so that there is depositing too [in a place four square]. But HIS HAND is stated? — Learn: a basket in HIS HAND. Now, that is well of a basket in a private domain; but a basket in public ground ranks as a private domain?⁵ Must we then say that it does not agree with R. Jose son of R. Judah? For it was taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah said: If one fixes a rod in the street, at the top of which is a basket, [and] throws [an article] and it comes to rest upon it, he is liable.⁶ For if it agrees with R. Jose son of R. Judah, WHERE THE MASTER OF THE HOUSE STRETCHES HIS HAND WITHOUT AND PLACES [AN OBJECT] IN THE POOR MAN'S HAND, why is he LIABLE? Surely he [merely] carries it from private ground to private ground! — You may even say [that it agrees with] R. Jose son of R. Judah: There it is above ten [handbreadths];⁷ here it is below ten.⁸ This⁹ presented a difficulty to R. Abbahu: Is then 'a basket in his hand' taught: surely HIS HAND [alone] is stated! Rather, said R. Abbahu, it means that he lowered his hand to within three handbreadths [of the ground] and accepted it.¹⁰ But HE STANDS is taught!¹¹ — It refers to one who bends down. Alternatively, [he is standing] in a pit; another alternative: this refers to a dwarf. Raba demurred:

Does the Tanna trouble to inform us of all these!¹² Rather, said Raba, A man's hand is accounted to him as [an area] four by four. And thus too, when Rabin came,¹³ he said in R. Johanan's name: A man's hand is accounted to him as [an area] four by four.

R. Abin said in the name of R. Elai in R. Johanan's name: If one throws an article and it alights on his neighbour's hand, he is liable. What does he inform us? [that] a man's hand is accounted to him as [an area] four by four! But surely R. Johanan already stated it once? — You might argue. That is only when he himself accounts his hand such,¹⁴ but where he does not account his hand as such,¹⁵ I might say [that it is] not [so]. Therefore we are informed [otherwise].

R. Abin said in R. Elai's name in the name of R. Johanan: If he [the recipient stands still in his place and catches it, [the thrower] is liable; if he moves from his place and catches it, he [the thrower] is exempt. It was taught likewise: Others say: If he stands still in his place and catches it, he [the thrower] is liable; if he moves from his place and catches it, he [the thrower] is exempt.¹⁶ R. Johanan propounded: What if he throws an article and himself moves from his place, and catches it? What is his problem?¹⁷ — Said R. Ada b. Ahaba: His problem concerns two forces in the same man: are two forces in the same man accounted as the action of one man, hence he is liable, or perhaps they count as the action of two men?¹⁸ The question stands over.

R. Abin said in R. Johanan's name: If he puts his hand into his neighbour's courtyard and receives [some] rain, and then withdraws it, he is liable. R. Zera demurred: What does it matter whether his neighbour loads him¹⁹ or Heaven loads him; he himself did not effect removal? — Do not say, he [passively] receives rain, but, he catches it up.²⁰ But removal must be from a place four [square], which is absent? — Said R. Hiyya son of R. Huna: E.g., he catches it up [as it rebounds] from the wall. But even on the wall, it does not rest there?²¹ — It is as Raba²² said [elsewhere], It refers to a sloping wall; so here too it refers to a sloping wall. Now, where was Raba's [dictum] said? — In connection with the following. For we learnt:

(1) Of articles — i.e., it is accounted as though lacking air space entirely, and immediately an object enters therein, we regard it as lying on the ground.

(2) It is stated infra 49b and 96b that the definition of what constitutes forbidden work on the Sabbath is dependent on the work that was done in connection with the Tabernacle in the wilderness. Carrying was necessary, and so carrying an article four cubits is work. But there it was done under the open sky; hence Rab's dictum, and the same applies here. By 'banners of the wilderness' is meant the whole disposition and encampment of the Israelites, and they did not have any covered-in public ground.

(3) In Hor. 13b 'others' is identified with R. Meir.

(4) If A throws an article in the street to B, and B catches it while standing in his place, A is liable, because he is regarded as having both removed and deposited it. But if B moves away and catches it, A did not effect its deposit, since it does not lie where it would have done on account of his throw.

(5) Why then should he be liable in respect of carrying out?

(6) For it ranks as private ground, v. infra 101a.

(7) Then it ranks as private ground.

(8) Then it is public ground.

(9) Explanation of R. Abba.

(10) Everything within three handbreadths is regarded as the ground itself on the principle of labud (v. Glos), and thus the hand becomes a place four square.

(11) And he would have to be sitting for his hand to be so low.

(12) Surely he does not state a law which requires all these conditions. He should rather have taught: If the poor man spreads out his garment, etc.

(13) From Palestine to Babylon. Rabin and R. Dimi were two Palestinian amoraim who travelled between the Palestinian and the Babylonian academies to transmit the teachings of one to the other.

(14) If one intentionally deposits an article in his neighbour's hand, or takes an article into his own, in each case he accounts the hand as a resting place, i.e., an area four square.

(15) I.e., when it merely chances to alight on a man's hand.

(16) V. supra 5a notes.

(17) On what grounds should he be exempted: did he not remove it from one place and deposit it in another?

(18) The throw is one manifestation of his force: the catch arrests that force and is in the nature of a counter act; hence they may be regarded as performed by two people, which involves no liability.

(19) In which case the Mishnah declares him exempt.

(20) Actively. This is assumed to mean that he intercepts the flow of rain, beating it with one hand into the other.

(21) The side of a wall — it being assumed that an ordinary vertical one is meant — affords no resting place for the rain, whereas removal must be from a place where it can stay.

(22) Rashal reads: Rabbah.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 5b

If he is reading a scroll on a threshold, and it rolls out of his hand,¹ he may rewind it to himself.² If one is reading on the top of a roof,³ and the scroll rolls out of his hand, — before it comes within ten handbreadths [of the ground] he may wind it back himself;⁴ if it comes within ten handbreadths, he must turn the written side inwards.⁵ Now, we pondered thereon: why must he turn the written side inwards, surely it did not come to rest?⁶ and Raba answered: This refers to a sloping wall.⁷ Yet may it not be urged that Raba said this [only] of a scroll, whose nature it is to rest [where it falls]; but is it the nature of water to rest?⁸ Rather, said Raba, [R. Johanan spoke of a case] where he collected [the rain] from the top of a [water] hole. 'A hole'! But then it is obvious? — You might argue, Water upon water is not at rest;⁹ [therefore] he [R. Johanan] informs us [that it is].

Now Raba follows his opinion. For Raba said: Water [lying] upon water, that is its [natural] rest; a nut upon water, that is not its [natural] rest.¹⁰ Raba propounded: If a nut [lies] in a vessel, and the vessel floats on water,¹¹ do we regard the nut, which is at rest,¹² or the vessel, which is not at rest, since it is unstable? The question stands over.

In respect to oil floating upon wine R. Johanan b. Nuri and the Rabbis differ. For we learnt: If oil is floating upon wine¹³ and a tebul yom¹⁴ touches the oil, he disqualifies the oil only. R. Johanan b. Nuri said: Both are attached to each other.¹⁵

R. Abin said in R. Elai's name in the name of R. Johanan: If one is laden with food and drink and goes in and out all day,¹⁶ he is liable only when he stands still.¹⁷ Said Abaye: Providing that he stands still to rest.¹⁸ How do you know it? — Because a Master said: Within four cubits, if he stops to rest, he is exempt; to shoulder his burden, he is liable. Beyond four cubits, if he stops to rest, he is liable; to rearrange his burden, he is exempt.¹⁹ What does he [R. Johanan] inform us — that the original removal was not for this purpose?²⁰ But R. Johanan stated it once. For R. Safra said in R. Ammi's name in R. Johanan's name: If one is carrying articles from corner to corner [in private ground] and then changes his mind and carries them out, he is exempt, because his original removal was not for this purpose? — It is dependent on Amoraim: one stated it in the former version; the other stated it in the latter version.²¹

Our Rabbis taught: If one carries [an article] from a shop to an open space via a colonnade,²² he is liable; but Ben 'Azzai holds him not liable. As for Ben 'Azzai, it is well: he holds that walking is like standing.²³ But according to the Rabbis, granted that they hold that walking is not like standing, yet where do we find liability for such a case?²⁴ — Said R. Safra in the name of R. Ammi in R. Johanan's name:

- (1) Into a public domain skirting it.
 - (2) This refers, e.g., to a threshold three handbreadths above the ground and four handbreadths square. This constitutes a karmelith (v. p. 6, n. 7), and even if it entirely falls out of his hand it is only Rabbinically prohibited to carry it back; hence here that he retains one end there is not even that.
 - (3) Which is a private domain. In the East all roofs were flat and put to use; T.A.I, p. 33.
 - (4) Because only the first ten handbreadths above the street surface count as public ground.
 - (5) He must not draw it back, since it has entered public ground, so he reverses it, because it is degrading for a scroll to lie open with its writing upward.
 - (6) Hence he should be permitted to roll it back.
 - (7) V.'Er., Sonc. ed., p. 697 and notes.
 - (8) It does not stay even on a sloping wall.
 - (9) The article must be removed from a place where it may be regarded as naturally at rest, e.g., a stone lying on the ground.
 - (10) And if one picks it up and carries it without, he is not liable.
 - (11) And he lifts up both and carries them out.
 - (12) In the vessel.
 - (13) Both of terumah.
 - (14) V. Glos. He renders terumah (q.v. Glos.) unfit for food.
 - (15) And both become unfit. Thus in respect to the Sabbath too: the Rabbis hold that the oil is not at rest upon the wine, whereas R. Johanan b. Nuri holds that the oil is at rest upon the wine. The same applies to oil floating upon water: wine is mentioned on account of the quotation, as there is no terumah of water.
 - (16) From private to public ground.
 - (17) And then goes in or out; this alone constitutes removal. He was laden in the first place to carry the stuff from one part of a private domain to another, and if he goes out instead it is not removal, since when the food was moved at first there was no intention of carrying from a private to a public domain; v. supra 3a.
 - (18) But if he stops merely to rearrange the burden, it is all part of his walking.
 - (19) One is liable for carrying an article four cubits over public ground, providing that he himself removes it from the first spot and deposits it on the other. Now, if he stops to rest within the four cubits, that constitutes depositing, and when he restarts there is a fresh removal; consequently, the article was carried four cubits with a single removal and deposit, and so he is exempt. But if he stops to rearrange the burden, it is still part of the first removal; therefore he is liable. Hence if he stops to rest after walking four cubits, he is regarded as depositing the article there, and is liable. But if he stops to rearrange his burden, he is still engaged in walking, and should another relieve him of it before he stops to rest, both are exempt.

(20) Viz., to carry it without, and so he is not liable.

(21) R. Johanan did not teach both, but amoraim reporting his words gave different versions of what he did state.

(22) The shop is private ground, the open space is public ground, and the colonnade ranks as a karmelith, being occupied by stall holders and not frequented as a public thoroughfare.

(23) When he walks through the colonnade it is as though he stood there. Hence he performs two separate actions: (i) carrying an object from private ground to a karmelith; (ii) carrying an object from a karmelith to public ground. Neither of these imposes liability.

(24) In Scripture, by analogy with the Tabernacle (v. p. 11, n. 2) we find liability only for direct transference from private to public ground.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 6a

Compare it to one who carries an article in the street: there, surely, though he is not liable as long as he holds it and proceeds, yet when he lays it down he is liable; so here too, it is not different. How compare! there, wherever he puts it down it is a place of liability; but here, if he deposits it in the colonnade, it is a place of non-liability? Rather compare it to one who carries an article [in the street] exactly four [cubits].¹ There, surely, though he is exempt if he deposits it within the four cubits, yet when he deposits it at the end of the four cubits he is liable; so here too, it is not different. How compare? There it is a place of exemption [only] as far as this man is concerned, but to all others² it is a place of liability; but here it is a place of exemption for all? Rather compare it to one who carries [an object] from private to public ground through the sides of the street:³ there, surely, though he is exempt if he lays it down in the sides of the street, yet when he lays it down in the street [itself] he is liable; so here too it is not different.

R. Papa demurred thereto: that is well according to the Rabbis, who maintain that the sides of the street are not regarded as the street; but according to R. Eliezer [b. Jacob],⁴ who rules that the sides of the street are regarded as the street, what can be said? — Said R. Aha son of R. Ika to him: Granted that you know R. Eliezer [b. Jacob] to rule that the sides of the street are regarded as the street where there is no fencing;⁵ but do you know him [to rule thus] where there is fencing?⁶ Hence it⁷ is analogous to this.

R. Johanan said: Yet Ben 'Azzai agrees in the case of one who throws.⁸ It was taught likewise: If one carries [an object] from a shop to an open place through a colonnade, he is liable, whether he carries [it] out or carries [it] in; or whether he reaches it across or throws it. Ben 'Azzai said: If he carries it out or in, he is exempt; if he reaches it across or throws it, he is liable.

Our Rabbis taught: There are four domains in respect to the Sabbath; private ground, public ground, karmelith, and a place of non-liability. And what is private ground? A trench ten [handbreadths] deep and four wide, and likewise a wall ten [handbreadths] high and four broad, — that is absolute private ground.⁹ And what is public ground? A highroad,¹⁰ a great public square,¹¹ and open alleys,¹² — that is absolute public ground. One may not carry out from this private to this public ground, nor carry in from this public to this private ground; and if one does carry out or in, unwitting, he is liable to a sin-offering; if deliberately, he is punished by kareth¹³ or stoned.¹⁴ But the sea, a plain, a colonnade, or a karmelith, ranks neither as public nor as private ground:¹⁵ one must not carry [objects] about¹⁶ within it and if he does, he is liable; and one must not carry out [an object] thence into public ground or from the public ground into it, nor carry [an object] from it into private ground or from the private ground into it; yet if he does carry out or in, he is not liable. As to courtyards with many owners¹⁷ and blind alleys,¹⁸ if an 'erub is made, they are permitted; if an 'erub is not made, they are forbidden.¹⁹ A man standing on a threshold²⁰ may take [an object] from the master of the house, or give [it] to him, and may take [an object] from the poor man or give [it] to him; providing however that he does not take from the master of the house and give to the poor man or from the poor man and give it to the master of the house;²¹ and if he does take and give, the three are exempt. Others state, A threshold serves as two domains: if the door is open, it is as within; if shut, it is as without. But if the threshold is ten [handbreadths] high and four broad, it is a separate domain.²² The Master said: 'That is [absolute] private ground.' What does this exclude?²³ — It excludes the following [view] of R. Judah. For it was taught: Even more than this did R. Judah say: If one owns two houses on the opposite sides of the street,²⁴ he can place

(1) Lit., 'from the beginning of four to the end of four'.

(2) To whom the limit of four cubits terminates at this particular spot.

(3) E.g., if the wall of a private courtyard fronting on the street is broken through, the place of the wall is called the sides of the street. In 'Er. 94b (quoted below) it is disputed whether this is private or public ground; yet when one carries an object into the street through the breach he is certainly liable.

(4) b. Jacob is omitted in 'Er. 94b and Keth. 31a.

(5) Rashi: stakes against which vehicles rub to protect the wall.

(6) And yet if one carries through the breach into the street he is liable.

(7) The case of the colonnade.

(8) From a shop to an open place through a colonnade: he is then liable.

(9) Even if they are in a public thoroughfare. A house, of course, is also private ground.

(10) Jast.: a camp.

(11) Or, an open place.

(12) i.e., open at both ends into streets.

(13) If he was not formally warned.

(14) If formally warned.

(15) The former, because they are not for the general passage of the multitude; the latter, because they are not enclosed. It should be observed that 'public ground' does not mean any ground that is open to the public, but that which is actually frequented by the masses.

(16) Lit., 'carry and give,' across a distance of four or more cubits.

(17) I.e., a courtyard into which many houses open and which itself abuts on the street. The inhabitants of these houses own the courtyard in common and must pass through it into the street.

(18) These too are provided with courtyards through which the inhabitants pass into the streets.

(19) For 'erub v. Glos. If the separate householders make an 'erub, e.g., each contributing a little flour for baking a large loaf, all the houses and the courtyard into which they open are counted as one domain, and carrying between them is permitted. Again, if all the courtyards are thus joined by an 'erub, carrying is permitted between the courtyards themselves and between them and the blind alley on which they abut.

(20) This is less than four handbreadths square, and is a place of non-liability, i.e., not a separate domain at all, but counted with public or private ground indifferently.

(21) This is a Rabbinical measure, lest one treat the Sabbath lightly and carry direct between public or private ground.

(22) Like the trench or wall mentioned above. it is private ground, yet not part of the house, and carrying between the two is prohibited.

(23) The emphasis suggests that only that is private ground.

(24) Facing each other.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 6b

a board or a beam at each side¹ and carry between them.² Said they to him: A street cannot be made fit [for carrying] by an 'erub in this way.³ And why is it called 'absolute' [public ground]? — You might argue, The Rabbis differ from R. Judah, [maintaining] that it is not private ground only in respect of carrying [therein]:⁴ but in respect of throwing⁵ they agree with R. Judah:⁶ hence we are informed [otherwise].

The Master said: 'That is [absolute] public ground.' What does this exclude? — It excludes R. Judah's other [ruling]. For we learnt: R. Judah said: If the public thoroughfare interposes between them, it must be removed to the side; but the Sages maintain: It is unnecessary.⁷ And why is it called 'absolute'? — Because the first clause states 'absolute', the second does likewise. Now, let the desert too be enumerated, for it was taught: What is public ground? A high-road, a great open space, open alleys and the desert?—Said Abaye, There is no difficulty: The latter means when the Israelites dwelt in the desert; the former refers to our own days.⁸

The Master said: 'If one carries out or in, unwittingly, he is liable to a sin-offering; if deliberately, he is punished by kareth or stoned.' 'Unwittingly, he is liable to a sin-offering': but it is obvious? — It is necessary [to state] 'If deliberately, he is punished by kareth or stoned.' But that too is obvious? — We are informed the following, in agreement with Rab. For Rab said, I found a secret scroll of the school of R. Hiyya⁹ wherein it is written, Issi b. Judah said: There are thirty-nine principal labours, but one is liable only [for] one. Yet that is not so? for we learnt: The principal labours are forty less one: and we pondered thereon, Why state the number?¹⁰ And R. Johanan answered: [To teach] that if one performs all of them in one state of unawareness,¹¹ he is liable for each separately! Rather, say thus: for one of these he is not liable; and so we are informed here that this one [sc. carrying] is of those about which there is no doubt.

The Master said: 'But the sea, a plain, a colonnade, and a karmelith rank neither as public nor as private ground.' But is a plain neither private nor public ground? Surely we learnt: A plain: in summer it is private ground in respect to the Sabbath and public ground in respect to uncleanness;¹² in winter it is private ground in both respects!¹³ — Said 'Ulla: After all it is a karmelith; yet why is it called private ground? Because it is not public ground.¹⁴ R. Ashi said:

(1) Of one of the houses.

(2) R. Judah holds that two partitions facing each other render the space between private ground by Biblical law. The outside walls of the houses are two such partitions, while the two are added to mark out this particular space and distinguish it from the rest of the street.

(3) V. 'Er., Sonc. ed., p. 32 notes.

(4) Forbidding it as a precautionary measure, lest one carry in public ground too.

(5) An object from other public ground into this.

(6) That liability is incurred, because by Biblical law two partitions constitute private ground,

(7) A well ten handbreadths deep and four broad in a public highway is private ground, as stated above; consequently, if one draws water and places it at the side, he desecrates the Sabbath. Therefore the Rabbis enacted that it should be surrounded by boards, even at some distance, and placed at intervals, providing that there is not a gap of more than ten cubits between any two; this renders the whole private ground, as though it were entirely enclosed. But R. Judah maintains that if the actual road taken by travellers lies between these boards, it destroys its character as private ground and makes it public ground in spite of the boards, and therefore it must be diverted. The emphasis in our Baraitha — that is public ground — is to reject this view of R. Judah.

(8) When it is not frequented.

(9) ohr, x, kdn Rashi: When a scholar heard a new law which had no authoritative tradition behind it and was thus rejected by the schools, he committed it to writing for fear that he might forget it, and kept it secret. Weiss, Dor, II, 189 thinks that the scroll contained views which R. Juda ha-Nasi had desired to exclude from his authoritative compilation, and therefore it was kept concealed. — On these lines a very considerable portion of the Baraitha would have had to be kept secret! Kaplan, Redaction of the Talmud, p. 277 suggests that the concealed scroll contained laws which were unsuited for unrestricted publicity. He also suggests that the phrase may not mean 'concealed' but written in a 'concealed', i.e. esoteric style. But there is nothing particularly esoteric about the style of the law quoted here. V. also Levi, Worterbuch s.v.

(10) Since they are all stated separately,

(11) I.e., he is unaware throughout that these are forbidden on the Sabbath.

(12) In summer it is not sown, hence a few may pass through it, yet not many will trouble to leave the highway. Hence carrying therein is permitted. With respect to uncleanness, it is a general principle that if a doubt arises in a strictly private place, a stringent ruling is given, and the article or person concerned is unclean; if it arises in a public i.e., not a strictly private place, we are lenient. Hence, since the plain is not strictly private, it ranks as public ground.

(13) Since it is sown, no stranger enters therein.

(14) And as the main purpose of that Mishnah is to draw a distinction between the Sabbath and uncleanness, that is sufficient, without pointing out that it is a karmelith.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 7a

E.g., when it has barriers,¹ and [this is] in accordance with the following dictum of 'Ulla in R. Johanan's name: An enclosure more than two se'ahs [in area]² which is not enclosed in attachment to a dwelling place,³ even if it is a kor or two kor [in area],⁴ if one throws [an article] therein [from public ground] he is liable. What is the reason? It is a partitioned area, but it lacks inhabitants.⁵ Now, as for R. Ashi, it is well that he does not explain it as 'Ulla;⁶ but why does 'Ulla not explain it in accordance with his own dictum? — He answers you: if it has barriers, is it called a plain: [surely] it is an enclosure! And R. Ashi?⁷ - 'Private ground' is taught.⁸

'And a karmelith.' Are then all these [sea, plain and colonnade] too not karmelith? — When R. Dimi came,⁹ he said in the name of R. Johanan: This is necessary only in respect of a corner near a street¹⁰ : though the masses sometimes press and overflow therein,¹¹ yet since it is inconvenient for [general] use, it ranks as a karmelith.

When R. Dimi came, he said in R. Johanan's name: [The place] between the pillars¹² is treated as a karmelith. What is the reason? Though the general public walk through there, since they cannot proceed with ease,¹³ it is as a karmelith. R. Zera said in Rab Judah's name: The balcony in front of the pillars is treated as a karmelith. Now, he who stated thus of [the ground] between the pillars, — how much more so the balcony!¹⁴ But he who mentions the balcony-only the balcony [ranks as a karmelith], because it is inconvenient for [general] use, but not [the ground] between the pillars, which is convenient for [general] use.¹⁵ Another version: but [the place] between the pillars, through which the public occasionally walk, is as public ground.

Rabbah b. Shila said in R. Hisda's name: If a brick is standing upright in the street, and one throws [an article]¹⁶ and it adheres to its side, he is liable; on top, he is not liable.¹⁷ Abaye and Raba both state: Providing that it is three handbreadths high, so that the public do not step on it;¹⁸ but thorns and shrubs, even if not three [handbreadths] high.¹⁹ Hiyya b. Rab maintained: Even thorns and shrubs, but not dung.²⁰ R. Ashi ruled: Even dung.

Rabbah, of the school of R. Shila, said: When R. Dimi came,²¹ he said in the name of R. Johanan: No karmelith can be less than four [handbreadths square].²² And R. Shesheth said: And it extends²³ up to ten. What is meant by, 'and it extends up to ten?' Shall we say that only if there is a partition ten [handbreadths high] is it a karmelith, not otherwise;²⁴ but is it not? Surely R. Gidal said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in Rab's name: In the case of a house, the inside of which is not ten [hand breadths in height] but its covering makes it up to ten, it is permitted to carry on the roof over the whole [area];²⁵ but within, one may carry only four cubits!²⁶ But what is meant by 'and it extends up to ten?' That only up to ten is it a karmelith, but not higher.²⁷ And even as Samuel said to Rab Judah, Keen scholar!²⁸ In matters concerning the Sabbath do not consider²⁹ aught above ten. In what respect? Shall we say, that there is no private ground above ten? Surely R. Hisda said: If one fixes a rod in private ground³⁰ and throws [an article from the street] and it alights on the top, even if it is a hundred cubits high, he is liable, because private ground extends up to heaven!

(1) i.e., it is enclosed by a fence, wall, etc. Though the Rabbis treat it as a karmelith in so far that carrying therein is forbidden, it is nevertheless private ground by Biblical law, and carrying between it and public ground involves liability. It is in that sense that the Mishnah designates it a private domain.

(2) Se'ah is primarily a measure of capacity; by transference it is used as a surface measure on the basis that two se'ahs' seed require an area of five thousand square cubits.

(3) V. Rashi: Aliter: which is not enclosed for living purposes.

(4) 1 kor = 6 se'ahs.

(5) An enclosed place is private ground by Biblical law, whatever its size. Now, if it is attached to a dwelling (or enclosed for living purposes), e.g., a house stood in a field and then the field, upon which one of the doors of the house opens, was enclosed, it remains private ground by Rabbinical law too. But if it is not connected with a house, it is private ground only up to the area of two se'ahs; beyond that one may not carry therein by Rabbinical law. Since, however, it is private ground by Biblical law, if one throws an article into it from public ground he is liable, and to this the Mishnah quoted refers when it states that a plain is private ground.

(6) Viz., that the Mishnah means that it is a karmelith, because he prefers to explain it in accordance with 'Ulla's other dictum.

(7) That being so, why does he not accept 'Ulla's explanation?

(8) Which is definitely not a karmelith.

- (9) V. p. 12, n. 9.
- (10) At which stood a house the front of which the owner had thrown open to the public.
- (11) When the street is very crowded.
- (12) Pillars were erected in public squares or markets, upon which traders hung their wares.
- (13) Lit., 'directly'. On account of the numerous pillars, which were not always in a straight line.
- (14) Which is even less convenient. — The balcony was used as a stand for traders' stalls.
- (15) In his opinion.
- (16) Across a distance of at least four cubits.
- (17) When an article lies in the street and is less than ten handbreadths high and four square it is a place of non-liability; but that is only in respect of what can be put to a well-defined, natural use; e.g., the top of a low wall or of a brick, upon which articles may be placed. But the side of a wall or a brick can only give accidental service, as in the example, and in that case everything less than ten handbreadths high is as the street itself, and so when one throws an article and after traversing four cubits it cleaves to the side of the brick, it is as though it fell in the street, and he is liable. But the top, which, as explained by Abaye and Raba, is three handbreadths high, constitutes a separate domain — a place of non-liability.
- (18) Then it is not part of the street; v. preceding note. [Whether the surface area of the brick has to be four square handbreadths v. Tosaf. a.l.].
- (19) Rank as a separate domain, because people avoid stepping on them.
- (20) People wearing thick shoes may step upon the former; but dung is avoided.
- (21) V. P. 12, n. 9.
- (22) If it is, it is not a karmelith but a place of non-liability.
- (23) Lit., 'takes hold'.
- (24) I.e., an enclosed space less than two se'ahs in area and not attached to a house (v. p. 21, n. 7) is a karmelith only if its fencing is ten handbreadths high.
- (25) The roof is ten high, and therefore private ground.
- (26) Since it is unfit for a dwelling, its walls are disregarded and it ranks not as a private domain but as a karmelith (R. Han.). This is the reverse of our hypothesis.
- (27) If its top is more than ten handbreadths above ground level it is not a karmelith.
- (28) Or, man of long teeth.
- (29) Lit., 'be'.
- (30) A rod is generally less than four handbreadths square.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 7b

But [if it means] that there is no public ground above ten,¹ it is our Mishnah! For we learnt: If one throws [an article] four cubits on to a wall above ten handbreadths, it is as though he throws it into the air;² if below ten, it is as though he throws it on to the ground.³ Hence he must refer to a karmelith, [teaching] that there is no karmelith above ten. And [R. Dimi and R. Shesheth inform us that] the Rabbis treated it with the leniencies of both private and public ground. 'With the leniencies of private ground': that only if [it measures] four [handbreadths square] is it a karmelith, but if not it is simply a place of non-liability. 'With the leniencies of public ground': only up to ten is it a karmelith, but above ten it is not a karmelith.

[To revert to] the main text: 'R. Gidal said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in Rab's name: In the case of a house, the inside of which is not ten [handbreadths in height] but its covering makes it up to ten, it is permitted to carry on the roof thereof over the whole [area]; but within, one may carry only four cubits.' Said Abaye: But if one digs out four square [handbreadths]⁴ and makes it up to ten, carrying over the whole is permitted. What is the reason? [The rest] is [as] cavities of a private domain, and such are [themselves] a private domain.⁵ For it was stated: The cavities of a private domain constitute private ground. As to the cavities of a public domain,⁶ — Abaye said: They are as public ground; Raba said: They are not as public ground.⁷ Said Raba to Abaye: According to you who maintains that the cavities of public ground are as public ground, wherein does it differ from what R. Dimi, when he came, said in the name of R. Johanan: 'This is necessary only in respect of a corner near to the street',⁸ — yet let it be as cavities of a public domain? — There the use thereof is inconvenient; here the use thereof is convenient.

We learnt: If one throws an article four cubits on to a wall, above ten handbreadths, it is as though he throws it into the air; if below ten, it is as though he throws it on to the ground.⁹ Now we discussed this: why 'as though he throws it on the ground'; surely it does not rest [there]?¹⁰ And R. Johanan answered: This refers to a juicy cake of figs.¹¹ But if you maintain that the cavities of public ground are as public ground, why relate it to a juicy cake of figs; relate it to a splinter or any article and it is a case where it alighted in a cavity?—Sometimes he answered him, A splinter or any other article are different, because they fall back;¹² sometimes he answered him: The reference must be to a wall not possessing a cavity. — How do you know it? — Because the first clause states: If one throws above ten handbreadths, it is as though he throws it into the air. Now if you imagine that this refers to a wall with a cavity, why is it as though he throws it into the air; surely it came to rest in the cavity?¹³ And should you answer, Our Mishnah [refers to a cavity] that is not four square, — surely did not Rab Judah say in R. Hiyya's name: If one throws [an article] above ten handbreadths and it goes and alights in a cavity of any size,¹⁴ we come to a controversy of R. Meir and the Rabbis, R. Meir holding, We [imaginarily] hollow it out to complete it,¹⁵ while the Rabbis maintain, We do not hollow it out to complete it.¹⁶ Hence it surely follows that the reference is to a wall without a cavity. This proves it.

[To revert to] the main text: R. Hisda said: If one fixes a rod in private ground and throws [an article from the street] and it alights on the top, even if it is a hundred cubits high, he is liable, because private ground extends up to heaven'. Shall we say that R. Hisda holds with Rabbi?¹⁷ For it was taught: If one throws [an object] and it alights upon a projection of whatever size; Rabbi holds him liable; the Sages exempt him!

(1) I.e., anything above ten handbreadths from ground level is not treated as public ground.

(2) He is not liable.

(3) And since it traverses four cubits, he is liable. — Why then need Samuel state it?

(4) I.e., he lowers the level of four square handbreadths of the ground.

(5) Cavities in a wall bounding private ground rank as private ground. Here, the lowered portion is true private ground, and the rest is regarded as cavities in an imaginary wall surrounding it.

(6) I.e., in a wall fronting a street.

(7) But constitute a separate domain. If four handbreadths square, they are a karmelith; if less, a place of non-liability.

(8) V- supra 7a, notes, it is there accounted as a karmelith.

(9) Mishnah, infra 100a.

- (10) Since it must rebound at least slightly, the final distance is less than the four cubits that is the least for which a penalty is incurred.
- (11) Which sticks.
- (12) Lit., 'come again'. Even if they do not rebound.
- (13) Which, if four handbreadths square, is private ground.
- (14) I.e., less than four square.
- (15) Where the wall is thick enough, we regard the small cavity as enlarged to four square, and liability is incurred.
- (16) And since the Mishnah under discussion is anonymous, it reflects R. Meir's view; v. Sanh. 86a.
- (17) That depositing upon a place four handbreadths square is not required.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 8a

— Said Abaye: In the case of private ground none differ, agreeing with R. Hisda. But here the reference is to a tree standing in private ground, while a branch inclines to the street, and one throws [an article] and it alights on the branch: Rabbi holds, We say, Cast the branch after its trunk; but the Rabbis maintain, We do not say, Cast the branch after its trunk.¹

Abaye said: If one throws a bin² into the street, [even] if it is ten [handbreadths] high but not six broad, he is liable; if six broad, he is exempt.³ Raba said: Even if it is not six broad, he is [still] exempt. What is the reason? It is impossible for a piece of cane not to project above ten.⁴ If he overturns it,⁵ mouth downwards, [and throws it], then if it is a shade more than seven [in height] he is liable; if seven and a half, he is exempt.⁶ R. Ashi said: Even if it is seven and a half, he is liable. What is the reason? The walls are made for their contents.⁷

'Ulla said: If there is a column nine [handbreadths high] in the street, and the public rest and rearrange their burdens thereon,⁸ and one throws [an object] and it alights upon it, he is liable. What is the reason? It if is less than three, the multitude step upon it;⁹ from three to nine, they neither walk upon it nor arrange their burdens upon it;¹⁰ nine, they certainly re-arrange their burdens upon it.¹¹ Abaye asked R. Joseph: What of a pit?¹² — He replied: The same holds good of a pit. Raba said: It does not hold good of a pit. What is the reason? Service through difficulty is not designated service.¹³

R. Adda b. Mattenah raised an objection before Raba: If one's basket is lying in the street, ten [handbreadths] high and four broad,¹⁴ one may not move an object] from it into the street or from the street into it; but if less, one may carry; and the same applies to a pit. Surely that refers to the second clause?¹⁵ — No: to the first clause.

He raised an objection:

(1) V. supra 4b for notes.

(2) Jast.: a large round vessel, receptacle of grain, water, etc.

(3) A circle with a diameter of six is the least (roughly) in which a square of four can be inscribed. Now, as stated above (6a), an object four square is a separate domain itself, and no liability is incurred for throwing one domain into another.

(4) Since it is ten handbreadths high, it is impossible that the top and bottom canes of the circumference shall be absolutely even and straight, and so something must project above ten from ground level, which is a place of non-liability, not public ground. But in order to incur liability the whole of the article thrown must rest in public ground.

(5) Where it was less than six handbreadths broad (Rashi).

(6) It is a principle that the walls of an object are regarded as extending beyond its opening down to the ground itself as soon as that opening comes within a shade less than three handbreadths from the ground. V. Glos. s.v. labud. Hence, when this overturned bin, which is a shade more than seven in height (and certainly if less), enters within just under three handbreadths from the ground and is regarded as already resting on the ground, the whole is within ten from the ground, and therefore he is liable. But if it is slightly taller than this it is partly above ten; hence there is no liability.

(7) I.e., to enable it to be used as a receptacle, and not to create an imaginary extension downwards.

(8) it being of the exact height to facilitate this.

(9) And it is therefore part of the street.

(10) It is too low for the latter purpose.

(11) And since it is thus put to public use, it is part of the thoroughfare.

(12) Nine deep.

(13) It can only be used with difficulty; therefore it is not part of the street.

(14) As such it is private ground; v. supra fol. 6a.

(15) sc. o n nine handbreadths.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 8b

If one intends to take up his Sabbath abode in a public ground, and places his 'erub¹ in a pit above ten handbreadths, it is a valid 'erub; if below ten handbreadths, it is not a valid 'erub.² How is this meant? Shall we say, [he placed it] in a pit ten [handbreadths] in depth, and 'above' means that he raised [the bottom] and set it [the 'erub] there;³ and 'below' means that he lowered it⁴ and set it there: what is the difference between above and below? He is in one place and his erub in another!⁵ Hence it must surely refer to a pit not ten deep,⁶ and it is taught, it is a valid 'erub, which proves that use with difficulty is regarded as use?⁷ Sometimes he answered him: Both he and his 'erub were in a karmelith,⁸ and why is it called public ground? Because it is not private ground.⁹ And sometimes he answered him: He was on public ground while his 'erub was in a karmelith, this agreeing with Rabbi, who maintained: Whatever is [interdicted] as a shebuth¹⁰ was not forbidden at twilight.¹¹ And do not think that I am merely putting you off, but I say it to you with exactitude.¹² For we learnt: If there is a water pool and a public road traverses it, if one throws [an object] four cubits therein, he is liable. And what depth constitutes a pool? Less than ten handbreadths. And if there is a pool of water traversed by a public road, and one throws [an object] four cubits therein,¹³ he is liable. Now, as for mentioning this pool twice, it is well; one refers to summer and the other to winter, and both are necessary. For if we were informed [this about] summer, [it might be said the reason] is because it is the practice. of people to cool themselves;¹⁴ but in winter I would say [that it is] not [so]. And if we were informed this of winter, [it might be id the reason] is because becoming mud-stained¹⁵ it may happen that he goes down [into the water]; but in summer [I would say that it is] not [so]; thus both are necessary. But why mention traversing, twice? Hence. it must surely follow that a passage under difficulties¹⁶ is regarded as a [public] passage, whereas use under difficulties is not regarded as [public] use.¹⁷ This proves it . Rab Judah said: In the case of a bundle of canes: if one repeatedly throws it down and raises it,¹⁸ he is not liable unless he lifts it up.¹⁹

The Master said: 'A man standing on a threshold may take [an object] from or give [it] to the master of the house, and may take an object] from or give [it] to the poor man.' What is this threshold? Shall we say, a threshold of a public road?²⁰ [How state that] he 'may take [an object] from the master of the house'? Surely he [thereby] carries [it] from private to public ground! Again, if it is a threshold of a private domain-[how state that] 'he may take [an object] from the poor man'? Surely he [thereby] carries [it] from public to private ground? Or again if it is a threshold of a karmelith,²¹ — [how state that] 'he may take or give' [implying] even at the very outset? But after all, the prohibition does exist.²² Rather it must mean a threshold which is merely a place of non-liability, e.g., if it is not four [handbreadths] square. And [it is] even as what R. Dimi, when he came,²³ said in the name of R. Johanan: A place which is less than four square, the denizens both of public and private ground may rearrange their burdens upon it, provided that they do not exchange.²⁴

The Master said: 'Providing that he does not take from the. master of the house and give to the poor man or the reverse, and if he does take and give [from one to the other], the three are exempt.' Shall we say that this refutes Raba? For Raba said: if one carries an object full four cubits²⁵ in the street, even if he carries it

(1) V. Glos.

(2) Lit., 'his 'erub is an 'erub ... his 'erub is not an 'erub.' On the Sabbath one may not go more than two thousand cubits out of the town. This, however, may be extended by placing some food (called an 'erub) at any spot within the two thousand cubits on Friday; by a legal fiction that spot becomes the Sabbath abode, since he can now eat his meal there, and from there he is permitted to walk a further two thousand cubits in any direction. This food must so be placed that it is permissible to take it on the Sabbath.

(3) E.g., he placed a small board on the bottom and the food upon it.

(4) E.g., by removing some of the earth at the bottom.

(5) The whole of that pit being ten deep, it is private ground (supra 6a), and no object in it, even if raised to the very edge, may be taken out into the thoroughfare. Hence the 'erub is inaccessible, and therefore invalid.-'He is in one place' — sc. in public ground, 'and his 'erub in another,'-in private ground.

(6) 'Above' and 'below' referring to the bottom of the pit.

(7) For otherwise it would not be regarded as public ground.

(8) E.g., the pit was in a plain; supra fol. 6a.

(9) Cf. supra 6b.

(10) V. Glos. This includes carrying between public ground and a karmelith.

(11) On Friday, because it is doubtful whether twilight belongs to the day (Friday) or night (the Sabbath), while a shebuth itself is not a stringent prohibition. Hence he could have taken out his food at twilight, which is just the time when the 'erub acquires that spot for him as his resting place for the Sabbath,

(12) Viz., that service with difficulty is not regarded as public use.

(13) I.e., it travels four cubits before it alights.

(14) Hence it is open for public use.

(15) Through travelling.

(16) As when the public road traverses a pool.

(17) This is deduced from the emphasis on 'traversing'.

- (18) Thus moving it: yet he does not actually lift it entirely from the ground at any moment.
- (19) Lit., 'removes it' completely from the ground.
- (20) Rashi: e.g., one leading to an alley.
- (21) Being four handbreadths square but less than ten high, so that it does not rank as private ground.
- (22) Of carrying between a karmelith and public or private ground, though its infringement is not punishable.
- (23) V. p. 12, n. 9.
- (24) Using it as a means of transport between public and private ground.
- (25) Lit., 'from the beginning of four to the end of four.'

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 9a

across [or, over] himself,¹ he is liable.² -There it does not come to rest [in the place of non-liability], whereas here it does.³

'Others state, A threshold serves as two domains: if the door is open, it is as within; if the door is shut, it is as without.'⁴ Even if it has no stake?⁵ But R. Hama b. Goria said in Rab's name: That which lies within the opening requires another stake to permit it.⁶ And should you answer that [the reference is to a threshold which] is not four square: surely R. Hama b. Goria said in Rab's name: That which lies within the opening, even if less than four square, requires another stake to permit it!-Said Rab Judah in Rab's name: The reference here is to the threshold of an alley, half of which [threshold] is covered and half uncovered, the covering being toward the inner side: [hence] if the door is open, it is as within; if the door is shut, it is as without.⁷ R. Ashi said: After all, it refers to the threshold of a house, and e.g., where it is covered over with two beams, neither being four [handbreadths wide], and there are less than three [handbreadths] between them, while the door is in the middle: if the entrance is open, it is as within, if shut, it is as without.⁸

'But if the threshold is ten [handbreadths] high and four broad, it is a separate domain.' This supports R. Isaac b. Abdimi. For R. Isaac b. Abdimi said, R. Meir⁹ used to teach: Wherever you find two domains which are really one, e.g., a pillar in private ground ten high and four broad, one may not re-arrange a burden thereon, for fear of a mound in a public domain.¹⁰

(1) Rashi: above his hand; i.e., through space more than ten handbreadths from the ground, which is a place of non-liability. R. Han. and Tosaf.: from the right to the left hand, i.e., across his body.

(2) On Rashi's interpretation the difficulty is obvious: carrying an object via a place of non-liability is the same as transferring it from public to private ground by way of a threshold, which is a similar place, yet Raba rules that the former imposes liability, whereas the Baraita states that the three are exempt. According to R. Han. and Tosaf. the difficulty appears to be this: when a person passes an object from one hand to another, his own body not moving, he is in a similar position to this man who stands on the threshold and takes the one and gives to the other, himself not moving, and its passing his stationary body in the former case is the same as when in the latter case it is laid down on the threshold; so, at least, one might argue. (Tosaf. a.l. s.v. tnhk and in 'Er. 98a s.v. rntvu)

(3) Hence in the case posited by Raba we disregard the method of its passage and condemn him for carrying an object four cubits in the street.

(4) Rashi: this is now assumed to refer to a threshold lying at the opening of a blind alley between it and the public road. An alley was made fit for carrying by planting a stake at the side of the opening, which by a legal fiction was regarded as a complete partition stretching right across, and it is understood that this threshold is excluded from the partitioning influence of a stake, which was fixed at the inner side of the threshold. Tosaf. explains it somewhat differently.

(5) On the outer side; v. preceding note.

(6) 'That which ... opening' is understood to mean the threshold, it being assumed that the stake is fixed on its inner side, so that the threshold does not come within its influence and therefore it must be enclosed, as it were, and converted into private ground before carrying therein is permitted. This contradicts the Baraita.

(7) This alley was rendered fit for carrying not by a stake but by a beam across its front (v. 'Er. 11b); and it was also furnished with a door or gate at its opening. Now, the threshold referred to here lies in front of the door, while the beam overhead covers the inner half of the threshold. If the door is open (it opened inwards) the whole threshold is counted as part of the alley, and so it is permitted; if it is closed, the threshold is shut out, and even the portion under the beam is forbidden.

(8) The entrance was covered over from above; if the cover was a single beam four handbreadths wide, everything beneath it, including the threshold, is permitted, as imaginary partitions are assumed to descend from the sides of the beam parallel to the house and enclose the entrance. But this assumption is not made when the beam is less than four in width. Again, when two beams are less than three handbreadths apart, the whole, including the space, is regarded as one, on the principle of labud, providing that there is nothing between them to break their imaginary unity. Now, the reference here is to a threshold in the middle of which the door is set. If this entrance is open, nothing breaks the unity above, and since the width of the two beams plus the space between is four cubits, the threshold is permitted. But if it is shut, the door coming between the two beams above forbids the assumption that they are united, and by corollary, the imaginary existence of partitions; hence the threshold remains forbidden.

(9) Who is the 'others' mentioned as authors of this teaching, v. supra p. 11, n. 3.

(10) Of the same size; since such constitutes private ground, one may not move an article from it into the street, and so even when situated in private ground it is also forbidden, lest one lead to the other.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 9b

MISHNAH. ONE MUST NOT SIT DOWN BEFORE A BARBER NEAR MINHAH¹ UNTIL, HE HAS PRAYED: NOR MAY HE ENTER THE BATHS OR A TANNERY, NOR TO EAT NOR FOR A LAWSUIT,² YET IF THEY BEGAN, THEY NEED NOT BREAK OFF.³ ONE MUST BREAK OFF FOR THE READING OF THE SHEMA', BUT NOT FOR PRAYER.⁴

GEMARA. Near what minhah?⁵ Shall we say, near the major minhah? But why not, seeing that there is yet plenty of time in the day? But if near the minor Minhah: YET IF THEY BEGAN THEY NEED NOT BREAK OFF? Shall we say that this is a refutation of R. Joshua b. Levi? For R. Joshua b. Levi said: As soon as it is time for the minhah service one may not eat⁶ anything before he has recited the minhah service. — No. After all [it means] near the major minhah, but the reference is to a hair-cut in the fashion of Ben' Elasa.⁷ [Similarly.] [NOR MAY HE ENTER] THE BATHS [means] for the complete process of the baths; NOR A TANNERY, for tanning on a large scale; NOR EAT at a long meal [of many courses]:⁸ NOR FOR A LAWSUIT, at the beginning of the trial.

R. Aha b. Jacob said: After all, it refers to our mode of hair cutting and why must he not sit down [for it] at the very outset? For fear lest the scissors be broken.⁹ [Similarly] NOR TO THE BATHS [means] merely for sweating; [and] why not [do this] in the first place? For fear lest he faint [there].¹⁰ NOR A TANNERY, merely to inspect it:¹¹ [and] why not at the very outset? Lest he see his wares being spoilt, which will trouble him.¹² NOR TO EAT [means even] a small meal: [and] why not at the very outset? Lest he come to prolong it. NOR TO A LAWSUIT, for the end of the trial; [and] why not [enter] at the very outset? Lest he see an argument to overthrow the verdict.¹³

What is the beginning of a hair-cut?¹⁴ — Said R. Abin: When the barber's sheet is placed on one's knees. And when is the beginning of a bath? Said R. Abin: When one removes his cloak.¹⁵ And when is the beginning of tanning? When he ties [an apron] round his shoulders. And when is the beginning of eating? Rab said: When one washes his hands; R. Hanina said: When he loosens his girdle. But they do not differ: the one refers to ourselves [Babylonians]: the other to them [Palestinians].¹⁶ Abaye said: These Babylonian scholars, on the view that the evening service is voluntary,¹⁷ once they have undone their girdle [to eat], we do not trouble them;¹⁸ but on the view that it is obligatory, do we trouble them? But what of the minhah service, which all agree is obligatory, and still we learnt, YET IF THEY BEGAN, THEY NEED NOT BREAK OFF; whereon R. Hanina said, [That means] when he loosens his girdle?

(1) The afternoon service.

(2) Lest he forget about the service. This refers to weekdays, and is taught here because of its similarity to the next Mishnah on 11a.

(3) For the service — providing that there will still be time when they finish.

(4) The Shema' ('hear') is the name of the Biblical passages Deut. VI, 4-9; XI, 13-21; Num. XV, 37-41 the first of which commences with that word shema' (Hear O Israel, the Lord our God the Lord is One). The 'prayer' par excellence is the 'Eighteen Benedictions.' Both the shema' and the service must be recited daily, but the former is regarded as a Biblical obligation whereas the latter is a Rabbinical institution (v. Elbogen, Judische Gottesdienst, 27ff; J.E. art. Shemoneh Esreh); hence the activities mentioned in the Mishnah must be interrupted as soon as it is time to recite the shema', even though it can be recited later, but not for the 'service.'

(5) The Talmud distinguished two times for minhah: the major, i.e., first minhah, at 12:30 p.m. and the minor, i.e., the late minhah, from 3:30 to sunset, which was calculated as at 6 p.m. but the service was not generally delayed after the minor minhah, i.e., after 3:30. V. Elbogen, op. cit. pp. 98ff; J. E. XVIII, 59b.

(6) Lit., 'taste'.

(7) The son-in-law of R. Judah ha-Nasi; he cropped his hair closely in the manner of the High Priest, v. Sanh. 22b. This was a long process and if one commenced it even before the major minhah he might be too late for the service.

(8) For descriptions of long meals and short meals v. T.A. III, pp. 28f.

(9) And by the time another pair is procured it may be too late for the service.

(10) Or, be overcome by weakness.

(11) Even not to superintend the whole process.

(12) And make him forget about the service.

(13) Which will necessitate starting afresh.

(14) So that it shall be unnecessary to break it off for the service.

(15) I.e., when he starts undressing.

(16) Rashi: the Babylonians were tightly belted, so they loosened the girdle before eating; but for the Palestinians this was unnecessary. R. Han. reverses it.

(17) It is disputed in Ber. 27b whether the evening service is compulsory or voluntary.

(18) To refrain from their meal until they have prayed.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 10a

— There¹ drinking is rare; here it is usual.² Alternatively, as for minhah, since it has a fixed time, one is afraid³ and will not come to transgress; but as for the evening service, since there is time for it all night, he is not afraid, and may come to transgress.

R. Shesheth demurred: Is it any trouble to remove the girdle!⁴ moreover, let him stand thus [ungirdled] and pray?—Because it is said, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.⁵ Raba son of R. Huna put on stockings and prayed, quoting, ‘prepare to meet etc.’ Raba removed his cloak,⁶ clasped his hands and prayed, saying, ‘[I pray] like a slave before his master.’ R. Ashi said: I saw R. Kahana, when there was trouble in the world, removing his cloak, clasp his hands, and pray, saying, ‘[I pray] like a slave before his master.’ When there was peace, he would put it on, cover and enfold himself and pray, quoting, ‘Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.’⁷

Raba saw R. Hamnuna prolonging his prayers.⁸ Said he, They forsake eternal life and occupy themselves with temporal life.⁹ But he [R. Hamnuna] held, The times for prayer and [study of the] Torah are distinct from each other. R. Jeremiah was sitting before R. Zera engaged in study; as it was growing late for the service, R. Jeremiah was making haste [to adjourn]. Thereupon R. Zera applied to him [the verse], He that turneth away from hearing the law, even his prayer is an abomination.¹⁰

When is the beginning of a lawsuit? R. Jeremiah and R. Jonah one maintains: When the judges wrap themselves round;¹¹ and the other says: When the litigants commence [their pleas]. And they do not differ: the latter means when they are already engaged in judging;¹² the former, when they are not already engaged in judging.

R. Ammi and R. Assi were sitting and studying between the pillars;¹³ every now and then they knocked at the side of the door and announced: If anyone has a lawsuit, let him enter and come. R. Hisda and Rabbah son of R. Huna were sitting all day [engaged] in judgments, and their hearts grew faint,¹⁴ [whereat] R. Hiyya b. Rab of Difti¹⁵ recited to them, and the people stood about Moses from the morning into the evening;¹⁶ now, can you really think that Moses sat and judged all day? when was his learning done? But it is to teach you, Every judge who judges with complete fairness¹⁷ even for a single hour, the Writ gives him credit as though he had become a partner to the Holy One, blessed be He, in the creation.¹⁸ [For] here it is written, ‘and the people stood about Moses from the morning into the evening’; whilst elsewhere it is written, and there was morning, and there was evening, one day.¹⁹

Until when must they [the judges] sit at judgment?—R. Shesheth said: Until the time of the [main] meal [of the day]. R. Hama observed, What verse [teaches this]? For it is written, Woe to thee, ☉ land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in the morning! Happy art thou, ☉ land, when thy king is the son of nobles, and thy princes eat in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness!²⁰ [i.e.,] in the strength of the Torah and not in the drunkenness of wine.²¹

Our Rabbis taught: The first hour [of the day]²² is the mealtime for gladiators;²³ the second, for robbers;²⁴ the third, for heirs;²⁵ the fourth, for labourers,²⁶ the fifth, for all [other] people. But that is not so, for R. Papa said: The fourth [hour] is the mealtime for all people?-Rather the fourth hour is the mealtime for all [other] people, the fifth for [agricultural] labourers, and the sixth for scholars. After that it is like throwing a stone into a barrel.²⁷ Abaye said: That was said only if nothing at all is eaten in the morning; but if something is eaten in the morning, there is no objection.²⁸

R. Adda b. Ahabah said: One may recite his prayers [the Eighteen Benedictions] at the baths. An objection is raised: If one enters the baths in the place where people stand dressed,²⁹ both reading [the shema'] and prayer [the Eighteen Benedictions] are permissible, and a greeting of 'Peace'³⁰ goes without saying; and one may don the phylacteries there,³¹ and it goes without saying that he need not remove them [if already wearing them]; in the place where people stand undressed,³² a greeting of 'Peace' is not permissible there³³ and reading and praying goes without saying; the phylacteries must be removed, and it goes without saying that they must not be donned!-When R. Adda b. Ahabah made his statement it referred to baths in which no one is present. But did not R. Jose b. Hanina say: The baths of which they [the Rabbis] spoke are even those in which none are present; the privy closet of which they spoke³⁴ means even such as contains no excrement?-Rather, when R. Adda stated [his ruling] it was in reference to new [baths].³⁵ But surely [this is just what] Rabina propounded: What if a place is designated for a privy closet; is designation recognized or not?³⁶ and it was not solved. Now did not the same [query of his] apply to baths?³⁷ No. Perhaps

(1) At minhah time.

(2) It was not customary to drink much by day; but the evening meal was often prolonged through drinking; therefore, on the view that the evening service is obligatory, one must refrain from his meal even if he has removed his girdle.

(3) Careful not to overstep it.

(4) Surely you cannot maintain that by that slight act he has commenced his meal.

(5) Amos IV, 12. When it is customary to wear a girdle, it is not fitting to pray without one.

(6) Rashi: divested himself of his costly upper cloak as a mark of humility.

(7) On these preparations for prayer cf. MGWJ. 1935 Vol. 4, pp. 330f.

(8) Though the general order and contents of the service, e.g., the Eighteen Benedictions (v. Elbogen, op. cit. pp. 5, 27: hkm and t, ukm refer to these) was settled, the actual text was left to each individual (ibid, pp. 41 seqq.), and R. Hamnuna may have thus prayed at great length; or perhaps this length was due to devotional intensity.

(9) They spend time in prayer which might be more usefully employed in study: the former, which is a petition for health, sustenance, etc., he called temporal life — not with great exactitude, as it also contains prayers for knowledge, repentance, and forgiveness. This is interesting as shewing the high place occupied by study as a religious observance in itself, a privy is different, because it is offensive.¹

'A greeting of 'Peace' is not permissible there'. This supports the following dictum of R. Haninuna on 'Ulla's authority: A man may not extend a greeting of 'Peace' to his neighbour in the baths, because it is said, And he called it, The Lord is peace.² If so, let it also be forbidden to mention, By faith!³ in a privy, for it is written, the faithful God?⁴ And should you answer, that indeed is so: but R. Hama b. Goria said in Rab's name, By faith! may be mentioned in a privy?-There the Name itself is not so designated, as we translate it, God is faithful; but here the Name itself is designated 'Peace,' as it is written, and he called it, The Lord is Peace.⁵

Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Goria in Rab's name: If one makes a gift to his neighbour, he must inform him [beforehand], as it is written, that ye may know that I the Lord sanctify you:⁶ It was taught likewise: That ye may know that I the Lord sanctify you: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, I have a precious gift in My treasure house, called the Sabbath, and desire to give it to Israel; go and inform them. Hence R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: If one gives a loaf to a child, he must inform his mother. What shall he do to him?⁷ — Said Abaye,

He must rub him with oil and paint⁸ him with kohl.⁹ But nowadays that we fear witchcraft what [shall be done]?¹⁰ -Said R. Papa: He must rub him with the self-same kind.¹¹ But that is not so, for R. Hama son of R. Hanina said: If one makes a gift to his neighbour, he need not inform him, as it is said, and Moses did not know that the skin of his face shone by reason of his speaking with him?¹² — There is no difficulty: the one refers to a matter which is likely to be revealed; the other, to one which is not likely to be revealed. But the Sabbath is a matter which stood to be revealed!-Its reward did not stand to be revealed.¹³

R. Hisda was holding two [priestly] gifts of oxen in his hand.¹⁴ Said he, 'Whoever will come and tell me a new dictum in Rab's name, I will give them to him.' Said Raba b. Mehasia to him, Thus did Rab say: If one makes a gift to his neighbour he must inform him, as it is said, 'that ye may know that I the Lord sanctify you'. Thereupon he gave them to him. Are Rab's dicta so dear to you? asked he. Yes, he replied. That illustrates what Rab said, he rejoined, A garment is precious to its wearer.¹⁵ Did Rab indeed say thus! he exclaimed; I rate the second higher than the first, and if I had another [priestly gift] I would give it to you.

Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Goria in Rab's name: A man should never single out¹⁶ one son among his other sons, for on account of the two sela's weight of silk, which Jacob gave Joseph in excess of his other sons, his brothers became jealous of him and the matter resulted in our forefathers' descent into Egypt.¹⁷

Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Goria in Rab's name: A man should always seek to dwell in a city but recently populated, for since it is but recently populated its sins are few, as it is said, behold now, this city is near [kerobah] to flee to, and it is a little one.¹⁸ What is meant by 'kerobah'? Shall we say that it is near and small? But surely they could see that for themselves! Rather [he meant,] because it has been recently populated¹⁹ its sins are few. R. Abin said: What verse [supports this]? Oh, let me [na] escape thither:²⁰ the numerical value of na is fifty-one;²¹ whereas that of Sodom is fifty-two, whilst its peace [lasted] twenty-six [years], as it is written, Twelve years they served Chedorlaomer, and thirteen years they rebelled. And in the fourteenth year, etc.¹ Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias in Rab's name: Every city whose roofs are higher than the synagogue will ultimately be destroyed, as it is said, to exalt the house of our God, and to repair the ruins thereof.² Yet that refers only to houses; but as for towers and turrets, we have no objection. R. Ashi said: I achieved for the town of Mehasia³ that it was not destroyed.⁴ But it was destroyed!⁵ -It was not destroyed as a result of that sin.

Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias in Rab's name: [Let one be] under an Ishmaelite but not under a 'stranger';⁶ under a stranger but not under a Gueber;⁷ under a Parsee but not under a scholar; under a scholar but not under an orphan or a widow.⁸

Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias in Rab's name: Rather any complaint, but not a complaint of the bowels; any pain, but not heart pain; any ache, but not head ache; any evil, but not an evil wife! Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias in Rab's name: If all seas were ink, reeds pens, the heavens parchment, and all men writers, they would not suffice to write down the intricacies of government. Said R. Mesharshia, What verse [teaches this]? The heaven for height, and the earth for depth, and the heart of kings is unsearchable.⁹

Raba b. Mehasia also said in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias in Rab's name: Fasting is as potent against a dream as fire against tow.¹⁰ Said R. Hisda: Providing it is on that very day. R. Joseph added: And even on the Sabbath.¹¹

R. Joshua son of R. Idi chanced on the home of R. Ashi. A third grown calf¹² was prepared for him and he was invited, 'Master, partake somewhat.' 'I am engaged in a fast,' he replied. 'And do you not accept Rab Judah's ruling in Rab's name: One may borrow his fast and repay it?'¹³ 'It is a fast on account of a dream,' he answered, 'and Raba b. Mehasia said in the name of R. Hama b. Gorias in Rab's name: Fasting is as potent against a dream as fire against tow; and R. Hisda said, Providing it is on that very day; and R. Joseph added: And even on the Sabbath.'

YET IF THEY BEGAN, THEY NEED NOT BREAK OFF. ONE MUST BREAK OFF FOR THE READING OF THE SHEMA', [BUT NOT FOR PRAYER]. But the first clause teaches, THEY NEED NOT BREAK OFF?-The second clause refers to study.¹⁴ For it was taught: If companions [scholars] are engaged in studying, they must break off for the reading of the shema', but not for prayer. R. Johanan said: This was taught only of such as R. Simeon b. Yohai and his companions, whose study was their profession; but we¹⁵ must break off both for the reading of the shema' and for prayer. But it was taught: Just as they do not break off for the service, so do they not break off for the reading of the shema'?'-That was taught in reference to the intercalation of the year.¹⁶ For R. Adda b. Ahabah said, and the Elders of Hagraunia¹⁷ recited likewise: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said: When we were engaged in intercalating the year at Yabneh,¹⁸ we made no break for the reading of the shema' or prayer.

MISHNAH. A TAILOR MUST NOT GO OUT WITH HIS NEEDLE NEAR NIGHTFALL,¹⁹ LEST HE FORGET AND GO OUT,²⁰ NOR A SCRIBE WITH HIS QUILL; AND ONE MAY NOT SEARCH HIS GARMENTS [FOR VERMIN, NOR READ BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP.²¹ IN TRUTH IT WAS SAID, THE HAZZAN²² MAY SEE WHERE THE CHILDREN READ,²³ BUT HE HIMSELF MUST NOT READ. SIMILARLY IT WAS SAID, A ZAB MUST NOT DINE TOGETHER WITH A ZABAH,²⁴ AS IT MAY LEAD TO SIN.²⁵

(10) Dreams were believed portents foreshadowing the future, though, as seen here, the evil they foretold might be averted. Cf. Ber. 55-58. B.B. 10a; Yoma 87b et passim. Though R. Meir said, 'Dreams neither help nor harm,' (Hor. 13b) we find that he was warned against a certain innkeeper in a dream (Yoma 38b).

(11) Though otherwise fasting is forbidden on the Sabbath, a dream-fast is permitted.

(12) So Rashi in 'Er. 63a.

In the Talmudic period the word did not denote synagogue reader, as in modern times, but was applied to various functionaries, e.g., the person who supervised children's studies in the synagogue, the beadle, the court crier, and the janitor at academical debates. Possibly the same man combined a number of these functions. V. Sot., Sonc. ed., p. 202, n. 4.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 11b

and the same applies to a wine vat.¹ The scholars propounded: What of a karmelith?² -Abaye said: It is precisely the same. Raba said: That itself³ is only a preventive measure:⁴ are we to arise and enact a preventive measure⁵ to safeguard⁶ another preventive measure!⁷

Abaye said, Whence do I say it? Because it is taught, and the same applies to a wine vat. Now what is this wine vat? If private ground, it has [already] been taught: if public ground, it has [also] been taught. Hence it must surely refer to a karmelith. Raba said: 'And the same applies to a wine vat' is [stated] in reference to tithes; and R. Shesheth said likewise, 'And the same applies to a wine vat' refers to tithes. For we learnt: One may drink [wine] over the vat in [a dilution of] both hot or cold [water], and is exempt [from tithing]: this is R. Meir's view. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok holds him liable. But the Sages maintain: For a hot [dilution] he is liable; for a cold one he is exempt, because the rest is returned.⁸ We learnt: A TAILOR MUST NOT GO OUT WITH HIS NEEDLE NEAR NIGHTFALL, LEST HE FORGET HIMSELF AND GO OUT. Surely that means that it is stuck in his garment?⁹ -No: it means that he holds it in his hand.¹⁰ Come and hear: A tailor must not go out with a needle sticking in his garment. Surely that refers to the eve of Sabbath?-No; that was taught with reference to the Sabbath. But it was taught, A tailor must not go out with a needle sticking in his garment on the eve of the Sabbath just before sunset?-The author of that is R. Judah, who maintained, An artisan is liable [for carrying out an object] in the manner of his trade.¹¹ For it was taught: A tailor must not go out with a needle stuck in his garment, nor a carpenter with a chip behind his ear,¹² nor a [wool] corder with the cord in his ear, nor a weaver with the cotton¹³ in his ear, nor a dyer with a [colour] sample round his neck, nor a money-changer with a denar¹⁴ in his ear; and if he does go forth, he is not liable, though it is forbidden: this is R. Meir's view.¹⁵ R. Judah said: An artisan is liable [for carrying out an object] in the manner of his trade, but all other people are exempt. One [Baraita] taught: A zab must not go out with his pouch;¹⁶ yet if he goes out he is not liable, though it is forbidden. And another taught: A zab must not go out with his pouch, and if he goes out he is liable to a sin-offering!-Said R. Joseph, There is no difficulty: the former is R. Meir; the latter R. Judah.

Abaye said to him. When have you heard R. Meir [to give this ruling], in respect to something which it is not natural [to carry thus]; but have you heard him in respect to something which demands that mode [of carrying]? For should you not say so, then if an unskilled worker hollows out a measure from a log on the Sabbath, would he indeed be exempt on R. Meir's view?¹⁷ Rather, said R. Hammuna, there is no difficulty; the one refers to a zab who has had two attacks,¹⁸ the other to a zab who has had three attacks.¹⁹ Now, why does a zab of two attacks differ in that he is liable? [Presumably] because he requires it for examination!²⁰ But then a zab of three attacks also requires it for counting?²¹ It holds good only for that very day.²² Yet still he needs it to prevent the soiling of his garments?—Said R. Zera, This agrees with the following Tanna, who maintains, The prevention of soiling has no [positive] importance.²³ For we learnt: If one overturns a basin on a wall, in order that the basin be washed [by the rain], it falls within [the terms of], ‘and if it [water] be put [etc.]’; if in order

- (1) This is now assumed to mean that one must not stand in either a public or private ground, as the case may be, and drink from the vat.
 - (2) May one stand in public or private ground and drink in a karmelith, or vice versa?
 - (3) The prohibition of actually transporting an object between a karmelith and public or private ground.
 - (4) V. supra 6a on karmelith.
 - (5) Sc. the prohibition of standing in one domain and drinking in another.
 - (6) Lit., ‘for’.
 - (7) Surely not.
 - (8) The vat is the utensil into which the expressed juice of the grapes runs, whence it descends into the pit beneath. Once it is in the pit its manufacture as wine is complete, and it is liable to tithes, before the rendering of which nothing at all may be drunk. But while it is yet in the vat its manufacture is not complete, and so a little wine may be drunk even before the rendering of the tithes. That, however, is only if it is drunk directly over the vat; if it is taken out, that action itself confers upon it the status of finished wine, and the tithes, etc., must first be given. Thus, when it is taught, ‘and the same applies to a wine vat’, it means that if one drinks wine from the vat, he is regarded as taking it away, unless he has his head and greater part of his body in the vat, and must render the tithes before he drinks.—Wine was not drunk neat, but diluted with water; if it is diluted with cold water, the rest can be poured back into the vat; if with hot water, it cannot, the hot mixture injuring the rest. R. Meir holds that in both cases, since he does not take it away from the vat, he can drink a little without tithing; R. Eleazar b. R. Zadok rejects this view. The Sages agree with R. Meir if it is diluted with cold water; if it is diluted with hot, since the rest cannot be returned into the vat, it is as though it were carried away, and therefore may not be drunk.
 - (9) Then even carrying it out on the Sabbath is only Rabbinically forbidden as a preventive measure, lest one carry in general, and yet he must also not go out before the Sabbath as a preventive measure lest he go on the Sabbath itself. Thus we have one preventive measure to safeguard another in respect to the Sabbath.
 - (10) This is Biblically forbidden on the Sabbath.
 - (11) And this is such; thus he regards it as Biblically forbidden.
 - (12) Rashi: this was the sign of his trade, and he wore it that he might be recognized and offered employment.
 - (13) Krauss in T.A. 1. p. 249 and p. 281 a.l. translates: a small distaff, carried behind the ear as an indication of a man's trade.
 - (14) A coin.
 - (15) He regards these as unnatural ways of carrying, whereas Scripture prohibits only the natural mode of any particular form of labour.
 - (16) To receive his discharge.

(17) Because he did not do it in a professional manner? Surely not, for if so only a skilled worker will be liable for doing something of his own trade. Hence it must be that a person is liable for doing any labour in the manner natural to himself, and the same applies to a zab and his pouch.

(18) Lit., 'sights' -of discharge.

(19) When a zab has had three attacks he must bring a sacrifice (Lev. XV, 13-15). Consequently, after two attacks he needs this pouch to see whether he has a third (which otherwise may pass unknown to him), and since he needs it that is the natural way for him to carry it, and therefore he is liable.

(20) As in last note.

(21) After he ceases to discharge he must count seven consecutive days of cleanness, i.e., in which there is no discharge (ibid.): a single attack during this period necessitates counting afresh from the following day. Hence he too needs this pouch for that period.

(22) I.e., he is not liable only if he had the third attack on that Sabbath itself; he does not need the pouch then, as in any case he commences counting only on the next day.

(23) I.e., when a thing is done not for its own sake but to prevent something from being soiled, it is not regarded as a positive act and involves no liability.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 12a

that the wall be not damaged [by the rain], it does not fall within [the terms of] 'and if it be put [etc.]'¹ But how compare! There he does not want that fluid at all, whereas here he needs this pouch to receive the discharge.² This can only be compared to the second clause: If a tub³ is placed so that the dripping [of water] should fall therein, the water which rebounds or overflows is not within [the meaning of] 'and if [water] be put'; but the water inside it is within [the meaning of] and if [water] be put!⁴ -Rather, said both Abaye and Raba, There is no difficulty: the one is according to R. Judah; the other agrees with R. Simeon.⁵

The School of R. Ishmael taught: A man may go out with his tefillin⁶ on the eve of Sabbath near nightfall.⁷ What's the reason? Because Rabbah son of R. Huna said: One must feel his tefillin every now and then, [inferring] a minori from [the High Priest's] headplate. If in the case of the headplate, which contained the Divine Name⁸ only once, yet the Torah said, and it shall always be on his forehead,⁹ [i.e.,] his mind must not be diverted from it; then with the tefillin, which contain the Divine Name many times, how much more so! therefore he is fully cognizant thereof.¹⁰

It was taught: Hanania said: One must examine¹¹ his garments on Sabbath eve before nightfall. R. Joseph observed: That is a vital¹² law for the Sabbath.¹³

ONE MAY NOT SEARCH HIS GARMENTS [FOR VERMIN] etc. The scholars propounded: [Does this mean] , ONE MAY NOT SEARCH HIS GARMENTS by day, lest he kill [the vermin], and would this agree with R. Eliezer, (for it was taught, R. Eliezer said: If one kills vermin on the Sabbath, it is as though he killed a camel),¹⁴ while ONE MAY NOT READ BY THE [LIGHT OF A LAMP, lest he tilt it? Or perhaps, both are [forbidden] lest he tilt [the lamp]?¹⁵ -Come and hear: One may not search [his garments] nor read by the light of a lamp. But is it stronger than our Mishnah?¹⁶ Come and hear: One may not search his garments by the light of a lamp, nor read by the light of a lamp, and these are of the halachoth stated in the upper chamber of Hananiah b. Hezekiah b. Garon.¹⁷ This proves that both are on account lest he tilt [the lamp]; this proves it.

Rab Judah said in Samuel's name: [It is forbidden] even to distinguish between one's own garments and his wife's [by lamp light]. Said Raba: That was stated only of townspeople;¹⁸ but those of country folk¹⁹ are easily distinguished. And [even] in the case of townspeople this was stated only of old women; but those of young women are readily distinguishable. Our Rabbis taught: One must not search [his garments] in the street out of decency. In like way R. Judah-others state, R. Nehemiah-said: One must not cause himself to vomit in the street, out of decency. Our Rabbis taught: If one searches his garments [on the Sabbath] he may press [the vermin] and throw it away, providing that he does not kill it. Abba Saul said: He must take and throw it away, providing that he does not press it. R. Huna said, The halachah is, he may press and throw it away, and that is seemly, even on weekdays. Rabbah killed them, and R. Shesheth killed them.²⁰ Raba threw them into a basin of water. R. Nahman said to his daughters, 'Kill them and let me hear the sound of the hated ones.'²¹

It was taught, R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Vermin must not be killed on the Sabbath: this is the view of Beth Shammai; while Beth Hillel permit it. And R. Simeon b. Eleazar said likewise on the authority of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel: One must not negotiate for the betrothal of children [girls],²² nor for a boy, to teach him the book²³ and to teach him a trade,²⁴ nor may mourners be comforted, nor may the sick be visited on the Sabbath.²⁵ that is the ruling of Beth Shammai; but Beth Hillel permit it.

Our Rabbis taught: If one enters [a house] to visit a sick person [on the Sabbath], he should say, 'It is the Sabbath, when one must not cry out, and recovery will soon come.' R. Meir said, [One should say] 'It [the Sabbath] may have compassion.'²⁶

(1) V. Lev. XI, 38. Foodstuffs, e.g., grain, fruit, etc., cannot become unclean unless moisture has fallen upon them after being harvested; also, this moisture must be such as the owner of the foodstuffs desires. Now, in the first instance the rain was desired; hence, even if it rebounds from the basin on to the fruit, it is regarded as desired moisture, though it was not wanted for the latter, and the fruit is henceforth liable to uncleanness. But in the second it was not wanted at all, and therefore does not render the fruit liable. This proves that an action to prevent another thing from being soiled (here, to save the wall from damage) has no positive value.

(2) And precisely because he needs the pouch he should be liable.

(3) Or kneading trough.

(4) The latter is desired, and therefore if it comes into contact with fruit the fruit is liable to uncleanness, but the water that squirts or overflows is not desired. This shows that when a man's intentions are fulfilled, the action is of positive value; so here too, he carries the pouch with a definite intention, which is fulfilled. Hence he should be liable!

(5) R. Judah maintains that one is culpable for an act even if that which necessitates it is undesired; while R. Simeon holds that there is no liability for such. Thus, here the carrying of the pouch is necessitated by the discharge, but the discharge itself is certainly unwanted.

(6) V. Glos. phylacteries.

(7) In Talmudic times the phylacteries were worn all day and in the street, but not on the Sabbath.

(8) Lit., 'mention'.

(9) Ex. XXVIII, 38.

- (10) And need not fear that he will go out with them after nightfall,
- (11) Lit., 'feel'; to see whether there is anything attached to them or in them.
- (12) Lit., 'great'.
- (13) In general, steps must be taken before the Sabbath to avoid the desecration of the Sabbath.
- (14) I.e., it is a complete labour, and forbidden.
- (15) In which case HE MAY NOT SEARCH HIS GARMENTS at night only.
- (16) The same question of interpretation arises here.
- (17) V. Mishnah infra 13b.
- (18) Rashi: being idle, the men wear wide garments like women's.
- (19) Land workers. (11) Whose garments were more like those of men.
- (20) Even on the Sabbath (Rashi).
- (21) Of their death?
- (22) On marrying young v. T.A. II, pp, 28f.
- (23) I.e., for his elementary education. The obligation of a child's education lies primarily upon his father (Kid. 30a), and was left to him originally, public instruction being given to adults only. By the reforms of R. Simeon b. Shetah and Joshua b. Gamala elementary schools were set up for children from the age of six or seven and upwards (J. Keth VIII, ad fin.). From this passage we may conclude that the system of engaging private teachers was also in vogue in the education of girls, v. Kid., Sonc. ed., p. 141, n. 1 and Ned., p. 107, n. 2. It may be observed that only boys are referred to here.
- (24) This was definitely obligatory upon the father; Kid. 29a.
- (25) Both are too sad for the Sabbath.
- (26) The due observance of the Sabbath will bring recovery in its wake.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 12b

R. Judah said, 'May the Omnipresent have compassion upon you and upon the sick of Israel.' R. Jose said, 'May the Omnipresent have compassion upon you in the midst of the sick of Israel.' Shebna, a citizen of Jerusalem, on entering would say 'Peace'; and on leaving, 'It is the Sabbath, when one must not cry out and healing will soon come, His compassion is abundant and enjoy the Sabbath rest in peace.' With whom does this dictum of R. Hanina agree: One who has an invalid in his house should combine him with other Jewish sick?¹ With whom? — With R. Jose.

R. Hanina also said: It was [only] with difficulty that comforting mourners and visiting the sick was permitted on the Sabbath.²

Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: When we followed R. Eleazar to inquire after a sick person, sometimes he would say to him, [in Hebrew], 'The Omnipresent visit thee in peace'; at others, he said, [in Aramaic], 'The Omnipresent remember thee in peace'. But how might he do thus: did not Rab Judah say, One should never petition for his needs in Aramaic; and R. Johanan said: When one petitions for his needs in Aramaic, the Ministering Angels do not heed him, for they do not understand Aramaic ?³ — An invalid is different, because the Divine Presence is with him. For R. 'Anan said in Rab's name, How do you know that the Divine Presence supports an invalid? Because it is written, The Lord supports him upon the couch of languishing.⁴ It was taught likewise: One who enters [a house] to visit the sick may sit neither upon the bed nor on a seat, but must wrap himself about⁵ and sit in front of him,⁶ for the Divine Presence is above an invalid's pillow, as it is said, The Lord supports him upon the couch of languishing. And Raba said in Rabin's name: How do we know that the Holy One, blessed be He, sustains the sick? Because it is said, The Lord supports him on the couch of languishing.

NOR MUST HE READ BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP. Raba said: Even if it is as high as twice a man's stature, or as two ox-goads [height],⁷ or even as ten houses on top of each other.⁸

One alone may not read, but for two [together] it is well?⁹ But it was taught: Neither one nor two! — Said R. Eleazar, There is no difficulty: the former refers to one subject; the latter to two.¹⁰ R. Huna said: But by [the light] of an open fire even ten people are forbidden.¹¹ Said Raba: If he is an important man,¹² it is permitted.

An objection is raised: One must not read by the light of a lamp, lest he tilt [it]. Said R. Ishmael b. Elisha, 'I will read and will not tilt.' Yet once he read and wished to tilt. 'How great are the words of the Sages!' he exclaimed, 'who said, One must not read by the light of a lamp.' R. Nathan said, He read and did tilt [it], and wrote in his note book, 'I, Ishmael b. Elisha, did read and tilt the lamp on the Sabbath. When the Temple is rebuilt I will bring a fat sin-offering.'¹³ -R. Ishmael b. Elisha was different, since he treated himself as an ordinary person in respect to religious matters.

One [Baraita] taught: An attendant may examine glasses and plates by the light of a lamp; and another taught: He must not examine [them]! There is no difficulty: one refers to a permanent attendant, the other to a temporary one.¹⁴ Alternatively, both refer to a permanent attendant yet there is no difficulty: one refers to [a lamp fed with] oil, the other to naphtha.¹⁵

The scholars propounded: What of a temporary attendant and a [lamp fed with] oil?-Rab said: There is the halachah, but we do not teach thus.¹⁶ R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: There is the halachah and we teach it so. R. Jeremiah b. Abba chanced to visit R. Assi. Now, his¹⁷ attendant arose and examined [the glasses] by candlelight.¹⁸ Thereupon his [R. Assi's] wife said to him [R. Assi], 'But you do not act thus!' 'Let him be,' he answered her, 'he holds with his master.'¹⁹

IN TRUTH IT WAS SAID, THE HAZZAN etc., But you say in the first clause, [HE] MAY SEE; Surely that means to read?²⁰ -No: to arrange the beginnings of the sections.²¹ And Rabbah b. Samuel said likewise: But he may arrange the beginnings of the sections; But not the whole section?

(1) I.e., pray for him as one of many.

(2) Because both induce grief, which is contrary to the spirit of the Sabbath, which is 'a day of delight.'

(3) Angels were held to mediate between God and man, carrying the prayers of the latter to the Former (Tobit XII, 12, 15). This is not to be compared with prayer to or worshipping angels, from which Judaism is free. 'Not as one who would first send his servant to a friend to ask for aid in his hour of need should man apply to Michael, or Gabriel, to intercede for him; but he should turn immediately to God Himself, for 'whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered'. (Joel III, 5; Yer. Ber. IX, '3a. Many Rabbinical authorities disapprove even of invoking angels as mediators, as shown by the passage quoted; v. Zunz, S P. p. 148,)

(4) Ps. XLI, 4. — Hence he does not need the angel's intercession,

- (5) In a spirit of reverence.
- (6) In Ned. 40a the reading is, 'upon the ground.'
- (7) Probably twice the height of an ass and its saddle.
- (8) Though the lamp is inaccessible and cannot be tilted, the Rabbis enacted a general measure without distinctions.
- (9) This follows from the use of the singular in the Mishnah. But when two read, each may remind the other should he wish to tilt the lamp.
- (10) When both are reading the same subject in the scroll, each can remind the other. But if they are occupied with different subjects, neither thinks of his companion.
- (11) Each sits at a distance from the other, and any one may forget himself and stir up the fire.
- (12) Who is not accustomed even on weekdays to trim the lamp.
- (13) This shows that the prohibition applies even to a great man like R. Ishmael b. Elisha.
- (14) The former is more careful, and may tilt the lamp to see whether there is the least grease on the crockery; hence he must not examine them by a lamp.
- (15) The latter emits an unpleasant odour, and so one naturally refrains from tilting.
- (16) It is permitted, but this must not be publicly diffused.
- (17) R. Jeremiah's.
- (18) In R. Assi's house; he was not of course a permanent attendant.
- (19) The light of naphtha (or of a candle) is the same as the light of an oil-fed lamp,
- (20) How then explain BUT HE HIMSELF MAY NOT READ?
- (21) In ancient times the Pentateuch portion which was part of the Sabbath service was read by a number of worshippers (on Sabbaths, seven), whilst the hazzan prompted them.

Talmud - Mas. Shabbath 13a

An objection is raised: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: School children used to prepare their [Biblical] portions and read by lamplight?¹ — There is no difficulty: I can answer either [that it means] the beginnings of the sections; or that children are different: since they are in awe of their teacher, they will not come to tilt it.

SIMILARLY ... A ZAB MUST NOT DINE, [etc.]. It was taught, R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Come and see how far purity has spread in Israel! For we did not learn, A clean man must not eat with an unclean woman, but A ZAB MUST NOT DINE TOGETHER WITH A ZABAH, AS IT MAY LEAD To SIN.² Similarly, a zab, a parush³ may not dine with a zab, who is an 'am ha-arez,⁴ lest he cause him to associate with him. But what does it matter if he does cause him to associate with him? Rather say [thus]: lest he offer him unclean food to eat. Does then a zab who is a parush not eat unclean food?⁵ -Said Abaye: For fear lest he provide him with unfit food.⁶ Raba said: The majority of the 'amme ha-arez do render tithes, but [we fear] lest he associate with him and he provide him with unclean food in the days of his purity.⁷

The scholars propounded: May a niddah⁸ sleep together with her husband, she in her garment and he in his?⁹ - Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: A fowl may be served together with cheese at the [same] table, but not eaten [with it]: this is Beth Shammai's view. Beth Hillel rule: It may neither be served nor eaten [together]!¹⁰ -There it is different, because there are no [separate] minds.¹¹ It is reasonable too that where there are [separate] minds it is different, because the second clause teaches, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Two boarders¹² eating at the same table, one may eat meat and the other cheese, and we have no fear.¹³ But was it not stated thereon, R. Hanin b. Ammi said in Samuel's name: This was taught only when they do not know each other;¹⁴ but if they do, they are forbidden? And here too they know each other!-How compare! There we have [separate] minds but no unusual feature;¹⁵ but here there are [separate] minds and an unusual feature.¹⁶

Others state, Come and hear: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Two boarders may eat at the same table, one meat and the other cheese. And it was stated thereon, R. Hanin b. Ammi said in Samuel's name: This was taught only if they do not know each other, but if they do, it is forbidden; and these two know each other! — [No.] There we have [separate] minds but nothing unusual, whereas here there are [separate] minds and an unusual feature.

Come and hear: A ZAB MUST NOT DINE TOGETHER WITH A ZABAH, LEST IT LEAD TO SIN!¹⁷ — Here too there are [separate] minds but nothing unusual.

Come and hear: And hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to a woman who is a niddah:¹⁸ thus a woman who is a niddah is assimilated to his neighbour's wife: just as his neighbour's wife, he in his garment and she in hers is forbidden, so if his wife is a niddah, he in his garment and she in hers is forbidden. This proves it. Now, this disagrees with R. Pedath. For R. Pedath said: The Torah interdicted only intimacy of incestuous coition, as it is said, None of you, shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness.¹⁹

'Ulla, on his return from the college,²⁰ used to kiss his sisters on their bosoms; others say, on their hands. But he is self-contradictory, for 'Ulla said, Even any form of intimacy is forbidden,²¹ because we say, 'Take a circuitous route, O nazirite, but do not approach the vineyard.'²² [It is taught in the] Tanna debe Eliyahu:²³ It once happened that a certain scholar who had studied much Bible and Mishnah²⁴ and had served scholars much,²⁵ yet died in middle age. His wife took his tefillin and carried them about in the synagogues and schoolhouses and complained to them, It is written in the Torah, for that is thy life, and the length of thy days:²⁶ my husband, who read [Bible], learned [Mishnah],

(1) [This proves that children may read on Friday night by lamplight? Our Mishnah affords no such proof as it could refer to children who read in disregard of the prohibition, v. Tosaf. a.l.].

(2) But there was no need to interdict the first, because even Israelites ate their food only when it was ritually clean (though under no obligation) and would not dine together with an unclean woman, sc. a niddah (v. Glos.) in any case.

(3) Lit., 'separated,' v. text note.

(4) Lit., 'people of the earth', 'the rural population'; the term is synonymous with ignoramus and law breaker, for living on the land they were only partially accessible to the teachings of the Rabbis, and in particular were negligent of ritual purity and the separation of tithes. Those who held aloof from them (separatists) were known as perushim (sing. parush), who were very particular in matters of purity and tithes; v. also Glos. s.v. haber.

(5) Whatever he eats is unclean, since his contact defiles food.

(6) I.e., food from which the priestly and Levitical dues were not rendered,

- (7) If he is a visitor, he will continue even when he becomes clean.
- (8) V. Glos.
- (9) Taking precaution to avoid all bodily contact. Intimacy, of course, is forbidden: do we fear that this may lead to it?
- (10) And the halachah is always as Beth Hillel. They may not be served lest they be eaten together, and by analogy the answer to our problem is in the negative.
- (11) There is no one to restrain the diner from eating the fowl and the cheese together. But here each may restrain the other.
- (12) Or travellers lodging at an inn.
- (13) The assumed reason is that each restrains the other.
- (14) Then one does not take from the other.
- (15) Lit., 'change'. There is nothing on the table to remind one diner that he must not eat of his neighbour's.
- (16) Viz., that they take care to avoid all bodily contact.
- (17) And the same applies here.
- (18) Ezek. XVIII, 6.
- (19) Lev. XVIII, 6. 'Incest' in the Talmud includes adultery.-The same applies to a niddah.
- (20) The term Be Rab denotes either the great Academy founded by Rab or college in general.
- (21) With consanguineous relations, such as a sister.
- (22) A nazirite must not eat grapes or drink wine (v. Num. VI, 1-3); as a precaution he is forbidden even to approach a vineyard. The same reasoning holds good here.
- (23) This is the Midrash consisting of two parts, 'Seder Eliyahu Rabbah' and 'Seder Eliyahu Zuta'. According to the Talmud Keth. 106a the Prophet Elijah taught this Midrash, the Seder Eliyahu, to R. 'Anan, a Babylonian amora of the third century. Scholars are agreed that the work in its present form received its final redaction in the tenth century C.E., though they are not agreed as to where it was written. V. Bacher, Monatschrift, XXIII, 267 et seqq.; in R.E.J. XX, 144-146; Friedmann, introduction to his edition of Seder Eliyahu.
- (24) Kara refers to the study of the Bible; shanah to the study of the Mishnah.
- (25) 'Serving scholars', i.e., being in personal attendance on scholars, was one of the requisites of an academical course.
- (26) Deut. XXX, 20.
